[29] In 1998 he advised that he had made a contract with the Defendants to buy trees. He testified that after the month of December 1999 he did not put the truck on the road again until the end of April 2000. He did not consider Mr. Drysdale a friend, but did not mention why. In respect to a question about someone driving over the property in the spring of 2000, he replied that he had been in the business for 14 years and he knew from experience that no one had been there in the spring thus contradicting the evidence of the neighbors.

[30] Mr. Clarkson denied that trees had been dug up and removed after the time he had last took trees from the property in December 1999. He said the holes shown in the pictures and the video were old ones. He pointed out that older holes had vegetation growing on the inside walls; new holes did not because of new cuts into the ground. Once again I found his evidence to be unclear and difficult to understand. He denied that he threatened Ms. Chamberlain and said no one told him to leave the property. He admitted that he was sarcastic. This quality seemed typical from the manner he answered some questions put to him on cross-examination. Even so there is no doubt that Mr. Clarkson is a knowledgeable tree removal landscaper.

[31] The Plaintiffs had made enquires from Drysdale Tree Farms Limited and Four Seasons Tree Farms. They looked at the property and agreed with Mr. Clarkson about growth of vegetation on the sides of older holes. However, they both found fresh holes with no growth of vegetation on the sides.

2003 CanLII 5515 (ON SC)

[32] A subsequent letter addressed to Ms. Chamberlain from Mr. Drysdale contained his opinion that 23 trees had recently been removed. The letter from Mr. Drysdale has been filed. It states as follows:

> Ms. Karen Chamberlain
>
> In response to your inquiry Ms. Jane Fraser and I inspected the property at 6536 on the 5th line of Essa on May 8th. It was obvious from the freshly disturbed soil the approximately 23 trees had been recently removed. Assuming that they were 12 – 15 feet tall as the remaining trees are, we would charge $650.00 to supply, plan and guarantee a specimen quality tree of the same size at that location. The cost to replace all of the trees in one operation would be less, - $500.00 per tree.
>
> Yours truly,
>
> Doug C. Drysdale

[33] Mr. David Burton, the President of Four Seasons Tree Farms, gave evidence. In response to questions about his observations he said:

> A. There were trees and Karen asked me about the holes that trees had obviously been taken out. So, I said, "Yes, trees have been taken out", because they had. You know that somebody had been in there digging prior to my arrival. There was no doubt about it.
>
> Q. Okay. Was – would you describe what you observed in terms of evidence of trees having been taken out?
>
> A. Somebody had been in with what I assumed was a tree spade truck because the holes were larger than usually, on say, a bobcat or a backhoe where you would have a tree spade mounted. You could dig those trees up and put them in a burlap and wire basket and load them on a truck.

[34] A letter from David Berton dated June 30, 2000 addressed to Ms. Chamberlain states:

> Mrs. Karen Chamberlain June 30, 2000
> 5'th Concession
> Egbert, Ontario
>
> Dear Karen, with regards to your new property you asked me to look at, It is my opinion that the Colorado Spruce trees at the back of the property do hold some value for resale purposes in the landscape trade. There have been a number of trees removed from the plantation with the use of a tree spade truck as the holes show evidence. Judging from the moss formations on the sides of some of the holes, some of the tree removals would have taken place in 1999 or prior. There are also some fresh holes, 17-25, which would indicate a spring of 2000 removal of trees did take place.

2003 CanLII 5515 (ON SC)

The value of the trees to have them replaced would be in the 600.00 to 800.00 range depending on available sources as the trees appear to be quite large in size.

Please let me know if you would like me to quote on replacing the trees, or if you would be interested in selling any of the remaining trees.

Best of luck with your new property,

David Burton
President

Please note, visit to property was May 5/00.

[35] In the cross-examination the suggestion of partiality Mr. Burton responded to a question about what took place at a later date. He said he had purchased 10 trees from the Plaintiffs by using a 27-ton spade truck. He paid for the 10 trees but only seven were taken out. He said he had a sixth sense. He felt that it was best not to have anything else to do with property. He was asked if there were any other reasons why he walked away from $750.00. After the court dealt with objections Mr. Burton said "Nobody told me anything…Karen had told me that she thought somebody had taken trees off of the property…"and he went on to answer…"I've seen lots of people take trees off properties that they shouldn't have." When there was no further objection he went on to say, "…I'm just talking about my past experience of buying trees from other people."

[36] There is one further important point in respect to the "TREE" issue. It involves the memory of Ms. Meierhans. She mentioned they received their last money from Angus Clarkson in December of 1999. Mrs. Meierhans thought it was for trees Angus Clarkson might have removed from their property before Christmas that year, but in reality, she was not sure. She used a note partly written in German to refresh her memory. She admitted that it would have been better if she had made a note of matters when they took place. She could not rely on her memory.

[37] The preponderance of evidence supports the finding that the tree grove on the property and mentioned in the real estate listing agreement induced the plaintiffs to enter into a contract with the defendants. The plaintiffs relied on the defendant's representation that trees would not be removed from the property.

2003 CanLII 5515 (ON SC)

[38] The representation about the trees is a substantial clause in the contract. Trees were removed. The breach of the contract in respect to the tree representation gives rise to damages. The preponderance of evidence supports a finding of an improper removal of 17 spruce trees at an average cost of $600.00 per tree. The damages total $10,200.00.

2003 CanLII 5515 (ON SC)

Refrigerator

[39] The preponderance of evidence does not support that a refrigerator is a chattel included in the phrase "chattels included: all built-in appliances, excluding oven." There is no material representation that relates directly to including the refrigerator in the sale. Independent evidence indicates the refrigerator was only recessed, it was not built-in.

Pool Equipment and Pool Liner

[40] The agreement of purchase and sale states that the vendors represent to the best of their knowledge and belief that the pool liner and equipment would be in good working condition at the time of closing. I find the preponderance of evidence supports a breach of promise in respect to the pool cover and the need to replace the water chlorinator. This breach gives rise to damages only for a pool cover in the amount of $271.45 and $281.75 for a chlorinator replacement. Cost invoices have been filed.

[41] I award total damages in the amount of $10,753.20 plus pre-judgment interest to the plaintiffs, together with costs. In the event the parties deem it necessary for the court to fix the amount of costs, I order that a trial date be obtained from the trial co-ordinator and briefs be filed two days in advance of the hearing.

_____

LOGAN, J.

Released: December 19, 2003

Court of King's Bench of Alberta

Citation: National Bank of Canada v Precision Livestock Diagnostics Ltd., 2025 ABKB 175

Date: 20250324
Docket: 2501 04252
Registry: Calgary

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

Between:

National Bank of Canada

Plaintiff

- and -

Precision Livestock Diagnostics Ltd., Sunterra Food Corp., Soleterra D'Italia Ltd., Sunwold Farms Inc., Sunterra Farms Iowa Inc., Trochu Meat Processors Ltd., Sunterra Quality Food Markets Inc., Sunterra Farms Ltd., Sunwold Farms Limited, Lariagra Farms Ltd., Sunterra Farm Enterprises Ltd., Sunterra Enterprises Inc. and Sunterra Beef Ltd.

Defendants

Endorsement
of the Honourable Justice M.J. Lema

I. Introduction

[1] Should an interim receiver be appointed under s. 47 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act where the predominant purpose seems to be information gathering about possible cheque kiting by some of the defendant corporations?

[2] If not, should a receiver be appointed under the Judicature Act or other Alberta statutes authorizing such an appointment?

[3] The answers are no and no, as explained below.

II. Appointment of interim receiver under s. 47 BIA

A. Legislative provision

[4] Here is s. 47 BIA:

> (1) If the court is satisfied that a notice is about to be sent or was sent under subsection 244(1), it may, subject to subsection (3), appoint a trustee as interim receiver of all or any part of the debtor's property that is subject to the security to which the notice relates until the earliest of
>
> (a) the taking of possession by a receiver, within the meaning of subsection 243(2), of the debtor's property over which the interim receiver was appointed,
>
> (b) the taking of possession by a trustee of the debtor's property over which the interim receiver was appointed, and
>
> (c) the expiry of 30 days after the day on which the interim receiver was appointed or of any period specified by the court.
>
> (2) The court may direct an interim receiver appointed under subsection (1) to do any or all of the following:
>
> (a) take possession of all or part of the debtor's property mentioned in the appointment;
>
> (b) exercise such control over that property, and over the debtor's business, as the court considers advisable;
>
> (c) take conservatory measures; and
>
> (d) summarily dispose of property that is perishable or likely to depreciate rapidly in value.
>
> (3) An appointment of an interim receiver may be made under subsection (1) only if it is shown to the court to be necessary for the protection of
>
> (a) the debtor's estate; or
>
> (b) the interests of the creditor who sent the notice under subsection 244(1).
>
> (4) An application under subsection (1) is to be filed in a court having jurisdiction in the judicial district of the locality of the debtor. [emphasis added]

[5] It is common ground that NBC issued a notice of intention to enforce security under s. 244 BIA on March 14, 2025.

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

[6] What prompted the issuance of that notice and NBC's reasons for seeking an interim receiver are discussed next

B. Background

[7] In mid-February 2025, NBC apparently identified irregular chequing activity among various defendants and took immediate steps to control further drawdowns from the defendants' various NBC accounts, by cheque or otherwise, and to recover an apparent overdraft of approximately $43 million stemming from that activity.

[8] That overdraft draft was cleared, in various ways, within 15 days of being identified.

[9] No further overdraft or other new debt to NBC, arising from the identified chequing activity or otherwise and owing directly by any of the defendants, has since been identified.

[10] NBC has called its loans, which currently stand at approximately $17 million.

[11] It issued a notice of intention to enforce its security, per s. 244 BIA, on March 14, 2025.

[12] Since approximately February 18, 2025, FTI, a licensed insolvency trustee, has, with the defendants' consent, been monitoring the group's financial transactions (or at least its Canadian operations) on NBC's behalf, albeit an informal (i.e. non-court-appointment) basis.

[13] NBC now seeks an interim receiver under s. 47 BIA for two central purposes:

1. preservation of and control over the "Account Property" i.e. "present and after-acquired bank accounts, money, funds, receivables, cheques, choses in action, and books and records" of the defendant; and
2. investigation of certain "Impugned Transactions" (defined in supporting affidavit), namely, the above-noted irregular chequing activity.

C. Analysis

[14] I start by reproducing NBC's detailed arguments on the preservation aspect, followed by my comments on each.

[15] Here are the first two: NBC's potential exposure and risk, and the effects on third parties.

1. "Potential exposure and risk"

[16] NBC argued:

> [NBC] has serious, well-founded concerns in relation to the Impugned Transactions and the Kiting Scheme. Among other things, [NBC] faces potential exposure and risk as a result of the Kiting Scheme, for which was there was no legitimate commercial purpose. While the Lender has mitigated against the over US$ 43 million in Overdraft Indebtedness, due to the implementation of the Risk Management Processes, the possibility of further claims exists and the scope of the Kiting Scheme has not yet been determined. Additionally, it is unknown to what extent any other financial institutions (most notably, Compeer [Financial, ACA, an American bank]) have been affected. It is possible, and in [NBC's] assessment likely, that the Compeer Accounts were in an overdraft position; but the Sunterra Group has refused to provide the information which would prove (or disprove) whether this is the case. [emphasis added]

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

[17] NBC acknowledges that it has eliminated an approximately US$43 million overdraft apparently stemming from the Impugned Transactions.

[18] It has also instituted strict internal monitoring over and debit restrictions on all NBC accounts held by any of the defendants. In other words, it has closed the barn door against further drawdowns occurring without its approval.

[19] Finally, it has provided notice of various defaults under its lending agreements, demanded payment of its aggregate debt (as noted, approximately $17 million), and closed off any further financing of any of the defendants (i.e. other than advances contemplated under the proposed interim receivership).

[20] NBC did not explain or particularize its "potential exposure or risk" here.

[21] Even if it extended the scope of its inquiry earlier than the nine or so months already reviewed (back to May 1, 2024) and discovered (for instance) that more of the high-volume and high-value back-and-forth chequing activities had occurred in the previous (for example) three years, it did not explain how that would or might affect the group's current financial position with NBC.

[22] In other words, how any such uncovered activities would translate to any different overdraft or other debt position with NBC than it faced in mid-February of this year and which it has now cleared.

[23] As far as I can tell, whatever further irregular chequing activities occurred and whenever and in whatever amounts, the net result of them was reflected in the mid-February position in the relevant NBC accounts then. That is, it is not apparent what after-shock effects, if any, NBC is or would be facing even if it uncovered similar chequing activities in earlier periods, at least in terms of a changed, or even a risk of a changed, current financial position for the group with NBC.

[24] NBC's evidence and argument did not show otherwise.

2. Effects on third parties

[25] As for effects on third parties (e.g. Compeer), s. 47's second branch (i.e. after "[protecting] … the debtor's estate") focuses on the interests of the "creditor" applying for relief i.e. not any other actual or potential creditor or the creditors (actual or potential) generally.

[26] Accordingly, I do not find the possibly of unearthing information showing the impact of the chequing activities on Compeer or other creditors a meaningful reason for seeking an interim receiver.

3. Need to investigate chequing activities

[27] NBC then argued:

> In light of the sheer scale of the Impugned Transactions, and the period of time over which they were undertaken, it is necessary to ensure that a neutral third party with appropriate powers is in place to investigate the Impugned Transactions and prevent further Impugned Transactions from occurring. [NBC] faces significant prejudice as a result of the Kiting Scheme. While the management of the Sunterra Group has advised that the Impugned Transactions > were caused by Ray Price and that Mr. Price would be removed as a signatory for the Sunterra Group, (i) Mr. Price is the sole director of Sunterra Beef, Precision, and Soleterra, and a director of each Borrower; and (ii) the Sunterra Group has ceased cooperating with [NBC]. As a result, absent the appointment of the Interim Receiver, [NBC] is unable to assess what further steps may be necessary to protect its interests. [emphasis added]

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

[28] On investigating the Impugned Transactions, NBC did not explain why an interim receivership is needed for such an investigation (assuming one is needed) to occur.

[29] It alluded briefly to "litigation", presumably meaning possible future litigation between it and the defendants or some of them about the chequing activities or possibly litigation between it and other lenders in respect of those activities.

[30] But it did not explain why the document production, document review, and questioning dimensions of any such litigation would be inadequate to investigate those activities.

[31] It did not argue that the defendants or any of them will or even may destroy documentary, electronic, or other records.

[32] It did not offer a detailed comparative analysis of "investigation via IR" and "investigation via litigation."

[33] To the extent urgency is a consideration, it did not show what benefits a possibly faster investigation via IR would yield. As discussed above, NBC did not explain how a fuller understanding of the breadth and scope of the chequing activities would or could change the defendants' current financial position with NBC i.e. how learning more about those activities would or could inform anything that NBC might do now in reaction i.e. identify "what further steps" it might take or why they might be necessary.

[34] As noted above, NBC did not explain or particularize the asserted "significant prejudice" faced by it.

4. Benefits for other creditors

[35] NBC then argued:

> The appointment of the Interim Receiver is also for the benefit of the Sunterra Group's creditors generally, for substantially the same reasons. The scope of affected parties is unknown and the proposed investigation will permit the Interim Receiver to identify other parties, including financial institutions who are affected by or hold claims arising from the Impugned Transactions and the Kiting Scheme.

[36] As discussed above, the focus on creditor impact is necessarily limited to the interests of NBC itself.

[37] Other possibly affected creditors can take whatever steps they see as necessary to protect and advance their interests.

[38] I discuss this aspect further below.

5. Dissipation of assets

[39] Next NBC argued:

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

> While risk to the assets of the debtor company is a relevant consideration [under s. 47], it is not necessary for the party seeking appointment of an interim receiver to produce evidence of actual or immediate danger of the dissipation of assets if the factors set out in the BIA, concerning protection of the estate or a creditor's interests, are met. The prejudice to the Obligors is limited as the Interim Receiver's appointment will only be over the Account Property, the Obligors will continue operating, and a funding request model will be put in place. [authorities omitted]

[40] This does not explain how appointment of an interim receiver is necessary to protect the debtors' estates.

[41] NBC did not show a material risk of prejudice to those estates.

[42] It did not provide evidence or argue that the debtors or any of them are dissipating property or that there is a material risk of that occurring.

[43] They did not provide evidence showing any material risk of continuation of similar chequing activities. Given NBC's steps since mid-February 2025, I cannot see how any such activities affecting NBC itself could occur.

[44] At the hearing on March 17, Canadian counsel for Compeer provided a copy of a document apparently showing that Compeer has begun or will soon be starting proceedings in South Dakota for certain relief against some of the defendants.

[45] I infer from the initiation of such proceedings that Compeer is aware of some or all of the chequing activities and that it is also taking steps to eliminate the risk of any further such chequing activities involving Compeer, which (from the record here) I infer is or was the defendants' principal (if not exclusive) US banker.

[46] NBC did not argue that the very existence of the chequing activities translates to a risk of the defendants or any of them taking prejudicial-to-NBC-or-others steps in respect of their assets.

[47] Instead, NBC's focus was on preventing the repetition of the chequing activities and investigating those which have already occurred.

[48] In the absence of evidence showing a material risk of such activities recurring or of the defendants taking other steps to dissipate their assets, and in the absence of evidence showing any other need for protection of the debtors' estates, this dimension of s. 47 (i.e. para 47(3)(a)) is not engaged here.

6. Risk of chequing activities continuing (and recap of earlier factors)

[49] NBC then argued:

> The current situation is untenable, and there is a serious risk of deterioration of the Account Property – and [NBC's] collateral as a whole – in the short term. While [NBC's] review of the Impugned Transactions is ongoing, there is strong evidence of a Kiting Scheme, which greatly exceeds the "more than a suspicion or speculation" threshold identified in the case law (as discussed below) concerning the risk to assets of a debtor company. The Borrowers have no further access to revolving credit, and it is unclear how the Sunterra Group intends to operate in the absence of further credit. [NBC] is prepared to advance funds, to the Interim

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

> Receiver, in order to enable the Interim Receiver to carry out its mandate[,] which in turn, will permit funding requests to be made for required operational payments. Given that the Kiting Scheme was ongoing, for an indeterminate but potentially significant period of time, there is a risk that there are significant but as yet unknown claims against the Obligors. The appointment of the Interim Receiver, and corresponding investigation powers, are necessary to (i) ensure that no further Impugned Transactions occur; (ii) ensure the protection and preservation of the Account Property; (iii) enable a third party to assess, review, and locate information concerning the Impugned Transactions and identify any further or related transactions which may exist; and (iv) assess any claims against the Obligors resulting from the Impugned Transactions or the Unauthorized Overdrafts, including any claims by Compeer or others[.] [emphasis added]

[50] Again, NBC did not explain or particularize the asserted "serious risk of deterioration of the Account Property – and [its] collateral as a whole."

[51] As for a "risk that there are significant but as yet unknown claims against the Obligors", that does not translate to a risk to the debtors' estates or to NBC's position as the first-ranking creditor against most of the defendants. (Farm Credit Corporation is the first-ranking creditor on three of the defendants, with NBC in second position.)

[52] The priorities are what they are. Flushing out (possible) further claims against the defendants or any of them is not a convincing reason to install an interim receiver.

[53] Again, I do not see a material risk of further similar chequing activities here or any material risk to the Account Property, given the protective steps already taken by NBC.

7. Loss of confidence in management

[54] Here are NBC's further arguments:

> Whether the secured creditors of the debtor company have lost confidence in the management of the debtor company is also a relevant factor in considering whether the appointment is warranted:
>
> > I accept that there must be more than a suspicion or speculation concerning the assets of a company before an interim receiver is warranted. Where, as here, the major secured creditors who have the most at risk have with legitimate reason lost confidence, I do not think that there has to be an actual immediate risk to assets. [citing Maximum Financial Services v Corporate Cars Limited Partnership, 2006 CanLII 40988 (ONSC) at para 15]
>
> [NBC] has lost confidence in the management of the Sunterra Group, on numerous reasonable grounds, including as a result of: (i) the Sunterra Group's inability or unwillingness to take urgent action to address the Impugned Transactions and share the necessary information, including the Compeer Accounts; and, (ii) the Sunterra Group's decision to cease cooperating with [NBC's] investigation of the Impugned Transactions and to backtrack on promises made to [NBC] in February 2025.

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

> It is not required that an applicant prove "actual misfeasance and wrongdoing such that assets are being misappropriated or dissipated", and even where there are possible explanations regarding alleged wrongdoing by a debtor company, the applicant will succeed if it can establish "on a balance of probabilities the need for an immediate interim receivership to assure conservation of the Respondents' assets, and hence, protection of the interests of the Bank through its security." [citing RBC v Canadian Print Music Distributors Inc, 2006 CanLII 21048 (ONSC) at paras 16-18]
>
> Facts demonstrating a prima facie case of borrower misconduct or defaults, including material misrepresentations to lenders and/or serious breaches of the loan agreements, have been sufficient to appoint an interim receiver [citing RBC v Applied Energy Systems Inc, 2009 CanLII 69785 (ONSC) at para 24].
>
> In the context of the BIA, a requirement to establish a prima facie case has been interpreted as requiring that a claim be supported by evidence and not "mere allegations" or "obviously spurous", but the threshold is not particularly high. [NBC] has met and exceeded this threshold and there is no credible, commercially reasonable justification for the occurrence of the Impugned Transactions or the Kiting Scheme. [citing Smith v PricewaterhouseCoopers Inc, 2013 ABCA 288 at para 19] [emphasis added]

[55] Again, NBC did not demonstrate material risk to its interests here.

[56] It may well have lost confidence in Sunterra management, but it did not show material risk to its position if an interim receiver is not appointed e.g. how management's decisions will or could make the current circumstances worse for NBC.

[57] Even if NBC could learn more about the scope and breadth of the chequing activity, including how Compeer or possibly other financial institutions may have been involved and, if so, how those other parties are or may have been affected, that does not show why any such information is or might be necessary to protect or help protect NBC's current position.

[58] In RBC v Applied Energy (cited above), Cumming J. found (among other things) that "the security of RBC [had] been compromised" and that "there is a real danger assets will disappear."

[59] I have not found similar circumstances here.

8. No justification for chequing activities

[60] Even if no "credible, commercially reasonable justification" exists for the chequing activities, that on its own is not a material factor i.e. where NBC has recovered the overdraft in question, no material risk exists of further such activities, and no evidence shows that any as-yet-unexplored earlier activities have the potential to change NBC's current position with the defendants (in the sense of additional debt owing by any of them to NBC).

9. Limited powers of interim receiver

[61] Here I also emphasize the limited powers that can be given to an interim receiver, per ss. 47(2) BIA:

> The court may direct an interim receiver appointed under subsection (1) to do any or all of the following:

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

(a) take possession of all or part of the debtor's property mentioned in the appointment;

(b) exercise such control over that property, and over the debtor's business, as the court considers advisable;

(c) take conservatory measures; and

(d) summarily dispose of property that is perishable or likely to depreciate rapidly in value.

[62] These are hold-the-line powers, which I have already found are not required here i.e. with no material risk shown of dissipation or other deterioration of the defendants' estates or NBC's position.

[63] Such powers do not extend to conducting investigations, at least not where it is unclear how the outcome of the investigations (i.e. learning everything about the irregular chequing activities) could affect the extent of the defendants' available assets or NBC's position on those assets or its position vis-à-vis the debtors or any of them.

10. Conclusion on s. 47 BIA

[64] For these reasons, I conclude that the evidence does not warrant the appointment of an interim receiver under s. 47 BIA.

III. No "preserve rights" receiver possible for four key defendants in any case [65] In any case, as discussed below, no receiver, interim or otherwise, can be appointed for at least four of the defendants, which four happen to be the defendants most centrally (if not exclusively) involved in the irregular chequing activities, at least to the extent the proposed receivership is preservation-of-rights focused.

[66] The reason is a current stay or hold-action period in effect in respect of those defendants under the Farm Debt Mediation Act.

[67] I discuss this in detail below.

A. Legislative provisions

[68] The FDMA imposes an initial stay or hold period when a farmer (see definition below) is facing enforcement and other actions by one or more creditors.

[69] Here is the definition of "farmer", from s 2 FDMA:

> farmer means any person, cooperative, partnership or other association of persons that is engaged in farming for commercial purposes and that meets any prescribed criteria. (agriculteur)

[70] I believe it is common ground that Sunterra Farms Ltd., Sunwold Farms Ltd., Sunterra Farms Iowa Inc., and Sunwold Farms Inc. are farmers so defined.

[71] I believe it is also common ground that all four are insolvent within the meaning of (at minimum) one of the conditions identified in subsection 6(a), (b), and (c) FDMA.

[72] Here is the FDMA provision requiring interpretation here:

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

> 21 (1) Every secured creditor who intends to
>
> > (a) enforce any remedy against the property of a farmer, or
> >
> > (b) commence any proceedings or any action, execution or other proceedings, judicial or extra-judicial, for the recovery of a debt, the realization of any security or the taking of any property of a farmer
>
> shall give the farmer written notice of the creditor's intention to do so, and in the notice shall advise the farmer of the right to make an application under section 5.
>
> (2) The notice must be given to the farmer and to an administrator, in the form established by the Minister and in accordance with the regulations, at least 15 business days before the doing of any act described in paragraph (1)(a) or (b). [emphasis added]

[73] NBC is a secured creditor within the meaning of ss. 21(1).

[74] NBC issued a ss 21(2) notice to the defendants or at least the four in question on March [14], 2025.

[75] Section 5 FMDA (referenced in ss. 21(1)) provides (in part):

> (1) Subject to section 6, a farmer may apply to an administrator for either
>
> > (a) a stay of proceedings against the farmer by all the farmer's creditors, a review of the farmer's financial affairs, and mediation between the farmer and all the farmer's creditors for the purpose of assisting them to reach a mutually acceptable arrangement; or
> >
> > (b) a review of the farmer's financial affairs, and mediation between the farmer and all the farmer's secured creditors for the purpose of assisting them to reach a mutually acceptable arrangement.

[76] The four defendants ("the Farmers") argue that the 15-day hold period imposed by s. 21 bars the appointment of an interim or other receiver now or at any point prior to the expiry of that period.

[77] NBC argues that the appointment of an interim receiver falls outside the scope of s. 21.

[78] I find for the Farmers on this point, for the following reasons.

[79] NBC relies on Jacob's Hold Inc. v Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, 2000 CanLII 22730 (ONSC) (Jarvis J.). Here is the key segment of that decision:

> It seems sensible to deal first with the matters raised by Mr. Fallis. He says, essentially, that the order appointing the Interim Receiver is null and void and that all proceedings taken by PW pursuant to that authority are of no effect and that no immunity ought to be ordered in their favour in the circumstances. He argues that ss. 21 and 22 of the Farm Debt Mediation Act, S.C. 1997, c. 21 operate as an automatic stay of any action taken against a farmer and that an application to appoint an Interim Receiver pursuant to the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act,

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

> R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 constitutes a proceeding to which those sections apply. The appointment by the court of a receiver is for the purposes of preserving the estate of the bankrupt for the benefit of the creditors. It is not formally or otherwise a proceeding for the recovery of a debt, the realization of a security or the taking of any property of a farmer. [emphasis added]

[80] Assuming for the moment appointing a BIA interim receiver falls into one of the latter three categories of action (i.e. the activities described in para 21(1)(b) FDMA), the question remains whether doing so constitutes a "enforc[ing] any remedy against the property of a farmer" under para. 21(1)(a).

[81] Jacob's Hold is silent on this aspect.

[82] It is clear that a preservation order, an attachment order, and other hold-the-line orders constitute a remedy against property i.e. without necessarily being linked to actual or possible future enforcement against the property. In Vachon v. Canada Employment and Immigration Commission, 1985 CanLII 12 (SCC), [1985] 2 SCR 417, the Supreme Court of Canada found that "remedy", in the context of the BIA, should be interpreted broadly and as extending to preservative orders:

> Appellant in my view properly relied upon the English version of s. 49(1) of the Bankruptcy Act, where the word recours is rendered by the word "remedy", giving to it and to the words "autres procédures" ("other proceedings") a very broad meaning which covers any kind of attempt at recovery, judicial or extrajudicial. Black's Law Dictionary (5th ed. 1979), defines "remedy":
>
> > The means by which a right is enforced or the violation of a right is prevented, redressed, or compensated.
>
> and below:
>
> > Remedy means any remedial right to which an aggrieved party is entitled with or without resort to a tribunal.
>
> Jowitt's Dictionary of English Law (2nd ed. 1977), vol. 2, gives an almost identical definition:
>
> > the means by which the violation of a right is prevented, redressed, or compensated. …. [paras 21 and 22] [emphasis added]

[83] See also Dowd et al. v. Skip the Dishes Restaurant Services Inc., 2020 MBQB 155 (CanLII) (Perlmutter ACJ):

> While an attaching order is obviously a different form of pre-judgment remedy than an order for the preservation of property, in light of the intrusive nature of both remedies including the potential hardship or harm to the party who is the subject of these pre-judgment orders, in my view, similar weighty considerations arise. It is my view that these considerations are sensibly reflected in the analysis of the Ontario Superior Court of Justice Divisional Court in BMW Canada Inc. v. Autoport Limited, 2019 ONSC 4299, which reformulated the following test for motions brought under the equivalent Ontario Rule 45.01 (Rules of Civil Procedure, RRO 1990, Reg 194, s 45.01) (which is worded identically to the Manitoba Rule) (para. 53):

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

> a. the property sought to be preserved is the property in question in a proceeding or relevant to an issue in the proceeding;
>
> b. there is a serious issue to be tried with regard to the property;
>
> c. the interim preservation or custody of the property is necessary to enable a party to advance or defend its claim; and
>
> d. the balance of convenience favours granting the relief sought by the applicant or moving party. [para 13] [bold and italics emphases added]

[84] And Montreal Trust Company of Canada v. R M Holdings Ltd., 2000 NFCA 27:

> On appeal, Montreal Trust did not submit that the applications judge was wrong in his construction or application of s. 66 or Rule 29.10(g). Instead, it argued that the applications judge failed to give the Act a broad and liberal interpretation to effect its remedial purposes (which include the preservation of a debtor's exigible property before entry of final judgment to ensure that any resulting judgment can be made effective) and, more specifically, failed to consider or apply s. 33(4) of the Act. … [para 7] [bold and italics emphases added]

[85] And Coast Tractor & Equip. Ltd. v. Halliday, 1987 CanLII 2760 (BC SC) (Gibbs J.):

> Earlier in these reasons garnishee before judgment was referred to as one of a genus of preservation of assets remedies together with others including the power of injunction. In *Aetna Fin. Services Ltd. v. Feigelman, 1985 CanLII 55 (SCC), [1985] 1 S.C.R. 2, [1985] 2 W.W.R. 971 55 C.B.R. (N.S.) 1, 29 B.L.R. 5, 4 C.P.R. (3d) 145, 15 D.L.R. (4th) 161, 32 Man. R. (2d) 241, 56 N.R. 241, during the course of determining whether a Mareva injunction should remain in place, Estey J., for the court, discussed the rationale for the power of the court to make orders for the preservation of assets. … [para 12] [bold and italics emphases added]

[86] These authorities confirm that a preservation-of-assets-focused order is a form of remedy against property.

[87] I find that that characterization extends to a s. 47 BIA interim receivership i.e. as a mechanism aimed at preserving the status quo, as reflected (as discussed above) in the limited powers that can be given to such a receiver.

[88] This conclusion is supported by Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce v Foxtrot Farms ULC, 2024 BCSC 1019 (Masuhara J.):

> In respect to the argument of nullity advanced by Foxtrot, CIBC submits that s. 21(1) and (2) of the FDMA are not applicable because the present application is not one seeking to enforce a remedy against the property of a farmer or the recovery of debt, realization of the security, or the taking of any property of a farmer. CIBC submits that it is only taking steps to > protect and preserve its security, and it is a future step in which it will seek a full receiver to which the notice period under s. 21(1) and (2) apply. Reliance is placed upon the Ontario case of Jacob's Hold v. CIBC, 2000 CanLII 22730 (ON SC), [2000] O.J. No. 5702; 52 O.R. (3d) 776.

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

>
> Foxtrot relies upon the decision of Justice Joyce in Community Futures Development Corp. v. Litzenberger, 2006 BCSC 856, where Justice Joyce reviewed and summarized the purpose of the FDMA and the approach to be taken in applying the Act, the approach being that the Act is to be given "such fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation as best ensures the attainment of its objects" and that the "words used by Parliament must be interpreted not only in their ordinary sense but also in the context of the scheme and purpose of the legislation."
>
> He noted the case of Corp. Les Produits de la Jardiniere v. National Bank of Canada, [1996] F.C.J. No. 460, which states at para. 14 in relation to the FDMA's predecessor act that:
>
> > the Act sets out a set of temporary measures intended to enable farmers to continue operating while benefiting from a grace period before entering into arrangements with their creditors with the assistance of a panel of experts acting as a conciliator.
>
> Foxtrot also relies upon the decision of Westminster Savings Credit Union v. Font, 2006 BCSC 1308, a decision of Justice Cullen (as he then was) in which he considered s. 21(1)(a), and held that the registration of a CPL "falls within the scope of s. 21 either as part of the enforcement of a remedy or the commencement of proceedings or action execution or other proceedings for the recovery of a debt or realization of security or taking of any property of a farmer". CIBC attempted to distinguish the Westminster case from the present by noting the differences between a CPL and a preservation order.
>
> I am not persuaded that the distinction assists here given the context of the broad encompassing words "any remedy against property" and the liberal approach that is to be taken. *The language encompasses, in my view, a procedural remedy such as a preservation order. This would be much more consistent with the scheme and language of the FDMA.
>
> With respect to the case of Jacob's Hold, first, I am not bound by the Ontario decision of Jacob's Hold. Further, *the decision does not address the broad scope of s. 21(1), thus the commentary does not assist me in the interpretation of s. 21(1). [paras 14-19] [bold and italics emphases added]

[89] And by North 40 Farms (Re), 1999 CanLII 14089 (MBQB) (Reg Sharp) at paras 13-18.

[90] Per ss 21(2) FMDA, no step that constitutes enforcing a remedy against a farmer's property can be taken until expiry of the 15-day waiting period i.e. ss. 21(2) provides an implicit stay of proceedings in advance of any further stay that may be triggered under s. 5 FMDA.

[91] Accordingly, even if a s. 47 BIA interim receivership were warranted, NBC moved prematurely here i.e. in applying in respect of the Farmers before expiry of the implicit ss. 21(2) stay.

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

[92] The same applies to any form of receivership -- whether under the Judicature Act or other provincial statute authorizing the appointment of a receiver -- to the extent it is aimed at preserving the status quo i.e. providing a remedy in respect of the Farmers' property.

[93] I find that, concerning NBC's arguments in favour of a Judicature Act or other provincial-statute-based receiver that is preservation-focused, the same FMDA bar operates against them in the present circumstances i.e. concerning the Farmers.

[94] That leaves NBC's arguments in favour of an "investigative receivership."

IV. Investigative receivership

[95] To the extent NBC is seeking investigative powers for a preservation-focused receiver, the answer is that, with no preservation-focused receivership warranted or possible here, it is not necessary to consider the investigative dimension of such a receivership.

[96] If NBC is alternatively seeking a stand-alone investigative receivership, I have already explained why such is not available here as part of a s. 47 BIA interim receivership i.e. with its necessarily preservative focus and with no evidence showing how an investigation will or is likely to assist in preservation efforts.

[97] The spotlight shifts then to whether a stand-alone investigative receivership is possible and, if so, warranted here, under one or more of the Judicature Act or other provincial statutes.

[98] At paragraph 76 of its brief, NBC argued that the arguments raised in support of a s. 47 interim receiver addressing the risk of the lender's security deteriorating, the need to stabilize and preserve the debtor's business, and the loss of confidence in the debtors' management, apply equally in support of a "just or convenient" receiver under s. 13 of the Judicature Act.

[99] In answer I make the same arguments as above on those aspects.

[100] NBC provided a more detailed argument on a fourth aspect, namely, "positions and interests of other creditors." At para 78 it argued (in part):

> … The final factor, regarding the positions and interests of other creditors, also militates toward the appointment of [an] Interim Receiver in this case, as (i) it appears that there is likely an overdraft position in the Compeer Accounts, and Compeer will likely benefit from the completion of an investigation of the Impugned Transactions; (ii) the appointment of [an] Interim Receiver will permit the Sunterra Group to continue operations with minimal impact on third-party creditors and stakeholders; (iii) there may be other financial institutions or parties impacted by the Impugned Transactions and who will benefit from identification of the claims against Sunterra Group arising form the Kiting Scheme and the Impugned Transactions; and (iv) the funding of [an] Interim Receiver, by [NBC], by way of the [proposed] Interim Receiver's Borrowing Charge, will ensure the preservation of the Sunterra Group's property and business while investigations are ongoing.

[101] At the hearing on March 20, Compeer's Canadian counsel advised that Compeer supports NBC's application for an interim receiver and (presumably) for an investigative receiver.

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

[102] However, Compeer did not provide any evidence at the hearing i.e. other than for the purpose of showing (as noted above) that it has commenced certain proceedings against some of the defendants in the US. Meaning no evidence from Compeer about its dealings with the defendants or any of them or anything else from which I might gauge how Compeer might benefit from the proposed receivership here.

[103] Neither did it bring its own application for a receiver or jointly apply with NBC.

[104] I do not find that providing a possible albeit unspecified benefit to a third party possibly involved (albeit with no details), is a sufficiently compelling reason for an investigative receiver or even a material consideration when gauging whether one should be appointed.

[105] Particularly with no evidence on whether whatever benefits might be achieved for Compeer are not achievable otherwise and, if achievable otherwise, evidence allowing an assessment of the comparative advantages and disadvantages of proceeding receiver-wise versus otherwise.

[106] Still less so concerning asserted (but unspecified) benefits for unidentified third parties ("other financial institutions or parties impacted").

[107] As for the proposed receivership being the sole means by which the defendants (or some of them) can continuing operating i.e. via the funding contemplated by the proposed receivership order, that ignores the possibility of the defendants attracting replacement financing during the current hold period (at least concerning the Farmers) and any extended stay period that might be triggered the FDMA or by other proceedings taken by the group (or some members) under the BIA or other restructuring statute.

[108] Concerning "preservation and accessibility of relevant records", NBC presented no evidence showing any risk of destruction of records.

[109] Concerning the asserted necessity of an investigative receivership to obtaining information from Compeer or other third-party financial institutions, NBC did not show that it can only obtain such information via receivership of the defendants. For instance, it provided no evidence of having requested information from Compeer or of any response from Compeer and, if negative, the reason(s) for it declining or being unable to provide the information.

[110] NBC also alluded to the possibility of obtaining the (or some of the) information "by court order" (see para 84(e)), but did not explain further.

[111] NBC stated (paragraph 79(c)): "Any investigatory, preservatory and administrative actions can be completed by the Interim Receiver more simply and cost effectively than any available means." But characterized the IR route as simpler and more cost-effective, it did not identify the comparables and how and why the IR route is better, other than a statement (at para 86) that "[NBC] is [not] seeking any sort of freezing order or similar relief (such as a Mareva injunction)" i.e. without any further discussion.

[112] In Akagi s Synergy Group (2000) Inc, 2015 ONCA 368, the Ontario Court of Appeal explored the "investigative receiver" concept, surveying the Ontario law to that point. It identified the following common factors in the cases appointing such a receiver:

> Some consistent themes emerge from these authorities:

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

- The appointment of the investigative receiver is necessary to alleviate a risk posed to the plaintiff's right to recovery: Loblaw Brands, at paras. 10, 14 and 16.
- The primary objective of investigative receivers is to gather information and "ascertain the true state of affairs" concerning the financial dealings and assets of a debtor, or of a debtor and a related network of individuals or corporations: General Electric (Div. Ct.), at para. 15. One authority characterized the investigative receiver as a tool to equalize the "informational imbalance" between debtors and creditors with respect to the debtor's financial dealings: East Guardian SPC v. Mazur, supra, at para. 75.
- Generally, the investigative receiver does not control the debtor's assets or operate its business, leaving the debtor to continue to carry on its business in a manner consistent with the preservation of its business and property: see, e.g., Loblaw Brands, at para. 17; Century Services.
- Finally, in all cases the investigative receivership must be carefully tailored to what is required to assist in the recovery of the claimant's judgment while at the same time protecting the defendant's interests, and to go no further than necessary to achieve these ends. [para 90] emphasis added]

[113] As already discussed, I do not find sufficient evidence of “a risk to [NBC’s] right to recover” its claims against the defendants or that it otherwise requires “assist[ance] in the recovery” of those claims.

[114] NBC did not offer any detailed submissions on seeking a receiver under any other provincial statute e.g. the Personal Property Security Act or the Business Corporations Act.

V. Conclusion

[115] NBC has not shown that an interim receiver under s. 47 BIA is warranted in the present circumstances or, at least concerning the Farmers, that appointing such a receiver is possible in the face of the current FMDA hold period.

[116] And same for a provincial-statute-anchored receivership aimed at preservation of rights.

[117] It has also not shown that an investigative receivership is possible under s. 47 BIA (at least where no evidence shows how the proposed investigation(s) would aid in preservation efforts) or is warranted under the Judicature Act or any other provincial statute in the current circumstances.

[118] Accordingly, I dismiss NBC’s application for the appointment of an interim receiver under s. 47 BIA or, alternatively, an equivalent receiver under any applicable provincial statute, or alternatively, an investigative receiver under the BIA or any applicable provincial statute.

[119] The defendants are entitled to costs on a scale (e.g. Schedule C or otherwise) and quantum to be determined.

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

[120] The defendants' costs submissions, via maximum 3-page letter (excluding attachments), are due by close of business on Thursday, April 10, 2025, with NBC's due (same rules) by close of business on Thursday, April 17, 2025.

[121] I thank counsel on both sides for their helpful written and oral submissions.

Heard on the 20th day of March, 2025.
Dated at the City of Calgary, Alberta this 24th day of March, 2025.

M.J. Lema
J.C.K.B.A.

Appearances:

Sean Collins, K.C., Pantelis Kyriakakis, Nathan Stewart and Samantha Arbor
McCarthy Tetrault LLP
for the Plaintiff National Bank of Canada

David W. Mann, K.C. and Scott Chimuk
Blue Rock Law LLP
for the Respondents (Sunterra Group)

2025 ABKB 175 (CanLII)

COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Citation: XY, LLC v. Zhu,
2013 BCCA 352

Date: 20130726
Dockets: CA039816; CA038917; CA038918; CA039822

Docket: CA039816

Between:

XY, LLC

Respondent
(Plaintiff)

And

Jesse Jia-Bei Zhu

Appellant
(Defendant)

And

JingJing Genetic Inc. (formerly IND Lifetech Inc.), Shu Xi Wang, Selen Zhou, Jin Tang

Respondents
(Defendants)

- and -

Docket: CA039817

Between:

XY, LLC (formerly XY, Inc.)

Respondent
(Plaintiff)

And

Selen Zhou

Appellant
(Defendant)

And

Jesse Jia-Bei Zhu, Jin Tang, and JingJing Genetic Inc. (formerly IND Lifetech Inc.)

Respondents
(Defendants)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

- and -

Docket: CA039818

Between:

XY, LLC

Respondent
(Plaintiff)

And

Jin Tang

Appellant
(Defendant)

- and -

Docket: CA039822

Between:

XY, LLC

Appellant
(Plaintiff)

And

International Newtech Development Incorporated, IND Lifetech Group Ltd., IND Lifetech (U.S.A.) Incorporated, IND Lifetech (USA) Inc., IND Lifetech (Qingdao) Co. Ltd., IND Lifetech (Zouping) Co. Ltd., IND Lifetech (Beijing) Co. Ltd., also known as Beijing IND Embryontech Co. Ltd., IND Lifetech Co. Ltd., IND Embryontech Inc., Shanghai JingJing Biotech Co. Ltd., formerly known as JingJing Genetic (Shanghai) Ltd., IND Lifetech, Inc., now known as JingJing Genetic Inc., Jesse Zhu, Selen Zhou and JinTang

Respondents
(Defendants)

Before: The Honourable Madam Justice Newbury
The Honourable Mr. Justice Chiasson
The Honourable Madam Justice D. Smith

On Appeal from the Supreme Court of British Columbia, March 2, 2012
(XY, Inc. v. International Newtech Development Incorporated, 2012 BCSC 319, Vancouver Registry, Docket Number S076862.)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

Counsel for the Appellant, Jesse Jai-Bei Zhu (CA039816) and for the Appellants International Newtech Development Incorporated, et al. (CA039822):	R.N. McFee, Q.C. M.D. Shirreff
Counsel for the Appellant, Selen Zhou (CA039817):	J.J. Hunter, Q.C. G. van Ert
Counsel for the Appellant, Jin Tang (CA039818):	S.K. Gudmundseth A.S. Dosangh
Counsel for the Appellant, XY, LLC in CA039822 and Respondent XY, LLC in CA039816, CA038917 and CA039818:	C.S. Wilson G. Bowman
Place and Dates of Hearing:	Vancouver, British Columbia May 15, 16, & 17, 2013
Place and Date of Judgment:	Vancouver, British Columbia July 26, 2013

Written Reasons by:
The Honourable Madam Justice Newbury

Concurred in by:
The Honourable Mr. Justice Chiasson
The Honourable Madam Justice D. Smith

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

Summary:

Plaintiff XY entered into technology licensing agreement in favour of defendant "JingJing", a member of a group of corporations known as the "IND Group". The Agreement required that JingJing pay a royalty based on its revenues from its use of the technology, and contained various provisions to protect the confidentiality of the technology. The Court below found that JingJing breached the terms of the contract and committed the tort of deceit by falsifying its records and thus substantially underpaid the royalties it owed to XY. The controlling shareholder of JingJing, Mr. Zhu, and two employees of JingJing were also found to have committed the tort of deceit and were jointly and severally liable with JingJing for the payment of damages exceeding $8 million. These damages represented the difference between the royalties that would have been paid had JingJing properly recorded its revenues, and the amount it had actually paid. This represented the contract measure of damages, although in this case, the Court of Appeal said, damages for the tort of deceit would likely have been the same or nearly the same amount.

The trial judge declined to extend liability to other members of the IND Group of corporations, declining to pierce the corporate veil on the "group enterprise theory". He also dismissed the plaintiff's claim of unjust enrichment against the IND corporations. The Court granted a permanent injunction enjoining the future use of XY's technology by the defendants.

By the time of trial, JingJin had declared bankruptcy. The defendants other than JingJing appealed.

Appeal Allowed to limited extent of amending the terms of the permanent injunction and ordering a retrial of XY's claim of unjust enrichment against the IND defendants. The trial judge had not made findings regarding this claim and the plaintiffs' allegations were such as to require that such findings be made.

In all other respects, the appeals were dismissed. The trial judge had not erred in finding that the plaintiff had proven the tort of deceit, including the causation element that requires that the plaintiff have relied on the representor's statements to its detriment.

Even if causation for purposes of the tort of deceit had not been proven, the tort of civil conspiracy among JingJing and the three personal defendants had been proven. The trial judge had not erred in extending liability to the three personal defendants, who were not shielded by the corporate vehicle from liability for their active participation in deceiving XY.

The trial judge had not erred in declining to pierce the corporate veil of the IND corporations but as mentioned earlier, had erred in failing to make findings of fact with respect to the claim of unjust enrichment against them.

Reasons for Judgment of the Honourable Madam Justice Newbury:

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[1] This matter consists of three appeals and a cross appeal. They arise in the context of a technology licensing agreement between the plaintiff XY, LLC ("XY") as licensor and one of the defendants, JingJing Genetic Inc. ("JingJing"), as licensee. The technology makes it possible to separate X and Y chromosomes in (inter alia) bovine spermatozoa, thus permitting the production of calves of a desired sex. The trial judge, Mr. Justice Kelleher, found that JingJing had provided XY with false reports concerning revenues it received from its use of the technology, underpaid the royalties it owed to XY, concealed documents from XY, and violated in several ways the confidentiality provisions in the agreement. JingJing was found liable for breach of contract and the tort of deceit. The award of damages of some $8.6 million against JingJing is not challenged by the plaintiffs; but since the corporation is now bankrupt, the judgment is presumably a dry one.

[2] Three of the appeals are brought by individual defendants (the "Personal Defendants") who were employed by JingJing (and by other members of its corporate "group"). The trial judge found that these defendants had committed the torts of deceit and civil conspiracy and awarded the damages jointly and severally against them as well as against their employer. Ms. Jin Tang and Ms. Selen Zhou argue on appeal that they should not have been found liable for JingJing's fraudulent conduct and were simply "following orders". Mr. Jesse Zhu, who was the controlling shareholder of the "IND Group" of corporations and who was clearly the controlling mind of JingJing, cannot make that argument; but he contends the trial judge was wrong to find JingJing had committed the tort of deceit and hence to find that he was a joint tortfeasor with JingJing, or that he committed the tort of civil conspiracy. In his submission, there was no proof that XY had changed its position in reliance on JingJing's misstatements; thus the causation element of the torts was lacking. Finally, Mr. Zhu contends that the trial judge erred in his calculation of the damage award, and challenges as overly broad the terms of a permanent injunction granted against JingJing, the Personal Defendants and "all those over whom they exercise control", in respect of the future use of XY's technology.

[3] The plaintiff cross appeals on the basis that other members of the IND Group should also have been found liable with JingJing for the damages suffered by XY. The plaintiff says that like the Personal Defendants, those corporations were joint tortfeasors with JingJing; and that in the alternative they constituted a "common interest entity", so that their individual corporate personalities should be notionally "collapsed" into one with JingJing.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

Factual Background

The Parties

[4] The trial of these actions occupied 29 days and the facts of the case were described by the trial judge in long and detailed reasons: see 2012 BCSC 319. I do not intend to try to rehearse them here except as is necessary to explain and determine the points raised on appeal. I begin by attaching as the first schedule to these reasons a copy of the IND corporate "chart" which represents the lines of ownership and control among JingJing and the other IND companies. With one or two exceptions, the chart was in effect at all material times until January 2008. In that month, all the shares of JingJing were transferred to two persons in China, one a friend of Mr. Zhu and the other his brother-in-law. As the trial judge observed, this transaction lacked commercial reality and Mr. Zhu admitted that it had been intended to avoid liability in this proceeding. (Paras. 15 and 118-21.)

[5] As the chart indicates, Mr. Zhu at all material times controlled International Newtech Development Inc., ("International Newtech") which in turn controlled JingJing and various other "IND" companies comprising the IND Group. It is worth noting that Excel Advance International Ltd. ("Excel") acquired IND Lifetech Group Ltd. ("IND Cayman") from International Newtech in July 2007. The shares of IND

Cayman were later sold to IND DairyTech Ltd., a publicly listed corporation, but Mr. Zhu continued to have effective control through other controlled corporations.

[6] The trial judge described the Personal Defendants and their positions in the IND Group as follows:

> The defendant Jesse Jia-Bei Zhu was born in China, and now lives in British Columbia. He is a Canadian citizen. He did his bachelors and masters degrees in China, and originally came to Canada as part of his Ph.D. studies.
>
> The defendant Richard Remillard is a veterinarian. Mr. Zhu hired him in 2001 as vice president of JingJing. He became president of JingJing in 2003.
>
> The plaintiff discontinued this action against Dr. Remillard as a result of a settlement agreement between them in April 2008.
>
> Under the terms of the agreement, Dr. Remillard agreed to deliver a "comprehensive, true affidavit in response to Interrogatories to be delivered by counsel for the Plaintiff to use in the Proceedings".
>
> The defendant Selen Zhou is the financial manager for IND Embryontech Inc. She did financial management for International Newtech and, until its bankruptcy, JingJing. She also did accounting work for IND (California) and IND (Pennsylvania). She, along with Jesse Zhu, Dr. Remillard and Tang Jin, were the management team of JingJing.
>
> The defendant Tang Jin was the lab manager for International Newtech. She was in charge of embryo production and, later, semen production. [Paras. 28-33.]

[7] The plaintiff XY was founded by the Colorado State University Foundation and Cytomation Inc. Until June 2007, Dr. Mervyn Jacobsen was its majority shareholder; since then, it has been controlled by Inguran, LLC, which carries on business as "Sexing Technologies".

The Technology

[8] The technology which was the subject of the Commercial License Agreement ("CLA") between XY and JingJing was described as follows by the trial judge:

> The plaintiff XY Inc. ("XY") owns technology (and the intellectual property rights associated with the technology) that permits the separation of X (female) and Y (male) chromosomes from bovine spermatozoa. This valuable technology is used as a means of producing calves of a desired sex.
>
> The chromosomes are separated using a cytometer, a device that counts cells. The cytometers that are adapted for this purpose are called SX > cytometers. These cytometers are manufactured by DakoCytomation Inc., which has a cross-licensing agreement with XY.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

>
> …
>
> Thomas Gilligan is a long-time employee of XY and was XY's general manager at the time of the formation of the CLA with JingJing. He served as general manager of XY from 2002 to 2010. He is currently employed by ST [Sexing Technologies].
>
> Mr. Gilligan testified that flow cytometry began some 30 years ago. Scientists in the Silicon Valley studying DNA were doing flow cytometry studies on sperm and realized that X and Y chromosomes could be identified. The United States Department of Agriculture ("USDA") used this knowledge and developed a way of keeping the sperm alive through a sorting process. The USDA acquired a patent and made various improvements to the process.
>
> The first commercial use of this technology was by Mastercalf, a company in the United Kingdom. Mastercalf acquired a license from the USDA to use sorted sperm to create embryos through in vitro fertilization or "IVF". IVF is a process of having sperm fertilize oocytes obtained from cows in a fluid medium.
>
> According to Mr. Gilligan, the sorter used by Mastercalf was not fast enough to make the process commercially viable.
>
> The next developments were two. First, Colorado State University developed a way to work with more manageable numbers of sperm. Second, a company called Cytomation, Inc., later called DakoCytomation, developed a much faster sorter.
>
> In 1996, XY was formed by the Colorado State University Research Foundation and Cytomation, Inc. Its purpose was to bring this new technology to the marketplace. The first licensee of XY was a company called Cogent in the United Kingdom. Then, XY purchased Mastercalf so XY controlled both "exclusive licenses" that had been issued by the USDA. [At paras. 1-2 and 50-5.]

(Evidently, XY owns or has applied for patents around the world in respect of the technology.)

[9] In 1998, Mr. Zhu had established a research laboratory in Canada to carry out the in vitro fertilization ("IVF") of bovine embryos for the Chinese market using Canadian sires. (Para. 56.) In 2003, he, Dr. Remillard and Jin Tang met with XY's CEO, Dr. Jacobsen, to discuss the idea of exporting sexed IVF embryos. The embryos would be exported to China to supply farms that would buy directly from JingJing. After some delays, JingJing and XY agreed on terms that were set out in a letter dated December 26, 2003, and began working towards a more complete arrangement.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[10] Progress was delayed by the outbreak of mad cow disease in North America and by China's imposition of a ban on the importation of Canadian embryos. On February 6, 2004, however, XY and JingJing formally entered into the CLA. In general terms, XY agreed to permit JingJing to use its technology during the currency of the Agreement in return for a royalty based on the number of 'sexed' embryos JingJing sold in China, and granted JingJing options to manufacture "AI" (artificial insemination) "straws" containing cattle sperm for sale in China. In return for these licences, JingJing agreed to pay XY an initial fee plus a royalty on gross receipts received from the use or sale of licensed products. It is perhaps unnecessary to add that the CLA contained strict covenants on the part of JingJing designed to preserve the confidentiality of XY's technology.

[11] JingJing had to meet certain specified standards before the business terms of the CLA came fully into effect, but after some further amendments to the Agreement (see para. 74 of the reasons) and after purchasing two SX cytometers, JingJing achieved "commercialization" in October 2005.

[12] The relationship between the contracting parties was marred by dishonesty on the part of JingJing from the very beginning. The trial judge described at paras. 75-7 and 250, for example, an attempt by JingJing to amend the royalty provisions in the Agreement without XY's consent and in full knowledge that it had not agreed to the amendment. Dr. Jacobsen noticed the change and warned Dr. Remillard that he did not "do business that way". (Para. 76.)

[13] Evidently, JingJing was not deterred. It proceeded to violate various terms of the CLA, beginning with its entering into contract-sorting agreements with certain parties in August 2006, conduct that was prohibited by the CLA. (Para. 80.) XY expressed its objections, but JingJing proceeded to breach the Agreement in other ways – by selling sexed semen (not permitted by the terms of the CLA) and representing to XY that it was not doing so; by materially underreporting its embryo production (carried out partly through a veterinary clinic in Abbotsford, British Columbia and partly through other IND subsidiaries in Quebec and the United States) and selling in China; by taking steps to challenge XY's patents in China (prohibited under the CLA); and by attempting to sell SX cytometers to unauthorized parties in China. JingJing lied about or covered up these breaches through the production of false reports to XY which Ms. Zhou and Ms. Tang helped to prepare.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[14] Finally, on October 12, 2007, XY commenced its action in British Columbia against JingJing. It obtained an ex parte interim injunction restraining JingJing from transferring, selling, licensing, disclosing or in any way disposing of the cytometers or the confidential information that was the subject of the CLA. (See 2007 BCSC 1666.) Later, other claims and counterclaims were filed by and against other parties, and in August 2008, XY filed its consolidated statement of claim, alleging breach of contract, breach of confidence, deceit, conspiracy, inducing breach of contract, unlawful interference with economic relations, and unjust enrichment against the defendants herein.

[15] There were further dealings between the parties, but XY ultimately terminated the CLA in November 2008. (Para. 141.) In the lead-up to trial, all the counterclaims were either dismissed or withdrawn; and six weeks before the trial date, JingJing filed for bankruptcy.

Material Findings

[16] The trial judge made the following findings that are material to these appeals:

- Notwithstanding their arguments to the contrary, the defendants had been given notice of the "live issues at trial via the originating documents" and had not been "prejudiced [in the course of the litigation] in giving their side of the story." (Para. 174.)

- The evidence of each of Jesse Zhu, Jin Tang, and Selen Zhou was largely unsatisfactory and was contradicted by the plaintiff's evidence, including various emails to which the Personal Defendants were party. (Paras. 175-81.)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

- JingJing was in an "obvious and substantial breach of contract". Its breaches took the following forms:
  - failure to keep accurate records in accordance with article 3.3 of the CLA;
  - failure to produce accurate records in accordance with article 3.4;
  - failure to report production to XY on a monthly basis in accordance with article 3.1.4;
  - failure to pay royalties monthly in accordance with articles 3.1.1 and 3.1.4;
  - failure to not sub-license the use of XY's technology in accordance with article 2.6;
  - failure to disclose and assign developments made with third parties using XY's technology in accordance with articles 6.2.2 and 6.2.3;
  - failure to maintain the confidentiality of XY's confidential information in accordance with article 3.10. (Paras. 187-8.)
- There had been a "widespread misuse of XY's technology and information amounting to a breach of confidence." These misuses included JingJing's failure to notify XY of research and development related to the technology as required by the CLA; challenges by JingJing to XY's patent applications in China; and the creation of sorting operations in China − all contrary to the CLA. The appropriate remedy for breach of confidence, the trial judge found, would be to grant a permanent injunction. (Para. 229).
- Jesse Zhu, Selen Zhou, and Jin Tang had not induced or procured the breach of contract by JingJing and were therefore not liable for the tort of inducing breach of contract. (This tort had been pleaded but was not addressed in the plaintiff's closing submissions.) In the trial judge's words, the Personal Defendants "did not induce JingJing to breach his contract with XY. Rather they were carrying out JingJing's breach of contract." (Para. 235; my emphasis.)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

- The Personal Defendants and JingJing were "joint tortfeasors in deceit" (para. 262) and in the alternative, were liable for the tort of conspiracy by unlawful means. (Para. 277.)

- The evidence did not establish that the tort of deceit committed by the Personal Defendants was committed "in concert with the corporate members of the IND Group (beyond JingJing), or that it was committed on their behalf." (Para. 298.)

- The trial judge assessed XY's damages at paras. 278-96 of his reasons. Since JingJing had failed to produce records that would show how many embryos it had used in China, the trial judge had to do his best to assess this quantity and to assess their fair market value before and after January 2007, when the IND Group began using sexed semen from "proven sires". The trial judge calculated XY's damages as follows:

1	IVF embryos before January 2007: 500,000 embryos x 10% of $125 f.m.v.	6,250,000
2	IVF embryos after January 2007: 100,000 embryos x 10% of $150 f.m.v. (This does not include post December 2008 – this will be referred to the Registrar)	1,500,000
3	In vivo embryos: 1,147 embryos x 20% of $350 f.m.v.	80,290
4	Semen production: 195,148 AI straws x $6 royalty	1,170,888
5	LESS: Royalties already paid	(20,616)
6	LESS: Summary judgment paid	(472,671)
	TOTAL:	$8,507,891

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

As I understand it, this award represents the Court's best assessment of the royalties that JingJing should have paid and would have paid it had it accurately reported its revenues as required by the CLA, less the royalties it had remitted – i.e., the amount necessary to place XY in the position it would have been if JingJing had performed its obligations under the CLA.

- The trial judge declined to disregard the separate legal identity of the various IND corporations, observing that Canadian courts take a "restrained" approach to piercing corporate veils. He saw "no legal basis for the Court to disregard the juristic personhood of each individual member of the IND Group". Further, he stated:

> The plaintiff's complaint is that JingJing sold or transferred its products to IND companies which did not pay it. When JingJing became bankrupt, XY had no recourse against it.
>
> I agree with the defendants, however, that the IND group of companies are not liable. The fact that Mr. Zhu treated them as a "common interest entity" does not entitle the court to disregard their separate legal personality as corporations. The circumstances of this case and of the corporate members of the IND Group do not rise to a level where the consequences of the individual defendants' torts or those of JingJing's breach of contract should flow throughout the IND Group to its individual members.
>
> The plaintiff's contract was with JingJing. None of the corporate defendants is party to the CLA. In the absence of a piercing of the corporate veil, or a finding of tortious activity on the part of one of the corporate defendants, there is no basis for liability. [At paras. 316-18; emphasis added.]

- With respect to unjust enrichment (which was argued in XY's submissions in reply at trial), the trial judge concluded that given his findings on the other torts, it was not necessary to carry out an analysis of this doctrine. (Para. 320.) However, he also stated:

> Insofar as the claim may apply to the other corporate IND defendants which have thus far not been found > liable, there is a paucity of evidence showing the manner in which other members of the IND Group have been enriched. The plaintiff's loss and the lack of juristic reason for any resulting enrichment have been established but, without more, the claim in unjust enrichment against the other corporate defendants in the IND Group must fail. [At para. 321; emphasis added.]

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

- XY was entitled to a permanent injunction in the terms proposed by the plaintiff. Attached to these reasons as Schedule II is a copy of the relevant paragraphs of his order imposing the injunction, and Appendix A referred to therein.
- The trial judge declined to award punitive damages (para. 348), but awarded special costs against JingJing and the Personal Defendants in light of their attempts to mislead the Court during the litigation process, their untruthfulness in giving evidence at trial, and their failure to disclose documents. (Para. 361.)

Damages

[17] As mentioned, the damages award was apparently an assessment of what amount would put XY in the position it would have been in if JingJing had properly performed its obligations with respect to the payment of royalties under the CLA. This of course is the measure of damages in contract. Mr. Wilson, counsel for the plaintiff, had advised the Court that his client was prepared to limit its damage claim to lost royalties, and thus presumably to forego compensation for other losses (including the diminution in the value of the technology) which would have been more difficult and costly to prove. The injunctive relief sought by XY was intended to protect against, or minimize, such losses in future.

[18] In these circumstances, it seems to me that if one were to calculate damages on a "reliance" basis, i.e., as the measure of what amount would be necessary to place XY in the position it would have been if no misrepresentation had occurred (see BG Checo International Ltd. v. British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[1993] 1 S.C.R. 12, at 37), the amount would likely be the same or close to the same. As will be seen below, Canadian courts in considering tort claims that arise in the contractual context seem to be willing to assume that if no misrepresentation had occurred, the defendant would have provided accurate statements and paid the plaintiff what it owed under the contract. (See especially 3Com Corp. et al. v. Zorin International Corp. (2006) 211 O.A.C. 222 (C.A.) at para. 57; and Wiebe v. Gunderson 2004 BCCA 456 at paras. 29-40.)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

The Tort of Deceit

[19] The trial judge analyzed the evidence with respect to the elements of the tort of deceit beginning at para. 237 of his reasons. Relying on Han v. Cho 2009 BCSC 458 and Le Soleil Hospitality Inc. v. Louie 2010 BCSC 1183, he stated:

> The tort of deceit, also known as civil fraud, is concerned with the intentional inducement of another person to rely upon a representation that the representor knows to be untrue. The elements that make up this tort are:
>
> (1) a false representation of fact by the defendant;
>
> (2) made with knowledge of its falsity or recklessly, ie. not caring whether it is true or not;
>
> (3) made with the intention that the plaintiff would act on it;
>
> (4) with the intention that the plaintiff would act on it; and
>
> (5) the plaintiff suffered damages. [At para. 237; emphasis added.]

[20] The judge referred to certain textbook discussions of deceit which had been cited by this court in Catalyst Pulp and Paper Sales Inc. v. Universal Paper Export Company Ltd. 2009 BCCA 307. He noted in particular a passage from Professor G.H.L. Fridman's text, The Law of Torts in Canada (2nd ed., 2002):

> Before a defendant can be liable for deceit it must be established, as a matter of fact, that the plaintiff relied on the defendant's misrepresentation. Such reliance was proved to have occurred in Dixon v. Deacon Morgan McEwan Easson [(1993) 102 D.L.R. (4th) 1 (B.C.C.A.)] where the plaintiff purchased the shares as a result of reading the press release containing the inaccurate financial statements about the company.
>
> Although in general it is for the plaintiff to prove the requisite reliance, it would seem that once the plaintiff establishes that the defendant made a > misrepresentation calculated to induce the plaintiff to act to his detriment and loss consistent with the plaintiff's having acted on the misrepresentation, the onus then shifts to the defendant to prove that the plaintiff did not in fact rely on the misrepresentation in issue. [At 750-1.]

[21] The judge then considered each of the elements of the tort he had listed in his para. 237, finding that the defendants JingJing, Mr. Zhu, Ms. Zhou and Ms. Tang had knowingly made false representations to XY at least until 2008; and that they had intended for XY to rely on those representations. Then, with respect to the last two elements he stated:

> The Plaintiff's Reliance
>
> Finally, the plaintiff did act on it. Until the true facts were discovered, the plaintiff had no way of knowing it was receiving less than what it was owed, and that it was therefore entitled to recover damages.
>
> Damages
>
> There is no serious issue about the fifth element of the tort of deceit: the plaintiff undoubtedly suffered damages. [Paras. 260-61; emphasis added.]

Analysis

[22] Both Mr. Hunter on behalf of Ms. Zhou and Mr. McFee on behalf of Mr. Zhu took issue with the trial judge's statement of the elements of the tort of deceit, and with his conclusion that the tort was proven in this case. First, counsel submitted that the fourth and fifth elements stated by the trial judge at his para. 237 were incorrect or incomplete: the fourth element was obviously a repetition of the third, and the final element did not capture the requirement of causation – i.e., that the plaintiff must have suffered damages as a result of its reliance on the false statement.

[23] Many authors combine the fourth and fifth elements described by the trial judge into one, so that the following four elements as stated in Derry v. Peek (1889) 14 App. Cas. 337 (H.L.) are generally said to be the following:

1) a false representation or statement made by the defendant,

2) the statement was knowingly false,

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

3) the statement was made with the intention to deceive the plaintiff, and

4) the statement materially induced the plaintiff to act, resulting in damage.

(See also Lewis N. Klar, Tort Law (2nd ed. 1996) at 490 and Fridman, supra, at 747-55.)

[24] In Spencer Bower, Turner and Handley, Actionable Misrepresentation (4th ed., 2000), the authors break down the four requirements into eight in the following passage:

> An action for damages for fraudulent misrepresentation at common law was an action for deceit. The Court of Chancery exercised a concurrent jurisdiction with the Courts of Law in cases of actual fraud, and could award equitable compensation on similar, but not identical, principles, and also specific relief. In either case a representee must allege and prove:
>
> 1) a representation;
> 2) that the defendant was the representor;
> 3) that the plaintiff was a representee;
> 4) inducement;
> 5) falsity;
> 6) alteration of position;
> 7) fraud;
> 8) damage.
>
> The first six matters are common to all claims for misrepresentation … The seventh and eighth, fraud and damage, are peculiar to actions in deceit.
>
> From the earliest times it has been recognized that the concurrence of fraud and damage is essential to a claim for damages for fraudulent misrepresentation. [At §181-2; footnotes omitted; emphasis added.]

The authors also state that the representee must establish that "he was induced not just to believe [the misrepresentation] but to alter his position in a manner affecting his interests" (at §138). They continue:

> 140 Entry into a contract with the representor or a third person is the most common alteration of position. But there are other transactions involving economic loss, present or contingent, which the representee may be induced to undertake which constitute an alteration in position. They include unilateral > acts such as payments, gifts, licences and consents, condonations of matrimonial offences, forbearances, and renunciations, and acts which render the representee civilly responsible to some third person, or in breach of the criminal law, which would not have done so if the statement had been true. [Emphasis added.]

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[25] Similarly, the editors of Halsbury's Laws of England (4th ed.) state that the representee must "establish that he was induced by [the misrepresentation], not merely to alter his mind, but to alter his position, that is to say, to effect a change in his material or temporal interests or situation." (Vol. 31 at §778; my emphasis.) The editors continue:

> There are various ways in which a representee may act on the faith of a representation so as to alter his position. He may enter into a contract either with the risk of representor himself, or with a third person, or class of persons, or the alteration of position may take the form a unilateral transaction of a binding nature, in the sense that it is not revocable except with the consent of the other party to it, such as a gift, licence or consent, a forbearance or a renunciation, or it may consist in an act, of whatever nature, the effect of which is to render the representee civilly responsible to some third person, or even to render him amenable to criminal process, if such act would not have constituted any offence at all if the statement on the faith of which he committed it had been true. Further, a person may physically alter his position by the act of using property, whether land or a chattel, in reliance on a representation … and, generally, by the doing of or abstention from anything which has a bearing on his material interests, and which he is not legally compellable to do or to abstain from. [At Vol. 31, §779; emphasis added.]

[26] The Personal Defendants rely on these textbook formulations of the tort of deceit, arguing that XY did not change its position in reliance on the false statements made to it by JingJing or any other defendant. Instead, XY simply carried on with the performance of its obligations under the contract, as it would have if JingJing's statements had been true. Thus while the plaintiff suffered damages in contract, these defendants contend it did not prove damages flowing from an act of the plaintiff carried out in reliance on JingJing's false statements.

[27] Mr. Wilson on behalf of XY emphasized that the texts uniformly cite "forbearance" as a type of alteration of position. In support, the authors cite only Firbank's Executors v. Humphreys (1886) 18 Q.B.D. 54 (C.A.). In Firbank's, a railway company that was indebted to a contractor purported to give him certificates for debenture stock in return for the contractor's forbearing from pressing the railway for payment and finishing the railway line. Later, when the railway was wound up, it was discovered that it had already issued the whole of its debenture stock and that the certificates given to the contractor were worthless. The contractor sued the directors of the railway company personally for the value of the debentures as if they had been validly issued.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[28] Lindley, L.J. formulated the two questions before the Court in Firbank's as "(1) Whether the directors are to be treated as having impliedly warranted that they, as agents of the company, had authority to issue 18,400£ debenture stock? (2) What is the measure of damages for which they are liable if they are to be so treated?" He answered the first question in the contractor's favour, even though the directors had not known they had lacked the authority to issue the debentures. With respect to the second question, Lindley L.J. wrote:

> The directors cannot be treated as having warranted the solvency of the company, and if genuine debenture stock of the company had been worthless, the measure of damages would have been nil, but in this case the company's debenture stock is and always has been worth twenty shillings in the pound. Consequently, the value of 18,400£ genuine debenture stock is the measure of the contractor's loss. That is what he agreed to take in satisfaction of a larger demand, and that is what he has lost by reason of the misrepresentation made to him. [At 62-3.]

The Court did not elaborate on forbearance or change of position generally.

[29] There appear to be only a few modern Canadian cases that address situations in which the parties entered into a contract prior to the making of the false statements. One is Catalyst Paper, supra. Like this case, Catalyst Paper involved an ongoing contract that called for regular reports and invoices, although in this instance, the payments were to be made by the plaintiff "Catalyst" to the defendant "UPE". UPE had been engaged by Catalyst to facilitate the delivery and distribution of telephone directory paper to an Australian customer. Under the contract, UPE regularly invoiced Catalyst for certain costs, but the parties were not ad idem as to whether UPE was entitled by the terms of the contract to "mark up" certain distribution costs it incurred in Australia. Catalyst assumed that UPE was passing on only its actual costs and paid UPE's invoices from time to time. When it discovered the costs had been marked up, it sued in contract, breach of fiduciary duty, unjust enrichment, and fraudulent misrepresentation.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[30] Catalyst's claim in contract failed because, in the trial judge's words, "there was no explicit agreement at the stage of the formation of the contract that the figures used would reflect actual costs." For the same reason, the claim in unjust enrichment also failed: it "could not be said there existed no juristic reason to compute the sales price from Catalyst to UPE by discounting the specified amounts agreed on by the parties from time to time during the course of the [agreement]." (Paras. 44-5.)

[31] Catalyst succeeded, however, in its claim for deceit, both at the trial level and on appeal. In the Court of Appeal, UPE submitted that the law of fraudulent misrepresentation required proof that Catalyst had been induced to enter its contract with UPE by the misrepresentation. On this point, UPE relied on G.H.L. Fridman, Law of Contract in Canada (4th ed. 1999) at 309-10, where the author listed four elements of deceit, the last of which was that the victim "must have been induced by the representation to enter into the contract." Bauman J.A. (as he then was) for this court noted however that the author himself took a wider view of the "reliance element" of the tort in The Law of Torts in Canada, supra. [At 750-1: see above at para. 20.]

[32] In Catalyst Paper, the trial judge found that the defendant had intended that the plaintiff "act on the representation by not focusing on, inquiring into, or assessing the appropriateness of the amount paid to Chase [a facilitator for UPE in Australia]." (My emphasis.) The Court of Appeal's treatment of reliance was more equivocal:

> It is implicit, if not express, that the trial judge found that the false representations began with the cost information forwarded by UPE from the beginning of its relationship with Catalyst in July 1999, September 1999, November 1999, February 2000, and regularly throughout the currency of the PSA. If an actual inducement to enter into the contract is required, the false representations in the Fall of 1999, and in February 2000, so induced

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

> Catalyst. And it is beyond doubt, as the trial judge found, that the false representations continued to induce Catalyst to alter its position to its detriment throughout the course of the arrangement with UPE. I note particularly the costing information sent to Catalyst at regular intervals during the PSA "for its approval"; an approval obtained, again, on the basis of the false representation that UPE passed along only actual costs and that those of Chase were subsumed in the 3% commission paid to UPE.
>
> In my view, the case against UPE for fraudulent misrepresentation was overwhelming. The judge committed no reversible error of law or fact in his disposition of the matter on this basis. [At paras. 62-3; emphasis added.]

[33] The Court in Catalyst Paper also referred to Kelemen v. El-Homeira, 1999 ABCA 315, (1999) 250 A.R. 67, in which a vendor of real estate had persuaded a prospective purchaser not to seek independent advice and instead directed him to one of his colleagues. As a result, the purchaser paid an inflated price for the property. The Court stated that "The action taken by [the plaintiff] that is the basis for the tort was that he did not seek the independent advice". (Para. 15; my emphasis.) However, the plaintiff also altered his position by entering into the purchase agreement on the basis of the vendor's trickery.

[34] The decision of the Ontario Court of Appeal in 3Com Corporation v. Zorin, supra, is also somewhat analogous. The plaintiff, "3Com", an electronics manufacturer, entered into an ongoing contract for the sale of goods to a reseller, "Zorin". Zorin represented to the plaintiff that it was reselling the goods to foreign educational institutions, which allowed Zorin to purchase at a discounted rate by claiming rebates that were then paid out by 3Com. In fact, Zorin was selling to purchasers who did not qualify for the rebates. The plaintiff eventually learned of the misrepresentation and sued successfully in deceit. The trial judge found that 3Com had "relied on Zorin's false representations in approving the transactions for … discounted prices."

[35] The Court of Appeal upheld the trial court, rejecting Zorin's argument that in tort, only actual "losses" are to be compensated. In the analysis of Weiler J.A. for the Court:

> I agree with the trial judge's rejection of the appellants' arguments. The appellants' first argument on damages overlooks the fact that, in tort law, "the > plaintiff is to be put in the position it would have been in had the misrepresentation not been made": see BG Checo International Ltd. v. British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 12 at 37. Although not written into the contracts, a vital condition to their formation was that the appellants deliver the goods to the persons to whom, and the places where, they said they were shipping the goods. The appellants were aware that the purchase price was based on the information they provided as to educational end-user and place. The fact that we are dealing here with a diminution in profit rather than an actual loss matters not. If the appellants had provided the respondents with the true customers and places of shipment, the respondents would have been entitled to a higher price for their goods or to refuse to sell their goods at the prices they did. The appellants deprived the respondents of this choice and made a greater profit because they did so. It was not necessary, in the circumstances of this case, to introduce evidence of a specific alternative third party buyer … [At para. 57; emphasis added.]

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[36] It is clear on the facts that 3Com shipped product to Zorin from time to time (see paras. 8 and 44) on the strength of Zorin's false statements and paid the rebates claimed by a fraudulent distributor, thus "altering" not only its "mind", but also its position. As seen above, however, the Court of Appeal did not rely on these acts to satisfy the elements of reliance and causation − although it is unclear whether these elements were squarely addressed in argument. Instead the Court seemed to agree with the trial judge that by 'receiving' lower payments for its goods than what it should have received under the contract, 3Com had relied on the false statements to its detriment. As well, the Court emphasized that the plaintiff would not have entered the contract unless Zorin had obliged itself to deliver the goods to the persons to whom it said it was delivering them. On one view, then, the fact the plaintiff had (prior to the misstatements) entered the contract with the defendant constituted an act in reliance on the (later) misstatements sufficient to found the tort of deceit. If this is correct, the tort of deceit seems indistinguishable from breach of contract in cases where the deceit is part of an ongoing contractual relationship.

[37] Returning to the case at bar, counsel for the Personal Defendants argued that the trial judge had "conflated" tort and contract by awarding damages without proof that the plaintiff had relied on the misrepresentations. XY submitted in response that the defendants' position was "too categorical." In XY's submission:

> It overlooks the fundamental tort law principle that the plaintiff is to be placed in the same position as it would have been in had the tort not been committed: see Krangle (Guardian ad litem of) v. Briscoe, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 205, 2002 SCC 9, at para. 22; and Ratych v. Bloomer, [1990] 1 S.C.R. 940, at p. 962, following Andrews v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd., [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229.
>
> In cases involving misrepresentations (whether negligent or fraudulent), that first principle translates into an inquiry into the position that the plaintiff would have been in had the misrepresentations not been made: see BG Checo International Ltd. v. British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority, [1993] 1 S.C.R. 12, at p. 37.
>
> That inquiry, in turn, often reduces to a determination about the steps taken by the plaintiff in reliance upon the misrepresentation that was made. For instance, where the plaintiff was induced to enter into a transaction on the basis of the misrepresentation, the loss suffered by the plaintiff is the loss resulting from the plaintiff's participation in the transaction – in other words, the reliance measure. BG Checo was itself such a case; see also Wiebe v. Gunderson, 2004 BCCA 456, 243 D.L.R. (4th) 1 (deceit inducing plaintiff to purchase ranch).
>
> However, where the misrepresentation operates during the performance of an existing contractual relationship, the reliance measure may be less apposite to the assessment of damages than when the misrepresentation induces the making of the contract in the first place. This court's decision in Catalyst Pulp and Paper Sales Inc. v. Universal Paper Export Co. … illustrates the distinction. [Emphasis added.]

[38] In addition to Catalyst Paper, Mr. Wilson referred us Karas v. Rowlett [1944] S.C.R. 1, where the Court stated:

> The injuria here was intended to and did bring about a fraudulent termination of the lease and loss of the business. The damages from the deceit are, therefore, the same as the consequences of a breach of the obligations from which the rights and interests of the plaintiff arose; and they are to be determined on the rules applicable to contractual defaults.
>
> It is well settled that the person who has suffered from such a wrong is entitled, so far as money can do it, to be placed in as good a position as if the contract had been performed. [At 7; emphasis added.]

See also V.K. Mason Construction v. Bank of Nova Scotia [1985] 1 S.C.R. 271, and this court's decision in Wiebe v. Gunderson, supra. In the latter, we noted that in cases of fraud inducing a plaintiff to enter into a contract, the trend in Canada and elsewhere is to de-emphasize one particular "measure" of damages and to:

> … strive for an award that in broad and practical terms compensates the plaintiff for all aspects of his or her loss flowing from the fraud, without being > overly restricted by the nature of the cause of action. The overarching question is what amount of money represents the financial loss suffered by the plaintiff as a direct result of the altercation of his or her position under the inducement of the defendant's fraudulent representations. [At para. 40.]

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

(See also BG Checo International Ltd. v. British Columbia Hydro and Power Authority [1993] 1 S.C.R. 12, at 37-42.)

[39] It is not the measure of damages with which we are concerned at this stage, however. Rather it is the question of whether the final element of the tort of deceit was proven against the Personal Defendants − assuming for the moment they were not shielded from liability by their employment relationship with JingJing. Here, it cannot be said that as in Catalyst Paper, the parties' agreement was entered into in reliance on JingJing's false representations (which obviously followed the CLA in time). Nor did XY, like the plaintiffs in Catalyst Paper and 3Com, make payments on the strength of the false statements. It made no conscious decision, as the plaintiff did in Firbank's, to forebear from enforcing its rights or to delay taking legal action. In short, it conducted itself in the same way it would have if JingJing's reports had been true. Of course, had it realized the reports were false, the plaintiff might have sued immediately, and succeeded in obtaining its judgment before JingJing declared bankruptcy. But can it be said that XY's carrying on under the contract until it discovered the fraud constituted an act of reliance on its part?

[40] To answer this question in the affirmative would be a significant step in the law of deceit. I am reluctant to take such a step on the basis of authorities in which the point was not clearly raised, expressly considered or satisfactorily analyzed. At the same time, I recognize that the law of private obligations in Canada is moving away from a stringent view of causation in tort and from a "categorical" approach to civil causes of action generally: see BG Checo International v. B.C. Hydro and Power Authority, supra., at 348 and 41; Rainbow Ind. Caterers Ltd. v. C.N.R. Co. (1998) 67 D.L.R. (4th) 348 (B.C.C.A.), at paras. 184-5; Morrison v. Pankratz (1995) 122 D.L.R. (4th) 352 (B.C.C.A.) at para. 45. See also the discussion by M.J. Tilbury in Two Models of Concurrent Tort/Contract Liability & Their Application to

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

Remoteness and the Measure of Damages in J. Berryman, ed., Remedies: Issues & Perspectives (1991) at 423 et seq.

[41] The Supreme Court of Canada may well wish to provide guidance in this area. On balance, however, I propose to adopt the less stringent view of reliance exemplified by this court's decision in Catalyst Paper, by which I am bound, and to accept that in the final analysis, the object is to compensate XY for the losses it suffered by reason of JingJing's fraudulent conduct. I will therefore proceed on the basis that XY's "acceptance" of the payments made by JingJing on the basis of the false reports constituted "reliance" for purposes of the tort of deceit. At the same time, I will consider the defendants' challenges to the trial judge's findings of liability independent of deceit so that if I am wrong regarding that tort, the parties will have a complete case for purposes of any further appeal.

Joint Torts

[42] Obviously, the trial judge's finding that the Personal Defendants were joint tortfeasors with JingJing would fall if deceit on JingJing's part were not proven. Conversely, I see no error in the conclusion that if deceit was proven, the Personal Defendants "each played a part and acted in concert to deceive XY …" (at para. 258, citing The Koursk [1924] P. 140 (C.A.)), and were therefore jointly liable in tort. (Again, this assumes for the moment that these defendants were not shielded from liability by reason of their employment status.) If this is correct it would be unnecessary to consider the tort of civil conspiracy, which would "add nothing" and could be struck out or "merged". (See Bank of Montreal v. Tortora 2010 BCCA 139; Le Soleil Hospitality Inc. v. Louie 2011 BCCA 305.) In any event, there is very little difference apparent between being a joint tortfeasor in the sense of participating in a "concerted action between [the tortfeasors] to a common end" (see Glanville Williams, Joint Torts and Contributory Negligence (1951) at 1), and being a civil co-conspirator.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

Civil Conspiracy

Elements of the Tort

[43] The elements of civil conspiracy are well settled in Canada, although cases in which liability is found are rare, and the cause of the action is regarded as somewhat "anomalous". (See the seminal decision of Lord Diplock in Lonrho Ltd. v. Shell Petroleum Co. Ltd. [1982] A.C. 173 (H.L.).) In the leading Canadian case, Canada Cement LaFarge Ltd. v. British Columbia Lightweight Aggregate [1983] 1 S.C.R. 452, Estey J. for the Court stated that the tort arises in two possible situations, namely where:

> (1) whether the means used by the defendants are lawful or unlawful, the predominant purpose of the defendants' conduct is to cause injury to the plaintiff; or,
>
> (2) where the conduct of the defendants is unlawful, the conduct is directed towards the plaintiff (alone or together with others), and the defendants should know in the circumstances that injury to the plaintiff is likely to and does result. [At 471-72.]

[44] The trial judge correctly identified the second branch ("unlawful act conspiracy") as relevant to this case (para. 267) and found that an agreement had existed between Dr. Remillard and the three Personal Defendants. (Para. 270.) In this regard, he identified "concerted action pursuant to the agreement", including "falsely reporting to XY and concealing material documents." (Para. 271.) Next, having found that the Personal Defendants had perpetrated the deceit found earlier in his reasons, the trial judge found that each of them knew or ought to have known that injury to the plaintiff was likely (citing Golden Capital Securities Ltd. v. Holmes 2004 BCCA 565 at para. 74). Finally, he stated:

> … I find that the plaintiff suffered a financial loss as a result of the unlawful conduct by the defendants. It was deprived of the royalties to which it was entitled.
>
> For these reasons I concluded that the plaintiff has proved conspiracy on the part of Jesse Zhu, Selen Zhou and Tang Jin. [At paras. 276-7.]

He did not suggest that the amount of these damages should be different from the amount for which JingJing itself was found liable.

[45] On behalf of Mr. Zhu, Mr. McPhee submitted in this court that in considering the question of causation flowing from the alleged conspiracy, the trial judge again "conflated" the loss suffered by XY as a result of JingJing's breach of contract, with that flowing from the conduct of the three Personal Defendants. As I understand it, this argument, like that made concerning deceit, turns on the question of causation.

[46] I certainly agree that the acts of the defendants must be causally related to loss or damage to the plaintiff for purposes of establishing a civil conspiracy. As stated in Lombardo v. Caiazzo (2006) 211 O.A.C. 270, "A conspiracy that does not result in damages is not actionable." (Para. 16.) The fact that the plaintiff must have suffered loss as a result of the conspiracy, however, does not mean it must have changed its position or relied to its detriment on misconduct of the defendant. In Canada Cement LaFarge, for example, the defendants were alleged to have conspired to drive the plaintiff aggregate manufacturer out of business through marketing arrangements aimed at dividing the concrete products market in British Columbia between two of the defendants. Although the plaintiff's claim ultimately failed, no issue arose concerning the sustainability in theory of the plaintiff's claim to loss of the "benefits of a free market" as a result of the alleged conspiracy.

[47] A more recent example is Le Soleil Hospitality Inc. v. Louie 2010 BCSC 1183, aff'd 2011 BCCA 305, where the defendants conspired to impugn a valid settlement agreement on the basis of rights allegedly arising under non-existent agreements. There was no reliance by the plaintiffs on the false agreements, but the conspiracy was found to be made out.

[48] If the tort of deceit were not made out in the case at bar, then, it would not follow that the tort of civil conspiracy on the part of the defendants other than JingJing would also be precluded. As stated above, the causation element of this branch of conspiracy requires only that the plaintiff have suffered "actual damage" as a result of unlawful conduct directed towards the plaintiff.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

Unlawful Act

[49] There is not a great deal of case law in Canada on the meaning of "unlawful means" or "unlawful act" in the context of civil conspiracy. In 1961, in Gagnon v. Foundation Maritime Ltd. [1961] S.C.R. 435, the Court referred in this context to "means … [that] were prohibited, and this of itself supplies the ingredient necessary to change a lawful agreement which would not give rise to a cause of action into a tortious conspiracy …". (At 446.) More recently, the Ontario Court of Appeal considered the issue in Agribrands Purina Canada Inc. v. Kasamekas 2011 ONCA 460 in connection with a claim of intentional inference with economic relations. The Court referred to Bank of Montreal v. Tortora, supra, in which it was said at para. 47 that for conspiracy to lie, the plaintiff must show unlawful conduct by each conspirator. After considering the specific context of intentional interference cases, the Court in Agribrands continued:

> [R]ather than automatically adopting the meaning of unlawful conduct given in the intentional interference tort cases, I think the better course is to use those cases as a guide, but also consider the kind of conduct that the jurisprudence has found to be unlawful conduct for the purposes of the conspiracy tort.
>
> It is clear from that jurisprudence that quasi-criminal conduct, when undertaken in concert, is sufficient to constitute unlawful conduct for the purposes of the conspiracy tort, even though that conduct is not actionable in a private law sense by a third party. The seminal case of Canada Cement LaFarge is an example. So too is conduct that is in breach of the Criminal Code. These examples of "unlawful conduct" are not actionable in themselves, but they have been held to constitute conduct that is wrongful in law and therefore sufficient to be considered "unlawful conduct" within the meaning of civil conspiracy. There are also many examples of conduct found to be unlawful for the purposes of this tort simply because the conduct is actionable as a matter of private law. In Peter T. Burns & Joost Blom, Economic Interests in Canadian Tort Law …, the authors say this at p. 167-168:
>
> > … Examples of conspiracies involving tortious conduct include inducing breach of contract, wrongful interference with contractual rights, nuisance, intimidation, and defamation. Of course, a breach of contract itself will support an action in civil conspiracy and, as one Australian court has held, the categories of "unlawful means" are not closed.
> >
> > The second category of unlawful means is conduct comprising unlawful means not actionable in itself.
> > ...

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

> What is required, therefore, to meet the "unlawful conduct" element of the conspiracy tort is that the defendants engage, in concert, in acts that are wrong in law, whether actionable at private law or not. In the commercial world, even highly competitive activity, provided it is otherwise lawful, does not qualify as "unlawful conduct" for the purposes of this tort. [At paras. 36-8; emphasis added.]

(See also Rummery v. Matthews 2000 MBQB 67, var'd on other grounds, 2001 MBCA 32; Lerik v. Zaferis [1930] 1 D.L.R. 634 (B.C.C.A.); and G.H.L. Fridman, The Law of Torts, supra, at 769-771.)

[50] In my view, the misconduct of the Personal Defendants in this case – essentially the preparation of false records and reports sent by JingJing to XY and the breach of confidence found by the trial judge − satisfies in law the "unlawful act" requirement for these purposes.

Factual Findings

[51] I turn next to the trial judge's findings concerning the conduct of Ms. Tang and Ms. Zhou, which counsel submit should not have attracted liability either in deceit or civil conspiracy. Ms. Tang was the lab manager in charge of embryo production and later semen production. She contends that she was a "mere employee" of JingJing and was following orders when she assisted Mr. Zhu in falsifying records in preparation for reporting sales to XY. She testified, for example, that "Jesse [Zhu] and Richard [Remillard]" are my direct supervisor[s]. I would do whatever they say." Similarly, Ms. Zhou, who was JingJing's bookkeeper, testified that as far as she was concerned, Mr. Zhu was "the boss". She recalled that when she had sent an e-mail to XY reporting numbers of embryo sales that she knew to be false, Mr. Zhu told her he was not sure whether "we will use them all or not". In response to Mr. Wilson's question as to whether he had told her the numbers were being falsified because JingJing "didn't want to pay the royalty on the embryos", she stated:

> He told me that -- he asked me not to worry because he said that he and Richard will address the issue later on, and also that he told me that, for the product that we exported to China, he's not sure -- he's not sure whether he'll use all of the product or not. But that [is] what he told me.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[52] The trial judge was not persuaded by this and similar evidence from either Ms. Zhou or Ms. Tang. In connection with the tort of deceit, he found that all three Personal Defendants "knew the information they provided to XY was false and [that] the circumstances warrant an inference that they intended for XY to be deceived by it." (Para. 247.) In his analysis:

> The basis of this conclusion rests on the factual findings regarding the meeting the four managers allegedly held[,] the documentary evidence in responses to emails and witnesses' testimony in court. Little credence can be given to Zhu, Zhou and Jin's evidence. Dr. Remillard had no reason to be untruthful. It is fair to conclude that such a meeting was held and that the managers there devised the plan to deceive XY.
>
> Following on Perell's discussion [see Paul Perell, "The Fraud Elements of Deceit and Fraudulent Misrepresentation" (1996), 18 Advocates' Q. 23 at 28-30] of intention in civil fraud, the following circumstances indicate liability for JingJing, Jesse Zhu, Selen Zhou and Tang Jin:
>
> - The email sent by Remillard to Zhu on Feb 18, 2004, stating that they have to be careful in selling sexed semen in China for which they had no licensing permission and to be wary of XY's inferences from the fact that they have so many SX cytometers. Remillard's statement, "I bet they have good lawyers too!" underlines the deception ;
> - The meeting held by Tang Jin, Selen Zhou, Richard Remillard, and Jesse Zhu is evidence of [an] intention to produce deceiving numbers that only appear authentic; they agreed that the "[t]otal number of embryos would equal the number of doses we use per day." As Remillard testifies, the purpose of this endeavour was "to pay less royalty fee". Based on this meeting, it can be inferred that the defendants intended to lie and deceive XY by making representations that were contrary to the facts (or made in the absence of any facts).
>
> On June 21, 2006, Selen Zhou attempted to "renegotiate" the royalty terms by unilaterally altering the CLA. Dr. Jacobson rebukes her in an email for this and makes it clear that this is not the way he does business. He further requests that Zhou respond to Thom Gilligan's email "which seeks the correct details of your past sales – for reporting, royalty and compliance purposes."
>
> From this interaction it is clear that Zhou knew what royalties JingJing was responsible for to XY – why else would she attempt to actually alter the CLA? Altering the agreement is contrary to the defendants' assertion of a mistake of fact or honest belief and is circumstantial evidence that Selen Zhou actively perpetuated the deceit on XY by forwarding information she knew was false and was related directly to the payment provisions of the CLA.
>
> On June 20, 2007, Thom Gilligan sent an email to Remillard stating that he was skeptical of JingJing's reported numbers and challenging the reduced royalty rate on "B" type embryos. XY here is again informing JingJing that it is not complying with the expectations of the CLA. Remillard then immediately informs the other three managers that "the number given to XY must > match...". The email on its face shows Remillard reaching out to the group to try and find a solution to a problem that affects all of their deceitful intentions.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

>
> Further, the fact that Tang Jin sent an email to Remillard, Zhou and Zhu two days later (June 22, 2007), laying out just how the numbers could be massaged to fit XY's expectations indicates her participation in the actual deception. The email belies any suggestion she was simply following orders and appears as a voluntary offering of information to perpetuate the deception.
>
> The evidence establishes that Zhou knew the royalty terms of the CLA and was dissatisfied with them. She then knowingly reported false numbers; Tang volunteered information to assist in perpetuating the deception. [At paras. 248-54; emphasis added.]

[53] Later, in connection with the tort of civil conspiracy specifically, he observed:

> On the evidence before me, I am satisfied that there [was] an agreement. Dr. Remillard testified that in a meeting involving Tang Jin, Selen Zhou, Jesse Zhu and himself, they agreed what to report to XY with the purpose being to pay them the royalties to which XY was entitled [sic; "less than" the royalties to which XY was entitled?]:
>
> > Q During your discussion with Jesse Zhu and Tang Jin and Selen Zhou about the numbers you were going to produce – to disclose to XY – to report to XY, why did you decide to report a different number of embryos to XY than what you were actually making?
> >
> > A We had to pay less royalty fee.
>
> Even in the absence of such a meeting, there was, on all the evidence, clearly an agreement among the four principals. [At paras. 269-70.]

[54] The trial judge also considered whether it was necessary for the plaintiff to prove that each conspirator must have committed an unlawful act for the tort to be made out, as suggested in Bank of Montreal v. Tortora, supra; but the Court here reasoned that:

> … Chaisson [J.A.'s] final statement [in Tortora] cannot be applied in the manner suggested by the defendants. That case pertained to the striking of pleadings where the plaintiff did not plead specific unlawful acts carried out by one of the defendants, who allegedly participated in the conspiracy.
>
> It was put this way in Golden Capital Securities at para. 74:
>
> > A person who conspires with others to commit unlawful acts may be liable for the consequences even though some of the acts are instigated by a single conspirator. But a person's liability for the acts of other conspirators requires proof that the > person knew or should have known that such acts were a probable consequence of carrying out the common objective: R. v. Henderson, [1948] S.C.R. 226 at 236, [1949] 2 D.L.R. 121, as cited in Claiborne at 79. [At paras. 273-74.]

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

Applying Golden Capital Securities, the judge concluded:

> I have found the defendants Jesse Zhu, Tang Jin and Selen Zhou liable for deceit. Additionally, in committing those unlawful acts, I am satisfied that these defendants knew or ought to have known that injury to the plaintiff was likely. These defendants were falsely reporting production and thereby underpaying the plaintiff.
>
> Finally, I find that the plaintiff suffered a financial loss as a result of the unlawful conduct by the defendants. It was deprived of the royalties to which it was entitled.
>
> For these reasons I concluded that the plaintiff has proved conspiracy on the part of Jesse Zhu, Selen Zhou and Tang Jin. [At paras. 275-77; emphasis added.]

[55] Mr. Wilson referred us to various other references in the Court's reasons to evidence that fully supports the conclusions that the Personal Defendants were part of the "management team" of JingJing who not only acted in concert to carry out unlawful acts that would injure the plaintiff, but who assisted in planning how best to go about it. In my view, the evidence makes it impossible to say the judge erred in reaching these conclusions.

Employment Status

[56] The next issue is whether the trial judge erred in law in finding that the Personal Defendants, who were presumably acting in the course of their employment, could be personally liable for the tort of civil conspiracy (or deceit, assuming the element of reliance was proven). Put another way, does the fact that they were employees of JingJing shield them from the consequences of what would otherwise be tortious conduct?

Case Law

[57] Surprisingly, the case law concerning the liability of employees who on the orders of or at the request of their employer commit torts or other wrongful acts that injure a third party, is not fully developed. One of the complicating factors is that many of the cases have arisen only in the context of applications to strike out pleadings and have not been decided on the merits. Another complication is due to the fact that the employers in most of the cases are corporations. A corporation can of course act only through its agents and employees and thus it can be said in a sense that any employee who commits a tort in the course of his or her duties is acting as his or her employer's agent. For economic reasons, the injured third party usually looks to the corporation rather than the employee for recovery.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[58] The seminal English case is Said v. Butt [1920] 3 KB 497, where McCardie J. reasoned as follows in connection with an action against a "servant" for inducing breach of contract on the part of his "master":

> … the servant who causes a breach of his master's contract with a third person seems to stand in a wholly different position. He is not a stranger. He is the alter ego of his master. His acts are in law the acts of his employer. In such a case it is the master himself, by his agent, breaking the contract he has made, and in my view an action against the agent under the Lumley v. Gye [[1853] EWHC QB J73] principle must therefore fail, just as it would fail if brought against the master himself for wrongfully procuring a breach of his own contract …
>
> I hold that if a servant acting bona fide within the scope of his authority procures or causes the breach of a contract between his employer and a third person, he does not thereby become liable to an action of tort at the suit of the person whose contract has thereby been broken. [At 505-6; emphasis added.]

However, McCardie J. added:

> Nothing that I have said today is, I hope, inconsistent with the rule that a director or a servant who actually takes part in or actually authorizes such torts as assault, trespass to property, nuisance, or the like may be liable in damages as a joint participant in one of such recognized heads of tortious wrong. [At 506; emphasis added.]

[59] The scope of these remarks has given rise to much discussion and debate in the cases. I do not propose to trace that debate here; but counsel referred us to some recent Canadian authorities that illustrate how courts have treated the so-called 'Said v. Butt exception' to the "general rule that persons are responsible for their own conduct." (See ADGA Systems International Ltd. v. Valcom Ltd. (1999) 168 D.L.R. (4th) 351 (Ont. C.A.) at para. 15.)

[60] A 1995 case illustrates courts' reluctance to extend liability to employees of corporations for their employers' wrongs, although cases of fraud or dishonesty seem always to have constituted an exception to that approach. In ScotiaMcLeod Inc. v. Peoples Jewellers Ltd. (1995) 129 D.L.R. (4th) 711 (Ont. C.A.), the motions judge had struck out pleadings in an action brought against the directors of a company ("Peoples") that had issued debentures by means of a prospectus. The plaintiffs, who had purchased the debentures, claimed they had relied on certain misrepresentations in the prospectus. Importantly, they did not allege that they had placed any reliance on the actions of the directors "as a board or as individual directors", and the pleadings were silent on "significant particulars concerning the actions of the respondents as directors simpliciter." (At 717.) The plaintiffs took the position, however, that all the directors were "collectively responsible as joint tortfeasors" with Peoples. Thus in the words of Finlayson J.A. for the Court of Appeal, the cause of action pleaded was "predicated on personal liability arising out of the actions of Peoples." (At 720; my emphasis.) He continued:

> The decided cases in which employees and officers of companies have been found personally liable for actions ostensibly carried out under a corporate name are fact-specific. In the absence of findings of fraud, deceit, dishonesty or want of authority on the part of employees or officers, they are also rare. Those cases in which the corporate veil has been pierced usually involve transactions where the use of the corporate structure was a sham from the outset or was an afterthought to a deal which had gone sour. ... In every case, however, the facts giving rise to personal liability were specifically pleaded. Absent allegations which fit within the categories described above, officers or employees of limited companies are protected from personal liability unless it can be shown that their actions are themselves tortious or exhibit a separate identity or interest from that of the company so as to make the act or conduct complained of their own.
>
> None of the conduct alleged against the respondent directors falls within the broad categories I have outlined above. Their exposure, if there is any, is narrowly focussed on their formal decision-making in the name of Peoples. A corporation may be liable for contracts that its directors or officers have caused it to sign, or for representations those officers or directors have made in its name, but this is because a corporation can only operate through human agency, that is, through its so- called "directing mind". Considering that a corporation is an inanimate piece of legal machinery incapable of > thought or action, the court can only determine its legal liability by assessing the conduct of those who caused the company to act in the way that it did. This does not mean, however, that if the actions of the directing minds are found wanting, that personal liability will flow through the corporation to those who caused it to act as it did. To hold the directors of Peoples personally liable, there must be some activity on their part that takes them out of the role of directing minds of the corporation. In this case, there are no such allegations. [At 720-1; emphasis added.]

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[61] In the result, the Court struck out the action as against certain officers of Peoples, but allowed it to proceed as against two directors and senior executives who had been "involved in making certain representations personally which were relied upon by the appellants". (At 724-5.) I emphasize the Court's reference to cases of "fraud, deceit [or] dishonesty" as an exception to the general rule enunciated at the end of the passage.

[62] In 1999, in ADGA Systems, the Ontario Court of Appeal was again asked to consider the "troublesome issue" of when corporate directors and employees may be liable for acts done "in pursuance of a corporate purpose". The plaintiff "ADGA" complained that a competitor, the defendant "Valcom", had "raided" the plaintiff's employees and used their names in a tender document in direct competition with ADGA's tender offer. The defendant was the successful bidder. ADGA sued Valcom for interference with economic interests, and sued a director and two employees of Valcom for their part in that tort and for inducing breaches of fiduciary duty on the part of its (the plaintiff's) employees. The lower court relied on ScotiaMcLeod (cited as Montreal Trust Co. of Canada v. ScotiaMcleod Inc. (1995) 129 D.L.R. (4th) 711) to rule that since Valcom's director and employees had not been furthering their own interests but were acting to further their employer's interests, no cause of action was sustainable against them.

[63] On appeal, Carthy J.A. for the Court rejected the proposition that employees of corporations are always protected from liability for wrongs committed, or also committed, by their employers. He formulated the question as "whether, on the assumption that the defendant Valcom committed a tort against the appellant, the sole director and employees of Valcom can be accountable for the same tort as a consequence of their personal involvement directed to the perceived best interests of the corporation." (Para. 8; my emphasis.) He continued:

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

> My first observation is that I recognize the policy concern expressed by the Divisional Court, and other General Division judges, over the proliferation of claims against officers and directors of corporations in circumstances which give the appearance of the desire for discovery or leverage in the litigation process. This is a proper concern because business cannot function efficiently if corporate officers and directors are inhibited in carrying on a corporate business because of a fear of being inappropriately swept into lawsuits, or, worse, are driven away from involvement in any respect in corporate business by the potential exposure to ill-founded litigation. That being said, it is not appropriate to extend the reasoning of ScotiaMcLeod beyond its intended application by reading it as protecting all conduct by officers and employees in pursuit of corporate purposes. The common law should not develop on an ad hoc basis to put out fires. When a policy issue arises, here from modern business realities, the courts must proceed on a principled basis to establish a framework for further development which recognizes the new realities but preserves the fundamental purpose served by that area of law … [At para. 9; emphasis added.]

[64] With respect to Salomon v. Salomon & Co. Ltd. [1895-9] All E.R. 33 (H.L.), the Court observed that where a plaintiff seeks to establish an "independent" cause of action against the principals of a company, Salomon is not engaged and the corporate veil is not threatened. The distinction between an "independent" cause of action and "looking through the corporation" had been confirmed, Carthy J.A. stated, by Said v. Butt. In his analysis:

> First, this [Said v. Butt] is not an application of Salomon v. Salomon. That case is not mentioned anywhere in the reasons. Second, it provides an exception to the general rule that persons are responsible for their own conduct. That exception has since gained acceptance because it assures that persons who deal with a limited company and accept the imposition of limited liability will not have available to them both a claim for breach of contract against a company and a claim for tortious conduct against the director with damages assessed on a different basis. The exception also assures that officers and directors, in the process of carrying on business, are capable of directing that a contract of employment be terminated or that a business contract not be performed on the assumed basis that the company's best interest is to pay the damages for failure to perform. By carving out the exception for these policy reasons, the court has emphasized and left intact the general liability of any individual for personal conduct. [At para. 15; emphasis added.]

[65] Carthy J.A. added at para. 18 that:

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

> The consistent line of authority in Canada holds simply that, in all events, officers, directors and employees of corporations are responsible for their tortious conduct even though that conduct was directed in a bona fide manner to the best interests of the company, always subject to the Said v. Butt exception. [Emphasis added.]

As examples, he referred to Lewis v. Boutilier (1919) 52 D.L.R. 383 at 389 (S.C.C.); Berger v. Willowdale A.M.C., et al. (1983) 41 O.R. (2d) 89 at 98 (C.A.), lve to app ref'd May 17, 1983; Sullivan and Sullivan Farms Ltd. v. Desrosiers et al. (1986) 76 N.B.R. (2d) 271 (C.A.), lve to app ref'd June 4, 1987. In the latter case, Hoyt J.A. had reasoned:

> The question here, as I have pointed out, is not whether Mr. Sullivan was acting on behalf of or even if he "was" the company, but whether a legal barrier, here a company, can be erected between a person found to be a wrongdoer and an injured party thereby relieving the wrongdoer of his liability. In my opinion, once it is determined that a person breaches a duty owed to neighbouring landowners not to interfere with their reasonable enjoyment of their property, liability may be imposed on him and he may not escape by saying that as well as being a wrongdoer he is also a company manager or employee. [At 278; emphasis added.]

And in an earlier case of alleged fraud, Kepic v. Tecumseh Road Builders (1987) 18 C.C.E.L. 218 (Ont. C.A.), Brooke J.A. had stated for the Court:

> It is well established that the directors of a corporation will not be liable for inducing that corporation to breach its contract when they are performing bona fide their functions as corporate officers. See Said v. Butt … This is not the case where a director acts in a fraudulent manner: Fraudulent efforts by a director of a corporation to increase the revenue of that body cannot be said to be bona fide in its best interest. See generally Einhorn v. Westmount Investments Ltd. (1969), 69 W.W.R. 31, 6 D.L.R. (3d) 71 (Sask. Q.B.), affirmed (1970), 73 W.W.R. 161, 11 D.L.R. (3d) 509 (Sask. C.A.); McFadden v. 481782 Ontario Ltd. (1984), 47 O.R. (3d) 134, 5 C.C.E.L. 83, 27 B.L.R. 173, (Ont. H.C.). [At 222; emphasis added.]

This passage was approved by the Court in ADGA.

[66] Carthy J.A. also considered the seminal Canadian case on vicarious liability, London Drugs Ltd. v. Kuehne & Nagel International Ltd. [1992] 3 S.C.R. 299. The majority there rejected the argument that generally in Canada "an employee acting in the course of his or her employment and performing the 'very essence' of his or her employer's contractual obligations with a customer does not owe a duty of care, whether one labels it 'independent' or otherwise, to the employer's customer." (At 407-8.) (LaForest J. in dissent also spoke in terms of "the employee's primary duty" owed to third parties who might be injured in the course of the employee's duties: see 339.) The ADGA Court stated in summary that:

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

> These Canadian authorities at the appellate level confirm clearly that employees, officers and directors will be held personally liable for tortious conduct causing physical injury, property damage, or a nuisance even when their actions are pursuant to their duties to the corporation." [At para. 26.]

[67] After referring to Normart Management Limited v. West Hill Redevelopment Company Ltd. et al. (1998) 37 O.R. (3d) 97 (Ont. C.A.); Alper Development, Inc. v. Harrowston Corporation, et al. (1998) 38 O.R. (3d) 785 (C.A.) and other authorities, Carthy J.A. concluded in ADGA that there was no principled basis for protecting the director and employees of Valcom from liability for their alleged conduct and that the law in this area should be permitted to develop over time in a principled way. The action against the individual defendants was allowed to proceed.

[68] Both ScotiaMcLeod and ADGA were discussed by this court in Hildebrand v. Fox, 2008 BCCA 434, which again concerned an application to strike pleadings under R. 19(24) of the then Rules of Court. The plaintiff in that case, a teacher employed by the defendant school board, alleged gross negligence on the part of the superintendent of the board, Mr. Fox, in failing to meet the standard of care owed to her in investigating a complaint against her and reporting to the board. In support of his objection that no independent cause of action lay against him, the defendant relied on various cases, including ScotiaMcLeod, for the proposition that employees will not be liable for acts done in the course of their employment "unless the employee commits a tortious act which demonstrates an identity or interest separate and apart from their employer." (Para. 46.) For her part, the plaintiff relied on London Drugs as demonstrating that an employee can be liable in negligence "alongside his or her employer".

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[69] Tysoe J.A. in Hildebrand reviewed Said v. Butt and many of the cases mentioned above, ending with London Drugs. He observed that there is "no clear consensus" as to the law concerning the personal liability of employees, but continued:

> The law is relatively clear that, based on Said v. Butt, an employee of a company which has breached a contract is not personally liable for the tort of inducing breach of contract or for another claim that is a disguised attempt to make a non-party liable on a contract. That is not the situation in this case. Based on London Drugs and ADGA Systems, it is at least arguable that the principle in Said v. Butt does not extend to the tort of negligence even where the negligent act or omission occurred in the performance by the employee of a contract between the employee's corporate employer and the plaintiff. [At para. 70; emphasis added.]

The Court held that it was not plain and obvious the pleadings failed to disclose a cause of action against Mr. Fox "on the ground that it fails to demonstrate that he had an identity or interest separate and apart from [that of] the Board." (Para. 71.)

[70] Finally in this line of authorities, we were referred to The Owners, Strata Plan No. VIS3578 v. John A. Neilson Architects Inc. 2010 BCCA 329. The Court in that instance addressed several questions, including whether the chambers judge below had erred in dismissing an application to join certain persons as defendants in a larger action involving a "leaky condo". Neilson J.A. referred inter alia to London Drugs, Said v. Butt, ScotiaMcLeod, Hildebrand, and a decision of the British Columbia Supreme Court, Strata Plan LMS 2262 v. Stoneman Developments Ltd., 2004 BCSC 828, 39 C.L.R. (3d) 127. In Stoneman, Garson J. (as she then was) had suggested that a "dichotomy" existed in British Columbia between authorities which hold that "an employee is not personally liable unless his actions are themselves tortious and exhibit a separate identity or interest from that of the company", and others to the effect that "an independent tort is not required, and that an employee or director may be sued personally if his actions are tortious or exhibit a separate identity or interest from that of the company." (Para. 87; my emphasis.)

[71] Neilson J.A. in Neilson disagreed that such a dichotomy existed (see para. 69) and found it was not plain and obvious that claims in negligence against the individual respondents personally would be excluded under the "Said v. Butt exception to the general principle outlined in London Drugs". In her analysis:

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

> The fact that a director, officer or employee was acting within the course of employment and the corporation is vicariously liable for his negligence does not preclude a claim in negligence against the employee personally. However, in my view, the London Drugs principle requires that the claim against the individual must be based on the breach of a duty of care that would support an action against the individual personally. The material facts that support that personal claim in tort must be specifically pleaded to establish a possible cause of action under R. 15(5)(a)(iii). [At para. 66; emphasis added.]

[72] It does not appear that the foregoing authorities were cited to the trial judge in the case at bar. He referred only to a passage from Peter T. Burns and Joost Blom, Economic Interests in Canadian Tort Law (2009), where the authors stated:

> A fraudulent employee or agent is, of course, liable jointly with the employer or principal, irrespective of whether the fraud was done at the behest and for the benefit of the latter. [At 76.]

Curiously, the two cases cited by the authors (and mentioned by the trial judge at para. 256 of his reasons) are of little assistance on the question of employees' liability, given that they did not differentiate between defendant employees and defendant employers.

[73] Nevertheless, it appears to be the law in Canada that as long as tortious conduct on the part of an employee or agent of a corporation (or any other employer) is properly pleaded and proven as an "independent" tort by the employee or agent, the wrongdoer can be held personally liable notwithstanding that he or she may have been acting in the best interests of (and at the behest of) the employer or principal. I see no reason in principle or policy why such liability should be restricted to cases involving physical damage (as Said v. Butt may have suggested in 1920), or to claims in negligence (as referred to in London Drugs, Hildebrand and Neilson.) Certainly the Ontario Court of Appeal did not so restrict it in ADGA. (See also Hogarth v. Rocky Mountain Slate Inc. 2013 ABCA 57 at para. 103; Schembri v. Way 2012 ONCA 620 at para. 30; Correia v. Canac Kitchens, 2008 ONCA 506 at paras.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

86-8; and Unisys Canada Inc. v. York Three Associates Inc. (2001) 150 O.A.C. 49 (Ont. C.A.) at para. 11.)

[74] In any event it is clear that fraud or fraudulent conduct has historically fallen into an established category in which personal liability has been imposed on agents and employees. It is sufficient in the case at bar to rely on this exception, although the acts of the Personal Defendants were properly pleaded as amounting to civil conspiracy and in this sense constituted a tort that was independent of that alleged against JingJing.

[75] In the result, it cannot in my view be said that the claims of deceit or civil conspiracy were not available to XY against the Personal Defendants as a matter of law merely because they were employees of JingJing and acting in the course of their duties to further the objectives of JingJing.

"Following Orders" Defence?

[76] Counsel for Ms. Zhou and Ms. Tang did not frame their challenge to personal liability in terms of the Said v. Butt line of cases, however. Instead they argued that in carrying out the conduct complained of, they were "only following orders" and could not be expected to refuse to carry out the scheme apparently devised by their boss, Mr. Zhu. (As earlier mentioned, he was the directing mind of JingJing and the IND Group.) Counsel referred us to evidence that both Ms. Zhou and Ms. Tang were receiving modest salaries from JingJing − although Mr. Wilson also referred us to evidence that they worked for other IND companies and may have been remunerated more substantially in other ways.

[77] It is a striking fact that no case was cited to us in which the "following orders" argument was advanced, much less successfully, in a context analogous to this case. Mr. Gudmundseth referred us to a decision of the Federal Court of Australia in Cooper v. Universal Music Australia Pty Ltd. [2006] FCAFC 187, a copyright infringement case involving a website that contained hyperlinks to remote websites which users could use to have music transmitted directly to their computers. The website was hosted by "ComCen" and was owned and operated by the defendant Mr. Cooper. He was found to have "authorized" the infringement of copyright in sound recordings within the meaning of s. 101(1A) of the Copyright Act 1968, as was the defendant Mr. Takoushis, who supplied computing "support services".

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[78] In the course of its lengthy reasons on appeal, the Court addressed the question of whether Mr. Takoushis had in law "authorized" the infringement:

> Mr Takoushis had studied information technology at TAFE before becoming an employee of Com-Cen. He gave evidence that his position within that company was essentially a computing support role. His Honour found that Mr Takoushis was Mr Cooper's primary contact with Comcen and that he provided assistance from time to time in relation to the establishment and operation of Mr Cooper's website.
>
> The evidence did not establish that Mr Takoushis had any personal power to prevent the doing of the acts of copyright infringement (s 101(1A)(a)). He was not Mr Cooper's internet service provider; he was merely an employee of the internet service provider – albeit an employee with skills in computer technology who undertook work in relation to Mr Cooper's website.
>
> Nor did the evidence establish that there was any relevant relationship between Mr Takoushis and the users of Mr Cooper's website or between Mr Takoushis and the operators of the remote websites from which sound recordings were communicated (s 101(1A)(b)). Nor did the evidence suggest that there was any reasonable step open to be taken by Mr Takoushis personally to prevent or avoid the doing of the acts of copyright infringement. While it would have been a reasonable step for Mr Takoushis' employer to have terminated its hosting of Mr Cooper's website, either absolutely or unless he removed the hyperlinks on it which facilitated copyright infringement, the evidence did not establish that Mr Takoushis had the necessary authority to do so himself (s 101(1A)(c)). I do not consider that it would have been a reasonable step for Mr Takoushis to approach his employer to compel them to do so.
>
> … Mr Takoushis was not a director of either Com-Cen or E-Talk. Nor was he shown to be an executive or shareholder of either of those companies. His evidence that his position within Com-Cen was essentially a computing support role was not challenged.
>
> In my view, the evidence before the primary judge was insufficient to establish that Mr Takoushis infringed the Record Companies' copyright by personally authorizing the relevant acts of copyright infringement.
>
> Further, for the reasons given above, the evidence before the primary judge was insufficient to demonstrate that Mr Takoushis held an executive or managerial role within either Com-Cen or E-Talk such that his involvement with their acts of copyright infringement rendered him personally liable for those acts of copyright infringement … [At paras. 69-74; emphasis added.]

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

The Personal Defendants Zhou and Tang rely on this reasoning for the proposition that a person who holds a merely supportive role should not be held liable for participation in wrongs devised by and carried out by her employer.

[79] There is no doubt that the implications of holding an employee responsible for 'supporting' or 'assisting' her employer in what turns out to be fraudulent conduct, must be carefully considered. As Southin J. (as she then was) stated in United Services Funds (Trustees of) v. Lazzell (1988) 28 B.C.L.R. (2d) 26 (S.C.):

> One must, I think, be wary of postulating so wide a theory of assistance as to make liable, for instance, a secretary or bookkeeper who, discovering that her employer is engaged in chicanery, simply goes on doing the duties, not tortious in themselves, he or she did before. [At 89.]

I agree that the employee who simply carries on doing the job she has always done, notwithstanding that her typing or bookkeeping may assist in a fraud, should not without more be regarded as a fraudster (or conspirator) herself. (As noted by the Law Reform Commission of British Columbia in its Report on Shared Liability (1986) at 25-6, a person in this situation who "acts innocently or is unaware of the tortious act of another" would be entitled to indemnification from the employer.)

[80] Here, however, the trial judge found that Ms. Zhou and Ms. Tang went beyond mere bookkeeping or 'typing' lab reports at Mr. Zhu's instructions. Both defendants actively assisted in devising how best to deceive XY. Their acts were, then, "tortious in themselves" and were not part of their regular duties. As stated by Burns and Blom, supra, it appears the law has historically held fraudulent employees liable with their employers "irrespective of whether the fraud was done at the behest and for the benefit of the latter." As for Cooper v. Universal Music, I regard the reasoning relied on by the defendants as confined to the meaning of "authorized" in the Australian Copyright Act 1968.

[81] In the result, I would reject the "following orders" defence asserted on behalf of Ms. Tang and Ms. Zhou.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

The IND Corporate Defendants

[82] At para. 297 of his reasons, the trial judge turned to the question of whether the Personal Defendants were "together with the corporate IND defendants, jointly and severally liable" for the tort of deceit. (Obviously, this question does not arise unless JingJing was indeed liable in deceit.) The Court referred to Osborne v. Pavlick 2000 BCCA 120, where Southin J.A. adopted Scrutton L.J.'s description of "joint tortfeasors" in The Koursk, supra:

> The substantial question in the present case is: What is meant by "joint tortfeasors"? and one way of answering it is: "Is the cause of action against them the same?" Certain classes of persons seem clearly to be "joint tortfeasors": The agent who commits a tort within the scope of his employment for his principal, and the principal; the servant who commits a tort in the course of his employment, and his master; two persons who agree on common action, in the course of, and to further which, one of them commits a tort. These seem clearly joint tortfeasors; there is one tort committed by one of them on behalf of, or in concert with another. [At 155; emphasis added.]

The trial judge found that on the evidence, XY had not established that "the tort of deceit committed by the [Personal Defendants] was in concert with the corporate members of the IND Group (beyond JingJing), or that it was committed on their behalf." (Para. 298.)

[83] XY submits on its appeal that there is no basis in the evidence to differentiate the Personal Defendants' relationship with JingJing from their relationship with any other company in the IND Group. The plaintiff's factum elaborates:

> … Ms. Tang and Ms. Zhou both worked for the IND Group generally. That is the way their contracts were written; that is the way they worked; that is the way they were remunerated; and that is the way they thought of it themselves. As agents or employees of all of the members of the IND Group, their joint conduct with Mr. Zhu attracts liability for the IND Group as a whole. The trial judge's findings in respect of JingJing inexorably lead, on this record, to the same conclusion in respect of the remainder of the corporate group.
>
> The record well illustrates the way in which the conduct of the individual defendants engaged and involved the various companies in the IND Group. Under Ms. Tang's direction, IND Embryontech produced sexed IVF embryos in Quebec (TJ, paras. 23, 308), and IND (Pennsylvania) and IND (California) produced such embryos in their respective jurisdictions (TJ, paras. 24, 25, > 308). In that same capacity, and working from those same labs, Ms. Tang generated the false data that Ms. Zhou eventually supplied to XY, with Mr. Zhu's approval (TJ, para. 89.)

>
> To the same effect, when JingJing purported to make an honest and comprehensive reporting in 2008, it did so using a false "embryo implant table", prepared by Ms. Tang using data generated by IND (Qingdao), describing the IND Group's embryo usage in China … That table was then relied on by Ms. Tang at trial ...
>
> JingJing itself never even possessed the documents or the data that [were] used to deceive XY in respect of IVF embryo production. That was established when, in the course of document production, JingJing was revealed not to have any such materials in its possession or control. The magnitude of the IND Group's common fraud was only revealed to XY when it obtained production from what were then called the "non-licensee defendants"− i.e., the IND Group companies other than JingJing … [Emphasis added.]

In summary, counsel submits that the Personal Defendants were not acting on behalf of JingJing alone when they perpetrated their fraud, but that Ms. Tang in particular:

> … used her employment relationships (qua lab manager) with all of those companies to falsify their records and contrive the numbers that were at the core of the false reporting that, in the language of Scrutton L.J. [in The Koursk] was the subject of her "common action" with JingJing and the other individuals … In this way, the [Personal Defendants] were the human nexus that bound the IND Group together, and enabled the companies' common fraud. [Emphasis added.]

[84] The argument, then, is that because Ms. Tang and Ms. Zhou worked for some, if not all, of the corporate defendants, they must be taken to have falsified the reports required to be made to XY under the CLA, in their capacity as employees of those other corporations. The fact remains, however, that it was in the course of their duties as employees of JingJing that Ms. Tang and Ms. Zhou conspired to injure XY by means of the falsified documents. Only JingJing was a party to the CLA, and only JingJing was required to report its revenues from the use of the technology. The fact Ms. Tang and Ms. Zhou may have used some IND facilities does not amount to proof that they were acting on behalf of or for the benefit of the other corporations. In my view, the trial judge correctly rejected this theory of 'infective liability' advanced by XY.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[85] In the alternative, XY submits that the trial judge should have "collapsed" the separate legal personalities of the IND corporations into one (presumably JingJing) and should have treated its conduct as that of the IND Group as a whole. It is said the trial judge erred in applying "the wrong test" in rejecting this "group enterprise" submission.

[86] The law concerning both the lifting of a corporate veil in a simple 'Salomon' situation, and disregarding the separate personality of a group of related corporations is highly fact-dependent and does not admit of any clear test or rules. As Professor McGuinness observes in Canadian Business Corporations Law (2nd ed., 2005), it is difficult to make out any general principle followed by the courts in handling such cases. (At 49.) The trial judge referred to Smith, Stone & Knight Ltd. v. Birmingham Corp. [1939] 4 All E.R. 116 (C.A.), a case about the lifting of the corporate veil of a subsidiary to implicate its parent company. Atkinson J. there acknowledged that notwithstanding the separate legal personality of a corporation, there "may be such an arrangement between the shareholders and a company as will constitute the company the shareholders' agent for the purpose of carrying on the business and make the business the business of the shareholders." He continued:

> It seems therefore to be a question of fact in each case, and those cases indicate that the question is whether the subsidiary was carrying on the business as the company's business or as its own. I have looked at a number of cases – they are all revenue cases – to see what the courts regarded as of importance for determining that question … and I find six points which were deemed relevant for the determination of the question: Who was really carrying on the business? … The first point was: were the profits treated as the profits of the company? … [S]econdly, were the persons conducting the business appointed by the parent company? Thirdly, was the company the head and the brain of the trading venture? Fourthly, did the company govern the adventure, decide what should be done and what capital should be embarked on the venture? Fifthly, did the company make the profits by its skill and direction? Sixthly, was the company in effectual and constant control? … and it seems to me that every one of those questions must be answered in favour of the claimants. [At 121.]

[87] I do not read the trial judge in the case at bar as having applied these (or any other) "tests". To the contrary, he said he was unable to answer them with any certainty: para. 314. He also noted the discussion of Smith, Stone in Alberta Gas Ethylene Co. v. Canada (1988) 24 F.T.R. 309 (F.C.T.D.), at 313-14, where the Court took a "restrained" view of Atkinson J.'s comments. See also Bow Valley Husky (Bermuda) Ltd. v. Saint John Ship Building Ltd. (1994) 126 D.L.R. (4th) 1 (N.L.C.A.) at paras. 38-51, var'd [1997] 3 S.C.R. 1210; Edgington v. Mulek Estate 2008 BCCA 505, at paras. 19-26; and most recently, the decision of the U.K. Supreme Court in Prest v. Petrodel Resources Ltd. 2013 UKSC 34 at paras. 17-35 (per Lord Sumption JSC) and paras. 60-83 (per Lord Neuberger of Abbotsbury PSC). At para. 106 of Prest Lord Walker of Gestingthrope aptly summarized the state of the law:

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

> I am reluctant to add to the discussion but for my part I consider that "piercing the corporate veil" is not a doctrine at all, in the sense of a coherent principle or rule of law. It is simply a label – often, as Lord Sumption JSC observes, used indiscriminately – to describe the disparate occasions on which some rule of law produces apparent exceptions to the principle of the separate juristic personality of a body corporate reaffirmed by the House of Lords in Salomon v. A Salomon & Co Ltd. ... These may result from a statutory provision, or from joint liability in tort, or from the law of unjust enrichment, or from principles of equity and the law of trusts (but without any "false invocation of equity" in the phrase used by C Mitchell in the article mentioned by Lord Neuberger PSC, at para 77). They may result simply from the potency of an injunction or other court order in binding third parties who are aware of its terms. If there is a small residual category in which the metaphor operates independently no clear example has yet been identified. … [Emphasis added.]

[88] The leading decision of this court is B.G. Preeco 1 (Pacific Coast) Ltd. v. Bon Street Holdings Ltd. (1989) 60 D.L.R. (4th) 30. There, Seaton J.A. rejected the conclusion that courts should lift the corporate veil wherever "fair play and good conscience" indicate − the so-called "Deep Rock doctrine". He observed that the corporate veil has been pierced in instances of "fraud or improper conduct" where the corporation "is used to effect a purpose or commit an act which the shareholder could not effect or commit", citing Gilford Motor Co. v. Horne [1933] Ch. 935 (C.A.). The veil had also been pierced in tax cases involving corporate groups "so as to ignore the separate legal existence of related companies", and the group enterprise theory had on occasion been extended to non-tax cases. However, Seaton J.A. observed, the House of Lords had limited those cases to their facts in Woolfson v. Strathclyde Regional Council [1978] S.C. (H.L.) 90 and in Industrial Equity Ltd. v.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

Blackburn (1977) 137 C.L.R. 567, the Australian High Court had disapproved of the idea of "treating related companies as one entity, absent some specific statutory requirement".

[89] Overall, the Court in B.G. Preeco was decidedly unenthusiastic about the idea of disregarding corporate personality. On the facts of B.G. Preeco, Seaton J.A. observed:

> … the plaintiff knew it was dealing with a company. The fraud found by the trial judge caused the plaintiff to believe that the company had assets that it, in fact, did not have. That has nothing to do with the corporate veil. The use of a company as a means of avoiding bearing business losses is neither unusual nor a basis for lifting the veil.
>
> In my view, the proper remedy is not to lift the corporate veil, but to award damages for fraud against the individuals and the company that committed the fraud. That is what the trial judge did. [At 40; emphasis added.]

[90] Counsel also referred us to the more recent case of Transamerica Life Insurance Co. of Canada v. Canada Life Assurance Co. (1996) 28 O.R. (3d) 423 (Gen. Div.). There Sharpe J. (as he then was) stated:

> As just indicated, the courts will disregard the separate legal personality of a corporate entity where it is completely dominated and controlled and being used as a shield for fraudulent or improper conduct. The first element, "complete control", requires more than ownership. It must be shown that there is complete domination and that the subsidiary company does not, in fact, function independently: Aluminum Co. of Canada Ltd. v. Toronto (City), [1944] S.C.R. 267 at p. 271, [1944] 3 D.L.R. 609; Bank of Montreal v. Canadian Westgrowth Ltd. (1990), 72 Alta. R. (2d) 319 (Q.B.). …
>
> The second element relates to the nature of the conduct: is there "conduct akin to fraud that would otherwise unjustly deprive claimants of their rights"? [At 433-4; emphasis added.]

[91] Fraud has of course been proven in this case and XY contends that there is evidence of conduct that satisfies the first element referred to in Transamerica: all the IND corporations are owned and/or controlled by Mr. Zhu, and he himself stated in discovery that until IND Dairy Tech Ltd. became publicly listed, "all the shareholding was in China and in Canada was controlled by me. [Sic.] It's an absolute common interest entity." (Para. 299.)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[92] As the defendants contend, however, XY was not deceived by JingJing's separate legal personality per se. Presumably, XY dealt with JingJing in full knowledge that it was part of a larger group. XY did not insist upon receiving guarantees or other security from other members of the group as security for JingJing's performance of its obligations under the CLA. As in BG Preeco, JingJing's fraud had "nothing to do" with the corporate veil. Moreover, Mr. Zhu, the individual who controlled JingJing's shareholder, has of course been found personally liable for the same damages as JingJing itself. It is thus unclear to me how the application of the "group enterprise" theory would assist the plaintiff in practical terms. At the least, if all the assets of the other IND corporations were to become available to satisfy XY's judgment, existing creditors of those corporations would be affected and would have legitimate objections.

[93] XY also relies on another category of case described by the Court in B.G. Preeco − where the corporation is used to "effect a purpose or commit an act which the shareholder could not effect or commit." (At 38.) In XY's submission, JingJing was established for the very purpose of allowing the other members of the IND Group to obtain XY's technology without paying for it. The plaintiff points to an e-mail sent by Dr. Remillard to Mr. Zhu on April 30, 2003:

> If we setup a new company for that project, we will only pay royalty on the semen, because no embryos will be produced by that company. [Emphasis added.]

In addition, XY asserts that "notional sales" from JingJing to other members of the Group were 'papered' to bring about JingJing's insolvency, leaving those corporations with XY's technology:

> … to avoid the consequences of breaching the CLA, Mr. Zhu and the IND Group moved the property with which the CLA was concerned (i.e., sexed semen and IVF sexed embryos) into the hands of other IND Group companies, through notional sales papered after the fact without money changing hands. The effects of this were twofold. First, these notional transactions hollowed out JingJing financially. Ms. Zhou caused the "sale" of embryos to IND (Qingdao) through JingJing. This caused JingJing to accumulate debts owing to IND Embryontech (on paper, the original vendor). When IND (Qingdao) then failed to pay JingJing for the embryos, Mr. Zhu had thereby managed to contrive an artificial insolvency; JingJing could not pay > its debts to IND Embryontech as they become due, leading to its bankruptcy and eliminating XY's recourse against JingJing for breach of the CLA. … Second, the IND Groups shadowy internal dealings produced the "paucity of evidence" of enrichment that the trial judge found defeated XY's unjust enrichment claim against [it]. [Emphasis added.]

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

(Other acts of deceit, or at least involvement in some aspects of JingJing's deceit, on the part of other members of the IND Group are mentioned by the trial judge in passing at paras. 94, 95, 130, 131, 199 and 282 of his reasons.)

[94] The IND corporations submit in response that there is "no evidence" that the shareholder(s) of JingJing used the corporate vehicle to effect a purpose that it or they could not otherwise effect. Yet if the evidence supports the allegations quoted above concerning JingJing's insolvency, it might well be said the corporate vehicle had been used essentially to rob XY of its technology (not only of royalties) and to thwart its legal remedies.

[95] In these circumstances, it is unfortunate that the trial judge did not make findings of fact in response to XY's allegations on this point. It will be recalled that he stated at para. 317 only that the circumstances of this case and of the members of the IND Group did not "rise to a level where the consequences" of the torts of JingJing and the Personal Defendants or those of JingJing's breach of contract "should flow throughout the IND Group to its individual members." This was followed closely by the conclusion at para. 321 under the heading "Unjust Enrichment" that although detriment on XY's part and the absence of juristic reason had been proven, the third element – i.e., the enrichment of the IND defendants – had not.

[96] In my view, it was not by chance that the group enterprise doctrine and the claim in unjust enrichment were considered at the same point in the Court's analysis. Both would have been means by which the benefits (if any) of the fraud that were allegedly passed on to other members of the IND Group upon JingJing's bankruptcy could be pursued by the plaintiff. As suggested above, the "group enterprise" doctrine would be a highly uncertain and improbable route, and might yield nothing but expense and delay. The unjust enrichment claim, on the other hand, would have been a more direct means of addressing XY's complaints with respect to the use of JingJing to "front" a relationship with XY for the purpose of moving its technology to one or more of the other corporations, and with respect to the "hollowing out" of JingJing by means of paper debts to IND Embyrontech.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[97] In my respectful view it was incumbent on the trial judge to consider the evidence cited in this regard, to make findings of fact, and then to reach and explain his conclusions based thereon. While I am not persuaded he erred in declining to take the extreme step of notionally "collapsing" the separate identity of the IND defendants into one, I am driven to the conclusion that he did err as a matter of law in failing to analyze the evidence related to the claim for unjust enrichment and that that matter should be remitted to the court below for retrial as against the IND defendants. I would allow XY's appeal to the extent of revising para. 9 of the trial court's order as set out at the end of these reasons.

Injunctive Relief

[98] As mentioned earlier, the terms of the CLA required JingJing (then known as IND Lifetech, Inc.) to keep XY's technology confidential. The Agreement defined the term "Technology" as follows:

> "Technology" means any and all Proprietary Rights or confidential information, trade secrets, know-how, technical data, masks, code, programs, designs, processes, methods, operations, innovations, or inventions, whether or not patented, and any patents, patent applications, copy rights, or other intellectual property of any kind that Licensor, now or hereafter, owns, controls, licenses, or has an interest in.

and "Proprietary Rights" thus:

> "Proprietary Rights" with respect to the Technology means the collection of all Patent Rights, Trademark Rights, Trade Secret Rights, and Copyright Rights, or other rights which are or may be asserted as protectable under the laws of the United States or the laws of any foreign country.

[99] Section 3.10 of the CLA contained the central covenant regarding confidentiality and the exceptions thereto:

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

> CONFIDENTIALITY: Each of the parties to this License Agreement shall maintain and hold confidential any and all information regarding the terms or condition of this License Agreement and any and all information regarding the Technology, the Proprietary Rights, or Improvements thereto of the other party during the Term of this License Agreement and thereafter, except to the extent that the information:
>
> i. is or becomes generally available to the public other than as a result of a disclosure by the recipient party;
>
> ii. becomes available to recipient party on a non-confidential basis and not in contravention of applicable law from a source other than the other party or one of its officers, directors, partners, employees, independent contractors, agents, or licensees ("Representatives") not bound by a confidential relationship with disclosing party or by a confidentiality or other similar agreement;
>
> iii. can be proven was known by recipient party on a non-confidential basis and not in contravention of applicable law or confidentiality or other similar agreement prior to disclosure to recipient party by disclosing party;
>
> iv. notwithstanding the foregoing, with respect to the Licensed Technical Information or any information marked or indicated by the disclosing party as confidential, recipient party shall maintain such information as confidential.
>
> Licensee agrees to limit access to information to employees or independent contractors who by express writing agree to confidentiality obligations including terms set out by Exhibit H (Assignment Agreement Terms) and Exhibit 1 (Nondisclosure Agreement Terms).

[100] The trial judge considered the granting of injunctive relief beginning at para. 323 of his reasons. He noted Qureshi v. Gooch, 2005 BCSC 1584, where the Court in turn cited the leading Canadian case, Cadbury Schweppes Inc. v. FBI Foods Ltd. [1999] 1 S.C.R. 142 for the proposition that in determining whether such relief is appropriate, the court considers the nature of the rights sought to be protected and the surrounding circumstances, and attempts to "balance the equities" between the parties. The Supreme Court confirmed that an action for breach of confidence is sui generis, a characterization said to "recognize the flexibility that has been shown by courts in the past to uphold confidentiality and in crafting remedies for its protection". (Para. 28.) Binnie J. cited with approval the observations of Deane J. in

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

Moorgate Tobacco Co. v. Philip Morris Ltd. (1984) 156 C.L.R. 414 (H.C. Aust.) at 438:

> Like most heads of exclusive equitable jurisdiction, its rational basis does not lie in proprietary right. It lies in the notion of an obligation of conscience arising from the circumstances in or through which the information was communicated or obtained.

On the facts in Cadbury Schweppes itself, the Court concluded that the circumstances of the parties' dealings and the nature of the information ("nothing very special") militated against the granting of a permanent injunction, and that a monetary remedy was adequate.

[101] The trial judge in the case at bar also referred to Robert J. Sharpe, Injunctions and Specific Performance (looseleaf, 2010) for the proposition that an injunction will ordinarily be granted in the intellectual property context where (1) the plaintiff has a legal right in the property; (2) there is a real threat to or an actual invasion of the legal right; and (3) there is no defence of laches, delay, acquiescence or estoppel. (At para. 4.690, quoted at para. 327 of the trial judge's reasons; see also R. E. Dimock, Intellectual Property Disputes: Resolutions and Remedies (looseleaf, 2004) at 15.2, cited by the judge at para. 330.)

[102] The trial judge found that injunctive relief was appropriate because XY had not sought damages for the future effects of JingJing's breach of confidence. In his analysis:

> If it were denied, the defendants would be permitted to sort semen using their intimate knowledge of XY's equipment and protocols without paying royalties to XY and in competition with other licensees in China, Canada or elsewhere who do pay royalties. The injunction is an appropriate remedy, both mandatory and prohibitory.
>
> The plaintiff's mandatory injunction is sought to deliver or destroy under oath confidential information of XY which is in the hands of the defendants. The defendants have no right to possess such information and indeed do not assert they do. The injunction does no more than hold JingJing and its employees and related companies who had access to the bargain struck under the CLA. [At paras. 328-29.]

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[103] The judge rejected the defendants' argument that XY's technology was in the public domain − an argument based on an answer given by Mr. Evans in his (public) testimony at trial. This answer, the judge said, had been taken entirely out of context: Mr. Evans was not referring to the information about which he later testified, in camera, at trial. As well, the judge rejected Mr. Zhu's evidence that semen could be sorted by the defendants without XY's confidential information. Aside from the fact that Mr. Zhu was not found to be credible, this evidence was contrary to the "detailed and credible evidence" of Mr. Gilligan and Mr. Evans. (Para. 337.)

[104] In the result, the Court granted the injunction in the terms proposed by XY. This part of the Court's order is reproduced as Schedule II to these reasons.

[105] Mr. Zhu complains on his appeal about many detailed aspects of the injunction, but the main thrust of his argument is that the definition of "Confidential Information" contained in Appendix A encompasses information that has been made publicly available (by the publication of research or through patent applications). Thus it fails to distinguish between that information and information that is truly confidential. On this view, the trial judge was "required to examine the circumstances of XY's claim for confidentiality and [to] make an independent determination as to whether the information was truly confidential such that the Court's protection of XY's information was required indefinitely".

[106] The starting point for the relevant definition of "Confidential Information" in this case must be the terms of the CLA. As the trial judge noted at para. 204, the terms of any contract between the parties are relevant to the availability of a claim (and therefore, remedy) for breach of confidence. As seen above, s. 3.10 of the Agreement excepted information that is or becomes generally available to the public other than as a result of a disclosure by the recipient party, and information that was known by the recipient party "on a non-confidential basis and not in contravention of applicable law or confidentiality or other similar agreement prior to disclosure to [JingJing] by [XY]." Obviously, this would include published research and patent applications, and I did not understand XY to argue to the contrary.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[107] It is not appropriate, however, for a court to refer to all such patent applications and public research in the terms of an order. While recognizing that any injunction must be clear and enforceable, it seems to me that any question of over-breadth in this instance could have been avoided by the incorporation of the exceptions listed in s. 3.10 of the CLA quoted above. Aside from this exception, JingJing agreed to keep the technology confidential, and for its part, XY took every precaution to see that the licensee did so. As the trial judge observed, the confidentiality of the technology was also supported by the standard terms and conditions of DakoCytomation's contract with JingJing for the sale of SX cytometers. (Para. 208.)

[108] The trial judge analyzed the three different types of confidential information identified in this case, beginning at para. 209. He accepted Mr. Evan's evidence concerning the components of the SX cytometer that were confidential. Mr. Evans' in camera testimony confirmed that licensees are not even able to modify or add to most of the cytometer components. The Court accepted that the "protocols", or information regarding the use of the SX cytometer, given to Dr. Remillard had also been confidential. The Court continued:

> As Mr. Gilligan explained in his testimony, although much of the information contained in the report had been published, the summary prepared by XY was "the entirety of our field work up to [2003] ... [p]ublished and unpublished, which gives anybody who holds it a very good understanding of what we do or don't know so far, published or unpublished." In keeping with the principle from Saltman Engineering referred to in dissent by Sopinka J. in Lac Minerals, it is clear the people at XY had used their brains in creating XY's protocols based on published and unpublished research and experiments and had produced something that could only be produced by having gone through such a process. As such, it is clear that the information contained in the protocols was confidential and the plaintiff's evidence that the protocols were conveyed in confidence has not been undermined. [At para. 215; emphasis added.]

[109] Finally, with respect to XY's patent applications pending in China, the Court noted that applicants are normally reluctant to disclose their application information because it enables competitors to challenge the applications. (Para. 216.) Indeed, that is exactly what happened here: JingJing challenged XY's Chinese patent applications in breach of an express prohibition, stated to be effective during the term of the license. (Para. 224.)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[110] The terms of the injunction and specifically its definitions of "Proprietary Rights" and "Patent Rights" and "Trademark Rights" essentially track the corresponding definitions in the CLA. As already noted, they were subject to the exceptions stated in s. 3.10. The definition of "Patent Rights" becomes relevant only because "Confidential Information" is defined to include "Improvements to the Confidential Information made by the defendants"; the definition of "Improvements" contains the term "XY's Technology"; XY's Technology is defined to include "Proprietary Rights"; and that term in turn includes "Patent Rights". Following this chain, I agree with Mr. Wilson that patents and trademarks per se are not captured by the order; rather it is improvements "made by the defendants, including but not limited to all research and development regarding the use of sexed semen by any of the defendants internally or with the assistance of third parties such as, but not limited to, [the] Abbotsford Veterinary Clinic." In these circumstances, I do not agree with Mr. McFee's submission that the order operates to prevent the use of information that has been made public as a result of patent applications by persons other than the defendants. (Emphasis added.)

[111] Mr. Zhu also objects that the final clause (which I have labelled clause "(f)") of Appendix A to the order prevents him from using "the research and development of the defendants within the Field of Use and outside the Field of Use with respect to in vivo embryos and any other matters using sexed semen". The term "Field of Use" is defined broadly − too broadly, according to Mr. Zhu. In his submission, it precludes him from pursuing businesses that involve the production of embryos that are not dependent on XY's technology. The order prevents the defendants, for example, from purchasing sexed semen from another licensee of XY and then producing the resulting sexed embryos. Mr. Zhu testified that prior to the CLA, JingJing had engaged in such research and development without using XY's technology. (Para. 72.)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[112] XY responds that the trial judge expressly did not find this evidence persuasive. (Para. 337.) There was no evidence that Mr. Zhu had any "legitimate business" in the same field as XY that does not rely on XY's technology. Thus, it is said, "[t]here is nothing unjust about now constraining his behaviour to correspond with the bargain that first gave him access to the sexed semen technology, which he agreed was 'one of the world's most promising biotechnologies'".

[113] XY is understandably distrustful of Mr. Zhu and wants to cast its net widely so as to avoid having to re-litigate the confidentiality of its information at a later date should Mr. Zhu re-enter the business of producing embryos or otherwise using sexed semen. Nevertheless, XY's rights do not go so far as to entitle it to demand that Mr. Zhu never enter or re-enter that business. He and his companies, however, may not use or build on XY's technology to do so. It is not clear to me whether paragraph (f) was specifically referred to in argument before the trial judge, but in my respectful view, it is overly broad. I regard paragraphs (d) and (e) as sufficient to capture the defendants' future use of XY's technology, especially in light of the definition of "Improvements".

[114] I would therefore allow Mr. Zhu's appeal to the extent of deleting what I have denoted as paragraph (f) of Appendix A to the order, and incorporating the exceptions listed in s. 3.10 of the CLA, with appropriate changes in nomenclature. In all other respects, I would dismiss the appeal concerning the terms of the permanent injunction.

Calculation of Damages

The 50% Discount

[115] Finally, Mr. Zhu challenges certain aspects of the trial judge's calculation of damages (see para.16 above). First, it is said the judge erred in neglecting to give effect to a 50% discount, agreed to by XY in a letter agreement dated June 5, 2006, from the royalty payable by JingJing on the sale of sexed embryos. This discount was to continue for one year from the date of the letter agreement. Mr. Wilson responds that this matter was not raised below in connection with the quantum of damages and that had it been raised, XY would have adduced evidence that it was induced by JingJing's fraud to agree to the discount. XY refers in particular to evidence that JingJing had lied to it from the beginning regarding its embryo production, which it reported as 'nil' for the first few months and underreported thereafter. I agree with XY that this matter should have been raised below, and that it would be prejudicial now to permit JingJing to claim the discount.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

Sale of AI Straws

[116] In calculating the damages, the trial judge stated at para. 294 of his reasons that there was "no dispute" that royalties of $6 per AI straw on 195,148 straws was payable. Counsel for Mr. Zhu says that the matter was and is very much in dispute.

[117] The figure of 195,148 AI comes from the addition of two columns in Ms. Tang's records which were tendered in evidence by XY, one of which showed "AI straw produced/service render" and the other of which showed "Produced/service render for other purpose (R & D)". Royalties were payable to XY only on AI straws that were "used". Counsel for Mr. Zhu did not refer us to any other records in support of his contention that Ms. Tang's figure was overstated. He pointed us only to a letter from JingJing's former counsel to Mr. Wilson in November 2008 in which $244,542 (USD) was offered by JingJing in respect of sexed semen calculated to September 30, 2008. It is not clear how the monetary figure was reached and Mr. McFee did not refer to any other reliable records to clarify the number of AI straws that were sold, as opposed to produced.

[118] In these circumstances, I would not fault the trial judge for adding together the two columns in Ms. Tang's records to reach the total number of AI straws on which to calculate damages.

Expert Report

[119] Last, Mr. Zhu asserts that the trial judge erred in excluding from evidence an expert report proffered by the defendants concerning the fair market value of IVF embryos in China. This figure was relevant to the calculation of royalties payable before and after January 2007 on such embryos, discussed by the trial judge at paras. 278-96 of his reasons. The judge began his discussion by noting that because JingJing had not produced the records that could have shown the number of embryos used in China, it was necessary for the Court to infer the appropriate number on the evidence before it. At para. 285, the judge found that taking all the evidence he had into account, the figure of 500,000 embryos for the period before January 2007 and 150,000 in the period thereafter could be fairly inferred.

[120] As for the fair market value of the embryos, XY adduced expert evidence from Dr. Gordon MacDonald, who testified that unsexed IVF embryos (generally sold at half the price of sexed embryos) sold at between $60 and $75 USD. The judge found that this evidence 'made sense' and was consistent with other evidence regarding fair market value. (Para. 290.) Although the plaintiff's claim that the average value before January 2007 was $135 and $150 after January 2007, the Court settled on a value of $125 before January 2007 and $150 thereafter.

[121] On February 6, 2011, three months into the trial and the first day of the recommencement of the trial after a break, JingJing sought to tender an expert report from Dr. Richard Vanderwal, a doctor in veterinary medicine who practices in Abbotsford. His opinion was tendered in response to Dr. MacDonald's opinion. In explaining his lateness in tendering Dr. Vanderwal's evidence, counsel for JingJing advised the Court that his client had previously arranged for a report from an expert who lives in China, Zhu Yu Lin. The trial judge recounted in his ruling:

> Questions arose about the authenticity of the report. Mr. Zhu then advised the defendants that he refused to come to Vancouver to appear in court. There is a suggestion that the plaintiff may have had a role in Mr. Zhu's refusal. There is no cogent evidence that this is the case and I draw no such inference.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

> The evidence is that after October 20th, 2010, counsel for the defendant canvassed ten people as potential experts. Each refused based on unavailability, lack of relevant expertise or existing relationships with one of the parties to the litigation.
>
> The defendant tried to contact Dr. Vanderwal on November 14th. Ms. Prestegar has deposed that these efforts did not produce any results. Those efforts continued until prior to the holiday period in late December.
>
> On January 25th, counsel for the defendants discussed the matter with Mr. Vanderwal and confirmed that he would prepare a report. It was obtained by the defendant on Sunday, February 6th, 2011, and served on plaintiff's counsel the same afternoon or evening.

[122] The judge noted that under R. 11-7(6), the Court may allow an expert to provide a responsive expert's report "at trial" if non-compliance with the general time-limit of 42 days before trial is unlikely to cause prejudice or the interests of justice require it. The judge was not persuaded that either of these circumstances arose. In his analysis:

> Where circumstances beyond the defendants' control deprive them of an expert witness, the court will look favourably on accommodating this difficulty. The substantial prejudice to the plaintiff will not necessarily be a bar to the exercise of discretion. The interest of justice is often the overriding factor. But that is only where a party is [assiduous] in making efforts to locate a new witness. I am unable to say this is the case here. I infer that by early January, the defendant had decided not to pursue the search further. It was only three weeks later that these efforts were renewed and were successful.
>
> In the circumstances, I am not exercising my discretion and the report is excluded.

[123] Mr. McFee on behalf of JingJing submits that the Court here erred in failing to consider the "interests of justice" separately from prejudice under para. (b) or due diligence under para. (a) of R. 11-7(6). On this point, he relied on C.A. et al. v. Critchley [1996] B.C.J. No. 3055 (B.C.S.C.) at para. 12 and on Perry v. Vargas 2012 BCSC 1537. At para. 20 of Perry v. Vargas, it was said that by virtue of R. 11-7(6)(c), the Court retains a residual discretion to dispense with the other requirements of R. 11 in the interests of justice. In Mr. McFee's submission, the trial judge was required to consider the interests of justice separate from prejudice and due diligence, and in so doing to consider whether an adjournment of the trial or other steps could be granted to delay the cross-examination of Dr. Vanderwal. As a result of proceeding on the basis of the plaintiff's expert alone, counsel suggests that the judge ultimately used incorrect figures for the fair market values of embryos in China in his calculation of XY's damages.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[124] I am not persuaded that the trial judge so erred. He noted, correctly, that his discretion was "only to be exercised where there is prejudice or the interests of justice require it." As I read his reasons, he considered that prejudice and the defendants' diligence were relevant to the interests of justice. It is difficult to argue with this proposition. I respectfully adopt the observations of the Court in Perry v. Vargas:

> In my view the discretion provided for in R.11-7(6)(c) must be exercised sparingly, with appropriate caution, and in a disciplined way given the express requirements contained in Rules 11-6 and 11-7. That is, the "interests of justice" are not a reason to simply excuse or ignore the requirements of the other Rules. There must be some compelling analysis why the interests of justice require in a particular case the extraordinary step of abrogating the other requirements of the Supreme Court Civil Rules. None was provided. [At para. 22.]

[125] Given the deference due to a discretionary decision of this kind, I would not interfere with the trial judge's ruling in this case. I take additional comfort from the fact that the proposed expert was in fact the veterinarian in Abbotsford with whom JingJing had an important business relationship, and was thus an expert whose independence and impartiality in this case might well have been suspect.

[126] I would dismiss the appeal concerning the calculation of damages.

Special Costs

[127] As far as the judge's order for special costs is concerned, I see no basis to interfere with that order and indeed I find it was fully justified in light of the defendants' conduct of this litigation.

Disposition

[128] In summary, I would allow the appeals to the limited extent set out below:

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

- I would allow XY's appeal to the extent that I would set aside para. 9 of the trial judge's Order and substitute therefor:

  9. The plaintiff's claims against International Newtech Development Incorporated, IND Lifetech Group Ltd., IND Lifetech (U.S.A.) Incorporated, IND Lifetech (USA) Inc., IND Lifetech (Qingdao) Co. Ltd., IND Lifetech (Zouping) Co. Ltd. and IND Embryontech Inc. for the torts of deceit, civil conspiracy and inducing breach of contract are dismissed; but the claims in respect of unjust enrichment against the said corporate defendants shall be remitted to the Supreme Court of British Columbia for retrial. The plaintiff's claims against Zhen Hong Liu are dismissed in their entirety.

  (XY has confirmed it seeks no order against "IND Lifetech Co. Ltd.," or Shanghai JingJing Biotech Co. Ltd.)

- I would allow the corporate defendants' appeal to the extent that I would add to Appendix A to the order, following subparagraph (vii) of paragraph (e) thereof, the following:

  Provided that Confidential Information shall not include information that i. is or becomes generally available to the public other than as a result of a disclosure by any of the defendants;

  ii. becomes available to any of the defendants on a non-confidential basis and not in contravention of applicable law from a source, other than the plaintiff herein or one of its officers, directors, partners, employees, independent contractors, agents, or licensees ("Representatives") not bound by a confidential relationship with the plaintiff or by a confidentiality or other similar agreement;

  iii. can be proven was known by any of the defendants on a non-confidential basis and not in contravention of applicable law or confidentiality or other similar agreement prior to disclosure to any defendant by the plaintiff.

And I would delete paragraph (f) of Schedule A to the Order.

If counsel are of the view that the foregoing terms of this order do not properly reflect this court's intentions as inferred from these reasons, or that they create a difficulty of which the Court may not be aware, they should advise the Registrar in writing within 20 days.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

[129] We are indebted to all counsel for their able arguments.

"The Honourable Madam Justice Newbury"

I Agree:

"The Honourable Mr. Justice Chiasson"

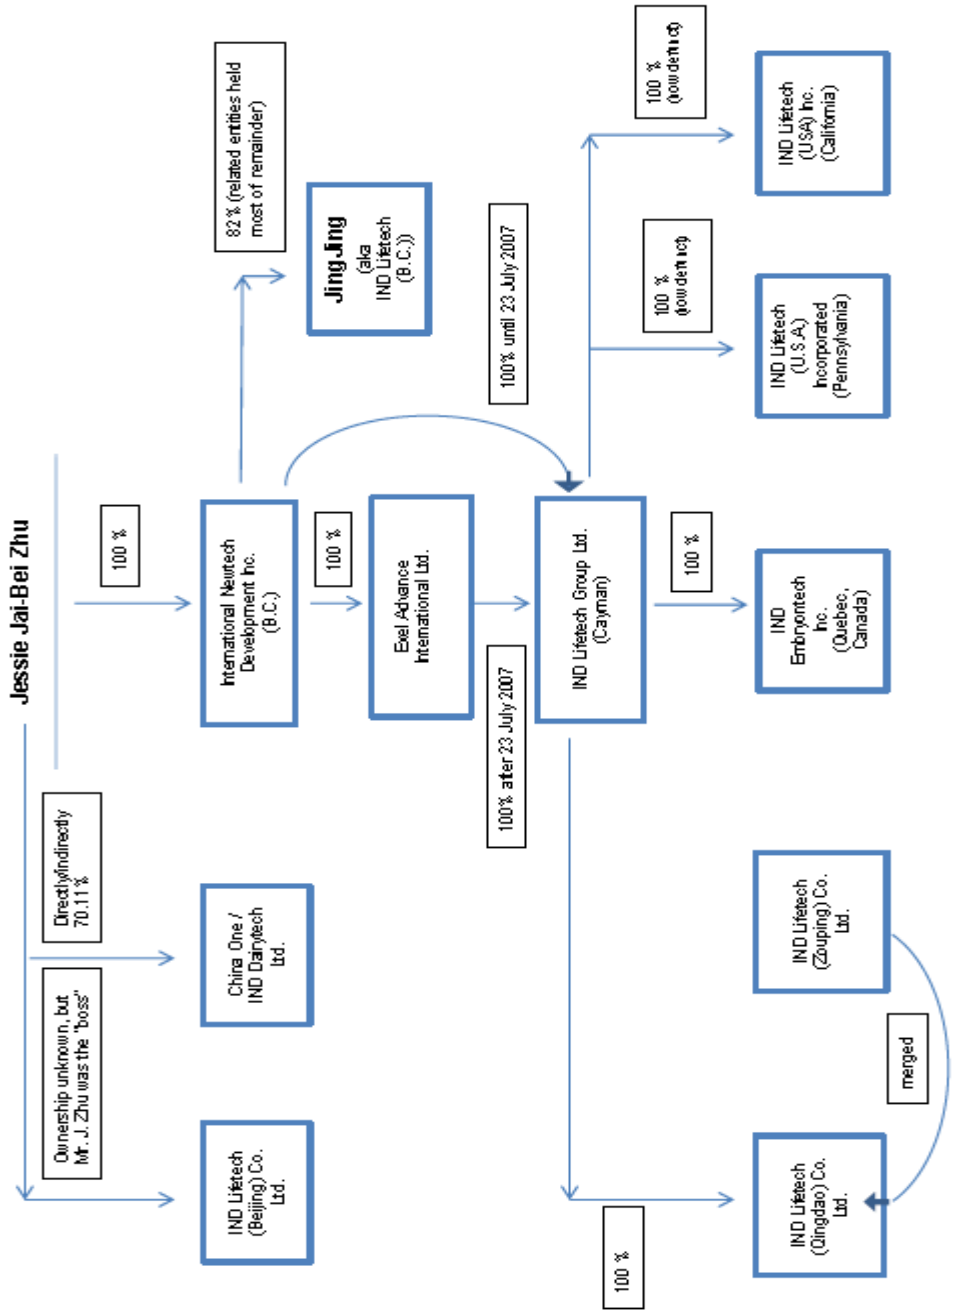
I Agree:

"The Honourable Madam Justice D. Smith"

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

SCHEDULE 1

Corporate Chart



2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

SCHEDULE II

(Part of Order after Trial of the Supreme Court of British Columbia):

Mandatory and Prohibitory Injunction

12. The plaintiff is entitled to a prohibitory injunction to protect the plaintiff's Confidential Information including all Improvements;

13. The plaintiff is also entitled to a mandatory injunction to deliver up the Confidential Information and Improvements made possible by or because of access to the plaintiff's technology;

14. In this Order, the term "Confidential Information" has the meaning set out in Appendix "A" attached hereto;

15. The defendants JingJing, Jesse Jia-Bei Zhu, Selen Zhou, Tang Jin, and Shu Xi Wang and each of them (including by themselves, or by their directors, officers, agents, employees, servants, affiliates, joint venturers, successors, assigns, subsidiaries or related companies, and all those over whom they exercise control, directly or indirectly) are restrained from using the Confidential Information, for any purpose or to any extent, and are restrained from communicating, transferring, distributing, selling, publishing, leasing, licensing or in any other way or by any other means disclosing the Confidential Information to any person or for any purpose; and

16. Within 14 days from the date of this order, namely on or before March 16, 2012, the defendants JingJing, Jesse Jia-Bei Zhu, Selen Zhou, Tang Jin, and Shu Xi Wang and each of them, shall deliver up to the plaintiff or its designate any and all Confidential Information in their possession, power or control.

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

Appendix "A"

to the Order After Trial of the Supreme Court of British Columbia

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

In this Order After Trial "Confidential Information" means:

(a) The following components of the Dako SX Mo-Flo Cytometer, including their configuration individually and in relation to each other and other components of the cytometer:

(i) the PMT (photomultiplier tube) controller;

(ii) the nozzle assembly;

(iii) the beam-shaping optics;

(iv) the detector system;

(v) laser beam steering towers, stages and optics;

(vi) the Summit Workstation hardware and Summit software with Cytrack;

(vii) the pulsed laser as configured for the SX cytometer;

(viii) the illumination chamber;

(ix) the front door rail;

(x) the strobe assembly; and

(xi) the pinhole strip;

(b) XY's protocols, as set out in document no. XY015125-175, entitled "XY, Inc. Protocols - Confidential - September 2005" and document no. XY016423-502, entitled "XY, Inc. Protocols - Confidential - March 2006";

(c) The technical data and processes contained in XY's report entitled "Confidential Information for the Purpose of Evaluating a MoFlo SX Sperm Sorting Facility in Canada", document no. XY001229-001237;

(d) All other information and techniques imparted from XY during training or otherwise to any of the defendants and their employees relating to the use and operation of SX cytometers;

(e) Improvements to the Confidential Information made by the defendants, including but not limited to all research and development regarding the use of sexed semen by any of the defendants internally or with the assistance of third parties such as,

but not limited to, Abbotsford Veterinary Clinic;

and where:

(i) Improvements means namely all know-how, processes, operations, methods, masks, codes, programs, designs, copyrights, patents, patent applications, or other intellectual property rights or other information created, obtained, or developed by either XY or any licensee of XY or JingJing whether through their own efforts or those of any independent contractor, employee, affiliate, or subsidiary, or directly or indirectly with any third party, based upon or derived from XY's Technology, in whole or in part;

(ii) XY's Technology means any and all Proprietary Rights or confidential information, trade secrets, know-how, technical data, masks, code, programs, designs, processes, methods, operations, innovations or inventions, whether or not patented, and any patents, patent applications, copyrights, or other intellectual property of any kind that XY, now or hereafter, owns, controls, licenses, or has an interest in;

(iii) Proprietary Rights with respect to XY's Technology means the collection of all Patent Rights, Trademark Rights, Trade Secret Rights, and Copyright Rights, or other rights which are or may be asserted as protectable under the laws of the United States or the laws of any foreign county;

(iv) Patent Rights with respect to XY's Technology means all rights which are or may be asserted as protectable by license or under the patent laws of the United States or the patent laws, or similar laws, of any foreign country or region, including, but not limited to, any patent applications or grants of patent along with any division, substitution, continuation, continuation-in-part, continued prosecution, or other patent application(s) thereof filed in the United States, under international treaty or agreement, or in any foreign country or region, and all patents, utility models, inventor's certificates, or other similar rights which may be granted thereon and any reissues or extensions thereof, and specifically includes, but is not limited to, those patent rights to United States Patent No. 5,135,759 pursuant to the license agreement with the United States Department of Agriculture, Agricultural Research Service ("USDA License") subject to the reservation of rights therein, including reservation by the Agricultural Research Service of an irrevocable, nonexclusive, nontransferable, royalty-free, license to practice the licensed patent throughout the world by or on behalf of the United States Government and on behalf of any foreign government pursuant to any existing or future treaty or agreement to which the United States is a signatory, and the right to engage in research, either alone or with third parties, with respect to the claimed inventions;

(v) Trademark Rights with respect to XY's Technology means all rights,

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

whether registered or not, which are or may be asserted as protectable by license or under trademark, unfair competition, trade dress, anti-dilution, or similar laws of the United States, or any state, or any foreign country or region;

(vi) Trade Secret Rights with respect to XY's Technology means all trade secrets, confidential information, and know-how which are or may be asserted as protectable by license or under the trade secret, confidentiality, or unfair competition laws of any state, or under similar laws of any foreign country or region;

(vii) Copyright Rights with respect to XY's Technology means all rights, whether registered or not, which are or may be asserted as protectable under the copyright laws of the United States or the copyright laws of any foreign country.

(f) Specifically including but not limited to the research and development of the defendants within the Field of Use and outside the Field of Use with respect to in vivo embryos and any other matters using sexed semen:

(i) (Field of Use means the collection and preparation of cattle semen, the separation of spermatozoa in such cattle semen into sex-selected subpopulations of cattle spermatozoa based upon the presence of an X- chromosome or a Y-chromosome, use of such sex-selected subpopulations of cattle spermatozoa for in-vitro fertilization of cattle oocytes, the production of sex-selected cattle embryos utilizing in-vitro fertilization, cryogenic storage of such cattle semen, such sex-selected subpopulations of cattle spermatozoa, and such sex selected cattle embryos produced utilizing in-vitro fertilization)

2013 BCCA 352 (CanLII)

In the Court of Appeal of Alberta

Citation: L.K. Oil & Gas Ltd. v. Canalands Energy Corporation, 1989 ABCA 153

Date: 19890629
Docket: 19510
Registry: Calgary

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

Between:

L.K. Oil & Gas Ltd. and XL Food Systems Ltd.

Plaintiffs
(Respondents)

- and -

Canalands Energy Corporation

Defendant
(Appellant)

And Between:

Canalands Energy Corporation

Plaintiff by Counterclaim
(Appellant)

- and -

L.K. Oil & Gas Ltd.

Defendant by Counterclaim
(Respondent)

The Court:

The Honourable Mr. Justice Lieberman
The Honourable Mr. Justice Harradence
The Honourable Mr. Justice Côté

Reasons for Judgment of The Honourable Mr. Justice Harradence

Reasons for Judgment of The Honourable Mr. Justice Côté
Concurred in by The Honourable Mr. Justice Lieberman

APPEAL FROM THE JUDGMENT OF THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE MASON OF THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH OF ALBERTA DATED THE 14th DAY OF MAY, 1987

COUNSEL:

R.K. Laing, Esq., for the Appellant

D.B. Reesor, Esq., for the Respondents

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT OF THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE HARRADENCE

[1] The issue in this appeal is whether a representation made by the Respondent to the Appellant for the purposes of inducing the Appellant to participate in an oil and gas venture is an actionable misrepresentation for which rescission of the agreement or, alternatively, damages for negligent misrepresentation, is available.

[2] In early 1981 Thetis Energy Corporation (Thetis) put together an oil and gas exploration program called PT81. This consisted of 44 wells to be drilled in the Sooner Trend area of Northwest Oklahoma. Thetis published literature for prospective participants which included geological details, production data for previously drilled wells in the area and analyses of projected production and profitability. The program was promoted by Mr. John Rudolf who was known and trusted by Mr. Ellard, the president of the Respondent, L.K. Oil and Gas Ltd. (L.K.).

[3] L.K. acquired a 6.5% interest in the program and included this, along with other U.S. lands and Canadian lands, in an oil and gas exploration program which it was promoting. Participation in both the U.S. and Canadian portions was required in order to participate in the program. The Appellant, Canalands Energy Corporation (Canalands), entered into a joint venture agreement to participate in the L.K. program.

[4] L.K. produced its own economic analysis of the Sooner Trend play based on the figures supplied by Thetis. It supplied Canalands with both the Thetis economic evaluation and its own reworked economic evaluation. In addition, L.K. wrote a letter to Canalands dated July 14, 1981 laying out a proposal for Canalands to participate in the program. The letter contained the following statement to describe the Sooner Trend program:

> "A forty-four well program in which L.K. has a 6.5% interest, purchased in Thetis Energy's .70 NRI leases. Effective July 3, 1981, thirteen wells are on production, nine wells are being completed or production tested and four wells are drilling. There has not been an abandonment to date and results appear to be better than historical averages used on entering the program. Cash flow of $600,000.00 annually is anticipated for L.K.'s interest. (emphasis added)"

[5] This is the letter which the Appellant claims constitutes an actionable misrepresentation, entitling it to relief.

[6] L.K. based the underlined portion of its July 14 letter on information it had received from Mr. Rudolf of Thetis and had no cause to doubt its truthfulness. It was admitted that these comments were intended to induce Canalands to enter the program.

[7] On receipt of the July 14 letter, Canalands asked L.K. for current production information and was told by L.K. that it did not have any but that Thetis could provide further information. Thetis refused Canalands' request for information on the basis that it was not a participant in the Thetis scheme. Thus Canalands had no access to production information.

[8] Canalands prepared its own analysis of the data provided by Thetis making adjustments to certain unknown variables which it considered to be more realistic. The economic evaluation showed that the overall program was moderately attractive. It should also be noted that Mr. McGregor, president of Canalands, and Mr. Ellard, president of L.K., were known to each other and were both professional engineers with considerable experience in the oil and gas industry.

[9] L.K. received current production information from the Sooner Trend program (Sable documents). The date of receipt is uncertain since, although the documents are date stamped, it is not known whose stamp is on the documents. The evidence of Mr. Ellard was that the documents were received by L.K. by the end of August although the Appellant says they were received by L.K. as early as July 8-16. These production figures required analysis to determine if the historical averages were being exceeded as the July letter indicated. L.K. had no one on staff capable of this analysis and the analysis was not done. Had the analysis been carried out, it would have revealed that expected production was not being attained.

[10] In September, L.K. made a rough calculation to determine the profitability of the Sooner Trend program and found that production was not meeting expectations.

[11] On September 4, Clarion, who was a 25% participant in the Sooner Trend program, decided not to participate in the program further because it was no longer economically practicable. In a September 22 meeting between representatives of L.K. and Canalands, L.K. informed Canalands of Clarion's withdrawal from the program and the reasons given by

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

Clarion for its withdrawal. However, Mr. Ellard of L.K. told Mr. McGregor of Canalands that the real reason Clarion was withdrawing was because Clarion was in financial difficulty.

[12] On September 15, L.K. sent a copy of the joint venture agreement to Canalands. Acceptance was to be effected by signing the back page of the agreement and returning it to L.K. A CAPL operating agreement was also attached to the agreement.

[13] On October 5, 1981 a meeting of participants in the Sooner Trend program was held. It was agreed that the results were not as favourable as expected and that the program would be terminated at 33 wells.

[14] Thetis prepared a revised economic evaluation, dated August 31, which showed production was not reaching expectations. This was received by L.K. some time after October 9, 1981 and made known to Canalands in late November 1981.

[15] On October 23, Canalands returned the signed agreement and forwarded the cheque required on acceptance as per the terms of the agreement. The signed CAPL agreement was also returned at this time.

[16] By November, Canalands was aware that historical averages were not being met. In December 1981 and early 1982, Canalands who had initially wished to participate in only the Canadian portion, asked to withdraw from the U.S. portion of the program. Negotiations as to terms took place but no agreement was reached and negotiations failed.

[17] Canalands failed to make payments with respect to the U.S. portion of the program and accordingly in January 1983 L.K. issued a Statement of Claim to recover monies due. In September 1983, during examinations for discovery, Canalands learned that L.K. had received production information prior to entering into the agreement with Canalands. It made no further payments under the agreement, althouth it continued to make certain elections, was credited with production revenues, received government grants and executed assignment and novation agreements.

[18] In September 1985, Canalands informed L.K. that it intended to amend its pleadings to plead misrepresentation and claim rescission. The amendment was made in February 1986. The final version of the Statement of Defence alleged breach of contract due to the misrepresentations or failure to manage the program properly. The Counterclaim claimed damages for deceit or, alternatively, rescission of the contract due to fraud or innocent misrepresentation. At trial, the allegation of fraud was dropped and replaced by negligence.

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

[19] The Trial Judge held that the contract was made at the meeting between Canalands and L.K. on September 22. With regard to the Counterclaim, he found that there had been no misrepresentation, that the representations were not material and were not relied on by the Defendant in entering into the contract. On the question of breach of contract, he found no misrepresentation constituting a fundamental breach and no improper management of the program.

[20] The Appellant's grounds of appeal are:

> "1. Whether the learned trial Judge erred in finding that the statements made in the July 14, 1981 letter were not actionable misrepresentations which entitled the Appellant to rescission of the joint venture agreement and to have returned to it its investment plus interest, or in the alternative entitled it to damages.
>
> 2. Whether the learned trial Judge erred in finding that the joint venture agreement was made as a result of the September 22, 1981 meeting in Toronto rather than on October 23, 1981 as asserted by the Appellant."

1. Whether the Representations in the July 14, 1981 Letter Were Actionable Misrepresentation

(a) Rescission

[21] The Trial Judge found that the Respondents did not misrepresent the status of the Sooner Trend play in the representations made in the July 14 letter. The Appellant argues that this was an error since L.K. had a duty to inform Canalands when it became apparent that historical averages would not be exceeded and that anticipated cash flow would not be achieved. Whilst it is not necessary to decide this point, and I expressly refrain from doing so, I make the following comments with respect to the duty to inform in this situation.

[22] The existence of a duty to inform in some situations is shown by With v. O'Flanagan [1936] Ch. 575 (C.A.). There, a medical practice was being sold and the purchaser was told that takings were L2000 p.a. However, during the course of the negotiations, as a result of the vendor's illness, the practice was looked after by two locum tenentes and the takings were drastically reduced. The purchaser was aware of the fact that one of the locum tenentes had been employed but was told that he was handling the practice efficiently. The contract was rescinded because of the misrepresentation. Lord Wright, M.R. at p. 583 adopted the following from Traill v. Baring 4 De. G. J. & S. 319, 329:

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

> "I take it to be quite clear, that if a person makes a representation by which he induces another to take a particular course, and the circumstances are afterwards altered to the knowledge of the party making the representation, but not to the knowledge of the party to whom the representation is made, and are so altered that the alteration of the circumstances may affect the course of conduct which may be pursued by the party to whom the representation is made, it is the imperative duty of the party who has made the representation to communicate to the party to whom the representation has been made the alteration of those circumstances; and that this Court will not hold the party to whom the representation has been made bound unless such a communication has been made."

[23] The present case differs from With, supra, in that L.K. was unaware of the inaccuracy of its July 14 statement as it did not analyze the data received. L.K. relied on Mr. Rudolf of Thetis for their statements in the July 14 letter and had no reason to doubt his assertions with respect to profitability of the Sooner Trend. Did L.K. have a duty to analyze the data it had received? Although I would have otherwise found no duty to analyze the data it had received, on September 4 Clarion decided that the Sooner Trend program was not economically viable and withdrew from the program. Clarion's withdrawal, in my opinion, put L.K. on notice that circumstances may have changed and placed a duty on L.K. to analyze the data to confirm or disprove Mr. Rudolf's statements.

[24] Whether or not there was a duty to inform, and therefore a misrepresentation, not all misrepresentations give rise to relief. Two requirements of actionable misrepresentation are that the representation be material, and that it induced the contract by the representee's reliance on the representation. The Trial Judge held that the representation was not material, and that it did not induce Canalands to enter into the contract. The Appellant argues that this was an error.

[25] In order to be material, the statement must be of such a nature that it would be likely to induce a person to enter into a contract. Thus, statements relating to trivial or irrelevant matters cannot be material. However, even if the Appellant is correct that the statement was material, the Appellant must still show that the statement induced it to enter into the contract. It is to the question of reliance which I now turn.

[26] The necessity of proving reliance is noted in Cheshire, Fifoot & Furmston's Law of Contract (Butterworths, 11th Ed., 1986) at p. 262. The learned authors say:

> "A representation does not render a contract voidable unless it was intended to cause and has in fact caused the representee to make the contract. It must have produced a misunderstanding in his mind, and that misunderstanding must have been one of the reasons which induced him to make the contract. A false statement, whether innocent or fraudulent does not per se give rise to a cause of action."

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

This statement of law is confirmed by Holt Renfrew & Co. Ltd. v. Henry Singer Ltd. et al. [1982] 4 W.W.R. 481 (Alta. C.A.) where the question of fraudulent misrepresentation arose. At p. 500-501, Moir, J.A. said:

"As I understand the reasons of my brother McDermid, he finds actual fraud based upon the statement made in the first letter passing between Pekarsky and Dickson, wherein Pekarsky said the existing lease may not be a detriment to the sale. He goes on to find that, when this was no longer true, Pekarsky had a duty to Dickson to advise him of the change in circumstances.

I do not quarrel with the authorities quoted by McDermid J.A. in reaching his conclusion. They are undoubtedly a correct statement of the law as far as they go. However, it is perfectly clear that, before representation is actionable, it must be relied upon and have at least induced the contract in part. This is clear from the statement of Cote, Introduction to the Law of Contract, quoted in the reasons. In the first sentence quoted from that book at p. 91 we find the following:

'Even a statement which is truthful when made may become fraudulent if the facts change to the knowledge of the utterer, and then he allows the other party to go ahead and rely on it.' (The italics are mine.)

A similar statement of the law appears in Chitty on Contracts, 23rd ed., vol. 1 at p. 128. The learned author, however, goes on at p. 131 to say:

'It is essential if the representation is to have legal effect that it should have operated on the mind of the representee and the burden of proving this lies on the representee himself.'

Similar statements can be found in 17 C.J.S. 920 and in Kerr on Fraud and Mistake, 7th ed. (1952), pp. 52, 53. The learned authors appear to be unanimous that it is absolutely essential to prove that the statement was relied upon."

At p. 503 he summed up his position:

"To conclude, I am of opinion that, before representation, which was true when made but which became untrue later, can be relied upon, the representee must establish that he acted upon or relied upon that representation in entering into the contract."

[27] The Appellant argues that where a material representation is made with the intention to induce a person to enter into a contract and that person does enter into it, an inference should be drawn that he was induced to do so by the statement. In its written argument, the Appellant put the argument this way:

"… the inference that a material representation induces a representee to enter into a contract and the inference that a representation intended to induce the representee to enter into an agreement (which by the testimony of Mr. Ellard himself was clearly the > case here) does in fact induce him, would have led him [the Trial Judge] to the inescapable conclusion that the Appellant was in fact induced by the Respondent's representations to enter into the contract."

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

>
> [Emphasis added]

I cannot agree with this argument, as it is not supported by the authorities.

[28] In Redgrave v. Hurd (1881) 20 Ch. D. 1 (C.A.), Jessel, M.R. made the following statement at p. 21:

> "If it is a material representation calculated to induce him to enter into the contract, it is an inference of law that he was induced by the representation to enter into it, and in order to take away his title to be relieved from the contract on the ground that the representation was untrue, it must be shewn either that he had knowledge of the facts contrary to the representation, or that he stated in terms, or shewed clearly by his conduct, that he did not rely on the representation."

[29] In Smith v. Chadwick (1884) 9 App. Cases 187 (H.L.) this statement was considered by the House of Lords and found to be incorrect. At p. 196, Lord Blackburn said:

> "I think that if it is proved that the defendants with a view to induce the plaintiff to enter into a contract made a statement to the plaintiff of such a nature as would be likely to induce a person to enter into a contract, and it is proved that the plaintiff did enter into the contract, it is a fair inference of fact that he was induced to do so by the statement. In Redgrave v. Hurd, the late Master of the Rolls is reported to have said it was an inference of law. If he really meant this he retracts it in his observations in the present case. I think it not possible to maintain that it is an inference of law. Its weight as evidence must greatly depend upon the degree to which the action of the plaintiff was likely, and on the absence of all other grounds on which the plaintiff might act."

[30] In Smith v. Land and House Property Corporation (1884) 28 Ch. D. 7, Bowen, L.J. also voiced his disagreement with the statements made by Jessel, M.R. in Redgrave v. Hurd. Thus, the position following these cases was that an inference of fact that the representee was induced to enter into a contract, could be drawn where a material representation which was intended to so induce him was made.

[31] In Bevan v. Anderson and Peace River Sand and Gravel Co. Ltd. (1957) 12 D.L.R. (2d) 69, at p. 74, Riley, J. referred to the above inference as an inference of law but, with respect, I do not think that this is an accurate statement. It is noteworthy that Riley, J. made no mention of Smith v. Chadwick or Smith v. Land and House Property in his decision. In my view, the approach taken by Canadian courts is to consider all of the relevant facts of a case in order to decide whether a statement was relied upon. Where nothing else but the representation could have induced the contract, then a logical inference is that the representation did in fact induce the contract. Where other factors could be operative, the evidence must be considered to determine which factors were relied upon. Lord Blackburn noted in Smith v. Chadwick, the weight of the inference as evidence must "greatly depend upon the degree to which the action of the plaintiff was likely, and on the absence of all other grounds on which the plaintiff might act".

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

[32] The question of reliance on fraudulent misrepresentation was considered in Holt Renfrew & Co. Ltd. v. Henry Singer et al. (supra). In that case, the lawyer for the purchaser of a building indicated that a lease to an existing tenant would not be a "deterrent" to the purchaser. The vendor agreed to sell the property, but the sale was subject only to the encumbrances which were registered. The lease had not been registered and the purchaser claimed to take title free and clear of the lease. The issue was whether the purchaser fraudulently misrepresented that it would take subject to the lease. McDermid, J.A. (in dissent) found that there was actionable misrepresentation since the only reason for the vendor to believe that the lease would be accepted was the statement that it was not a deterrent. However, Moir, J.A. (concurred in by Kerans, J.A. and Stevenson, J.A.) found that there had been no reliance. At p. 505, Moir, J.A. said:

> "Nowhere in the evidence am I able to find that Dickson said that he recalled the letter of 4th May and that he relied upon it when he was determining what to do with the offer. Surely that is the test. The court, in the absence of evidence, should not find that Dickson was misled."

No mention of an inference of either law or fact was made by any of the justices in that case.

[33] The Supreme Court of Canada in Parna v. G & S Properties Ltd. [1971] S.C.R. 306 also considered the issue of reliance in a case where fraudulent misrepresentation was alleged. There, a purchaser of an apartment building was given estimates of the receipts and disbursements for the property. They were inaccurate and the purchaser sought damages on the basis of these misrepresentations. He argued that based on the figures given to him he had calculated a net return of 9.64% and this had induced him to buy the property. The Court noted the purchaser was a shrewd and experienced apartment house operator who knew the figures given to him were estimates and who also knew that the figures were low. At p. 319, Spence, J. said:

> "I have come to the conclusion that the evidence given by the appellant Parna himself and by the solicitor who acted for him in the purchase proves that the appellant Parna was not misled in any way by the representations even if they had been false to the > knowledge of the respondents, but that a shrewd and intelligent apartment house operator figured that he could pay $251,000 for the property in question and obtain a satisfactory percentage of net profit."

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

As in Holt Renfrew, no mention of an inference of law or fact was made.

[34] The Supreme Court of Canada also considered the question of negligent misrepresentation in Cana Construction Co. Ltd. v. The Queen, (supra), and in V.K. Mason Construction v. Bank of Nova Scotia [1985] 1 S.C.R. 271. In both of these cases reliance was found but the Court did not refer to an inference of fact or law due to the materiality of the statement. In Cana Construction a tenderer, of necessity had to rely on figures given to it by the Crown in arriving at the tender price. No other possible source was available and the tender price could not be calculated without taking this figure into account. In V.K. Mason Construction a bank told a construction company that they would provide the owner with finance for construction. The Court accepted the trial judge's finding that there had been reliance. At trial (reported at 10 B.L.R. 77), O'Leary, J. based his finding of reliance on the fact that the contractor had refused to enter into a contract until it received confirmation that the owner would have sufficient funds to pay for the construction. On receipt of the bank's letter confirming this, the contractor entered into the contract. Thus, in these cases reliance was found where nothing else could have been relied on or where the circumstances showed it was relied upon.

[35] Several other cases can be cited where the issue of reliance upon a representation was decided without resort to any inference to be drawn from the materiality of the statement. See, for example Blair v. Merrill Lynch Canada Inc. and Brookes (1987) 80 A.R. 65 (Q.B.); Daeyoo Enterprise Co. Ltd. v. Long et al. (1986) 75 A.R. 47 (Q.B.); Eisenschiml v. Western Drilling Co. Ltd. [1943] 1 W.W.R. 605 (Alta. S.C. App. Div.); Kober v. McArthur (1984) 36 Alta. L.R. (2d) 152 (Q.B.).

[36] In summary, the case law does not support the Appellant's argument that if the Trial Judge had found the statements to be material, he would necessarily have found them to have been relied on. The question of reliance is a question of fact to be inferred from all of the circumstances of the case and all of the evidence adduced at trial.

[37] It should be emphasized that the finding of reliance is a finding of fact. In Smith v. Land and House Property Corporation (supra), Bowen, L.J. said at p. 15:

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

"Was there then a misrepresentation of a specific fact? This partly depends on the question, whether on the construction of the particulars, what they say as to Fleck is a representation of a specific fact, a question which the Court of Appeal has the same means of deciding as the Judge in the Court below. Whether the purchasers relied upon it is a question of fact which the Judge of the Court below had better means of deciding than we have, for he saw and heard the witnesses."

In the same case, Fry, L.J. said (p. 17):

"…on the evidence as read before us I should have felt inclined to come to the conclusion that the contract was not induced by that representation; but as Mr. Justice Denman, who saw and heard Alderman Knight, was satisfied with his evidence, I cannot give my voice for reversing his decision."

[38] A more general discussion of an appellate court's jurisdiction to overturn findings of fact made at trial is found in Smith v. Chadwick (supra). Lord Blackburn said at p. 194:

"The Court of Appeal ought to give great weight, but not undue weight, to the opinion of the judge who tried the cause, and saw the witnesses and their demeanour. That gives him considerable advantages over those who only draw their information from perusing the notes. But still, though the Court of Appeal ought not lightly to find against the opinion of the judge who tried the cause, I think that the Court of Appeal, if convinced that the inference in favour of the plaintiff ought not to have been drawn from the evidence, should find the verdict the other way."

[39] The Supreme Court of Canada in Lensen v. Lensen [1987] 2 S.C.R. 672, 23 C.P.C. (2d) 33 also considered an appellate court's jurisdiction to overturn findings of fact made at trial. At p. 43 (C.P.C.), Dickson, C.J.C. said:

"A similar justification for limiting the scope of appellate review of findings of fact made in the first instance was offered by Lamer J. in Beaudoin-Daigneault v. Richard, [1984] 1 S.C.R. 2 at pp. 8-9, 37 R.F.L. (2d) 225, 51 N.R. 288 (S.C.C.):

'So far as the rules for intervention by a first court of appeal in the findings of fact of a trial judge are concerned, in my opinion, whatever the uncertainty of the rule regarding some of our decisions in recent years … the rule is clear with regard to findings based on the credibility of witnesses: an appellate court should not intervene unless it is certain that its difference of opinion with the trial judge is the result of an error by the latter. As he had the benefit of seeing and hearing the witnesses, such certainty will only be possible if the appellate court can identify the reason for this difference of opinion, in order to be certain that it results from an error and not from his privileged position as a trier of fact. If the appellate court cannot thus identify the critical error it must refrain from interfering, unless of course the finding of fact cannot be attributed to this advantage enjoyed by the trial judge, because nothing could have justified the judge's conclusion whatever he saw or heard; this latter category will be identified by the unreasonableness of the trial judge's finding….'

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

> It is a well-established principle that findings of fact made at trial based on the credibility of witnesses are not to be reversed on appeal unless it can be established that the trial Judge made some 'palpable and overriding error which affected his assessment of the facts'."

[40] The Appellant argues that in the present case the Trial Judge was in no better position than this Court. Tanner v. Norys (1980) 21 A.R. 372 at p. 392 was cited in support. In that case, this Court adopted the words of the Supreme Court of Canada in Workmen's Compensation Board v. Greer (1974) 1 N.R. 99 at p. 108-109:

> "I appreciate that this conclusion differs from that reached by the trial judge and two of the three judges sitting in the Appeal Division, but no question arises as to the veracity of the witnesses and the judgment of the majority of the Appeal Division is based on inferences drawn from conflicting medical opinion so that this is a case which appears to me to be governed by the language used by Lord Halsbury in Montgomery & Co. Ltd. v. Wallace-James, [1904] A.C. 73, at page 75, which was affirmed by the Privy Council in Dominion Trust Co. v. New York Life Insurance Co., [1919] A.C. 254, at page 257. Lord Halsbury said in part:
>
> > ' … where no question arises as to truthfulness, and where the question is as to the proper inferences to be drawn from truthful evidence, then the original tribunal is in no better position to decide than the judges of the Appellate Court.' "

[41] However, in the case on appeal, the Trial Judge heard the evidence with regard to the circumstances in which this agreement was made and heard witnesses for the Appellant testify that it relied on the representations in the July 14 letter. The learned Trial Judge unequivocally stated that the representations were not relied upon by the Appellant. Thus, questions of credibility are involved in this case and I do not find that the Trial Judge was mistaken such that I should overturn his findings.

[42] On the facts of this case, there are other factors which could have induced Canalands to enter into the contract. In a report from Mr. McGregor in which he recommended Canalands participate in the program, he said:

> "I look on the L.K. farmout proposal as an ideal investment opportunity for Canalands. It would entail participation with a reputable firm with quality people who, I believe, have the expertise and experience required to enhance prospects for success in their oil and gas ventures. (L.K. has today taken on staff Mr. Heinz DeVries, another geologist from Norcen, whose specialty is Southern Alberta geology.)
>
> The farmout program involves a diversified blend of geographic areas (Alberta, Oklahoma, Montana, and East Coast offshore), exploratory and semi-proven properties and, projects that will yield early investment returns, along with longer term frontier ventures."

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

[43] Canalands analyzed the historical data given to it by L.K. and Thetis and found that the program was economically attractive. Indeed, in this analysis, Mr. Neary, in selecting figures from the Thetis data, used some figures taken from historical data over the last nine years rather than the newer data. In evidence, he explained this as follows:

> "I guess what it boiled down to, we had more confidence on their historical data from 180 wells over nine years than we did on 40 wells over two and a half years."

[44] In this type of program, which was in the early stages of drilling at the time that the representations were made, it is reasonable to conclude that Canalands relied on its own analysis of the historical averages data and on the reputation of L.K. and not on L.K.'s representations. The Trial Judge who saw and heard the witnesses found no reliance and, whilst I might have come to a different conclusion, his finding is supported by evidence and I cannot overturn his finding.

[45] As I have found no reliance, then Canalands cannot succeed in its claim for rescission for misrepresentation.

Damages

[46] The law with respect to liability for damages for negligent misrepresentation was stated by Lord Denning, M.R. in Esso Petroleum Co. Ltd. v. Mardon [1976] 1 Q.B. 801 (C.A.) as follows (p. 820):

> "It seems to me that Hedley Byrne & Co. Ltd. v. Heller & Partners Ltd. [1964] A.C. 465, properly understood, covers this particular proposition: if a man, who has or professes to have special knowledge or skill, makes a representation by virtue thereof to another -be it advice, information or opinion - with the intention of inducing him to enter into a contract with him, he is under a duty to use reasonable care to see that the representation is correct, and that the advice, information or opinion is reliable. If he negligently gives unsound advice or misleading information or expresses an erroneous opinion, and thereby induces the other side to enter into a contract with him, he is liable in damages."
>
> [Emphasis added]

[47] Since inducement is a necessary element in negligent misrepresentation, the Appellant's claim for damages must also fail.

2. The Date of the Agreement

[48] The date the agreement between the parties was entered into is a question of fact. The Trial Judge concluded that the contract was made on September 22, 1981 and there was evidence to support that conclusion. Whilst again I might not have come to the same conclusion, I cannot interfere with his finding.

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

Conclusion

[49] Any misrepresentation which might have occurred in the July 14 letter is not actionable since the representations did not induce Canalands to enter into the contract. The representations do not therefore give rise to rescission or damages. The first ground of appeal therefore fails.

[50] The finding of the Trial Judge that the agreement was concluded on September 22, 1981 was supported by the evidence and therefore the second ground of appeal also fails.

[51] The appeal is dismissed with costs.

DATED at Calgary, Alberta
this 29th day of June 1989.

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT OF THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE COTÉ

[52] I do not agree that any duty to analyze the data arose here, but fortunately that point does not affect the result. I have no inclination to doubt the trial judge's finding of the contract date. In all other respects, I concur in the judgment of Mr. Justice Harradence.

DATED at CALGARY, Alberta
this 29th day of June,
A.D. 1989

1989 ABCA 153 (CanLII)

CITATION: Royal Bank of Canada v. Hejna, 2013 ONSC 1719
NEWMARKET COURT FILE NO.: CV-07-086210-00
DATE: 20130321
CORRIGENDA: 20130826

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

ONTARIO

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE

BETWEEN:
ROYAL BANK OF CANADA	Plaintiff	M. Greenglass for the Plaintiff/moving party
– and –
ROLAND HEJNA	Defendant	R. Klotz for the Defendant/responding party
		HEARD: December 21, 2012

The text of the original decision has been corrected with text of corrigendum (released August 26, 2013) appended.

REASONS FOR DECISION

HEALEY J.

Nature of the Motion

[1] This is a motion by the Royal Bank of Canada ("RBC") pursuant to Rule 20 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194, seeking an order for summary judgment in the sum of $6,373,897.53, calculated as of January 22, 2008, with such judgment to be declared to be a judgment in fraud within the meaning of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-5. In the alternative, RBC moves for judgment in the sum of $989,323.64, calculated as of November 22, 2006.

History of the Proceeding

[2] This proceeding has a lengthy history, having been commenced in October 2007, and accordingly the following outlines only partially the steps taken by each party before reaching the stage where this motion could be argued. The statement of defence was struck for failure to pay costs and default judgment was obtained from Justice Boswell on January 22, 2008. The default judgment was set aside by order of Justice Mulligan dated October 9, 2009. Assignment court for the scheduling of this motion was September 21, 2010. On the day before that appearance, the defendant filed for bankruptcy. By order dated October 25, 2010 the Registrar in Bankruptcy granted leave for RBC to continue to prosecute its claim. The defendant unsuccessfully appealed that decision before Campbell J.. In his reasons, Campbell J. noted that in addition to it being a matter of discretion for the Registrar, there was ample evidence on which the Registrar could find sufficient material prejudice to RBC to justify lifting the stay and lack of equitable grounds to deny it, including the suggested inability of the bankrupt to defend.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

Decision

[3] For the reasons that follow, the motion is granted and RBC shall have judgment against the defendant in the sum of $6,373,897.53, calculated as of January 22, 2008. It is hereby declared that the judgment is a judgment in fraud within the meaning of s.178(1)(e) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

The Evidence

[4] The defendant has not filed an affidavit responding specifically to the motion for summary judgement. He relies on three dated affidavits, the first two sworn October 20 and 22, 2010 for the purposes of his bankruptcy proceeding, and the third sworn August 8, 2011, which was submitted to the Court of Appeal in respect of a motion for security for costs[1]. It is from an affidavit of the defendant sworn January 22, 2008, filed in RBC's consolidated motion record[2], that the following evidence is provided:

[5] On the evidence of the defendant, until November 2006 he was a highly successful entrepreneur presiding over at least a dozen businesses that collectively are referred to as the Hejna Group. The Hejna Group was one of the five largest employers in Muskoka, and had interests in six marinas, boat rentals, cottage rentals, development and construction. The defendant's personal net worth was in excess of $30,000,000 and the companies were not in financial difficulty. He deposed that the combined revenue of the Hejna Group in 2006 was, to the best of his recollection, between $15 and $20 million.

[6] The defendant deposed that he was courted by RBC in order to obtain the business of the Hejna Group. At a dinner meeting held in 2005, his evidence is that banking representatives told him that RBC would allocate between $25 and $30 million in aggregate financing to finance his business operations as well as future business expansions and operations. Shortly thereafter he transferred all of his banking to RBC. His evidence is that RBC provided funding for the operation of the Hejna Group, such that the total financing package with RBC was $9 million in mortgages and lines of credit by the spring of 2006. The majority of his contact was with Wendy Sprung, the senior account manager for the branch at 5001 Yonge Street, and with Rosie Marrone at 200 Bay Street, where private banking was arranged for him. The defendant's evidence is that Ms. Sprung reassured him that RBC would look after all of his financing needs, and that the Bank did not want him to go elsewhere to obtain financing for his ventures. He has deposed that from mid-2005 until the end of November 2006, he was speaking to Ms. Sprung two to three times per week, and that she was intimately familiar with his businesses, his banking needs, and all transactions in his business accounts.

[1] Brief of Affidavits dated July 31, 2012, Tabs 1-3
[2] Consolidated motion record, Vol. 2 of 3, tab 59

[7] In particular, his evidence is that RBC was eager to provide funding for the acquisition of three new marinas in early 2006. He deposed that RBC committed to funding for those marinas, and that, relying on those commitments, he entered into binding contracts to acquire them and waived the financing conditions. His evidence is that Ms. Sprung assured him throughout that there would be no difficulty in obtaining approval for the necessary funding, which would include a mortgage, operating line of credit, and overdraft facilities.

[8] The first of the three marina deals was scheduled to close in March 2006, the next in May 2006 and the last in July 2006. On the day before the first closing, the defendant's evidence is that he was advised by Ms. Sprung that the financing was not ready. The defendant stated that he borrowed hundreds of thousands of dollars from friends and family to close the deal because RBC was delaying the closing of the financing transaction. In his affidavit sworn August 8, 2011, the defendant deposed that on the date of their phone call, Ms. Sprung told him to deposit cheques from one of his businesses into the account of another business, through automatic teller machine ("ATM") deposits, so that RBC could certify the required funds. In the final sentence of paragraph 8 of that same affidavit, the defendant stated "I knew that Wendy monitored all of my accounts at the Bank, so she knew that this was being done". If, as the defendant suggests, Ms. Sprung specifically directed Mr. Hejna to take such a course of action, one is left wondering why this statement as to her knowledge is necessary.

[9] The defendant deposed that he told Ms. Sprung in the spring of 2006 that he needed an additional overdraft to close the marina deals since the promised financing was delayed. He stated that there were probably ten conversations over a period of four or five months, in which he advised Ms. Sprung that he needed additional overdrafts to close the deals and operate the businesses, and once the promised funding came in the overdrafts would be completely eliminated. His evidence is that he explained to Ms. Sprung that he could manage to get all of the deals closed and keep the businesses operating until the promised funding came through, if she allowed the overdrafts. Ms. Sprung allegedly assured him that RBC would support him by allowing those overdrafts to occur. The defendant's evidence is that Ms. Sprung and her staff were aware that he was writing the cheques. Between April and November of 2006, there were hundreds of cheques, at one point 40 to 50 a day representing $4 to 5 million in deposits over the ATM network. Because both the volume of cheques and the amount of the overdrafts were outside of the lending parameters, it is the defendant's evidence that someone in a more senior position than Ms. Sprung would have had to approve their clearance. It is his evidence that although in retrospect this may appear to be akin to cheque kiting, he was not intending to be deceptive. Further, the entire time that these overdraft cheques were being written, no one from RBC called him to say anything was wrong. From his conversations with Ms. Sprung, he believed that RBC was aware of the overdrafts and how they were being created.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[10] In summary, it is the defendant's evidence that he understood, because Ms. Sprung led him to believe, that he was being authorized to make inter-account and inter-company deposits and transfers to make up any shortfall that he had in funding the marina closings, and thereafter the marinas' operational expenses. Further, he says that Ms. Sprung led him to believe that she was aware that the proposed practice would result in overdrafts to the accounts due to the lack of existing funds and credit, and those overdrafts would be addressed once RBC finalized the new credit facilities.

[11] In a subsequent affidavit sworn by the defendant on September 18, 2008[3] in support of a motion to set aside the default judgment obtained in this matter, a different explanation is provided. At paragraph 75, after denying that he defrauded RBC, whether through cheque kiting or otherwise, he deposed that because RBC failed to provide him with certain promised financing in a timely manner, he used existing banking and credit facilities to address arising business commitments. Again, he states that any overdrafts that resulted from this practice were created with the knowledge and authorization of RBC, and it was at all times understood that this practice would cease once he was provided with the credit facilities promised to him and further, that any overdrafts resulting from those activities would be cleared using the new financing.

[12] At paragraph 89 of that affidavit, the defendant deposed that it was Ms. Sprung who advised him that he should cover any shortfall in purchase and operating funding by using the existing RBC banking and credit facilities available to him. His evidence is that she did so knowing that neither he nor the Hejna Group had sufficient funds or credit on account at RBC to cover the cost of the marinas' closings and/or the marinas' commitments. He was advised by Ms. Sprung that any reliance on existing banking and credit facilities would only be for a short time since the promised financing would soon be in place. As a result, he was led by RBC to understand that he was authorized to use his existing banking and credit facilities as a means of short term ad-hoc bridge financing.

[13] At paragraph 91 of that affidavit the defendant states that, acting on Ms. Sprung's authority, beginning in or around March of 2006 he began to rely on existing facilities to fund the marinas' closings and thereafter their operations. In order to maintain a positive bank balance in the various accounts, either he or his employees wrote a number of cheques and deposited them by ATM to effect inter-company transfers between those accounts. The defendant states that the transfer of large sums of money between the various business and personal accounts via ATM deposits was abnormal for those accounts, but at no time did anyone at RBC, prior to November 2006, take issue with this practice.

[3] Consolidated motion record, Vol. 1 of 3, tab 11(d).

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[14] In mid-August 2006, the first marina was given the credit promised, but the defendant states that it was insufficient to address the overdrafts created by both its own closing, as well as the other two. As a result, he continued the practice of relying on inter-account deposits to maintain his businesses until the promised financing for the latter two marinas was put in place.

[15] At the time of the closings of the second two marinas, RBC had yet to deliver on its promises to finance. Again Ms. Sprung urged him to keep his business with RBC. The defendant's evidence is that it was clear to him from his conversations with Ms. Sprung that she was advising him to continue with what he asserts was the authorized practice of making inter-account transfers until the promised credit facilities were put in place.

[16] Even after all of the marinas' closings, the defendant was writing and depositing a large number of cheques on a daily basis to effect inter-account transfers. The defendant asserts that each of those transactions was cleared by Ms. Sprung, or her counterpart who looked after the defendants' personal accounts, Ms. Marrone, or their staff members.

[17] From conversations that the defendant had with Ms. Sprung and Ms. Marrone, he understood that the RBC security department discussed the activity in his personal and corporate accounts with them in the spring, summer and/or fall of 2006. In relation to those inquiries, Ms. Sprung and Ms. Marone both assured him that they had addressed any security concerns that RBC may have had. He understood this to mean that Ms. Sprung and Ms. Marrone had advised RBC security that the activity in his account was authorized.

[18] On November 19, 2006 the defendant received a telephone call from Ms. Sprung and another senior banking employee asking him to come to see them in person the next day. They explained that all of his accounts had been frozen. In actuality, what occurred was that all accounts were immediately coded for deposit only, with ATM access blocked. On meeting with them the next business day, the defendant was introduced to two individuals from RBC security and was confronted with the Bank's concern over his activities. The defendant was advised that he would not be extended any further credit and was asked to find alternative financing to cover his full indebtedness to RBC, including any overdrafts.

[19] In an affidavit sworn October 23 2008, Ms. Sprung has denied any allegation that she, on behalf of RBC, authorized the defendant to commit cheque kiting as a means of interim financing. Ms. Sprung paints a very different picture from that advanced by the defendant. Her evidence is that with respect to various loan requests made by the defendant on behalf of various companies, financial information that was requested in order to allow the loan applications to be processed was never received, despite numerous requests. At all times, the defendant and his controller were aware that RBC could not even consider his request for certain financing ventures because of the lack of financial information provided. Further given the totality of the loan facilities applied for, the amount could only be authorized by a Credit Risk Manager having the authority to approve financing in the requested amount, which was beyond her own authority. She denies that she advised the defendant to cover cash flow shortfalls of one business entity by using loan facilities available and approved for a different business entity. Further, at no time did she authorize or suggest to the defendant that overdrafts be created in order to solve any cash flow shortfalls he was then facing. Her evidence is that the defendant was always aware that no overdraft privileges had been granted in any of the accounts, and in the event that an overdraft of a minor nature occurred she would either call or e-mail the defendant or his controller asking that the overdrafts be eliminated immediately.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[20] Ms. Sprung was cross-examined on this evidence. The defendant has not been able to point the court to evidence generated from that cross-examination that would rebut Ms. Sprung's testimony that there was no reason for her to disbelieve the information that she received from the defendant or his controller, which was that any inter-company transactions were being done in the normal course of inventory buying and selling among the companies. She recalls being contacted by RBC's compliance department on only two occasions about these inter-company transactions, but that after speaking with the defendant and his controller their explanations seemed plausible to her, and she relayed that information to the compliance group.

[21] Although the defendant's counsel frequently emphasized throughout argument his assertion that Ms. Sprung received daily reports, and therefore should have known of any irregular activity in the defendant's accounts, a close reading of her cross-examination transcript reveals that the daily reports only came to Ms. Sprung's attention if there was no money in the account on which a cheque or cheques had been written, and all that she would see is a net result showing a shortfall in any given account. Her evidence is clear that she did not have the means to examine the daily cheque-writing activity carried on by each of the Hejna Group entities within their account and the defendant's personal account.

[22] RBC also relies upon the evidence of James Dickson, who is employed by RBC Corporate Investigation Services ("CIS") as a Senior Manager, Forensic Accounting[4] (the "Dickson affidavit"). In a memo dated June 9, 2007, Mr. Dickson outlined his involvement in the investigation of this matter. It began on November 15, 2006 when CIS was notified of a number of irregular banking transactions involving the defendant's personal account as well as the accounts of the Hejna Group. The irregular activity identified in November 2006 involved millions of dollars in cheques that were drawn upon Hejna Group accounts both at RBC and other financial institutions each business day and deposited via ATMs to other Hejna Group accounts at RBC. In October 2006 alone, in excess of $80 million was deposited to and withdrawn from the Hejna Group accounts at RBC. In tracing this activity, CIS was able to determine that the unusual activity had been continuing and growing between January 2006 and November 16, 2006, [4] Affidavit of James Dickson sworn December 19, 2007, Consolidated Motion Record, Vol. 3 of 3, tab G.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

on which date the restrictions were placed on all accounts. Once RBC understood that the net cumulative unauthorized overdraft was approximately $6 million, it also became clear that these funds were not in any of the RBC accounts. CIS then began a review and analysis of the transaction history of the accounts for 2006 which, as of the date of Mr. Dickson's memo, demonstrated the following characteristics:

(i) the volume of activity in the accounts was not consistent with the seasonal nature of the businesses, and the volume of transactions through the bank accounts was increasing significantly even though business activities would have been substantially wound down for the winter;

(ii) the majority of transactions in most of the Hejna Group accounts represented funds transferred to or from other Hejna Group entities, none of which had a significant external source of funds in comparison to the total funds deposited to the accounts;

(iii) in the period leading up to November 16, 2006, the Hejna Group accounts almost always had a positive balance;

(iv) the majority of payments were by way of cheques, signed by the defendant, which needed to be processed through the clearing system, as opposed to electronic funds transfers that would result in a simultaneous withdrawal and deposit;

(v) an artificial float was created by the foregoing which grew continuously through 2006;

(vi) funds were being transferred between companies that did not have any obvious business relationship during the period in question;

(vii) a total of $89,943,882.31 cycled through the defendant's personal account between January 1 and November 16, 2006; and

(viii) once the restrictions had been placed on the accounts, effectively breaking the cycle of irregular transactions, the RBC accounts were all significantly overdrawn. The defendant's personal account was overdrawn in the amount of $989,323.64 as of November 22, 2006.

[23] What next developed as a result of this meeting was that defendant entered into two forbearance agreements with RBC. The background to these forbearance agreements is set out in an affidavit of Raymond Chang, a Vice-President with RBC[5] (the "Chang affidavit"). RBC's evidence is that the forbearance agreements were an accommodation granted by RBC to facilitate the defendant and the Hejna Group to pursue opportunities to stabilize their financial position and to secure refinancing for payment of the indebtedness. At paragraphs 46 through 48 of the Chang affidavit, RBC explains that as of November 24, 2006, the Hejna companies were in default of various covenants under the pre-forbearance credit facilities. Just as outlined in the Dickson affidavit, RBC had discovered that large numbers of cheques for significant aggregate amounts had been flowing through and between Hejna's personal account and some of the various Hejna Group accounts to cause a dramatic artificial increase in the "float" (the time between the negotiation of the cheque and its clearance at the cheque-writer's bank). The process by which this occurred was that cheques and other forms of transfers were written between the accounts of some of the Hejna companies in a circular fashion, which caused the loan position of the companies to appear to be within the authorized limits, when in fact, the unauthorized overdraft was constantly increasing. When the unauthorized overdraft was discovered by RBC, it was determined that it amounted to approximately $6 million (almost $1 million of which related to Hejna's personal current account) over and beyond the authorized lines of credit of approximately $9.8 million. By constantly making daily large transfers by cheque and other instruments, the unauthorized overdraft was successfully shielded from detection by RBC until mid-November 2006.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[24] The first forbearance agreement was made on November 24, 2006[6]. The defendant was represented by counsel at Himelfarb, Prozanski at the time of its execution. He personally was a party to that agreement and signed on behalf of the various Hejna Group companies who were also parties to the first forbearance agreement. Recital "D" of the first forbearance agreement provides as follows:

> As at the date hereof numerous defaults exist under the Credit Facilities and Security, including, without limitation, with respect to unpermitted excesses of approximately than $6,000,000 (the "Bulge", which together with the Facility Indebtedness and any other debts, liabilities or obligations owing to the Bank now or in the future shall be referred to as the "Indebtedness") over agreed credit limits, resulting from uncovered liabilities arising from cheques written and issued by the Existing Borrowers and/or the Existing Guarantors on accounts maintained by the Existing Borrowers and/or the Existing Guarantors at the Bank. These defaults have not been cured and continue to remain outstanding. (emphasis added)

[25] By virtue of Sections 5, 6 and 7 of the first forbearance agreement, the Hejna companies and the defendant himself: (i) acknowledged and confirmed the existence of defaults

[5] Affidavit of Raymond Chang sworn April 17, 2007, Consolidated Motion Record, Volume 2 of 3, tab 41.
[6] Consolidated Motion Record, Vol. 2 of 3, tab 42

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

under the pre-forbearance credit facilities and that RBC was entitled, without further notice or demand, to enforce its loan security; (ii) consented to the immediate enforcement by RBC of all remedies on the occurrence of an event of default under the forbearance agreement, including the appointment of an interim receiver, receiver or receiver and manager; and (iii) consented to the appointment of Grant Thornton Limited as a consultant to RBC.

[26] The forbearance granted by RBC under the first forbearance agreement was conditional on RBC receiving $1.5 million prior to January 31, 2007. This payment was not made and RBC entered into further negotiations with the defendant in order to negotiate a resolution to the outstanding issues in the banking relationship. As a result, a second forbearance agreement was entered into on February 15, 2007[7]. It included all of the parties to the first forbearance agreement together with certain other Hejna Group corporations controlled by the defendant. Again, included in the recitals to the second forbearance agreement is an acknowledgment that one of the defaults existing under the credit facilities and security included unpermitted excesses of approximately $6 million over agreed credit limits, resulting from uncovered liabilities arising from cheques written and issued by certain of the debtor companies on accounts maintained at RBC.

[27] The debtors defaulted under the second forbearance agreement, which led to RBC making a receivership application. Its application was granted by order of Justice Pepall dated April 20, 2007[8], by which Grant Thornton was appointed as interim receiver of all of the current and future assets of the defendant and the Hejna companies. Significantly, the defendant did not oppose the receivership application and, in fact, consented to the order of Justice Pepall.

[28] In September 2007, RBC sought and obtained written consent from the interim receiver to commence the within action. In its statement of claim RBC seeks a declaration that any judgment granted in the within action is a judgment in fraud within the meaning of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. The claim seeks judgment in the sum of $6,035,010.85 calculated as of November 22, 2006 and prejudgment interest thereafter, or alternatively as against the defendant the sum of $989,323.64 calculated as of November 22, 2006, being the quantum of an overdraft existing in his personal account, with prejudgment interest thereafter.

[29] The defendant does not deny that the above sums are owed to RBC, but denies any fraud or wrongdoing.

The Position of the Defendant

[30] The defendant's position is that first, there is a genuine issue for trial as to whether RBC authorized the transactions involved. Second, the defendant argues that there is a genuine

---

[7] Consolidated Motion Record, Vol. 2 of 3, tab 43
[8] Consolidated Motion Record, Vol. 1 of 3, tab 12

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

issue as to whether the non-action of RBC, even if it did not specifically authorize the transactions, was such to raise in the defendant a bona fide, reasonable belief that RBC was aware of his transactions. Third, the defendant argues that RBC breached the forbearance agreements by taking steps that destroyed his credit rating and prevented him from obtaining new refinancing that would have allowed him to pay his debt with RBC. Fourth, the defendant argues that RBC has failed to act in a commercially reasonable manner in realizing on its security. Fifth, the defendant argues that RBC has failed in its duty to produce relevant documents, such that this court would be unable, on a motion for summary judgment, to have a full appreciation of the merits of the defences raised by the defendant.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

Test on a Motion for Summary Judgment

[31] There are two issues to be determined on this motion:

1) Whether there is a genuine issue requiring a trial as to whether the defendant undertook conduct referred to as "cheque kiting";

2) If the answer to that question is in the negative, whether there is a genuine issue requiring a trial as to whether cheque kiting is conduct falling within s. 178 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

[32] The purpose of the change from "no genuine issue for trial" to "no genuine issue requiring a trial" in the test for summary judgment was to make summary judgment more readily available and to recognize that with the court's expanded forensic powers, although there may be issues appropriate for trial, these issues may not require a trial because the court has the power to weigh evidence on a motion for summary judgment. As noted in Healey v. Lakeridge Health Corp. (2010), 72 C.C.L.T. (3d) 261 (S.C.) at para. 22, aff'd (2011), 103 O.R. (3d) 401 (C.A.), "Rule 20.04(2.1) is a statutory reversal of the case law that held that a judge cannot assess credibility, weigh evidence, or find facts on a motion for summary judgment."

[33] As stated in Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce v. Mitchell, 2010 ONSC 2227 at para. 20, the changed wording in the Rules, combined with the powers granted to the motions judge to make evidentiary determinations, necessarily permits a more meaningful review of the paper record and expressly permits the motions judge to make evidentiary determinations and credibility findings. "As a result, consistent with the new principle of proportionality in the Rules, cases or issues need not proceed to trial unless a trial is genuinely required": Cuthbert v. TD Canada Trust (2010), 88 C.P.C. (6th) 359 (S.C.) at para. 10; Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce v. Mitchell, supra, at para. 20.

[34] To succeed on a motion for summary judgment, the moving party must establish that there is no genuine issue of material facts requiring a trial with respect to a claim or defence: Irving Ungerman Ltd. v. Galanis (1991), 4 O.R. (3d) 545 (C.A.) at. pp. 549-50;

1061590 Ontario Ltd. v. Ontario Jockey Club (1995), 21 O.R. (3d) 547 (C.A.). "[T]he test for summary judgment – whether there is a genuine issue of material fact that requires a trial for its resolution as first articulated in Irving Ungerman Ltd. v. Galanis [supra] - has not changed" under the new Rule 20: Cuthbert v. TD Canada Trust, supra, at para. 11. If the moving party establishes that there is no genuine issue requiring a trial, the respondent must then establish his claim as being one with "a real chance of success": Hercules Managements Ltd. v. Ernst & Young, [1997] 2 S.C.R. 165 at para.15.

[35] The court must take a hard look at the evidence on a motion for summary judgment to determine whether there is, or is not, a genuine issue for trial, and may freely canvass the facts and law in doing so. The moving party bears the onus of establishing that there is no triable issue; however, the responding party on a motion for summary judgment must "lead trump or risk losing": 1061590 Ontario Ltd. v. Ontario Jockey Club, supra, at p. 557. A party opposing a motion for summary judgment must show a "real chance of success" against the party seeking summary judgment: Guarantee Co. of North America v. Gordon Capital Corp., [1999] 3 S.C.R. 423 at para. 27. Although the onus is on the moving party to establish the absence of a genuine issue requiring a trial, there is an evidentiary burden on the responding party, who may not rest on the allegations or denials in the party's pleadings, but must present by way of affidavit, or other evidence, specific facts showing that there is a genuine issue for trial: Cuthbert v. TD Canada Trust, supra, at para. 12.

[36] As stated in Dawson v. Rexcraft Storage and Warehouse Inc. (1998), 164 D.L.R. (4th) 257 (Ont. C.A.) at para. 17, "The motions judge is entitled to assume that the record contains all the evidence which the parties will present if there is a trial." It is not sufficient for the responding party to say that more and better evidence will or possibly may be available at trial. The respondent must set out specific facts and coherent evidence organized to show that there is a genuine issue requiring a trial: Pizza Pizza Ltd. v. Gillespie (1990), 75 O.R. (2d) 225 (Gen. Div.) at p. 238; Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce v. Mitchell, supra, at para. 18.

[37] Even with the change to Rule 20, however, it is to be remembered that the purpose of Rule 20 is not to deny the parties due process. As stated in Dawson v. Rexcraft Storage and Warehouse Inc., supra, at para. 29, "[i]t is not intended to deprive plaintiffs and defendants of their day in court absent demonstrated compliance with its requirements. . . [I]ts purpose is to weed out cases at the pre-trial stage when it can be demonstrated clearly that a trial is unnecessary". This principle has been reiterated in the now leading case under Rule 20.04, Combined Air Mechanical Services Inc. v. Flesch, 2011 ONCA 764 ("Combined Air"), where at para. 38 the Court of Appeal emphasized that the purpose of the new rule is to eliminate unnecessary trials, not to eliminate all trials, and that the guiding consideration is whether the summary judgment process will provide an appropriate means for effecting a fair and just resolution of the dispute before the court.

[38] Combined Air has of course articulated the "full appreciation test" as being that which the motions judge must apply to determine whether or not a trial is required in the interests of justice. The motions judge must ask the question: can the full appreciation of the evidence and issues that is required to make dispositive findings be achieved by way of summary judgment, or can this full appreciation only be achieved by way of a trial?

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[39] The defendant relies on Combined Air for the direction found at para. 51 of that judgment, which is that, in a case that calls for multiple findings of fact on the basis of conflicting evidence emanating from a number of witnesses and found in a voluminous record, a summary judgment motion generally cannot serve as an adequate substitute for the trial process. In those cases, as the defendant argues here, the motion judge simply cannot achieve the full appreciation of the evidence and issues that is required to make dispositive findings. In such cases, the full appreciation test is not met and the interest of justice requires a trial.

[40] At para. 54 of Combined Air, the court directs the motions judge to assess whether the attributes of the trial process are necessary to enable him or her to fully appreciate the evidence and the issues. Unless full appreciation of the evidence and issues is attainable on the motion record, the judge cannot be satisfied that the issues are appropriately resolved on a motion for summary judgment. The defendant argues that it is impossible for this court to come to a full appreciation of the evidence in this case because of a lack of documentary disclosure on the part of RBC, a matter which will be discussed further below.

Analysis

[41] The statement of defence filed in this proceeding does not raise the same defences argued by the defendant on this motion. Further, at his cross-examination on December 16, 2008, the defendant's counsel admitted that the only defence being raised is that the circular flow of funds was authorized by RBC, or alternatively, that RBC acquiesced in the conduct[9]. Nevertheless, I will deal with each of them for the purpose of completeness.

RBC authorized the overdrafts

[42] As he presents throughout his evidence, the defendant's primary defence is that RBC authorized the overdrafts. The allegations outlined in the statement of defence largely follow the evidence set out above: RBC promised to finance but did not do so in a timely manner, the account activity was a form of interim or bridge financing expressly or impliedly authorized by RBC through its authorized agents while RBC finalized its due diligence process, that the plaintiff was fully aware of the activities now being alleged against the defendant as cheque kiting, and the defendant at no time had formed an intent to either breach any of the lending facilities or undertake any wrongful or fraudulent activities as alleged.

[9] Transcript of the cross-examination of Roland Hejna on December 16, 2008, page 110.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[43] Throughout the defendant's affidavits is the assertion that RBC promised financing for the marina acquisitions. However, the defendant has not provided evidence as to the amount of the loans that he applied for in respect of each of the marinas. During the argument of the motion his counsel was unable to provide evidence of either the applications or the amounts. This topic was explored on the defendant's cross-examination in respect of the alleged promised financing for the second two marinas. He could not remember the dates that he applied for financing[10]. He was unable to produce a document whereby RBC committed itself to provide financing for a specific amount, although he believed that there were e-mails in existence. This theme repeats itself throughout the defendant's evidence; he states that he has been hindered from properly defending himself both because his computer had been seized when the receiver was appointed, and allegedly misplaced, and because RBC has allegedly withheld e-mails and other various documents that are relevant to the case. Both of these concerns are dealt with later in these Reasons. It was further admitted that he did not sue RBC for failure to provide financing, nor did he defend the receivership proceeding on the ground that he suffered damages due to the failure of RBC to provide financing as is now claimed[11].

[44] The second aspect of this particular defence is that Wendy Sprung or other employees of RBC expressly or impliedly authorized the very account activity that was undertaken by the defendant and his companies. As indicated earlier, such an allegation is denied by Ms. Sprung specifically. On his cross-examination the defendant admitted that what he was relying upon for his assertion that Ms. Sprung encouraged him to make inter-company deposits to obtain funding was a series of undocumented verbal discussions over the telephone on no fixed dates. He could not indicate exactly the words used by Ms. Sprung, and he admitted that he did not tell her that a circular pattern of cheques would be used. He had no specifics to give concerning his claim of authorization to cheque kiting[12]. The defendant recited one incident where Ms. Sprung advised him that he must keep the cheques that were deposited to the ATM machines below $100,000 each, otherwise there would be an automatic hold triggered. When asked whether he ever told Ms. Sprung that he was writing cheques from accounts that had no money, or writing cheques from one company to another to another all on the same day, his response was "they knew all my companies"[13]. The defendant has admitted that the unauthorized overdrafts were created by him writing and depositing inter-company cheques all on the same day in a circular fashion[14].

[45] As earlier indicated in the evidence review, the defendant and his companies were intermittently given authorized loan facilities with RBC of approximately $10 million between June 2005 and August 2006[15]. As alleged in the defendant's affidavit of September 18, 2008, Ms. Sprung told him that he should cover any shortfalls created by

---

[10] Transcript of the cross-examination of Roland Hejna on December 16, 2008, page 87.
[11] Transcript of the cross-examination of Roland Hejna on December 16, 2008, pp. 116-117
[12] Transcript of the cross-examination of Roland Hejna on December 16, 2008, pp. 93-95
[13] Transcript of the cross-examination of Roland Hejna on December 16, 2008, p. 95
[14] Transcript of the cross-examination of Roland Hejna on December 16, 2008, p. 66
[15] Chang affidavit, Consolidated Motion Record, Vol. 2 of 3, tab 41, paras. 13-45

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

the financing delay by the use of existing RBC banking and credit facilities. This would infer that RBC would permit the defendant to use the authorized funds not for the purpose of the entities for which the loan facilities were established, but rather for the new companies and in particular the new marinas. Not only is this highly unbelievable given the risk assessments and due diligence that any lending institution would undertake for a new corporate entity, particularly given the defendant's own evidence that marina financing can be problematic, but Ms. Sprung's evidence confirms that the limits of the authorized lending facilities were beyond her limits of authorization. Furthermore, the fact that the defendant has obtained from RBC over $6 million beyond that authorized is directly contradictory to him accessing "existing RBC banking and credit facilities".

[46] The defendant's evidence is also that he understood Ms. Sprung to be aware that the inter-account and inter-company deposits would result in overdrafts to existing accounts due to lack of existing funds. However, until the date when restrictions were placed on the defendant's ATM banking, there were no overdrafts in any of the accounts due to the practice of the continual circular flow of funds. It was only after the forensic audit had begun that the excesses became apparent. As Ms. Sprung's cross-examination evidence confirms, the daily reports received by her would only notify her of an occasional overdraft, which she immediately addressed with the defendant or his controller because she was aware that overdrafts were not allowed.

[47] In his affidavit of January 22, 2008 the defendant deposed that Ms. Sprung specifically authorized additional credit facilities by way of overdrafts. If this had occurred, there would be no reason for the circular cheque activity to have continued, as authorization would have been given for fresh or enlarged credit facilities without the requirement of a circular flow of funds. Further, the defendant has no specifics about how much of an overdraft his companies were granted by Ms. Sprung. His evidence on this point was:[16]

> Q: How much was the overdraft facility to be sir, a million, two million, a hundred thousand, what was it to be?
> A: Whatever it needed because it was only temporary.
> Q: No upper limit?
> A: Only she knew what's the amount.
> Q: I'm asking you, sir, this is your affidavit. I am asking you how much was the overdraft to be?
> A: I think with everything together it was somewhere around $6 million.

[48] The court finds this to be a rather convenient number apparently pulled from the air by the defendant during his cross-examination, given that the overdraft in all the accounts came to that total after the restrictions were placed on the defendant's accounts on November 16, 2006. However, as Schedule 1 to Exhibit 2 of the Dickson affidavit shows, the account activity in November, halfway through the month, was already well on its way to exceeding the previous month's activity. In the month of October, 2006, $80 million in deposits and withdrawals occurred in the defendant's personal and Hejna Group accounts. By November 16, 2006, deposits and withdrawals had already risen to close to $60 million. In other words, if the unspecified overdraft was authorized to be "around $6 million", the defendant was operating without regard to such limit in November 2006. And as noted in the Dickson affidavit, activity was escalating during months when there would have been a lull in the seasonal operation of most of these businesses.

[16] Transcript of the cross-examination of Roland Hejna on December 16, 2008, page 90

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[49] The defendant also deposed that he borrowed money from friends and family in order to close the first marina purchase in March 2006. Presumably he did not need any additional funding prior to this, given that RBC had granted various loan facilities beginning in June 2005. Yet as explained in the Dickson affidavit, the circular deposit and withdrawal cycle began even before January 2006, although RBC has only analyzed those transactions occurring in the year 2006. The transactions that amount to cheque kiting also occurred in January and February 2006, even prior to the purchase of the first marina.

[50] Finally, completely unexplained in the evidence is how close to $1 million came to land in the defendant's personal account, when his defence is that his course of action was undertaken to fund the acquisition and operation of his business enterprises. Also unexplained is why close to $90 million in transactions occurred in his personal account during the time in question, from transactions undertaken with other RBC accounts as well as other financial institutions and transactions with external parties.

[51] The defendant asserts that Ms. Sprung was desperate to keep his accounts with RBC and essentially strung him along to keep his business, pacifying him as necessary in order to ensure that he did not obtain financing from another institution. He relies on an e-mail between Ms. Sprung and Vic Brownjohn, a senior risk manager, dated January 11, 2006[17]. In that e-mail Ms. Sprung was conveying that she was desperately trying to minimize adverse client impact created by a delay in providing the defendant with a verbal response from RBC before he left for a boat show. I disagree with the defendant's characterization of this document. First, as is clear from the Chang affidavit, this e-mail falls within the period in which RBC was extending credit facilities to the defendant and the Hejna Group which eventually reached approximately $10 million. This memo could have related to any one of those loan facilities and indicated no association to the acquisition of the marinas. At least one of the businesses in which the defendant was involved was the purchase of boats. Clearly the defendant and his companies would have been an important client to RBC and, as this memo shows, Ms. Sprung was conscientious in terms of attempting to provide him with good service. However, it is a significant leap of logic to use this premise as the basis for proof of the proposition that Ms. Sprung would permit and encourage the type of activity carried on by the defendant.

[17] Brief of Productions, tab 22

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[52] The defendant also put before the court several Business Banking Transaction Requests relating to one or two of the companies comprising the Hejna Group[18]. The defendant has not cross-examined any representative of RBC other than Ms. Sprung and therefore these documents can be given no weight, as their significance was not explained in the defendant's material. However, as set out above, the Chang affidavit indicates that there were ongoing financing arrangements being made between RBC and the defendant, to which these documents obviously relate. Beyond that the court is not able to draw any conclusions that would assist the defendant.

[53] The same issue is raised by an e-mail of October 4, 2006 and an activity log printout from October 5, 2006 which refers to a hold being placed on one of the defendant's transactions that was completed through an ABM, resulting in his card being "hot carded" and the account designated as deposit only[19]. It appears from the document that the Fraud Detection Group was contacted, whereupon the hot card status and deposit only message were removed. Discussions were to take place with Fraud Detection to understand why the client was "hot carded" without consultation with the Account Management team. Again, in the absence of cross-examination this document can be given little weight. However, given that it was in the following month that investigation began into the unusual activity in the defendant's accounts, this communication is in no way an indicator that RBC was attempting to curry favour with the defendant by turning a blind eye to atypical transactions. Further, the author of the e-mail, who is a senior account manager, commercial banking, states "looks as though I will have an o/d situation again". The defendant points to that statement as evidence that RBC was aware of and acquiesced to the overdraft. However, as previously indicated, in the memo from Wendy Sprung dated August 29, 2006, she clearly communicated that the overdraft situation could not being tolerated[20]. She wrote:

> Roland the situation below, and the one you relayed to me in your message of this morning needs to be addressed with your staff at the various locations who are responsible for controlling the release of cheques. They need to understand that this practice of releasing cheques without available funds to cover needs to stop. As Mr. Dodd found out, if you release a cheque and haven't made sure that sufficient funds are on deposit to cover it when the cheque is released (not when the cheque is presented for payment) there is a risk that we won't pay it because of insufficient funds. We've also notice this with CFT on several occasions when we've been asked to send wire payments when there was no money to cover. We've allowed it in the past, assuming that it was just an oversight. However, this is now a regular occurrence so it appears

[18] Brief of Productions, tabs 3, 14, 15 and 24
[19] Brief of Productions, tabs 7 and 8
[20] Brief of Productions, tab 10

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

> that there is a bit of inattention on the part of whoever is responsible for this company's account.
>
> This also seems to be the case with several of the other companies as well. This morning on my excess report not only is New Ark overdrawn, so is Proline, Boatmax & Cdn Fishing Tour. Over the past several days Mobile and Balsam have also appeared. Roland we need to talk about this because this is happening too often, and in some cases for several days in a row. There are risks for you if this continues, so we need to find a way to significantly reduce the frequency.

[54] It was suggested that this memo is proof of RBC's knowledge of his account activity, and he was entitled to rely on that knowledge to continue in the same vein. It was submitted that this court should accept that there is an air of reality to his belief. To the contrary; it is inconceivable that what is referred to in this memo as accounts being "overdrawn" is the equivalent to RBC having knowledge that the defendant had created an unauthorized overdraft in his various accounts of collectively over $6 million. If RBC had this type of concern in August 2006 with overdrawn accounts, suffice it to say that it would be exponentially alarmed upon learning that the defendant and his companies had accessed over $6 million through the method that he employed. The defendant's defence boils down to this: they failed to catch me, and therefore my conduct should be excused.

[55] In addition to the gross weaknesses in the defendant's evidence outlined above, the defendant's primary problem with advancing such a defence is the wording of the forbearance agreements, which contain clear admissions that the overdrafts were unpermitted excesses over agreed credit limits. This wording is in direct contradiction to the position taken by the defendant in this action. The defendant signed both of these agreements with the assistance of legal counsel.

[56] The defendant has attempted, without pleading such, to place the negotiations surrounding these agreements into question. At the cross-examination on his affidavit sworn September 18, 2008, the defendant's evidence was that he did not want to sign the first forbearance agreement due to the specific wording of "unpermitted excesses" but was talked into it by a "representative for the Bank", Mr. Jaffer. Mr. Jaffer is actually an employee of the court-appointed interim receiver. He also testified that he signed it because he felt that he had no other choice.[21] This is not a matter raised either in his statement of defence or the affidavit of September 18, 2008. The defendant has never attempted to secure the evidence of Mr. Jaffer on this point. Further, counsel for RBC requested an undertaking for production of the Himelfarb Proszanski file to support the allegation that the defendant's counsel had communication with RBC relating to the use of the words "unpermitted excesses", and any advice rendered to the defendant with respect to those words. The defendant's counsel refused such production, and that refusal was maintained to the date of argument of this motion. In his affidavit of documents sworn February 16, 2011 the defendant does not list any communication or documents generated by the Himmelfarb Prozanski firm as being relevant to this action.

[21] Transcript of the cross-examination of Roland Hejna on December 16, 2008, page 10 to 17

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[57] With respect to the second forbearance agreement, the defendant's cross-examination evidence is again that, although represented by the Himmelfarb Prozanski firm, he was blackmailed into signing the agreement.[22] Again he has no documents or other evidence to support this bald allegation.

[58] If the defendant seriously believed that he signed the forbearance agreements under duress, while disagreeing with wording documenting that the overdrafts were created by the writing of cheques beyond the approved credit facilities, such an allegation would be central to his defence and would not have been raised for the first time at a cross-examination in December 2008, over a year after this action was commenced.

[59] As earlier indicated, the defendant did not file any material in the receivership application to dispute the order sought. This was the case even though he was in possession of the Chang affidavit, which fully set out the allegations being made against him. At paragraph 48 of the Chang affidavit, the evidence before Justice Pepall was that "by constantly making daily large transfers by cheque and other instruments, the unauthorized overdraft was successfully shielded from detection by the Bank until mid-November 2006". Given that it is the defendant's central argument that RBC had knowledge of, encouraged and/or acquiesced to these daily transfers, it makes little sense, nor is it explained in his evidence, why he did not provide the court with his version of events at the time of the receivership application. Instead, he consented to the order made.

[60] Also of significance is that the defendant has not documented that he ever objected to the content of any of the reports filed by the receiver, which refer to an "unauthorized overdraft" of approximately $6 million that was included in the defendant's indebtedness to RBC. The defendant admits that he received these reports. In its eleventh report dated November 28, 2008, the receiver wrote at page 6 that it was only after RBC's examination of the defendant on July 17, 2008 that the receiver learned that the defendant had brought a motion to set aside the judgment on the basis that the overdrafts had been approved by RBC. The receiver wrote: "Roland Hejna had not previously advised the Interim Receiver that in his view the overdrafts had been authorized by RBC". And although the receiver granted leave to RBC to sue the defendant in fraud based upon cheque kiting, he has never complained to the receiver that such leave should not have been granted, due to no cheque kiting or fraud having been committed.

[61] In his affidavit sworn October 22, 2010 the defendant deposed that he has consulted approximately half a dozen financial consultants and three bankers since 2007, all of whom confirmed to him that it is impossible to deposit an average of 20 to 30 cheques a day, totalling millions of dollars per day, and to subsequently withdraw those amounts regularly, without RBC's knowledge and consent. He states that it is simply untenable for RBC and its representatives to assert under oath that a period of six months elapsed, during which cheques totalling about $300 million were cashed without RBC's knowledge, when these deposits were about 40 times larger than his companies' normal revenue. He stated in that affidavit that he had no doubt that a banking expert would confirm this assertion. However, the defendant filed no such evidence by way of expert's report or otherwise for use on this motion, despite the time lapse of approximately 5 years. Further, the defendant has failed to show that Wendy Sprung or any account manager would have seen $80 million going through his account in one month, or $300 million in six months, despite his attempts to gain such an admission during her cross-examination.

[22] Transcript of cross-examination of Roland Hejna on December 16, 2008 page 20 to 26

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[62] Although the evidence of Ms. Sprung discloses that she had communication with both the defendant and his controller throughout their business relationship, the complete absence of any reference to this controller in the defendant's affidavits, or evidence from this individual, permits me to draw the inference that his or her evidence would not assist the defendant on this motion or at trial in terms of supporting the allegation that the defendant's belief was bona fide and reasonable.

[63] As the Dickson affidavit shows, it took the forensic accounting department significant work to trace and document the account activity, and that even by June 2007 some transactions were still in the process of being traced. This contradicts the defendant's unsupported assertion that it would have been obvious to the compliance department, or someone in a management position senior to Ms. Sprung, that the defendant was building an artificial float throughout 2006.

[64] It is plain and obvious to this court that there is no need for trial processes to unfold in order for a determination to be made that RBC has successfully made out its claims with respect to cheque kiting. This primary defence of the defendant cannot be made out, a conclusion easily reached on the record before the court. This motion for summary judgment has been an extant since 2010 and the defendant has had ample and ongoing notice of the claims against him and the case to be met. Notwithstanding, he relies on evidence and raises arguments that are untenable given the overwhelming evidence presented by RBC, which I find proves that at no time prior to November 2006 was it aware of or prepared to permit the defendant to access additional funds beyond his approved credit facilities. Accordingly, I have been able to determine upon a full review of the record that this court can reach a full appreciation of the evidence and issues required to make dispositive findings by way of summary judgment, rendering a trial unnecessary with respect to this defence.

[65] I am in the same position with Mr. Hejna's evidence as Karakatsanis J. was in Cuthbert v. TD Canada Trust, supra, when she wrote at para. 42 and 44:

> I am satisfied that Cuthbert's evidence is not credible and does not raise an issue requiring a trial. Although I have not had the benefit of observing his demeanour during his testimony, courts have long > recognized that demeanour can be misleading and is but one factor in assessing credibility. Credibility is best tested against common sense, inherent consistency and consistency with contemporaneous and undisputed documents. I have numerous sworn statements – three affidavits and two cross-examinations – relating to this issue and numerous undisputed documents with which to test his evidence.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

> …
>
> In these circumstances, I am satisfied that there is a strong evidentiary basis upon which to make findings of credibility, to draw inferences and to weigh the evidence. I am satisfied that the interests of justice do not require that this issue should be resolved at trial….

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

The defendant held a bona fide, reasonable belief that RBC was aware of his transactions [66] As the preceding section reviews the evidence and analysis relevant to this defence, it will not be repeated. For the same reasons set out above, the plaintiff has met the onus of showing that there is no need, in the interests of justice, for a trial.

RBC breached the forbearance agreements

[67] The defendant had not pled, nor has he demonstrated, that RBC breached the forbearance agreements. If RBC had done so, one would expect that his counsel would have raised such an obvious defence at the time of the receivership application. The defendant was represented by counsel at that time, and he has presented no evidence that such an issue was ever raised before now. Further, the order of Justice Pepall made in the receivership application indicates that it was made on consent. This negates any possibility that the defendant had any meritorious defence to the receivership application, or that it should be permitted to be raised at a trial.

[68] The defendant also does not put forth any evidence showing that he did not breach the forbearance agreements. His counsel suggests that RBC has failed to prove that he did. However, RBC has provided evidence through the first forbearance agreement that the Hejna Group was to repay $1,500,000 prior to January 31, 2007, but says that it did not. RBC cannot prove a negative. The defendant has not shown that such a sum was paid. With respect to the default under second forbearance agreement, RBC has provided evidence through such agreement that the Hejna Group was to repay $1,500,000 on or before April 15, 2007, a further $500,000 on or before May 30, 2007, $1 million on or before June 30, 2007, and was to repay all of the indebtedness in full to RBC prior to July 31, 2007. It is RBC's evidence that the defendant defaulted under the second forbearance agreement as well, and he has provided no evidence that the above obligations were met. Under the terms of both forbearance agreements, the forbearance period terminated immediately without notice on the occurrence of such default, after which RBC could proceed to exercise any right or remedy available to it.

[69] With respect to RBC's alleged involvement in destroying the defendant's credit rating, during argument of this motion the court asked the defendant's counsel to point to evidence showing that he had tried to obtain alternative financing through another commercial lender, or that his credit rating had been affected by RBC as he alleges, but no such evidence was proffered.

[70] Accordingly, with respect to this proposed defence the court is in a position to assess that there is no merit to the defence as advanced, and accordingly it is not in the interests of justice to require a trial on this issue.

RBC failed to act in a commercially reasonable manner

[71] With respect to the alleged failure to act in a commercially reasonable manner, the defendant again has not pled this in the statement of defence. The defendant argued that the evidence proffered by him, in the form of the letter from Irwin Jacobs, shows that he had an investor who was prepared to pay RBC in full, but that RBC refused to release information to Mr. Jacobs. The letter does not support such a contention; in no way does it suggest that Mr. Jacobs was committed to financing of this magnitude. The contents of the letter, in addition to being unhelpful to the defendant, is hearsay; no affidavit was obtained from Mr. Jacobs even though – along with additional hyperbole that one would not expect from a professional businessman – he wrote: "…Further, I am going to offer my side of the story to Roland's lawyer if he should need me as a witness in any litigation against RBC only because your letter to me was so outrageous and untruthful…Whatever else I have to say about you, RBC, Grant Thornton and/or anyone else on your side that was involved in the Roland Hejna disaster will most likely be said under sworn testimony in a court of law in Canada".

[72] Although the defendant asserts that there is not enough before the court for it to determine whether a full appreciation of this proposed defence can be reached, this is the only evidence that the defendant points to in support of his defence. He has not provided evidence showing that RBC improvidently liquidated assets, and indeed he could not, since the interim receiver was in charge of doing so.

[73] Accordingly, with respect to this proposed defence the court is in a position to assess that there is no merit to it as advanced, and accordingly it is not in the interests of justice to require a trial on this issue.

RBC has failed in its obligation to produce documents relevant to the defence

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[74] The defendant alleges that RBC has not fully met its obligations pursuant to the Rules to produce all documents that are relevant to the action, and he infers that RBC has deliberately withheld documents that would assist in his defence.

[75] The initial hearing date for this motion for summary judgment was December 22, 2010, which was obtained at an assignment court on September 21, 2010. Counsel for RBC had given the defendant notice of his client's intention to bring forward a motion for summary judgment as early as February 1, 2010, with the request for a timetable for completion of all matters required prior to the motion. RBC's counsel was unable to secure agreements from the defendant that would permit the motion to proceed in an orderly fashion, necessitating the scheduling hearing on September 21, 2010. During the late afternoon of September 20, 2010, the defendant filed a voluntary assignment into bankruptcy. The motion was scheduled for December 22, provided that leave could be obtained prior to that date. Leave was obtained from the Registrar in Bankruptcy to continue with this action. On December 21, 2010 counsel for the defendant delivered a motion record returnable December 22, 2010, claiming that in order to properly defend the motion for summary judgment, production of all documents in the possession of RBC was required. The affidavit sworn by the defendant in support of that motion, as earlier indicated, stated that it was the intention of the defendant to retain a banking expert to review RBC's internal documentation to support his position.

[76] The motion for summary judgment came before McEwen J. on December 22, 2010, who ordered that it be adjourned on terms that each of the parties was to deliver an affidavit of documents by February 15, 2011. RBC's affidavit of documents was to include production of the credit file for all of the Hejna Group. Also, any additional responding material to the motion for summary judgment was to be delivered by April 30, 2011.

[77] RBC proceeded to deliver an affidavit of documents in accordance with the order, with the Schedule "A" to the Affidavit of Documents consisting of 53 pages.

[78] Thereafter, no effort was made by the defendant to review any of the documents listed by RBC in accordance with his request made in December of 2010. He also delivered no further responding affidavit material to the motion for summary judgment.

[79] On March 7, 2012, Lauwers J. fixed the hearing date for the motion for summary judgment to be July 30, 2012, peremptory upon the defendant. This date was pushed back to August 2, 2012 for reasons not explained to the court, but on that date the defendant's counsel appeared to seek an adjournment, advising the court that he was unaware of the date due to internal issues in his office, and stating that he wished to file further affidavits. As a term of the adjournment, a consent order was made by McKelvey J. that gave the defendant until August 17, 2012 to attend at Mr. Greenglass' office to inspect productions, and a further week to deliver a list of productions to be put before the court as agreed evidence together with any of the other productions requested by RBC. It was also agreed on consent that the next appearance would be peremptory for the defendant.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[80] The defendant took no steps to examine the documents as set out in McKelvey J.'s order.

[81] The defendant now argues that the record is not fully complete and therefore this court could not fully appreciate all of the issues set out above in this action until it is in a position to assess the extent of RBC's understanding and knowledge of the transactions in question.

[82] At para. 56 of Combined Air the court wrote:

> By adopting the full appreciation test, we continue to recognize the established principles regarding the evidentiary obligations on a summary judgment motion. The Supreme Court of Canada addressed this point in Lameman, at para. 11, where the court cited Sharpe J.'s reasons in Transamerica Life Insurance Co. of Canada v. Canada Life Assurance Co. (1996), 28 O.R. (3d) 423 (Gen. Div.), at p. 434, in support of the proposition that "[e]ach side must 'put its best foot forward' with respect to the existence or non-existence of material issues to be tried." This obligation continues to apply under the amended Rule 20. On a motion for summary judgment, a party is not "entitled to sit back and rely on the possibility that more favourable facts may develop at trial": Transamerica, at p. 434.

[83] This paragraph is a complete answer to this aspect of the defendant's argument. The fact that he has failed to be pro-active in placing what he considers to be crucial information before the court does not create, in this case, a lacuna in the court's ability to undertake analysis of and reach a full appreciation of the evidence. The court is entitled to deal with the record in its present state, on the assumption that no further or better evidence would be available at trial: Dawson v. Rexcraft, supra, at para. 17; Rogers Cable TV Ltd. v. 373041 Ontario Ltd. (1994), 22 O. (3d) 25 (Gen. Div.) at pp. 27-28; Cuthbert v. TD Canada Trust, supra, at para. 12. It was the defendant's obligation to ensure that all of the evidence on which he intended to rely was put before the court on this motion. That his counsel failed to take even the preliminary step of inspecting the voluminous documents listed in RBC's affidavit of documents, particularly when no explanation was given for that failure, should not prevent the court from dealing with this case is the law permits it to do.

[84] Although the defendant has asserted that he lost his personal computer and records, and was without funding, this can in no way explain his failure to at least inspect RBC's documents. At the time that the orders were made by Justices McEwen and McKelvey, and following, the defendant has been represented by counsel.

[85] I find the defendant's assertion that RBC has failed to meet its disclosure obligations to be without merit, and therefore has no impact on the conclusions reached with respect to the various defences raised by the defendant and discussed in the preceding sections.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

Did the defendant engage in cheque kiting?

[86] I find that the plaintiff has met the onus of showing that there is no genuine issue requiring a trial in order for this court to reach the determination that the defendant knowingly undertook conduct referred to as cheque kiting. The evidence supports the conclusion that the defendant knowingly engaged in cheque kiting by inter-account deposits and withdrawals through a daily series of cheques. As set out in the Dickson affidavit, the defendant was also involving Hejna Group accounts maintained at BCP Bank, HSBC and other financial institutions.

[87] The practice of cheque kiting was explained in Royal Bank of Canada v. Location Bristar Idealease Inc., 2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII) at paras. 7-10 as follows:

> Essentially, the illegal practice of "cheque kiting" begins when a cheque is issued from a bank account whose balance is insufficient to cover it. To create confusion, money is recorded in more than one bank account at one moment in time. In most cases, the money is in transit or quite simply fictitious. The circulation of cheques between various accounts is jointly controlled. Here, the scheme was operated by the administrators of Bristar and JMB.
>
> Thus, cheques and registered funds are circulated from one bank to another and from one account to another, in a manner that maintains fictitious bank balances in some accounts while depositing the very same amounts in other accounts.
>
> Obviously, masterminds who undertake this type of fraud take advantage of the clearance periods that are inherent to cheque processing in the banking system.
>
> Cheques are circulated so quickly that an account at one banking institution is debited one day and credited the next. Over time, the false increase in bank balances varies from one bank to another, until one of the banks involved realizes that it is part of a kiting scheme and denounces the fraud…

[88] This is exactly what occurred in this case, although most of the transactions occurred between RBC accounts as described in the Chang and Dickson affidavits. The defendant does not deny that the cheques were deposited and withdrawn in this fashion, in order to produce cash flow. The evidence presented by RBC leads overwhelmingly to the conclusion that the defendant engaged in cheque kiting through the circular cheque-writing activity to which he admits.

Is cheque kiting an activity that falls within s. 178 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act?

[89] Section 178 (1) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act provides:

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

> An order of discharge does not release the bankrupt from
> ...
> (d) any debt or liability arising out of fraud, embezzlement, misappropriation or defalcation while acting in a fiduciary capacity or, in the Province of Québec, as a trustee or administrator of the property of others;
>
> (e) any debt or liability resulting from obtaining property or services by false pretences or fraudulent misrepresentation, other than a debt or liability that arises from and equity claim;
> …

[90] RBC seeks to have the judgment declared to be a judgment in fraud in order that it will survive any discharge from bankruptcy. In this case the allegations of fraud by way of cheque kiting have been pled with particularity and have been strictly proved. As set out in McKee (Re), (1997), 47 C.B.R. (3d) 70 at paras. 34-39, the test under s. 178(1)(e) is whether the bankrupt has been deceitful. Quoting from Derry v. Peek, (1989) 14 A.C. 337 (H.L.), Master Funduk summarized the law by stating that to make out deceit, there must be proof of fraud, which is proved when it is shown that a false representation has been made (1) knowingly, or (2) without belief in its truth, or (3) recklessly, careless whether it to be true or false. To prevent a false statement from being fraudulent, there must always be an honest belief in its truth.

[91] As set out under the Analysis section of these Reasons, this court has found that the defendant could not have held an honest belief that he was acting without intent to defraud. Any explanation given by him by way of justification for obtaining over $6 million in unauthorized credit does not stand up under any scrutiny. I find that the defendant was deceitful in advising RBC that he was undertaking transactions through the ATM machines for legitimate business activities, in transferring funds to his personal account, and in undertaking transactions in a way that created an artificial float that allowed his conduct to go undetected by RBC, and that by doing so he obtained property in the form of currency to which he was not entitled. It is telling that although he admits to owing the money to RBC, he has provided no evidence of repayment of any portion of it, or even of attempts to do so.

[92] Accordingly, I find that the judgment obtained by RBC is a civil finding of both false pretences and fraudulent misrepresentation on the part of the defendant, within the meaning of s. 178(1)(e) of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. Due to that finding I will not proceed with an analysis of whether cheque kiting is a fraud that falls within the ambit of s. 178(1)(d) of that Act.

Costs

[93] At the request of the court that each party submit its Costs Outline for the motion, RBC submitted a Cost Outline at the conclusion of the argument of the motion which was dated August 2, 2012, as it was prepared in anticipation of the appearance before Justice

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

McKelvey. The Costs Outline of RBC seeks a fee claim of $17,308.34 calculated on a partial indemnity rate, and $22,986.59 calculated on a substantial indemnity rate. This Cost Outline anticipated success on the motion, and therefore claimed all costs of the action except those involving prior cost awards.

[94] Counsel for the defendant submitted a Cost Outline in which total costs of the action are also claimed, which calculates partial indemnity fees at $21,640.00 and substantial indemnity fees at $36,367.50.

[95] Having regard to the factors outlined in Rule 57.07(1), it is first noted that RBC was seeking to recover a judgment of over $6 million plus interest, and was successful in doing so. The costs sought by RBC are at least commensurate with the value of its lawsuit, if not less than.

[96] In terms of complexity, the result sought by RBC is not one that should ever be made lightly and without sufficient evidence. In order to meet its evidentiary burden, considerable work was undertaken to secure the appropriate affidavits, cross-examine the defendant, prepare three volumes of a motion record and three supplementary motion records, a factum and supplementary factum and books of authorities. Additional work was necessitated by the fact that the defendant sought and obtained two adjournments of previous dates for the argument of the motion. The filing by RBC's counsel of additional material helpfully updated the court on matters transpiring between adjournments. While RBC was put to these costs, the defendant did nothing to take advantage of the additional time provided to him by these adjournments to improve upon the case presented to the court.

[97] The hearing was of vital importance to both sides due to the potential result. The material filed by RBC demonstrated that its counsel put significant effort into thoroughly preparing for this hearing, reflected in the helpful oral argument of counsel at the hearing.

[98] Turning to Rule 57.01(1)(0.a), the partial indemnity rates set out in the Costs Outline of RBC are within the Practice Direction established by the Costs Subcommittee of the Civil Rules Committee. It is noted in that Practice Direction that these are, normally, to be maximum rates when fixing partial indemnity costs. However, beyond that, the Rules require only that partial indemnity costs be awarded in accordance with Part I of Tariff A. It mandates that counsel fees be determined in accordance with s. 131 of the Courts of Justice Act and the factors set out in Rule 57.01(1). Wide discretion in fixing costs therefore remains with the court, bearing in mind the principles enunciated in the leading Ontario cases such as Anderson v. St. Jude Medical Inc. (2006), 264 D.L.R. (4th) 557 (Ont. Div. Ct.), Boucher v. Public Accountants Council for the Province of Ontario (2004), 71 O.R. (3d) 291 (C.A.), and Clarington (Municipality) v. Blue Circle Canada Inc., 2009 ONCA 722, 100 O.R. (3d) 66.

[99] However, this is a case in which fraud on the part of the defendant has been successfully made out, and therefore the court is entitled to consider that fact both under Rule 57.01(1)(g) or (i), and under the common law. The successful proof of fraud has been the basis for awards of substantial indemnity costs in our jurisprudence: Blackburn v. Midland Walwyn Capital Inc. (2005), 126 A.C.W.S. (3d) 22 (S.C.J.), aff'd 195 O.A.C. 181 (C.A.), leave to appeal refused 212 O.A.C. 397n; Reno-Depot Inc. v. Wonderland Commercial Centre Inc. (2008), 171 A.C.W.S. (3d) 477 (Ont. C.A.); Kepic v. Tecumseh Road Builders (1987), 18, C.C.E.L. 218 (Ont. C.A.); Ontex Resources Ltd. v Metalore Resources Ltd. (1990) 75 O.R. (2d) 513 (Gen. Div.); Rumble v. 853207 Ontario Ltd. (1993), 43 A.C.W.S. (3d) 716 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.). An award on this scale is granted only in rare and exceptional cases to mark the court's disapproval of either the circumstances giving rise to the cause of action, or in the proceedings, which makes such costs desirable as a form of chastisement: Mortimer v. Cameron (1994), 17 O.R. (3d) 1 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused 114 D.L.R. (4th) vii; Stiles v. British Columbia (Workers' Compensation Board) (1989), 39 C.P.C. (2d) 74 (B.C.C.A.). In this case I have considered the magnitude of the fraud and sizeable loss to RBC, which it may never be able to recover, the length of time over which the conduct occurred, and the failure of the defendant to admit to his wrongdoing, and have determined that this is a case in which it would be appropriate to award costs on a substantial indemnity basis to deter like-minded individuals and to express the court's condemnation of the fraudulent activity.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

[100] Turning to Rule 57.01(0.b), the court is required to consider the amount of costs that the defendant could reasonably have expected to pay in relation to this motion. In this case it is apparent that the defendant, through the fees sought in his own Costs Outline, was anticipating that he would pay at least as much as is being sought by RBC if it was successful on the motion.

[101] At this point in the analysis it is essential, as directed by the Court of Appeal in Boucher, to step back and consider the result produced and assess whether, in all the circumstances, the result is fair and reasonable. The first point to be made is that this action was one necessitated entirely by the conduct of the defendant, thereby putting RBC to the cost of retaining counsel to attempt to recover the monies wrongfully taken by the defendant. This action has been ongoing since 2007, and there have been a large number of interlocutory steps taken that have not been fully outlined in these Reasons. Many of these steps have involved the defendant wasting time and costs, such as failing to attend at an examination because he was experiencing jet-lag. A review of the full record reveals that the defendant's conduct lengthened the proceeding unnecessarily. Even taking into account that Mr. Greenglass has excluded from his Costs Outline those steps that have already been the subject of cost orders, despite the defendant's conduct Mr. Greenglass has spent a moderate amount of time on this file. This court is satisfied that the fees and disbursements outlined in RBC's Costs Outline on a substantial indemnity basis are fair and reasonable in all of the circumstances of this case.

[102] In addition to that, time has been spent since August 2, 2012 to again prepare for the presentation of this motion, and its argument took a full day. Mr. Greenglass did not give an indication of the time spent in this intervening period, but I am satisfied that it would have exceeded the amount of preparation shown by Mr. Klotz in his Costs Outline, given that Mr. Klotz did not prepare any further material other than a Brief of Productions prior to the hearing date. Mr. Klotz shows 9.2 hours for preparation and attendance, which will be used by the court as the measure by which to reflect the additional fees to be awarded to RBC. At the rate of $475, which is 1.5% of Mr. Greenglass' partial indemnity rate, the additional fees are $4,370 plus HST. Accordingly, the total fees to be awarded to RBC on a substantial indemnity basis are $27,924.69 inclusive of HST. To that will be added the reasonable disbursements claimed of $1,409.24 inclusive of HST, for a total cost award of $29,333.93.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

Order

[103] This court orders that a final judgment shall issue in the following terms:

1. This court orders that the defendant Roland Hejna shall pay to the plaintiff the sum of $6,373,897.53 for claim and pre-judgment interest calculated as of January 22, 2008.

2. This court declares that the judgment granted in paragraph 1 above is a judgment in fraud within the meaning of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

3. This court orders that the defendant Roland Hejna shall pay to the plaintiff its costs of this action in the sum of $29,333.93.

4. The order shall bear interest on the sum of $6,373,897.53 at the rate of 6.0 percent per year commencing January 22, 2008.

5. The order shall bear interest on the sum of $29,333.93 at the rate of 6.0 percent per year from the date of this order.

HEALEY J.

Released: August 26, 2013

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

C O R R I G E N D A

1. Page 27, para. 103 (4) now reads: The order shall bear interest on the sum of $6,373,897.53 at the rate of 6.0 percent per year commencing January 22, 2008.

2013 ONSC 1719 (CanLII)

Unofficial English Translation

SUPERIOR COURT

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

CANADA
PROVINCE OF QUEBEC
DISTRICT OF MONTREAL

No.: 500-11-040494-110
500-17-064825-113

DATE: January 26, 2012

PRESIDING: THE HONOURABLE JEAN-YVES LALONDE, J.

500-11-040494-110

In the matter of the bankruptcy of:

LOCATION BRISTAR IDEALEASE INC.
and
JEAN-MARC BRISSETTE INC.
Bankrupts – Respondents
and
PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS INC.
Trustee
and
ROYAL BANK OF CANADA
Creditor – applicant
and
CANADIAN IMPERIAL BANK OF COMMERCE
Intervener

JL3280

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

500-17-064825-113

ROYAL BANK OF CANADA
Plaintiff
v.
LOCATION BRISTAR IDEALEASE INC.
Represented by PriceWaterHouseCoopers Inc. – trustee
and
JEAN-MARC BRISSETTE INC.
Represented by PriceWaterHouseCoopers Inc. – trustee
and GESTION JEAN-MARC BRISETTE INC.
GESTION J.E.A.N.Y INC.
9022-4767 QUÉBEC INC.
JEAN-MARC BRISSETTE
YVAN BRISSETTE
YANNICK BRISSETTE
NANCY BRISSETTE
Co-defendants
and
GENERAL ELECTRIC CANADA
EQUIPMENT FINANCE G.P.
and
G.E. CANADA EQUIPMENT FINANCING G.P.
and
CANADIAN IMPERIAL BANK OF COMMERCE
Impleaded parties
and
LAURENTIAN BANK OF CANADA
Impleaded party and garnishee

JUDGMENT

---

[1] This judgment will decide one question only: Can the proceeds from a cheque kiting scheme constitute property of the bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy?

[2] Admittedly, a number of sub-questions further characterizing the issue will be posed, but they are primarily questions of law regarding which the Court will be required to make choices on the basis of the positions defended by the parties involved.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

[3] To set up an illegal cheque kiting scheme, more than one financial institution must be involved. The perpetrator of the fraud must also choose to involve one or more moral persons (companies) who use the rotating advances (rotating lines of credit) granted by banks for the day-to-day management of business affairs.

THE ACTORS INVOLVED

[4] The administrators of Jean-Marc Brissette inc. ("JMB") and Location Bristar Idealease inc. ("Bristar" or, collectively, "Bristar") implemented a cheque kiting scheme through their companies.

[5] In this case, the illegal financial procedure relied on shell companies that were originally solvent borrowers who had gained the confidence of financial backers. There can be little doubt financial problems the administrators believed to be temporary gave rise to the temptation to simulate regular banking operations.

[6] Three banks were involved:

5.1 The Royal Bank of Canada ("RBC")

5.2 The Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce ("CIBC")

5.3 The Laurentian Bank of Canada ("LBC")

TERMINOLOGY

[7] Essentially, the illegal practice of "cheque kiting" begins when a cheque is issued from a bank account whose balance is insufficient to cover it. To create confusion, money is recorded in more than one bank account at one moment in time. In most cases, the money is in transit or quite simply fictitious. The circulation of cheques between various accounts is jointly controlled. Here, the scheme was operated by the administrators of Bristar and JMB.

[8] Thus, cheques and registered funds are circulated from one bank to another and from one account to another, in a manner that maintains fictitious bank balances in some accounts while depositing the very same amounts in other accounts.

[9] Obviously, masterminds who undertake this type of fraud take advantage of the clearance periods that are inherent to cheque processing in the banking system.

[10] Cheques are circulated so quickly that an account at one banking institution is debited one day and credited the next. Over time, the false increase in bank balances varies from one bank to another, until one of the banks involved realizes that it is part of a kiting scheme and denounces the fraud. The system then collapses and any amounts credited are frozen. This is how, on May 31, 2010, LBC put an end to this illegal commercial scheme. At the time, an amount of $804,725 was credited to Bristar's account.

[11] A picture is worth a thousand words: think of the game of musical chairs, where there are not enough chairs for the number of players when the music stops. Here, RBC was the ultimate loser because it had been the primary contributor to the amount credited to Bristar's account ($805,725) on June 1, 2010, the day the music stopped.

[12] The time that elapses between the moment a cheque is deposited into a first bank account and the moment that same cheque is recorded in, or deducted from, the bank account from which it is drawn is known as the "float time".

[13] The float time permits a depositor—in this case the bankrupt debtors—to withdraw the money deposited before the cheque is cleared by the bank from which the money was drawn. This is how dishonest persons are able to profit from the deception.

[14] The simultaneous presence of duplicate amounts in two different bank accounts at the same time creates what is referred to as "float". The float represents the over-evaluation of the balance of a bank account as the result of suspicious transactions at a specific moment in time, if the signs of kiting are identifiable.

[15] It is all quite sophisticated. Indeed, the imagination and thievery of such fraudsters know no bounds. Fortunately, banks have developed effective methods to curb and prevent this kind of scam.

FACTS

[16] Two corroborating expert reports are conclusive. They are, respectively, the report by PriceWaterHouseCoopers Inc. ("PWC"), which was presented to the Court with rigour and objectivity by expert forensic accountant Benoît Legault ("Legault"), and that by James Dickson ("Dickson"), retained by RBC and also a specialist in forensic accounting. Both experts testified frankly, answering the questions in the manner befitting experts, so as to provide the judge with a better understanding.

[17] The expert analyses reveal that all of the inter-account transactions recorded in the LBC accounts between April 14 and June 1, 2010, were suspicious transactions indicating a kiting scheme.

[18] The expert reports also state that, on May 7, 2010, the fluctuation of the credit granted by CIBC reached the C$1 million limit.

[19] The reports further reveal that, between April 14 and May 31, 2010, all of the inter-account transactions recorded in the LBC bank accounts were equally suspicious.

[20] LBC discovered abnormal activity in Bristar's bank accounts on May 25, 2010. On that same date, LBC returned all of the cheques in circulation, putting an end to the scheme. As a result, on May 28, 2010, the date the bank accounts were closed, LBC had $804,725 in the client accounts (of Bristar and JMB), after its advances had been reimbursed.

[21] The evidence reveals that the $804,725 credited to Bristar at LBC was almost entirely (except for a few thousand dollars) from a single source, namely, cheques drawn from RBC accounts and deposited at the LBC after May 12, 2010.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

[22] Hence RBC's seizure in revendication of the amounts deposited in the special account created by LBC when Bristar's account was closed. This seizure was preceded by a notice of claim of money, as permitted by section 437(1) of the Bank Act.[1]

[23] On June 4, 2010, Bristar made an assignment in bankruptcy pursuant to the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act ("BIA").[2] PWC was appointed the trustee in bankruptcy by the official receiver.[3]

[24] RBC filed a proof of claim with PWC in accordance with its status of unsecured creditor for an amount of $1,677,877.75.[4]

[25] CIBC also filed a proof of claim with PWC as an unsecured creditor for the amount of $1,267,982.66.[5]

[26] RBC and CIBC both claim the $804,725 held by LBC but on different legal grounds. RBC argues that it should receive the entire amount because the proceeds from the kiting scheme are constituted primarily by cheques drawn from RBC and deposited at LBC. CIBC, for its part, argues that the $804,725 held by LBC should be shared between itself and RBC, prorated to their respective claims. Both conclude that ownership of this asset, acquired by means of fraud perpetrated by the administrators of Bristar, is not vested in the trustee. In the view of both RBC and CIBC, it would be commercially immoral and contrary to the requirements of good faith for the Court to allow the amount held by LBC ($804,725) to be considered property of the bankrupt.

[27] General Electric Canada Equipment Finance, G.P. ("G.E.") is also an unsecured creditor in the bankruptcy of Bristar and JMB. It does not see the matter in the same light as RBC and CIBC. According to G.E. and the trustee PWC, the money from Bristar's client account at the LBC is, despite everything, the property of the bankrupt, who must pay out to the body of creditors, which includes RBC, CIBC, and G.E.

LEGAL POSITIONS OF THE PARTIES

(A) The position of RBC

[28] RBC claims the money held by LBC, relying on section 437(2) of the Bank Act.[6] Essentially, RBC argues that the amount held by LBC consists of the proceeds of fraud committed at its expense. According to RBC, the proceeds of fraud should not benefit the body of creditors because the trustee has no more right to them than the bankrupt debtors did (Bristar and JMB).

[29] Of course, RBC is of the view that the proceeds of the kiting scheme are not the property of the bankrupt within the meaning of section 67 BIA.[7] In its main argument,

---

1 SC 1991, c 46.
2 RSC 1985, c B-3.
3 Exhibit BR-2.
4 Exhibit BR-3.
5 Exhibit CIBC-2.
6 Supra note 1. Section 437(1) and (2) are reproduced in Schedule A.
7 Supra note 2. Section 67 of the BIA is reproduced in Schedule A.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

RBC invokes unjust enrichment associated with the common law notion of constructive trust. In the view of RBC, the money held by LBC was held in constructive trust for RBC, who was the victim of the fraud. It claims that it is justified in challenging the trustee's claims to the amounts in dispute rather than being required to file a claim for property under section 81 BIA.[8] According to RBC, a bankruptcy trustee has no right to the proceeds of crime and must waive them.[9]

[30] RBC urges the Court to apply the common law rule in Ex parte James to find that the trustee cannot claim a right to take possession of the proceeds of fraud.

[31] Put succinctly, the legal rule enunciated in Ex parte James[10] is based on equity. According to this common law concept, the trustee, as an officer of the court, should act equitably. Although the trustee may have a right to certain property, the bankruptcy court should not permit it to exercise this right if, in doing so, it would be violating the rules of natural justice.

[32] According to RBC, the principles of commercial morality dictate that the property vested in the trustee and, consequently, in the body of creditors, should not be enriched to the detriment of the creditor who was the victim of the fraud.

[33] The concept of constructive trust enables the bankruptcy court to draw on the accessory notion of tracing to the extent necessary. That is why RBC sought to show that the money held by LBC came primarily from cheques drawn from RBC.

[34] Finally, RBC argues that a fiduciary obligation may arise from the obligation to act in good faith within the meaning of articles 6, 7, 1375, and 1376 of the Civil Code of Québec (CCQ).[11] Hence the possibility of tracing the illegally appropriated money and returning it to the victim.

(B) The position of CIBC

[35] RBC and CIBC come together on a few points of law. First, CIBC submits that the money held by LBC is the proceeds of illegitimate operations by Bristar and JMB. If not for the bankruptcy, they would have no right to claim this money.

[36] According to CIBC, the rights of the trustee are no greater than those of Bristar and JMB.[12] It also cites R. v. Martino,[13] an Ontario criminal case which decided that a trustee could not claim the proceeds of a crime committed by the bankrupt.

[37] The template for CIBC's argument differs, however, when it comes to the application of the notions of equity and constructive trust that RBC would import from the common law. According to CIBC, since the enactment of the Federal Law – Civil

---

8 Ibid. Section 81 of the BIA is reproduced in Schedule A.
9 R. v. Martino, [1998] OJ No 6444.
10 Re Condon: Ex parte James (1874) 9 Ch App 609.
11 Articles 6, 7, 1375 and 1376 CCQ are reproduced in Schedule A.
12 Lefebvre (Trustee of); Tremblay (Trustee of) [2004] 3 SCR 326.
13 Supra note 9.

Law Harmonization Act, No. 1,[14] Quebec courts no longer have the jurisdiction to apply the common law notion of equity. Ultimately, according to CIBC, the civilian approach provides a legal equivalent in the form of the requirements of good faith (articles 6 and 7 CCQ), the duty to act fairly, the principle of fin de non-recevoir, and that of unjust enrichment.

[38] According to CIBC, the bankruptcy court should exercise its judicial discretion to apply these civilian principles. Once these parameters are imposed, the Court may prevent the trustee from exercising its right to claim, if such a right exists, the amounts held by LBC.

[39] Finally, CIBC favours the distribution of the money, prorated to the losses suffered by the victims of the fraud.

[40] In the eyes of CIBC, RBC cannot invoke a property right in or a right to trace the money at issue here. Without a trust, the traceability of the funds would be a non-issue. According to CIBC, the concepts of constructive trust and tracing do not apply in Quebec.[15] Moreover, CIBC is of the opinion that the money paid by RBC and credited to LBC cannot be traced because the money deposited is fungible property.

[41] In short, CIBC opines that, while RBC cannot claim to have a property right in or right to trace the money held by LBC, this credit item remains the proceeds of fraud, which should benefit the victims in proportion to their losses.

(C) The positions of the trustee and of G.E.

[42] At the outset, it should be pointed out that the trustee, while supporting G.E.'s position, displayed a degree of neutrality that is appropriate to an officer of the bankruptcy court.

[43] It falls primarily to G.E. to demonstrate that the disputed money meets the definition of property of a bankrupt. To do so, G.E. invokes several arguments, including the very purpose of the BIA, which is to ensure the proper administration of the property of the bankrupt so as to ensure an equitable sharing of the bankrupt's assets among its creditors, subject to the priorities set out in section 136 BIA.

[44] According to G.E., the mechanism whereby creditors must argue their claim before the trustee in bankruptcy seeks to prevent all ranks of creditors from competing for the bankrupt's assets. This includes victims of a fraud whose claims are not excluded by section 67 BIA but are otherwise protected with respect to the discharge under section 178 BIA.

[45] G.E. argues that, in the event of bankruptcy, the property belonging to the bankrupt debtor passes to the trustee (section 71 BIA). All of the bankrupt’s assets are immediately and without distinction vested in the trustee. Thus, the role of the trustee is

---

[14] SC 2001 c 4, s 33.

[15] Sections 8.1 and 8.2 of the Interpretation Act, RSC 1985, c I-21, as amended on April 1, 2005. These provisions are reproduced in Schedule A.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

not limited to representing the bankrupt; it also includes ensuring the proper administration of the bankrupt's property Beyond this role, the trustee also represents the creditors on behalf of whom it is responsible for the forced sale of the bankrupt's assets and the orderly distribution of the proceeds of the winding-up. The rights and obligations of the trustee and creditors should be assessed with this dual role in mind.[16]

[46] Relying on section 70 BIA,[17] G.E. is of the view that the seizure before judgment by RBC is invalid because of the precedence conferred on the bankruptcy. According to G.E., this reflects Parliament's intent to favour single control in bankruptcy matters.

[47] G.E. goes on to argue that the disputed amount should be vested in the trustee since it was part of Bristar's property on the day of its bankruptcy (section 71 BIA).

[48] According to G.E., the disputed amount falls within the definition of section 67 BIA, which specifies what does and does not comprise "property of the bankrupt". G.E. maintains that, oddly, the amount held by LBC before the bankruptcy was subject to the power of Bristar in or over this property, within the meaning of paragraph 67 BIA.

[49] G.E. advocates a broad interpretation of "property of the bankrupt" in order to include the disputed amount.

[50] G.E. characterizes the legal relationship between Bristar and LBC in light of the amount recorded in the bank account at issue as a claim. In its view, this is also a claim that RBC has against Bristar, one that should be the object of a proof of claim in the bankruptcy proceedings. This characterization, it submits, applies even in cases where cheques are drawn from an account with insufficient funds.[18]

[51] G.E. asks the Court to find that all the money advanced to Bristar should become its property, and that this is the case for the money coming from RBC and credited to Bristar at LBC.

[52] Moreover, G.E. considers the money advanced to Bristar by RBC to be fungible property that cannot be traced because it has since been deposited and merged with the total money supply of LBC, who is the debtor of Bristar for that amount. LBC's only obligation is to return an equivalent amount of money to Bristar, as creditor of that amount.

[53] Stated clearly, G.E. argues that RBC has no right to trace the money advanced to Bristar. Rather, it has a personal remedy that should now be presented by means of a proof of claim in Bristar's bankruptcy proceedings.

[54] Thus, G.E. concludes that the disputed amount should be collected by the trustee as "property of the bankrupt" and distributed according to the order of priority established in the BIA.

---

16 D.I.M.S. Construction inc. (Trustee of) v. Quebec (Attorney General), [2005] 2 SCR 564.

17 Section 70 of the BIA is reproduced in Schedule A.

18 Alberta (Treasury Branches) v. McIntosh, [1993] AJ No 78 at para 44: “An overdraft is in substance a loan by the bank to the depositor”.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

[55] In the same vein, G.E. suggests that RBC, through its proceedings, is attempting to change this order of priority by attributing to itself a priority that it is not granted under the Act.

[56] Finally, G.E. argues that there is no legislative vacuum for victims of fraud because, in section 178 BIA, Parliament has provided that a bankrupt debtor who has committed fraud cannot be discharged from his victim's claim. On the basis of this argument, G.E. urges prudence in the Court's exercise of judicial discretion. In its view, the bankruptcy court may not exercise its inherent jurisdiction if Parliament has already provided an appropriate remedy.

ANALYSIS AND ANSWER TO THE QUESTION

[57] To resolve the ultimate issue as to whether the proceeds of a kiting scheme may constitute "property of the bankrupt", a few questions of law raised by the parties must be answered:

(A) Does section 437 of the Bank Act[19] establish a right to trace?

(B) Is it still possible to apply the principles of constructive trust and tracing in Quebec?

(C) Is the foundation of equity underlying the common law precedent in Ex parte James[20] applicable in this case?

(D) Does Quebec law contain the equivalent of equity?

(E) How should the amount held by LBC be characterized?

(F) What rights can be argued by RBC and CIBC?

(G) Do the amounts at issue meet the definition of "property of the bankrupt" within the meaning of section 67 BIA?

(H) Did the trustee comply with the principles of good faith, fairness, and commercial morality when exercising its right to take possession of the proceeds of the kiting scheme?

(A) Does section 437 of the Bank Act[21] establish a right to trace?

[58] The only thing that section 437 Bank Act[22] permits RBC to do is characterize itself as a claimant of the money held by LBC. If such a claim is made as part of judicial proceedings brought by RBC, LBC may pay the disputed amounts to the depositor (Bristar, or in this case the trustee in bankruptcy) only if it has the consent of the claimant RBC. Conversely, to pay RBC the amount, it would require authorization from Bristar or the trustee.

---

19 Supra note 1.
20 Supra note 10.
21 Supra note 1.
22 Ibid.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

[59] This does not indicate a right to trace on the claimant's part. Where there is no claim, however—which is not the case here—the bank may pay the principal and interest to the depositor or to the order of the depositor. This is how LBC was able set off its own debt with the money originating primarily from RBC before the court proceedings initiated by RBC and before the bankruptcy, even though it already suspected a kiting scheme was in operation.

[60] Section 437(2) makes it possible for a claimant to raise this exception, thereby preventing a bank from depositing the money claimed without its consent or, it goes without saying, judicial authorization.

[61] The Court is of the view that section 437(2) does not negate section 70(1) BIA in the event of a bankruptcy. There is no doubt that the bankruptcy proceeding takes priority over every other proceeding against the property of a bankrupt, including the seizure before judgment carried out by RBC along with a notice pursuant to section 437(2) of the Bank Act.[23]

[62] In short, section 437(2) of the Bank Act[24] confers no right in the thing and no right to trace. Without the attendant judicial proceedings, it is of no use to RBC. In any event, the bankruptcy takes precedence over the judicial proceedings brought by RBC against the bankrupt debtors (Bristar and JMB).

(B) Is it still possible to apply the principles of constructive trust and tracing in Quebec?

[63] The Civil Code of Québec (CCQ), enacted in 1994, does not contemplate implied trusts, resulting trusts, or constructive trusts.[25] As the commentaries of the Minister of Justice on the enactment of article 1262 C.C.Q. make clear, the legislature consciously sought to preclude the creation of an implied trust in Quebec law.[26]

[64] The constructive trust is not a recognized concept in our civil law.[27]

[65] The notion of tracing, which generally requires the existence of a trust or a common law fiduciary relationship,[28] is frequently used in cases involving claims, whether under the Quebec Code of Civil Procedure (CCP) or a claim for property under section 81 BIA.

[66] The principle remains the same in any event: for property to be claimable, it must be identifiable.[29] Indeed, this is the source of the difficulty of tracing fungible property such as money deposited into a bank account.

---

23 Ibid.
24 Ibid.
25 Plachcinski (Syndic de), [2002] RDI 692.
26 Commentaires du ministre de la Justice, Volume 1 (Les publications du Québec) at 750-751.
27 Barette v Falardeau, 2010 QCCA 989.
28 L.W. Houlden & G.B. Morawetz, Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law of Canada, 4th ed rev, Vol 2 at 3-91.
29 Meunerie BL inc. (Syndic de), 2007 QCCA 1601.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

[67] The process of tracing is practically inapplicable in the case of a monetary loan. The lender is deemed to have parted with the money loaned, over which he or she will only have a right of claim. The borrower becomes owner in title of the money and, if this money is deposited in the bank, the bank then becomes the owner and the money is merged with the bank's money supply. In such a situation, the depositor becomes creditor of the amount deposited, and the debtor bank has the obligation to return to the depositor the equivalent of the money deposited. Money is most assuredly fungible property that loses its identity when deposited in a bank account.[30]

[68] In short, the constructive trust is not a part of Quebec law. As for the principle of tracing, it applies in cases involving claims. It does not apply to the facts of the case before us, however, because of the fungible nature of the property claimed (money).

(C) Is the foundation of equity underlying the common law precedent in Ex parte James[31] applicable in this case?

[69] Before the amendments brought by the F*ederal Law – Civil Law Harmonization Act, No. 1*,[32] section 183(1) BIA conferred on courts of justice sitting in bankruptcy jurisdiction in law and in equity, while making no distinction between civil law jurisdiction and common law jurisdiction. Section 183(1)(b) was repealed and replaced by section 183(1.1) BIA, which struck out the words "at law and in equity" to describe the jurisdiction conferred on the Quebec Superior Court in bankruptcy matters.

[70] In Ontario, the notion of equity is incorporated through section 96 of the Courts of Justice Act.[33] In Quebec, it is not—or at least not through a specific statute.

[71] James J. of the Chancery Courts of England[34] was applying the law of equity when he wrote the following.

> ...
>
> The Court, then, finding that he [the trustee, in his capacity as officer of the court] has in his hands money which in equity belongs to some one else, ought to set an example to the word by paying it to the person really entitled to it. In my opinion the Court of Bankruptcy ought to be as honest as other people.
>
> ...
>
> (Citation omitted.)
> (Emphasis added.)

---

30 Boutiques San Francisco inc. v. Claudel Lingerie inc., 2004 CanLII 639 (QCCS).
31 Supra note 10.
32 Supra note 14.
33 RSO 1990, c C-43.
34 In England, the creation of the Chancery Courts can be explained by the gaps in the common law (Bijuralism and Drafting Support Services Group, Legislative Services Branch, Department of Justice Canada and Corporate and Insolvency Law Policy Directorate, Industry Canada, "Some Legislative Policy Issues").

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

[72] This rule is typical of the principles of the law of equity.[35] It is based on the court's prerogative to prevent a trustee from exercising a right that is otherwise technically well founded. In Ex parte James, the principles of natural justice prevailed over the trustee's right to take possession of money that, in equity, belonged to another.

[73] According to the federal rules of interpretation, when it is necessary to refer to civil law rules, principles, or concepts, reference must be made to the rules, principles, and concepts in force in each province.[36] The law of equity is not part of the civil law of Quebec.[37] There is no specific act incorporating it into our legal system.

[74] In Microtec,[38] the Court of Appeal confirmed that the principle of equity and the rule set out in 1874 in Ex parte James[39] are not recognized in the civil law.

[75] This therefore answers that question.

(D) Does Quebec law contain the equivalent of equity?

[76] The objective of equity is to remedy shocking situations resulting from the regular application of a convention or law and that offend justice.

[77] As the late Claude Masse wrote: [TRANSLATION] "...good faith includes the principle of equity, and in our view, by the combined effect of this inclusion and the enshrinement of the general principle of good faith in articles 6 and 1375 CCQ, equity also became a general principle in Quebec law".[40]

[78] Drawing inspiration from these concepts, Guthrie, J., of the Superior Court, reproached a trustee for ignoring a counter-letter attributing the undivided share of a

---

35 The 1873-1875 Judicature Acts created a veritable merger of the ordinary courts with the Chancery Courts as part of a large-scale judicial reorganization with a view to establishing the High Court of Justice. Following this reorganization, the judges of the High Court of Justice were empowered to make rulings under both the common law and equity. In Ontario, where the first Chancery Court was not created until 1837, a judicial reorganization in the late nineteenth century, at the same time as in England, established the High Court of Justice, whose judges were empowered to make rulings under both the common law and equity (Bijuralism and Drafting Support Services Group, Legislative Services Branch, Department of Justice Canada and Corporate and Insolvency Law Policy Directorate, Industry Canada, "Some Legislative Policy Issues").

36 Sections 8.1 and 8.2 of the Interpretation Act, RSC 1985, c. I-21.

37 Indeed, the Court of Common Pleas, later the King's Bench and then the Superior Court of Quebec, has always been an ordinary court, similar in many respects to the ordinary courts in British law. Unlike common law jurisdictions, however, Quebec courts have never undergone a judicial reorganization resulting in the merger of jurisdictions in equity and in common law, as was done under the Judicature Acts. Indeed, there is reason to wonder whether this could even have happened in Quebec, where equitable jurisdiction, exercised by Chancery Court judges between 1765 and 1774, first fell into disuse following the coming into force of the Quebec Act and then completely disappeared (Bijuralism and Drafting Support Services Group, Legislative Services Branch, Department of Justice Canada and Corporate and Insolvency Law Policy Directorate, Industry Canada, "Some Legislative Policy Issues").

38 Entreprises Microtec inc. v. PriceWaterHouseCoopers inc., 2006 QCCA 1291.

39 Supra note 10.

40 Mélanges Claude Masse, Enquête de justice et d'équité (Yvon Blais, 2003) at 497.

valuable immovable to a third party and not to the bankrupt. This is how our esteemed colleague expressed himself:

> ...
>
> [TRANSLATION]
>
> [66] The only effect of this motion presented by the trustee is to disguise reality, deny the respondent's rights, and cause the unjust enrichment of the debtor's creditors and ultimately, of the debtor himself. Indeed, if the motion is granted, the respondent will be evicted from his home and his estate will be impoverished by approximately $999,000—and the debtor will become richer than ever!
>
> [67] Pursuant to articles 7 and 1375 CCQ, the Court is of the view that, in the present case, the trustee is attempting to exercise its rights "excessively, unreasonably, and thereby in a manner contrary to the requirements of good faith" and even in a manner inconsistent with natural justice.
>
> ...[41]
>
> (Emphasis added.)

[79] Thus, it may be observed that the result arrived at by James, J. of the Chancery Court in 1874 may be reached by applying the principles of civil law.

[80] It is important, however, to note that Guthrie J. was considering the undivided share of an immovable, not fungible property. Moreover, he was not asked to decide whether the immovable was initially the property of the bankrupt within the meaning of section 67 BIA. This was the result of the dismissal of the application for partition and licitation that excluded the immovable from the bankrupt's estate, not a question of whether the property became vested in the trustee. This is a significant distinction between the facts of that case and those of the case before us.

[81] We must conclude, therefore, that there is an equivalent in the civil law to the principles stated in Ex parte James.[42]

(E) How should the amount held by LBC be characterized?

[82] Before the date of the bankruptcy, the disputed amount constituted a claim by Bristar against LBC up to the amount credited to the bank account.

[83] Of course, most of this money came from RBC and was credited without legal justification, but the fact nevertheless remains that Bristar had the power of a creditor in regard to that amount. Before the kiting scheme came to light, Bristar could have used this money for its own benefit.

[84] Even after the kiting scheme was exposed—but before the bankruptcy—LBC paid itself back for the amount of the advances given to Bristar, thus setting off its debt

---

41 Gilles Bédard (Syndic de), 2005 CanLII 20483 (QC Sup Ct).
42 Supra note 10.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

with money coming primarily from RBC. This was a legal set-off between two claims that were liquid and exigible that were operated by LBC. This was not contested at the hearing.

[85] Thus, the banking system recognizes the beneficiary of the kiting scheme as a creditor, despite the fraud.

[86] Under banking law, any bank account overdraft is characterized as the client's debt to the bank. Let us see what the author M.H. Ogilvie has to say on the subject:

> ...
>
> When an account is in funds, the customer is the creditor of the bank, but when there is a negative balance in the account, or an overdraft, the customer becomes the debtor of the bank. An overdraft is legally characterized as a loan granted to a customer by the bank, and as such, a privilege accorded to certain customers either from time to time or on an on-going basis. An overdraft privilege may be granted by contract or by course of dealing by which customers have been permitted overdrafts. When granted by contract, the overdraft privilege is usually for a stipulated sum for a stipulated period of time at a stipulated rate of interest. Where a bank has permitted overdrafts in the absence of a contract, the course of dealing is established when the customer draws a cheque and thereby creates a debit in the account. This is characterized as a request for an overdraft which has been granted.
>
> ...[43]
>
> [Emphasis added.]

[87] Consequently, even when there is no money, the drawee bank may agree to pay a cheque, or it may do so in error. In such situations, it is deemed to have granted a loan to its client.

[88] This is the position in which RBC found itself on May 29, 2010, when LBC closed Bristar's account with $804,725 credited to it.

[89] Thus, RBC is Bristar's creditor, and it was correct to file proof of claim in the bankruptcy for the amount of its loss.

[90] On the date of the bankruptcy, Bristar was itself a creditor against LBC for an amount of $804,725. This amount was deemed to have been loaned to LBC, contingent on its reimbursing the equivalent plus usual interest.

(F) What rights can be argued by RBC and CIBC?

[91] Having been characterized as lenders, the banks have a claim against Bristar for the amount of the loan. No fiduciary obligation arose from the circulation of cheques. Therefore, the right that may be exercised by RBC and CIBC is personal.

---

[43] M.H. Ogilvie, Bank and Customer Law in Canada, Essentials of Canadian Law (2007) at 230.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

[92] Obviously, the banks may also claim unjust enrichment, but again this is a personal right to be exercised against Bristar. In the case of a bankruptcy, this claim is expressed as a proof of claim.

[93] The banks also have an extracontractual remedy against the administrators of Bristar and JMB. If the administrators are also bankrupt, as the Court understands them to be, the banks may oppose their discharge insofar as fraud is demonstrated.

(G) Does the money in dispute meet the definition of "property of the bankrupt"?

[94] The definition of the concept of "property" in section 2 BIA,[44] taken together with that of "property of the bankrupt" in section 67 BIA,[45] reveals the legislative scope of what may constitute "property of the bankrupt" vested in the trustee in the event of bankruptcy.

[95] It is a relatively flexible notion that takes its meaning from the context and that should be interpreted harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament.[46]

[96] The general object of the BIA consists in ensuring the proper administration of the affairs of the bankrupt and a fair balance between enforcing the rights of creditors and giving the bankrupt a chance to start over.[47]

[97] The precedence given to the bankruptcy process results in a stay of proceedings and single management and prevents competition for the assets of the insolvent person. Once these parameters have been established, it is then possible to proceed with an ordered liquidation of the bankrupt's assets and their distribution in a manner consistent with the order of priority set out in the BIA (section136).[48]

[98] The clear purpose of the BIA grounds the conclusion that Parliament intended for a broad and liberal application of this statute to every kind of insolvency situation requiring an arrangement or an ordered liquidation of the assets of the insolvent person.

[99] This explains how the BIA is applicable even after the discovery of large-scale fraud of the kind that has made headlines in Quebec in recent years. Simply imagine the floodgates that would open if every single defrauded person launched proceedings to claim fraudulently appropriated money. The competition for assets would be unmanageable.

[100] If every defrauded person claimed his or her property, how would the distribution be carried out? What order of priority would govern the distribution of property or the proceeds of realization? The law does not contemplate such a situation in any context other than through the application of the BIA.

---

44 Section 2 of the BIA is reproduced in Schedule A.
45 Section 67 of the BIA is reproduced in Schedule A.
46 Saulnier v. Royal Bank of Canada, [2008] 3 SCR 166 at 16–17.
47 Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Ministre du Revenu national, [1995] 3 SCR 453.
48 Century Services Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General), [2010] 3 SCR 379.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

[101] The disagreement between RBC and CIBC regarding the distribution of the disputed amount between them has revealed a legal vacuum. One party, RBC, claims to be the sole victim, while the other, CIBC, asserts that it is entitled to the amount in proportion to the respective losses of the fraud victims. On what legal basis should this issue be decided? The BIA presents a legislative solution from which the Court must not deviate.

[102] In this case, the disputed amount represents a claim that was part of Bristar's assets on the date of its bankruptcy. Excluding the proceeds from the kiting scheme would have the effect of granting the banks the status of priority creditor, which they do not have under the law. Moreover, it can be considered that, shortly before the discovery of the kiting scheme by LBC, Bristar had power over the disputed amount within the meaning of paragraph 67(d) BIA.[49] Could it not then exercise this power for its own benefit, within the meaning of this inclusion in the definition of "property of the bankrupt" in section 67 BIA? In the view of the Court, this approach is consistent with the scheme of the Act.

[103] Excluding the proceeds of the kiting scheme would be tantamount to adding a restriction that section 67 BIA does not contemplate. It is not for the Court to create new legal restrictions. That is the role of Parliament.

[104] In this case, neither LBC nor Bristar may be considered to be a trustee of the amount disputed between the parties. On the date of the bankruptcy, Bristar had a claim against LBC. This claim was "property of the bankrupt". RBC and CIBC have a claim that they may raise in the bankruptcy proceedings.

(H) Did the trustee comply with the principles of good faith, fairness, and commercial morality when it exercised its right to take possession of the proceeds of the kiting scheme?

[105] It hardly bears repeating that, under the banking system, LBC was permitted to reimburse itself for the advances it had granted Bristar even after the discovery of the kiting scheme. Commercial ethics were thus safeguarded.

[106] The principles of good faith and fairness always depend on context. The Court understands quite well that Guthrie, J., of the Superior Court, reproached the trustee for having exercised its rights excessively, unreasonably, and in a manner contrary to the requirements of good faith.[50] The context was very different, however. In that bankruptcy case, the trustee refused to recognize the effects of a counter-letter because it was published after the date of the bankruptcy. Guthrie, J., correctly concluded that the trustee was seeking to disguise the truth and cause unjust enrichment, while causing the bankrupt's former de facto spouse to be unjustly deprived of the immovable in dispute. The facts of the case before us are clearly different from that case. Here, the trustee is in good faith.

---

[49] Section 67(d) of the BIA is reproduced in Schedule A.
[50] Supra note 41.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

[107] The application of the principles of good faith and fairness is also frequently a matter of judicial discretion when the court is faced with a shocking situation in the event of the strict application of the law. A consideration of the facts reveals that this is not the case here.

[108] RBC and CIBC may share in the distribution of the proceeds from the liquidation of the assets of the bankrupts Bristar and JMB, as may all of the bankrupts' unsecured creditors. This is a very fair solution.

[109] The exercise of judicial discretion must yield to the application of statutory provisions (BIA) when the very purpose of the statute is to settle situations of insolvency such as the one before us. This time, the enrichment of the body of creditors is fully justified through the application of the BIA.

[110] As the Court of Appeal stated in Parent v. Delage:[51]

> ...
>
> [TRANSLATION]
>
> I do not believe that I am required to rule on the argument that the bankrupt obtained the loan through fraud or false representations. Nor could that change the legal nature of the relationship between the lender and the borrower. Moreover, even if the transaction could have been voided, it would not have authorized the bankrupt, after its assignment in bankruptcy, to return property vested in the trustee to its creditor.
>
> ...
>
> [Emphasis added.]

CONCLUSION

[111] In summary, the Court finds that the specific context of the case favours an affirmative response to the substantive issue. Here, the proceeds of the kiting scheme implemented by Bristar constitute "property of the bankrupt" that is vested in the trustee. The solution provided by the bankruptcy is clearly more appropriate to the facts of the case than any of the solutions proposed by the banks.

[112] Counsel for CIBC hoped for a judicial intervention, an Ex parte Lalonde based on the requirements of good faith, the principle of fairness, and judicial discretion. Regrettably, in the circumstances of the present case, that would be inappropriate.

FOR THESE REASONS, THE COURT:

[113] GRANTS the motion of the trustee PriceWaterHouseCoopers Inc.;

[114] DECLARES that all the amounts held by the impleaded party and garnishee Laurentian Bank of Canada on behalf of or in the bank accounts held by Location Bristar Idealease Inc. and Jean-March Brissette Inc. are vested in and under the control of the trustee PriceWaterHouseCoopers and that these amounts must be processed and disposed of in accordance with the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

[51] 1974 CA 189 at 7–8.

[115] DECLARES that the seizures before judgment carried out by the impleaded party Laurentian Bank of Canada do not preclude such property being vested in the trustee PriceWaterHouseCoopers inc.;

[116] DISMISSES the motion to authorize the Royal Bank of Canada to continue a civil suit in file number 500-11-040494-110;

[117] REJECTS the declaration of intervention by the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce in file number 500-11-040494-110;

[118] NOTIFIES the impleaded parties General Electric Canada Equipment Finance, G.P, G.E. Canada Equipment Financing G.P., and Laurentian Bank of Canada of this judgment; [119] WITH COSTS solidarily against the Royal Bank of Canada and the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, including the expert fees for the cost of the report of PriceWaterHouseCoopers inc. and for the presence of the expert Benoît Legault before the Court.

_____
JEAN-YVES LALONDE, J.

Mtre René R. Gauthier
LAZARUS CHARBONNEAU
For the Royal Bank of Canada

Mtre Bertrand Giroux
BCF
For PriceWaterHouseCoopers inc.

Mtre Guy Martel
Mtre Danny Vu
STIKEMAN, ELLIOTT
For General Electric
Equipment Finance G.P. and
G.E. Canada Equipment Financing G.P.

Mtre Jean Legault

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

LAVERY DE BILLY
For the Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce

Mtre Michel La Roche
La Roche Rouleau
For the Laurentian Bank of Canada

Dates of hearing: November 21, 22 and 23, 2011
Date taken under advisement: November 23, 2011

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

SCHEDULE A

Note 6

Bank Act (SC 1991, c 46)

Deposit Acceptance

437. (1) A bank may, without the intervention of any other person, (a) accept a deposit from any person whether or not the person is qualified by law to enter into contracts; and (b) pay all or part of the principal of the deposit and all or part of the interest thereon to or to the order of that person.
Exception

(2) Paragraph (1)(b) does not apply if, before payment, the money deposited in the bank pursuant to paragraph 1(a) is claimed by some other person:

(a) in any action or proceeding to which the bank is a party and in respect of which service of a writ or other process originating that action or proceeding has been made on the bank, or

(b) in any other action or proceeding pursuant to which an injunction or order made by the court requiring the bank not to make payment of that money or make payment thereof to some person other than the depositor has been served on the bank; and, in the case of such claim so made, the money so deposited may be paid to the depositor with the consent ofthe claimant or to the claimant wiht the consent of the depositor.

Notes 7, 45, 49

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (RSC 1985, c B-3)

Property of the bankrupt

67. (1) The property of a bankrupt divisible among his creditors shall not comprise:

(a) property held by the bankrupt in trust for any other person;

(b) any property that as against the bankrupt is exempt from execution or seizure under any laws applicable in the province within which the property is situated and within which the bankrupt resides;

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

(b.1) goods and services tax credit payments that are made in prescribed circumstances to the bankrupt and that are not property referred to in paragraph a) or*b*);

(b.2) prescribed payments relating to the essential needs of an individual that are made in prescribed circumstances to the bankrupt and that are not property referred to in paragraph a or b

(b.3) without restricting the generality of paragraph b), property in a registered retirement savings plan or a registered retirement income fund, as those expressions are defined in the Income Tax Act, or in any prescribed plan, other than property contributed to any such plan or fund in the 12 months before the date of bankruptcy, but it shall comprise:

(c) all property wherever situated of the bankrupt at the date of the bankruptcy or that may be acquired by or devolve on the bankrupt before their discharge, including any refund owing to the bankrupt under the Income Tax Act in respect of the calendar year — or the fiscal year of the bankrupt if it is different from the calendar year — in which the bankrupt became a bankrupt, except the portion that

(i) is not subject to the operation of this Act, or

(ii) in the case of a bankrupt who is the judgment debtor named in a garnishee summons served on Her Majesty under the Family Orders and Agreements Enforcement Assistance Act, is garnishable money that is payable to the bankrupt and is to be paid under the garnishee summons, and

(d) such powers in or over or in respect of the property as might have been exercised by the bankrupt for his own benefit.

Deemed trusts

(2) Subject to subsection (3), notwithstanding any provision in federal or provincial legislation that has the effect of deeming property to be held in trust for Her Majesty, property of a bankrupt shall not be regarded as held in trust for Her Majesty for the purpose of paragraph (1)(a) unless it would be so regarded in the absence of that statutory provision.

Exceptions

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

(3) Subsection (2) does not apply in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, subsection 23(3) or (4) of the *Canada Pension Plan*or subsection 86(2) or (2.1) of the Employment Insurance Act (each of which is in this subsection referred to as a "federal provision") nor in respect of amounts deemed to be held in trust under any law of a province that creates a deemed trust the sole purpose of which is to ensure remittance to Her Majesty in right of the province of amounts deducted or withheld under a law of the province where

(a) that law of the province imposes a tax similar in nature to the tax imposed under the Income Tax Act and the amounts deducted or withheld under that law of the province are of the same nature as the amounts referred to in subsection 227(4) or (4.1) of the Income Tax Act, or

(b) the province is a "province providing a comprehensive pension plan" as defined in subsection 3(1) of the Canada Pension Plan, that law of the province establishes a "provincial pension plan" as defined in that subsection and the amounts deducted or withheld under that law of the province are of the same nature as amounts referred to in subsection 23(3) or (4) of the Canada Pension Plan, and for the purpose of this subsection, any provision of a law of a province that creates a deemed trust is, notwithstanding any Act of Canada or of a province or any other law, deemed to have the same effect and scope against any creditor, however secured, as the corresponding federal provision.

Note 8

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (RSC 1985, c B-3)

Persons claiming property in possession of bankrupt

81. (1) Where a person claims any property, or interest therein, in the possession of a bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy, he shall file with the trustee a proof of claim verified by affidavit giving the grounds on which the claim is based and sufficient particulars to enable the property to be identified.

How claim disposed of

(2) The trustee with whom a proof of claim is filed under subsection (1) shall within 15 days after the filing of the claim or within 15 days after the first meeting of creditors, whichever is the later, either admit the claim and deliver possession of the property to the claimant or send notice in the prescribed manner to the claimant that the claim is disputed, with the trustee's reasons for disputing it, and, unless the claimant appeals the trustee' decision to the court within 15 days after the sending of the notice of dispute, the claimant is deemed to have abandoned or relinquished all his or her right to or interest in the property to the trustee who may then sell or dispose of the property free of any right, title or interest of the claimant.

Onus on claimant

(3) The onus of establishing a claim to or in property under this section is on the claimant.

Require proof of claim

(4) The trustee may send notice in the prescribed manner to any person to prove his or her claim to or in property under this section, and, unless that person files with the trustee a proof of claim, in the prescribed form, within 15 days after the sending of the notice, the trustee may then, with the leave of the court, sell or dispose of the property free of any right, title or interest of that person.

No other proceeding to be instituted

(5) No proceedings shall be instituted to establish a claim to, or to recover any right or interest in, any property in the possession of a bankrupt at the time of the bankruptcy, except as provided in this section.

Rights of others not extended

(6) Nothing in this section shall be construed as extending the rights of any person other than the trustee.

Note 11

Civil Code of Québec (SQ 1991, c 64)

6. Every person is bound to exercise his civil rights in good faith.

7. No right may be exercised with the intent of injuring another or in an excessive and unreasonable manner which is contrary to the requirements of good faith.

1375. The parties shall conduct themselves in good faith both at the time the obligation is created and at the time it is performed or extinguished.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

1376. The rules set forth in this Book apply to the State and its bodies, and to all other legal persons established in the public interest, subject to any other rules of law which may be applicable to them.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

Note 15

Interpretation Act (RSC 1985, c B-3)

Duality of legal traditions and application of provincial law

8.1 Both the common law and the civil law are equally authoritative and recognized sources of the law of property and civil rights in Canada and, unless otherwise provided by law, if in interpreting an enactment it is necessary to refer to a province's rules, principles or concepts forming part of the law of property and civil rights, reference must be made to the rules, principles and concepts in force in the province at the time the enactment is being applied.

Terminology

8.2 Unless otherwise provided by law, when an enactment contains both civil law and common law terminology, or terminology that has a different meaning in the civil law and the common law, the civil law terminology or meaning is to be adopted in the Province of Quebec and the common law terminology or meaning is to be adopted in the other provinces.

Note 17

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (RSC 1985, c B-3)

Precedence of bankruptcy orders and assignments

70. (1) Every bankruptcy order and every assignment made under this Act takes precedence over all judicial or other attachments, garnishments, certificates having the effect of judgments, judgments, certificates of judgment, legal hypothecs of judgment creditors, executions or other process against the property of a bankrupt, except those that have been completely executed by payment to the creditor or the creditor's representative, and except the rights of a secured creditor.

Costs

(2) Despite subsection (1), one bill of costs of a barrister or solicitor or, in the Province of Quebec, an advocate, including the executing officer's fees and land registration fees, shall be payable to the creditor who has first attached by way of garnishment or filed with the executing officer an attachment, execution or other process against the property of the bankrupt.

2012 QCCS 211 (CanLII)

Note 44

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act (RSC 1985, c B-3)

Definitions:

2. (1) In this Act,

'"property"
"bien"

"property" means any type of property, whether situated in Canada or elsewhere, and includes money, goods, things in action, land and every description of property, whether real or personal, legal or equitable, as well as obligations, easements and every description of estate, interest and profit, present or future, vested or contingent, in, arising out of or incident to property.

Canada Cement LaFarge Ltd./Ciments Canada LaFarge Ltée, LaFarge Canada Ltd., LaFarge Concrete Ltd./LaFarge Béton Ltée, and Deeks-LaFarge Ltd. (the "LaFarge Group") Appellants;

and

Ocean Construction Supplies Limited, Construction Aggregates Ltd., and Metro Concrete Ltd. (the "Ocean Group") Appellants;

and

British Columbia Lightweight Aggregate Ltd. Respondent;

and

Rockcrete Ready-Mix Ltd., Deeks Sand & Gravel Co. Ltd., Deeks-McBride Holdings Ltd., Deeks Concrete Brick Ltd., Deeks Block Ltd., Lorraine Ready-Mix Ltd., T.G. McBride & Co. Ltd., Island Ready-Mix, Ltd., Holmes & Wilson Limited, Holmes & Wilson Trucking Company Limited, Fraser Valley Concrete Products Ltd., Butler-LaFarge Ltd., Friday Harbor Sand & Gravel Co., Evans Coleman & Gilley Brothers Limited, Ocean Cement Limited, Ocean Cement & Supplies Ltd., Ocean Construction Supplies Northern Limited, Ocean Construction Supplies (Victoria) Limited, Ocean Cement Trading Limited, Pacific Brick & Block Limited, British Columbia Cement Company Limited, Genstar Limited/Genstar Limitée, Metro Concrete Western Ltd., Inland Cement Industries Limited, Con-Force Products Ltd. Defendants;

and

British Columbia Lightweight Aggregate Ltd. Appellant on Cross appeal;

and

Canada Cement LaFarge Ltd./Ciments Canada LaFarge Ltée, and others Respondents on Cross appeal.

File Nos.: 16608 and 16704.

Canada Cement LaFarge Ltd./ Ciments Canada LaFarge Ltée, LaFarge Canada Ltd., LaFarge Concrete Ltd./LaFarge Béton Ltée, et Deeks-LaFarge Ltd. (le «groupe LaFarge») Appelantes;

et

Ocean Construction Supplies Limited, Construction Aggregates Ltd., et Metro Concrete Ltd. (le «groupe Ocean») Appelantes;

et

British Columbia Lightweight Aggregate Ltd. Intimée;

et

Rockcrete Ready-Mix Ltd., Deeks Sand & Gravel Co. Ltd., Deeks-McBride Holdings Ltd., Deeks Concrete Brick Ltd., Deeks Block Ltd., Lorraine Ready-Mix Ltd., T.G. McBride & Co. Ltd., Island Ready-Mix, Ltd., Holmes & Wilson Limited, Holmes & Wilson Trucking Company Limited, Fraser Valley Concrete Products Ltd., Butler-LaFarge Ltd., Friday Harbor Sand & Gravel Co., Evans Coleman & Gilley Brothers Limited, Ocean Cement Limited, Ocean Cement & Supplies Ltd., Ocean Construction Supplies Northern Limited, Ocean Construction Supplies (Victoria) Limited, Ocean Cement Trading Limited, Pacific Brick & Block Limited, British Columbia Cement Company Limited, Genstar Limited/ Genstar Limitée, Metro Concrete Western Ltd., Inland Cement Industries Limited, Con-Force Products Ltd. Défenderesses;

et

British Columbia Lightweight Aggregate Ltd. Appelante en appel incident;

et

Canada Cement LaFarge Ltd./Ciments Canada LaFarge Ltée, et autres Intimées en appel incident.

Nos du greffe: 16608 et 16704.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

1982: November 29 and 30; 1983: April 26.

Present: Laskin C. J. and Ritchie, Estey, McIntyre and Wilson JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Torts — Combines — Conspiracy to injure by unlawful means — Whether or not deliberate intention to injure necessary — Whether or not breach of Combines Investigation Act an "unlawful means" required to establish this tort — Combines Investigation Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-23, s. 32.

Respondent, a supplier of lightweight aggregate, ceased business and was awarded damages for the tort of conspiracy to injure after its client, a manufacturer, began using another aggregate to produce its lightweight concrete. The action by appellants, who had earlier pleaded guilty to a charge of conspiring to prevent or unduly lessen competition in the production of cement contrary to s. 32(1) (c) of the Combines Investigation Act, made it impossible for respondent to improve its market position. It was found at trial and on appeal that, while appellants did intend to eliminate competition, they did not deliberately conspire to drive respondent out of business. Both courts also concluded that the tort of conspiracy to injure did not include an intent to injure the plaintiff, as a prerequisite, where the defendants had acted unlawfully to effect the ends of their conspiracy. The appellants appealed that finding and further argued that the "wrongful means" required for the tort of conspiracy could not consist of (1) a breach of s. 32(1) (c) of the Combines Investigation Act, (2) fictitious tenders to third parties or fraud or deceit with respect to such third parties, or (3) injury to the purported right not to be deprived of the benefits flowing from a free and competitive market.

Held: The appeals should be allowed and the cross-appeal dismissed.

The tort of conspiracy exists: (1) if the predominant purpose of defendant's conduct is to cause plaintiff injury, whether or not defendants' means were lawful; or (2) where defendants' conduct is unlawful and directed towards the plaintiff (alone or with others) and in circumstances that the defendants should know that injury to the plaintiff is likely to, and does, result—1982: 29 et 30 novembre; 1983: 26 avril.

Présents: Le juge en chef Laskin et les juges Ritchie, Estey, McIntyre et Wilson.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE LA COLOMBIE-BRITANNIQUE

Responsabilité délictuelle — Coalitions — Complot en vue de nuire par des moyens illégaux — Est-il nécessaire qu'il y ait une intention délibérée de nuire? — Une violation de la Loi relative aux enquêtes sur les coalitions constitue-t-elle un «moyen illégal»? — Loi relative aux enquêtes sur les coalitions, S.R.C. 1970, chap. C-23, art. 32.

L'intimée, une fournisseuse de granulat léger, a cessé ses activités et s'est vu attribuer des dommages-intérêts pour le délit civil de complot en vue de nuire après que sa cliente, une fabricante, eut commencé à utiliser un autre granulat dans la production de son béton léger. Par leurs actes, les appelantes, qui avaient antérieurement avoué leur culpabilité relative à une accusation d'avoir comploté pour empêcher ou diminuer indûment la concurrence dans la production de béton, contrairement à l'al. 32(1)c) de la Loi relative aux enquêtes sur les coalitions, ont mis l'intimée dans l'impossibilité d'améliorer sa situation sur le marché. On a conclu tant en première instance qu'en appel que les appelantes avaient bien l'intention de supprimer la concurrence, mais qu'elles n'ont pas comploté délibérément en vue de ruiner l'intimée. Les deux tribunaux ont conclu en outre que, lorsque les défendeurs ont agi illégalement en exécution de leur complot, le délit civil de complot en vue de nuire n'est pas soumis à la condition préalable d'une intention de nuire au demandeur. Les appelantes contestent cette conclusion, faisant valoir que les «moyens illégaux» qui doivent avoir été employés pour qu'il y ait délit civil de complot ne peuvent consister ni en une infraction à l'al. 32(1)c) de la Loi relative aux enquêtes sur les coalitions, ni en des soumissions fictives à des tiers, ni en une fraude ou tromperie pratiquée à l'endroit de celles-ci, ni en une atteinte au droit, si droit il y a, de ne pas être privé des avantages découlant d'un marché libre et compétitif.

Arrêt: Les pourvois sont accueillis et le pourvoi incident est rejeté.

Il y a délit civil de complot: (1) si la conduite des défendeurs vise principalement à causer un préjudice au demandeur, peu importe la légalité des moyens employés; ou (2) lorsqu'il s'agit d'une conduite illégale de la part des défendeurs qui est dirigée contre le seul demandeur ou contre lui et d'autres personnes dans des circonstances où les défendeurs auraient dû savoir que le notwithstanding the fact that the predominant purpose of defendants' conduct be not necessary to cause injury to the plaintiff.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

Respondent was not entitled to claim for damages under this tort because the necessary intention to injure did not exist here. Appellants discontinued their use of respondent's product for solid business reasons and not because of any plan calculated to damage it: the unlawful market-sharing agreements were neither directed against nor intended to injure respondent. Further, because respondent tried to share in the benefits accruing to appellants from those agreements it could not validly argue that it had been unlawfully deprived of its right to the benefits of a free market.

Lonrho Ltd. v. Shell Petroleum Co. Ltd., [1982] A.C. 173, [1981] 2 All E.R. 456, applied; International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. Therien, [1960] S.C.R. 265; Gagnon v. Foundation Maritime Limited, [1961] S.C.R. 435; Southam Co. Ltd. v. Gouthro, [1948] 3 D.L.R. 178, considered; Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co. v. Veitch, [1942] A.C. 435; Sorrell v. Smith, [1925] A.C. 700; National Coal Board v. England, [1954] A.C. 403; Tallow v. Tailfeathers (1973), 44 D.L.R. (3d) 55; Tomlinson v. Harrison, [1972] 1 O.R. 670, (1971), 24 D.L.R. (3d) 26; Rondos v. Wawrin (1968), 68 D.L.R. (2d) 658, referred to.

APPEALS and CROSS-APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (1981), 123 D.L.R. (3d) 66, 26 B.C.L.R. 292, [1981] 4 W.W.R. 385, dismissing an appeal from a judgment of Callaghan J. Appeals allowed and cross-appeal dismissed.

R. J. Gibbs, Q.C., and D. F. Robinson, for the appellants the "LaFarge Group."

J. Edgar Sexton, Q.C., Brian G. Morgan, and G. A. Urquhart, for the appellants the "Ocean Group."

Rees Brock, Q.C., and Vince Orchard, for the respondent.

préjudice subi par le demandeur serait une conséquence probable, même s'il n'est pas nécessaire que l'objet prédominant de la conduite des défendeurs soit de léser le demandeur.

L'intimée n'a pas droit à des dommages-intérêts pour le délit civil de complot parce qu'il n'y a en l'espèce aucune intention de nuire. Si les appelantes ont cessé d'utiliser le produit de l'intimée, cela s'explique par des solides raisons d'affaires et n'est nullement attribuable à un dessein de lui nuire; les accords illégaux relatifs au partage du marché ne visaient pas l'intimée et n'avaient pas pour objet de lui porter préjudice. De plus, il n'y a aucun lien de causalité entre les activités illégales des appelantes et l'effondrement de l'intimée. D'ailleurs, même s'il y en avait, la demanderesse-intimée n'aurait pas droit à des dommages-intérêts parce qu'elle a manifestement cherché à profiter des avantages dont bénéficiaient les appelantes par suite des conventions illégales relatives au partage du marché.

Jurisprudence: arrêt appliqué: Lonrho Ltd. v. Shell Petroleum Co. Ltd., [1982] A.C. 173, [1981] 2 All E.R. 456; arrêts examinés: International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. Therien, [1960] R.C.S. 265; Gagnon v. Foundation Maritime Limited, [1961] R.C.S. 435; Southam Co. Ltd. v. Gouthro, [1948] 3 D.L.R. 178; arrêts mentionnés: Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co. v. Veitch, [1942] A.C. 435; Sorrell v. Smith, [1925] A.C. 700; National Coal Board v. England, [1954] A.C. 403; Tallow v. Tailfeathers (1973), 44 D.L.R. (3d) 55; Tomlinson v. Harrison, [1972] 1 O.R. 670, (1971), 24 D.L.R. (3d) 26; Rondos v. Wawrin (1968), 68 D.L.R. (2d) 658.

POURVOIS et POURVOI INCIDENT contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique (1981), 123 D.L.R. (3d) 66, 26 B.C.L.R. 292, [1981] 4 W.W.R. 385, qui a rejeté un appel d'un jugement du juge Callaghan. Pourvois accueillis et pourvoi incident rejeté.

R. J. Gibbs, c.r., et D. F. Robinson, pour les appelantes composant le «groupe LaFarge».

J. Edgar Sexton, c.r., Brian G. Morgan, et G. A. Urquhart, pour les appelantes composant le «groupe Ocean».

Rees Brock, c.r., et Vince Orchard, pour l'intimée.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

ESTEY J.—The plaintiff-respondent holds a judgment against the appellants in the amount of $750,000 for damages for conspiracy to injure the respondent in its business. In essence, the courts below found that while the appellants did not deliberately conspire to drive the respondent out of business, the appellants did intend to eliminate all competitors which, in the view of the Court below, included the respondent. In the view of the learned trial judge and the Court of Appeal, the tort of conspiracy to injure did not include as a prerequisite an intent to injure the plaintiff where the defendants, as an object of the conspiracy, acted unlawfully, in this instance criminally.

The appellants advance their submissions on four principal bases:

(a) The intention necessary to found liability in the appellants for the tort of conspiracy to injure by unlawful means, is a specific intent to injure the respondent;

(b) The element of 'unlawful means' cannot be provided by a breach of the conspiracy section of the Combines Investigation Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. C-23, s. 32, by the fraudulent or fictitious bids made by the appellants in the sale of concrete in British Columbia, or by any injury by the appellants of an alleged legal right of the respondent to the benefits of a competitive concrete market in British Columbia;

(c) The principles of remoteness or causation exclude all elements or factors unconnected to the respondent and any loss suffered by it;

(d) In any case, the respondent, by voluntarily participating in the arrangements of which complaint is now made, is barred from any recovery from the appellants on the principles of ex turpi causa or in pari delicto.

Version française du jugement de la Cour rendu par

LE JUGE ESTEY—Une décision en faveur de la demanderesse-intimée a condamné les appelantes au paiement d'un montant de 750 000 $ en dommages-intérêts pour complot en vue de nuire à l'intimée dans son entreprise. Les cours d'instance inférieure ont conclu en substance que les appelantes n'ont pas comploté délibérément en vue de ruiner l'intimée, mais qu'elles avaient bien l'intention d'éliminer tous leurs concurrents au nombre desquels, selon la Cour d'appel, figurait l'intimée. Le savant juge de première instance et la Cour d'appel ont estimé que le délit civil de complot en vue de nuire n'est pas soumis à la condition préalable d'une intention de nuire au demandeur lorsque les défendeurs agissent illégalement, en l'espèce criminellement, en exécution du complot.

Les appelantes invoquent quatre moyens principaux:

a) pour que les appelantes soient tenues responsables du délit civil de complot en vue de nuire par des moyens illégaux, il faut qu'il y ait eu l'intention précise de nuire à l'intimée;

b) ne constituent pas des «moyens illégaux» une infraction à l'art. 32 de la Loi relative aux enquêtes sur les coalitions, S.R.C. 1970, chap. C-23, qui porte sur les complots, ni les soumissions frauduleuses ou fictives qu'ont faites les appelantes relativement à la vente de béton en Colombie-Britannique ni une atteinte quelconque portée par les appelantes au droit, dont l'intimée prétend jouir, de bénéficier d'une libre concurrence sur le marché du béton en Colombie-Britannique;

c) les principes de l'éloignement ou de la causalité en soi excluent tout élément ou facteur qui ne se rapporte pas à l'intimée et à tout préjudice qu'elle a pu subir;

d) en toute hypothèse, suivant les principes ex turpi causa ou in pari delicto, sa participation volontaire aux arrangements dont elle se plaint maintenant empêche l'intimée de se faire indemniser par les appelantes.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

The appellants' first submission seeks to combine in the definition of the tort of conspiracy both elements:

(a) the intent to injure the plaintiff; and,

(b) the agreement to employ unlawful means.

There is no basis in authority in the common law for such a combined standard. As we shall see, the recent contest in the courts has been whether there is a second tort of conspiracy 'to perform an unlawful act', in addition to the long-existing tort of conspiracy to injure. Therefore I will approach the analysis of the facts and the applicable law on the basis that the appellants are seeking to demonstrate:

(a) the tort of conspiracy requires 'the predominant objective of injury to the plaintiff'; and, alternatively,

(b) if there be a tort of conspiracy to perform an unlawful act, the actions of the appellants, admittedly contrary to the Combines Investigation Act, are not sufficient to support the respondent's action because the unlawful acts occasioned no injury to the respondent and hence, damages being the gist of the tort in any event, no action lies in the respondent.

It is unnecessary to review the extensive record before dealing with these four principal submissions, but it will be convenient to outline briefly the history of the events leading to these proceedings. The appellants are engaged in the business of manufacturing and supplying cement, ready-mix concrete, concrete pipe, concrete block and other such concrete products in the province of British Columbia. The respondent was at all material times engaged in the business of producing a lightweight aggregate called "Saturnalite" for use in the production of concrete and concrete products. In the production of their concrete the appellants made use of ordinary aggregate, that is sand and gravel, as well as lightweight aggregate for the production of lightweight concrete. The appellant

Les appelantes essaient dans leur premier moyen d'inclure dans la définition du délit civil de complot deux éléments:

a) l'intention de porter préjudice au demandeur; et,

b) l'existence d'un accord en vue d'employer des moyens illégaux.

La common law n'appuie aucunement cette norme à deux volets. Comme nous allons le voir, les tribunaux ont eu dernièrement à se pencher sur la question de savoir s'il y a, en plus du délit civil de complot en vue de nuire qui existe depuis longtemps déjà, un second délit civil de complot «en vue d'accomplir un acte illégal». Je me propose donc d'aborder l'analyse des faits et du droit applicable en tenant pour acquis que les appelantes cherchent à prouver:

a) que pour qu'il y ait délit civil de complot «l'objet prédominant» doit être «de porter préjudice au demandeur»; et, subsidiairement,

b) que, s'il existe un délit civil de complot en vue d'accomplir un acte illégal, les actes des appelantes, indiscutablement contraires à la Loi relative aux enquêtes sur les coalitions, ne suffisent pas pour fonder l'action de l'intimée parce que les actes illégaux ne lui ont occasionné aucun préjudice et comme le préjudice est de toute façon au coeur du délit civil, son action est irrecevable.

Il n'est pas nécessaire de passer en revue le dossier volumineux avant de procéder à l'examen des quatre moyens principaux soulevés par les appelantes, mais il convient de présenter un bref historique des événements qui ont donné naissance à cette procédure. L'entreprise des appelantes consiste en la fabrication et la fourniture de ciment, de béton prêt à l'emploi, des conduites en béton, de blocs de béton et de produits de béton similaires dans la province de la Colombie-Britannique. À toutes les époques en cause, l'intimée fabriquait un granulat léger appelé «Saturnalite» destiné à être employé dans la production de béton et de produits de béton. Les appelantes faisaient du béton avec du granulat ordinaire, c'est-à-dire avec du sable et du gravier, mais elles utilisaient également du supplied, or acquired through other sources, the ordinary aggregate but were not engaged in the production of lightweight aggregate. In 1974 the appellants pleaded guilty to charges under s. 32 of the Combines Investigation Act, supra, and substantial fines were levied. In the course of those proceedings it was revealed that in 1962-63 the appellants entered into marketing arrangements, the effect of which was to divide the concrete and concrete product market in British Columbia between the appellant Ocean Construction Supplies Limited and the appellant Canada Cement LaFarge Ltd. in the ratio of 55 per cent to 45 per cent.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

granulat léger dans la fabrication de béton léger. Les appelantes fournissaient elles-mêmes le granulat ordinaire ou l'acquéraient d'autres sources, mais ne produisaient pas de granulat léger. En 1974 les appelantes ont avoué leur culpabilité relativement à des accusations portées en vertu de l'art. 32 de la Loi relative aux enquêtes sur les coalitions, précitée, et elles ont été condamnées à de lourdes amendes. Il est ressorti au cours de ces procédures qu'en 1962 et 1963, les appelantes avaient conclu des accords de commercialisation dont l'effet était de partager le marché du béton et des produits de béton en Colombie-Britannique entre l'appelante Ocean Construction Supplies Limited et l'appelante Ciments Canada LaFarge Ltée dans une proportion de 55 p. 100 contre 45 p. 100.

By reason of losses in its operations and because the respondent and its owners recognized the small market for lightweight aggregate in British Columbia, and perhaps for other reasons, the respondent sought to establish or secure markets for their lightweight aggregate, Saturnalite, and entered into agreements with the appellants in 1963 whereby the appellants undertook to purchase from the respondent, for a period of two years, volumes of lightweight aggregate specified in the agreement. Under the agreements the appellants undertook to acquire this type of aggregate from the respondent only, and not to enter the lightweight aggregate supply business themselves. The agreements specified the price of the Saturnalite to be supplied.

En raison de ses pertes d'exploitation et parce que ses propriétaires reconnaissaient la faible demande de granulat léger en Colombie-Britannique, et peut-être pour d'autres raisons, l'intimée a cherché à créer ou à s'assurer des débouchés pour son granulat léger, Saturnalite, et, à cet effet, a passé avec les appelantes en 1963 des contrats par lesquels ces dernières s'engageaient à acheter à l'intimée, pendant une durée de deux ans, les quantités de granulat léger précisées. Elles promettaient en outre d'acquérir ce type de granulat seulement de l'intimée et de ne pas se lancer elles-mêmes dans l'entreprise de fourniture de granulat léger. Les contrats fixaient le prix du Saturnalite qui devait être livré.

As a quid pro quo for the entry into this agreement by the appellants, the parent company of the respondent, Graymont Limited, executed an undertaking reciting that the undertaking was entered into "in consideration of Deeks-McBride Ltd. . . . entering into an agreement dated as of the 1st day of May 1963 . . . . " Deeks-McBride Ltd. was a member of the LaFarge group of companies. The respondent's then parent company covenanted and agreed that it:

> shall not . . . directly or indirectly, be engaged in, employed in, operate, carry on, manage or invest in the cement or concrete business or in the business of manufacturing concrete products within the province of British Columbia at any time during the currency of the said agreement and any renewal or renewals thereof . . .

En échange de la signature de ces contrats par les appelantes, la société mère de l'intimée, Graymont Limited, a signé un engagement qui, suivant ses propres termes, a été fait [TRADUCTION] «en contrepartie de la signature par Deeks-McBride Ltd... d'un contrat daté du 1er mai 1963 . . .». Deeks-McBride Ltd. fait partie du groupe LaFarge. La société mère de l'intimée s'est engagée:

> [TRADUCTION] à ne pas . . . directement ou indirectement, pendant la durée de ladite convention et pendant la période visée par toute reconduction, exploiter, exercer ou administrer un commerce de ciment ou de béton

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

At the request of the respondent the parties entered into second agreements (one agreement with each of the appellants, the Ocean Group and the LaFarge Group) on the expiry of the first. These second agreements, which were executed in June of 1965, were for a term of five years and by their terms required:

(1) the appellants to purchase all their requirements of lightweight aggregate from the respondent;

(2) the appellants to refrain from entering into the manufacture of such aggregate;

(3) the price payable by the appellants to be that specified in the agreements;

(4) the appellants to purchase a prescribed minimum quantity of the lightweight aggregate;

(5) the appellants to market blocks produced from lightweight aggregate, as well as lightweight ready-mix concrete, all at a price specified in the agreements.

In return the respondent undertook in the agreements not to enter into "fields in the cement and concrete industry in which . . . [the appellants are] presently engaged . . . ." The effect of these agreements was simply to make the respondent the sole supplier to the appellants of lightweight aggregate for use in the production of cement and cement products in British Columbia and to regulate the minimum volume and price of such lightweight aggregate to be so employed by the appellants, and further to regulate certain prices of the resultant lightweight concrete products.

The trial judge found that the respondent "was not aware it was selling in a completely structured market. It [the respondent] had wrongly assumed there would be competitive bidding for its product . . . " ((1979), 103 D.L.R. (3d) 587, at p. 608); and the Court of Appeal, on the same point, stated: "The plaintiff [respondent] entered into those agreements in the belief that there was free competition in the market." ((1981), 123 D.L.R.

ou de fabrication de produits de béton dans la province de la Colombie-Britannique, et à ne pas investir, directement ou indirectement, dans ce type de commerce en Colombie-Britannique . . .

À la demande de l'intimée, lorsque les premières conventions sont venues à expiration, les parties en ont conclu d'autres (il y avait une convention avec le groupe Ocean et une avec le groupe LaFarge). Ces nouvelles conventions, signées en juin 1965, avaient une durée de cinq ans et exigeaient:

(1) que les appelantes achètent à l'intimée tout le granulat léger dont elles avaient besoin;

(2) que les appelantes ne se lancent pas dans la fabrication de granulat léger;

(3) que le prix à payer par les appelantes soit celui fixé par les contrats;

(4) que les appelantes achètent une quantité minimale déterminée de granulat léger;

(5) que les appelantes vendent des blocs fabriqués à partir de granulat léger ainsi que du béton léger prêt à l'emploi, et ce au prix fixé dans les conventions.

En contrepartie, l'intimée s'est engagée à ne pas pénétrer les [TRADUCTION] «secteurs de l'industrie du ciment et du béton où . . . [les appelantes] exercent présentement leurs activités . . .». Ces conventions avaient simplement pour effet de faire de l'intimée l'unique fournisseur en granulat léger des appelantes pour la production de béton et de produits de béton en Colombie-Britannique, de régler les quantités et le prix minimaux du granulat léger ainsi utilisé et aussi de régler le prix de certains produits de béton léger.

Le juge de première instance a conclu que l'intimée [TRADUCTION] «ignorait qu'elle vendait sur un marché complètement structuré. Elle [l'intimée] avait supposé à tort qu'il y aurait de la concurrence pour son produit . . .» ((1979), 103 D.L.R. (3d) 587, à la p. 608); la Cour d'appel a dit sur ce même point: [TRADUCTION] «la demanderesse [l'intimée] a conclu ces conventions croyant qu'il y avait libre concurrence sur le marché.»

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

NBC BOA 000923

(3d) 66, at p. 80). However, the documentary evidence is to the contrary.

In a letter written by the president of the respondent to the president of the appellant LaFarge on April 1, 1965, the respondent acknowledged that the concrete "... industry is virtually controlled by two companies, and because of their capital resources, they can continue this dominance through the acquisition of almost all worthwhile outlets ...." The respondent's president then concluded that "any independent raw material supplier is in an untenable position, regardless of the merits of his product". That the respondent was aware of the legal consequences of the control of this industry is made apparent in the next paragraph:

> If the large companies refuse to make room in their outlets for new products, they are inviting a third force into the market in order to accommodate the independents. It is also our opinion that the spirit of the Combines Act is contravened by the sealing off of the market by the purchase of more and more outlets, by interference with transportation arrangements, by inter-company sales of materials and other co-operative action.

In this letter the respondent asserted that:

> Our only defence under these circumstances would be to expand the diversification programme which we initiated three years ago in order that we be able to take a direct hand in the market and have co-operative outlets for our material.

Indeed, the author states that in reliance upon the first agreement:

> We were led to believe at that time [the time of the first agreement] that the first contract would lead to a second one and, for this reason, we did not pursue our vertical integration programme. Therefore, we were very disappointed when we recently found out that Ocean Cement Ltd. was seriously considering entering the shale business. As can now be seen, reasonable predictions would indicate that the volume of shale required for this market will allow our company to make a profit provided we have all the expanded shale business in this area. Any loss of volume to anyone else, such as that ((1981), 123 D.L.R. (3d) 66, à la p. 80). Toutefois, ce n'est pas ce qui se dégage des documents versés au dossier.

Dans une lettre datée du 1er avril 1965, écrite au président de l'appelante LaFarge, le président de l'intimée reconnaîssait que [TRADUCTION] « ... l'industrie [du béton] est virtuellement dominée par deux sociétés qui, grâce à leurs ressources en capital, peuvent s'assurer de la continuation de cette domination par l'acquisition de la quasi-totalité des points de vente qui en valent la peine ... » Puis le président de l'intimée a conclu que [TRADUCTION] «tout fournisseur indépendant de matières premières se trouve dans une situation intenable, quelle que soit la qualité de son produit». Que l'intimée n'ignorât pas les conséquences juridiques de cette état de choses devient apparent à la lecture du paragraphe suivant:

> [TRADUCTION] Si les grandes sociétés interdisent aux nouveaux produits l'accès à leurs points de vente, elles invitent des tiers à pénétrer sur le marché afin de répondre aux besoins des indépendants. Nous sommes également d'avis que le fait de fermer hermétiquement le marché par l'achat d'un nombre toujours croissant de points de vente, par l'ingérence dans les dispositions prises pour le transport, par la vente de matériaux entre sociétés et par d'autres mesures de coopération, constitue une infraction à l'esprit de la Loi relative aux enquêtes sur les coalitions.

L'intimée affirmait dans cette lettre:

> [TRADUCTION] Notre unique ressource dans ces circonstances est d'étendre le programme de diversification entrepris il y a trois ans, ce qui nous permettra de participer directement au marché et d'avoir des points de vente coopératifs pour nos matériaux.

En fait, l'auteur de la lettre déclarait:

> [TRADUCTION] On nous avait donné à entendre à ce moment-là [au moment de la signature de la première convention] que le premier contrat serait suivi d'un second et, pour cette raison, nous n'avons pas poursuivi notre programme de concentration verticale. Par conséquent, nous avons été vivement déçus d'apprendre dernièrement qu'Ocean Cement Ltd. envisage sérieusement de se lancer dans le schiste. Or, comme on le sait maintenant, il paraît, selon des prévisions raisonnables, que la quantité de schiste requise pour ce marché permettra à notre société de réaliser un profit, à condition proposed by Ocean a short time ago would, of course, throw us into a loss position once more.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

NBC BOA 000924

Having recited all of this the respondent's senior officer stated:

> Regardless of the foregoing, I believe it would be more profitable for our company to extend the present arrangements whereby we supply your company with all your expanded shale requirements on a fixed contract basis. I therefore propose a five year firm contract on the basis laid out in the attached Schedule 'A'.

The letter concluded:

> I am sure that if your company will accept the principle of our supplying you with all your shale requirements (both for aggregate and Pozzolan) then we will soon be able to conclude an equitable arrangement.

As already observed, the courts below concluded, in the words of the Court of Appeal, "the plaintiff [respondent] was a competitor of the defendants [appellants]" (at p. 81). However, the letter of the respondent from which the quotations above have been taken is at pains to point out:

> Both expanded shale and Pozzolan [light weight aggregate] should not be looked upon as competitors to heavy aggregate and cement.

The evidence is clear that the choice between the use of lightweight or heavy aggregate is made not by the concrete supplier, such as the appellants, but rather by the customer or buyer of the concrete. Usually this means the architect or engineer employed by the owner undertaking the construction project. Some argument was made by counsel for the respondent that the appellants had priced the concrete produced by use of Saturnalite so high as to discourage its use. Suffice it to say that there was no such finding, and the terms of the contract specify the price of certain end products in any case. With reference to this the learned trial judge stated, at p. 614:

qu'elle puisse être l'unique fournisseur de schiste expansé dans cette région. Si quelqu'un d'autre devait prendre une part du marché, comme Ocean s'est proposée de le faire il n'y a pas longtemps, il est évident que cela nous mettrait de nouveau en déficit.

Ayant dit tout cela, le président de l'intimée ajoutait:

> [TRADUCTION] Malgré cela, je crois qu'il nous sera plus profitable de maintenir la situation actuelle en vertu de laquelle nous vous fournissons, suivant les modalités prévues au contrat, tout le schiste expansé dont vous avez besoin. Je propose donc un contrat ferme d'une durée de cinq ans dont les modalités seront conformes à l'annexe «A» ci-jointe.

La lettre se terminait ainsi:

> [TRADUCTION] Je suis certain que si vous acceptez le principe selon lequel nous allons vous fournir tout le schiste dont vous aurez besoin (aussi bien pour la production de granulat que pour la production de pouzzolane), nous allons pouvoir bientôt en arriver à un accord équitable.

Comme je l'ai déjà fait remarquer, l'une et l'autre cours d'instance inférieure ont conclu, pour reprendre les termes employés par la Cour d'appel, que [TRADUCTION] «la demanderesse [intimée] faisait concurrence aux défenderesses [appelantes]» (à la p. 81). Toutefois, l'auteur de la lettre de l'intimée, d'où proviennent les extraits précités, s'est appliqué à signaler:

> [TRADUCTION] Il ne faut considérer ni le schiste expansé ni le pouzzolane [granulat léger] comme des sources de concurrence avec le granulat lourd et le ciment.

Il se dégage nettement de la preuve que ce n'est pas le fournisseur de béton (les appelantes) qui choisit entre l'emploi de granulat léger ou celui de granulat lourd, mais plutôt le client ou l'acheteur du béton. Cela veut dire normalement l'architecte ou l'ingénieur engagé par le propriétaire qui entreprend la construction. L'avocat de l'intimée a fait valoir, sans insister, que les appelantes avaient fixé un prix prohibitif pour le béton fabriqué à partir de Saturnalite. Signalons simplement qu'il n'y a pas eu de conclusion dans ce sens et, de toute façon, le contrat établit le prix de certains produits finis. Le juge de première instance a dit à ce propos, à la p. 614:

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

Because the concrete manufacturer only supplied the concrete after it had been specified by the architect or the engineer did not necessarily mean the manufacturer had lost effective control over the type of concrete to be specified. Surely cost benefit studies, or cost analysis studies, would have had to be conducted by the architect or engineer at the design stage and prices would have had to be obtained from the manufacturers.

Light-weight always did cost more because of the manufacturing process but if the savings effected by the use thereof were greater than the additional cost incurred for light-weight, then presumably light-weight would be used in a free competitive market.

The Court of Appeal stated with reference to this topic, at p. 78:

> The evidence disclosed that the decision as to whether an owner or contractor would use light-weight concrete, in preference to heavy-weight concrete, was made at the design stage of a project, by an architect or engineer. The decision turned primarily on cost and was the result of a cost benefit analysis made by the architect or engineer.
>
> When an invitation to tender was issued by a contractor the decision had already been made as to what portion of the project would involve light-weight concrete and what portion of the project would use heavy-weight concrete. The defendants would respond to the invitation to tender by quoting prices for the volumes of light-weight and heavy-weight required for the project.

Because lightweight aggregate had a specific use in the concrete industry, and because of the respondent's vested interest in the promotion of that use, the respondent's salesmen were active in the concrete-user market promoting the use of lightweight concrete. The judgment on appeal below, at p. 79, stated with reference to this:

> The plaintiff had salesmen who were active in the market, promoting the use of light-weight concrete, and they, knowing the published price of the defendants' heavy-weight concrete, would not only be able to quote a price for light-weight concrete, but from 1965 through 1970, during the period of the agreements between the plaintiff [the respondent] and the defendants, could guarantee the price of light-weight concrete to architects and engineers.

Of critical importance is the statement of the Court of Appeal: "The evidence disclosed that architects and engineers in preparing a cost benefit [TRADUCTION] Le fait que le fabricant de béton en fournit seulement après que l'architecte ou l'ingénieur en a précisé le type, ne veut pas nécessairement dire que le fabricant a perdu tout pouvoir réel sur le type de béton à choisir. Il aurait certainement fallu que l'architecte ou l'ingénieur effectue à l'étape du dessin des études coûts-avantages ou des analyses des coûts et qu'ils se renseignent auprès des fabricants concernant les prix.

Le béton léger coûte toujours plus cher en raison du mode de fabrication, mais si les économies réalisées par son emploi justifient son coût plus élevé, alors c'est vraisemblablement le béton léger qui sera utilisé dans un marché où il y a libre concurrence.

La Cour d'appel a dit sur cette question, à la p. 78:

> [TRADUCTION] La preuve révèle que c'est l'architecte ou l'ingénieur qui décide, au stade du dessin, si un propriétaire ou un entrepreneur utilisera du béton léger de préférence au béton lourd. L'architecte ou l'ingénieur procède à une analyse coûts-avantages et la décision est prise principalement en fonction du coût.
>
> Lorsqu'un entrepreneur fait un appel d'offres, la décision quant aux quantités de béton léger et de béton lourd à utiliser a déjà été prise. À la suite d'un appel d'offres les défenderesses proposaient des prix pour les quantités de béton léger et de béton lourd requises.

Puisque le granulat léger sert à une fin précise dans l'industrie du béton et puisqu'il était de l'intérêt de l'intimée de promouvoir son utilisation à cette fin, les vendeurs de l'intimée s'appliquaient à encourager les consommateurs à employer le béton léger. L'arrêt de la Cour d'appel dit à ce sujet, à la p. 79:

> [TRADUCTION] La demanderesse avait des vendeurs qui s'occupaient activement, sur le marché, de la promotion de l'emploi du béton léger et qui, connaissant le prix publié du béton lourd des défenderesses, étaient en mesure non seulement d'établir un prix pour le béton léger, mais, de 1965 à 1970 lorsque les conventions entre la demanderesse [l'intimée] et les défenderesses s'appliquaient, de garantir aux architectes et aux ingénieurs le prix du béton léger.

La déclaration suivante de la Cour d'appel revêt une importance capitale: [TRADUCTION] «La preuve révèle que lorsque les architectes et les analysis would obtain the price for lightweight concrete from the plaintiff [respondent]". The evidence also discloses, and it was so found by the learned trial judge, that during the five-year term of the 1965 agreements the price spread between light and ordinary aggregate rose from five cents to six cents per block by the agreement of the respondent and appellants. At trial it was also found (at p. 605) that "there was little evidence adduced that the defendants [appellants] denigrated or bad-mouthed the plaintiff's [respondent's] product". Furthermore, prior to the expiry of the 1965 agreements, the respondent increased the price of lightweight aggregate supplied to the appellants by one dollar per cubic yard contrary to the terms of the agreements. In the result, the respondent did not realize the volume of sales to the appellants during the second agreement. Instead of delivering to the appellants 411,832 cu. yds., there was a shortfall of 91,718 cu. yds. There is no clear explanation of this disparity between contract guarantees and performance. However, the trial judge noted at p. 599 that:

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

> During the spring of 1969 as a result of heavy demand for Saturnalite and production problems the plaintiff was unable to supply the amounts required by its customers and consequently found it necessary to institute a quota system.

The agreements expired in 1970 and apparently the respondent elected not to seek a renewal. Presumably the respondent by that time had determined either that it was sufficiently established in business that it could "go it alone", or that the agreement had been found to be improvident in that it failed to produce the volume necessary for the respondent to operate its business at a profit. Whatever may be the reason, the respondent did not seek and there was no renewal of the 1965 agreement.

Shortly thereafter, the appellant Ocean, in the course of reviewing its block business in 1970-71, determined that in the production of lightweight aggregate concrete products, Ocean would thereafter use as a lightweight aggregate pumice from the Seattle area instead of Saturnalite. The appellant ingénieurs préparaient une analyse coûts-avantages, ils se renseignaient auprès de la demanderesse [intimée] sur le prix du béton léger». Il se dégage également de la preuve, et c'est ce qu'a conclu le savant juge de première instance, qu'au cours de la durée de cinq ans des conventions intervenues en 1965, l'écart entre le prix du granulat léger et du granulat ordinaire est passé, sur accord de l'intimée et des appelantes, de cinq cents, où il était, à six cents le bloc. Le premier juge a conclu (à la p. 605) en outre que [TRADUCTION] «la preuve produite n'indique guère que les défenderesses [appelantes] ont dénigré ou rabaissé le produit de la demanderesse [intimée]». De plus, avant l'expiration des conventions de 1965, l'intimée les a violées en augmentant d'un dollar la verge cube le prix du granulat léger fourni aux appelantes. En conséquence, le volume de ses ventes aux appelantes a baissé pendant la durée du second contrat. En effet, elle a livré aux appelantes 91 718 verges cubes de moins que les 411 832 verges cubes prévues. La raison de ce décalage n'est pas claire. Toutefois, le juge de première instance a fait remarquer à la p. 599 que:

> [TRADUCTION] Au printemps de 1969, par suite d'une forte demande de Saturnalite et en raison de certains problèmes de production, la demanderesse s'est trouvée dans l'impossibilité de fournir à ses clients les quantités dont ils avaient besoin et a dû, par conséquent, instaurer un système de contingentement.

Les conventions ont expiré en 1970 et l'intimée a apparemment choisi de ne pas les renouveler. Selon toute vraisemblance, elle avait alors décidé soit qu'elle était assez solidement établie pour pouvoir faire cavalier seul, soit que les conventions ne donnaient pas les résultats souhaités en ce sens qu'elles ne lui avaient pas permis de réaliser le chiffre d'affaires nécessaire pour assurer la rentabilité de son entreprise. Quelle que puisse être la raison, l'intimée n'a pas cherché à reconduire les conventions de 1965 et celles-ci n'ont donc pas été renouvelées.

Peu après, l'appelante Ocean, au cours d'un examen de ses ventes de blocs de béton pour l'année 1970-1971, a décidé qu'elle emploierait désormais comme granulat léger dans la production de produits de béton léger de la pierre ponce provenant de la région de Seattle au lieu de Satur-

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

LaFarge followed the same course about a year later. Some Saturnalite continued to be used by the appellants thereafter, but only for a limited range of concrete products. In the result, the respondent's sales by 1973 had dropped to about 60 per cent of its annual volume at the end of the contract period. The respondent's plant ceased operations in late 1974.

Both the trial judge and the Court of Appeal, at pp. 616 and 87, found that the appellants "did not make deliberate and specific plans to drive the plaintiff [respondent] out of business." Both courts did find, however, that the respondent was a competitor of the appellants, and that since the appellants did intend, in the words of the Court of Appeal, "to eliminate all competitors and succeeded in so doing", at p. 89), the appellants therefore "eliminated" the respondent. The Court of Appeal in this line of reasoning expressly stated at p. 81: "The plaintiff [respondent] was a competitor of the defendants [appellants]." It is difficult to determine the evidentiary basis for this conclusion. The trial judge seems to have reached the same result by a somewhat different line of reasoning. His Lordship stated, at p. 621:

> It was manifestly apparent that one of the objects and purposes of the marketing arrangement was to prevent competition from any source including that from the plaintiff.

This statement immediately follows a reference to the negotiations leading to the execution of the 1963 contract, already quoted in part:

> At the time the 1963 contracts were entered into with the plaintiff the quid pro quo was that Graymont Limited and its principal shareholders would not compete with the defendants by agreeing not to . . . [engage in the business of manufacturing concrete products].

It may be that the trial judge, in finding that the object of the appellants was "to prevent competition from any source including that from the plaintiff [respondent]", was relying upon the immediately preceding quotation from the 1963 covenant executed by the respondent. By that covenant the nalite. L'appelante LaFarge a pris la même décision environ un an plus tard. Les appelantes ont continué à utiliser une certaine quantité de Saturnalite, mais seulement pour un nombre restreint de produits de béton. Finalement, les ventes de l'intimée en 1973 ont baissé à environ 60 p. 100 du chiffre annuel à l'expiration des contrats. L'usine de l'intimée a fermé ses portes vers la fin de 1974.

Aussi bien le juge de première instance que la Cour d'appel ont conclu que les appelantes [TRADUCTION] «n'ont élaboré aucun plan traduisant une intention délibérée et précise de ruiner la demanderesse [intimée]» (aux pp. 616 et 87). Les deux cours ont toutefois conclu que l'intimée était en concurrence avec les appelantes et que, puisque celles-ci ont bel et bien visé, selon les termes employés par la Cour d'appel, [TRADUCTION] «à éliminer tous les concurrents et sont parvenues à le faire» (à la p. 89), il s'ensuit qu'elles ont «éliminé» l'intimée. Dans ce même ordre d'idées, la Cour d'appel dit expressément à la p. 81: [TRADUCTION] «La demanderesse [intimée] faisait concurrence aux défenderesses [appelantes]». On voit mal sur quelle preuve cette conclusion peut se fonder. Le juge de première instance semble être parvenu au même résultat par un raisonnement un peu différent. Il dit, à la p. 621:

> [TRADUCTION] Il est bien évident que l'accord de commercialisation avait notamment pour objet et pour but d'éliminer toute concurrence, y compris celle de la demanderesse.

Cet extrait suit immédiatement une déclaration, que j'ai déjà citée en partie, concernant les négociations qui ont abouti à la signature du contrat en 1963:

> [TRADUCTION] Lorsque les contrats avec la demanderesse ont été signés en 1963, Graymont Limited et ses actionnaires principaux ont dû en contrepartie renoncer à faire concurrence aux défenderesses en s'engageant à ne pas . . . [se lancer dans la fabrication de produits de béton].

Il est possible qu'en concluant que les appelantes avaient pour objet «d'éliminer toute concurrence, y compris celle de la demanderesse [intimée]», le juge de première instance se soit fondé sur l'extrait qu'il venait de citer du contrat de 1963 signé par l'intimée. L'intimée s'est engagée par là à ne pas respondent undertook not to become a competitor of the appellants, which has quite a different commercial connotation from an agreement between actual competitors. We are not here concerned with the significance of that definition under the Combines Investigation Act, and I only make reference to the distinction in order to determine and examine the actual finding made by the learned trial judge and the Court of Appeal on this issue.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

There are two senses in which the learned trial judge seems to have employed the term "competitor" with reference to the potential competition which could arise between the parties. If the respondent, as a raw material producer, extended his industrial operation vertically, the end product would be concrete products which would compete in the market with those of the appellants. The second sense in which it might be argued that the parties are competitors arises from the fact that the respondent produces one type of aggregate used in the production of concrete and the appellants produced another type of aggregate used in the production of concrete products. In support of its conclusion that the respondent is a competitor of the appellants, the Court of Appeal cited the trial judge's summary of the evidence of an expert witness:

> Both Ocean and LaFarge had an incentive not to use lightweight aggregates to maximum benefit to their customers for by so doing they would use less cement and aggregate which they produced and sold themselves [at p. 613];

and concluded at p. 81:

> The plaintiff was a competitor of the defendants. When light-weight concrete was specified by an architect or engineer this reduced the demand for cement, aggregates and reinforcing steel which they produced or sold themselves.

There is, however, no finding that the end products in question (light and ordinary concrete) are competitive in the sense that one can be used interchangeably with the other. The products made from lightweight aggregate are, according to the evidence, used where specified by the technicians in control of the building operation in question. There is no evidence and no finding that the entrer en concurrence avec les appelantes, ce qui, en matière commerciale, est bien différent d'un accord entre de véritables concurrents. La façon dont la Loi relative aux enquêtes sur les coalitions définit ce terme ne nous intéresse pas ici, et je mentionne cette distinction à la seule fin de déterminer et d'examiner la véritable conclusion du savant juge de première instance et de la Cour d'appel sur cette question.

En ce qui a trait à la concurrence qui aurait pu naître entre les parties, le premier juge semble donner deux sens au terme «concurrent». Si l'intimée, en sa qualité de productrice de matières premières, procédait à la concentration verticale de ses activités industrielles, les produits de béton qui en résulteraient seraient mis sur le marché en concurrence avec ceux des appelantes. On pourrait également prétendre que les parties étaient des concurrentes en ce sens que l'intimée produisait un type de granulat utilisé dans la production de béton alors que les appelantes en produisaient un autre type employé pour la fabrication de produits de béton. La Cour d'appel a cité, à l'appui de sa conclusion que l'intimée était une concurrente des appelantes, le résumé qu'a fait le premier juge de la déposition d'un témoin expert:

> [TRADUCTION] Aussi bien Ocean que LaFarge avaient tout intérêt à ne pas faire profiter leurs clients au maximum des granulats légers, car elles réduisaient ainsi l'utilisation du ciment et du granulat qu'elles produisaient et vendaient elles-mêmes, [à la p. 613];

La Cour d'appel a conclu, à la p. 81:

> [TRADUCTION] La demanderesse faisait concurrence aux défenderesses. Lorsqu'un architecte ou un ingénieur exigeait spécialement du béton léger, cela diminuait la demande de ciment, de granulats et d'acier d'armature que les défenderesses produisaient ou vendaient elles-mêmes.

Cela ne revient cependant pas à conclure qu'il y a concurrence entre les produits finis en question (le béton léger et le béton ordinaire) en ce sens qu'ils sont interchangeables. Suivant la preuve, les produits faits de granulat léger sont employés chaque fois que les techniciens chargés des travaux de construction les exigent. Il n'y a ni preuve, ni conclusion que ces produits sont interchangeables, products may be used interchangeably, one for the other, and, as recognized by the Court of Appeal, it was the plaintiff who provided the architects and engineers with the price of lightweight concrete and who did the product promotion. It is difficult to see, therefore, in what sense there is actual competition between the respondent and the appellants.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

I now turn to the first of the four submissions advanced by the appellants, supra, relating to the intent requirement of the tort of conspiracy to injure. While there may have been some doubt as to the required intent in the common law tort of conspiracy, there never appears to have been any doubt that one element of the tort of conspiracy to injure is an intent to cause damage to the respondent. The learned author of Salmond on Torts, 17th ed., (1977), put it this way at p. 377:

> Since the Crofter case [[1942] A.C. 435] the common law is clear. A combination wilfully to do an act causing damage to a man in his trade or other interests is unlawful and if damage in fact is caused is actionable as a conspiracy.

Damage is, of course, the gist of most tortious actions, and outside of the field of negligence, the intention to inflict damage must be present. Vide Law of Torts, Fleming, 5th ed., pp. 24 and 33.

A recent and most helpful discussion of this tort in circumstances not far removed from those arising in this appeal, is found in Lonrho Ltd. v. Shell Petroleum Co. Ltd., [1982] A.C. 173, [1981] 2 All E.R. 456, a decision of the House of Lords handed down on June 4, 1981. Lord Diplock, with whom the other members of the House of Lords concurred, divides the tort into two components. With respect to the first element or rule he said at pp. 188 and 463 respectively:

> Regarded as a civil tort, however, conspiracy is a highly anomalous cause of action. The gist of the cause of action is damage to the plaintiff; so long as it remains unexecuted the agreement, which alone constitutes the crime of conspiracy, causes no damage; it is only acts done in execution of the agreement that are capable of doing that. So the tort, unlike the crime, consists not of l'un pouvant être substitué à l'autre et, comme l'a reconnu la Cour d'appel, c'est la demanderesse qui a informé les architectes et les ingénieurs du prix du béton léger et qui a fait la publicité du produit. Donc, on voit mal dans quel sens il peut y avoir une véritable concurrence entre l'intimée et les appelantes.

Abordons maintenant le premier des quatre arguments (précités) invoqués par les appelantes. Cet argument se rapporte à l'élément moral d'intention du délit civil de complot en vue de nuire. S'il a pu subsister un doute quant à l'intention requise pour le délit civil de complot qui existe en common law, il paraît qu'on n'a jamais douté qu'un des éléments constitutifs de ce délit civil est une intention de porter préjudice à la victime. Voici ce qu'en dit le savant auteur de Salmond on Torts, 17e éd, (1977), à la p. 377:

> [TRADUCTION] Depuis l'arrêt Crofter [[1942 A.C. 435] la situation en common law est claire. Une coalition en vue de l'accomplissement volontaire d'un acte qui lèse une personne dans sa profession ou dans ses autres intérêts est illégale et, s'il y a effectivement préjudice, elle donne ouverture à une poursuite pour complot.

L'existence d'un préjudice est, bien entendu, essentielle à la plupart des recours délictuels et, abstraction faite du domaine de la négligence, il doit y avoir intention de causer ce préjudice. Voir Law of Torts, Fleming, 5e éd., aux pp. 24 et 33.

L'arrêt récent Lonrho Ltd. v. Shell Petroleum Co. Ltd., [1982] A.C. 173, [1981] 2 All E.R. 456, que la Chambre des lords a rendu le 4 juin 1981, contient une analyse des plus instructives de ce délit civil dans des circonstances pas très éloignées de celles de la présente espèce. Lord Diplock, à l'avis duquel les autres membres de la Chambre des lords se sont rangés, a établi qu'il s'agit d'un délit civil à deux volets. En ce qui a trait au premier, il dit aux pp. 188 et 463 respectivement:

> [TRADUCTION] Vu comme un délit civil, cependant, le complot est une cause d'action très exceptionnelle. Elle est fondée sur un préjudice causé au demandeur; tant que la convention, qui à elle seule constitue le crime de complot, n'est pas exécutée, il n'en résulte aucun préjudice; seuls peuvent avoir cet effet les actes accomplis en exécution de la convention. Donc le délit civil, à la agreement but of concerted action taken pursuant to agreement.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

With reference to the second element of conspiracy, His Lordship continued at pp. 189 and 464:

The civil tort of conspiracy to injure the plaintiff's commercial interests where that is the predominant purpose of the agreement between the defendants and of the acts done in execution of it which caused damage to the plaintiff, must I think be accepted by this House as too well-established to be discarded however anomalous it may seem today. It was applied by this House 80 years ago in Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A.C. 495, and accepted as good law in the Crofter case [1942] A.C. 435, where it was made clear that injury to the plaintiff and not the self-interest of the defendants must be the predominant purpose of the agreement in execution of which the damage-causing acts were done.

It was argued in the House of Lords that the tort should be extended to embrace the situation where the conspiratorial conduct resulted in a contravention of penal law, but did not include an intention by the conspiring defendants to injure the plaintiff. This argument was rejected by Lord Diplock in the following words, at pp. 189 and 464:

My Lords, my choice is unhesitatingly the same as that of Parker J. and all three members of the Court of Appeal. I am against extending the scope of civil tort of conspiracy beyond acts done in execution of an agreement entered into by two or more persons for the purpose not of protecting their own interests but of injuring the interests of the plaintiff.

There is here no finding by the learned trial judge of any intention by the appellants to injure the respondent in its business. The market-sharing agreements, to which reference will be made below, were not alleged nor found to have been entered into with the plaintiff in mind at all. The 1963 and 1965 agreements between the parties to this appeal were of course not directed against the respondent, and it is axiomatic that the agreements did not have as their object injury to the respondent. The substantial discontinuance of the use of Saturnalite by the appellants after the agreements expired was not found to have been an différence du crime, consiste non pas en la convention, mais en l'action concertée entreprise pour l'exécuter.

Sa Seigneurie ajoute aux pp. 189 et 464, concernant le second élément du complot:

[TRADUCTION] Selon moi, cette Chambre doit reconnaître le délit civil de complot en vue de nuire aux intérêts commerciaux du demandeur lorsque tel est l'objet prédominant de la convention entre les défendeurs et des actes accomplis en exécution de cette convention qui ont causé un préjudice au demandeur, car il s'agit d'un délit civil trop bien établi pour être écarté, quelque exceptionnel qu'il puisse paraître aujourd'hui. Cette Chambre l'a appliqué il y a 80 ans dans l'arrêt Quinn v. Leathem [1901] A.C. 495, et a confirmé sa validité en droit dans l'arrêt Crofter [1942] A.C. 435, où l'on a signalé clairement que l'accord en exécution duquel les actes dommageables ont été accomplis doit avoir pour objet prédominant de causer un préjudice au demandeur et non pas simplement de servir les intérêts personnels des défendeurs.

On a fait valoir devant la Chambre des lords qu'il y a lieu d'étendre ce délit civil de manière à comprendre la situation où les actes accomplis en exécution du complot contreviennent au droit pénal sans qu'il y ait intention de la part des comploteurs défendeurs de porter préjudice au demandeur. Lord Diplock a rejeté cet argument en disant aux pp. 189 et 464:

[TRADUCTION] Vos Seigneuries, je me range sans hésitation à l'avis du juge Parker et des trois membres de la Cour d'appel. Je m'oppose à ce que le délit civil de complot soit étendu au-delà des actes accomplis en exécution d'une convention conclue par au moins deux personnes, non pas pour protéger leurs propres intérêts, mais dans la seule intention de nuire à ceux du demandeur.

Le savant juge de première instance n'a pas conclu en l'espèce à l'existence d'une intention de la part des appelantes de nuire à l'entreprise de l'intimée. On n'a pas allégué et il n'a pas été conclu que les conventions relatives au partage du marché, sur lesquelles je reviendrai plus loin, visaient la demanderesse. Les conventions de 1963 et de 1965 entre les parties en l'espèce ne visaient évidemment pas l'intimée et il va de soi qu'elles n'avaient pas pour objet de lui porter préjudice. Le premier juge a conclu que, si, après l'expiration des conventions, les appelantes ont dans une grande mesure cessé de se servir du Saturnalite, ce n'était pas dans le act done as part of a plan calculated to damage the respondent. Pumice required no processing and hence was a less expensive ingredient in concrete, and there is no evidence of any supply difficulties of the kind mentioned by the Court of Appeal in connection with Saturnalite. Indeed, the respondent, in attempting to seal off the threat from pumice, requested the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce of the Government of Canada to take appropriate action through customs duties to keep the product from invading the British Columbia concrete industry. This will be the subject of further comment with reference to the third submission made by the appellants. There is, in short, no evidence and no finding of the necessary intention to injure which would entitle the respondent to the recovery of damages for the tort of conspiracy to injure.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

The appellants took the position before this Court that success in any one of their four submissions would be sufficient to require that this appeal be allowed. This is true, however, only if the scope of the tort of conspiracy is confined to situations in which the defendants specifically intended to injure the plaintiff. In any event, the parties having directed their arguments to all four issues, it is appropriate that this Court respond. I therefore turn to the second issue.

The law concerning the tort of conspiracy is far from clear with respect to conduct of the defendants which is itself unlawful. The tort of conspiracy to injure is complete, as we have seen from Lonrho, supra, and the included reference to Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co. v. Veitch, [1942] A.C. 435, where the predominant purpose of the conspiracy is to injure the plaintiff and damage in fact results. Thus the concerted action to give effect to the intent completes the tort, and if an unlawful object is necessary (assuming damages have been suffered by the plaintiff), it is but the object to injure the plaintiff. As Lord Cave said in Sorrell v. Smith, [1925] A.C. 700, at p. 712:

> A combination of two or more persons wilfully to injure a man in his trade is unlawful and, if it results in damage to him, is actionable.

dessein de nuire à l'intimée. La pierre ponce, qui n'exige aucun traitement, est un composant moins coûteux du béton, et rien n'indique qu'elle présente des difficultés d'approvisionnement du genre mentionné par la Cour d'appel relativement au Saturnalite. En fait, l'intimée, dans une tentative de parer à la menace que représentait la pierre ponce, a demandé au ministère fédéral de l'Industrie et du Commerce de prendre les mesures douanières appropriées pour empêcher ce produit d'envahir l'industrie du béton de la Colombie-Britannique, sujet dont j'aurai l'occasion de reparler au cours de mon examen du troisième argument des appelantes. Bref, la preuve n'établit pas l'existence de l'intention de nuire requise pour que l'intimée ait droit à des dommages-intérêts pour le délit civil de complot en vue de nuire, et on n'a pas non plus conclu à l'existence de cette intention.

Les appelantes font valoir en cette Cour qu'il suffit qu'un seul de leurs quatre arguments soit retenu pour que ce pourvoi soit accueilli. Cela n'est vrai, cependant, que si la portée du délit civil de complot se limite aux situations où les défendeurs ont visé expressément à porter préjudice au demandeur. Quoi qu'il en soit, étant donné que les parties ont présenté des arguments sur chacune des quatre questions en litige, il convient que la Cour y réponde. Je passe donc à la deuxième question.

L'état du droit en ce qui concerne le délit civil de complot est loin d'être clair dans les cas où la conduite des défendeurs est en soi illégale. Comme il se dégage de l'arrêt Lonrho, précité, et de l'arrêt Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Co. v. Veitch, [1942] A.C. 435, qui y est mentionné, il y a délit civil de complot dès lors que l'objet prédominant du complot est de porter préjudice au demandeur et qu'il y a effectivement préjudice. Ainsi, l'action concertée en vue de donner suite à l'intention complète le délit civil et, si un objet illégal est nécessaire (à supposer que le demandeur ait subi un préjudice), cet objet consiste simplement à vouloir nuire au demandeur. Comme le dit lord Cave dans l'arrêt Sorrell v. Smith, [1925] A.C. 700, à la p. 712:

> [TRADUCTION] Une coalition d'au moins deux personnes en vue de nuire volontairement à une personne dans sa profession est illégale et, si un préjudice lui est causé, elle donne ouverture à une poursuite.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

The conspiracy to commit an unlawful act in the criminal law is, in this respect, differently structured. The question which must now be considered is whether the scope of the tort of conspiracy in this country extends beyond situations in which the defendants' predominant purpose is to cause injury to the plaintiff, and includes cases in which this intention to injure is absent but the conduct of the defendants is by itself unlawful, and in fact causes damage to the plaintiff. The causative problems common to the second and third submissions of the appellants will be discussed mainly in connection with the latter. Statements made in a number of English cases decided prior to Lonrho, supra, appeared to endorse this latter aspect of the tort and led the learned author of Salmond on Torts, supra, at p. 379 to conclude:

> A second form of actionable conspiracy exists when two or more combine to injure a third person by unlawful means—e.g. the commission of a crime or tort, or the infringement of a guaranteed constitutional right . . . . In such a case it is irrelevant that the object of the conspirators in using those means may be legitimate. Combinations of this kind must be contrasted with what might be called "Quinn v. Leathem conspiracies," where the means are legitimate but the object is not. . . . Hence a conspiracy may be actionable if either the end or the means, or both, are unlawful.

Lord Diplock declined to accept this analysis, however, observing in his judgment in Lonrho, supra, at pp. 189 and 464, that:

> . . . in none of the judgments in decided cases in civil actions for damages for conspiracy does it appear that the mind of the author of the judgment was directed to a case where the damage-causing acts although neither done for the purpose of injuring the plaintiff nor actionable at his suit if they had been done by one person alone, were nevertheless a contravention of some penal law.

As a result, Lord Diplock concluded that the House of Lords had an "unfettered choice" in defining the scope of the tort of conspiracy, and elected to limit the civil action to acts done in combination for the predominant purpose of injuring the interests of the plaintiff.

Le complot en vue de commettre un acte illégal qui existe en droit criminel est différent à cet égard. La question qui se pose maintenant est de savoir si, au Canada, le délit civil de complot s'étend au-delà des situations où le but prédominant des défendeurs est de nuire au demandeur et s'il englobe les cas où cette intention de nuire est absente, quoique la conduite du défendeur soit en elle-même illégale et porte en fait préjudice au demandeur. Les problèmes de causalité communs aux deuxième et troisième prétentions des appelantes seront examinés surtout relativement à la troisième. Plusieurs décisions anglaises rendues avant l'arrêt Lonrho, précité, semblent appuyer ce dernier aspect du délit civil de complot et ont amené le savant auteur de Salmond on Torts, précité, à la p. 379, à conclure:

> [TRADUCTION] Un second type de complot donne ouverture à une poursuite; il s'agit du cas où au moins deux personnes se concertent en vue de nuire à un tiers par des moyens illégaux — par exemple, la perpétration d'un crime ou d'un délit civil, ou la violation d'un droit garanti par la constitution . . . Dans un cas pareil, il est sans intérêt que les conspirateurs aient employé ces moyens pour atteindre un objet qui peut être légitime. Il faut faire une distinction entre les coalitions de ce genre et ce qu'on peut appeler les «complots du type Quinn v. Leathem», où les moyens sont légitimes mais non pas l'objet . . . Ainsi, un complot peut donner ouverture à une poursuite si l'objet ou les moyens ou les deux sont illégaux.

Lord Diplock a toutefois rejeté cette analyse, faisant remarquer dans l'arrêt Lonrho, précité, aux pp. 189 et 464:

> [TRADUCTION] . . . il ne ressort d'aucune décision rendue dans le cadre d'une action civile en dommages-intérêts pour complot qu'on ait signalé à l'auteur des motifs de jugement des cas où les actes dommageables sans avoir pour objet de nuire au demandeur et sans lui conférer le droit d'intenter des poursuites judiciaires s'ils avaient été accomplis par une seule personne, constituaient néanmoins une infraction à quelque loi pénale.

En définitive, lord Diplock a conclu que la Chambre des lords avait «l'embarras du choix» lorsqu'il s'agissait de préciser l'étendue du délit civil de complot, et il a décidé de restreindre l'action civile aux actes accomplis en exécution d'une coalition dont l'objet prédominant est de nuire aux intérêts du demandeur.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

The history of this tort in the United States has been quite different. While there are cases to the contrary, the courts generally have for many years concluded that the tort of conspiracy to injury forms no part of the law. This has been said to be due to the unreality of the tort of conspiracy when the underlying act is not tortious when committed by an individual; and because of the development of the actions of unfair competition and prima facie tort in the field of commercial regulation. See Prosser, Law of Torts, 4th ed., at p. 291; Civil Conspiracy, L.S.U.C. Special Lectures 1973, 495, at p. 502.

Canadian law concerning the tort of conspiracy displays the same lack of definition which characterized the law of England prior to the Lonrho decision. The subject of the tort of conspiracy has been comprehensively and critically examined in Civil Conspiracy: An Unwieldy Vessel Rides a Judicial Tempest (1982), 16 U.B.C. L. Rev. 229, by Peter Burns. I agree with respect to his conclusion at p. 254 that:

> The main effect of a finding that a conspiracy by unlawful means has been made out is to exclude the negative defence of predominant legitimate motive, that is, the advancement of the defendants' own legitimate interests.

See as well p. 247.

The respondent relies upon two decisions of this Court, International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. Therien, [1960] S.C.R. 265, and Gagnon v. Foundation Maritime Limited, [1961] S.C.R. 435, in support of its submission that once the unlawfulness of the means has been established, an enquiry into the predominant object of the conspiracy, that is an intent to injure, is unnecessary.

Referring to statements made in the Therien case, Ritchie J., delivering the judgment of the majority in Gagnon, said at p. 446:

> In light of these observations, it becomes unnecessary to embark upon the difficult exercise of determining whether or not a breach of s. 22(1) of the Labour Relations Act gives rise to a statutory cause of action because when inquiry is "made of the statute law" in the Aux États-Unis, ce délit civil a suivi une évolution tout à fait différente. Malgré certaines décisions en sens contraire, les cours ont conclu d'une manière générale, et cela depuis bien des années, que le délit civil de complot en vue de nuire n'existe pas en droit. On attribue cela d'une part au caractère irréel du délit civil de complot quand il est fondé sur un acte qui, commis par une seule personne, n'est pas délictuel et, d'autre part, à l'émergence, dans le domaine de la réglementation commerciale, d'actions en concurrence déloyale et délit présumé. Voir Prosser, Law of Torts, 4e éd., à la p. 291; Civil Conspiracy, L.S.U.C., Conférences spéciales, 1973, 495, à la p. 502.

Le droit canadien relatif au délit civil de complot révèle la même indétermination que celle qui caractérisait le droit anglais avant l'arrêt Lonrho. Dans un article intitulé Civil Conspiracy: An Unwieldy Vessel Rides a Judicial Tempest (1982), 16 U.B.C. L. Rev. 229, Peter Burns fait une étude critique exhaustive du délit civil de complot. Je partage sa conclusion, à la p. 254, selon laquelle:

> [TRADUCTION] L'effet principal d'une conclusion selon laquelle on a établi l'existence d'un complot qui devait être exécuté par des moyens illégaux, est d'exclure le moyen de défense négatif du motif légitime prédominant, c'est-à-dire du service des intérêts légitimes du défendeur.

Voir aussi la p. 247.

L'intimée invoque les arrêts de cette Cour International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. Therien, [1960] R.C.S. 265 et Gagnon v. Foundation Maritime Limited, [1961] R.C.S. 435 à l'appui de l'argument selon lequel, une fois établi le caractère illégal des moyens, toute enquête sur l'objet prédominant du complot, c'est-à-dire sur l'intention de nuire, devient superflue.

Dans les motifs qu'il a rédigés au nom de la majorité dans l'affaire Gagnon, le juge Ritchie dit, à la p. 446, concernant des déclarations faites dans l'arrêt Therien:

> [TRADUCTION] Compte tenu de ces constatations, il n'est pas nécessaire de procéder à l'exercice difficile qui consisterait à déterminer si une infraction au par. 22(1) de la Labour Relations Act donne naissance à une cause d'action fondée sur la loi, la raison à cela étant qu'en

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

present case it discloses, as has been said, that the means here employed by the appellants were prohibited, and this of itself supplies the ingredient necessary to change a lawful agreement which would not give rise to a cause of action into a tortious conspiracy, the carrying out of which exposes the conspirators to an action for damages if any ensue therefrom.

As Judson J. observed in his dissenting judgment in Gagnon, however, at p. 461: "The case of International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. Therien, does not carry the matter any further. It was not a conspiracy case." The above-quoted statement from the judgment of Ritchie J. must also be read in light of the facts then before the Court. In the words of Locke J., at p. 453, who delivered a separate concurring judgment:

> It is clear from the evidence that the purpose of setting up the picket line was to inflict injury upon the respondent .... That the actions of Merloni, Gagnon and Blackman were carried on in combination for the purpose of causing injury to the respondent by unlawful means is made clear by the evidence.

Thus, the unlawful conduct of the defendants used by Ritchie J. as the basis for liability was directed towards the plaintiff and was known by the defendants to be likely to result in damage to the plaintiff.

In Southam Co. Ltd. v. Gouthro, [1948] 3 D.L.R. 178 (B.C.S.C.), a case relied upon by the trial judge below in reaching his decision, the defendant union members caused damage to the plaintiff company by staging an illegal sympathy strike. Wilson J. made the following findings of fact, at p. 183:

> It is suggested that the object of the strike was to injure the Province or the plaintiff company. I cannot accept this argument .... I think they did so [go on strike] with an honest conviction that they were acting in their own interests and those of their union. True, they knew they would injure the Province and the ... [plaintiff] company. This, however, was not their predominant object, but, perhaps a means of attaining their object.

Wilson J. summarized the law as follows at p. 185:

l'espèce, il se dégage de l'examen de la loi, comme je l'ai déjà dit, que les appelants ont employé des moyens interdits, ce qui suffit en soi à transformer un accord licite qui n'engendrerait aucune cause d'action en complot délictuel dont l'exécution expose les comploteurs à des poursuites en dommages-intérêts s'il en résulte un préjudice quelconque.

Cependant, comme le fait remarquer le juge Judson dans ses motifs de dissidence dans l'affaire Gagnon, à la p. 461: [TRADUCTION] «L'arrêt International Brotherhood of Teamsters v. Therien ne fait pas avancer les choses. Il ne s'agissait pas d'une affaire de complot.» L'extrait précité des motifs du juge Ritchie doit également être lu à la lumière des faits dont la Cour était saisie. Le juge Locke, dans des motifs distincts au même effet, dit à la p. 453:

> [TRADUCTION] Il se dégage nettement de la preuve que la ligne de piquetage a été dressée en vue de nuire à l'intimée ... La preuve indique clairement que Merloni, Gagnon et Blackman ont agi de concert pour causer un préjudice à l'intimée par des moyens illégaux.

Donc, la conduite illégale sur laquelle le juge Ritchie a fondé sa conclusion de responsabilité visait la demanderesse et les défendeurs savaient qu'elle lui causerait vraisemblablement un préjudice.

Dans l'affaire Southam Co. Ltd. v. Gouthro, [1948] 3 D.L.R. 178 (C.S.C.-B.), sur laquelle le juge de première instance a appuyé son jugement en l'espèce, les syndiqués défendeurs ont causé un préjudice à la société demanderesse en faisant une grève de soutien illégale. Le juge Wilson a tiré les conclusions de fait suivantes, à la p. 183:

> [TRADUCTION] On allègue que la grève visait à léser la province ou la société demanderesse. Je ne puis retenir cet argument ... J'estime qu'ils l'ont faite [la grève] avec la sincère conviction qu'ils agissaient dans leur propre intérêt et dans celui du syndicat. Certes, ils savaient qu'ils nuiraient à la province et à la société [demanderesse]. Ce n'était toutefois pas leur objet prédominant, mais peut-être un moyen de l'atteindre.

Le juge Wilson a résumé ainsi le principe de droit applicable à la p. 185:

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

All enquiries into conspiracy must, I suggest, commence with the definition given by Willes J. in Mulcahy v. The Queen (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 306 at p. 317, and quoted by Lord Wright in the Crofter case (p. 157): " 'A conspiracy consists not merely in the intention of two or more, but in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means.' "

Where the acts agreed on and done are in themselves lawful then, even if their doing damnified the plaintiff, no action of conspiracy will lie unless the object of the conspirators was to injure the plaintiff. If this was the object, then the acts become unlawful. The subject of inquiry is lawfulness or unlawfulness.

But suppose that the acts agreed on and done are not lawful acts, but are unlawful acts. Is an inquiry into the object of the conspiracy then necessary? I think not. The unlawfulness of the acts has been established, it is inherent in the nature of the acts, and an inquiry into their purpose becomes superfluous. The requirements of Willes J.'s definition have been fully complied with.

It is important to bear in mind, when considering this explanation of the tort of conspiracy by unlawful means, the prior finding of fact that the defendants knew that their conduct, which was directed towards the plaintiff, would injure it. The presence of this element appears to be common to all the Canadian cases in which the tort of conspiracy by unlawful means has been applied.

Although the law concerning the scope of the tort of conspiracy is far from clear, I am of the opinion that whereas the law of tort does not permit an action against an individual defendant who has caused injury to the plaintiff, the law of torts does recognize a claim against them in combination as the tort of conspiracy if:

(1) whether the means used by the defendants are lawful or unlawful, the predominant purpose of the defendants' conduct is to cause injury to the plaintiff; or,

(2) where the conduct of the defendants is unlawful, the conduct is directed towards the plaintiff (alone or together with others), and the defendants should know in the cir-

[TRADUCTION] Toute enquête sur l'existence d'un complot doit, selon moi, avoir comme point de départ la définition que donne le juge Willes dans l'affaire Mulcahy v. The Queen (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 306, à la p. 317, et que lord Wright a citée dans l'arrêt Crofter (à la p. 157): «Un complot consiste non pas simplement dans l'intention d'au moins deux personnes, mais dans le fait que ces personnes conviennent d'accomplir un acte illégal ou un acte légal par des moyens illégaux.»

Lorsque les actes accomplis en exécution de l'entente sont en soi légaux, alors, même si leur accomplissement porte préjudice au demandeur, cela ne donnera pas lieu à une action en complot, à moins que les comploteurs n'aient eu pour objet de nuire au demandeur. Dans ce cas, les actes sont illégaux. L'enquête doit porter sur la légalité ou l'illégalité.

Mais, supposons que les actes accomplis en exécution de l'entente sont illégaux. Est-il nécessaire alors de s'enquérir de l'objet du complot? Je crois que non. L'illégalité des actes est établie car elle découle de leur nature, et une enquête sur leur objet est dès lors superflue. Dans ce cas, les exigences posées par le juge Willes dans sa définition ont été remplies intégralement.

Il est important de retenir, relativement à cette explication du délit civil de complot exécuté par des moyens illégaux, qu'on avait antérieurement conclu que les défendeurs savaient que leur conduite, dirigée contre la demanderesse, lui porterait préjudice. Toutes les décisions canadiennes où l'on a reconnu le délit civil de complot exécuté par des moyens illégaux paraissent avoir cet élément en commun.

Bien que le droit soit loin d'être clair sur l'étendue du délit civil de complot, je suis d'avis qu'en matière de responsabilité délictuelle, on ne peut poursuivre un défendeur seul qui a causé préjudice à un demandeur, mais que, lorsqu'il y a au moins deux défendeurs qui ont agi de concert, il est possible d'exercer contre eux un recours délictuel pour complot, si:

(1) indépendamment du caractère légal ou illégal des moyens employés, la conduite des défendeurs vise principalement à causer un préjudice au demandeur; ou

(2) lorsqu'il s'agit d'une conduite illégale, elle est dirigée contre le demandeur seul ou contre lui et d'autres personnes en même temps et que les défendeurs eussent dû cumstances that injury to the plaintiff is likely to and does result.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

In situation (2) it is not necessary that the predominant purpose of the defendants' conduct be to cause injury to the plaintiff but, in the prevailing circumstances, it must be a constructive intent derived from the fact that the defendants should have known that injury to the plaintiff would ensue. In both situations, however, there must be actual damage suffered by the plaintiff.

The Court of Appeal does not appear to oppose the view that the tort of conspiracy is confined to conduct where there is a real or constructive intent to injure the plaintiff. On the facts in these proceedings, the Court found such an intent, probably in constructive form, to be present, and concluded at p. 89 that:

> The plaintiff was a competitor of the defendants .... It is idle, in the light of these facts, to suggest that the plaintiff was not one of the targets of the conspiracy.

As we have seen, there is no evidence and no finding that the predominant purpose of the appellants' conduct was to cause injury to the respondent. There is no doubt, however, that the conduct of the appellants, although not directed towards the plaintiff, was unlawful. They have been convicted of offences in contravention of a federal statute and have been fined in company with their fellow accused in the total sum of $432,000. The unlawfulness or illegality accompanying the alleged tortious conduct is said to be the breach of the conspiracy section, s. 32(1)(c), of the Combines Investigation Act. That conspiracy of course was not directed towards the respondent as a supplier to the conspirators, but to the public who were purchasers of the products of the conspirators. It may also be argued, as indeed it was, that some of the fictitious tenders submitted by the appellants on construction projects requiring concrete in British Columbia fell into the category of unlawful activities directed towards the respondent. Again, heinous as the conduct of the appellant was, it cannot be said in fact or in law that those tenders were directed in any way towards causing injury to the respondent. Indeed, the respondent, savoir dans les circonstances que le préjudice subi par le demandeur était une conséquence probable.

Dans le second cas, il n'est pas nécessaire que l'objet prédominant de la conduite des défendeurs soit de nuire au demandeur, mais il doit y avoir dans les circonstances une intention implicite découlant du fait que les défendeurs auraient dû savoir que le demandeur en subirait un préjudice. Dans l'un et l'autre cas, cependant, le demandeur doit subir un préjudice réel.

La Cour d'appel ne paraît pas s'opposer au point de vue selon lequel il n'y a délit civil de complot que s'il y a une conduite traduisant une intention, réelle ou implicite, de nuire au demandeur. Se fondant sur les faits, la Cour a conclu à la p. 89 que cette intention, probablement implicite, existe en l'espèce et que:

> [TRADUCTION] La demanderesse faisait concurrence aux défenderesses ... Compte tenu de ces faits, il est vain de prétendre que la demanderesse n'était pas une des personnes visées par le complot.

Comme nous l'avons déjà vu, la preuve n'indique pas que la conduite des appelantes avait pour objet prédominant de nuire à l'intimée et il n'y a eu aucune conclusion en ce sens. Il ne fait toutefois pas de doute que, si elle n'était pas dirigée contre la demanderesse, la conduite des appelantes n'en était pas moins illégale. Elles ont été reconnues coupables d'avoir commis des infractions à une loi fédérale et elles se sont vues avec leurs coaccusées imposer des amendes totalisant 432 000 $. On prétend que le caractère illicite ou illégal de la conduite délictuelle alléguée est dans la violation de l'al. 32(1)(c) de la Loi relative aux enquêtes sur les coalitions, disposition qui porte sur les complots. Le complot en question ne visait évidemment pas l'intimée en sa qualité de fournisseur des conspirateurs, mais plutôt le public qui achetait les produits de ces derniers. Il est en outre possible de plaider, comme on l'a fait d'ailleurs, que certaines soumissions fictives que les appelantes ont faites relativement à des projets de construction en Colombie-Britannique nécessitant l'utilisation de béton peuvent être qualifiées d'actes illégaux dirigés contre l'intimée. Je le répète, si répréhensible que fût la conduite des appelantes, on ne saurait ni by entering into the two agreements, sought to participate in the benefits accruing to the appellants as a result of those unlawful activities.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

Finally, it was argued by the respondent that the unlawful conduct by the appellants falling under the Combines Investigation Act umbrella included the unlawful injury to the respondent's right to the benefits flowing to it from a free and competitive market in British Columbia. Again the conduct in question was not directed towards the participation of the respondent in the concrete products market in British Columbia, and indeed, as will be discussed below in connection with the fourth submission, the respondent sought to avail itself of the advantage not of a free market, but of a neatly shared market for the end products produced in part from the raw materials supplied by the respondent under the agreements. Again one must conclude that this aspect of the unlawful conduct contravening the federal statute cannot sustain the recovery of damages in tort in these proceedings.

The tort of conspiracy to injure, even without the extension to include a conspiracy to perform unlawful acts where there is a constructive intent to injure, has been the target of much criticism throughout the common law world. It is indeed a commercial anachronism as so aptly illustrated by Lord Diplock in Lonrho, supra, at pp. 188-89. In fact, the action may have lost much of its usefulness in our commercial world, and survives in our law as an anomaly. Whether that be so or not, it is now too late in the day to uproot the tort of conspiracy to injure from the common law. No doubt the reaction of the courts in the future will be to restrict its application for the very reasons that some now advocate its demise.

I turn then to the third submission relating to the causation and remoteness aspects of the tort of conspiracy. The issue raised by this proposition is en fait ni en droit prétendre que ces soumissions visaient de quelque manière à causer un préjudice à l'intimée. Bien au contraire, car en concluant les deux conventions, l'intimée a cherché à participer aux bénéfices revenant aux appelantes par suite de ces activités illégales.

Finalement, l'intimée a fait valoir que les appelantes ont enfreint la Loi relative aux enquêtes sur les coalitions notamment en portant illégalement atteinte à son droit de jouir des avantages découlant d'un marché libre et compétitif en Colombie-Britannique. Là encore, la conduite reprochée n'était pas dirigée contre la participation de l'intimée sur le marché des produits de béton en Colombie-Britannique, et en fait, comme nous le verrons à l'examen du quatrième moyen, l'intimée a cherché à profiter de l'avantage, non pas d'un marché libre, mais d'un marché méthodiquement partagé pour les produits finis fabriqués en partie avec les matières premières fournies par elle en exécution des conventions. Ici encore, on doit conclure que, vue sous cet aspect, la conduite qui constitue une infraction à la loi fédérale ne peut en l'espèce fonder un recours délictuel en dommages-intérêts.

Le délit civil de complot en vue de nuire, même s'il n'est pas étendu de manière à comprendre un complot en vue d'accomplir des actes illégaux lorsqu'il y a une intention implicite de causer un préjudice, a été la cible de nombreuses critiques partout dans le monde de la common law. Comme l'indique si bien lord Diplock dans l'arrêt Lonrho, précité, aux pp. 188 et 189, il s'agit réellement d'un anachronisme commercial. En fait, il est possible que dans le contexte commercial actuel cette action ait perdu en grande partie son utilité et qu'elle survive comme une anomalie dans notre droit. Quoi qu'il en soit, il est maintenant trop tard pour déraciner de la common law le délit civil de complot en vue de nuire. Sans aucun doute, les cours tenteront dans l'avenir, pour les mêmes motifs que certains invoquent actuellement à l'appui de sa suppression, de limiter l'application de ce délit civil.

Cela nous amène donc au troisième argument qui se rapporte à la causalité et à l'éloignement en ce qui a trait au délit civil de complot. La question simply whether or not the loss suffered by the respondent was occasioned by any action or omission on the part of the appellants. That the appellants combined to share between them the concrete market in British Columbia is not disputed. The evidence reveals no loss traceable by reason of this combination, to the account of the respondent. Indeed the converse would appear to be true. The respondent's ultimate claim under this head of argument must be the loss of the value of its undertaking as a going concern; and it must be a loss occasioned by the conduct of the appellants. We have already discussed the submission advanced by the respondent that the failure of the appellants to promote products made from the respondent's raw material caused the respondent's loss. No evidence was drawn to our attention from the record which would support such a finding.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

soulevée est simplement de savoir si le préjudice subi par l'intimée est le résultat d'un acte ou d'une omission de la part des appelantes. Que celles-ci se soient concertées en vue de se partager le marché du béton de la Colombie-Britannique n'est nullement contesté. Mais la preuve indique que l'intimée n'a subi aucun préjudice imputable à cette coalition. Tout au contraire. Suivant cet argument, ce que l'intimée doit réclamer en fin de compte est la perte de la valeur de son entreprise à titre de commerce florissant, perte qui doit avoir été occasionnée par la conduite des appelantes. Nous avons déjà parlé de l'argument selon lequel l'omission des appelantes de promouvoir les produits fabriqués à partir de la matière première fournie par l'intimée a été à l'origine du préjudice qu'elle a subi. On n'a attiré notre attention sur rien dans le dossier qui appuie une conclusion dans ce sens.

On the other hand, the answer advanced by the appellants is two-fold. They argue first that the destruction of the respondent's ability to compete in the British Columbia aggregate market was the result of the introduction of the raw material pumice from sources in the State of Washington. Support for this submission is found in a letter written by the respondent to the Department of Industry, Trade and Commerce, Ottawa, on September 30, 1971, supra. The letter, after referring to the loss of the Saturnalite market to imported pumice, continues:

Les appelantes, par contre, soulèvent deux points en guise de réponse à cet argument. Elles font valoir en premier lieu que si l'intimée a perdu sa compétitivité sur le marché du granulat de la Colombie-Britannique, cela résulte de l'introduction sur ce marché de la pierre ponce, une matière première provenant de sources situées dans l'État de Washington. Cet argument est appuyé par une lettre déjà mentionnée, en date du 30 septembre 1971, que l'intimée à adressée au ministère de l'Industrie et du Commerce à Ottawa. Après avoir mentionné que le Saturnalite a été remplacé sur le marché par la pierre ponce importée, la lettre poursuit:

The reason for the change is purely price. The landed cost of pumice in Vancouver is approximately $1.25 cubic yard less than the landed cost of our product. This is so because pumice, being a natural aggregate and subject to no further refining or manufacturing costs beyond crushing and screening, has a base cost approximately one third that of our manufactured product. If this were all there was to the competition of our product vs [?] pumice this letter would not be written.

[TRADUCTION] Ce changement est motivé par des considérations d'ordre purement pécuniaire. Le coût d'achat à pied d'oeuvre de la pierre ponce à Vancouver est d'environ 1,25 $ la verge cube inférieur au coût d'achat à pied d'oeuvre de notre produit. Cela s'explique par le fait que la pierre ponce, étant un granulat naturel, ne nécessite pas d'autre traitement que le concassage et le criblage ni n'entraîne d'autres coûts de fabrication que ceux imputables à ces opérations, de sorte que son coût de base est inférieur d'environ un tiers à celui de notre produit manufacturé. Mais si c'était là le seul aspect de la concurrence entre notre produit et la pierre ponce, nous n'aurions pas écrit cette lettre.

. . .

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

NBC BOA 000939

The incursion of American pumice into the Canadian Market, replacing a Canadian product, is forecast to result in a 25% reduction in our sales and output.

The annual report of the respondent, dated May 8, 1970, is even clearer:

There is no way that our manufactured aggregate can be sold competitively with pumice, particularly as the latter is imported free of duty.

The appellants also advanced a submission that the cessation of operations by the respondent was due to the inherent financial weakness of the respondent. It was said in argument that this financial weakness was amplified by improvident investment in the late 1960's. In any case, it is argued that the respondent was not financially capable of undertaking anything approaching vertical integration in the concrete manufacturing and supply business and that their attempt to do so had been, and would continue to be, disastrous. It may very well be that the evidence does support such a submission, but again there is no finding to this effect and the documentation does not clearly demonstrate the applicability of the argument. The learned trial judge, in disposing of this suggestion by the appellants, applied the "thin skull doctrine".

It is sufficient in my view to conclude on this branch of the appeal that there is no causal connection between the unlawful activities of the appellants and the commercial demise of the respondent. On the contrary, the documentary evidence under the hand of the respondent's officers indicates that the termination of the undertaking of the respondent was the result of the introduction of a product on the market which effectively displaced the raw material supplied by the respondent. There is no finding, and indeed no evidence to support any such finding, that the employment by the appellants of this imported raw material was part of a scheme, lawful or unlawful, amounting to a conspiracy directed to the injury of the respondent in its business.

This leaves the fourth branch of the appellants' submission, namely that the respondent is barred from recovery of damages from the appellants by Selon nos prévisions, la pénétration de la pierre ponce américaine sur le marché canadien en remplacement d'un produit canadien entraînera une baisse de l'ordre de 25 p. 100 de nos ventes et de notre production.

Le rapport annuel de l'intimée, en date du 8 mai 1970, est encore plus catégorique:

[TRADUCTION] Il est impossible que notre granulat manufacturé puisse concurrencer la pierre ponce, d'autant plus que celle-ci bénéficie d'une franchise douanière.

Les appelantes allèguent en outre que l'intimée a dû cesser ses activités en raison de la faiblesse inhérente de sa situation financière. On a fait valoir au cours des débats que de mauvais investissements vers la fin des années 1960 ont accentué cette faiblesse. Quoi qu'il en soit, on prétend que la situation financière de l'intimée était loin de lui permettre d'entreprendre la concentration verticale dans le commerce de la fabrication et de la fourniture de béton, que sa tentative de le faire avait été désastreuse et qu'il ne pouvait en être autrement. Il se peut fort bien que la preuve appuie cet argument, mais il n'y a pas eu de conclusion en ce sens et les documents produits n'établissent pas clairement la pertinence de l'argument. Le savant juge de première instance l'a rejeté en appliquant la théorie dite de la «vulnérabilité de la victime».

À mon avis, il suffit de conclure sur cette branche du pourvoi qu'il n'y a aucun lien causal entre les activités illégales des appelantes et l'effondrement de l'intimée. Bien au contraire, car les pièces justificatives revêtues de la signature des administrateurs de l'intimée montrent que celle-ci a cessé ses activités en raison de l'introduction sur le marché d'un produit qui est venu remplacer la matière première fournie par elle. On n'a pas conclu, et en vérité la preuve n'appuie pas une telle conclusion, que l'emploi par les appelantes de cette matière première importée s'inscrivait dans le cadre d'un plan, légal ou illégal, équivalant à un complot visant à nuire à l'entreprise de l'intimée.

Reste le quatrième moyen invoqué par les appelantes, savoir qu'en raison de sa propre participation volontaire au même projet, plan ou accord reason of the voluntary participation of the respondent in the same unlawful scheme, plan or arrangement of which the respondent now makes complaint. The law on this point is not as well developed as one might expect. The doctrine is embodied in two principles, namely ex turpi causa non oritur actio and in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis. The former is generally applied where the plaintiff seeks recovery for an injury caused by the defendant while they were engaged together in an illegal or immoral activity. The latter principle is generally imported for the disposition of an action alleged to arise in the course of an illegal or immoral transaction. As Lord Asquith observed in National Coal Board v. England, [1954] A.C. 403, at p. 428, cases where a tort action has been defeated by the ex turpi causa maxim are exceedingly rare. One instance is where an action failed for the recovery of damages arising from assault in the course of an illegal prize fight. Another example is Tallow v. Tailfeathers (1973), 44 D.L.R. (3d) 55 (Alta. C.A.), where the plaintiffs' action for damages for injuries suffered due to the gross negligence of the defendant was dismissed because of their participation with the defendant driver in the theft and unlawful use of a car. See also: Tomlinson v. Harrison, [1972] 1 O.R. 670, (1971), 24 D.L.R. (3d) 26 (Ont. H.C.); and Rondos v. Wawrin (1968), 68 D.L.R. (2d) 658 (Man. C.A.) Other applications have been seen in cases where one party to an illegal agreement has sought to enforce it or to recover damages for its breach. Lord Asquith concluded at pp. 428-29 that:

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

> . . . it seems to me in principle that the plaintiff cannot be precluded from suing simply because the wrongful act is committed after the illegal agreement is made and during the period involved in its execution. The act must, I should have supposed, at least be a step in the execution of the common illegal purpose.

His Lordship illustrates this proposition:

> If two burglars, A and B, agree to open a safe by means of explosives, and A so negligently handles the explosive charge as to injure B, B might find some difficulty in maintaining an action for negligence against A. But if A and B are proceeding to the premises which they intend illégal dont elle se plaint en l'espèce, l'intimée ne peut recouvrer des dommages-intérêts des appelantes. Le droit sur ce point n'est pas aussi développé qu'on pourrait s'y attendre. Il se réduit aux deux principes suivants: ex turpi causa non oritur actio et in pari delicto potior est conditio possidentis. Le premier s'applique généralement lorsque le demandeur réclame des dommages-intérêts pour un préjudice causé par le défendeur alors qu'ils participaient ensemble à une activité illégale ou immorale. Le second est en général invoqué pour régler une action qui est censée avoir pris naissance au cours d'une opération illégale ou immorale. Comme le fait remarquer lord Asquith dans l'arrêt National Coal Board v. England, [1954] A.C. 403, à la p. 428, les affaires où une action délictuelle a été rejetée par l'application de la maxime ex turpi causa sont extrêmement rares. Dans un cas, une action en dommages-intérêts découlant de voies de fait commises au cours d'un combat de boxe illégal a été rejetée. Un autre exemple est l'affaire Tallow v. Tailfeathers (1973), 44 D.L.R. (3d) 55 (C.A. Alb.), où l'action en dommages-intérêts intentée par les demandeurs en raison du préjudice subi par suite de la faute lourde du défendeur a été rejetée parce qu'ils avaient eux-mêmes participé au vol et à l'utilisation illégale de la voiture conduite par le défendeur. Voir aussi: Tomlinson v. Harrison, [1972] 1 O.R. 670, (1971), 24 D.L.R. (3d) 26 (H.C. Ont.); et Rondos v. Wawrin (1968), 68 D.L.R. (2d) 658 (C.A. Man.). Ces principes ont également été appliqués dans des cas où une partie à un contrat illégal a essayé d'en obtenir l'exécution ou a réclamé des dommages-intérêts pour sa rupture. Lord Asquith conclut aux pp. 428 et 429:

> [TRADUCTION] . . . il me semble qu'on ne peut en principe empêcher le demandeur de poursuivre simplement parce que l'acte fautif est accompli après la signature du contrat illégal et au cours de la période de son exécution. Selon moi, l'acte en cause doit à tout le moins s'inscrire dans le cadre de l'exécution du dessein illégal commun.

Sa Seigneurie illustre ainsi ce principe:

> [TRADUCTION] Si deux cambrioleurs, A et B, s'entendent pour ouvrir un coffre-fort au moyen d'explosifs et qu'en maniant la charge explosive, A soit à ce point négligent qu'il cause des lésions à B, celui-ci pourrait éprouver quelque difficulté à réussir dans une action en

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

burglariously to enter, and before they enter them, B picks A's pocket and steals his watch, I cannot prevail on myself to believe that A could not sue in tort (provided he had first prosecuted B for larceny). The theft is totally unconnected with the burglary. There is, however, a surprising dearth of authority on this point.

responsabilité contre A. Mais si A et B se dirigent vers les locaux qu'ils veulent cambrioler et qu'avant d'y entrer B pique la montre d'A dans sa poche, je ne parviens pas à me convaincre qu'A ne pourrait intenter une action en responsabilité délictuelle (pourvu qu'il ait d'abord poursuivi B pour vol). Le vol et le cambriolage sont complètement distincts. Il y a cependant un surprenant manque de décisions sur ce point.

In the present case the plaintiff-respondent clearly sought to avail itself of the benefits apparently attendant upon an ordinary market which has been neatly shared by the members of an illegal combine. The benefit falling to the respondent was the opportunity to be the sole supplier of lightweight aggregate to the combine. If the damages which have been suffered by the respondent flowed from its involvement in the illegal combine or from the contracts entered into between the respondent and the appellants affording the opportunity to the respondent to participate in the combine, then these doctrines prevent the respondent's recovery. On the other hand, if there is not a sufficient causal link between the respondent's participation in the illegal control of the market and the decline and eventual failure of its business, then these doctrines do not operate to provide a further basis for denying the respondent's claim. Without the causal link, of course, the respondent would have no cause of action. It would appear that in these unusual circumstances the respondent must fail whichever way this claim is advanced.

En l'espèce, la demanderesse-intimée a manifestement cherché à profiter des avantages qui se rattachent apparemment à un marché ordinaire méthodiquement partagé entre les membres d'une coalition illégale. À l'intimée revenait l'avantage que constituait la possibilité d'être l'unique fournisseur de granulat léger de la coalition. Si le préjudice subi par l'intimée découle de sa participation à la coalition illégale ou de ses contrats avec les appelantes, en vertu desquels elle pouvait participer à la coalition, alors, suivant les principes susmentionnés, l'intimée ne peut réclamer de dommages-intérêts. En revanche, s'il n'existe pas de lien de causalité suffisant entre la participation de l'intimée à la domination illégale du marché et le déclin puis l'effondrement de son entreprise, alors ces principes ne fournissent pas un motif de plus de rejeter la demande de l'intimée. Sans ce lien de causalité, l'intimée n'aurait évidemment aucune cause d'action. Dans les circonstances inhabituelles de l'espèce, l'intimée paraît devoir échouer quelle que soit la façon dont la demande est présentée.

The respondent makes no attempt to cleanse its operations of the obvious tint of illegality arising out of its agreement not to compete in the end product market in return for a grant of the right to be the sole source of supply of the raw material, lightweight aggregate. On the date the writ of summons was issued the Combines Investigation Act did not purport to create a right to recover damages in civil proceedings. Neither did the statute contain a stipulation foreclosing any such recovery by participants in an illegal scheme. The act was entirely neutral. Section 31.1 came into force seven months after the issuance of the writ and purports to authorize the bringing of a civil action to recover losses suffered as a result of certain violations of the Act. This provision has come before the courts in some provinces, and L'intimée n'a fait aucun effort en vue de l'assainissement de ses activités manifestement teintées d'illégalité en raison de la convention par laquelle elle s'engageait, en échange du droit d'être l'unique fournisseur de la matière première appelée granulat léger, à ne pas entrer à titre de concurrent sur le marché des produits finis. Au moment de la délivrance du bref d'assignation, la Loi relative aux enquêtes sur les coalitions ne créait aucun droit d'intenter des procédures civiles en dommages-intérêts, pas plus qu'elle n'empêchait les participants à un projet illégal d'engager de pareilles procédures. Elle était en fait tout à fait neutre. L'article 31.1, entré en vigueur sept mois après la délivrance du bref d'assignation, a pour effet d'autoriser l'introduction d'une action civile en indemnisation pour les pertes subies par suite de varying views have been expressed as to its constitutionality. This section did not come before us for determination in these proceedings and it is not necessary to make any further reference thereto. The same lack of a causal connection between the illegal control of the market and the loss suffered by the respondent which is sufficient to dispose of the plaintiff-respondent's claim is determinative of the applicability of the ex turpi causa defence. This is so because the illegality of which the respondent was guilty is not, on the record, "causally relevant" to the damage of which the respondent now complains. Nor does the example proffered by Lord Asquith, supra, have application here. There is no proof that collateral activity by the appellants during or after the term of the contracts between the appellants and the respondent gave rise to the injury in the respondent and thus, to a cause of action known to the law. In an interesting review of the application of this defence in law by Dale Gibson, (1969), 47 Can. Bar. Rev. 89, the author makes reference to the works of earlier writers wherein considerable doubt is cast on the propriety of the application of the defence of ex turpi causa in tort actions. Gibson suggests that if the rule has any application it is only to forestall a plaintiff who is attempting to profit from his illegality and not merely to realize such compensation as may be necessary to restore him to the position he enjoyed prior to the operation of the illegal arrangement. Professor Fridman, on the other hand, in The Wrongdoing Plaintiff (1972), 18 McGill L.J. 275, argues that the question of whether the plaintiff's conduct should deprive him of his remedy can only be determined by weighing three factors: causation, remoteness, and blameworthiness. If the plaintiff's wrongdoing is historically related to his loss or injury, if it operated with the defendant's illegal behavior to produce the harm suffered by the plaintiff, and if his conduct makes him morally responsible or blameworthy for what happened to him, the plaintiff's action should not succeed. (See also Cronkite, certaines violations de la Loi. Dans certaines provinces, les tribunaux ont été appelés à étudier cette disposition et ils ont exprimé des opinions divergentes quant à sa constitutionnalité. Comme l'article n'a pas été soumis à notre examen en l'espèce, il est inutile de s'y arrêter. L'absence de lien de causalité entre la domination illégale du marché et le préjudice subi par l'intimée, qui suffit pour entraîner le rejet de la réclamation de la demanderesse-intimée, emporte également l'inapplicabilité du moyen de défense fondé sur la maxime ex turpi causa. Cela s'explique par le fait que l'illégalité dont l'intimée s'est rendue coupable n'a, selon le dossier, aucun «lien de causalité» avec le préjudice dont elle se plaint maintenant. De plus, l'exemple déjà mentionné fourni par lord Asquith ne s'applique pas en l'espèce. Rien n'indique que les activités des appelantes pendant la durée de la validité de leurs contrats avec l'intimée ou après leur expiration ont causé le préjudice subi par elle, donnant ainsi naissance à une cause d'action reconnue en droit. Dans une étude intéressante, (1969), 47 R. du B. can. 89, portant sur l'application en droit de ce moyen de défense, Dale Gibson mentionne les écrits d'auteurs antérieurs qui disent entretenir de forts doutes quant à l'applicabilité dans les actions en responsabilité délictuelle du moyen de défense fondé sur la maxime ex turpi causa. Selon Gibson, dans la mesure où cette règle s'applique, ce ne peut être qu'à l'égard d'un demandeur qui essaie de profiter de son acte illégal et non pas simplement d'obtenir l'indemnisation nécessaire pour le remettre dans la situation où il était avant l'exécution de l'entente illégale. Le professeur Fridman, pour sa part, dans son article The Wrongdoing Plaintiff (1972), 18 McGill L.J. 275, soutient que la question de savoir si la conduite du demandeur doit avoir pour effet de le priver de son recours ne peut être tranchée qu'en fonction de trois facteurs suivants: la causalité, la causalité lointaine et la faute. S'il existe un lien chronologique entre l'acte fautif du demandeur et la perte ou le préjudice qu'il a subi, si cet acte s'est ajouté à la conduite illégale du défendeur de manière à occasionner le préjudice en question et si, en raison de sa conduite, le demandeur porte la responsabilité morale ou la faute de ce qui lui est arrivé, son action doit être rejetée. (Voir aussi Cronkite, Effect of the Violation of a Statute by the Plaintiff in a Tort Action (1929), 7 Can. Bar Rev. 67).

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

Whatever the state of the law may be at the present time, however, I do not find these circumstances to be an appropriate occasion for the invocation of this defence. If the loss suffered by the respondent was occasioned by his voluntary participation in an illegal transaction, the courts should not come to his assistance. This does not seem to have been the case, however. In any event, since the respondent's loss was not caused by the appellants' actions pursuant to their illegal transaction, there is no basis upon which the respondent can recover in the courts. The third and final points raised by the appellants place the respondent in the hopeless position. If the respondent succeeds on the causation submission, it is defeated on the fourth point. If the respondent fails on causation, the fourth point does nothing to assist it.

For all of these reasons I come regretfully and somewhat reluctantly to the conclusion that the appeal must be allowed and the action dismissed with costs. I have said this conclusion is reached with reluctance because both courts below have found an action residing in the respondent for the recovery of extensive damages for loss of its business undertaking. Were this conclusion founded on findings of fact or on conclusions on factual issues, an appellate tribunal would ordinarily refrain from intervening and disturbing the conclusions reached at trial and confirmed on appeal. It seems to me, however, for reasons already given, that the conclusions are not based upon findings of fact, but in part upon an error in law as to the necessary elements for an action for conspiracy to injure, as well as errors in law relating to causation and remoteness, and the proper consequence of unlawful activity on the part of the defendants. For these reasons I would allow the appeal and dismiss the action of the respondent against the appellants with costs here and below. It follows that the cross-appeal is likewise dismissed but there shall be only one set of costs.

Effect of the Violation of a Statute by the Plaintiff in a Tort Action (1929), 7 R. du B. can. 67.)

Quel que puisse être l'état actuel du droit, cependant, j'estime qu'il n'y a pas lieu en l'espèce d'invoquer ce moyen de défense. Si le préjudice qu'a subi l'intimée résulte de sa participation volontaire à un contrat illégal, les cours ne doivent pas lui venir en aide. Ce ne semble toutefois pas avoir été le cas. De toute manière, puisque le préjudice subi par l'intimée n'est pas imputable à des actes accomplis par les appelantes en exécution de leur contrat illégal, l'intimée ne peut à aucun titre recourir aux tribunaux pour obtenir une indemnisation. Les troisième et quatrième points soulevés par les appelantes mettent l'intimée dans une situation impossible. Si l'intimée a gain de cause sur l'argument relatif à la causalité, elle sera déboutée sur le quatrième point. Si l'intimée est déboutée sur l'argument relatif à la causalité, le quatrième point ne lui est d'aucun secours.

Pour tous ces motifs, je conclus avec regret et avec une certaine hésitation que le pourvoi doit être accueilli et l'action rejetée avec dépens. Je dis avec hésitation parce que l'une et l'autre cours d'instance inférieure ont conclu que l'intimée pouvait réclamer en justice des dommages-intérêts élevés au titre de la perte de son entreprise. Si cette décision reposait sur des conclusions de fait ou sur des conclusions relatives à des questions de fait, un tribunal d'appel n'interviendrait ordinairement pas pour modifier les conclusions tirées en première instance et confirmées en appel. Il me semble, cependant, pour les motifs que j'ai déjà donnés, qu'il s'agit d'une décision qui repose non pas sur des conclusions de fait, mais en partie sur une erreur de droit quant aux éléments nécessaires pour fonder une action pour complot en vue de nuire et aussi sur des erreurs de droit relatives à la causalité, à la causalité lointaine et aux véritables conséquences d'une activité illégale de la part des défenderesses. Pour ces motifs, je suis d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi et de rejeter, avec dépens dans toutes les cours, l'action de l'intimée contre les appelantes. Il s'ensuit que le pourvoi incident est lui aussi rejeté, mais il n'y aura qu'un seul mémoire de frais.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

Appeals allowed with costs and cross-appeal dismissed.

Solicitors for the appellants, the "LaFarge Group": Lawson, Lundell & Co., Vancouver.

Solicitors for the appellants, the "Ocean Group": Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt, Toronto.

Solicitors for the respondent: Ladner, Downs, Vancouver.

Pourvois accueillis avec dépens et pourvoi incident rejeté.

Procureurs des appelantes composant le «groupe LaFarge»: Lawson, Lundell & Co., Vancouver.

Procureurs des appelantes composant le «groupe Ocean»: Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt, Toronto.

Procureurs de l'intimée: Ladner, Downs, Vancouver.

1983 CanLII 23 (SCC)

Agribrands Purina Canada Inc. v. Kasamekas et al.

Kasamekas et al. v. Agribrands Purina Canada Inc. et al.

[Indexed as: Agribrands Purina Canada Inc. v. Kasamekas]

106 O.R. (3d) 427

2011 ONCA 460

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

Court of Appeal for Ontario, Goudge, Gillese and Juriansz JJ.A.
June 20, 2011

Civil procedure -- Prejudgment interest -- Action commenced in last quarter of 1992 -- Trial judge erring in awarding prejudgment interest based on average rate applicable for entire 1992 calendar year rather than applying rate specified by Rules of Civil Procedure for proceedings commenced in last quarter of 1992.

Contracts -- Damages -- Where contract sets out several modes of performance, damages for breach of contract generally assessed on basis of mode that is least profitable to plaintiff and least burdensome to defendant -- Trial judge erring in finding that that principle applies only where parties acted honestly and in good faith -- Agreement giving either party unconditional right to cancel contract at any time on 60 days' notice -- Trial judge erring in not calculating damages on that basis -- Trial judge erring in finding that defendant could not rely on 60-day notice clause as it had breached implied duty of good faith and in basing quantification on finding that contract would have continued indefinitely had defendant not breached its contractual obligation.

Damages -- Punitive damages -- Defendant entering into feed dealership agreement with plaintiffs and then undermining plaintiffs' business by surreptitiously supplying another dealer in plaintiffs' territory -- Plaintiffs' business failing -- Trial judge finding that defendant breached dealership agreement and breached implied duty of good faith toward plaintiffs -- Trial judge not erring in awarding punitive damages -- Breach of implied duty of good faith constituting separate actionable wrong -- Defendant's conduct constituting marked departure from ordinary standards of decency.

Torts -- Conspiracy -- Unlawful conduct conspiracy -- "Unlawful conduct" element of unlawful conduct conspiracy not encompassing conduct that defendant is "not at liberty" or "not authorized" to engage in as result of convention or understanding -- Conduct "unlawful" only if it is wrong in law.

The appellant Purina terminated the appellant Ren's feed dealership in July 1990 and entered into a dealership agreement for Ren's former territory with the respondent Raywalt in February 1991. Ren's arranged to have the appellant M, the Purina dealer in a neighbouring territory, supply it with Purina feed at dealer prices, which enabled Ren's to continue to sell Purina feed in Raywalt's territory. Purina approved of that arrangement and provided M with feed for resale to Ren's. As a result, Raywalt's business was not as profitable as projected and it ceased business at the end of January 1992. The trial judge found the appellants liable to the respondents for the tort of unlawful conduct conspiracy and found Purina liable for breach of its contract with Raywalt. The dealership agreement was for two years, with automatic renewal if neither party gave notice of cancellation. Either party had the right to cancel the contract at any time by giving [page428] 60 days' notice. The trial judge found that, had it not been for Purina's breach, the contract would have continued indefinitely and based his quantification of damages for breach of contract on that finding. He awarded general damages and prejudgment interest in the amount of $2,096,406 and punitive damages against Purina in the amount of $30,000. The appellants appealed the finding of unlawful conduct conspiracy. Purina appealed the method used to calculate damages for breach of contract and the award of punitive damages.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

Held, the appeal should be allowed in part.

The trial judge erred in finding that "unlawful conduct" includes conduct that the defendants were "not at liberty" or "not authorized" to engage in, not only as a result of law or a contract, but also as a result of a convention or an understanding. What is required is that the defendants engage, in concert, in acts that are wrong in law, whether actionable at private law or not. In the commercial world, even highly competitive activity, provided it is otherwise lawful, does not qualify as "unlawful conduct" for the purposes of this tort. While Purina's breach of its contract with Raywalt was sufficient to qualify as "unlawful conduct", neither Ren's nor M did anything that would do so. The finding of unlawful conduct conspiracy and the damages flowing from it should be set aside.

Where there are several ways in which a contract might be performed, for the purposes of assessing damages, the mode that is the least profitable to the plaintiff and the least burdensome to the defendant should be adopted. The trial judge erred in finding that that principle applies only where the parties acted honestly and in good faith and that Purina had not done so. The contract provided that Purina had the unconditional right to cancel the contract at any time on 60 days' notice. That was the least burdensome mode of performance for Purina and should have been used as the basis for calculating the damages for breach of contract. Moreover, by finding an implied duty of good faith on Purina not to act in a way that defeated the very purpose of the contract and then finding that Purina could not rely on the 60-day notice clause because it breached that implied duty, the trial judge erred by using the implied duty of good faith to alter the express terms of the contract, including the right to terminate on notice. Finally, the trial judge erred in suggesting that it would be unconscionable to allow Purina to rely on the 60-day notice clause in calculating damages for breach of contract. The doctrine of unconscionability is applicable to determine whether the contract itself is unconscionable, and is not applicable to determine how damages should be assessed in light of the circumstances of a particular breach.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

The action was commenced in the last quarter of 1992. The trial judge erred in applying a prejudgment interest rate of 6.65 per cent, the average rate applicable for the entire 1992 calendar year, to his assessment of damages for breach of contract and unlawful conduct conspiracy. The prejudgment rate specified in the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194 for proceedings commenced in the last quarter of 1992 was 5.1 per cent. The trial judge offered no special circumstances for exercising his discretion to deviate from that rate.

Purina's breach of the implied duty of good faith amounted to an independent actionable wrong, one of the requirements for an award of punitive damages for breach of contract. The trial judge erred in awarding punitive damages solely on that basis without considering the other requirement, that the impugned conduct must depart markedly from ordinary standards of decency. However, in the circumstances of this case, that requirement was also met. Purina's conduct was reprehensible and deserving of sanction. The punitive damages award was affirmed. [page429]

Cases referred to

Fidler v. Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 3, [2006] S.C.J. No. 30, 2006 SCC 30, 271 D.L.R. (4th) 1, 350 N.R. 40, [2006] 8 W.W.R. 1, J.E. 2006-1316, 227 B.C.A.C. 39, 57 B.C.L.R. (4th) 1, [2006] R.R.A. 525, 53 C.C.E.L. (3d) 1, 39 C.C.L.I. (4th) 1, [2007] CLLC 210-015, [2006] I.L.R. 4521, 148 A.C.W.S. (3d) 902, EYB 2006-107056; Hamilton v. Open Window Bakery Ltd., [2004] 1 S.C.R. 303, [2003] S.C.J. No. 72, 2004 SCC 9, 235 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 316 N.R. 265, J.E. 2004-470, 184 O.A.C. 209, 40 B.L.R. (3d) 1, [2004] CLLC 210-025, 128 A.C.W.S. (3d) 1111; Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co., [2002] 1 S.C.R. 595, [2002] S.C.J. No. 19, 2002 SCC 18, 209 D.L.R. (4th) 257, 283 N.R. 1, J.E. 2002-405, 156 O.A.C. 201, 20 B.L.R. (3d) 165, 35 C.C.L.I. (3d) 1, [2002] I.L.R. I-4048, REJB 2002-28036, 111 A.C.W.S. (3d) 935, apld

Canada Cement Lafarge Ltd. v. British Columbia Lightweight Aggregate Ltd., [1983] 1 S.C.R. 452, [1983] S.C.J. No. 33,

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

145 D.L.R. (3d) 385, 47 N.R. 191, [1983] 6 W.W.R. 385, 21 B.L.R. 254, 24 C.C.L.T. 111, 72 C.P.R. (2d) 1, 19 A.C.W.S. (2d) 352; Reach M.D. Inc. v. Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada (2003), 65 O.R. (3d) 30, [2003] O.J. No. 2062, 227 D.L.R. (4th) 458, 172 O.A.C. 202, 17 C.C.L.T. (3d) 149, 25 C.P.R. (4th) 417, 123 A.C.W.S. (3d) 411 (C.A.), consd

Other cases referred to

Agribrands Purina Canada v. Kasamekas, [2010] O.J. No. 1796, 2010 ONSC 2597; Alleslev-Krofchak v. Valcom Ltd., [2010] O.J. No. 3548, 2010 ONCA 557, 266 O.A.C. 356, 322 D.L.R. (4th) 193, 76 C.C.L.T. (3d) 163; Bank of Montreal v. Tortora, [2010] B.C.J. No. 466, 2010 BCCA 139, 287 B.C.A.C. 14, 3 B.C.L.R. (5th) 39, 80 C.C.E.L. (3d) 161; Cockburn v. Alexander (1848), 6 C.B. 791; Correia v. Canac Kitchens, a division of Kohler Ltd. (2008), 91 O.R. (3d) 353, [2008] O.J. No. 2497, 2008 ONCA 506, 294 D.L.R. (4th) 525, 58 C.C.L.T. (3d) 29, 167 A.C.W.S. (3d) 422, 67 C.C.E.L. (3d) 1, 240 O.A.C. 153, [2009] CLLC 210-001; Drouillard v. Cogeco Cable Inc. (2007), 86 O.R. (3d) 431, [2007] O.J. No. 1664, 2007 ONCA 322, 282 D.L.R. (4th) 644, 223 O.A.C. 350, 57 C.C.E.L. (3d) 14, 48 C.C.L.T. (3d) 119, [2007] CLLC 210-034, 157 A.C.W.S. (3d) 213; OBG Ltd. v. Allen; Douglas v. Hello! Ltd.; Mainstream Properties Ltd. v. Young, [2008] A.C. 1, [2007] UKHL 21 (H.L.); Revenue and Customs Commissioners v. Total Network S.L., [2008] 2 W.L.R. 711, [2008] UKHL 19 (H.L.); Torquay Hotel Co. Ltd. v. Cousins, [1969] 2 Ch. 106, [1969] 1 All E.R. 522, [1969] 2 W.L.R. 289, 6 K.I.R. 15 (C.A.); Transamerica Life Canada Inc. v. ING Canada Inc. (2003), 68 O.R. (3d) 457, [2003] O.J. No. 4656, 234 D.L.R. (4th) 367, 41 B.L.R. (3d) 1, [2004] I.L.R. I-4258, 127 A.C.W.S. (3d) 235 (C.A.)

Statutes referred to

Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43, s. 130(2)

Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46 [as am.]

Rules and regulations referred to

Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194

Authorities referred to

Burns, Peter T., and Joost Blom, Economic Interests in Canadian Tort Law (Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis, 2009)

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

APPEAL from the judgment of M.G. Quigley J., [2010] O.J. No. 84, 2010 ONSC 166 for the plaintiffs. [page430]

Kirk F. Stevens and Gerard V. Thompson, for appellants.

W. Graydon Sheppard and Marc Munro, for respondents.

The judgment of the court was delivered by

GOUDGE J.A.: --

Introduction

[1] After an 11-day trial, the respondents, Walter Kasamekas ("Kasamekas"), Raymond Jackson ("Jackson") and Raywalt Feed Sales Ltd. ("Raywalt"), recovered judgment for general damages and prejudgment interest in the amount of $2,096,406 against the appellants Agribrands Purina Canada Inc. ("Purina"), Ren's Feed and Supplies Ltd. ("Ren's"), Walter Rendell Job ("Job") and the estate of Edwards James McGrath ("McGrath"). The respondents also recovered punitive damages of $30,000 against Purina. Finally, they were awarded costs of $175,000.

[2] The trial judge found the appellants liable to the respondents for the tort of unlawful conduct conspiracy. He also found Purina in breach of its contract with Raywalt. He assessed damages on the same basis for both causes of action.

[3] The appellants appeal the finding of unlawful conduct conspiracy. They also say that the trial judge made errors in calculating damages for that tort and in the rate he applied for prejudgment interest. While Purina does not contest the breach of contract finding against it, it does contest the method the trial judge used to calculate the damages for that breach. Finally, Purina appeals the finding of punitive damages against it.

[4] For the reasons that follow, I would allow the appeal on each of these issues except punitive damages and the alleged errors in calculating the tort damages. I would therefore amend the trial judgment to provide that Raywalt recover damages for breach of contract by Purina on the basis described below, with prejudgment interest calculated on the basis described below. The respondents' claims for conspiracy must be dismissed.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

The Trial Judgment

[5] The basic facts are not in dispute. Ren's was a well-established dealer of Purina livestock feed and pet food. However, in 1990 Purina discovered that Ren's was also purchasing feed from one of its competitors and selling it as feed for laboratory animals in breach of its dealership agreement with Purina. As a consequence, Purina terminated Ren's dealership in July 1990.

[6] Walter Kasamekas, who was a Purina employee, and his brother Raymond Jackson saw an opportunity to set up Raywalt [page431] as a Purina dealership to take over Ren's territory. Raywalt and Purina concluded a dealership agreement in February 1991, pursuant to which Purina agreed not to appoint any other dealer in Raywalt's territory, previously Ren's territory.

[7] Raywalt opened for business in mid-March 1991. However, despite giving Raywalt territorial exclusivity, Purina continued to supply feed to Ren's until the end of April 1991. This enabled Ren's to sell to its former customers in what was now Raywalt's territory. When Purina finally ended this practice, Ren's got McGrath, who was a friend and the Purina dealer in a neighbouring territory, to supply Ren's with Purina feed at dealer prices. This allowed Ren's to continue to sell Purina feed in Raywalt's territory. Purina knew of, condoned and indeed approved of this arrangement. Purina provided McGrath with feed for resale to Ren's. As a result, Raywalt's business was not nearly as profitable as projected and its cash flow problems caused it to cease business at the end of January 1992.

[8] After setting this factual scene, the trial judge turned first to Purina's liability for breach of its contract with Raywalt. He concluded that, by supplying McGrath with feed knowing that McGrath would sell it to Ren's at dealer prices for sale in Raywalt's territory and by approving this arrangement, Purina breached its contract with Raywalt. Purina does not appeal this finding.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[9] He then addressed the method of calculating damages for that breach, in particular whether the damages were time limited by the terms of the contract. Two of its provisions were relevant. The first provided that the dealership agreement was for two years but would automatically renew unless either party gave notice of cancellation. The second allowed either party to cancel the contract at any time by giving 60 days' notice.

[10] The trial judge concluded that there was an implied duty of good faith on Purina in its contract with Raywalt, that Purina had acted in bad faith and that it could therefore not rely on the provision allowing it to terminate the contract on 60 days' notice. On this basis, the trial judge distinguished Hamilton v. Open Window Bakery Ltd., [2004] 1 S.C.R. 303, [2003] S.C.J. No. 72. In considering Hamilton, he said, at para. 100, "[T]he trial judge specifically found that the defendant had acted in good faith at all material times" (emphasis in original). At para. 108, he concluded, "The case has no application here because the foundation of good faith that was present in that case is evidently absent in this case."

[11] Instead of applying Hamilton, the trial judge engaged in an inquiry into what would have happened if Purina had not [page432] breached its contractual obligation. He found that the only reasonable conclusion available on the evidence was that the contract would have continued indefinitely. He found that Purina dealerships were typically of long duration. In this case, it would have been because no steps would have been taken to terminate it. By its terms, the dealership agreement would therefore have continued automatically.

[12] In addition, he concluded that, because of Purina's conduct, the doctrine of unconscionability applied to prevent Purina from relying on the time limiting provisions in the dealership agreement.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[13] For these reasons, the trial judge based his quantification of damages for breach of contract on the premise that Purina's contract with Raywalt would have continued indefinitely.

[14] He then moved to the civil conspiracy issue. The respondents did not advance the branch of this tort that requires the plaintiff to demonstrate that the defendants' primary purpose was to cause injury to the plaintiff, whether by lawful or unlawful means. Rather, the respondents' argument was that the appellants engaged in the tort of unlawful conduct conspiracy, that is, their conduct, done in concert, was unlawful and they knew or should have known that injury to the respondents was likely to result.

[15] The trial judge found that the appellants acted in concert, and while their predominant purpose was not to injure the respondents, their conduct was directed at the respondents, and it was reasonably foreseeable that serious economic injury to the respondents would and did result.

[16] The central issue was whether their conduct was "unlawful". The trial judge found that the appellants did not appear to have committed a crime, or any other tort than unlawful conduct conspiracy. Nor had they infringed a guaranteed constitutional right. Relying primarily on Reach M.D. Inc. v. Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association of Canada (2003), 65 O.R. (3d) 30, [2003] O.J. No. 2062 (C.A.), he found that the ambit of unlawful conduct required by this tort extends beyond strict illegality. He put it this way, at para. 127:

> The newer decisions confirm that the ambit of "illegal conduct" extends beyond strict illegality for the purposes of proving the existence of tortious conduct. It includes conduct that the defendant "is not at liberty" or "not authorized" to engage in, whether as a result of law, a contract, a convention or an understanding.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[17] His assessment of the appellants' conduct against this standard was as follows, at paras. 132-34: [page433]

> It was unlawful and unauthorized conduct from Purina's perspective because Purina had a commercial obligation of good faith and was contractually bound to support Raywalt as its dealer. More importantly, Purina had no authority or entitlement to permit Purina feed products to continue to be sold by Ren's at dealer pricing just to ensure that its decision to terminate the Ren's dealership would not result in a reduction of its market share. It effectively licensed Ren's through McGrath to sell products in a geographic area that was reserved to another dealer, both as de facto dealers of Purina horse feeds.
>
> It was unlawful and unauthorized conduct from McGrath's perspective because he had no authority under his Dealership Agreement with Purina to establish a sub-dealership and to receive dealer rebates that reduced the product cost to dealer level "white list" pricing where his sub-dealer was selling Purina feed products in territory that had been assigned to another dealer.
>
> It was unlawful and unauthorized conduct from Walter Rendell Job's and Ren's Feeds perspective because Ren's was not entitled to be able to obtain Purina feed products for resale at the advantageous pricing available only to authorized Purina dealers. The illegality lies in Purina and McGrath effectively licensing Ren's to deal in the Raywalt territory.

[18] The next issue was the assessment of damages. The trial judge concluded that there was no material difference in the damages to which the respondents were entitled, whether assessed for Purina's breach of contract or for the tort of unlawful conduct conspiracy. He said this, at para. 158:

> To my mind, as will be evident from the foregoing, in the absence of effective contractual language limiting liability, the assessment of damages in both tort and contract in this case should be and is essentially the same. Any loss suffered by the plaintiffs that was reasonably foreseeable at the time of the breach is properly compensable.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[19] The trial judge found that the appellants' actions caused the respondents to lose their business. He determined that damages should reflect the going concern value of Raywalt at the time, which he calculated by assessing what the net profit of the business would have been in its second year of operation had it continued beyond January 1992. He then applied a three times earnings multiple. The result was a damage award of $954,213 for Purina's breach of contract and the appellants' conspiracy.

[20] The trial judge applied a prejudgment interest rate of 6.65 per cent to this amount. Because 18 years had passed since the cause of action arose in 1992, this added an additional $1,142,193. In supplementary reasons released on May 3, 2010 [[2010] O.J. No. 1796, 2010 ONSC 2597], the trial judge noted [at para. 8] that he selected that rate because it was "the average rate applicable for the entire 1992 calendar year". He declined to use the rate of 5.1 per cent, which was the bank rate [page434] at the start of the third quarter of 1992, the quarter in which the respondents filed their claim.

[21] Finally, the trial judge dealt with punitive damages. He reiterated that Purina's breach of its exclusivity contract with Raywalt was also answerable in the tort of conspiracy. He found that, if Purina's participation in that tort was not enough to justify the imposition of punitive damages, the breach of its implied duty of good faith to Raywalt was the second respect in which its conduct constituted an actionable wrong. Having found this precondition to be met, the trial judge based his justification for punitive damages on Purina's conduct. He found [at para. 237] it was "the very antithesis of acting in good faith".

[22] In the result, the trial judge ordered that the respondents recover $2,096,406 jointly and severally from the appellants, inclusive of prejudgment interest, that Purina pay punitive damages of $30,000 and that the respondents receive trial costs fixed at $175,000.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

Analysis

[23] The appellants raise five issues. I will deal with each in turn.

First issue -- The unlawful conduct conspiracy

[24] The seminal case in Canada on the tort of civil conspiracy is Canada Cement Lafarge Ltd. v. British Columbia Lightweight Aggregate Ltd., [1983] 1 S.C.R. 452, [1983] S.C.J. No. 33. Speaking for the court, Estey J. described, at pp. 471-72 S.C.R., two categories of conspiracy recognized by Canadian law:

> Although the law concerning the scope of the tort of conspiracy is far from clear, I am of the opinion that whereas the law of tort does not permit an action against an individual defendant who has caused injury to the plaintiff, the law of torts does recognize a claim against them in combination as the tort of conspiracy if:
>
> (1) whether the means used by the defendants are lawful or unlawful, the predominant purpose of the defendants' conduct is to cause injury to the plaintiff; or,
>
> (2) where the conduct of the defendants is unlawful, the conduct is directed towards the plaintiff (alone or together with others), and the defendants should know in the circumstances that injury to the plaintiff is likely to and does result.
>
> In situation (2) it is not necessary that the predominant purpose of the defendants' conduct be to cause injury to the plaintiff but, in the prevailing circumstances, it must be a constructive intent derived from the fact that the defendants should have known that injury to the plaintiff would ensue. In both situations, however, there must be actual damage suffered by the plaintiff. [page435]

[25] This case deals with the second category, namely, unlawful conduct conspiracy. The first does not apply because there was no finding that the predominant purpose of the appellants' conduct was to cause injury to the respondents. The respondents did not advance that proposition at trial.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[26] For the appellants to be liable for the tort of unlawful conduct conspiracy, the following elements must therefore be present:

(a) they act in combination, that is, in concert, by agreement or with a common design;
(b) their conduct is unlawful;
(c) their conduct is directed towards the respondents;
(d) the appellants should know that, in the circumstances, injury to the respondents is likely to result; and
(e) their conduct causes injury to the respondents.

[27] In this court, the appellants challenge only the finding that their conduct was unlawful. In particular, while they acknowledge that Purina's breach of its contract with Raywalt was unlawful, they say that the conduct of Ren's and McGrath was in no sense unlawful, and that therefore this element of the tort was not made out. Civil conspiracy cannot be established if only one conspirator acts unlawfully.

[28] What, then, are the requirements for unlawful conduct for the purposes of this tort? Most obviously, it must be unlawful conduct by each conspirator: see Bank of Montreal v. Tortora, [2010] B.C.J. No. 466, 3 B.C.L.R. (5th) 39 (C.A.). There is no basis for finding an individual liable for unlawful conduct conspiracy if his or her conduct is lawful or, alternatively, if he or she is the only one of those acting in concert to act unlawfully. The tort is designed to catch unlawful conduct done in concert, not to turn lawful conduct into tortious conduct. The trial judge applied this requirement and found that each of the appellants had committed an unlawful act.

[29] To determine what sort of conduct qualifies as "unlawful" the trial judge looked to the jurisprudence dealing with the tort of intentional interference with economic relations.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[30] The trial judge concluded from the intentional interference cases that "unlawful conduct" includes conduct that the defendant "is not at liberty" or "not authorized" to engage in, whether as a result of law, a contract, a convention or an understanding. [page436]

[31] With respect, I do not think the jurisprudence goes that far. In Reach, this court found the tort of intentional interference with economic relations to be made out because actions by the defendant, a voluntary association, that caused its members to stop advertising with the plaintiff, constituted unlawful means directed at third parties, which then caused them to injure the plaintiff. The court was clear that these actions were beyond the lawful authority that the defendant had under its constitution, and were therefore actions beyond the defendants powers and done without jurisdiction. They could be set aside by the court at the behest of the third parties, its members. While the court made reference to the judgment of Lord Denning in Torquay Hotel Co. Ltd. v. Cousins, [1969] 2 Ch. 106, [1969] 1 All E.R. 522 (C.A.), it explicitly declined to decide how far Lord Denning's concept of "unlawful conduct" as "an act which [the defendant] is not at liberty to commit" might extend. Reach was a case of conduct that was wrong in law. I do not think that it provides a basis for the expansive interpretation used by the trial judge [at para. 127] as any "conduct that the defendant 'is not at liberty' or 'not authorized' to engage in, whether as a result of law, a contract, a convention or an understanding".

[32] Since Reach, this court's jurisprudence on the tort of intentional interference with economic relations has, if anything, tightened the scope of conduct considered unlawful. In Drouillard v. Cogeco Cable Inc. (2007), 86 O.R. (3d) 431, [2007] O.J. No. 1664 (C.A.), the defendant's conduct in not following its internal corporate policy but instead acting in bad faith did not amount to unlawful means. In Correia v. Canac Kitchens, a division of Kohler Ltd. (2008), 91 O.R. (3d) 353, [2008] O.J. No. 2497 (C.A.), this court approved of Lord Hoffman's majority reasons in OBG Ltd. v. Allen; Douglas v. Hello! Ltd.; Mainstream Properties Ltd. v. Young, [2008] A.C. 1, [2007] UKHL 21 (H.L.), in which he required unlawful conduct against a third party to be conduct that is actionable by the third party for the purposes of the tort of intentional interference with economic relations. This court reiterated this principle in Alleslev-Krofchak v. Valcom Ltd., [2010] O.J. No. 3548, 2010 ONCA 557, while recognizing that the delineation of actionability remained to be fully defined. It was unnecessary to do so in that case because the unlawful conduct relied on was clearly actionable as a matter of private law.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[33] What is clear from this jurisprudence is that, to constitute unlawful conduct for the purposes of the tort of intentional interference, the conduct must be actionable. It must be wrong in law. Conduct that is merely not authorized by a convention or an [page437] understanding is not enough. On this standard, the approach used by the trial judge was simply too broad.

[34] Moreover, reliance on the tort of intentional interference to supply the definition of "unlawful conduct" for the tort of civil conspiracy does not recognize that these two economic torts have evolved separately, and thus each have developed their own concept of unlawful conduct.

[35] The court should therefore be cautious of turning away from the history of this separate evolution simply to achieve a unified theory for the economic torts. Indeed, in Revenue and Customs Commissioners v. Total Network S.L., [2008] 2 W.L.R. 711, [2008] UKHL 19 (H.L.), the House of Lords went further, and said explicitly that, as the torts of intentional interference with economic relations and unlawful conduct conspiracy have developed over time, the concept of unlawful conduct has a different meaning in one tort than in the other: see, for example, the speech of Lord Walker of Gestingthorpe, at para. 100.

[36] It is not necessary that we go that far in this case. However, rather than automatically adopting the meaning of unlawful conduct given in the intentional interference tort cases, I think the better course is to use those cases as a guide, but also consider the kind of conduct that the jurisprudence has found to be unlawful conduct for the purposes of the conspiracy tort.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[37] It is clear from that jurisprudence that quasi-criminal conduct, when undertaken in concert, is sufficient to constitute unlawful conduct for the purposes of the conspiracy tort, even though that conduct is not actionable in a private law sense by a third party. The seminal case of Canada Cement LaFarge is an example. So too is conduct that is in breach of the Criminal Code, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-46. These examples of "unlawful conduct" are not actionable in themselves, but they have been held to constitute conduct that is wrongful in law and therefore sufficient to be considered "unlawful conduct" within the meaning of civil conspiracy. There are also many examples of conduct found to be unlawful for the purposes of this tort simply because the conduct is actionable as a matter of private law. In Peter T. Burns and Joost Blom, Economic Interests in Canadian Tort Law (Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis, 2009), the authors say this, at pp. 167-68:

> There are two distinct categories of conduct that can be described as comprising "unlawful means": conduct amounting to an independent tort or other actionable wrong, and conduct not actionable in itself.
>
> . . . . .
>
> Examples of conspiracies involving tortious conduct include inducing breach of contract, wrongful interference with contractual rights, nuisance, intimidation, [page438] and defamation. Of course, a breach of contract itself will support an action in civil conspiracy and, as one Australian court has held, the categories of "unlawful means" are not closed.
>
> The second category of unlawful means is conduct comprising unlawful means not actionable in itself.
>
> . . . . .
>
> The first class of unlawful means not actionable in themselves, but which nevertheless supports a conspiracy action, is breach of a statute which does not grant a private right of action, the very instance rejected in Lonrho (1981)

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

by the House of Lords. A common case is a breach of labour relations legislation, and another is the breach of a criminal statute such as the Canadian Criminal Code.

[38] What is required, therefore, to meet the "unlawful conduct" element of the conspiracy tort is that the defendants engage, in concert, in acts that are wrong in law, whether actionable at private law or not. In the commercial world, even highly competitive activity, provided it is otherwise lawful, does not qualify as "unlawful conduct" for the purposes of this tort.

[39] The appellants submit that while Purina's breach of its contract with Raywalt was sufficient to qualify as "unlawful conduct", neither Ren's nor McGrath did anything that would do so. I agree. In my view, the trial judge used an approach that is too broad. Assessed against the correct test, their conduct was not unlawful.

[40] Dealing with Ren's conduct, at the time it purchased feed from McGrath, it had no contract with either Purina or Raywalt. Ren's was free to purchase Purina feed from McGrath at the best price it could obtain and sell it wherever it could. I disagree with the trial judge's conclusion that Ren's was not entitled to be able to obtain Purina feed for resale at advantageous pricing available only to Purina dealers. Ren's conduct in doing so breached no contract. Nor was this conduct tortious or in breach of any statute. Indeed, the trial judge explicitly found that Ren's committed no crime or tort apart from the conspiracy. Ren's required no authorization from Purina to act as it did.

[41] On appeal, the respondent advanced for the first time the proposition that Ren's induced Purina to breach its contract with Raywalt and induced McGrath to breach its contract with Purina. Neither of these allegations was advanced at trial. They are belied by the trial judge's finding that, other than conspiracy, Ren's committed no tort. Moreover, the trial judge's finding that Purina knew of, and approved of the arrangement between Ren's and McGrath, leaves little room for the conclusion required by the inducing breach of contract tort, namely, that Ren's caused Purina to breach its contract with Raywalt or induced McGrath [page439] to breach its contract with Purina, assuming such a breach could be found. There was nothing in Ren's conduct that was wrong in law. It was not "unlawful conduct" for the purposes of the tort of conspiracy.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[42] Turning to McGrath's conduct, the trial judge found it to be "unlawful" because McGrath had no authority to effectively establish a sub-dealership for Ren's to obtain Purina feed at advantageous prices and then sell it into Raywalt's territory. The trial judge characterized McGrath's conduct as a violation of Purina's standard operating procedures. He therefore did not find McGrath's conduct to constitute a breach of his contract with Purina. Indeed, the standard dealership agreement that Raywalt and Ren's had with Purina did not prohibit such an arrangement. Moreover, the trial judge could not have found McGrath to be in breach of his dealership contract with Purina. His finding that Purina knew and approved of what McGrath was doing precluded that possibility, even if such a prohibition had been a term of McGrath's contract. There is no suggestion that McGrath's actions were tortious or in violation of any statute or in other way wrong in law. In my opinion, McGrath's actions cannot be said to be "unlawful conduct" for the purposes of the tort of conspiracy.

[43] In summary, I conclude that only Purina engaged in any unlawful conduct. The other two appellants did not. As a consequence, the finding of unlawful conduct conspiracy and the damages flowing from it must be set aside. The respondents' claim based on civil conspiracy must be dismissed.

Second issue -- The method of calculating breach of contract damages

[44] In Hamilton, Ms. Hamilton entered into a contract with Open Window Bakery Ltd. ("Open Window") for a term of 36 months to serve as its exclusive agent in Japan. The contract gave Open Window the unconditional right to terminate the contract on three months' notice, effective after the commencement of the 19th month of the contract. In the 16th month, Open Window wrongfully terminated the contract. The trial judge determined Ms. Hamilton's damages by inquiring into how Open Window would likely have performed its obligations under the contract hypothetically, but for its repudiation. This resulted in an award reflecting the payments that would have been made over the full 36-month term less a 25 per cent reduction for contingencies.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[45] The Supreme Court held that this was the wrong approach and substituted a damage award based on early termination at [page440] the 19th month mark together with three months' notice, reflecting Open Window's maximum exposure to damages. The court based this on the principle articulated in Cockburn v. Alexander (1848), 6 C.B. 791 that, generally speaking, where there are several ways in which the contract might be performed, the mode that is adopted is the least profitable to the plaintiff and the least burdensome to the defendant, for the purposes of assessing damages. The court described the rationale for this principle and the error in the approach used by the trial judge in the following language [at paras. 15-18]:

> This tort-like analysis proposed by Hamilton is not an established part of Canadian law. There are compelling reasons for this. Contractual obligations are voluntarily assumed by parties and given effect to by the courts. The failure to perform certain promised positive contractual obligations in contract law is conceptually distinct from the breach of unpromised negative obligations to not harm another's interests in tort law: see G. H. L. Fridman, The Law of Torts in Canada (2nd ed. 2002), at p. 11.
>
> In a successful tort claim for damages, unliquidated damages are awarded to a plaintiff on the basis that the plaintiff has suffered a loss through some wrongful interference by the defendant. The plaintiff in such cases has legally protected interests that have been found by a court to be unduly compromised. In tort cases, it is widely recognized that the inquiry into what would have been but for the tort is appropriate, since the plaintiff's interest is in being restored to (or at least awarded compensation in respect of) the position the plaintiff would otherwise be in. See Fridman, supra, at p. 2; A. M. Linden, Canadian Tort Law (7th ed. 2001), at p. 4, ("[f]irst and foremost, tort law is a compensator"); J. G. Fleming, The Law of Torts (9th ed. 1998), at p. 5; and R. F. V. Heuston and R. A. Buckley, Salmond and Heuston on the Law of Torts (21st ed. 1996), at pp. 8-9.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

However, under the general principle applicable in breach of contracts with alternative performances enunciated above, it is not necessary that the non-breaching party be restored to the position they would likely, as a matter of fact, have been in but for the repudiation. Rather, the non-breaching party is entitled to be restored to the position they would have been in had the contract been performed.

In this case, the relevant contractual duties have been expressly set out by the parties in the agreement. Hamilton is entitled to OWB's performance of these voluntarily assumed duties. Hamilton has no compensable interest in the advantages she might have expected under any particular performance of the contract, since the contract itself provided for alternative methods of performance at the election of the defendant. If Hamilton wanted to secure herself the benefits associated with a given particular method of performance, she should have contracted for only that method of performance.

(Emphasis in original)

[46] The trial judge distinguished Hamilton [at para. 106], finding that it applied only where the parties acted honestly and in good faith, and that Purina had not done so, having [page441] "conducted itself in a manner that 'defeated or eviscerated the very purpose and objective' of its agreement with Raywalt".

[47] With respect, I do not agree. The trial judge erred in finding Hamilton to be premised on good faith conduct by the breaching party. Contrary to his view, there was no finding by the trial judge in Hamilton that Open Window had acted in good faith at all material times. Nor is there any suggestion in the Supreme Court's decision that good faith conduct is a pre-requisite for the least burdensome principle to apply. Indeed, Open Window had wrongfully terminated Ms. Hamilton by repudiating the entire contract, thereby defeating its very purpose, yet the least burdensome principle of calculating damages was applicable.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[48] In my view, Hamilton cannot be distinguished as the trial judge did, and should have been followed in assessing the breach of contract damages in this case, even if Purina did not act in good faith in breaching the contract.

[49] Had that been done, the trial judge would not have embarked on a hypothetical inquiry into how Purina would likely have performed its obligations under the contract if it had not breached the contract. That is the very sort of inquiry that Hamilton says should not be done in approaching breach of contract damages where there are alternate modes of performing the contract.

[50] The contract provided that Purina had the unconditional right to cancel the contract at any time on 60 days' notice. Article V(B) of the contract reads, "Notwithstanding anything to the contrary in this article, either of the parties may cancel this Agreement at any time by giving sixty (60) days advance notice to the other party." There is no doubt that this is the least burdensome mode of performance for Purina. It should have been used as the basis for calculating the damages for breach of contract.

[51] Moreover, by finding an implied duty of good faith on Purina not to act in a way that defeats the very purpose of the contract and then finding that Purina could not rely on Article V(B) because it breached that implied duty, the trial judge erred by using the implied duty of good faith to alter the express terms of the contract, including the right to terminate on notice. In Transamerica Life Canada Inc. v. ING Canada Inc. (2003), 68 O.R. (3d) 457, [2003] O.J. No. 4656 (C.A.), at para. 53, this court made clear that Canadian courts have not accorded this power to an implied duty of good faith.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[52] The trial judge also suggested that it would be unconscionable in these circumstances to allow Purina to rely on a [page442] clause like V(B) in the calculation of breach of contract damages. I do not agree that unconscionability can be used in this way. In my view, that doctrine is applicable to determine whether the contract itself is unconscionable, given, for example, the circumstances in which it was made. The doctrine is not applicable to determine how damages should be assessed in light of the circumstances of a particular breach.

[53] In summary, I conclude that the trial judge erred in failing to apply the approach in Hamilton to calculate the damages owed by Purina for its breach of contract. His task should have been to calculate the breach of contract damages needed to restore Raywalt to the position it would have been in had the contract been performed, adopting the mode of performance provided by the contract that is least burdensome to Purina.

[54] The trial judge found that had Purina performed the contract, there is no doubt that Raywalt would still have been in business at the end of January 1992, when it in fact closed its doors. At that point, the contract gave Purina the unconditional right of cancelling the agreement on 60 days' notice. This was the mode of performance least burdensome to Purina and therefore constituted its maximum exposure for damages for breach of the contract with Raywalt.

[55] Using this approach, the quantification of the damages owed by Purina for breach of contract requires the determination of the amount Raywalt lost because of Purina's breach from the time Raywalt opened for business in March 1991 until the end of March 1992, two months after it actually closed its doors.

[56] In my view, the trial judge made findings of fact sufficient for this court to do that calculation, recognizing that this exercise is more of an art than a science. He calculated that, had Purina performed its contractual obligations, Raywalt would have had a profit of $145,654 at the end of January 1992, instead of being insolvent.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[57] He arrived at this amount after considering the expert evidence, together with evidence of additional pet food sales that Raywalt would have been able to make in the last two months of that first year of operation. The appellants attack this figure on two bases.

[58] First, they say that the expert opinion relied on already included the additional pet food sales and that it was an error to count them a second time. I do not agree. The expert's evidence makes only cryptic reference to the pet food sales and it was entirely open to the trial judge to find that they were not included in the expert's opinion of Raywalt's first-year profits [page443] and could therefore properly be added to the expert's calculation of loss in the first year.

[59] Second, they say that the trial judge did not add to Raywalt's costs the additional costs that would have been required in achieving these additional sales. Again, I disagree. There was an ample evidentiary basis for the trial judge to reach the conclusion he did for both Raywalt's gross sales and its expenses had Purina honoured its contract.

[60] I see no basis for interfering with the trial judge's valuation of first-year profits lost to Raywalt.

[61] The trial judge also calculated the net profits that Raywalt would have achieved in its second year of operation had the appellants acted lawfully, as part of his calculation of tort damages. He quantified that loss at $318,071. The appellants raise a number of challenges to this calculation, all of which I reject, as explained in the next section of these reasons. I am therefore prepared to accept that figure as the profits Raywalt would have made in its second year of operation had Purina not breached its contract. This provides a good basis for determining the profits lost to Raywalt through February and March 1992, representing the 60 days' notice Purina was required to give, which I would assess at one-sixth of this number, namely, $53,011.83.

[62] Thus calculated, I would fix the damages to which

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

Raywalt is entitled for Purina's breach of contract at $145,654 plus $53,011.83, for a total of $198,665.83.

Third issue -- The calculation of damages

[63] As I have indicated, the trial judge concluded that damages for the unlawful conduct conspiracy should reflect the ongoing concern value of Raywalt at the time it was harmed. He calculated this by assessing what the net profit of the business would have been in its second year of operation and then applying a three times earnings multiple to that figure.

[64] The appellants raise a number of challenges to his assessment of Raywalt's net profit for that second year. Although I have found that the finding of unlawful conduct conspiracy cannot stand, it is necessary to address these challenges since I have used the calculation of Raywalt's net profits for the second year to calculate Raywalt's contract damages for February and March 1992.

[65] First, the appellants say that the trial judge made several errors, resulting in an overvaluation of the contribution that additional pet food sales would have made. They say that the trial judge double counted that contribution by adding it to the expert evidence he relied on. I disagree with this, as I have [page444] explained above. They also say that the trial judge impermissibly relied on hearsay evidence in making his finding. I disagree. In my view, it was open to him to rely on the evidence he did hear, which was completely unobjected to at trial by the appellants. Lastly, they say that the trial judge insufficiently discounted for the possibility that these additional sales might not take place. However, the discount to be applied was an assessment that the trial judge was entitled to make on the evidence before him. That is what he did. There is no basis for this court to interfere with it.

[66] Second, the appellants argue that the trial judge erred in the discount he applied in using Ren's earnings for the same period as input to calculate what Raywalt would have earned but for the harm inflicted on it. However, the trial judge was fully aware that some discount was appropriate because Ren's sold some products that Raywalt did not. He based the discount he selected on evidence of the percentage of Ren's business that these additional products represented, measured by tonnage. That was a conclusion he was entitled to draw. There is no basis for this court to second guess it and apply a higher discount rate.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[67] Third, the appellants quarrel with the trial judge's calculation of the value of Ren's feed sales that Raywalt would have taken over but for the conspiracy. They say that there was evidence of this value that the trial judge should have preferred to the evidence he accepted. In my opinion, that too was up to him. His calculation was based on evidence that he was entitled to act upon. There is no basis for this court to interfere.

[68] Fourth, the appellants say that the trial judge committed a palpable and overriding error in assessing the administrative expenses that Raywalt would have incurred in its second year of operation. Again, I disagree. His assessment was well founded on evidence of what those expenses would have been. The trial judge accepted this evidence and made no reversible error in doing so.

[69] In summary, I conclude that all of the appellant's challenges to the trial judge's calculation of the profit that Raywalt would have made in its second year of operation must fail.

Fourth issue -- Prejudgment interest

[70] In his original reasons for judgment, the trial judge applied a prejudgment interest rate of 6.65 per cent to his assessment of damages for breach of contract and unlawful conduct conspiracy. He did so without the parties having an opportunity to make submissions on the issue. He set out his basis for selecting this rate, at para. 219 of his original reasons: [page445]

> The average rate of interest established for pre-judgment interest by section 128 of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

1990, c. C.43, for 1992, the year in which I find that the cause of action of the plaintiffs arose, is 6.65%.

[71] Following the release of these reasons, the trial judge agreed to receive written submissions on the issue. In subsequent reasons, he declined to change the rate he had selected. He gave this explanation, at para. 8 of his supplementary reasons [[2010] O.J. No. 1796, 2010 ONSC 2597]:

> More importantly, section 128(1) of the Courts of Justice Act shows that the appropriate starting point for the calculation is not the date on which the claim was actually filed, but rather the date on which the cause of action arose: see also Sedigh v. Lange, [2000] O.J. No. 3606 (S.C.J.) at para. 11. I focused on when the cause of action arose as the relevant time and found as a fact that the plaintiffs' cause of action arose at some point in 1992 at or about the time that the business failed owing to the actions of the defendants, rather than focusing on the date upon which the plaintiffs filed their claim. As such, I continue to regard it as appropriate to average the quarterly rates for 1992 in the manner that I did at paragraph 219 of my Reasons for Judgment.

[72] The appellants also argued at trial that the trial judge ought to have adjusted the rate down to reflect the factors listed on s. 130(2) of the Courts of Justice Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. C.43. The trial judge concluded his supplementary reasons by rejecting that submission, at para. 11:

> Here, the defendants have advanced a range of reasons for their claim that a lower rate should be applicable, but I find that they have done nothing to discharge the onus that rests upon them of persuading me that it is appropriate that I should exercise discretion in this case to deviate from what would otherwise be the applicable interest rate specified by the Courts of Justice Act.

[73] In this court, the appellants argue that the trial judge erred in this approach.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[74] I agree. The prejudgment rate specified in the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 194 pursuant to the Courts of Justice Act for proceedings commenced in the last quarter of 1992, that is, when the respondents' claim was commenced, was 5.1 per cent. That is the applicable rate unless the court finds special circumstances to justify departing from it. In my view, the trial judge erred by taking as his starting point the average prejudgment interest rate for 1992, the year in which the respondents' cause of action arose, rather than the starting point as specified under the Courts of Justice Act. Moreover, he offered no special circumstances for exercising his discretion to deviate from the applicable rate specified by the Courts of Justice Act. His error was in using 6.65 per cent as the applicable rate. The proper applicable rate to be used is 5.1 per cent. [page446]

Fifth issue -- Punitive damages

[75] Finally, the appellant Purina attacks the award of punitive damages made against it. It argues that the trial judge's basis for doing so did not reach the threshold required by the jurisprudence.

[76] In Fidler v. Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada, [2006] 2 S.C.R. 3, [2006] S.C.J. No. 30 ("Sun Life"), the Supreme Court of Canada made clear that, in breach of contract cases, conduct warranting punitive damages must be an independently actionable wrong in addition to a breach of contract. As well, it must also reach the threshold warranting punitive damages. The court described that threshold, at para. 62:

> By their nature, contract breaches will sometimes give rise to censure. But to attract punitive damages, the impugned conduct must depart markedly from ordinary standards of decency -- the exceptional case that can be described as malicious, oppressive or high-handed and that offends the court's sense of decency: Hill v. Church of Scientology of Toronto, [1995] 2 S.C.R. 1130, at para. 196; Whiten, at para. 36. The misconduct must be of a nature as to take it beyond the usual opprobrium that surrounds breaking a contract. As stated in Whiten, at para. 36, "punitive damages straddle the > frontier between civil law (compensation) and criminal law (punishment)". Criminal law and quasi-criminal regulatory schemes are recognized as the primary vehicles for punishment. It is important that punitive damages be resorted to only in exceptional cases, and with restraint.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[77] In coming to his conclusion, the trial judge was clearly influenced by his finding that Purina's conduct was both a breach of contract and part of the unlawful conduct conspiracy. Alternatively, he found that Purina's conduct constituted a second actionable wrong in that it was also a breach of its implied duty of good faith towards Raywalt. Beyond that, he justified the punitive damages award this way, at para. 238:

> Here, I find that an award of punitive damages ought to be made against Purina to serve the rational purpose of delivering the simple message that good faith, promises of good faith, and an underlying foundation of business efficacy continue to be what our law relies upon as the cornerstone of upholding and enforcing contractual promises.

[78] In my view, this sets too low a bar. It would make every breach of contract that is also a breach of an implied duty of good faith a sufficient basis for the award of punitive damages. I think that would pay insufficient regard to the caution in Sun Life that punitive damages are confined to exceptional cases in which the misconduct is of a nature that takes it beyond the usual opprobrium surrounding breaking a contract. It seems to me that breaches of an implied duty of good faith can come in so many possible different shapes and sizes that it cannot be said [page447] that generically, the breach of such a duty is per se enough to justify punitive damages. It falls, therefore, to this court to determine whether, on the facts as found below, such an award is warranted.

[79] In Sun Life, the Supreme Court of Canada affirmed that the principles set out in Whiten v. Pilot Insurance Co., [2002] 1 S.C.R. 595, [2002] S.C.J. No. 19, at para. 63, continue to govern the award of punitive damages. It reiterated that in breach of contract cases, in addition to the requirement that the conduct constitute a marked departure from ordinary standards of decency, there is the requirement that the acts be "independently actionable". Breach of an implied duty of good faith can satisfy the requirement of an independent actionable wrong: see Whiten, at para. 79. The trial judge found that Purina had breached its implied duty of good faith. That was not contested before us and since we received no argument on it we must proceed on that basis. Coupled with breach of the exclusivity contract, the requirement of an independently actionable wrong is therefore met in this case.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[80] Thus, the question becomes: did Purina's conduct constitute such a marked departure from the ordinary standards of decency that it warrants censure through the imposition of an award of punitive damages? In answering this question, a careful analysis of Purina's conduct is warranted. In doing so, it is useful to call to mind the factors for consideration set out by the Supreme Court in Whiten, at para. 94:

> (1) Punitive damages are very much the exception rather than the rule, (2) imposed only if there has been high-handed, malicious, arbitrary or highly reprehensible misconduct that departs to a marked degree from ordinary standards of decent behaviour. (3) Where they are awarded, punitive damages should be assessed in an amount reasonably proportionate to such factors as the harm caused, the degree of the misconduct, the relative vulnerability of the plaintiff and any advantage or profit gained by the defendant, (4) having regard to any other fines or penalties suffered by the defendant for the misconduct in question. (5) Punitive damages are generally given only where the misconduct would otherwise be unpunished or where other penalties are or are likely to be inadequate to achieve the objectives of retribution, deterrence and denunciation. (6) Their purpose is not to compensate the plaintiff, but (7) to give a defendant his or her just desert (retribution), to deter the defendant and others from similar misconduct in the future (deterrence), and to mark the community's collective condemnation (denunciation) of what has happened. (8) Punitive damages are awarded only where compensatory damages, which to some extent are punitive, are insufficient to > accomplish these objectives, and (9) they are given in an amount that is no greater than necessary to rationally accomplish their purpose. (10) While normally the state would be the recipient of any fine or penalty for misconduct, the plaintiff will keep punitive damages as a "windfall" in addition to compensatory damages. (11) Judges and juries in our system have usually found that [page448] moderate awards of punitive damages, which inevitably carry a stigma in the broader community, are generally sufficient.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

[81] From the outset, Purina knew that in order for Raywalt to succeed, it had to take over Ren's sales of Purina products. As the trial judge found, the volume of Purina sales to Raywalt taken from the Ren's dealership was "critically important" to the success of the new dealership. While the exclusive right to market and sell Purina feed products within defined geographical territories is an important feature of all distributorships, to Purina's knowledge, it was crucial to Raywalt. Further, Purina was aware of the financial risks and vulnerability of Kasamekas and Jackson. As part of the start-up financing, Kasamekas gave Purina a mortgage against his home and the company's credit line was secured by personal guarantees by Kasamekas, Jackson and their spouses. The personal guarantees were secured against their homes.

[82] It is within this context that Purina's actions must be considered. Within weeks of Raywalt starting up, it learned that Purina was permitting Ren's to continue to supply Ren with feed. When challenged, Purina assured Raywalt that it would stop supplying Ren with feed. While Purina did in fact stop supplying Ren directly, it then embarked on the arrangements with McGrath to ensure that Ren continued to receive feed and sell within the Raywalt territory. That is, in essence, Purina did precisely what it told Raywalt it would not do. It did so repeatedly, over a lengthy period of time and with a complete disregard for the consequences to Raywalt. At para. 49 of the reasons for decision, the trial judge quotes from correspondence authored by Tom Robinson, a manager at Purina, which shows that he had a "clear financial and business interest in McGrath succeeding over Raywalt" and at the relevant times, took an "aggressive stance" against Raywalt.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

Because of the surreptitious way in which Purina supplied Ren, Raywalk had no knowledge of what was going on and therefore had no ability to take steps to address the problem or mitigate the financial harm that ensued.

[83] Purina's actions in supplying McGrath so that he, in turn, could supply Ren are deceitful. As such, they are reprehensible and deserving of sanction.

[84] As the preceding reasons explain, the damages award does not otherwise punish this behaviour. There is no "double recovery" aspect to making an award of punitive damages in this case. Moreover, the damages award is insufficient to accomplish the objectives of denunciation and deterrence of others from acting similarly. The amount of $30,000, set by the [page449] trial judge, is sufficient to do so. Accordingly, I would affirm the punitive damages award, albeit for different reasons than those of the trial judge.

Conclusion

[85] In summary, except for punitive damages, I would allow the appeal. I would dismiss the claim of unlawful conduct conspiracy. I would substitute for the damage award for breach of contract an award of $198,665.83, to which I would apply a prejudgment interest rate of 5.1 per cent. The trial judgment must be amended accordingly, in light of these reasons.

[86] This result may be of relevance to the costs awarded at trial and is as well the context for an award of costs of the appeal. The parties may file written submissions of no more than ten pages on both of these questions within 30 days of the release of these reasons.

Appeal allowed in part.

2011 ONCA 460 (CanLII)

In the Court of Appeal of Alberta

Citation: Mraiche Investment Corporation v. McLennan Ross LLP, 2012 ABCA 95

Date: 20120320
Docket: 1103-0115-AC
Registry: Edmonton

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

Between:

Mraiche Investment Corporation

Appellant
(Plaintiff)

- and -

McLennan Ross LLP

Respondent
(Defendant)

- and -

Gurbachan S. Paul, Harjit Neeta Paul, 1396619 Alberta Ltd., Diamond Apartment Laundry Ltd., Robert G. Kent, and Robert G. Kent Professional Corporation, and John Doe

Not a Party to the Appeal
(Defendants)

The Court:

The Honourable Mr. Justice Keith Ritter
The Honourable Mr. Justice Peter Martin
The Honourable Mr. Justice Jack Watson

Memorandum of Judgment

Appeal from the Order by
The Honourable Mr. Justice R.P. Belzil
Dated the 14th day of March, 2011
Filed on the 8th day of April, 2011
(2011 ABQB 164, Docket: 0803 16647)

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

Memorandum of Judgment

The Court:

I Introduction

[1] This appeal raises the question of what sort of evidence is capable of making a case (of sufficient merit to survive summary judgment) that a solicitor, who carried out instructions from a client to transfer some of the client's property, should be found liable for the tort of conspiracy to defraud a creditor of the client by doing so (by means of fraudulent diversion of assets).

[2] The appellant submits that it is sufficient to lead evidence of facts that, if the solicitor knew or ought to have known of them, might have caused that solicitor, not otherwise motivated to do any harm to the creditor, to become suspicious of his own client's motives in those instructions. In sum, the appellant's position is that a solicitor can be held constructively guilty of the tort of conspiracy by unlawful means. The chambers judge was not persuaded that, on this record, the solicitor (and his law firm) should be held liable for the tort of conspiracy on such a constructive basis. On this record, we agree, and would dismiss the appeal.

II Synopsis

[3] The appellant plaintiff corporation asserts that the solicitor here tortiously conspired with his client to commit the unlawful conduct, knowingly injurious to the appellant, of defrauding the appellant in its position as a creditor of the client. The appellant characterizes each transfer of four real properties belonging to the client as a fraudulent preference under the Fraudulent Preferences Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. F-24. The appellant became a judgment creditor of the client in Court of Queen's Bench Action No. 0703-14586 ("Action No. 14586") after the transfers closed. The appellant's suit rests on the inferences it asserts should be drawn about the solicitor's state of mind. The suit was dismissed by a chambers judge by summary judgment: 2011 ABQB 164.

[4] The appellant's case rests entirely on the second prong of the test for the tort of civil conspiracy in Canada Cement Lafarge v. BC Lightweight Aggregate, [1983] 1 SCR 452, pp. 471-472. Lafarge, adopting the statement in Lonrho Ltd. v. Shell Petroleum Co. Ltd., [1982] AC 173, [1981] 2 AER 456, stated that "the tort, unlike the crime, consists not of agreement but of concerted action taken pursuant to agreement". Lafarge went on to hold (seemingly with some reluctance as it was discussing a tort of economic loss):

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

> It is important to bear in mind, when considering this explanation of the tort of conspiracy by unlawful means, the prior finding of fact that the defendants knew that their conduct, which was directed towards the plaintiff, would injure it. [.....]
>
> [and]
> Although the law concerning the scope of the tort of conspiracy is far from clear, I am of the opinion that whereas the law of tort does not permit an action against an individual defendant who has caused injury to the plaintiff, the law of torts does recognize a claim against them in combination as the tort of conspiracy if:
>
> (1) whether the means used by the defendants are lawful or unlawful, the predominant purpose of the defendants' conduct is to cause injury to the plaintiff; or,
>
> (2) where the conduct of the defendants is unlawful, the conduct is directed towards the plaintiff (alone or together with others), and the defendants should know in the circumstances that injury to the plaintiff is likely to and does result.
>
> In situation (2) it is not necessary that the predominant purpose of the defendants' conduct be to cause injury to the plaintiff but, in the prevailing circumstances, it must be a constructive intent derived from the fact that the defendants should have known that injury to the plaintiff would ensue. In both situations, however, there must be actual damage suffered by the plaintiff.

[5] The appellant says that a trial court could arguably find that the solicitor knew or ought to have known enough about the relevant facts to be found to have a mental state equivalent to the conspiracy as alleged. This meant consciously and volitionally engaging in concerted action with the client to unlawfully carry out a fraudulent preference knowing that the appellant would suffer injury as a result. We assume that the appellant put its "best foot forward" in support of this position before the chambers judge.

[6] In its pleadings, the appellant asserted facts which the appellant says would have (a) come to the attention of the solicitor and (b) informed any competent solicitor to the questionable nature of the transfers. The chambers judge rejected the appellant's assertions that the alleged facts, if proven, as to the transactions carried out by the solicitor were sufficient to construct a case of conspiracy by the solicitor to do economic harm to the appellant by unlawful means and that the conspiracy was executed. On appeal, the appellant says that the chambers judge seriously misconceived those circumstances and more generally was wrong about their overall legal effect.

[7] The respondent law firm asserts that, even taking the available evidence in a manner most favourable to the appellant, the conduct of the solicitor was no worse than the solicitor's failure to ask his client questions. It says that questions might, indeed, have occurred to a different prudent solicitor as concerns arising from the client's instructions; or they might not.

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

[8] Because the solicitor was not alleged by the pleadings to have had any contractual duty to the appellant, nor any fiduciary duty to the appellant, nor any proximity with the appellant within the law of negligence, the respondent suggests it was a legal leap too far to characterize possible mis-judgment or professional misconduct by the solicitor (neither of which was conceded) into tortious conspiracy. After all, every client of every lawyer probably has creditors, some of whom may have significant and unanswerable claims – of which the solicitor is or ought to be aware.

[9] In sum, the firm submits that there is no triable case that the solicitor committed the tort of conspiracy with the client to do harm to the appellant by unlawful means. It does not dispute that a solicitor might be guilty of the tort of conspiracy to do harm to an identified individual by unlawful means even if the solicitor's only active participation is in carrying out instructions of a client. But the firm says there is no triable case involving evidence of the culpable meeting of the minds which is necessary in law to implicate the solicitor as a conspirator in concerted action pursuant to agreement with a shared intent to cause injury to the appellant.

[10] The law firm rejects the submission that there can be constructive liability for the tort of conspiracy to do harm by unlawful means to an identified person. To do so would convert the tort into a form of liability in negligence that steps around the exclusion of proximity in the present facts. The law firm contends that there is no basis in this record to find that this solicitor was obliged to police the actions and motives of his client in these circumstances. The firm submits that failure of the solicitor to do such policing should not be constructed in law as equivalent to concerted action taken pursuant to an unlawful agreement by the solicitor with the client.

III Evidential Context

[11] The chambers judge struck the appellant's suit against the law firm pursuant to Rule 7.3(1) of the Alberta Rules of Court AR 124/2010. The chambers judge found that the "claim of fraud against McLennan Ross is purely speculative and has no chance of success." In his view, it had "no merit" and that, in accordance with Lameman v. Canada, 2008 SCC 14, [2008] 1 SCR 372, it should be "weeded out". For the purposes of these reasons, we also are prepared to assume (as did the chambers judge) that the allegations of the appellant in the statement of claim even if not fleshed out in the affidavits and materials before the chambers judge were provable as fact: Imperial Tobacco v. Canada, 2011 SCC 42, [2011] 3 SCR 45 ("The court must rather ask whether, assuming the facts pleaded are true, there is a reasonable prospect that the claim will succeed."). A summary of the facts follows.

[12] Other defendants in the appellant's action against the law firm were spouses G.S. Paul and H.N. Paul and 1396619 Alberta Ltd. ("1396619"). 1396619 was incorporated by the solicitor, D. Fialkov, based on instructions from G.S. Paul on April 22 to 23, 2008. Also on April 23, 2008, the solicitor opened four files for transfer of four real properties that then belonged to a company called Premier City Investments Ltd. ("Premier") of which G.S. Paul was the sole director, then ultimately to a company called Newcastle Construction (1994) Inc. ("Newcastle"). The principal of the appellant, Mraiche Investment Corporation, is S. Mraiche.

[13] On April 22, 2008, Fialkov was informed by G.S. Paul about two further potential issues relating to two unrelated apartment / condominium buildings which the appellant says would have exposed G.S. Paul or Premier to claims of $800,000. The appellant asserts that "McLennan Ross was aware of at least 4 claims against Premier and Mr. Paul totaling in excess of $15 million": Factum, para. 22. This assertion is a conclusion, not evidence, as to what Fialkov knew in April of 2008. Linked to this is the fact that examinations of G.S. Paul and S. Mraiche are said to have been scheduled within a week of April 23, 2008.

[14] Fialkov did the legal work on transfers of the four properties from Premier to 1396619. Two of the transfers occurred on May 8, 2008 and on May 9, 2008 respectively. Those transfers from Premier to 1396619 were for nominal sums, namely $10 per property. The appellant says that on the face of such transfers, creditors of Premier, or for that matter the Minister of National Revenue if interested would not be mystified about the nature of each transfer. Fialkov acknowledged that he did not inform the lenders on title that the four properties were being transferred and that he had no instructions from G.S. Paul to inform the lenders. He did not recall why he did so. He was aware that eventually the properties were to be transferred to Newcastle for $1,600,000.

[15] H.N. Paul, wife of G.S. Paul, was the sole shareholder and director of 1396619. She professed on examination not to have found out about the incorporation of 1396619 or the transfer of the properties until around August 8, 2008 and that she received no advice from the solicitor about the transfers before then. Her signature purports to appear on many documents as to 1396619 as "effective" on April 23, 2008 [A58-A102]. She acknowledged signing a Directors' Resolution for 1396619 putatively dated June 25, 2008, authorizing G.S. Paul to sign any documents necessary to allow 1396619 to deal with the four properties [A86]. H.N. Paul also professed to having received no advice from Fialkov as to the meaning of that Resolution before August, 2008.

[16] Against this, there is no evidence that it was communicated to Fialkov between April and August, 2008, that H.N. Paul was not in Canada in April, 2008 or that H.N. Paul was not aware of the incorporation of 1396619 or the planned transfers from Premier to 1396619. Nor was there evidence that Fialkov should have questioned G.S. Paul's acting for his wife.

[17] Fialkov's affidavit agreed that he took instructions initially only from G.S. Paul and thereafter from both spouses. As of November 13, 2007, Premier along with G.S. Paul was being sued by the appellant on Action No. 14586. The appellant's claim on Action No. 14586 centred on the appellant's investment advances made to Premier on other properties. The total of those advances was $1,500,000. Action No. 14586 was ultimately settled by consent judgment for $2,500,000 plus costs against both Premier and G.S. Paul and two other companies on October 2, 2008 [A290]. Fialkov swears that he was unaware of the particulars of the dispute involving G.S. Paul, and unaware that the consent judgment had been entered until March, 2009. A different lawyer in the respondent law firm, J. Rossall, acted for Premier and G.S. Paul in relation to Action No. 14586 from the inception of that suit until Rossall withdrew as of September 16, 2008 [A238].

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

[18] The appellant contends that a letter dated June 25, 2008 from Rossall to G.S. Paul which was copied to Fialkov referred to the examinations for discovery in Action No. 14586. Based on this letter copy, the appellant says Fialkov would know of "litigation on behalf of Mr. Paul". The letter's title line refers only to "Mraiche Investment Corporation" and the content refers to "an examination for discovery of Mr. Mraiche". This was not a smoking gun. That letter does not contradict Fialkov's assertion that he knew nothing of the particulars of Action No. 14586.

[19] Between July 31, 2008 and August 6, 2008, Fialkov received copies of the listing agreement and the real estate purchase contract and related documents regarding the sale of the four properties to Newcastle. The appellant characterizes as suspicious the fact that the contract named Premier as vendor and as the party to whom a deposit of $75,000 was to be released. The appellant says it is suspicious that no assignment was then in existence between 1396619 and Premier and Fialkov did not do anything about that until a date on or around August 8, 2008, when H.N. Paul signed the Directors' Resolution for 1396619 which authorized G.S. Paul to act for 1396619 on the sale of the four properties, and authorized G.S. Paul to receive the deposit in trust for 1396619.

[20] On or about August 18, 2008, Fialkov completed the transfer of the four properties from 1396619 to Newcastle for a total price of $1,600,000 which included a vendor take back mortgage of $200,000. After paying out the mortgages, taxes and legal accounts and discharging a caveat, Fialkov paid the remaining proceeds of $250,000 to 1396619, with the further $200,000 owing to 1396619 being on the take back mortgage. Some time later G.S. Paul went to India. There is no evidence Fialkov was aware that he left.

[21] Fialkov continued to do work for G.S. Paul after Rossall withdrew in September, 2008. Fialkov swears that he was not aware of Rossall having withdrawn. Fialkov prepared a trust document on October 1, 2008, which trust document was backdated to April 29, 2008. The trust document was to say that as of April 29, 2008, the four properties were held in trust for Premier by 1396619, with beneficial ownership of the properties solely in Premier. The appellant proposes that this was another suspicious element of the interaction between Fialkov and G.S.

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

Paul. This was well after the alleged fraudulent conveyance of the properties. There is no evidence whether this trust document was executed. H.N. Paul on examination denied any awareness of these trust arrangements prior to the trust document being prepared. Fialkov swears that he received his instructions to prepare the trust document from H.N. Paul.

[22] On November 26, 2008, 1396619 sold the $200,000 vendor take back mortgage on the four properties to Canadian Mutual Acceptance Corporation for $146,000. The appellant says that it was unable to capture through Premier any of the $250,000 proceeds of sale of the four properties. There is no evidence that Fialkov was aware of the sale of the take back mortgage.

[23] The solicitor's affidavit on the present motion asserts, inter alia, as follows:

> 2. In the fall of 2007 I became aware that Jon Rossall of McLennan Ross LLP was acting for one or more of Dr. Paul, Mrs. Paul and / or Premier Investments in connection with a dispute with Mraiche Investment Corporation but I was not aware that Mraiche had commenced the 'Negligence Action' [14586] referred to in paragraph 28 of the within Statement of Claim prior to March of 2009 when the within action was commenced. Prior to that time I knew nothing of the particulars of the Negligence Action, the status of that Action or the details of any dispute between Mraiche Investment Corporation and Dr. Paul or Premier City Investments Ltd. At no time had I discussed the Negligence Action with Dr. Paul or Mrs. Paul. Nor was I made aware that Jon Rossall and McLennan Ross LLP had ceased to act for Premiere [sic] Investments and Dr. Paul and Premier Investments Ltd. [sic] in September 2008 in the Negligence Action or that the Defendants in that action granted a consent judgment to Mraiche in that action in December 2008.

[24] Other aspects of the Fialkov affidavit are noted below. The respondent on appeal submits that the snippets of the examination of H.N. Paul as a defendant are not properly admissible on the motion or the appeal as evidence against Fialkov. We do not find it necessary to deal with this procedural point as we find that the evidence does not advance the appellant's position in any event.

IV Reasons of the Chambers Judge

[25] The chambers judge was entitled to draw inferences on undisputed facts before him: Lameman at para. 11 ("The chambers judge may make inferences of fact based on the undisputed facts before the court, as long as the inferences are strongly supported by the facts*: Guarantee Co. of North America*, at para. 30.") Côté JA of this Court in his decision in Lameman at 2006 ABCA 392, 66 AltaLR 4th 243 at para. 95 added that "summary judgment does not permit choosing among competing reasonable inferences arising from the primary facts in evidence: Walters v. Clark (2006), 211 O.A.C. 278, 279 (para. 6) (C.A.). But that did not occur here.". As in Lameman, the chambers judge here was entitled to consider the evidence in the round on the crucial issues.

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

[26] The chambers judge acknowledged that merely because a lawyer is acting in accordance with instructions from his client is not exemptive, if in so doing the law is actually engaged in the tort of conspiracy to harm by unlawful means. The chambers judge proceeded on the assumption, solely for the purposes of argument, that the conduct of G.S. Paul involved an effort to effectuate a fraudulent preference expressly to the disadvantage of the appellant: 2011 ABQB 164 at para. [16].

[27] The appellant's principal, S. Mraiche, on examination on his affidavit, effectively conceded that his position was mounted on interpretation of the circumstances. He pointed to no evidence in the appellant's possession showing an actual agreement by the solicitor to conspire to injure let alone to defraud the appellant (R7-R10): 2011 ABQB 164 at para. [9]. The chambers judge also noted the content of Fialkov's affidavit: at para. [8]. He summarized the appellant's assertions: at paras. [3] to [7]. There does appear to be error in one aspect of his summary of the appellant's position but we do not find it to be significant in the outcome: see below.

[28] The appellant contends that the chambers judge ignored or misapprehended the affidavit of S. Mraiche in reaching his conclusion that the appellant's 'best foot forward' provided no evidence of such an agreement being reached, let alone an agreement being effectuated and only provided speculation. The elaborate affidavit of S. Mraiche with exhibits as provided to the chambers judge (and to this court as the appellant's extracts [A1-A292]) consists essentially of a concatenation of available records, correspondence, portions of examination of some witnesses, and the principal's interpretive argument. Despite one error, the reasons of the chambers judge, read fairly, reveal that he was fully conscious of all this material.

[29] Against this was the sworn denial of the solicitor including that aspect quoted earlier in these reasons. The solicitor asserted under oath other details of his involvement with his clients which conform with the other documentary evidence and correspondence. He denied knowledge of the particulars of Action No. 14578. He denied under oath having any awareness of any insolvency on the part of Premier, 1396619 or the Pauls "or that any of the aforesaid were taking steps to convey property of any sort, including the Lands, to avoid the claims of any creditor". He specifically denied that any of them told him they were incapable of paying their debts or that the conveyance of the lands was undertaken to avoid the claims of any creditors.

[30] The chambers judge's decision at 2011 ABQB 164, paras. [3] - [4] addressed the interpretive contentions of the appellant seriatim. The appellant says that the chambers judge erred in stating that the four properties being transferred were actually subject matter of Action No. 14578. The appellant says that this is significant because Premier had equity in those properties and had no equity in the properties that were the subject matter of Action No. 14578. We find no significance to this error. The balance of the reasons of the chambers judge makes it clear that he appreciated that the question was whether Fialkov conspired in a fraudulent preference scheme that, for the sake of argument, the chambers judge assumed against G.S. Paul.

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

V Standard of Review

[31] The standard of review was put this way in Encana:

> [19] The parties agree that the standard of review of a decision to grant summary judgment is reasonableness, and that the identification of the legal test for summary judgment is a question of law for which the standard of review is correctness: Tottrup v. Clearwater (Municipal District No. 99), 2006 ABCA 380, 68 Alta. L.R. (4th) 237 at para. 8. An appeal court reviewing a summary judgment decision will be reluctant to interfere where the chambers judge has stated and applied the proper principles and where there was evidence to support the findings made and inferences drawn: De Shazo v. Nations Energy Co., 2005 ABCA 241, 48 Alta. L.R. (4th) 25 at para. 16; Wolfert v.Shuchuk, 2003 ABCA 109, 15 Alta. L.R. (4th) 5 at para. 9. Absent palpable and overriding error, findings of fact and inferences drawn will not be overturned: Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235 at para. 10; Dow Chemical Canada Inc. v. Shell Chemicals Canada Ltd., 2010 ABCA 126, 25 Alta. L.R. (5th) 221 at para. 10; De Shazo, supra; Wolfert, supra.
>
> See also: Murphy Oil Co. v. Predator Corp., 2006 ABCA 69, 384 AR 251 at para. 23; Wolfert v. Shuchuk, 2003 ABCA 109, 15 AltaLR (4th) 5 at para. 9; Samson Indian Band v. Chevron Canada Resources, 2009 ABCA 180, 6 AltaLR 5th 5; Milavsky v. Milavsky, 2011 ABCA 231, at paras. 13 to 16 (quoting) De Soto Resources Ltd. v. Encana Corporation, 2011 ABCA 100, 44 Alta LR 5th 253 at para. 19; Reece v. Edmonton (City), 2011 ABCA 238 at paras. 9 to 10 (majority) and at paras. 132 to 133 (dissent); Gayton v. Lacasse, 2010 ABCA 123, 482 AR 179 at para. 9.

[32] In this case, the decision as to summary judgment turned on the definitive elements of the conspiracy tort rather than on whether there was an overwhelming shortfall in the reliability and sufficiency of the available evidence. As such, this was a decision which evaluated the overall effect of the available evidence and pleadings vis-à-vis those defined elements and thus involved the extricable question of law as to the definition. It therefore attracts correctness review.

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

[33] A brief side-step seems to be necessary. When a court tunes in on the concept of "no reasonable prospect of success" as mentioned in the pleadings case of Imperial Tobacco, it does so with consideration of reasonable viability in law even if the law is not settled: see e.g. Reece, supra; Imperial Tobacco at para. 21 ("The law is not static and unchanging. Actions that yesterday were deemed hopeless may tomorrow succeed.") Thus, neither mere novelty of a viable claim, nor the mere fact the available evidence on the crucial matters may be debatable should drive a bona fide claimant from the judgment seat in pleadings challenge cases. A motion for summary judgment could well turn on a similar question as to the legal viability of the action.

[34] In the case at bar, there is no doubt about the definition of the tort of conspiracy to injure by unlawful means. So tort novelty is not directly an issue here. But the appellant's argument amounts to a contention that the conspiracy tort can be made out constructively at virtually every point in the required analysis. If that argument succeeded on the record before the chambers judge, it would, as the respondent says, arguably expand the definition of the tort as set out in Lafarge by including within it a form of liability in negligence in substitution for actual conspiracy. We note, however, that the appellant does not directly ask this court to re-engineer the conspiracy tort (assuming we were empowered to do so). That being so, we hasten to say that we are not addressing the complex question of whether the essential ingredients of the conspiracy tort should be re-cast to substitute different ingredients for what the law now requires. That can wait for another day.

[35] Returning to this case, we note that although the appellant contends that there is a crucial difference between the position of the appellant and the position of the respondent on material issues of fact, we find that both sides are essentially arguing on common ground. As the respondent says, the appellant's case rests entirely on suspicions of the appellant contrived from the basic facts indicated by the documents, transactional history, and evidence. The respondent says there is no actual evidence of any entry into a conspiracy by Fialkov and that is that.

VI Discussion

[36] As noted above, the chambers judge assumed for argument's sake that a solicitor can be found to be culpable in a conspiracy tort to assist a client in fraudulent conveyances to do harm to a specific creditor of the client of which the solicitor is aware, depending on the available evidence. He was satisfied that if such conspiracy tort could be proven, the solicitor would not be shielded by the Code of Professional Conduct for lawyers in so doing: see e.g. Datanet Information Systems v. Belzil, 2010 ABQB 72, 485 AR 301 at para. 91.

[37] Indeed, the Law Society of Alberta Code of Professional Conduct and the Canadian Bar Association Code of Professional Conduct indicate that lawyers must guard against becoming the tool of an unscrupulous client. On the other hand, a lawyer for the defendant in a lawsuit does not have a general duty of care towards the plaintiff in that suit; such duties as may exist are interpreted strictly or else the adversarial system would become impossible: see e.g. Martel v. Andrew, 2005 ABCA 63, 40 AltaLR (4th) 199, leave denied [2005] SCCA No. 177 (QL).

[38] As noted above, the form of conspiracy tort asserted by the appellant is exclusively in the second category described by Lafarge. Bank of Montreal v. Tortora, 2010 BCCA 139, 287 BCAC 14, at para. rejected the submission that the Lafarge test could include a "third category of conspirator: someone who does not meet either of the first two branches of the test, but is drawn in because of his familial or business relationship with another conspirator".

[39] The Lafarge test was also raised in a fraudulent conveyance situation in Waters v. Michie, 2011 BCCA 364, 309 BCAC 305. The conspiracy tort was again noted there to be an anomaly. Although the pleading of conspiracy there raised no reasonable claim, in part in light of the doctrine of merger, Waters does not assist either side here other that to point out that the form of suit is far from 'novel' within the meaning of Imperial Tobacco. Rather, it is controversial and has been for a considerable time because it is anomalous in its character.

[40] It is important to read Lafarge accurately as to what constitutes this unusual form of economic tort. In Can-Dive Services Ltd. v. Pacific Coast Energy Corp. (1993) 96 BCLR 2d 156, 26 CPC 3d 395 (CA), McEachern CJBC wrote:

> 5 Accordingly, the following elements must be proved:
>
> 1. an agreement between two or more persons;
>
> 2. concerted action taken pursuant to the agreement;
>
> 3. (i) if the action is lawful, there must be evidence that the conspirators intended to cause damage to the plaintiff;
>
> (ii) if the action is unlawful, there must at least be evidence that the conspirators knew or ought to have known that their action would injure the plaintiff (i.e., constructive intent);
>
> 4. actual damage suffered by the plaintiff.

[41] This summary was affirmed in Louie v. Le Soleil Hospitality Inc., 2011 BCCA 305, 308 BCAC 122 at para. 111, where the trial judge found the unlawful means to include fraud, perjury and breach of court orders. See also Pro-Sys Consultants Ltd et al v. Microsoft Corporation et al., 2011 BCCA 186, 331 DLR (4th) 671, leave granted [2011] SCCA 396 (QL), and Sun-Rype Products Ltd. v. Archer Daniels Midland Company, 2011 BCCA 187, 331 DLR (4th) 631, leave granted [2011] SCCA No. 236 (QL) where a divided Court of Appeal found no cause of action.

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

[42] It is clear, as noted in Capital Estate Planning Corporation v. Lynch, 2011 ABCA 224, 510 AR 244 that direct evidence of conspiracy will not be the usual case:

> 81 Capital Estate correctly pointed out that direct evidence is rarely available to prove the essential agreement between the parties, so that resort must be had to circumstantial evidence. However, the evidentiary difficulty faced by the appellant does not relieve it of adducing at least some evidence from which it may be inferred that there was an intentional participation by the parties with a view to the furtherance of a common design. Here, there is none.

[43] So the question on a summary judgment motion is whether there is any triable case of evidence on all of the essential ingredients of the conspiracy tort. It is not enough that there is some evidence of some parts of the tort if there is no evidence of any one or more essential ingredients. What is important in the present context is the existence of an actual agreement. The artificial imposition of a deemed agreement arising from a purely constructively determined 'ought to know' state of mind would make this tort so elastic as to make it mere negligence without proximity, privity, or fiduciary duty. This Court in Maguire v. Calgary (City), 1983 ABCA 121, 43 AR 268, [1983] 4 WWR 342 at paras. 11 to 13 said:

> 11 The wording "concerted action taken pursuant to agreement" was used by Lord Diplock in Lonrho et al. v. Shell Petroleum Co. et al., [1981] 2 All E.R. 456, at 463.
>
> 12 In order to be found to be a party to a conspiracy one must know the facts of the alleged agreement or combination and intend to be a party to the "combining". This principle was adopted by the English Court of Appeal in Belmont Finance Corp. v. Williams Furniture et al. (No. 2), [1980] 1 All E.R. 393, wherein both Buckley, L.J., and Waller, L.J., referred to Churchill v. Walton, [1967] 2 A.C. 224, approving the words of Viscount Dilhorne at p. 237:
>
> ... I would say that mens rea is only an essential ingredient in conspiracy in so far as there must be an intention to be a party to an agreement to do an unlawful act; that knowledge of the law on the part of the accused is immaterial and that knowledge of the facts is only material in so far as such knowledge throws a light on what was agreed.
>
> (emphasis added)

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

> (Leave to appeal this decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada has been granted). [See 47 N.R. 191 for the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada reversing the British Columbia Court of Appeal.]

[44] These passages from Maguire bring to the fore the appellant's argument for a constructive form of agreement. This arises, inter alia, in the appellant's contention that Fialkov should be taken to have realized that G.S. Paul and / or Premier were being sued for as much as $15,000,000 not merely by the appellant but by other creditors. There is no evidence that Fialkov was aware of any such parlous economic state of G.S. Paul and / or Premier.

[45] The appellant contends that Fialkov should have become aware of economic embarrassment of G.S. Paul and / or Premier initially by reason of potential claims by persons other than the appellant. That element of the appellant's argument is another reflection of the constructive manner in which the appellant would define the evidence for this tort. The appellant in effect suggests that the tort of conspiracy to injure a plaintiff creditor by unlawful means can be made out without reference to a specific agreement to harm that specific plaintiff so long as the solicitor should have known that some creditor[s] of the client were pressing the client for money, even if the solicitor does not know who they are.

[46] A moment's reflection reveals that such reasoning seems to extend the concept of the 'target group' referred to in the English cases in Maguire. It is not necessary for this Court to grapple with this interesting point whether a conspiracy tort grounded on the execution of an agreement to defraud a specific creditor can be made out on evidence that the solicitor might have been aware of claims of other creditors. We note only that the argument perhaps re-engages the tort with its root in trade competition cases. It raises the question of whether the tort can be made out towards a foreseeable category of plaintiff who will be injured as a result of the clear agreement and unlawful conduct of the conspirators: see Sun-Rye Products and Pro-Sys Consultants. Perhaps those cases will shed light on this aspect of the conspiracy tort. We need not resolve the question here because the appellant appears to contend that the solicitor should be held liable in a conspiracy to specifically harm the appellant. We take it that the reference to other creditors should be taken only to be a contextual factor that the appellant says should be added to the basis of imposing on the solicitor a state of mind that he ought to have known that the specific appellant would be injured by the conduct of the solicitor's client.

[47] The generality of the 'target group' claimed by the appellant is, indeed, reflected in the first "badge of fraud" which the appellant asserts relates to the chambers' judge's finding that there was "no evidence that Mr. Fialkov had any knowledge of Mr. Paul's financial status": 2011 ABQB 164 at para. [26]. The appellant asserts in a conclusory way that "Mr. Fialkov was aware of numerous claims against Premier, including the negligence Action and two further potential claims totaling approximately $15,000,000.": Factum, para. 62. The chambers judge found no evidence of that actual awareness. There is no palpable and overriding error in that finding. Imbedded in this is the appellant's suggestion that Fialkov could have figured out the creditor risks of the client by asking around the firm. The chambers judge was not persuaded that on these facts there was enough to create in the solicitor the equivalent of a conspirator's state of mind on that basis.

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

[48] We find no error in the chambers' judge conclusion that there was no evidence that Fialkov was aware of the particulars or quantum of claims against G.S. Paul or Premier, nor was there any pleading or evidence supporting a duty on the part of Fialkov to find out what the issues were between G.S. Paul or Premier and Mraiche. While the appellant says there is no evidence that Fialkov would have believed G.S. Paul was a "Condo King" in Edmonton, that is neither here nor there. The chambers judge merely said, reasonably on the material before him, that there was no evidence that Fialkov knew that G.S. Paul or Premier was insolvent.

[49] The appellant's second "badge of fraud" is an allegation that the sale of the four properties by Premier to 1396619 was done in haste. The appellant says that the chambers judge was not correct to conclude that because the sale to Newcastle did not close until August 18, 2008, there was no haste. The chambers judge did not err in finding that the transfers to Newcastle were not done in haste, at least from the point of view of putting the solicitor into the conspiracy tort frame.

[50] It was the transfers to Newcastle which turned the equity of G.S. Paul and Premier into cash. The nominal transactions in the meantime from Premier to 1396619 are unexplained and perhaps inexplicable. But in any event they would not have been difficult to trace or unwind. The process of involving 1396619 seems doubly curious when G.S. Paul expended legal fees in October, 2008, to engage Fialkov to backdate a trust agreement so as to make even more obvious that it was Premier's beneficial interest in the properties that passed through 1396619 to Newcastle. But this after fact evidence is not evidence of an actual agreement by the solicitor to defraud the appellant as a creditor months earlier.

[51] This raises the third "badge of fraud" accused by the appellant here, namely the nominal price for the transfer to 1396619. Once again, Fialkov was under instructions that the four properties were being transferred ultimately to Newcastle. This bare title interlude with 1396619 had no obvious effect (or reason for that matter). Premier owned the properties to begin with. Fialkov in the regular manner paid off the mortgage holders and taxes and caveators on the properties when closing those transactions almost four months after being instructed to do so. We find nothing in this to contradict Fialkov's assertion that he was unaware that G.S. Paul or Premier was doing anything fraudulent to put assets out of the appellant's reach by these steps.

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

[52] As noted above, we do not find any significance to the chambers' judge's error about the four properties being associated with the earlier Action No. 14578. Indeed, had the properties been tied into that suit, it might have been somewhat more suspicious at least from the point of view of G.S. Paul. It is not plain how the difference enhances the evidence of Fialkov's knowledge of any significant facts such as to constructively immerse Fialkov in a fraudulent conspiracy.

[53] We do not need to discuss the chambers judge's observations about lack of proof of damages. While we agree with him on the evidence in this case that the appellant's damages claim seems doubtful on causation grounds, it may be that unwinding a fraudulent preference might involve a claim of damages in terms of legal costs. That said, we refrain from getting into the topic of damages.

[54] We also find the references by the appellant to professional obligations by solicitors do not advance the appellant's argument, and we elect not to elaborate on them. What the Law Society of Alberta might make of this situation is up to that Society.

[55] Finally, much of the appellant's argument is aimed at showing that a fraudulent preference by a debtor is sufficiently unlawful conduct to support a claim of the tort of conspiracy to do harm by unlawful means. It is not necessary to be elaborate on that issue. We have considered this appeal as if that foundational element of the appellant's claim had validity. In the end result, it makes no difference as the chambers judge concluded correctly that there was no evidence of the requisite elements of the alleged conspiracy.

[56] As a consequence, we agree with the chambers judge that there is simply no triable basis for finding that Fialkov entered into a conspiracy to injure Mraiche by unlawful means.

VII Conclusion

[57] The appeal is dismissed.

Appeal heard on January 31, 2012

Memorandum filed at Edmonton, Alberta
this 20th day of March, 2012

Ritter J.A.

Authorized to sign for: Martin J.A.

Watson J.A.

Appearances:

D.M. Hawreluk / A.L. Archer
for the Appellant

R.B. Drewry, Q.C. / N.D. Tymchuk
for the Respondent

2012 ABCA 95 (CanLII)

1968 CanLII 6 (SCC)

1967
*Oct. 16, 17
1968
Mar. 13

WILFRED M. POSLUNS (Plaintiff) ..... APPELLANT;

AND

THE TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE (Defendant) ..... RESPONDENT;

AND

GEORGE GARDINER (Defendant).

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

Administrative law—Investigation by Board of Governors of Stock Exchange concerning certain option transactions by member company—Representative of company fined and Board's approval of appellant's association with company withdrawn—Whether Board in taking action against appellant exercised its jurisdiction legally and in accordance with rules of natural justice.

The Board of Governors of the Toronto Stock Exchange was informed that a member company was acting for both sides in certain option transactions and as a result four directors of the company, including the appellant, were interviewed by some members of the Board. In consequence of these discussions the Board decided to hold a meeting to investigate and consider the question of whether or not the member of the Exchange for the company was guilty of any offence under the by-laws or rulings of the Exchange. A notice was issued that an inquiry would be held to determine, inter alia, whether the member company, while acting as agent for a customer on one side of the transactions in question, had acted on the other side for a company in which the appellant had a one-sixth personal interest.

On the day before the meeting was to take place the appellant consulted the member firm's counsel as to whether he should have his own counsel at the hearing. He was advised that the hearing was to be with reference to the company and that his position was not particularly different from that of the other directors. The appellant was present at the hearing and was given an opportunity to explain his role in the matter. The Board found that the company was guilty and the maximum fine was imposed. The Board then went on to deal independently and additionally with the appellant and after some discussion it was resolved to terminate all prior consents given to the appellant as a director, officer and shareholder of the company.

*PRESENT: Abbott, Judson, Ritchie, Hall and Spence JJ.

NBC BOA 000994

On the day following the hearing, representations were made to the Board that there should be a rehearing with respect to the appellant's personal position. The Board having acceded to this request a rehearing was held at which a statement was read reviewing what had transpired at the original hearing in so far as it related to the appellant. Appellant's counsel was asked whether he wished to call any additional evidence and replied that there was no dispute about the evidence but only as to the interpretation to be placed upon it. Appellant's counsel then made full representations to the Board, following which the Board considered the matter and concluded that appellant's conduct was such to warrant the withdrawal of the Board's approval of his association with the member company, but they agreed to give him ten days in which to resign and withheld official publication of the resolution passed against him until that period had expired. The appellant, however, declined to resign and a letter was accordingly forwarded from the Board to the company giving formal notice of the resolution. The appellant was subsequently removed as a director and was discharged from his association with the firm.

An action brought by the appellant against the Exchange for substantial damages and for a declaration that the Board of Governors of the Exchange had acted illegally and contrary to the rules of natural justice in terminating all prior consents given by it for the appellant to act as a director, officer, shareholder or employee of the member company was dismissed by the trial judge and an appeal from his judgment was dismissed by the Court of Appeal. The appellant then appealed to this Court.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed.

The Court found that neither the good faith nor the mode of procedure of the Board had been successfully impugned. The appellant had been fully informed of what was alleged against him and was given an opportunity to present his version and explanation of the allegations. Russell v. Russell (1880), 14 Ch. D. 471; Board of Education v. Rice, [1911] A.C. 179, applied; Ridge v. Baldwin, [1964] A.C. 40, distinguished; Weinberger v. Inglis, [1919] A.C. 606, referred to.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Court of Appeal for Ontario[1], dismissing an appeal from a judgment of Gale J. (now C.J.O.). Appeal dismissed.

W. B. Williston, Q.C., and R. B. Tuer, for the plaintiff, appellant.

[1] [1966] 1 O.R. 285, 53 D.L.R. (2d) 193.

NBC BOA 000995

1968 CanLII 6 (SCC)

1968

POSLUNS v. TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE et al.

A. S. Pattillo, Q.C., and J. F. Howard, Q.C., for the defendant, respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

RITCHIE J.:—This is an appeal from a judgment of the Court of Appeal for Ontario dismissing an appeal from the judgment rendered at trial by Mr. Justice Gale (as he then was) whereby he dismissed the action which the appellant had brought against the Toronto Stock Exchange (hereinafter called the "Exchange") for substantial damages and for a declaration that the Board of Governors of the Exchange had acted illegally and contrary to the rules of natural justice in terminating all prior consents given by it for the appellant to act as a director, officer, shareholder or employee of R. A. Daly and Company Limited (hereafter called the "Daly Company") a member corporation of the Exchange which was represented thereon by one of its directors, R. A. Daly, Jr. The result of the order which is challenged in these proceedings was that the appellant was removed as a director of the Daly Company and was discharged from his association with that firm where he had been an active partner and where the trial judge found that he had been engaged as a "customers' man" for the solicitation of commission business in securities listed on the Exchange.

The background of this case has been carefully and accurately described in the very full judgment of the learned trial judge which is reported in 46 D.L.R. (2d) at pp. 210 to 347 and which was confirmed by the Court of Appeal[1] so that I do not find it necessary to do more than present a summary of the circumstances which provided the immediate cause for the Board of Governors of the Exchange acting as they did.

When the appellant became associated with the Daly Company in the year 1960, he had already become interested in the somewhat specialized field of dealing in the buying and selling of options on shares and he had acquired a one-sixth interest in a partnership under the name of Lido Investments which engaged in that business. During 1960 one of the appellant's clients, a Mr. Lynch who was a Peterborough druggist, sold 570 options through the Daly Company acting as his agent and the Daly Company in turn purchased 313 of these options in its capacity as agent for Lido and in the same capacity sold most of these in New York at a price higher than the price received by Lynch. The Daly Company charged Lynch a commission of 5.5 per cent on the options sold to Lido and charged Lido 1.1 per cent on their purchase, but no commission charge was made to Lido on any of the sales made in New York. The appellant, as one of the owners of Lido, shared in the substantial profit which was made by that partnership through these transactions, and through his association with the Daly Company he also participated in the profits made on the other side of the transactions both through commissions and as a shareholder of that company.

[1] [1966] 1 O.R. 285, 53 D.L.R. (2d) 193.

NBC BOA 000996

1968 CanLII 6 (SCC)

Early in February 1961, it came to the attention of the Exchange that the Daly Company was acting for both sides in the Lynch-Lido option transactions and this was reported to the Board of Governors of the Exchange as a result of which four of the directors of the Daly Company, including the appellant, were interviewed by some members of the Board on February 15 when the appellant was questioned about the operations of Lido and his interest in it, and there was a discussion about the Daly Company's position in relation to the transactions. In consequence of these discussions the Board decided to hold a meeting on February 28 to investigate and consider the question of whether or not R. A. Daly, Jr., as a member of the Exchange and director of the Daly Company, was guilty of any offence under the by-laws or rules of the Exchange. Pursuant to the provisions of its by-laws, the Board of Governors issued a notice on February 22 addressed to R. A. Daly, Jr., as an individual member of the Exchange and to the President of the Daly Company. In this notice the purpose of the meeting to be held on February 28 was stated to be:

> ...in connection with transactions in 'put and call' options conducted between January 1st, 1960, and January 31st, 1961, with its customer John T. Lynch by R. A. Daly & Co. Limited (herein referred to as 'Daly'), a member corporation of which you are a shareholder and director, and through which you, as a member of the Toronto Stock Exchange, carry on business, and for the acts and omissions of the directors, officers and employees of which you as a member, are responsible:

NBC.BQA 000997

1968 CanLII 6 (SCC)

1968

POSLUNS v. TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE et al.

Ritchie J.

The first of the acts of omission into which the inquiry was to be held was specified in the notice in the following terms:

> (a) whether Daly, while acting as agent for the said Lynch on one side of such transactions, acted on the other side in such transactions, or some of them, for or with a company or partnership known as Lido Investments, in which Wilfred M. Posluns, a director of Daly, on his own admission, had a one-sixth personal interest.

As I have said, the appellant, as a director of the Daly Company, had been interviewed by members of the Board of Governors and discussed the subject-matter of the first act of omission and his role concerning it. On being advised of the notice for the February 28 meeting he postponed his holiday plans so as to be present there and on the day before it was to take place, he and his solicitor consulted Mr. Stapells, counsel for Daly and Company, as to whether he should have his own counsel at the hearing. It is true that Mr. Stapells advised him and his solicitor that the hearing was to be with reference to the Daly Company and that he did not think the appellant's position to be particularly different from that of the other directors, but in light of all the circumstances, it must I think, be accepted that he knew that his conduct was to be the subject of an inquiry which was to be held for the purpose of determining whether or not his firm should be penalized by the Exchange. I do not, however, think that the appellant was alerted to the fact that he might be personally penalized at the same meeting.

The appellant was present at the hearing of February 28 at which a statement was read reciting the facts known to the Board concerning the transactions in question and he was given an opportunity to explain his association with Lido. After considering the matter amongst themselves, the members of the Board called in the representatives of the Daly Company and announced that they were unanimously of the opinion that the Company was guilty of six of the seven acts of omission preferred against it, including the first. After representations had been made on the company's behalf with respect to penalty, the matter was again considered and it was decided to impose the maximum fine of $5,000 on R. A. Daly, Jr.

There then occurred what the trial judge referred to as "an unfortunate error" because the Board, instead of accepting the fact that it had completed the inquiry with respect to the Daly Company upon which it had properly embarked, went on to deal independently and additionally with the appellant.

NBC BOA 000998

1968 CanLII 6 (SCC)

This new issue was introduced when the chairman said something to the effect "What about the directors of Daly individually?" and another governor then referred to Mr. Posluns as being the one who had caused all the trouble. After relatively little discussion, it was unanimously resolved that all prior consents given to the appellant as a director, officer and shareholder of the Daly Company be terminated forthwith and it was the general understanding that his association with the Daly firm was to be severed in all respects.

Although the president of the Daly Company was informed of the resolution withdrawing the appellant's approvals, no action was at that time taken by the Board to put the terms of the resolution into effect and on the following day representations were made to the Board that there should be a rehearing with respect to Posluns' personal position. The Board acceded to this request and a rehearing was set for March 2 on which date the same members of the Board were present who had conducted the February 28 meeting and a statement was read reviewing what had transpired at the meeting in so far as it related to the appellant. The appellant was represented at this meeting by counsel who was asked whether he wished to call any additional evidence and replied that there was no dispute about the evidence but only as to the interpretation to be placed upon it. The appellant's counsel then made full representations to the Board and concluded with a plea in mitigation urging that the publication of the resolution withdrawing the approvals would do irreparable damage to the appellant and his family. There being no dispute as to the facts, the members of the Board adjourned to consider the matter in light of the interpretation placed on them by the appellant's counsel and in light of the submissions which he had made concerning the penalty to be imposed; in the result they concluded that the appellant's conduct was such as to warrant the withdrawal of the Board's approvals of his association with the Daly Company, but they agreed that the resolution directing that withdrawal passed at the meeting of February 28 would not be acted upon or published if the appellant resigned

1968 CanLII 6 (SCC)

NBC BCA 000999

1968

POSLUNS v. TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE et al.

Ritchie J.

by March 10. The appellant, however, decided not to tender his resignation and a letter was accordingly forwarded from the Board to the Daly Company giving formal notice of the resolution.

For the reasons stated by the learned trial judge and the Court of Appeal, I am satisfied that under the by-laws of the Exchange the Board of Governors had jurisdiction to take the action which they did against the appellant, but the question raised by this appeal is whether they exercised that jurisdiction legally and in accordance with the rules of natural justice.

I do not find it necessary to review the considerable number of cases which discuss the meaning and effect to be given to the rules of natural justice because the trial judge has dealt extensively with all the leading authorities in that regard and it would be redundant for me to retrace the ground which has been so thoroughly covered.

It does, however, appear to me to be desirable to mention the case of Russell v. Russell[2], in which Sir George Jessel M.R. made the following comment on the earlier case of Wood v. Wood[3]:

> . . . it contains a very valuable statement by the Lord Chief Baron as to his view of the mode of administering justice by persons other than judges who have judicial functions to perform, . . . The passage I mean is this, referring to a committee:
>
> > They are bound, in the exercise of their functions, by the rule expressed in the maxim audi alteram partem, that no man should be condemned to consequences resulting from alleged misconduct unheard and without having the opportunity of making his defence. This rule is not confined to the conduct of strictly legal tribunals, but is applicable to every tribunal or body of persons invested with authority to adjudicate upon matters involving civil consequences to individuals.

This language was quoted with approval by the Privy Council in Lapointe v. L'Association de Bienfaisance et de Retraite de la Police de Montréal[4].

Although the case of Board of Education v. Rice[5] has been referred to in the Courts below, I think it desirable to reiterate what was there said by Lord Loreburn at p. 182 where, speaking of the duty of the Board of Education in considering a complaint against a local education authority, he said:

> In the present instance, as in many others, what comes for determination is sometimes a matter to be settled by discretion, involving no law.

[2] (1880), 14 Ch. D. 471.
[3] (1874), L.R. 9 Ex. 190.
[4] [1909] A.C. 535.
[5] [1911] A.C. 179.

NBC BOA 001000

1968 CanLII 6 (SCC)

It will, I suppose, usually be of an administrative kind; but sometimes it will involve matter of law as well as matter of fact, or even depend upon matter of law alone. In such cases the Board of Education will have to ascertain the law and also to ascertain the facts. I need not add that in doing either they must act in good faith and fairly listen to both sides, for that is a duty lying upon every one who decides anything. But I do not think they are bound to treat such a question as though it were a trial.

The italics are my own.

In light of the findings of the Courts below, I do not think that the good faith of the Board of Governors is open to question, but under the authorities they were also required, before taking any final action against the appellant, to inform him of what was alleged against him and to give him an opportunity to present his version and explanation of any such allegations.

The position as I interpret it, is that the appellant was fully informed at and before the meeting of February 28 that the Board of Governors disapproved of his conduct in relation to the Lynch-Lido-Daly transactions and he was given an opportunity to present and did present his explanation of that conduct at that meeting but, although he must have realized at that time that he was personally open to censure by the Board, he was not alerted to the fact that his own case was to be dealt with at the February meeting. It is now contended on behalf of the appellant that the February hearing was a nullity so far as he was concerned and that the second hearing of March 2 was in the nature of an appeal and did not afford him the new hearing to which he was entitled. The key submission made in the factum filed on behalf of the appellant is phrased as follows:

2. It is submitted that the Appellant could not have had a fair hearing on March 2nd by reason of the state of mind of the Governors on that occasion in:

(a) Failing to understand and accept the fact that the proceedings on February 28th had no legality and that they must consider the matter afresh;

(b) By their failure to exercise their proper function as members of a tribunal determining the propriety of the Appellant's conduct for the first time rather than as members of an appellate board prepared to be convinced that their earlier decision was wrong.

Counsel on behalf of the appellant relied in great measure on the decision of Lord Reid in the case of Ridge v. Baldwin[6], and particularly on the passage at p. 79 in which [6] [1964] A.C. 40.

NBC BOA 001001

1968 CanLII 6 (SCC)

1968

POSLUNS v. TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE et al.

Ritchie J.

he commented on the two meetings held in that case by the "watch committee" to consider the question of the dismissal of the Chief Constable of the Borough of Brighton. The passage in question reads as follows:

> Next comes the question whether the respondents' failure to follow the rules of natural justice on March 7 was made good by the meeting on March 18. I do not doubt that if an officer or body realizes that it has acted hastily and reconsiders the whole matter afresh, after affording to the person affected a proper opportunity to present his case, then its later decision will be valid. An example is De Verteuil v. Knaggs, [1918] A.C. 557. But here the appellant's solicitor was not fully informed of the charges against the appellant and the watch committee did not annul the decision which they had already published and proceed to make a new decision. In my judgment, what was done on that day was a very inadequate substitute for a full rehearing. Even so, three members of the committee changed their minds, and it is impossible to say what the decision of the committee would have been if there had been a full hearing after disclosure to the appellant of the whole case against him. I agree with those of your Lordships who hold that this meeting of March 18 cannot affect the result of this appeal.

Counsel for the appellant sought to apply this language directly to the circumstances of the present case and it therefore becomes necessary to examine the facts in Ridge v. Baldwin so as to fully understand Lord Reid's reference to the two meetings. In that case the Chief Constable of Brighton was dismissed from office by a resolution of the watch committee passed at a meeting of which he had no notice and at which he was given no opportunity to be heard in his own defence. Following his dismissal, the chief constable's solicitor asked to be allowed to appear before the watch committee saying that he wished to be informed about the case against his client so that he could deal with it and furthermore, he submitted that the best way of dealing with the situation would be to allow his client to resign and take his pension.

The distinction between the two cases is, in my view, clearly apparent from a description of the initial meeting at which the chief constable was dismissed as contained in the judgment of Lord Morris at p. 113:

> The watch committee were under a statutory obligation (see Police Act, 1919, s. 4(1)) to comply with the regulations made under the Act. They dismissed the appellant after finding that he had been negligent in the discharge of his duty. That was a finding of guilt of the offence of neglecting or omitting diligently to attend to or to carry out his duty. Yet they had preferred no charge against the appellant and gave him no notice. They gave him no opportunity to defend himself or to be heard. Though their good faith is in no way impugned, they completely disregarded the regulations and did not begin to comply with them.

NBC BOA 001002

1968 CanLII 6 (SCC)

The meeting of March 18 to which reference is made in Lord Reid's judgment is briefly described by Lord Hodson at p. 129 of the same report where he made the following comment on the reception given to the appellant's solicitor at that meeting:

> On March 18 Mr. Bosley was given not only a full but a courteous hearing by the watch committee but received no indication of the nature of the charges which his client had to answer, notwithstanding his repeated statements that he did not know what they were. It is plain, therefore, that if there were a failure on March 7 to give justice to the appellant this was not cured on March 18 when the watch committee confirmed their previous decision. At this hearing it was made plain by Mr. Bosley that his client was not seeking reinstatement but only his pension rights of which he had been deprived by his dismissal. This position is maintained by the appellant through his counsel before your Lordships.

I am in sympathy with the observations made by Lord Hodson later in his reasons for judgment at p. 133 where he said:

> It may be that I must retreat to that last refuge of one confronted with as difficult a problem as this, namely, that each case depends on its own facts, and that here the deprivation of a pension without a hearing is on the face of it a denial of justice which cannot be justified on the language of the section under consideration.

From the above recital of the facts it will be apparent that the circumstances in Ridge v. Baldwin were quite different from those in the present case. In Ridge v. Baldwin the appellant was never told of the case which he had to meet, whereas Mr. Posluns knew what was complained of in his conduct some days before the first hearing. In Ridge v. Baldwin the appellant was given no opportunity to be heard at either meeting, whereas Posluns gave evidence and had a full opportunity to explain himself at the first hearing and declined, through his counsel, to add anything at the second hearing to the evidence which had already been taken. In Ridge v. Baldwin the plea made by the chief constable's solicitor at the second hearing that his client should be permitted to resign was of no avail, whereas after listening to the submissions of Posluns' solicitor at the March 2 hearing, the Board of Governors gave him ten days in which to resign and withheld official publication of the resolution passed against him until that period had expired and Posluns had declined to resign.

In my opinion, the contention that the proceedings at the meeting of March 2 were in the nature of an appeal

NBC BOA 001003

1968 CanLII 6 (SCC)

1968

POSLUNS v. TORONTO STOCK EXCHANGE et al.

Ritchie J.

from the decision of February 28 rather than a rehearing, leaves out of account the fact that the Board gave the appellant's solicitor full opportunity to call any evidence he pleased at the second hearing and that it was he and not the Board who made the election to abide by the evidence taken in February. He then reviewed all the circumstances afresh and advanced at every turn the construction of the facts which was most favourable to his client. In the result, although the Board of Governors did not change their ruling, they offered to withdraw it altogether if the appellant would resign. In my view also it is inconsistent to speak of the March 2 hearing as an appeal when the disputed resolution was not formally published until March 10.

The learned trial judge expressed the view that it was "an unfortunate error" for the Board of Governors to have proceeded against the appellant personally at the first hearing. I do not find it necessary to express an opinion as to this because, in any event, the circumstances are governed by the general proposition stated in the paragraph above quoted from Lord Reid's reasons for judgment in Ridge v. Baldwin where he said:

> I do not doubt that if an officer or body realizes that it has acted hastily and reconsiders the whole matter afresh, after affording to the person affected a proper opportunity to present his case, then its later decision will be valid. An example is De Verteuil v. Knaggs, [1918] A.C. 557.

The case of Weinberger v. Inglis[7] was one in which the committee of the London Stock Exchange had refused re-election to a German member and their decision was challenged as having been reached without regard to the rules of natural justice. It appears to me that the language used by Lord Birkenhead in that case is directly applicable to the present appeal. He there said, at p. 617:

> The Committee formed their opinion. It is conceded that they formed it honestly. They formed it in my opinion upon grounds which were made known to the appellant and which he had a chance of answering. The short answer, therefore, to the appellant's case is that the Committee did not deem him eligible to be a member of the Stock Exchange, and that neither their good faith nor their mode of procedure has been successfully impugned.

I think that the Board of Governors in the present case is in the same position and I find, to use Lord Birkenhead's language, "that neither their good faith nor their mode of procedure has been successfully impugned".

[7] [1919] A.C. 606.

NBC BOA 001004

1968 CanLII 6 (SCC)

For all these reasons, as well as for those contained in the reasons for judgment of the learned trial judge and the majority of the Court of Appeal, I would dismiss this appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the plaintiff, appellant: Goodman & Goodman, Toronto.

Solicitors for the defendant, respondent: Blake, Cassels & Graydon, Toronto.

1968 CanLII 6 (SCC)

[Indexed as: Polimeni v. Danzinger]

DR. PHILIP I. POLIMENI
v. DR. RUDOLPH G. DANZINGER and DR. JOHN FOERSTER

Manitoba Queen's Bench
Beard J.

Judgment – November 9, 1995.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

Sidney Green, Q.C., for plaintiff.
Allan H. Adam, for defendants.

(Doc. Winnipeg CI 91-01-55146)

November 9, 1995. BEARD J.:–

I. THE ISSUES

1 The plaintiff has sued the two defendants in their personal capacities for torts alleged to have been committed in relation to his employment at the St. Boniface General Hospital ("St. Boniface Hospital"), in Winnipeg, Manitoba. More specifically, he alleges the commission of the following two torts:

(i) conspiracy; and

(ii) interference with employment relations.

2 The factual basis for these torts is stated to be as follows:

(i) that the defendants conspired to and did prevent the plaintiff from realizing his potentiality as an employee of the St. Boniface Hospital;

(ii) that the defendants conspired and agreed to bring about the plaintiff's dismissal from the St. Boniface Hospital; and

(iii) that each defendant individually used his position of authority to interfere with the plaintiff's employment relationship with the St. Boniface Hospital, wrongfully prevented the plaintiff from obtaining professional advancement at the Hospital, and brought about his dismissal in an attempt to prevent the plaintiff from exercising his lawful right to pursue litigation against employees of the University of Manitoba.

3 The defendants deny these allegations.

4 The parties did not argue the quantum of damages at the trial, but, rather, agreed to postpone that aspect of the case until after resolving the issue of liability.

II. THE FACTS

1. The Plaintiff

5 The plaintiff is a research scientist holding a doctorate of physiology and working in the field of cardiology. He worked as a researcher and teacher at the University of Chicago until 1978, but was unable to obtain a tenured position there due to financial cut-backs and a university policy that tenure positions would be offered to clinicians rather than researchers. It is uncontradicted that his work at that institution was highly regarded by his co-workers and his supervisor.

6 In 1978 the plaintiff accepted a position as an associate professor and researcher at the University of Manitoba, which position was created as part of a large medical research grant. The grant was awarded on the condition that the plaintiff be hired to form part of the research team, and it provided funding for a salary for the plaintiff for five years, from August 1, 1978 to July 31, 1983. At the end of that time, the plaintiff's salary at the University was terminated.

7 During the term of his employment, the plaintiff became involved in two legal disputes at the University:

(i) He was part of a group of five researchers who lodged a complaint against the project co-ordinator, Dr. Dhalla, for a misallocation of research funds. After an inquiry, the University found the complaint to be valid, so the money was returned to the researchers and Dr. Dhalla was removed as the project co-ordinator;

(ii) The plaintiff claimed to have been promised an opportunity to apply for tenure after he completed three years of his five-year term; however, when he tried to do so, he was advised that he did not, in fact, have that right. He filed a grievance which was decided in favour of the University. He then sued the University, but the lawsuit was dismissed on the basis that his only remedy was through the labour arbitration procedure. The plaintiff then sued Dr. Dhalla and two other University officials personally for conspiring to deprive him of his position and other employment opportunities at the University of Manitoba as a result of his having pursued the funding misallocation against Dr. Dhalla. Notwithstanding that that claim was filed on May 17, 1988, it remains unresolved today, some 7 1/2 years later.

NBC BOA 001009

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

8 Although the plaintiff's salary at the University ended in 1983, he retained an academic appointment at that institution and is currently appointed to a position within the Department of Pharmacology. He still has an office, does some teaching, attends seminars and provides assistance to students and others in that department, all without receiving any salary from the University. The Head of the Department of Pharmacology has attempted to obtain an academic salary for him, but to date has been unsuccessful.

9 In December 1985, at the instigation of Dr. Sharma, the plaintiff was hired to work at the R.O. Burrell Laboratory ("Burrell Lab") which is part of the St. Boniface Hospital. Dr. Sharma was the director of the Burrell Lab and had been a member of the research team with which the plaintiff had worked at the University of Manitoba. Dr. Sharma had a vacant technician's position which had a salary equal to approximately one-half of a researcher's salary, and he was able to obtain permission to hire the plaintiff as a half-time researcher by reallocating the technician's salary to pay the plaintiff. The plaintiff was also appointed to the medical staff of the St. Boniface Hospital in the scientific category, which appointment did not carry a salary, but which was a requirement to enable him to work as a researcher at that facility. The plaintiff's appointment as a member of the support staff at the Burrell Lab was effective December 9, 1985, and was the plaintiff's only position which provided him with a salary. The appointment to the Burrell Lab was for a one-year term, renewable annually on the plaintiff receiving a favourable performance evaluation and on the continuing availability of funds.

10 At the time he was hired, the plaintiff was not allocated any independent research space; however, Dr. Sharma agreed to share his laboratory space with the plaintiff to enable him to carry out any independent research projects for which he was able to obtain funding. It was anticipated, when the plaintiff was hired, that he would apply for funding to carry out his own independent research, and he was successful in obtaining grants for several projects.

2. The Burrell Lab

11 When the plaintiff was hired at the Burrell Lab, the lab was located in its own building on the grounds of the St. Boniface Hospital; however, the Hospital had obtained funding for a magnetic resonance imaging unit ("MRI unit") and required a new building in which to house it. It was decided to demolish the Burrell Lab building to provide space for a new facility for the MRI unit and to move the Burrell Lab services into the St. Boniface Research Centre ("Research Centre") which was also located on the Hospital grounds and owned by the Hospital. The Research Centre was a building shell constructed in the mid-1980's as a research facility and was just in the process of being completed for use. It was anticipated that the interior would be completed for use as laboratory space to accommodate research projects as those projects were approved and as independent funding was obtained to finance interior renovations and the related research.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

12 At the time that the plaintiff was hired, Dr. Sharma, as the Director of the Burrell Lab, reported to Dr. Riese, who had been the Head of the Department of Surgery and was, then, the Vice-President of Medicine for the St. Boniface Hospital. Dr. Sharma retired effective August 30, 1989; however, he continued in a consultative position at the Hospital for a period of time and also continued to function as the Director of the Burrell Lab until the late spring or early summer of 1990.

13 There were extensive negotiations surrounding the relocation of the Burrell Lab, especially in relation to the specific space to be allocated to it within the Research Centre. One of the major issues affecting the relocation was that of funding to develop space inside the new building suitable to service the several different functions carried out in the old Burrell Lab building. Dr. Sharma was not directly involved in these negotiations due to his anticipated retirement, and the actual negotiations took place between other employees of the St. Boniface Hospital, with the two defendants being major players in those negotiations.

14 The final arrangements saw space allocated to the Burrell Lab on a temporary basis, which space, it was generally acknowledged, was less than optimal for the functions previously carried out at the laboratory. The long-term plan was to develop contiguous space on one floor to house all of the Burrell Lab functions; however, that had to await the receipt of adequate funding to cover the renovation costs. The plaintiff, in particular, saw a lowering of the quality of the research space available to him as he moved from having access to one large laboratory assigned to and shared with Dr. Sharma to several small spaces shared with at least two other users and which were located on different floors of the Research Centre. The Burrell Lab moved in mid-1989; however, the long-term plan to develop the larger space has yet to be funded or implemented, and those functions of the laboratory which had been preserved continue to be carried out in the temporary space initially allocated to the laboratory.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

15 In addition to the changes resulting from the physical relocation of the Burrell Lab, two other changes were triggered by Dr. Sharma's retirement. One was a review of the future role of the Burrell Lab, and the second was the appointment of a new director to replace Dr. Sharma. Dr. Sharma prepared a discussion paper with his views on both of these issues, in which he recommended that the appointment of a director await a decision on the future role of the laboratory. Due to his retirement, he did not participate any further in either of these decisions.

3. The Defendants

16 The defendant Foerster was the Head of the Department of Medicine at the St. Boniface Hospital until 1986, when he was appointed as the Director of Research for the Hospital. As such, he reported to the Executive Vice-President of the Hospital, Mr. Jack Litvak. As the Director of Research, Foerster was chairman of the Research Advisory Committee, which Committee advised him on all major decisions related to the operation of the Research Centre, such as the allocation of space, the acceptance or refusal of research projects, and the dismissal of staff. The decisions of the Committee were subject to the approval of the Board of Directors of the Hospital prior to implementation. Foerster also had some authority separate from the Research Advisory Committee, including authority to allocate space in the Research Centre on a temporary basis. It was in this role that he negotiated on behalf of the Research Centre to allocate temporary space to house the Burrell Lab in the Research Centre pending the allocation of permanent space and, as well, he located the funds to develop that temporary space.

17 The defendant Danzinger was appointed as the Head of the Department of Surgery at the St. Boniface Hospital in 1986. At the time of his appointment, Danzinger had no involvement with the Burrell Lab, which was under the direct responsibility of his supervisor, Dr. Riese, who was then the Vice-President of Medicine. In approximately 1987, Dr. Brown replaced Dr. Riese as the Vice-President of Medicine and, shortly after his appointment, Dr. Brown transferred the responsibility for the Burrell Lab to Danzinger; however, because he remained Danzinger's direct supervisor, he continued to have an indirect responsibility for the laboratory.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

18 On taking over direct responsibility for the Burrell Lab, Danzinger became responsible for both negotiating the relocation of the Burrell Lab into the Research Centre and making a recommendation for a new director for the laboratory to replace Dr. Sharma.

4. The Plaintiff's Employment at the St. Boniface Hospital

19 The Plaintiff worked as a research scientist in the Burrell Lab from December 1985 to June 1989, during which time he was awarded several research grants. In 1986 he applied to the Research Advisory Committee for independent research space in the Research Centre, but his application was not approved. Under the terms of the research grants, he hired technicians and worked on those projects, working in the space allocated to Dr. Sharma in the Burrell Lab building. When the Burrell Lab was finally moved to the Research Centre, the plaintiff found that the laboratory space to which he was granted access was too small to accommodate all of his staff and his projects, so he was forced to scale back his research activities, letting some of his technicians go and returning some of the grants. He attempted to obtain more space in conjunction with the Burrell Lab, but was unsuccessful. Foerster suggested that he re-apply to the Research Advisory Committee for his own independent research space in the Research Centre, but he also suggested that the plaintiff had more likelihood of success in that regard if he could first resolve his lawsuit at the University of Manitoba. Foerster made this suggestion because he felt that the Research Advisory Committee had been influenced in its decision to refuse the plaintiff's earlier application for space by the plaintiff's ongoing lawsuit, which led to Foerster recommending to the plaintiff that he would have more likelihood of success with that Committee if he first resolved the issue of that lawsuit. The plaintiff was not prepared to resolve the lawsuit, so he did not re-apply for his own research space. Instead, he retained a lawyer who wrote directly to the Board of Directors of the St. Boniface Hospital to complain of the treatment being received by the plaintiff as regarded the allocation of space and the effect on his ability to function.

20 Later, in 1990, a technician with much less education and lower academic credentials was appointed as the Acting Director of the Burrell Lab. In the fall of 1990 the plaintiff was advised that his term contract, which was to expire October 31, 1990, was under review, and in late October 1990 he met with a committee to review his ongoing research projects. Shortly after that meeting, the plaintiff was advised of the St. Boniface Hospital's decision to extend his contract only to March 31, 1991, to allow him to wrap up his research, after which his appointment to the Burrell Lab was to be terminated, which is what eventually occurred.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

III. EMPLOYEE EXEMPTION FROM LIABILITY

1. The Issue

21 The plaintiff has alleged that the defendants have each interfered with his employment relations with his employer, the St. Boniface Hospital, for the purpose of preventing him from exercising his lawful right to pursue litigation against employees of the University of Manitoba and, in so doing, they have committed a tort for which he is entitled to compensation. Based on the facts alleged by the plaintiff, the wrongs complained of in this part of the statement of claim encompass two separate torts:

(i) inducing or procuring a breach of contract regarding the termination of the plaintiff's employment at the St. Boniface Hospital; and

(ii) unlawful interference with economic relations (or interference with an existing contract without causing a breach) regarding the plaintiff's employment at the St. Boniface Hospital, and, in particular, his failure to obtain suitable research space and his failure to be appointed Director of the Burrell Lab.

22 In both instances, the plaintiff has alleged that, in committing these torts, the two defendants wrongfully used their positions of authority at the St. Boniface Hospital. However, as it has been alleged in the statement of claim that the two defendants were both acting in their capacities as employees of the Hospital, this raises the question of whether they can be found personally liable for either tort.

2. The Law

(i) Inducing or Procuring a Breach of Contract

23 The law is clear that an employee is not liable for inducing or procuring a breach of contract regarding a contract between his employer and another party where that employee:

(1) is acting within the scope of his employment;

(2) is acting in good faith for the protection of his employer's interests;

(3) is not acting for personal gain.

(See Clerk and Lindsell on Torts, The Common Library No. 3, 16th ed. (London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1989), at p. 811; Fleming, The Law of Torts, 8th ed. (The Law Book Company Limited, 1992), at p. 697; and Levitt, The Law of Dismissal in Canada, 2nd ed. (Aurora: Canada Law Book Inc., 1992), at pp. 76-77.)

NBC BOA 001014

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

24 There are two rationales suggested for this exemption from liability:

(1) The traditional rationale is that an employee, acting within the scope of his employment, is treated as the alter ego of his employer and is thereby exempt from personal liability. In the often-quoted case of Said v. Butt, [1920] 3 K.B. 497 at 505-506, McCardie J. stated as follows:

> But the servant who causes a breach of his master's contract with a third person seems to stand in a wholly different position. He is not a stranger. He is the alter ego of his master. His acts are in law the acts of his employer. In such a case it is the master himself, by his agent, breaking the contract he has made, and in my view an action against the agent under the Lumley v. Gye [(1853) 2 E. & B. 216] principle must therefore fail, just as it would fail if brought against the master himself for wrongfully procuring a breach of his own contract.

(See also Clerk and Lindsell at p. 811.)

(2) The other rationale is that an employee acting in the course of his employment is immune from liability on the basis that there is a justification for his acts, being that he was acting under a compulsion of duty to his employer. This rationale is contained in Fleming's text at p. 697 and is also adopted by Callon J. in McFadden v. 481782 Ontario Ltd. (1984), 47 O.R. (2d) 134 (H.C.), at pp. 145-46, where the judge states as follows:

> It appears to me that the real reason for relieving the agent of liability lies instead in the realm of justification, inasmuch as an act of inducement may be excused if there is "sufficient justification" for it: per Lord Macnaghten, Quinn v. Leathem [[1901] A.C. 495] at p. 510. And it is clear that under both statute and common law a director or officer of a company is under a duty to act with a view to the best interests of the company. Acts of inducement are justified where they are "taken as a duty": De Jetley Marks v. Greenwood [[1936] 1 All E.R. 863] at p. 873; Posluns v. Toronto Stock Exchange [[1964] 2 O.R. 547] at p. 608 . . . and see the discussion in Richardson, "Making an End Run Around the Corporate Veil: The Tort of Inducing Breach of Contract", 5 Adv. Q. (1984), pp. 103-9.
>
> In short, if an officer or director of a corporation is to be relieved, as an agent, of the consequences of his otherwise tortious act of inducement, it is not because he is the company's alter ego. Rather, it is because in so acting he acts under the compulsion of a duty to the corporation. His act is thus justified. But where he does not act under such a duty, as, for example, where he fails to act bona fide within the scope of his authority, his act is no longer justified, and he becomes liable.

25 While the McFadden case refers to directors and shareholders, Fleming and Levitt, in their texts, include servants, agents and employees within this protection.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

(ii) Interference with Economic Relations/Existing Contract

26 The cases and texts dealing with an employee's exemption from liability while acting in the course of his employment do so largely in relation to the tort of inducing or procuring a breach of contract. In this case, the plaintiff has alleged that the defendants both interfered with his employment contract with the St. Boniface Hospital by bringing about the termination of his employment and interfered with his employment relations with the Hospital by refusing to allocate to him suitable laboratory space in the Research Centre and by not treating him fairly in relation to the selection of a new director for the Burrell Lab. Clearly, the plaintiff had no contractual right to either the research space or the director's position, so his claim in this regard must be based on some tort other than procuring or inducing a breach of contract. The plaintiff, in his statement of claim, has referred to this as interfering with employment relations. Clerk and Lindsell refer to the newly-emerging tort of "unlawful interference with economic and other interests" (at pp. 850-70), while Fridman, in his text The Law of Torts in Canada, vol. 2 (Carswell, 1990), refers to the newer tort of "interference with an existing contract (without inducing a breach)" (at pp. 307-10).

27 As has been pointed out by both Fridman (at p. 310) and Clerk and Lindsell (at p. 850), this newer tort is still in the development phase and, therefore, is not well-defined. Fridman states as follows (at p. 310):

> However, there are uncertainties about the scope of this tort. Furthermore, concerns have been expressed that the principle of the Torquay Hotel [[1969] 2 Ch. 106 (C.A.)] case is expansive without any correlative development in the defence of justification. It has already been noted that the nature and scope of that defence is vague and unclear with respect to the inducement of a breach of contract. The wider form of liability [under the newer tort] is even more unclear in respect of limitations of liability founded on the idea of justification. (Words in parenthesis are mine.)

28 The texts do not refer to any cases where this tort has been claimed against an employee of one of the parties to the contract (economic interest); however, I have concluded that the exemption granted to an employee from liability for procuring or inducing a breach of a contract can, in fact, be applied to the newer tort for the following reasons:

(1) When one looks at the two torts, it is clear that the newer tort of interference with contractual relations without inducing a breach of contract is an extension of the older tort of interference with contractual relations.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

(2) The essence of both the older and the newer torts is that a third party has, in some way, interfered with the relationship between two other parties – either by causing a breach of an existing contract between those two parties or by interfering with an existing contractual relationship between them. Neither tort, by its definition, can be committed by one of the two parties directly involved in the contract or the relationship (although the parties may, depending on the facts of the particular case, be liable for some other tort, such as a breach of contract).

(3) Assuming that the employee otherwise meets the three criteria required to invoke the exemption from liability available to the employee, both rationales which support the exemption from liability would apply equally to the newer tort and to the older tort.

29 If one looks at the "alter ego" rationale, there is no reason why an employee, acting on behalf of the employer, would be exempt from liability for inducing the breach of an existing contract, but that same employee would not be exempt from interfering with an existing contract or economic relationship where no breach resulted. Likewise, if one accepts that the exemption is based on the rationale that the employee was justified in his actions because he was acting under the compulsion of a duty to the employer, then it should not matter whether there was a breach of a completed contract or an interference with the contractual or other economic relationship between the plaintiff and the employer. On either rationale, the exemption arises from the employee's relationship to the employer and not from the relationship between the employee or the employer and the plaintiff, so the exemption should apply equally in relation to both torts.

30 Thus, I find that the defendants in this case will be exempt from liability for both inducing or procuring a breach of contract and interfering with an existing contract or economic relationship without inducing a breach if they can establish that they were acting within the scope of their employment, they were acting bona fide in the best interests of their employer, and they were not acting in their own personal interests.

3. Scope of Employment

(i) Rationale

31 The cases dealing with this exemption from liability have tended to focus on the "bona fide" criterion, rather than the issue of what constitutes "acting within the scope of employment." This latter criterion has, however, been considered extensively in tort law in relation to the issue of an employer's vicarious liability for torts committed by employees. A comparison of the historical rationales for holding an employer liable for the tortious acts of an employee and those for exempting employees from liability for inducing a breach of contract between his employer and another party shows them to be similar – that is:

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

(1) qui facit per alium facit per se – The employer is regarded as having authorized the acts of the employee, so that in law the acts of the employee are the acts of the employer (Fridman, pp. 314-15). This rationale mirrors the "alter ego" rationale supporting the employee's exemption from liability, which states that the employee should be exempted from liability because his acts are the acts of his employer.

(2) respondeat superior – The master is in charge or command of the servant and, as such, has or ought to have, control of the actions of the servant (Fridman, p. 315). This is similar to the "duty to act" rationale in support of the exemption from liability, whereby the employee is exempted from liability because he is under a duty to act in the best interests of the employer.

(ii) Test

32 Fleming states that the test for determining whether an employee is acting in the course of his employment is as follows (at p. 377):

> In general terms, the "course of employment" is said to encompass such unauthorised acts by the servant as can be regarded [as] wrongful and unauthorised modes of performing an authorised task. The precise terms of the authority conferred on him is not the test but rather the function, the operation, the class of act to be done – whatever be the instructions as to the time, the place or the manner of doing it . . . But the limit is exceeded when, instead of acting in furtherance of the assigned task, the servant indulges in an unrelated and independent venture of his own, that is "when he so acts as to be in effect a stranger in relation to his employer with respect to the act which he has committed."

(See Chaplin v. Dunstan Ltd. (1938), S.A.S.R. 245.)

33 Fridman states the test as follows (at pp. 328-29):

> The ultimate question, in all cases, is whether what the employee did was sufficiently connected with what he was employed to do so as to lead to the logical, as well as practical conclusion that the employer should, and can be held responsible . . .
>
> The real issue in all alleged instances of vicarious liability for the acts of agents and servants is whether the tortfeasor was doing something which he was authorised or employed to do when he committed the tort even if the act in question was, or involved a mode of performance of an act which was not itself authorised, and may even have been expressly or impliedly forbidden by the employer.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

34 In relation to a general delegation of responsibility to an employee, Clerk and Lindsell note as follows (at p. 218):

> If tasks have been delegated to a servant or agent in very general terms, then that delegation necessarily implies the grant of a discretion to determine how the tasks may best be completed.

35 The question of fact to be determined in each case is, therefore, whether the act of the employee constitutes an improper mode of carrying out an employee's duties (in which case, it is within the scope of his employment) or falls outside the scope of his employment. (See Clerk and Lindsell, at p. 210.)

(iii) Where the Employee is the Wrongdoer

36 One may ask whether an employee is ever acting in the scope of his employment if he is committing a tort or a wrongful act which was not authorized by the employer. The answer is clearly yes – the fact that the actions of an employee may be unauthorized or even prohibited does not necessarily mean that they are done outside the scope of employment. Fridman states as follows (at p. 332):

> . . . courts have said that to perform an authorised act or function in an unauthorised manner, for example negligently, or dishonestly, will not take what was done outside the course of employment. The essential issue is whether the act complained of, such as striking the plaintiff, was closely connected with a duty being carried out in the authorised course of employment and not performed at a time when the servant has divested himself of his character as a servant . . .
>
> What has caused difficulty have been cases involving deliberate tortious acts such as assault, fraud, and the like, where the nature of the act tends to lead to the conclusion that the act was not done in the course of employment since the act may have been purely for the personal purposes of the agent or servant and, in any event, they are the kinds of acts which, if not directly forbidden, would certainly be impliedly prohibited. Nonetheless, it has been held that such acts can be considered to have been committed in the course of the perpetrator's employment, as long as the surrounding circumstances indicate the necessary connection with what the servant or agent was employed to do on his employer's behalf. (Emphasis is mine.)

4. Decision – Foerster

(i) Scope of Employment

37 The uncontradicted evidence of Foerster was that, as the Director of Research, his responsibilities included making recommendations regarding the permanent allocation of research space based on the advice which he received from the Research Advisory Committee, making temporary allocations of research space and finding funding to complete the building renovations to accommodate research projects as they were approved. Thus, when he made decisions regarding the allocation of temporary space to the Burrell Lab, he was acting within the scope of his employment, in that he was carrying out one of the employment functions assigned to him by his employer.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

38 In this case, the plaintiff has alleged that Foerster refused to allocate adequate laboratory space to him for an improper motive or wrongful reason, that is, as a means of preventing the plaintiff from pursuing his lawsuit. Even if I found that that was the, or one of the, principal motivations for Foerster's decision, I would still find that Foerster was acting in the course of his employment in arriving at that decision, as he was clearly doing something he was authorized to do – that is, to allocate space – and the evidence is clear that he was acting in what he thought were the best interests of his employer (see the evidence referred to on pp. 320-21, items (1) and (2) of this decision) and not in furtherance of his own personal gain or to further a personal interest (see the evidence referred to on pp. 321-22, item (3) of this decision).

(ii) Acting Bona Fide

39 If the employee is found not to be acting bona fide in the best interests of the employer, he will not be entitled to the benefit of the exemption from liability. This is noted in the Said v. Butt case, where McCardie J. refers to "a servant acting bona fide" (at p. 506) and also in the McFadden case, where Callon J. states at p. 146:

> But where he (that is, the officer or director of a corporation) does not act under such a duty, as, for example, where he fails to act bona fide within the scope of his authority, his act is no longer justified, and he becomes liable. (Words in parenthesis are mine.)

40 Was Foerster acting bona fide in the best interests of his employer when he acted to allocate space in the Research Centre to the Burrell Lab and particularly in regard to the allocation of laboratory research space to be available for use by the plaintiff? Or was he, as is alleged by the plaintiff, motivated by a desire to prevent the plaintiff from pursuing his lawsuit and, if so, did that constitute a lack of bona fides on his part?

41 The evidence regarding Foerster's position on the subject of the lawsuit is as follows:

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

(1) Foerster made two references in writing to the plaintiff's litigation which set out the reason why the litigation was of concern to him, and in addition he and the plaintiff had one conversation in that regard. The first reference is found in a letter by Foerster to Dr. Riese, which letter is dated October 16, 1985 (Ex. 48) and was written by Foerster, in his capacity as Head of the Department of Medicine, in support of the plaintiff's application for appointment to the medical staff of the St. Boniface Hospital prior to the plaintiff being employed by the Hospital. In that letter, Foerster stated as follows:

> It must also be understood clearly that Dr. Polimeni must not use his appointment at St. Boniface Hospital as a base for legal or other actions against the University of Manitoba or its officers, including the Dean and the President, since Dr. Polimeni's disagreements with that Institution preceded his contemplated association with St. Boniface General Hospital. As you know this Institution has always endeavoured to maintain good and constructive relationships with the University and I would not wish to see our constructive and productive relationship jeopardized through direct or indirect involvement in a matter that is of no immediate concern to us.

Later, in a memorandum to the plaintiff dated February 25, 1987 (Ex. 7) regarding the plaintiff's 1986 application for independent research space in the Research Centre, Foerster discussed the decision not to grant the plaintiff space and then said:

> You also indicated that you were undertaking legal action against the University and certain members of its staff. Since St. Boniface Hospital, as an affiliated teaching hospital, is developing research efforts at the Institution in close collaboration with the University, it might be best if these issues were settled before St. Boniface Hospital, of necessity linked closely to the University, enters into new contracts with you. I trust that these matters can be resolved to everyone's satisfaction at an early date and that we can get on with the business at hand.

This memorandum refers to an earlier discussion between the plaintiff and Foerster, being the only conversation they had in this regard. In direct examination, the plaintiff explained that earlier discussion as follows (transcript, September 21, 1993, p. 61, ll. 7-16):

> Q. Had that been discussed earlier between you and Dr. Foerster?
>
> A. It had, but not quite like this.
>
> Q. Will you tell us how it was discussed?
>
> A. I think we discussed in a general way – in fact, actually, I think in the meeting before this, if my recollection is accurate, Dr. Foerster had made an inquiry concerning the litigation.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

> Q. Right.
>
> A. But there was no sense of any threat or any conditional thing about it. It was just a question, and I responded to that.

The plaintiff confirmed this in his cross-examination (transcript, September 23, 1993, p. 100, II. 19-23), and he also confirmed that this was the only conversation which he and Foerster had regarding the lawsuit.

(2) In his testimony, Foerster explained that he thought that the plaintiff would have a better chance of getting an academic salary from the University of Manitoba to go along with his appointment there and also to have an application for independent research space approved by the Research Advisory Committee (both decisions being outside the control of Foerster) if he resolved his lawsuit. He testified that he thought that the lawsuit could be resolved quickly and that, in so thinking, he was, perhaps, being naive. There was no evidence to support the suggestion that, by "resolve," Foerster meant that the plaintiff should withdraw or compromise his claim to his disadvantage – and I accepted that he was just encouraging the plaintiff to conclude the matter as quickly as possible.

(3) According to the plaintiff's own testimony, he did not believe that the defendants were acting to deliberately hurt him. In cross-examination (transcript, September 23, 1993, at p. 83, II. 8-16), he stated as follows:

> Q. So you do not have the belief that either of the Defendants wanted to deliberately hurt you, is that it?
>
> A. I don't believe that they sat down together and plotted, "Let's give this man a difficult time. Let's ruin his career for no purpose at all." I believe that that is the result of their actions and they knew it. They knew that that would be the result of their action, although that was not the primary reason.
>
> Q. Excuse me. The primary reason was what?
>
> A. The primary reason was other than trying to hurt me deliberately.

He goes on to explain that one reason Danzinger wanted to let him go from the laboratory was to have the position available for another candidate (that being the assistant to the proposed new Head of the Cardiology Unit at the University of Manitoba, as per item (4) on p. 326 of this decision).

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

The plaintiff, in his own testimony, also acknowledged that he was not aware of either defendant having any personal animosity towards him (see transcript of the plaintiff's examination for discovery, p. 110, ll. 23-36).

(4) Foerster testified that he allocated temporary space to the Burrell Lab based on the space available in the Research Centre and on the funds he was able to locate to outfit that space to accommodate the Burrell Lab functions. He believed that that space was temporary and that a more suitable space would be allocated on a permanent basis at a later date, that allocation being dependent upon the availability of funding to develop the space. To date, that has not happened, but Dr. Brown made it clear in this evidence that the Burrell Lab was not a priority for the Board of Directors of the St. Boniface Hospital at that time; rather, the Board of Directors had a new funding priority, being the development of the MRI facility, which occurred at a time when the Hospital was experiencing a reduction in funding from the government. Therefore, funds were directed to the development of the MRI facility, resulting in the reduction of funds and the downsizing of the Burrell Lab. This was not a decision participated in by Foerster, but rather one which was made by those higher up than him in the administration.

42 The plaintiff has argued that one must look behind this evidence and examine the defendants' actions – that is, one must "read between the lines" – to find the motive suggested in his statement of claim. In that regard, he refers to the following:

- the fact that Foerster was "adamantly opposed" to the plaintiff being appointed director or interim director of the Burrell Lab and that this opposition was probably known to the selection committee because Foerster's assistant was a member of that committee;

- Foerster's participation on the committee which set the criteria for the new director, which criteria included a preference for a veterinarian with some research experience which, obviously, the plaintiff could not comply with and which he feels was not a bona fide requirement, but rather designed to exclude him from consideration;

- the fact that Foerster did not apply to the St. Boniface Hospital Board for funding to develop permanent space for the laboratory in the Research Centre, but rather offered the temporary space in several locations and on different floors;

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

– the fact that Foerster did not assign satisfactory space to the Burrell Lab and, therefore, the plaintiff was unable to complete all of his research.

43 I do not accept that one must read between the lines to find Foerster's motives; rather, I accept Foerster's evidence that he did the best he could when allocating temporary space to the Burrell Lab and for the plaintiff's use, based on the space and funding available at that time, and that any limitations or downsizing in the space or functions of the Burrell Lab and/or of space available to the plaintiff resulted solely from a lack of funds to develop larger and more suitable laboratory space. While Foerster expressed concerns about the possible effect of the lawsuit on the relationship between the St. Boniface Hospital and the University of Manitoba and how it may have affected the allocation of permanent space by the Research Advisory Committee, I find that he did not act on those concerns when he made any decisions regarding the allocation of temporary space to the Burrell Lab.

44 Even if I had concluded otherwise and had found, as a fact, that Foerster had acted, at least in part, to pressure the plaintiff to resolve his lawsuit, I would also find that he did so bona fide and in the best interests of his employer. His only concern in relation to the lawsuit was to ensure the continued good relationship between the University of Manitoba and the St. Boniface Hospital and, as well, to point out to the plaintiff what he thought was the impediment to the Research Advisory Committee approving the plaintiff's earlier application for independent research space, so that, if this concern did, in fact, affect his decision (which I do not accept), he would still have been acting bona fide and in the best interests of his employer.

45 Thus, I find that Foerster was acting bona fide and in the best interests of his employer when he made the decision regarding the allocation of temporary space in the Research Centre to the Burrell Lab.

(iii) Personal Gain

46 There was no evidence that Foerster acted for personal gain or to advance any personal interests when he was making decisions regarding the allocation of research space to the Burrell Lab. Even the plaintiff, in his own evidence, denies this suggestion. In fact, there was no evidence to suggest that Foerster had any personal interest, outside of his responsibilities as the Director of Research for the St. Boniface Hospital, in relation to any of the decisions which he made.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

4. Decision – Danzinger

(i) Scope of Employment

47 After direct responsibility for the Burrell Lab was transferred to Danzinger in 1987, he became responsible to supervise its operation. Due to the retirement of Dr. Sharma, Danzinger was also responsible for the staffing of the laboratory, for the initiation of a process to find a replacement for Dr. Sharma and to make a recommendation in that regard. He was also responsible to negotiate on behalf of the laboratory for space in the Research Centre. While Danzinger did not make a final decision on any of these issues, that authority being reserved for the Board of Directors of the St. Boniface Hospital, he was clearly acting within the scope of his employment in dealing with those issues and in making recommendations related thereto.

(ii) Acting Bona Fide

48 As with Foerster, the plaintiff has alleged that Danzinger was motivated, in the exercise of his authority, to prevent the plaintiff from exercising his lawful right to continue to pursue litigation against the employees of the University of Manitoba and that this constituted a wrongful use of that authority.

49 The evidence regarding the issues affecting Danzinger's decisions on space allocation, staff and the directorship of the Burrell Lab is as follows:

(1) While it is clear that the recommendations made by Danzinger had very negative effects on the plaintiff, ultimately resulting in the loss of the plaintiff's employment, Danzinger testified that he was not motivated to make those decisions by a desire to prevent the plaintiff from pursuing his litigation. Danzinger testified that, while he was aware of the existence of the plaintiff's lawsuit, he was never aware of any of the details. He understood from Foerster that, in Foerster's opinion, the lawsuit had in some way affected the plaintiff's application for independent research space, but he told Foerster that he did not want to know the details because the lawsuit was not important to the decisions which Danzinger had to make.

The only written reference by Danzinger to the plaintiff's lawsuit is that contained in Dr. Sharma's memorandum dated May 23, 1989 (Ex. 34) which followed a meeting between Dr. Sharma and Danzinger. That memorandum states:

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

> During the discussion Dr. Danzinger made a remark that it should be understood that Dr. Polimeni is being provided Lab. Space in view of his currently active Research Grants. Whereas his (Dr. Polimeni's) present salaries position is not in any immediate jeopardy and can be carried for a couple of years he (Dr. Danzinger) gave no guarantee beyond two years. He (Dr. Danzinger) stated that it would be helpfull (sic) if Dr. Polimeni resolved his dispute with the University because the persistence of this is a constant matter of concern and weighs against him (Polimeni) in sustaining his claim to a position within the faculty. He asked Dr. Sharma to convey this to Dr. Polimeni.

Danzinger confirmed that he had a discussion with Dr. Sharma along these lines which resulted from comments made by Foerster. Danzinger's recollection was that, while Foerster himself had no problems arising out of the lawsuit, he had concluded that the lawsuit would continue to give the plaintiff difficulties in his application for research space and that Foerster was frustrated that he could not help the plaintiff resolve the space issue while the lawsuit was outstanding. Danzinger was merely asking Dr. Sharma to pass this concern on to the plaintiff.

(2) In addition to Dr. Sharma's written memorandum, the plaintiff referred, in his examination for discovery, to a conversation which he had with Danzinger regarding the lawsuit, wherein he stated as follows (transcript of examination for discovery of Polimeni, pp. 68-69, I. 18):

> All I can say in summary of that discussion concerning the litigation is that I did not feel that Dr. Danzinger was threatening me. That he indeed was making me aware that he was aware of its existence. That he was not particularly pleased about it. That he understood that it could raise some problems for him, but that he was also trying to reassure me that he wasn't going to be overly concerned about it. He did not suggest to me that I'd better stop the litigation or else something will happen. That is not what happened.

(3) The role of the Burrell Lab and that of all of its staff were under review in the mid to late-1980's, even before Dr. Sharma's retirement. This review was caused by several factors:

- The funding of health care was undergoing major cuts which affected funding to the St. Boniface Hospital. Dr. Brown testified that there had been government funding reductions at the Hospital and that all department heads were instructed to look for methods of cost cutting.

- The Burrell Lab had, historically, carried out a medical research function for the St. Boniface Hospital; however, the Hospital had developed the Research Centre in the mid-1980's and obtained the

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

MRI unit, both of which, according to Dr. Brown, took priority over the Burrell Lab in terms of importance and the allocation of funds. When it was decided to move the Burrell Lab to the Research Centre, this decision resulted in a review of the functions of the laboratory, including its research function.

– Dr. Sharma had been the Director of the Burrell Lab for many years. He had excellent skills as both a surgeon and a researcher, which fulfilled the requirements of several of the functions of the laboratory. The laboratory serviced several St. Boniface Hospital departments and had seen its functions grow under Dr. Sharma. His retirement raised the question of which department should control the laboratory, how its functions should be priorized and which of those functions should dominate in the selection of a new director (see Ex. 47 – memorandum by Sharma to Bob [Robert Miller] dated December 12, 1988, entitled "R.O. Burrell Laboratory – Future Role – Discussion Paper").

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

(4) The staffing of the Burrell Lab was affected by other factors which complicated and delayed the decisions being made regarding the role and staffing of the laboratory, the main factors being:

– Problems with animal rights groups in relation to both the quality of facilities and staffing to operate an animal research laboratory – These groups also made it difficult to obtain funding for this type of facility, which funding was essential, both for the development of the space in the Research Centre and for the continued operation of the animal research function of the Burrell Lab.

– The appointment of a director was put on hold for over a year when the director's salary was earmarked to cover the salary of a researcher who was part of a recruitment package being pursued by the University of Manitoba and the St. Boniface Hospital, the goal being to hire a doctor as the new Head of the Cardiology Unit at the University of Manitoba. While the Head of the Unit would be paid by the University of Manitoba, the person being recruited insisted on bringing his own assistant, who was a researcher for whom the University did not have funds for a salary. Danzinger's superiors put considerable pressure on him to make the director's position available to provide both a job and a salary for this researcher, should the doctor accept the recruitment package. Dr. Brown testified that, even though the researcher was not a veterinarian, Danzinger would have had little choice but to make the position available for this purpose.

(5) While the plaintiff felt that he should be the frontrunner for the position and be appointed as acting director, and while he had certain research skills and a knowledge of the laboratory, there were valid reasons for not giving him the appointment. Those included the following:

– In his memorandum of December 1988 (Ex. 47), Dr. Sharma clearly states that Polimeni is not the ideal candidate to be the new director and that selecting a suitable person would depend on the future role of the Burrell Lab. In that memorandum, he makes the following comment regarding the plaintiff (at p. 7):

> Of all the contenders (to run the laboratory), only Dr. Polimeni will qualify for this (generating research funds) but then he will be grossly deficient in both the other areas stated above (infrastructure, including animal care and surgical input) . . . (Emphasis and words in parenthesis are mine.)

And at p. 8 he stated:

> This brings to head the question of Dr. Philip Polimeni. He was hired upon my request that the funds on line item HEMODYNAMIC TECHNICIAN would be better utilized if these were used to hire a Scientist. The scientific input could augment the quality of our work while the work of the hemodynamic data acquisition and processing, including surgical procedures, could be easily done by me. This argument would no longer exist once I retire and the justification for Dr. Polimeni to hold his position will depend upon how he fits into the new mandate of the Lab. He cannot provide hemodynamic or surgical services . . . (Emphasis is mine.)

– The committee setting criteria for the new director decided to give priority to finding a veterinarian to meet the needs of the animal research facility, which was determined to be a major component of the Burrell Lab. A veterinarian would also bring the qualifications necessary to meet some of the criticisms of the animal rights groups.

– The selection committee, which included Danzinger, decided to appoint Danzinger's assistant, a technician with lower academic training than that of the plaintiff, in the position of acting director to save the costs of an acting director and to avoid placing a candidate in the job and then having to remove him if he was not selected to fill the position on a permanent basis.

(6) Danzinger was involved in negotiations with Foerster for space for the Burrell Lab in the Research Centre; however, he had few bargaining chips with which to negotiate. The decision to move the laboratory had already been made, and Danzinger had no authority to change that decision. Foerster was responsible to allocate temporary space, and Danzinger had no authority over Foerster as regards the space which was allocated. Further, Danzinger had no funding to offer for the development of any space, so the only funding available was that put together by Foerster.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

While there was documentation confirming Danzinger's dissatisfaction with the space being offered, especially the space allocated to the Burrell Lab for use by the plaintiff in carrying out his research projects, Danzinger testified that the pressure was mounting to move the Burrell Lab equipment so that the building could be torn down and the MRI facility constructed. Finally, Danzinger had no choice but to agree with the space offered by Foerster and get on with the move.

(7) Finally, Danzinger testified that the decision was made not to renew the plaintiff's half-time research position with the Burrell Lab, as his salary was needed to form part of the recruitment package for the head of the Cardiology Unit and his assistant, and Danzinger was required to have a salary immediately available in the event that this doctor and his assistant decided to accept the offer being made to them.

50 The plaintiff has questioned the validity of these reasons, arguing that one must look to the defendant's actions to find the true reasons why the decisions were made. He points to the following as supporting his claim against Danzinger:

- After taking over responsibility for the laboratory, Danzinger had set up a committee of doctors to advise him of the use and role of the Burrell Lab, most or all of whom favoured hiring the plaintiff to replace Dr. Sharma. While Danzinger called these people "major stakeholders" in the Burrell Lab, none of them were placed on the committee appointed to draft criteria for the new director or its successor committee appointed to select a candidate. The plaintiff has suggested that the two latter committees were composed of a majority of people who opposed his appointment, rather than those who favoured his appointment, and that this decision was made to stack the appointment process against him for the reason alleged in the statement of claim.

- Danzinger agreed with Foerster regarding the allocation of space in the Research Centre, which was unsatisfactory for the plaintiff's research projects and which resulted in the plaintiff being unable to complete those projects in accordance with the grants he had obtained.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

– Danzinger's decision to appoint his assistant as acting director over the plaintiff, even though the plaintiff had higher academic and research credentials, was an inexcusable insult which the plaintiff felt could be explained only as an effort to force him to discontinue his lawsuit. He argued that the selection committee's decision was a sham because Danzinger had stacked the committee against him.

– The plaintiff disagreed with the necessity for having a veterinarian as the new director of the laboratory and felt that this criterion was selected as a way of excluding him as a suitable candidate.

– The selection committee did not give adequate consideration to the plaintiff's background in working in animal laboratories for many years as being a satisfactory substitute for veterinary training when considering his application.

– The decision to terminate the plaintiff's position was motivated by the letter sent by the plaintiff's lawyer to the Board of Directors of the St. Boniface Hospital, which letter complained of the treatment the plaintiff was receiving.

51 I find that it is not necessary to "read between the lines" to interpret Danzinger's actions. I have carefully considered the evidence, and I am not satisfied, on a balance of probabilities, that it supports the plaintiff's claim that decisions made or participated in by Danzinger were motivated as suggested by the plaintiff. I find ample evidence, as set out above, that, in making the decisions and recommendations required of him, Danzinger was acting bona fide and in the best interests of his employer and not for the purpose of having the plaintiff discontinue his lawsuit or to in any way harm the plaintiff.

(iii) Personal Interest or Gain

52 There was no evidence to suggest that Danzinger had any personal interest or anything to gain in relation to the decisions which he made on behalf of his employer or in relation to the plaintiff's lawsuit or the resolution of that lawsuit, and the plaintiff's own evidence indicates that he did not believe that Danzinger acted for personal reasons.

5. Decision – Employee Exemption from Liability

53 Thus, I find that both defendants were acting within the scope of their employment, that they acted bona fide in the best interests of their employer, and that they were not acting for personal gain or in their personal interest when they made the decisions affecting the plaintiff's employment at the St. Boniface Hospital. That being the case, both are exempt from liability for the alleged torts of inducing/procuring a breach of contract and/or interfering with an existing contract/economic relationship without inducing a breach.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

IV. PROCURING/INDUCING A BREACH OF CONTRACT

54 One of the claims being advanced by the plaintiff is that the defendants, either together or individually, brought about his wrongful dismissal from the St. Boniface Hospital and have thereby committed the tort of procuring/inducing a breach of contract. It is clear from the texts and cases that, to establish this tort, the plaintiff must establish that there was, in fact, a breach of contract – in this case, a wrongful dismissal (see Clerk and Lindsell, at p. 796 and Fridman, at p. 294).

55 The evidence as to whether or not there was a breach of employment contract in this case was, at best, weak, and that aspect of the claim was virtually ignored by both parties. On the evidence which was led, it is clear that the plaintiff, and indeed all members of the medical staff, including both defendants, were appointed to the medical staff of the St. Boniface Hospital for one-year, renewable terms (Ex. 58, By-law 3-90 of the St. Boniface Hospital, art. I, paras. 15-18). Further, as regards the plaintiff's appointment to a salaried position at the Burrell Lab (which appointment was separate from his appointment to the medical staff of the Hospital), Dr. Riese's memorandum of October 7, 1985 (Ex. 75) states as follows:

> The only requirement that I must have on this (that is, the plaintiff's) appointment is that it be clearly understood by all concerned that this is a term appointment for one year renewable on favorable performance evaluation and the continued availability of funds originally designated for support staff. (Words in parenthesis are mine.)

56 The plaintiff confirmed in cross-examination (transcript, September 23, 1993, p. 95, II. 16-22) that he had received a form each year confirming the annual renewal of his term, although he qualified this by stating that "everyone gets one" and that Dr. Sharma told him that it did not mean anything. It is unclear from the evidence as to whether this form related to his appointment to the medical staff of the St. Boniface Hospital or to the Burrell Lab. While there was no other evidence indicating that a review was held on a regular, annual basis regarding either of the plaintiff's two appointments, documentation was filed wherein Dr. Sharma wrote for approval to carry on the plaintiff's appointment to the Burrell Lab position from November 1, 1988 to October 31, 1989, which documentation included correspondence on the issue of whether there was adequate funding for the position. There was also a review of the plaintiff's position at the laboratory in October 1990, and the plaintiff was present at a meeting on October 30, 1990, to review his activities for the purpose of deciding whether his position at the Burrell Lab would be renewed. This documentation would support the position that the plaintiff's appointment to the Burrell Lab was, indeed, on a year-to-year basis and that renewal depended on the factors referred to by Dr. Riese – including performance and the continuation of funding.

NBC BOA 001031

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

57 The plaintiff argued that, on paper, all medical staff had one-year, renewable appointments, but that the fact was that renewal was automatic unless an individual was found to be professionally inadequate or incompetent (which was never suggested as regards the plaintiff's performance). This point was never followed up by either party, and I am not satisfied, on the evidence before me, that the plaintiff has proven that all renewals were automatic or that his employment was other than for a renewable one-year term.

58 It is also necessary to distinguish between the plaintiff's two separate appointments at the St. Boniface Hospital. As I understand it, he maintains his appointment to the medical staff, scientific category, which appointment is equivalent to the appointments of the two defendants to the medical staff, none of which have an accompanying salary. It was his appointment to the position at Burrell Lab, and the salary which went with it, which was terminated. There was no evidence led as to the St. Boniface Hospital's review policy of other salaried positions, so it is impossible to know whether the Hospital reviews unsalaried appointments to the medical staff differently from appointments to salaried positions.

59 Finally, one must take into account the terms of the plaintiff's employment with the St. Boniface Hospital as they relate to an action for wrongful dismissal. There was no written employment contract between the plaintiff and the Hospital, so the Hospital was at least entitled to terminate the plaintiff for just cause or upon giving him reasonable notice of the termination of his employment. The question of whether there was reasonable notice was not canvassed at all by either party. According to the evidence, however, the plaintiff was given notice in October 1990 that his contract, which terminated October 31, 1990, was being reviewed and the question of its extension was under consideration. Soon after that, he was given notice that the contract would be extended only until March 31, 1991, that is, for a period of five months, to enable him to complete his research projects. Thus, the facts are that the plaintiff was employed in a salaried position at the Burrell Lab from December 1985 to October 1990, a period of just less than five years, and he received approximately five months' notice of the termination of his employment or the decision not to renew his term position. In the absence of proof to the contrary, this notice is in the range of what would ordinarily be considered reasonable and, again, leads me to the conclusion that there has been no wrongful dismissal and, therefore, no breach of contract in this case.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

V. INTERFERENCE WITH CONTRACTUAL RELATIONS/UNLAWFUL INTERFERENCE WITH ECONOMIC OR OTHER RELATIONS

60 As I have previously noted, both Fridman and Clerk and Lindsell state that this is a new, but relatively undeveloped, tort of uncertain ambit. In attempting to define the scope of the tort in the context of Canadian law, Fridman relies on dicta from several Canadian cases, but points out that each of those cases, on its facts, could have been decided on more traditional grounds, such as breach of contract, intimidation, deceit, etc. He states at p. 309 that the strongest authority for the proposition that there is a tort of unlawful interference with a contract is the case of Spicer v. Volkswagen Canada Ltd. (1978), 91 D.L.R. (3d) 42 (N.S.C.A.); however, again he points out that the case could have been decided on the basis of breach of contract.

61 One particular area of uncertainty in relation to this tort is that of the type of interference which must be committed by the defendant to result in liability. Clerk and Lindsell state at p. 851:

> . . . the cause of action exists only when the defendant has brought about the damage by use of unlawful means. Interference with contract, or with trade or business, by unlawful means is therefore a "genus" tort, which includes indirect and direct interferences with economic interests.

62 And at p. 854:

> This tort is based upon the deliberate use of unlawful means . . .

63 The plaintiff has quoted the case of Carnahan v. McGregor (1991), 121 N.B.R. (2d) 284 (Q.B.), as an example of a case decided on the basis of the tort of interference with economic relations. In that case, the judge refers to the requirement that there be interference by unlawful means and goes on to find that the defendants acted unlawfully when they deceived the plaintiffs and the owner of the land in question as to their (that is, the defendants') intentions. Thus, the unlawful means was that of deceit.

64 The exact parameters of the "unlawful" means necessary to commit this tort have not yet been determined. The question of what constitutes

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

"unlawful means" as defined in the Canadian and English texts and cases was not canvassed in any detail by either counsel. Clearly, the acts of the defendants in allocating space, recommending a new director for the laboratory and terminating the plaintiff's employment were not, on their face, unlawful or wrongful acts. If the plaintiff is to succeed, he must show that those acts became unlawful as a result of the defendant's motivation in carrying them out and establish that, in law, otherwise lawful acts can, in fact, be rendered unlawful by being done with a bad motive. Russell J. refers to this question in the Carnahan case, where he quotes from Lord Denning in Chapman v. Honig, [1963] 2 All E.R. 513 at 516 (C.A.).

65 I raise these questions because they caused me difficulty when I considered whether the defendants, individually, would have committed this tort if I had found the suggested motivation. Given my finding that both defendants are exempt from liability because they were acting in the course of their employment at St. Boniface Hospital, I have determined that I do not have to resolve this difficult issue.

VI. CONSPIRACY

1. The Law

(i) Definition of "Conspiracy"

66 Clerk and Lindsell define a conspiracy as follows (p. 871):

> "A conspiracy consists ... in the agreement of two or more to do an unlawful act, or to do a lawful act by unlawful means."

(Mulcahy v. R. (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 306 at 317.)

67 Fridman also adopts this definition of conspiracy (at p. 263) and then goes on to state (at pp. 265-66):

> In modern Canada, therefore, conspiracy as a tort comprehends three distinct situations. In the first place there will be an actionable conspiracy if two or more persons agree and combine to act unlawfully with the predominating purpose of injuring the plaintiff. Second, there will be an actionable conspiracy if the defendants combine to act lawfully with the predominating purpose of injuring the plaintiff. Third, an actionable conspiracy will exist if defendants combine to act unlawfully, their conduct is directed towards the plaintiff (or the plaintiff and others), and the likelihood of injury to the plaintiff is known to the defendants or should have been known to them in the circumstances. So far as England is concerned, the first two situations will give rise to liability. The third may not.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

(ii) Agreement Necessary

68 While there may be some differences in the factual situations giving rise to the tort of conspiracy between the law of England and that of Canada, both authors are in agreement that an essential element for liability is that there be an agreement between the alleged conspirators.

69 Fridman states this requirement as follows (at p. 267):

> An actionable conspiracy will not arise unless and until there is an agreement between two or more persons to act unlawfully or to injure another. Participation is the essence of conspiracy. Mere knowledge that a conspiracy exists, or acquiescence in the agreement, will not suffice. Hence, a common intention among several persons does not constitute an agreement that amounts to a conspiracy, (any more than correspondence between two people that indicates they both wish to contract about the same subject-matter, without such correspondence taking the form of an offer and acceptance, will constitute a contract).

70 Clerk and Lindsell state this requirement as follows (at p. 873):

> The tort requires an agreement, combination, understanding, or concert to injure, involving two or more persons.

71 And at p. 874:

> . . . there must be a combination; lack of overt acts or an uncommunicated intention to join a conspiracy may show there has not been an effective combination.

72 And at p. 875:

> The question is whether a particular defendant, having regard to his knowledge, utterances and actions, was sufficiently a party to the combination and the common design. In the normal case the issue of combination will involve only a question of fact.

2. Decision

73 I am not satisfied that there is any evidence of an agreement, combination or understanding between the two defendants to either act unlawfully or to injure the plaintiff.

(i) Regarding Space Allocation

74 Foerster was responsible to allocate space in the Research Centre for the Burrell Lab on an interim basis, and Danzinger, as the person responsible for the Burrell Lab, was to negotiate on behalf of the laboratory for the allocation of that space. I accept that all involved in the negotiations were dissatisfied with the space which was eventually allocated as being less satisfactory in some ways than was the old Burrell Lab. I find that the reason for this was that there was a lack of funds to develop more suitable space. Specifically, there was no evidence to support the plaintiff's allegation that Foerster and Danzinger, in the course of their negotiations, agreed to limit space for the Burrell Lab to prevent the plaintiff from having access to adequate research space, with an intent to injure the plaintiff or with an intent to prevent the plaintiff from realizing his potentiality as an employee of the St. Boniface Hospital. Rather, after discussing the Burrell Lab space requirements, Foerster told Danzinger that the space offered, though less than optimal, was the best that he could do due to the lack of available funding to develop other space, and Danzinger eventually accepted the fact that nothing more was available at that time. This does not constitute an agreement or combination to injure the plaintiff.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

(ii) Directorship of Laboratory

75 Danzinger was responsible to make a recommendation through Dr. Brown to the Board of Directors of the St. Boniface Hospital regarding a person to replace Dr. Sharma as Director of the Burrell Lab and, further thereto, to establish a process to select that person. The process followed was a two-step process in which an initial committee, which included Foerster, was set up to develop criteria for the director's position and, later on, a second committee which did not include Foerster, but did include his assistant, was put in place to interview the applicants and make a recommendation. While Foerster expressed opposition to the plaintiff being appointed as acting director or director of the laboratory in a memorandum which he wrote to his superior and while he agreed that his assistant probably knew of his opinion in that regard and may have been affected by it, there is no evidence of any agreement or understanding between the two defendants to either prepare job criteria to exclude the plaintiff or to tailor the selection process to specifically exclude the plaintiff.

76 I find that the decision to look first for a veterinarian with research experience was motivated by a bona fide desire to emphasize the animal care aspects of the laboratory, which even Dr. Sharma recognized in his discussion paper as being "so vital that the Laboratory could not run without them." While the plaintiff had considerable animal care experience, he was not a veterinarian and could not bring the credibility of such qualifications to the position. I find that these were legitimate concerns for the future of the laboratory, as there was a genuine need for the St. Boniface Hospital administration to respond to the concerns of the animal rights groups, both to be able to continue the operation of the laboratory and to obtain funding in that regard. I specifically find that the decision to look first for a veterinarian was in no way a sham or an artifice to exclude the plaintiff from the competition for the director's position. Further, there was no agreement to include such a requirement for the purpose of affecting the plaintiff's suitability as a potential candidate for this position.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

77 The plaintiff has pointed out that Danzinger was prepared to overlook this criterion to hire the assistant to the new Head of Cardiology Unit at the University of Manitoba, if that recruitment had been successful. That plan, however, was not one which either Foerster or Danzinger participated in, but rather was one which was being literally forced on Danzinger. As was testified to by Dr. Brown, Danzinger would have been under "undue pressure" to accept the assistant had the doctor agreed to accept the position at the University of Manitoba, and I accept that, practically speaking, Danzinger had no choice in that regard. While it would have meant hiring someone who was less than optimal according to the criteria established by the committee, it in no way made the criteria less valid. It means that the needs of the Burrell Lab had to give way to what was seen by those above Danzinger in the administrative hierarchy as the greater needs of the University and the St. Boniface Hospital, which had nothing to do with an attempt to injure the plaintiff or to prevent him from advancing at the Hospital. Clearly, this aspect of the selection process had nothing to do with Foerster, so there was no possibility of an agreement or understanding between Foerster and Danzinger in this regard.

(iii) Termination of Employment

78 Foerster testified that he had nothing to do with the termination of the plaintiff's employment at the St. Boniface Hospital, that he was not involved or consulted in that decision and that he had not discussed it with Danzinger. This was confirmed by Danzinger, who said that the decision was made by him and Dr. Brown. Thus, there was not even an opportunity for agreement between the defendants on this issue.

79 I therefore find that there was no evidence of any conspiracy, agreement or understanding between the two defendants in relation to the termination of the plaintiff's employment.

80 The statement of claim is therefore dismissed as against both defendants, with costs to the defendants.

Action dismissed.

1995 CanLII 16146 (MB KB)

In the Court of Appeal of Alberta

Citation: Maguire v. Calgary (City), 1983 ABCA 121

Date: 19830412
Docket: 13676
Registry: Calgary

1983 ABCA 121 (CanLII)

Between:

Derek Paul Maguire suing on his own behalf and on behalf of all taxpayers of the City of Calgary

Plaintiff
(Appellant)

- and -

The City of Calgary

Defendant
(Respondent)

The Court:

The Honourable Chief Justice McGillivray
The Honourable Mr. Justice Lieberman
The Honourable Mr. Justice Laycraft

Reasons for Judgment of the Court

COUNSEL:

D. P. Maguire. Esq, for the Plaintiff (Appellant)

A. J. Rynd. Esq. and A. A. Abougoush. Esq., for the Defendant (Respondent)

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT OF THE COURT

[1] The appellant (plaintiff), a barrister and solicitor and a ratepayer in the City of Calgary, brought action on his own behalf and on behalf of all taxpayers of the City of Calgary claiming a declaration that the giving of money by the respondent, (defendant), to the Calgary Birth Control Association, (the Association), was unlawful. He further claimed an injunction restraining the respondent from giving any further monies to the Association. The action was dismissed. This is an appeal from that dismissal.

[2] The status of the appellant to bring the action herein is not in dispute.

[3] The Association is a charitable non-profit organization that provides information to citizens on birth control, anatomy and physiology, human sexuality, pregnancy, childbirth, therapeutic abortion, the reproductive system, women's health, and venereal disease.

[4] Evidence adduced at trial establishes that if, after receiving information on the subject of therapeutic abortion from the Association, a woman wishes to have such an abortion performed, an employee of the Association will make an appointment for her with a medical doctor who performs such abortions pursuant to a certificate under s.251 of the Criminal Code. The evidence also discloses that a woman who, after consulting with the Association, wishes to have a therapeutic abortion is required by the Association to fill out a form, at the bottom of which is written:

> "Please continue to weigh in your mind whether abortion is the right answer for you. Do not feel that because you have gone this far, you cannot change your mind. If you should decide that you would rather continue your pregnancy, everyone will be sympathetic to this decision. However, please let our office and the doctor know as soon as possible."

[5] On the basis of the advice and information which the Association gives to women who consult it with respect to therapeutic abortions and because the Association arranges appointments for these women to see a medical doctor, the appellant contends that the Association conducts an abortion referral service and is a party to a civil conspiracy to commit an unlawful act (the tort of battery)and that therefore the City cannot contribute tax monies to it (Municipal Government Act. R.S.A. 1980 C.M-26. s.212).

[6] The starting point for a consideration of the issues in this appeal is s.251 of the Criminal Code, the relevant parts of which are:

> "251.(1) Every one who, with intent to procure the miscarriage of a female person, whether or not she is pregnant, uses any means for the purpose of carrying out his intention is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for life.
>
> (2) Every female person who, being pregnant, with intent to procure her own miscarriage, uses any means or permits any means to be used for the purpose of carrying out her intention is guilty of an indictable offence and is liable to imprisonment for two years.

1983 ABCA 121 (CanLII)

. . .

(4) Subsections (1) and (2) do not apply to

(a) a qualified medical practitioner, other than a member of a therapeutic abortion committee for any hospital, who in good faith uses in an accredited or approved hospital any means for the purpose of carrying out his intention to procure the miscarriage of a female person, or

(b) a female person who, being pregnant, permits a qualified medical practitioner to use in an accredited or approved hospital any means described in paragraph (a) for the purpose of carrying out her intention to procure her own miscarriage.

If, before the use of those means, the therapeutic abortion committee for that accredited or approved hospital, by a majority of the members of the committee and at a meeting of the committee at which the case of such female person has been reviewed,

(c) has by certificate in writing stated that in its opinion the continuation of the pregnancy of such female person would or would be likely to endanger her life or health, and

(d) has caused a copy of such certificate to be given to the qualified medical practitioner."

[7] The appellant, although conceding that abortions resulting from advice and information given by the Association are therapeutic abortions within s.251(4) and that persons having them performed or performing them are thereby immune from prosecution, contends that the abortions are nevertheless unlawful in that they constitute the tort of battery upon the foetus. Thus, if the position urged upon us by the appellant is correct, a person performing a therapeutic abortion within s.251(4) although protected from criminal prosecution would be liable for damages in a civil action based upon the tort of battery.

[8] Fundamental to the position taken by the appellant is the existence of a civil conspiracy of which the Association is a party. This is set out in the appellant's factum:

"If the procuring of an abortion is unlawful, then knowingly co-operating with another person to achieve that end is unlawful, as constituting the tort of conspiracy. This is constituted by two or more persons agreeing to do something contrary to law, or harmful to another person. Operating an abortion referral agency constitutes the commission of a civil conspiracy whenever such a referral is made."

For the purpose of dealing with this issue, and for that purpose only, we shall assume that the performance of an abortion visits the tort of battery upon a foetus.

Civil Conspiracy

1983 ABCA 121 (CanLII)

[9] The tort of conspiracy is defined by Viscount Cave L.C. in Sorrell's case [1925] A.C.700 at 712:

> "A combination of two or more persons wilfully to injure a man … is unlawful and, if it results in damage to him, is actionable (as the tort of conspiracy)".

It is to be noted that this definition specifies damage as one of the essential ingredients of a civil conspiracy. In the tort of battery, however, damage is presumed.

[10] Civil conspiracy has its roots in cases involving trade competition, but its application has not been confined to those cases. In Crofter Hand Woven Harris Tweed Company Limited v. Veitch, et al [1942] A.C.435 Viscount Simon L.C. said at pp.446-447:

> "Although most of the cases have dealt with trade rivalry in some form or other. I do not see why the proposition as to the conditions under which conspiracy becomes a tort should be limited to trade competition."

And at pp.478-479 Lord Wright says this:

> "I may here note that the doctrine of civil conspiracy to injure extends beyond trade competition and labour disputes. Thompson v. New South Wales Branch of the British Medical Association shows that it may extend to the affairs of a profession, as was expressly stated in that case in the judgment of the Privy Council. By way of contrast. Gregory v. Duke of Brunswick, may be regarded as a striking illustration of what might be held to constitute a conspiracy to injure; what was alleged was a conspiracy to hiss an actor off the stage in order to ruin him. To what legitimate interests other than those mentioned the general doctrine may extend I do not here seek to define, since beyond question it extends to the present case, whether the object of the action were the prosperity of the industry or the obtaining 100 per cent membership. But the objects or purposes for which combinations may be formed are clearly of great variety. It must be left to the future to decide on the facts of the particular case, subject to the general doctrine, whether any combination is such as to give rise to a claim for a conspiracy to injure."

[11] The wording "concerted action taken pursuant to agreement" was used by Lord Diplock in Lonrho et al v. Shall Petroleum Co. et al [1981] 2 All E.R. 456 at 463.

[12] In order to be found to be a party to a conspiracy one must know the facts of the alleged agreement or combination and intend to be a party to the "combining". This principle was adopted by the English Court of Appeal in Belmont Finance Corp. v. miliums Furniture et al (No.2) [1980] 1 All E.R.393 wherein both Buckley L.J. and Waller L.J. referred to Churchill v. Walton [1967] 2 A.C.224 approving the words of Viscount Dilhorne at p.237:

1983 ABCA 121 (CanLII)

> "… I would say that mens rea is only an essential ingredient in conspiracy in so far as there must be an intention to be a party to an agreement to do an unlawful act: that knowledge of the law on the part of the accused is immaterial and that knowledge of the facts is only material in so far as such knowledge throws a light on what was agreed."

[13] One further principle of the law of civil conspiracy should be mentioned, that is, that the "combiners" must have as the predominant purpose of their combination, the intention to inflict damage on another. Viscount Simon L.C. stated this proposition in Crofter at p.445:

> "The test is not what is the natural result to the plaintiffs of such combined action, or what is the resulting damage which the defendants realize or should realize will follow, but what is in truth the object in the minds of the combiners when they acted as they did.
>
> * * * * *
>
> If that predominant purpose is to damage another person, and damage results, that is tortious conspiracy."

It is not necessary that there be direct evidence of the intent to damage the plaintiff: all the plaintiff need establish is that it is a member of the "target group". In British Columbia Lightweight Aggregate v. Canada Cement Lafarge Ltd. [1981] 4 W.W.R.385 the Court at pp.412-13 said this:

> "It is not necessary that there be express malice or "deliberate" intent. The defendants are presumed to intend the natural and probable consequences of their acts. The learned trial judge found that the defendants conspired to eliminate all competitors and succeeded in so doing. The plaintiff was a competitor of the defendants. This finding is supported by the evidence and by the admissions of the defendants through pleading guilty that they had conspired to unduly lessen competition by achieving virtual domination of the market in British Columbia. It is idle, in the light of these facts, to suggest that the plaintiff was not one of the targets of the conspiracy. The defendants were aware that all persons and corporations engaged in the cement and concrete business were entitled to carry on their operations in a completely free and competitive market. They also knew, or ought to have known, that their conduct was such as to deprive the plaintiff of its legal right to operate its business in such a market. The plaintiff fell within the broad objective of the conspiracy, namely, to lessen competition and control and share the market."

(Leave to appeal this decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada has been granted).

The Facts

1983 ABCA 121 (CanLII)

[14] We shall, for the purpose of applying the law of civil conspiracy to the case at bar, expand upon the general outline of the facts set out at the beginning of this opinion.

[15] The Executive Co-ordinator of the Association estimated that only between eight and ten percent of the Association's work related to abortion counselling. She stated that during each abortion information session all alternatives to therapeutic abortions and the complications and risks involved are discussed with the client. The Association took the position that the final decision of whether to seek a therapeutic abortion rested with the client. In our view the evidence does not support the suggestion that the Association advised or pressured clients to seek an abortion. The position of the Association is clearly defined in the "caution" set out on the bottom of the form supplied to the client (see supra).

[16] If the client decided that she wanted a therapeutic abortion she was advised of the manner in which she could proceed and frequently an appointment was made for her by the Association with a physician familiar with the procedures. The Association's involvement, in a process that admittedly might ultimately culminate in a therapeutic abortion, ends at this point.

[17] There was evidence of the procedures adopted by one hospital in Calgary before a therapeutic abortion is performed. There, the woman seeking the abortion must first be examined by a gynaecologist who discusses the question with her and makes an assessment of the situation. The woman is then referred to a counsellor. Information from the gynaecologist and from the counsellor is assembled and presented to the hospital's therapeutic abortion committee where the decision is finally made as to whether an abortion will be authorized. (Section 251(4) Criminal Code.)

Conclusion

[18] It certainly cannot be contended that the Association was doing anything wrongful or illegal in advising members of the public of the procedures set out in the Criminal Code. The appellant's argument based on conspiracy must therefore be founded upon the Association's step in putting a woman who consults it in touch with a physician. This act, in my respectful view, cannot make the Association a "combiner" in a conspiracy to obtain a therapeutic abortion. It cannot be construed as conduct forming a common design with others to effect such an abortion.

[19] On the evidence the position of the Association is one of strict and explicit neutrality. The decisions involved in the procedures outlined are, firstly, that of the woman in deciding to consult a physician, and secondly that of the therapeutic abortion committee of the hospital in deciding whether, in the light of the reports of the physician and the counsellor, to authorize an abortion.

1983 ABCA 121 (CanLII)

[20] The essence of conspiracy is agreement. With whom then has the Association made an agreement? Firstly, it is not with the pregnant woman. She is merely given advice as to the options open to her and as to procedures if she persists in wishing a therapeutic abortion. There is no agreement to effect a result. Then, is there an agreement with the doctor or doctors to whom the Association refers the pregnant woman? Surely at its highest, it is an agreement that, when advising pregnant women who seek therapeutic abortions, the Association may refer such women to these doctors as a step to getting them before a therapeutic abortion committee referred to in s.251 of the Criminal Code. In our view this does not make them guilty of conspiring to commit an abortion. There remains the opinion of the physician to whom the woman has been referred. There remains the possibility of change of heart by the woman, and there remains the possibility that the therapeutic abortion committee will refuse to approve of an abortion. Equally, we can see no agreement with the members of any of the therapeutic abortion committee of the hospital. In a conspiracy one's agreement may be express or tacit, it is also frequently to be inferred from the part one plays in reaching a common end. Such an inference here, in out view, is not justified because the Association does not seek with others a common end of abortion. Indeed, it counsels a woman to consider whether that is the best solution and if she so decides she is then referred to others who in turn will decide whether a therapeutic abortion is to proceed.

[21] The appellant has, in our view, failed to establish the existence of a combination or an agreement between the Association and others, much less a predominant purpose and intention that a therapeutic abortion be obtained.

[22] There being no tortious conspiracy to which the Association is a party, the appeal must be dismissed.

[23] Having arrived at this conclusion, on the basis of the assumption that abortion, therapeutic or otherwise, constitutes the tort of battery on the foetus, it is unnecessary for us to deal with the other grounds of appeal advanced by the appellant.

[24] The appeal is dismissed with costs.

1983 ABCA 121 (CanLII)

DATED at Calgary. Alberta
this 12th day of April,
A.D. 1983.

1983 ABCA 121 (CanLII)

In the Court of Appeal of Alberta

Citation: HSBC Bank Canada v. Fuss, 2013 ABCA 235

Date: 20130625
Docket: 1203-0029-AC
Registry: Edmonton

2013 ABCA 235 (CanLII)

Between:

HSBC Bank Canada

Respondent
(Plaintiff)

- and -

David Fuss and Rhonda Thuna

Appellants
(Defendants)

- and -

1100336 Alberta Ltd., carrying on business as Incredible Electronics Wholesale, Electronics Wholesale (Edmonton) Ltd., Incredible Electronics Inc., Ariza Technology Inc., HBC Business Credit Inc. and Cameron Kendrick

Not Parties to the Appeal
(Defendants)

The Court:

The Honourable Mr. Justice Peter Costigan
The Honourable Mr. Justice Frans Slatter
The Honourable Mr. Justice J.D. Bruce McDonald

Memorandum of Judgment

Appeal from the Judgment by
The Honourable Mr. Justice E.A. Marshall
Dated the 1st day of December, 2011
Filed on the 23rd day of January, 2012
(2011 ABQB 748, Docket: 0403 19158)

2013 ABCA 235 (CanLII)

Memorandum of Judgment

The Court:

INTRODUCTION

[1] The appellants, David Fuss and Rhonda Thuna, appeal a trial judgment which found they committed the tort of unlawful conduct conspiracy against the respondent bank and awarded damages of $1,761,901.14 against them: 2011 ABQB 748. Applying the five elements of the tort set out in Agribrands Purina Canada Inc v Kasamekas, 2011 ONCA 460, 106 OR (3d) 427 at para 26, the trial judge found:

1. the appellants, along with Cameron Kendrick (not a party to the appeal), acted by agreement to divert business activities from 828326 Alberta Ltd. (828) to other companies, Electronics Wholesale (Edmonton) Ltd. (EWE) and 1100336 Alberta Ltd. (1100);

2. the appellants' conduct was unlawful;

3. the appellants' conduct was directed at the respondent because the scheme would defeat the respondent's attempt to recover the funds it loaned 828;

4. injury to the respondent was likely to result if 828's assets were stripped; and

5. the appellants' conduct caused injury to the respondent because it could not recover the loaned funds from 828.

[2] The appellants advance three grounds of appeal. First, they argue the trial judge misapplied the law of unlawful conduct conspiracy. They say the trial judge could not find a conspiracy because he concluded the appellants were not aware of the fraud perpetrated by Kendrick. They also say the trial judge failed to deal with causation and that no acts or omissions on their part caused the respondent's loss. Second, they argue the trial judge misapplied the law relating to a director's statutory duties. Third, they argue the trial judge erred in calculating damages. They say they should not be liable for damages calculated pursuant to the terms of a general security agreement (GSA) between 828 and the respondent.

FACTS

[3] The respondent began providing financing to 828 through an operating line of credit in 2001. 828 executed a GSA which provided that any money collected or received by 828 was subject to a trust in favour of the respondent. At that time, Kendrick was 828's only director and shareholder.

2013 ABCA 235 (CanLII)

828 operated under the name Electronics Wholesale and was a wholesale and retail distributor of satellite systems and other electronics.

[4] Fuss was a director of two Ontario corporations that were suppliers of 828, Ariza Technology Inc. (Ariza) and Incredible Electronics Inc. (Incredible). He was also a director of HBC Business Credit Inc. (HBC), a third Ontario corporation that became a 50% shareholder of 828.

[5] When HBC became a 50% shareholder of 828, Thuna, Fuss' wife, was made a director of 828. Thuna was also a director of Ariza and HBC. EWE was incorporated in July 2003. Thuna was a director of that corporation as well.

[6] During 2003, 828 often exceeded the limit of its operating line of credit with the respondent. On January 29, 2004, the respondent returned some of 828's cheques for insufficient funds and notified 828 that further cheques would be dishonoured. On February 4, the respondent began dishonouring all of 828's cheques.

[7] Kendrick and Fuss decided to continue the business of 828 by opening an account with TD Canada Trust (TD). That account was opened, in EWE's name, on February 4, 2004. Kendrick and the appellants were signing officers for the account. All receivables coming to 828, and proceeds from the sale of 828's inventory, were deposited in the TD account.

[8] The respondent was advised of the TD account but was not advised that 828's business was operating under EWE or that the TD account belonged to that corporation. Over $1.2 million was deposited in the TD account by the end of May 2004. None of the funds went to 828 or the respondent.

[9] On March 8, 2004, the respondent made a demand for payment. The principal amount owing by 828 was $690,747.58. Between March 17 and May 7, $202,350.82 was paid to Ariza from EWE's TD account.

[10] 1100 was incorporated on April 1, 2004. Fuss and Kendrick's father were the directors of that corporation. 1100 took over the operation of 828's business, including its stock, receivables and employees. The respondent was not advised of 1100's involvement with 828's business.

[11] In June 2004, the respondent appointed Price Waterhouse Coopers to serve as the privately appointed receiver and manager of the business and undertakings of 828.

[12] In July 2004, the respondent petitioned 828 into bankruptcy. Its recovery was negligible. 828's remaining stock had little value and its electronic records had been destroyed. In September, the respondent sued Kendrick, Fuss, Thuna and the corporations they controlled alleging they conspired to prevent it from realizing the debt owing by 828. 1100 ceased operation in 2005.

2013 ABCA 235 (CanLII)

2013 ABCA 235 (CanLII)

THE TRIAL DECISION

[13] The trial judge did not find the appellants to be credible witnesses. He concluded Fuss was dishonest about certain things and Thuna attempted to minimize her knowledge and participation in the scheme.

[14] The trial judge found that 828's property and operations were transferred to EWE and 1100 and that the transfers were not for fair market value. He concluded that EWE's business, and the funds in the TD account, actually belonged to 828 and that EWE's role was merely a front under which 828's business was continued while Fuss and Kendrick set up 1100. Once 1100 was set up, it received 828's remaining property, employees and business activities.

[15] The trial judge concluded that the transfers from 828 to 1100, and the use of EWE's TD account, were an intentional and deliberate process designed to sequester 828's assets in 1100 and leave 828 with the liability to the respondent. Put another way, he concluded the plan was to leave the respondent with a right to advance its claim on an empty, worthless corporation. He held that 1100 had no legitimate business purpose and was created solely for the purpose of defeating the respondent's claim.

[16] The trial judge found that Kendrick was responsible for producing misleading or incorrect financial information for 828 and destroying that corporation's electronic records. He found this was fraudulent conduct. Although he did not find that the appellants were aware of Kendrick's fraud, the trial judge concluded they were aware of, endorsed and participated in the transfer of 828's business to 1100.

[17] The trial judge found that Fuss was a full participant in the effort to move 828's business and assets to a new corporate shelter. He said, while Fuss may not have known the details of how that plan was executed, he was aware of Kendrick's overall intentions and cooperated to that end. The trial judge accepted that Thuna was generally directed by Fuss but found she was more involved in the plan than she claimed to be.

[18] The trial judge considered whether each of the elements of the unlawful conduct conspiracy tort had been proven. He concluded Kendrick and the appellants acted by agreement after making several findings. He found that Fuss assisted in the formation of 1100 and its receipt of 828's business and assets and that, during that process, he knew 1100 did not receive those things for fair market value. He found that Kendrick and Fuss agreed to: prevent the respondent from recovering 828's receivables by depositing them in EWE's TD account, and later in 1100; continue the business of 828 under the EWE "flag of convenience"; transfer 828's business and assets to 1100, with no apparent intention of having 1100 repay 828's debts; and repay some of the debt to Ariza in preference to making any payments to the respondent. He found that Thuna was well aware that 828 was in trouble and that its business was taken over by EWE and then transferred to 1100. He found she participated in the agreement by willingly carrying out Fuss' instructions, knowing their effect. The trial judge found the common scheme was to divert 828's business activities to EWE and then 1100, regardless of whether this would benefit 828.

[19] In considering whether the conduct of Kendrick and the appellants was unlawful, the trial judge found that the intention of those directing minds was to defeat the respondent's claim and sink 828 with its debt. He said that was unlawful conduct.

[20] The trial judge also considered a director's duties under s. 122(1) of the Business Corporations Act, RSA 2000, c B-9. He concluded that Kendrick's fraud, and efforts to defeat the respondent's legitimate interest, breached the statutory duty of care he owed to the respondent (as a creditor of 828) and the statutory fiduciary duty he owed to 828. He also concluded that Thuna and Fuss breached the statutory fiduciary duties they owed to 828 and 1100, respectively. The trial judge found the appellants adopted a strategy that doomed 828 to bankruptcy. He said Thuna had a director's duty to take steps to meet 828's obligation to the respondent and that the transfer of 828's business and assets to 1100 was not only against 828's interests, it sabotaged any possibility that 828 would ever meet its obligation. He said Fuss would have breached the director's duty he owed to 1100 if he authorized it to take 828's business and assets where the transfer had no legitimate business purpose and was, in effect, a knowing appropriation of another's trust property. The trial judge held that the appellants' unlawful conduct flowed from their failure to discharge their obligations to 828, and the creation of 1100.

[21] The trial judge said the incorporation of 1100, and the transfer of 828's business and assets to that corporation, satisfied him that the conduct of Kendrick and the appellants was directed towards the respondent. He said it was evident that a very significant purpose of the actions of Kendrick and Fuss was to prevent the respondent from realizing on its security. He made no specific finding against Thuna in his discussion of this element of the tort.

[22] The trial judge concluded that Kendrick and the appellants knew that, in the circumstances, injury to the respondent was likely to result. He said, through the operation of EWE and 1100, which stripped 828 of its assets, Kendrick and the appellants would have known that the respondent would sustain very substantial loss. He said that loss was not only likely and foreseeable but a necessary consequence of the conspirators' objective.

[23] The trial judge found that, as a result of the conduct of Kendrick and the appellants, the respondent suffered injury because it was unable to recover the funds it loaned 828.

2013 ABCA 235 (CanLII)

[24] The trial judge found that the respondent had established prima facie proof that, in early February 2004, there were sufficient assets available to pay the respondent's claim in full. He awarded the respondent $1,761,901.14, representing the principal amount owing on the operating line of credit and amounts owing pursuant to the GSA, including insurance costs, interest, receiver costs and legal fees.

2013 ABCA 235 (CanLII)

STANDARDS OF REVIEW

[25] The standard of review on questions of law is correctness. The application of a correct legal principle to the facts is a question of mixed fact and law subject to the palpable and overriding error standard. Fact findings and inferences drawn from the facts are also reviewed on the palpable and overriding error standard: Housen v Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 SCR 235 at paras 8, 25 and 37.

ANALYSIS

[26] It is common ground that the trial judge stated the correct test for unlawful conduct conspiracy.

Agreement

[27] The defendants must act in combination, that is, in concert, by agreement or with a common design: Agribrands at para 26. They must know the facts of the alleged agreement and intend to be a party to the combining: Maguire v Calgary (City) (1983), 146 DLR (3d) 350, 43 AR 268 at para 12 (CA); Mraiche Investment Corp v McLennan Ross LLP, 2012 ABCA 95, 524 AR 151 at para 43. Often, direct evidence of the agreement is not available and resort must be had to circumstantial evidence: Capital Estate Planning Corp v Lynch, 2011 ABCA 224, 510 AR 244 at para 81.

[28] The appellants argue that, in order for them to act in combination, they would have to have agreed to participate in Kendrick's fraud. As the trial judge did not find that they were aware of, or involved in, Kendrick's fraud, he erred in concluding they acted in combination with Kendrick. This argument misconceives the trial judge's findings. The agreement the trial judge found was not based on Kendrick's fraud. It was based on the common design to divert 828's business and assets firstly to EWE and then to 1100 and, thereby, deprive the respondent of the ability to recover 828's debt. The trial judge found that the effect of this agreement was that Fuss and Kendrick also agreed to repay some of the debt to Ariza in preference to making any payments to the respondent. He found that Thuna knew that 828 was in trouble and that its business was taken over by EWE and then transferred to 1100. He found that she participated in the common design by willingly carrying out Fuss's instructions, knowing their effect. These fact findings and inferences are supported by the evidence and owed deference. They establish the first element of the tort of unlawful conduct conspiracy.

Unlawful conduct

[29] The conspirators' conduct must be unlawful. Unlawful conduct encompasses acts that are wrong in law. Unlawful conduct need not be actionable. Highly competitive commercial activity does not qualify as unlawful conduct provided it is not otherwise unlawful: Agribrands at paras 26 and 38.

[30] The appellants say the trial judge erred in finding that Thuna breached the statutory fiduciary duty she owed to 828. They say he erred in finding that, as a director of 828, Thuna was obliged to ensure that 828 repaid its debt to the respondent. They also assert that the trial judge erred in finding that Fuss breached the statutory fiduciary duty he owed to 1100.

[31] It is unnecessary for us to analyze the trial judge's conclusions on directors' duties because he attributed other conduct to the appellants which was clearly unlawful. The appellants, along with Kendrick, were the directing minds of corporations involved in a series of transactions. Thuna was a director of 828, which transferred its business and assets to EWE and 1100. The transfers were facilitated by the opening of the TD account in the name of EWE. Thuna was a director of EWE and the appellants were signing authorities on the TD account. The business and assets of 828 were ultimately transferred to 1100, in which Fuss was a director. The transfer of 828's property was not for fair market value. Therefore, the appellants committed unlawful conduct by converting the property of 828: Boma Manufacturing Ltd v Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, [1996] 3 SCR 727 at para 31.

[32] Moreover, substantial funds were paid from the TD account to Ariza for invoices that pre-dated the opening of the TD account. The appellants were directors of Ariza. The trial judge found that an effect of their actions was that some of 828's debt to Ariza was paid in preference to making payments to the respondent. This is a clear finding of a preference which also establishes unlawful conduct on the part of the appellants. The finding is consistent with long-standing principles relating to preferences in the context of bankruptcy and insolvency law and is factually supported on the record: Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, RSC 1985, c B-3, s 95; GS & D Construction Ltd (Trustee of) v Benallack, [1976] 2 SCR 168.

Directed towards the respondent

[33] The conspirators' conduct must be directed towards the plaintiff: Agribrands at para 26. The appellants say, if their conduct was unlawful, the trial judge erred in finding that it was directed at the respondent. They argue they owed their statutory fiduciary duties to the companies in which they were directors, not to the respondent. Therefore, breaches of those duties could not be directed at the respondent. The trial judge found as a fact that a very significant purpose of the actions of Kendrick and Fuss was to prevent the respondent from realizing on its security. Although he made no specific finding against Thuna in his discussion of this element of the tort, it is clear from his decision as a whole that the trial judge found that Thuna willingly participated in the common scheme knowing its effect. The trial judge also found that it was the intention of Kendrick and the appellants to defeat the respondent's claim and sink 828 with its debt. He found that the use of EWE's TD account, and the transfer of 828's business and assets to 1100, was a deliberate scheme to defeat the respondent's debt interest. These fact findings and inferences are supported on the record and are entitled to deference. They establish that the appellants' conduct was directed at the respondent.

2013 ABCA 235 (CanLII)

2013 ABCA 235 (CanLII)

Knowledge

[34] The conspirators should know that, in the circumstances, injury to the plaintiff is likely to result: Agribrands at para 26. This element requires a finding of constructive intent: Golden Capital Securities Ltd v Holmes, 2004 BCCA 565, 205 BCAC 54 at para 62. The trial judge concluded that Kendrick and the appellants knew that, through the operation of EWE and 1100, which stripped 828 of its assets, the respondent would sustain a very substantial loss. This conclusion is unassailable on the facts found by the trial judge.

Injury

[35] The conspirators' conduct must cause injury to the plaintiff: Agribrands at para 26. The appellants argue the trial judge failed to consider whether the respondent's loss was caused by the conspiracy. They say the loss was caused by Kendrick's fraud and the respondent's decision to overextend its loan to 828, rather than any unlawful conduct on their part. The trial judge found that the respondent suffered substantial injuries from the actions of Kendrick and the appellants. He found that, in early February 2004, there were sufficient assets available to 828 to allow it to pay the respondent in full. The trial judge further found that Kendrick and the appellants participated in a scheme to transfer those assets and 828's business to EWE and 1100, with no apparent intention of repaying 828's debt. The respondent was not advised that the TD account was opened in the name of EWE nor that 828's business and assets were transferred to EWE and 1100. Accordingly, but for the conduct of the conspirators, the respondent would have been paid in full. In these circumstances, it cannot seriously be argued that the loss was caused by Kendrick's failure to provide accurate accounting information or the respondent's decision to overextend the loan. The trial judge's fact findings are supported on the record and clearly establish that the respondent's injury was caused by the conspirators' conduct.

Damages

[36] The appellants argue the trial judge erred in calculating damages based on the terms of the GSA, a contract to which they were not parties. They assert that the respondent failed to adduce evidence to establish that 828 had sufficient assets to pay the debt to the respondent. They argue that 828 was insolvent and would have been placed into receivership in any event. Therefore, if the respondent suffered a loss, it was not attributable to their conduct. They also assert that the trial judge's damages award cannot be sustained given the paucity of evidence on the record. They say the respondent should have taken steps to obtain evidence from 828, EWE and 1100 to establish the state of 828's business and the amount that would have been available to satisfy the respondent's claim had 828's business and assets not been transferred to EWE and 1100.

[37] The difficulty facing the respondent and the trial judge was that some of 828's documents had been destroyed and others were inaccurate. The trial judge noted that 828's documents showed inventory and accounts receivable of between $1.5 million and $2 million. This finding is supported by documentation showing that, in November 2003, 828 reported that it had accounts receivable and inventory of approximately $2 million. The trial judge also noted that over $1.2 million passed through the TD account. This is supported by the TD account records. The trial judge concluded the respondent had established prima facie proof that there were sufficient assets available to pay the respondent's claim in full in early February 2004 had 828 been permitted to do so. It is no answer to the respondent's damages claim to argue that 828 was insolvent at that time and would have been placed into receivership in any event. The respondent was a secured creditor with priority over the inventory and receivables which were enough to satisfy its claim in full. It is noteworthy that the appellants' own company, HBC, also held a GSA over the assets of 828 (however subordinate to the respondent's) which provided for the recovery of the very sort of legal and other enforcement costs that were awarded by the trial judge to the respondent under the terms of its GSA.

[38] Although it would have been preferable for the trial judge to have detailed evidence of the state of the business and assets of 828, EWE and 1100, the failure to lead that evidence is largely attributable to a lack of records from entities controlled by the appellants. In these circumstances, the trial judge was entitled to assess damages on the basis of the available evidence. On that evidence, he concluded the respondent was entitled to $690,747.58, the principal amount owing by 828. Based on the liability imposed by the security documents, he calculated the total claimed, with unpaid interest, insurance premiums, costs paid to the receiver and legal fees, at $1,761,901.14 and allowed judgment accordingly. In essence, he found that, it was reasonably foreseeable that the respondent would not recover the funds it loaned 828 if 828 was stripped of its business and assets. The costs and fees incurred in placing 828 into bankruptcy and pursuing the respondent's claim under the GSA were foreseeable and directly attributable to the conspirators' tortious conduct. We find no reviewable error in the trial judge's calculation of damages.

RESULT

[39] The appeal is dismissed.

Appeal heard on June 7, 2013

Memorandum filed at Edmonton, Alberta
this 25th day of June, 2013

2013 ABCA 235 (CanLII)

Costigan J.A.

Slatter J.A.

Authorized to sign for: McDonald J.A.

2013 ABCA 235 (CanLII)

Appearances:

G.R. McKenzie, Q.C. / N.J. Forster / P. Ko
for the Respondent

M.A. Davis / J. Laxer / J.T. Curry
for the Appellants

2013 ABCA 235 (CanLII)

In the Court of Appeal of Alberta

Citation: Addison & Leyen Ltd v Fraser Milner Casgrain LLP, 2014 ABCA 230

Date: 20140710
Docket: 1301-0291-AC
Registry: Calgary

2014 ABCA 230 (CanLII)

Between:

Addison & Leyen Ltd., John Joseph Dietrich, Jeanette Marie Dietrich, Wilfrid Daniel Roach and Helen Roach

Appellants (Plaintiffs)

- and -

Fraser Milner Casgrain LLP and Wallace Y. Shaw

Respondents (Defendants)

The Court:

The Honourable Madam Justice Marina Paperny
The Honourable Madam Justice Patricia Rowbotham
The Honourable Mr. Justice Russell Brown

Memorandum of Judgment

Appeal from the Judgment by
The Honourable Mr. Justice J.T. McCarthy
Dated the 19th day of August, 2013
Filed on the 3rd day of October, 2014
(2013 ABQB 473, Docket: 1101 13007)

Memorandum of Judgment

The Court:

I. Introduction

[1] The narrow issue on appeal is whether the appellants' claim is one of contribution and indemnity, rather than a claim in negligence. If the former, the limitation period has not expired. If the latter, the claim is out of time.

[2] In 1989, the respondents prepared a legal opinion advising that the appellants, as shareholders and directors, would not incur income tax liability as a result of the sale of shares in a company. Twelve years later, the appellants were reassessed for the company's outstanding income tax liability for the 1989 tax year. The appellants ultimately incurred approximately $490,000 in tax liability and $1.25 million in additional expenses. The appellants commenced this action in September 2011.

[3] For the purposes of this appeal only, the respondents acknowledge that the opinion was negligently prepared and that the appellants relied upon the opinion. However, the ultimate limitation period for an action in negligence expired in 1999, before the appellants were even aware that they had incurred any tax liability from the 1989 sale. The appellants now seek compensation from the respondents pursuant to a claim of implied indemnity.

[4] On summary application, the trial judge concluded that the action could not be characterized as a claim for contribution and indemnity. It was a claim in negligence and was time-barred. For the reasons which follow, the appeal is dismissed.

II. Background

[5] The appellant Addison & Leyen Ltd. ("Addison") is an Alberta corporation. The other individual appellants are former directors and/or shareholders of Addison. Until September 1989, the appellants were all owners and/or directors of a Saskatchewan company called York Beverages (1968) Ltd. ("York"). In 1988, York sold the assets of its bottling business for about $10 million cash and $3 million in assumed indebtedness. After dividends were distributed and other payments made, York's only remaining asset was $2.8 million cash, which was retained to pay York's estimated income tax liability for the 1989 taxation year ending September 30, 1989.

[6] In September 1989, the appellants sold their shares in York for $1,115,000.00 and resigned positions on the Board of Directors. Unbeknownst to the appellants, the purchaser wanted to acquire these shares because it intended to use York's available cash to buy seismic data, which it believed would enable it to claim a tax deduction of approximately $6.5 million, sufficient to offset the company's remaining income tax liability for the 1989 tax year.

2014 ABCA 230 (CanLII)

[7] As a condition of closing the share purchase transaction, the purchaser was required to provide a legal opinion to the appellants concerning their potential tax liability as former directors and/or shareholders of York. The purchaser retained the law firm Fenerty, Robertson, Fraser & Hatch, a predecessor to the respondent Fraser Milner Casgrain LLP, and Mr. Wallace Shaw to provide this legal opinion. The retainer agreement did not provide any express indemnity. The tax opinion stated:

> It is reasonable to conclude, having regard to the Sellers Warranties and the Transactions that the Corporation will be able to pay its liabilities, if any, for income tax under the Income Tax Act (Canada) and any provincial income tax statute in respect of the taxation year ending immediately prior to the Closing Date [that is, the 1989 Tax Year].
>
> Neither the Sellers nor the Old Directors [that is, all of the Plaintiffs] will be liable for any income, sales or other tax, withholdings, remittances, interest, penalties or fines under the Income Tax Act (Canada), any provincial taxing statute (whether of an income, sales or other nature), […] arising out of the Transactions or (except as a direct result of any gains of the Sellers arising on the sale of their shares) arising in respect of the Corporation and which are attributable to any act or omission occurring or omitted after the Financial Statement Date [that is, 11:00 pm on September 26, 1989] other than any liability which may arise by reason of a breach of a Seller Warranty.

[8] The individual appellants completed the share purchase transaction as planned.

[9] Unknown to the appellants, in December 1992, the Minister of National Revenue reassessed York for the 1989 tax year in the amount of $3,247,074, including penalties and interest, based on the purchaser's over-valuation of the seismic data it had acquired. Contrary to the purchaser's estimate, the Minister found that the seismic data was worth only $1,696,500 and, as a result, did not offset York's remaining tax liability during that period.

[10] By 1998, the purchaser remained unable to pay the reassessed taxes on behalf of York, and the Minister began to look for others to satisfy this liability. Finally, in February 2001, the Minister issued notices of assessment to the appellants and others regarding York's outstanding tax liability, pursuant to section 160 of the Income Tax Act, RSC 1985, c 1 (5th Supp). By this time, with the accrual of interest and penalties, York's tax liability had increased to $6.7 million.

[11] The Minister took the position that the appellants were statutorily liable for York's income tax debt, up to the amount that each of the appellants had received from York. The appellants opposed the Minister's assessments and commenced litigation. In February 2003, in light of the Minister's assessments and the appellants' objections, the appellants and the respondents agreed to suspend the running of any applicable unexpired limitation period in the event of a further claim regarding the tax opinion.

[12] In October 2010, the appellants and the Minister entered into a settlement agreement whereby the Minister agreed to increase the valuation of the seismic data to about $5.15 million. York was left with a reduced tax liability of $492,676, which was paid by the appellant Addison.

2014 ABCA 230 (CanLII)

The costs and legal expenses incurred during the litigation and negotiation with the Minister amounted to approximately $1.25 million.

[13] In September 2011, the appellants commenced this action against the respondents seeking $1.75 million for recovery of the amount of the settlement and the costs they had incurred. The material facts alleged by the appellants support a claim in negligence against the respondents in their preparation of the tax opinion. However, by this time, even with the benefit of the 2003 agreement to suspend any unexpired limitation period, the 10-year ultimate limitations period had expired. As a result, the appellants frame their action based on a common law implied contract of indemnity.

[14] Under their theory of liability, the appellants argue that the claim is one for indemnity and contribution within the meaning of section 3(3)(b) of the Limitations Act, RSA 2000, c L-12. As a result, the 10-year ultimate limitation period in section 3(1)(b) is extended because time did not begin to run until the appellants incurred liability through their settlement agreement with the Minister in October 2010, or alternatively, when they learned of the Minister's assessments in February 2001.

[15] The respondents argue that the appellants have improperly characterized their claim as a claim for indemnity when their cause of action is only in negligence. For the purposes of the Limitations Act, the respondents submit that the appellants' cause of action arose when the respondents' alleged act or omission occurred, in providing the tax opinion in September 1989. The 10-year limitation period having long expired on this allegedly negligent act, the appellants' action is statute-barred.

[16] The parties agreed to have the matter determined by summary application on a single question of law: Is the Plaintiffs' claim barred by the operation of the 10-year limitation period in section 3(1)(b) of the Limitations Act? The application proceeded on the basis of an Agreed Statement of Facts and with the admission that the appellants would not have incurred the tax liability or the additional expenses, but for their reliance on the respondents' negligent tax opinion.

III. Decision Below Addison & Leyen Ltd v Fraser Milner Casgrain LLP, 2013 ABQB 473

[17] The trial judge recognized that a claim for contribution and indemnity may be established under the common law in circumstances where one of the potential defendants owes a duty recognized by the common law to indemnify or contribute to other potential defendants. However, based on his reading of the jurisprudence, the trial judge found that a claim for implied indemnity at common law can exist only where the party against whom indemnification was sought could independently be found liable for the damages suffered by the third party. As the respondents could have never been found liable to the Minister for the tax liability or for the appellants' subsequent expenses, the respondents could have no common law obligation to contribute to or indemnify the appellants.

[18] Moreover, the trial judge noted that the respondents did not cause the appellants' liability to the Minister. For the purposes of an implied indemnity, the trial judge held that there must be some connection between the actions of the party from whom the indemnity is sought and the cause of the liability to the third party. While the appellants admittedly relied on the tax opinion in taking steps that led to the tax liability, the allegedly negligent opinion did not cause the liability pursued by the Minister. Therefore, while the appellants did suffer a significant loss, their action was one in negligence for damages and was time-barred by operation of the 10-year limitation period.

2014 ABCA 230 (CanLII)

2014 ABCA 230 (CanLII)

IV. Grounds of Appeal

[19] The appellants submit that the trial judge erred in law by incorrectly concluding that the common law doctrine of implied indemnity required that (1) the party against whom indemnity is sought caused the liability of the party seeking the indemnity; and (2) the party against whom indemnity is sought must be independently liable for the amounts sought by the complainant in the first instance.

V. Standard of Review

[20] The grounds of appeal raise both questions of law and fact relating to the recognition of a common law right of implied indemnity in favour of the appellants.

[21] Extricable questions of law are reviewed on a standard of correctness, meaning the appellate court can replace the trial judge's view with its own: Housen v Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 SCR 235 at para 8. In applying a legal test or standard to a set of facts, the applicable standard of review is palpable and overriding error: Housen at para 36. Finding palpable and overriding error is equivalent to finding that factual findings or inferences are "clearly wrong", "unreasonable", or "unsupported by the evidence": HL v Canada (A-G), 2005 SCC 25, [2005] 1 SCR 401, 333 NR 1 at paras 55-56.

VI. Analysis

[22] The leading authority on the common law of contribution and indemnity is Birmingham and District Land Co v London and Northwestern Railway Co (1886), 34 Ch D 261 (CA). In that early decision, the English Court of Appeal broadly defined the right to indemnity under the common law as a direct right to reimbursement which may arise: (1) by express contract, if provided in the terms of a contract between the parties; (2) by implied contract, if the parties intended such indemnity; or (3) by implication, if the circumstances demand a legal or equitable duty to indemnify, by which the law recognizes an assumed promise by a person to do what, under the circumstances, he ought to do (at 274). The court identified certain circumstances where the law may imply a contract to indemnify, such as relationships of principal and agent and of co- trustees.

[23] However, a right to indemnity, recognized at law or in equity, must be distinguished from the common law right to "damages" for breach of contract or tort. Bowen L.J. explained (at 274-275):

> But it is quite clear to my mind that a right to damages, which is all that the Defendants have here if they are entitled to anything, is not a right to indemnity as > such. It is the converse of such a right. A right to indemnity as such is given by the original bargain between the parties. The right to damages is given in consequence of the breach of the original contract between the parties. It is an incident which the law attaches to the breach of a contract, and is not a provision of the contract itself.

[24] In concurring reasons, Fry L.J. further noted (at 276):

> In the same manner with regard to tort, the right to damages for tort does not arise from any implied contract that if I do a wrong I will indemnify the person wronged for the wrong I have done. It is the common law right which everybody has to damages for a wrong which has been done to him.

[25] In Eastern Shipping Company Limited v Quah Beng Kee, [1924] AC 177 (PC), the Privy Council adopted these principles and held that a common law indemnity may be implied "where the relation between the parties is such that either in law or in equity, [express or implied], there is an obligation on one party to indemnify the other" (at 182).

[26] The common law right of indemnity has long been recognized in Alberta and across Canada (see: R v Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd, 2011 SCC 42, [2011] 3 SCR 45; Trans-Canada Forest Products Ltd v Heaps, Waterous Ltd, [1954] SCR 240, [1954] 2 DLR 545; McFee v Joss (1925), 56 OLR 578, [1925] 2 DLR 1059 (Ont CA); Ryan v Dew Enterprises Ltd, 2014 NLCA 11, 28 CLR (4^{th}) 1; Dilcon Constructors Ltd v ANC Developments Inc (1994), 155 AR 314, 117 DLR (4th) 156 (CA); Fidelity Trust Company v 98956 Investments Ltd, 1988 ABCA 267, 89 AR 151; Dean v Kociniak, 2001 ABQB 412, 289 AR 201; Doucette v Hasegawa and Associates Ltd, 2009 ABQB 502, 486 AR 124).

[27] Both parties highlight McFee v Joss, a decision of the Court of Appeal for Ontario, as an early statement of the law in Canada (at para 24):

> …[A]n implied contract of indemnity arises in favour of a person who, without fault on his part, is exposed to liability and compelled to pay damages on account of the negligence or tortious act of another, provided the parties were not joint tort-feasors in such a sense as to prevent recover; that is where the act is not clearly illegal itself. This right of indemnity is based upon the principle that everyone is responsible for his own negligence, and if another is by a judgment of a Court, compelled to pay damages which ought to have been paid by the wrongdoer, such damages may be recovered from the wrongdoer. I am also of the opinion that such right of indemnity exists independently of the statute, and whether or not contractual relations exist between the parties, and whether or not the negligent person owed the other a special or particular duty not to be negligent.

[28] More recently, in Ryan v Dew Enterprises Ltd, the Newfoundland Court of Appeal summarized the applicable legal principles in implying a right of indemnity at common law (at para 54):

2014 ABCA 230 (CanLII)

> A claim for indemnity is a claim that another party save the indemnity-claimant harmless against loss or damage which the indemnity-claimant has incurred or suffered or will incur or suffer at the hands of another, and to reimburse the claimant in respect of such loss or damage. The claim may arise from an express contract, by implication of law or from statute. An example of a claim to indemnity arising from implication of law is where an act is done at the request of another, the act turns out to be injurious to a third party and in consequence of doing the act the doer incurs liability to the third party (Birmingham and District Land Co. v. London and North Western Railway Co. (1886), 34 Ch. D. 261 (C.A.)). Other diverse examples include: (i) where an agent incurs loss while lawfully carrying out the mandate of his or her principal; (ii) where a principal suffers loss by incurring liability to a third party as a result of the wrongful actions of his or her agent or employee; (iii) where a trustee causes a co-trustee to incur costs through the trustee's negligent management of the trust; and (iv) where an obligation arises in equity from the relationship between the parties, such as between trustee and beneficiary.

2014 ABCA 230 (CanLII)

[29] While these cases provide diverse factual examples giving rise to a right of implied indemnity, courts have cautioned against the unprincipled expansion of these claims. In R v Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd, the Supreme Court of Canada stated (at para 147):

> Equitable indemnity is a narrow doctrine, confined to situations of an express or implied understanding that a principal will indemnify its agent for acting on the directions given. As stated in Parmley v. Parmley, [1945] S.C.R. 635, claims of equitable indemnity "proceed upon the notion of a request which one person makes under circumstances from which the law implies that both parties understand that the person who acts upon the request is to be indemnified if he does so" (p. 648, quoting Bowen L.J. in Birmingham and District Land Co. v. London and North Western Railway Co. (1886), 34 Ch. D. 261, at p. 275.)

[30] A narrow approach was also encouraged in Ryan v Dew Enterprises Ltd, where the court noted (at para 54):

> While the circumstances where an obligation to indemnify arises by implication of law are diverse, they are not open-ended. The obligation cannot be imposed simply by the exercise of ad hoc discretion. As noted by Goodridge J. in Collavino, at paragraphs 18-21, just because a party may have a claim for damages over against a third party does not entitle him or her to a claim in indemnity or contribution. This was the traditional English position as enunciated in Birmingham and District Land Co. v. London and North Western Railway Co, supra., at pages 272 and 274-275, which was cited and relied on by Goodridge J. in Collavino at paragraphs 15-16 and Lundrigan at paragraphs 18-19.

[31] The trial judge reviewed these cases and concluded that the appellants' claim did not fall within the circumstances necessary to imply a promise to indemnify, principally because the party against whom the indemnification was sought, (the respondents), could not have been responsible in law to the Minister for the appellant's tax liability. Rather, given that the respondents' alleged negligence had only caused damage to the appellants, and not the Minister, the appropriate cause of action was in negligence alone, and was time-barred.

[32] The appellants submit that the case law supports the recognition of a common law right of indemnity in any case where a party, without fault of its own, is exposed to liability or loss for the wrongful act of another. They propose a three-part test:

a) An act done by B at the request of A;
b) Without any fault of A, A is exposed to liability to a third party, C; and
c) The liability of A to C arises in connection with the negligence of B.

[33] According to the appellants, their claim satisfied this test: (a) there was a request made by Addison to the respondents to prepare the tax opinion; (b) Addison, without any fault of its own, was exposed to liability to the Minister; and (c) the liability of Addison to the Minister arose in connection with its reliance on the negligent opinion.

[34] There are several problems with the appellants' approach. First, the common law of implied indemnity is rooted in the principles of restitution and unjust enrichment. An indemnity permits the reimbursement of damages paid by an innocent party to a third party on behalf of the true wrongdoer, where that wrongdoer should otherwise have been liable to pay. A right to reimbursement through an implied indemnity does not arise in every situation in which A becomes liable to C in connection with the negligence of B. That connection must be supported by a theory of legal or equitable liability between the third party and the party against whom the indemnity is sought (Ryan v Dew Enterprises Ltd at para 54).

[35] A simple statement of this requirement is provided by Professor Charles Mitchell in his text, The Law of Contribution and Reimbursement (New York: Oxford University Press, 2003) at 5: "Claims for contribution and reimbursement lie between two parties who both initially owe legal liabilities to a third party" (emphasis added). Put another way, the circumstances must be such that the putative party against whom the indemnity was sought could have been liable to the third party for all or part of the claim against the party seeking the indemnity.

[36] The point is best illustrated by the circumstances which led to recognition of an implied indemnity in McFee. The defendant leased the plaintiff's car and negligently crashed into another vehicle owned and driven by a third party. By operation of the relevant statute, the plaintiff owner was liable to pay damages to the third party. The court applied Eastern Shipping and held that the plaintiff was entitled to claim an indemnity from the defendant for the damages paid to the injured third party.

[37] If, by contrast, the defendant in McFee had borrowed the plaintiff's car and negligently injured the plaintiff in an accident, the plaintiff could not generally rely on a common law right of implied indemnity against the defendant for reimbursement of his out-of-pocket expenses. Although those expenses may have been incurred by the plaintiff as a liability to a third party (for example, payment to a health care provider) and were as a result of the defendant's negligence, without more, the defendant is not initially liable to the third party for that cost. Rather, the basis for the plaintiff's claim for compensation is a claim in negligence for damages.

[38] The circumstances of the appellants' claim are analogous to the latter example. The amounts paid by the appellants to the Minister, and their associated expenses, were never amounts paid by the appellants on behalf of the respondents as the negligent party. Under no circumstances could the respondents have been liable to the Minister for any part of York's tax liability. Therefore, there is no basis on which to require restitution of the appellants' loss through an implied indemnity.

2014 ABCA 230 (CanLII)

[39] Secondly, the appellants' approach does not distinguish between the availability of a claim for implied indemnity and a claim for damages in tort or contract. A common law right to damages for a wrong is not an implied contract that the defendant will indemnify the plaintiff in connection with the wrongdoing (Birmingham at 276; Ryan v Dew Enterprises Ltd at para 54). The trial judge recognized this issue as a question of causation and the relationships among the parties.

[40] An implied indemnity may arise where the wrongdoer's negligence causes damage to a third party for which the party seeking the indemnity is held liable. However, there must be a connection between the wrongdoer, the third party, and the damage.

[41] For example, in Edmonton (City) v Lovat Tunnel Equipment Inc, 2000 ABQB 882, 279 AR 1, the court concluded that a right of indemnity could have been implied had the party who was not at fault (the seller of defective equipment) been held liable for damage suffered by the City of Edmonton as a result of using the defective equipment manufactured by the negligent party (at para 385). By contrast, where a plaintiff is liable for damages or expenses to a third party, and that liability is, at law, independent of the wrongdoer and his negligent act, no implied indemnity can follow. The plaintiff's common law right is only in damages.

[42] In this case, the appellants have admittedly suffered losses as a result of relying on the respondents' tax opinion. The respondents' negligent act, however, had no impact on the Minister as the third party to which the tax liability was owed. That liability flowed from the Minister's assessment of the appellants for York's outstanding tax liability and the appellants' obligations under the Income Tax Act.

[43] Finally, the policy implications of such an extension of the common law are significant. Anyone who gives advice could be considered to provide an implied indemnity to their clients, covering any loss incurred in relying on that advice. Under the Limitations Act, those professionals would be subject to indeterminate litigation under a never-ending limitations period. It is, of course, open to the parties to negotiate for and include a specific promise of indemnity in a retainer agreement. The agreement at issue in this case did not include a specific indemnity clause.

[44] We acknowledge the unfortunate position in which the appellants find themselves in this case. The Minister was not precluded from assessing the appellants years after the transaction; yet the appellants have no claim against the respondents due to the expiration of the ultimate limitation period. However, in our view, for the reasons we have expressed, the implied right to indemnity does not arise in this case.

2014 ABCA 230 (CanLII)

VII. Conclusion

[45] The trial judge identified the appropriate concerns and correctly applied the law in finding that the appellants were not entitled to claim a right of implied indemnity against the respondents. Their claim is solely in negligence and the limitation period has expired. The appeal is dismissed.

Appeal heard on June 11, 2014

Memorandum filed at Calgary, Alberta
this 10th day of July, 2014

_____
Authorized to sign for: Paperny J.A.

_____
Rowbotham J.A.

_____
Authorized to sign for: Brown J.A.

2014 ABCA 230 (CanLII)

Appearances:

D. J. McDonald Q.C.
A.F. Sunter
for the Appellants

J.P. Peacock Q.C.
M.L. Vernon
for the Respondents

2014 ABCA 230 (CanLII)

IN THE MATTER OF the Bankruptcy of Peoples Department Stores Inc./Magasins à rayons Peoples inc.

Caron Bélanger Ernst & Young Inc., in its capacity as Trustee to the bankruptcy of Peoples Department Stores Inc./Magasins à rayons Peoples inc. Appellant

v.

Lionel Wise, Ralph Wise and Harold Wise Respondents

and

Chubb Insurance Company of Canada Respondent

INDEXED AS: PEOPLES DEPARTMENT STORES INC. (TRUSTEE OF) v. WISE

Neutral citation: 2004 SCC 68.

File No.: 29682.

2004: May 11; 2004: October 29.

Present: Iacobucci,* Major, Bastarache, Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps and Fish JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR QUEBEC

Corporations — Directors and officers — Fiduciary duty and duty of care — Directors of bankrupt corporation being sued by trustee — Trustee claiming that directors breached fiduciary duty and duty of care — Whether directors owe fiduciary duty or duty of care to corporation's creditors — Canada Business Corporations Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-44, s. 122(1).

Bankruptcy and insolvability — Reviewable transactions — Transfer of assets between wholly-owned subsidiary and parent corporation — Wholly-owned subsidiary and parent corporation declaring bankruptcy — Parent corporation's directors sued by trustee of wholly-owned subsidiary — Trustee claiming that certain transactions were reviewable — Whether consideration for impugned

* Iacobucci J. took no part in the judgment.

DANS L'AFFAIRE DE la faillite de Peoples Department Stores Inc./Magasins à rayons Peoples inc.

Caron Bélanger Ernst & Young Inc., en sa qualité de syndic de la faillite de Peoples Department Stores Inc./Magasins à rayons Peoples inc. Appelante

c.

Lionel Wise, Ralph Wise et Harold Wise Intimés

et

Chubb du Canada, Compagnie d'assurance Intimée

RÉPERTORIÉ : MAGASINS À RAYONS PEOPLES INC. (SYNDIC DE) c. WISE

Référence neutre : 2004 CSC 68.

N° du greffe : 29682.

2004 : 11 mai; 2004 : 29 octobre.

Présents : Les juges Iacobucci*, Major, Bastarache, Binnie, LeBel, Deschamps et Fish.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DU QUÉBEC

Sociétés — Administrateurs et dirigeants — Obligation de fiduciaire et obligation de diligence — Administrateurs d'une société faillie poursuivis par le syndic — Administrateurs accusés par le syndic de manquement à leur obligation de fiduciaire et à leur obligation de diligence — Les administrateurs ont-ils une obligation de fiduciaire et une obligation de diligence envers les créanciers de la société? — Loi canadienne sur les sociétés par actions, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-44, art. 122(1).

Faillite et insolvabilité — Transactions révisables — Transfert d'actifs entre la filiale à part entière et la société mère — Faillite de la filiale à part entière et de la société mère — Administrateurs de la société mère poursuivis par le syndic de la filiale à part entière — Allégation par le syndic que certaines transactions sont révisables — La contrepartie reçue dans les transactions transactions conspicuously less than fair market value — Whether directors "privy" to transactions — Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, s. 100.

* Le juge Iacobucci n'a pas pris part au jugement.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

Wise Stores Inc. ("Wise") acquired Peoples Department Stores Inc. ("Peoples") from Marks and Spencer Canada Inc. ("M & S"). L.W., R.W. and H.W. (the "Wise brothers") were majority shareholders, officers and directors of Wise, and the only directors of Peoples. Because of covenants imposed by M & S, Peoples could not be merged with Wise until the purchase price had been paid. Almost from the outset, the joint operation of Wise and Peoples did not function smoothly. Parallel bookkeeping, combined with shared warehousing arrangements, caused serious problems for both companies. As a result, their inventory records were increasingly incorrect. The situation, already unsustainable, was worsening. L.W. consulted the vice-president of administration and finance of both Wise and Peoples in an attempt to find a solution. On his recommendation, the Wise brothers agreed to implement a joint inventory procurement policy whereby the two firms would divide responsibility for purchasing. Peoples would make all purchases from North American suppliers and Wise would, in turn, make all purchases from overseas suppliers. Peoples would then transfer to Wise what it had purchased for Wise, charging Wise accordingly, and vice versa. The new policy was implemented on February 1, 1994. Before the end of the year, both Wise and Peoples declared bankruptcy. Peoples' trustee filed a petition against the Wise brothers. The trustee claimed that they had favoured the interests of Wise over Peoples to the detriment of Peoples' creditors, in breach of their duties as directors under s. 122(1) of the Canada Business Corporations Act ("CBCA"). In the alternative, the trustee claimed that the Wise brothers had in the year preceding the bankruptcy been privy to transactions in which Peoples' assets had been transferred to Wise for conspicuously less than fair market value within the meaning of s. 100 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act ("BIA"). The trial judge found the Wise brothers liable on both grounds. The Court of Appeal set aside the trial judge's decision.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed. The Wise brothers did not breach their duties under s. 122(1) of the CBCA, nor were the impugned transactions in violation of s. 100 of the BIA.

attaquées est-elle manifestement inférieure à la juste valeur du marché? — Les administrateurs étaient-ils des parties intéressées dans les transactions? — Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, L.R.C. 1985, ch. B-3, art. 100.

Wise Stores Inc. (« Wise ») a acquis de Marks & Spencer Canada Inc. (« M & S ») les Magasins à rayons Peoples Inc. (« Peoples »). L.W., R.W. et H.W. (les « frères Wise ») étaient actionnaires majoritaires, dirigeants et administrateurs de Wise, et les seuls administrateurs de Peoples. En raison des conditions imposées par M & S, Peoples ne pouvait fusionner avec Wise avant le paiement intégral du prix d'achat. Presque dès le début, l'exploitation en commun de Wise et de Peoples s'est avérée difficile. La tenue d'une comptabilité parallèle, conjuguée à l'entreposage en commun des marchandises, a causé de graves problèmes aux deux sociétés. En conséquence, les fiches de stocks des deux sociétés sont devenues de plus en plus inexactes. La situation, déjà intolérable, a empiré. L.W. a consulté le vice-président à l'administration et aux finances de Wise et Peoples pour tenter de trouver une solution. Sur sa recommandation, les frères Wise ont accepté de mettre en œuvre une politique d'approvisionnement commun en vertu de laquelle les deux entreprises se partageraient la responsabilité des achats. Peoples s'occuperait de tous les achats auprès de fournisseurs en Amérique du Nord et Wise, pour sa part, se chargerait de tous les achats faits outre-mer. Peoples transférerait ensuite à Wise les marchandises achetées pour Wise et lui en réclamerait le prix, et vice versa. La nouvelle politique est entrée en vigueur le 1er février 1994. Avant la fin de l'année, Wise et Peoples ont été déclarées en faillite. Le syndic de Peoples a présenté contre les frères Wise une requête dans laquelle il a prétendu que ces derniers avaient privilégié les intérêts de Wise plutôt que ceux de Peoples au détriment des créanciers de Peoples, en contravention des obligations que le par. 122(1) de la Loi canadienne sur les sociétés par actions (« LCSA ») leur imposait en tant qu'administrateurs. Le syndic a soutenu aussi que, au cours de l'année ayant précédé la faillite, les frères Wise étaient des parties intéressées aux transactions en vertu desquelles des biens de Peoples avaient été transférés à Wise pour une contrepartie manifestement inférieure à la juste valeur du marché au sens de l'art. 100 de la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité (« LFI »). En première instance, le juge a conclu que les frères Wise étaient responsables en regard des deux moyens invoqués. La Cour d'appel a infirmé cette décision.

Arrêt : Le pourvoi est rejeté. Les frères Wise n'ont pas manqué aux obligations que leur imposait le par. 122(1) de la LCSA, et les transactions attaquées n'étaient pas contraires à l'art. 100 de la LFI.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

The fiduciary duty under s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA requires directors and officers to act in good faith and honestly vis-à-vis the corporation. Here, the trial judge found that there was no fraud or dishonesty in the Wise brothers' attempts to solve the mounting inventory problems of Peoples and Wise. The Wise brothers considered the serious inventory management problem and implemented a joint inventory procurement policy they hoped would solve it. In the absence of evidence of a personal interest or improper purpose in the new policy, and in light of the evidence of a desire to make both Wise and Peoples "better" corporations, the directors did not breach their fiduciary duty under s. 122(1)(a). An honest and good faith attempt to redress a corporation's financial problems does not, if unsuccessful, qualify as such a breach. The fiduciary duty does not change when a corporation is in the nebulous "vicinity of insolvency". At all times, they owe their fiduciary obligations to the corporation, and the corporations' interests are not to be confused with the interests of the creditors or those of any other stakeholder. There is no need to read the interests of creditors into the fiduciary duty set out in s. 122(1)(a) in light of the availability under the CBCA both of the oppression remedy (s. 241(2)(c)) and of an action based on the duty of care (s. 122(1)(b)).

Directors and officers will not be held to be in breach of the duty of care under s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA if they act prudently and on a reasonably informed basis. The standard of care is an objective one. The decisions of directors and officers must be reasonable business decisions in light of all the circumstances, including the prevailing socio-economic conditions, about which they knew or ought to have known. While courts are ill-suited and should be reluctant to second-guess the application of business expertise to the considerations that are often involved in corporate decision-making, they are capable, on the facts of any case, of determining whether an appropriate degree of prudence and diligence was brought to bear in reaching what is claimed to be a reasonable business decision. In this case, in adopting the joint inventory procurement policy, the directors did not breach their duty of care in respect of Peoples' creditors. The implementation of the new policy was a reasonable business decision made with a view to rectifying a serious and urgent business problem in circumstances in which no solution may have been possible. The trial judge's conclusion that the new policy led inexorably to Peoples' failure and bankruptcy was factually L'obligation fiduciaire prévue à l'al. 122(1)a) de la LCSA impose aux administrateurs et aux dirigeants le devoir d'agir avec intégrité et de bonne foi aux mieux des intérêts de la société. En l'espèce, le juge de première instance a conclu qu'il n'y a eu ni fraude ni malhonnêteté de la part des frères Wise lorsqu'ils ont tenté de régler les problèmes d'approvisionnement de plus en plus graves de Peoples et de Wise. Les frères Wise ont examiné le grave problème de gestion des stocks et ont mis en application une politique d'approvisionnement commun qui, espéraient-ils, permettrait de le régler. En l'absence d'éléments de preuve de l'existence d'un intérêt personnel ou d'une fin illégitime de la nouvelle politique, et compte tenu de la preuve d'une volonté de faire de Wise et de Peoples de « meilleures » entreprises, les administrateurs n'ont pas manqué à leur obligation fiduciaire énoncée à l'al. 122(1)a). On ne peut conclure à un tel manquement en cas d'échec d'une tentative faite avec intégrité et de bonne foi pour redresser la situation financière d'une société. L'obligation fiduciaire reste la même lorsqu'une société se trouve dans la situation que décrit l'expression nébuleuse « au bord de l'insolvabilité ». Ils ont en tout temps leur obligation fiduciaire envers la société, et les intérêts de la société ne doivent pas se confondre avec ceux des actionnaires, avec ceux des créanciers ni avec ceux de toute autre partie intéressée. Il n'est pas nécessaire d'interpréter les intérêts des créanciers comme étant visés par l'obligation prévue à l'al. 122(1)a) compte tenu de la possibilité, en vertu de la LCSA, d'un recours en cas d'abus de droit (al. 241(2)c)), en plus de l'action fondée sur l'obligation de diligence (al. 122(1)b)).

On ne considérera pas que les administrateurs et les dirigeants ont manqué à l'obligation de diligence énoncée à l'al. 122(1)b) de la LCSA s'ils ont agi avec prudence et en s'appuyant sur les renseignements dont ils disposaient. La norme de diligence est une norme objective. Les décisions des administrateurs et des dirigeants doivent constituer des décisions d'affaires raisonnables compte tenu de toutes les circonstances, notamment les conditions socio-économiques existantes, qu'ils connaissaient ou auraient dû connaître. Si les tribunaux ne doivent pas substituer leur opinion à celle des administrateurs qui ont utilisé leur expertise commerciale pour évaluer les considérations qui entrent dans la prise de décisions des sociétés, ils sont toutefois en mesure d'établir, à partir des faits de chaque cas, si l'on a exercé le degré de prudence et de diligence nécessaire pour en arriver à ce qu'on prétend être une décision d'affaires raisonnable au moment où elle a été prise. En l'espèce, en adoptant la politique d'approvisionnement commun, les administrateurs n'ont pas contrevenu à leur obligation de diligence à l'égard des créanciers de Peoples. L'instauration de la nouvelle politique était une décision d'affaires raisonnable qui a été prise en vue de corriger un problème d'ordre commercial incorrect and constituted a palpable and overriding error. Many factors other than the new policy contributed more directly to Peoples' bankruptcy.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

Section 44(2) of the CBCA as it then read (the provision has since been repealed) cannot exempt directors and officers from potential liability under s. 122(1) for any financial assistance given by subsidiaries to the parent corporation. Nor can the Wise brothers successfully invoke good faith reliance on the opinion of the vice-president of administration and finance under s. 123(4)(b) of the CBCA. As a non-professional employee, the vice-president did not belong to any of the professional groups named in s. 123(4)(b). He was not an accountant, was not subject to the regulatory overview of any professional organization and did not carry independent insurance coverage for professional negligence.

The trustee's claim under s. 100 of the BIA must fail. The relevant transactions are those spanning the period from February to December 1994 when the new procurement policy was in effect. With regard to all the circumstances of this case, a disparity of slightly more than six percent between fair market value and the consideration received does not constitute a conspicuous difference.

While, in light of this conclusion, there is no need to consider whether the Wise brothers would have been "privy" to the transactions, the disagreement between the trial judge and the Court of Appeal on the interpretation of "privy" in s. 100(2) of the BIA warrants the following comments. Since the provision's remedial purpose is to reverse the effects of a transaction that stripped value from the estate of a bankrupt person, the word "privy" should be given a broad reading to include those who benefit directly or indirectly from, and have knowledge of, a transaction occurring for less than fair market value. This rationale is particularly apt when those who benefit are the controlling minds behind the transaction.

Cases Cited

Applied: 373409 Alberta Ltd. (Receiver of) v. Bank of Montreal, [2002] 4 S.C.R. 312, 2002 SCC 81; approved: Re Olympia & York Enterprises Ltd. and Hiram Walker Resources Ltd. (1986), 59 O.R. (2d) 254; Standard Trustco Ltd. (Trustee of) v. Standard Trust Co. (1995), 26 O.R. (3d) 1; referred to: Automatic Self-Cleansing Filter grave et urgent dans un cas où il n'existait peut-être aucune solution. En concluant que la nouvelle politique avait inexorablement entraîné le déclin et la faillite de Peoples, le juge de première instance a mal interprété les faits et a commis une erreur manifeste et dominante. De nombreux facteurs, outre la nouvelle politique, ont contribué plus directement à la faillite de Peoples.

Le paragraphe 44(2) de la LCSA qui s'appliquait à l'époque (abrogé depuis) ne permet pas de soustraire les administrateurs et les dirigeants à leur responsabilité éventuelle en vertu du par. 122(1) pour toute aide financière fournie par une filiale à sa société mère. Les frères Wise ne peuvent non plus faire valoir avec succès qu'ils s'appuyaient de bonne foi sur l'opinion du vice-président aux finances comme le prévoit l'al. 123(4)b) de la LCSA. Le vice-président était un employé non professionnel et n'était membre d'aucun des groupes de professionnels désignés à l'al. 123(4)b). Il n'était pas un comptable, ses activités n'étaient pas réglementées par une organisation professionnelle et il n'avait pas lui-même souscrit d'assurance-responsabilité professionnelle.

La réclamation du syndic fondée sur l'art. 100 de la LFI doit échouer. Les transactions en cause sont celles qui ont été effectuées au cours de la période de février à décembre 1994 pendant laquelle la nouvelle politique d'approvisionnement était appliquée. Compte tenu de toutes les circonstances de la présente espèce, un écart d'un peu plus de 6 pour 100 entre la juste valeur du marché et la contrepartie reçue ne constitue pas une différence manifeste.

Si, compte tenu de cette conclusion, il est inutile d'examiner si les frères Wise auraient eu un « intérêt » à la transaction, le désaccord entre le juge de première instance et la Cour d'appel sur l'interprétation des mots « ayant intérêt » au par. 100(2) de la LFI justifie les observations qui suivent. Puisque l'objet réparateur de cette disposition est d'annuler les effets d'une transaction qui a diminué la valeur des actifs d'un failli, il convient de donner aux termes « ayant intérêt » un sens large afin qu'ils s'appliquent aux personnes qui tirent un avantage direct ou indirect d'une transaction tout en sachant que la contrepartie est inférieure à la juste valeur du marché. Ce raisonnement est particulièrement pertinent lorsque les personnes qui touchent un avantage sont les instigatrices de la transaction.

Jurisprudence

Arrêt appliqué : 373409 Alberta Ltd. (Séquestre de) c. Banque de Montréal, [2002] 4 R.C.S. 312, 2002 CSC 81; arrêts approuvés : Re Olympia & York Enterprises Ltd. and Hiram Walker Resources Ltd. (1986), 59 O.R. (2d) 254; Standard Trustco Ltd. (Trustee of) c. Standard Trust Co. (1995), 26 O.R. (3d) 1; arrêts

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

Syndicate Co. v. Cuninghame, [1906] 2 Ch. 34; K.L.B. v. British Columbia, [2003] 2 S.C.R. 403, 2003 SCC 51; Canadian Aero Service Ltd. v. O'Malley, [1974] S.C.R. 592; 820099 Ontario Inc. v. Harold E. Ballard Ltd. (1991), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 123, aff'd (1991), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 113; Teck Corp. v. Millar (1972), 33 D.L.R. (3d) 288; Brasserie Labatt ltée v. Lanoue, [1999] Q.J. No. 1108 (QL); Regent Taxi & Transport Co. v. Congrégation des Petits Frères de Marie, [1929] S.C.R. 650, rev'd [1932] 2 D.L.R. 70; Lister v. McAnulty, [1944] S.C.R. 317; Hôpital Notre-Dame de l'Espérance v. Laurent, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 605; Dovey v. Cory, [1901] A.C. 477; In re Brazilian Rubber Plantations and Estates, Ltd., [1911] 1 Ch. 425; In re City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., [1925] 1 Ch. 407; Soper v. Canada, [1998] 1 F.C. 124; Maple Leaf Foods Inc. v. Schneider Corp. (1998), 42 O.R. (3d) 177; Skalbania (Trustee of) v. Wedgewood Village Estates Ltd. (1989), 37 B.C.L.R. (2d) 88.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, s. 100(1) [repl. 1997, c. 12, s. 81], (2).

Canada Business Corporations Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-44, ss. 44(1) [rep. 2001, c. 14, s. 26], (2) [idem], 102(1) [repl. idem, s. 35], 121, 122(1) [am. idem, s. 135 (Sch., item 43)], 123(4) [now 123(5)], 185, 238, 239, 240, 241.

Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64, arts. 300, 311, 1457, 2501.

Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, s. 8.1.

Authors Cited

Allen, William T., Jack B. Jacobs and Leo E. Strine, Jr. "Function Over Form: A Reassessment of Standards of Review in Delaware Corporation Law" (2001), 26 Del. J. Corp. L. 859.

Beck, Stanley M. "Minority Shareholders' Rights in the 1980s". In Corporate Law in the 80s, Special Lectures of the Law Society of Upper Canada. Don Mills, Ont.: Richard De Boo, 1982, 311.

Brock, Jason. "The Propriety of Profitmaking: Fiduciary Duty and Unjust Enrichment" (2000), 58 U.T. Fac. L. Rev. 185.

Crête, Raymonde, et Stéphane Rousseau. Droit des sociétés par actions: principes fondamentaux. Montréal: Thémis, 2002.

Dickerson, Robert W. V., John L. Howard and Leon Getz. Proposals for a New Business Corporations Law for Canada, vols. I and II. Ottawa: Information Canada, 1971.

Gray, Wayne D. "Peoples v. Wise and Dylex: Identifying Stakeholder Interests upon or near Corporate mentionnés : Automatic Self-Cleansing Filter Syndicate Co. c. Cuninghame, [1906] 2 Ch. 34; K.L.B. c. Colombie-Britannique, [2003] 2 R.C.S. 403, 2003 CSC 51; Canadian Aero Service Ltd. c. O'Malley, [1974] R.C.S. 592; 820099 Ontario Inc. c. Harold E. Ballard Ltd. (1991), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 113, conf. par (1991), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 123; Teck Corp. c. Millar (1972), 33 D.L.R. (3d) 288; Brasserie Labatt ltée c. Lanoue, [1999] J.Q. nº 1108 (QL); Regent Taxi & Transport Co. c. Congrégation des Petits Frères de Marie, [1929] R.C.S. 650, inf. par [1932] 2 D.L.R. 70; Lister c. McAnulty, [1944] R.C.S. 317; Hôpital Notre-Dame de l'Espérance c. Laurent, [1978] 1 R.C.S. 605; Dovey c. Cory, [1901] A.C. 477; In re Brazilian Rubber Plantations and Estates, Ltd., [1911] 1 Ch. 425; In re City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., [1925] 1 Ch. 407; Soper c. Canada, [1998] 1 C.F. 124; Maple Leaf Foods Inc. c. Schneider Corp. (1998), 42 O.R. (3d) 177; Skalbania (Trustee of) c. Wedgewood Village Estates Ltd. (1989), 37 B.C.L.R. (2d) 88.

Lois et règlements cités

Code civil du Québec, L.Q. 1991, ch. 64, art. 300, 311, 1457, 2501.

Loi canadienne sur les sociétés par actions, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-44, art. 44(1) [abr. 2001, ch. 14, art. 26], (2) [idem], 102(1) [rempl. idem, art. 35], 121 [mod. idem, art. 49], 122(1) [mod. 1994, ch. 24, art. 13], 123(4) [maintenant 123(5)], 185, 238, 239, 240, 241 [mod. 2001, ch. 14, art. 117].

Loi d'interprétation, L.R.C. 1985, ch. I-21, art. 8.1.

Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, L.R.C. 1985, ch. B-3, art. 100(1) [rempl. 1997, ch. 12, art. 81], (2).

Doctrine citée

Allen, William T., Jack B. Jacobs and Leo E. Strine, Jr. « Function Over Form : A Reassessment of Standards of Review in Delaware Corporation Law » (2001), 26 Del. J. Corp. L. 859.

Beck, Stanley M. « Minority Shareholders' Rights in the 1980s ». In Corporate Law in the 80s, Special Lectures of the Law Society of Upper Canada. Don Mills, Ont. : Richard De Boo, 1982, 311.

Brock, Jason. « The Propriety of Profitmaking : Fiduciary Duty and Unjust Enrichment » (2000), 58 R.D.U.T. 185.

Crête, Raymonde, et Stéphane Rousseau. Droit des sociétés par actions : principes fondamentaux. Montréal : Thémis, 2002.

Dickerson, Robert W. V., John L. Howard et Leon Getz. Propositions pour un nouveau droit des corporations commerciales canadiennes, vol. I et II. Ottawa : Information Canada, 1971.

Gray, Wayne D. « Peoples v. Wise and Dylex : Identifying Stakeholder Interests upon or near Corporate

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

Insolvency — Stasis or Pragmatism?" (2003), 39 Can. Bus. L.J. 242.
Houlden, L. W., and G. B. Morawetz. Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law of Canada, vol. 2, 3rd ed. Toronto: Carswell, 1989 (loose-leaf updated 2003, release 9).
Iacobucci, Edward M. "Directors' Duties in Insolvency: Clarifying What Is at Stake" (2003), 39 Can. Bus. L.J. 398.
Iacobucci, Edward M., and Kevin E. Davis. "Reconciling Derivative Claims and the Oppression Remedy" (2000), 12 S.C.L.R. (2d) 87.
Martel, Paul. "Le 'voile corporatif' — l'attitude des tribunaux face à l'article 317 du Code civil du Québec" (1998), 58 R. du B. 95.
McGuinness, Kevin Patrick. The Law and Practice of Canadian Business Corporations. Toronto: Butterworths, 1999.
Thomson, David. "Directors, Creditors and Insolvency: A Fiduciary Duty or a Duty Not to Oppress?" (2000), 58 U.T. Fac. L. Rev. 31.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal, [2003] R.J.Q. 796, 224 D.L.R. (4th) 509, 41 C.B.R. (4th) 225, [2003] Q.J. No. 505 (QL), setting aside a decision of the Superior Court (1998), 23 C.B.R. (4th) 200, [1998] Q.J. No. 3571 (QL). Appeal dismissed.

Gerald F. Kandestin, Gordon Kugler and Gordon Levine, for the appellant.

Éric Lalanne and Martin Tétreault, for the respondents Lionel Wise, Ralph Wise and Harold Wise.

Ian Rose and Odette Jobin-Laberge, for the respondent Chubb Insurance Company of Canada.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

MAJOR AND DESCHAMPS JJ. —

I. Introduction

1 The principal question raised by this appeal is whether directors of a corporation owe a fiduciary duty to the corporation's creditors comparable to the statutory duty owed to the corporation. For the reasons that follow, we conclude that directors owe a duty of care to creditors, but that duty does not rise to a fiduciary duty. We agree with the disposition of Insolvency — Stasis or Pragmatism? » (2003), 39 Rev. can. dr. comm. 242.

Houlden, L. W., and G. B. Morawetz. Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law of Canada, vol. 2, 3rd ed. Toronto : Carswell, 1989 (loose-leaf updated 2003, release 9).
Iacobucci, Edward M. « Directors' Duties in Insolvency : Clarifying What Is at Stake » (2003), 39 Rev. can. dr. comm. 398.
Iacobucci, Edward M., and Kevin E. Davis. « Reconciling Derivative Claims and the Oppression Remedy » (2000), 12 S.C.L.R. (2d) 87.
Martel, Paul. « Le "voile corporatif" — l'attitude des tribunaux face à l'article 317 du Code civil du Québec » (1998), 58 R. du B. 95.
McGuinness, Kevin Patrick. The Law and Practice of Canadian Business Corporations. Toronto : Butterworths, 1999.
Thomson, David. « Directors, Creditors and Insolvency : A Fiduciary Duty or a Duty Not to Oppress? » (2000), 58 R.D.U.T. 31.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel du Québec, [2003] R.J.Q. 796, 224 D.L.R. (4th) 509, 41 C.B.R. (4th) 225, [2003] J.Q. n^{o} 505 (QL), qui a infirmé une décision de la Cour supérieure (1998), 23 C.B.R. (4th) 200, [1998] J.Q. n^{o} 3571 (QL). Pourvoi rejeté.

Gerald F. Kandestin, Gordon Kugler et Gordon Levine, pour l'appelante.

Éric Lalanne et Martin Tétreault, pour les intimés Lionel Wise, Ralph Wise et Harold Wise.

Ian Rose et Odette Jobin-Laberge, pour l'intimée Chubb du Canada, Compagnie d'assurance.

Version française du jugement de la Cour rendu par

LES JUGES MAJOR ET DESCHAMPS —

I. Introduction

La principale question soulevée par le présent pourvoi est de savoir si les administrateurs d'une société ont, envers les créanciers de la société, une obligation fiduciaire comparable à l'obligation que leur impose la loi à l'égard de la société. Pour les motifs qui suivent, nous concluons que les administrateurs ont envers les créanciers une obligation the Quebec Court of Appeal. The appeal is therefore dismissed.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

As a result of the demise in the mid-1990s of two major retail chains in eastern Canada, Wise Stores Inc. ("Wise") and its wholly-owned subsidiary, Peoples Department Stores Inc. ("Peoples"), the indebtedness of a number of Peoples' creditors went unsatisfied. In the wake of the failure of the two chains, Caron Bélanger Ernst & Young Inc., Peoples' trustee in bankruptcy ("trustee"), brought an action against the directors of Peoples. To address the trustee's claims, the extent of the duties imposed by s. 122(1) of the Canada Business Corporations Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-44 ("CBCA"), upon directors with respect to creditors must be determined; we must also identify the purpose and reach of s. 100 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA").

In our view, it has not been established that the directors of Peoples violated either the fiduciary duty or the duty of care imposed by s. 122(1) of the CBCA. As for the trustee's submission regarding s. 100 of the BIA, we agree with the Court of Appeal that the consideration received in the impugned transactions was not "conspicuously" less than fair market value. The BIA claim fails on that basis.

II. Background

Wise was founded by Alex Wise in 1930 as a small clothing store on St-Hubert Street in Montreal. By 1992, through expansion effected by a mix of internal growth and acquisitions, it had become an enterprise operating at 50 locations with annual sales of approximately $100 million, and it had been listed on the Montreal Stock Exchange in 1986. The stores were, for the most part, located in urban areas in Quebec. The founder's three sons, Lionel, Ralph and Harold Wise ("Wise brothers"), were majority shareholders, officers, and directors of Wise. Together, they controlled 75 percent of the firm's equity.

de diligence, mais cette obligation ne s'élève pas au niveau d'une obligation fiduciaire. Nous souscrivons au dispositif de la Cour d'appel du Québec. Le pourvoi est donc rejeté.

2 En raison de la faillite, au milieu des années 1990, de deux importantes chaînes de magasins de détail de l'Est du Canada, Wise Stores Inc. (« Wise ») et sa filiale à part entière, les Magasins à rayons Peoples Inc. (« Peoples »), de nombreuses créances de Peoples sont demeurées insatisfaites. Caron Bélanger Ernst & Young Inc., le syndic à la faillite de Peoples (« syndic »), a intenté une action contre les administrateurs de Peoples. Pour statuer sur les réclamations du syndic, il convient de déterminer l'étendue des obligations envers les créanciers qu'impose aux administrateurs le par. 122(1) de la Loi canadienne sur les sociétés par actions, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-44 (« LCSA »). Nous devons également préciser l'objet et la portée de l'art. 100 de la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, L.R.C. 1985, ch. B-3 (« LFI »).

3 À notre avis, il n'a pas été démontré que les administrateurs de Peoples ont manqué à l'obligation fiduciaire ou à l'obligation de diligence qu'impose le par. 122(1) de la LCSA. Pour ce qui est de l'argument du syndic concernant l'art. 100 de la LFI, nous concluons comme la Cour d'appel que la contrepartie reçue dans le cadre des transactions contestées n'était pas « manifestement » inférieure à la juste valeur du marché. La réclamation fondée sur la LFI est rejetée pour ce motif.

II. Contexte

4 Wise a été fondée en 1930 par Alex Wise et était à l'origine un petit magasin de vêtements sur la rue St-Hubert, à Montréal. En 1992, l'entreprise avait élargi ses activités par sa croissance interne et des acquisitions. Elle exploitait 50 magasins dont les ventes annuelles s'élevaient à environ 100 millions de dollars et elle avait été inscrite à la Bourse de Montréal en 1986. Ses magasins se trouvaient pour la plupart dans des régions urbaines du Québec. Les trois fils du fondateur, Lionel, Ralph et Harold Wise (« frères Wise »), étaient actionnaires majoritaires, dirigeants et administrateurs de Wise. Ensemble, ils contrôlaient 75 pour 100 des actions ordinaires de l'entreprise.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

5 In 1992, Peoples had been in business continuously in one form or another for 78 years. It had operated as an unincorporated division of Marks & Spencer Canada Inc. ("M & S") until 1991, when it was incorporated as a separate company. M & S itself was wholly owned by the large British firm, Marks & Spencer plc. ("M & S plc."). Peoples' 81 stores were generally located in rural areas, from Ontario to Newfoundland. Peoples had annual sales of about $160 million, but was struggling financially. Its annual losses were in the neighbourhood of $10 million.

En 1992, Peoples poursuivait déjà ses activités commerciales, sous une forme ou une autre, depuis 78 ans sans interruption. Elle était une division non constituée en société de Marks & Spencer Canada Inc. (« M & S ») jusqu'en 1991, année de sa constitution en société distincte. M & S était elle-même une filiale à part entière de la grande société britannique Marks & Spencer plc. (« M & S plc. »). Les 81 magasins de Peoples se trouvaient plutôt dans des régions rurales, de l'Ontario à Terre-Neuve. Les ventes annuelles de Peoples s'élevaient à environ 160 millions de dollars, mais avec des pertes annuelles d'environ 10 millions de dollars, l'entreprise se trouvait en difficulté financière.

6 Wise and Peoples competed with other chains such as Canadian Tire, Greenberg, Hart, K-Mart, M-Stores, Metropolitan Stores, Rossy, Woolco and Zellers. Retail competition in eastern Canada was intense in the early 1990s. In 1992, M-Stores went bankrupt. In 1994, Greenberg and Metropolitan Stores followed M-Stores into bankruptcy. The 1994 entry of Wal-Mart into the Canadian market, with its acquisition of over 100 Woolco stores from Woolworth Canada Inc., exerted significant additional competitive pressure on retail stores.

Wise et Peoples étaient en concurrence avec d'autres chaînes comme Canadian Tire, Greenberg, Hart, K-Mart, M-Stores, Metropolitan Stores, Rossy, Woolco et Zellers. Au début des années 1990, la concurrence dans le secteur de la vente au détail dans l'Est du Canada était féroce. En 1992, M-Stores a fait faillite. En 1994, Greenberg et Metropolitan Stores ont fait faillite à leur tour. En 1994, l'arrivée sur le marché canadien de Wal-Mart, qui a acquis de Woolworth Canada Inc. plus de 100 magasins du détaillant Woolco au Canada, a soumis les commerces de vente au détail à une concurrence encore plus forte.

7 Lionel Wise, the eldest of the three brothers and Wise's executive vice-president, had expressed an interest in acquiring the ailing Peoples chain from M & S as early as 1988. Initially, M & S did not share Wise's interest for the sale, but by late 1991, M & S plc., the British parent company of M & S, had decided to divest itself of all its Canadian operations. At this point, M & S incorporated each of its three Canadian divisions to facilitate the anticipated divestiture thereof.

Dès 1988, Lionel Wise, l'aîné des trois frères et le vice-président exécutif de Wise, s'était montré intéressé à acheter de M & S la chaîne Peoples dont les activités étaient en déclin. Au départ, M & S ne partageait pas l'intérêt de Wise pour la vente, mais à la fin de 1991, M & S plc., la société mère britannique de M & S, avait décidé de mettre fin à toutes ses activités commerciales au Canada. M & S a alors constitué ses trois divisions canadiennes en sociétés distinctes pour en faciliter la vente.

8 The new-found desire to sell coincided with Wise's previously expressed interest in acquiring its larger rival. Although M & S had initially hoped to sell Peoples for cash to a large firm in a solid financial condition, it was unable to do so. Consequently, negotiations got underway with representatives of Wise. A formal share purchase agreement was Cette nouvelle volonté de vendre coïncide avec le désir manifesté auparavant par Wise d'acquérir sa grande rivale. Même si elle avait d'abord espéré vendre Peoples au comptant à une large entreprise jouissant d'une solide situation financière, M & S en est incapable. Par conséquent, elle amorce des négociations avec des représentants de Wise. Une drawn up in early 1992 and executed in June 1992, with July 16, 1992 as its closing date.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

Wise incorporated a company, 2798832 Canada Inc., for the purpose of acquiring all of the issued and outstanding shares of Peoples from M & S. The $27-million share acquisition proceeded as a fully leveraged buyout. The portion of the purchase price attributable to inventory was discounted by 30 percent. The discount was designed to inject equity into Peoples in the fiscal year following the sale and to make use of some of the tax losses that had accumulated in prior years.

The amount of the down payment due to M & S at closing, $5 million, was borrowed from the Toronto Dominion Bank ("TD Bank"). According to the terms of the share purchase agreement, the $22-million balance of the purchase price would be carried by M & S and would be repaid over a period of eight years. Wise guaranteed all of 2798832 Canada Inc.'s obligations pursuant to the terms of the share purchase agreement.

To protect its interests, M & S took the assets of Peoples as security (subject to a priority in favour of the TD Bank) and negotiated strict covenants concerning the financial management and operation of the company. Among other requirements, 2798832 Canada Inc. and Wise were obligated to maintain specific financial ratios, and Peoples was not permitted to provide financial assistance to Wise. In addition, the agreement provided that Peoples could not be amalgamated with Wise until the purchase price had been paid. This prohibition was presumably intended to induce Wise to refinance and pay the remainder of the purchase price as early as possible in order to overcome the strict conditions imposed upon it under the share purchase agreement.

On January 31, 1993, 2798832 Canada Inc. was amalgamated with Peoples. The new entity retained Peoples' corporate name. Since 2798832 Canada Inc. had been a wholly-owned subsidiary of Wise, upon amalgamation the new Peoples became a subsidiary directly owned and controlled by Wise.

convention formelle d'achat d'actions est rédigée au début de 1992 et signée en juin 1992, la date limite d'exécution étant fixée au 16 juillet 1992.

9 Afin d'acheter de M & S toutes les actions émises et en circulation de Peoples, Wise constitue la société 2798832 Canada Inc. L'acquisition des actions, pour une somme de 27 millions de dollars, est faite entièrement par emprunt. Une réduction de 30 pour 100 est accordée à l'égard de la partie du prix d'achat attribuable au coût des stocks. La réduction a pour but de permettre l'injection de capitaux dans Peoples au cours de l'exercice financier suivant la vente et d'utiliser certaines des pertes fiscales accumulées au cours des années précédentes.

10 Le versement initial dû à M & S à la signature, soit 5 millions de dollars, est emprunté à la Banque Toronto Dominion (« Banque TD »). Suivant les modalités de la convention d'achat d'actions, le reliquat de 22 millions de dollars du prix d'achat est dû à M & S et son remboursement échelonné sur une période de huit ans. Aux termes de la convention d'achat d'actions, Wise garantit solidairement toutes les obligations de 2798832 Canada Inc.

11 Afin de protéger ses intérêts, M & S prend les actifs de Peoples en garantie (sous réserve d'une priorité de rang en faveur de la Banque TD) et négocie des conditions strictes concernant la gestion financière et l'exploitation de la société. Notamment, 2798832 Canada Inc. et Wise ont l'obligation de maintenir des ratios financiers précis et Peoples n'est pas autorisée à fournir d'aide financière à Wise. De plus, la convention prévoit que Peoples ne peut fusionner avec Wise avant le paiement intégral du prix d'achat. Cette interdiction a vraisemblablement pour but d'inciter Wise à se refinancer et à payer le plus tôt possible le reliquat du prix d'achat afin d'écarter les conditions strictes qui lui sont imposées dans la convention d'achat d'actions.

12 Le 31 janvier 1993, 2798832 Canada Inc. est fusionnée avec Peoples. La nouvelle entité conserve la dénomination sociale de Peoples. Comme 2798832 Canada Inc. était une filiale à part entière de Wise au moment de la fusion, la nouvelle entité Peoples devient une filiale de Wise qui en a aussi le

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

The three Wise brothers were Peoples' only directors.

13 Following the acquisition, Wise had attempted to rationalize its operations by consolidating the overlapping corporate functions of Wise and Peoples, and operating as a group. The consolidation of the administration, accounting, advertising and purchasing departments of the two corporations was completed by the fall of 1993. As a consequence of the changes, many of Wise's employees worked for both firms but were paid solely by Wise. The evidence at trial was that because of the tax losses carried-forward by Peoples, it was advantageous for the group to have more expenses incurred by Wise, which, if the group was profitable as a whole, would increase its after-tax profits. Almost from the outset, the joint operation of Wise and Peoples did not function smoothly. Instead of the expected synergies, the consolidation resulted in dissonance.

14 After the acquisition, the total number of buyers for the two companies was nearly halved. The procurement policy at that point required buyers to deal simultaneously with suppliers on behalf of both Peoples and Wise. For the buyers, this nearly doubled their administrative work. Separate invoices were required for purchases made on behalf of Wise and Peoples. These invoices had to be separately entered into the system, tracked and paid.

15 Inventory, too, was separately recorded and tracked in the system. However, the inventory of each company was handled and stored, often unsegregated, in shared warehouse facilities. The main warehouse for Peoples, on Cousens Street in Ville St-Laurent, was maintained for and used by both firms. The Cousens warehouse saw considerable activity, as it was the central distribution hub for both chains. The facility was open 18 hours a day and employed 150 people on two shifts who handled a total of approximately 30,000 cartons daily through 20 loading docks. It was abuzz with activity.

contrôle. Les trois frères Wise sont les seuls administrateurs de Peoples.

Après l'acquisition, Wise avait tenté de rationaliser ses opérations en regroupant les diverses opérations de Wise et de Peoples qui se chevauchaient et en exploitant les deux entreprises comme un seul groupe. Le regroupement des services de la gestion, de la comptabilité, de la publicité et des achats des deux sociétés a été achevé à l'automne 1993. En raison de ces changements, de nombreux employés de Wise travaillaient pour les deux entreprises mais étaient payés par Wise uniquement. La preuve en première instance a démontré qu'en raison des pertes fiscales reportées de Peoples, il était avantageux pour le groupe que Wise engage davantage de dépenses, ce qui permettrait, si le groupe était rentable dans l'ensemble, d'augmenter ses bénéfices après impôt. Presque dès le début, l'exploitation en commun de Wise et de Peoples s'est avérée difficile. Au lieu de la synergie attendue, la consolidation a engendré la confusion.

Après l'acquisition, le nombre total d'acheteurs des deux sociétés est diminué d'environ la moitié. La politique d'approvisionnement oblige alors les acheteurs à traiter simultanément avec les fournisseurs pour le compte de Peoples et de Wise, ce qui double presque leurs tâches administratives. Des factures distinctes sont nécessaires pour les achats faits au nom de Wise et ceux faits au nom de Peoples. Ces factures doivent être inscrites séparément et faire l'objet d'un suivi et d'un paiement distincts.

Les stocks font aussi l'objet d'une inscription et d'un suivi distincts dans le système. Toutefois, les stocks de chacune des sociétés sont manipulés et entreposés, souvent sans être séparés, dans des entrepôts communs. L'entrepôt principal de Peoples, situé rue Cousens à Ville St-Laurent, a été conservé et utilisé par les deux entreprises. Il y a beaucoup d'activité à l'entrepôt Cousens parce qu'il s'agit du principal centre de distribution par les deux chaînes. L'entrepôt est ouvert 18 heures par jour et 150 personnes, y travaillant sur deux quarts, s'occupent de la manutention d'environ 30 000 boîtes quotidiennement sur 20 quais de chargement. L'activité y est intense.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

Before long, the parallel bookkeeping combined with the shared warehousing arrangements caused serious problems for both Wise and Peoples. The actual situation in the warehouse often did not mirror the reported state of the inventory in the system. The goods of one company were often inextricably commingled and confused with the goods of the other. As a result, the inventory records of both companies were increasingly incorrect. A physical inventory count was conducted to try to rectify the situation, to little avail. Both Wise and Peoples stores experienced numerous shipping disruptions and delays. The situation, already unsustainable, was worsening.

16 Rapidement, la tenue d'une comptabilité parallèle, conjuguée à l'entreposage en commun des marchandises, crée de graves problèmes tant pour Wise que pour Peoples. L'emplacement des marchandises dans l'entrepôt ne reflète pas toujours l'état des stocks indiqué dans le système. Les marchandises d'une société sont souvent mêlées aux marchandises de l'autre et confondues avec celle-ci. En conséquence, les fiches de stocks des deux sociétés sont de plus en plus inexactes. Un inventaire manuel des marchandises est effectué pour essayer de corriger la situation, sans grand succès. Les livraisons aux magasins de Wise et de Peoples sont souvent perturbées et en retard. La situation, déjà intolérable, empire.

In October 1993, Lionel Wise consulted David Clément, Wise's (and, after the acquisition, Peoples') vice-president of administration and finance, in an attempt to find a solution. In January 1994, Clément recommended and the three Wise brothers agreed that they would implement a joint inventory procurement policy ("new policy") whereby the two firms would divide responsibility for purchasing. Peoples would make all purchases from North American suppliers and Wise would, in turn, make all purchases from overseas suppliers. Peoples would then transfer to Wise what it had purchased for Wise, charging Wise accordingly, and vice versa. The new policy was implemented on February 1, 1994. It was this arrangement that was later criticized by certain creditors and by the trial judge.

17 En octobre 1993, Lionel Wise consulte David Clément, vice-président à l'administration et aux finances de Wise (et, après l'acquisition, de Peoples) pour tenter de trouver une solution. Au mois de janvier 1994, Clément recommande aux trois frères Wise, qui acceptent, de mettre en œuvre une politique d'approvisionnement commun (« nouvelle politique ») en vertu de laquelle les deux entreprises se partageront la responsabilité des achats. Peoples s'occupera de tous les achats auprès de fournisseurs en Amérique du Nord et Wise, pour sa part, se chargera de tous les achats faits outre-mer. Peoples transférera ensuite à Wise les marchandises achetées pour Wise et lui en réclamera le prix, et vice versa. La nouvelle politique entre en vigueur le 1er février 1994. C'est cet arrangement qui fera plus tard l'objet de critiques de la part de certains créanciers et du juge de première instance.

Approximately 82 percent of the total inventory of Wise and Peoples was purchased from North American suppliers, which inevitably meant that Peoples would be extending a significant trade credit to Wise. The new policy was known to the directors, but was neither formally implemented in writing nor approved by a board meeting or resolution.

18 Environ 82 pour 100 de la totalité des marchandises de Wise et de Peoples sont achetées auprès de fournisseurs nord-américains, de sorte qu'inévitablement, Peoples doit consentir à Wise un important crédit commercial. La nouvelle politique est connue des administrateurs, mais elle n'est pas formellement consignée par écrit ni approuvée lors d'une réunion du conseil d'administration ou par une résolution de celui-ci.

On April 27, 1994, Lionel Wise outlined the details of the new policy at a meeting of Wise's audit committee. A partner of Coopers & Lybrand was 19 Le 27 avril 1994, Lionel Wise expose en détail la nouvelle politique lors d'une réunion du comité de vérification de Wise. Un associé principal de

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

M & S's representative on Wise's board of directors and a member of the audit committee. He attended the April 27th meeting and raised no objection to the new policy when it was introduced.

20 By June 1994, financial statements prepared to reflect the financial position of Peoples as of April 30, 1994 revealed that Wise owed more than $18 million to Peoples. Approximately $14 million of this amount resulted from a notional transfer of inventory that was cancelled following the period's end. M & S was concerned about the situation and started an investigation, as a result of which M & S insisted that the new procurement policy be rescinded. Wise agreed to M & S's demand but took the position that the former procurement policy could not be reinstated immediately. An agreement was executed on September 27, 1994, effective July 21, 1994, and it provided that the new policy would be abandoned as of January 31, 1995. The agreement also specified that the inventory and records of the two companies would be kept separate, and that the amount owed to Peoples by Wise would not exceed $3 million.

21 Another result of the negotiations was that M & S accepted an increase in the amount of the TD Bank's priority to $15 million and a new repayment schedule for the balance of the purchase price owed to M & S. The parties agreed to revise the schedule to provide for 37 monthly payments beginning in July 1995. Each of the Wise brothers also provided a personal guarantee of $500,000 in favour of M & S.

22 In September 1994, in light of the fragile financial condition of the companies and the competitiveness of the retail market, the TD Bank announced its intention to cease doing business with Wise and Peoples as of the end of December 1994. Following negotiations, however, the bank extended its financial support until the end of July 1995. The Wise brothers promised to extend personal guarantees in favour of the TD Bank, but this did not occur.

23 In December 1994, three days after the Wise brothers presented financial statements showing Coopers & Lybrand représente M & S au conseil d'administration de Wise et est aussi membre du comité de vérification. Il est présent à la réunion du 27 avril et ne s'oppose pas à la nouvelle politique lorsqu'elle est présentée.

En juin 1994, les états financiers préparés pour indiquer la situation financière de Peoples le 30 avril 1994 révèlent que Wise doit plus de 18 millions de dollars à Peoples. De cette somme, un montant d'environ 14 millions de dollars résulte d'un transfert fictif des stocks qui ont été retournés après la fin de la période. Inquiète de la situation, M & S amorce une enquête à l'issue de laquelle elle exige l'abandon de la nouvelle politique d'approvisionnement. Wise accepte de se plier à l'exigence de M & S, mais elle indique que l'ancienne politique d'approvisionnement ne peut pas être rétablie immédiatement. Une entente prévoyant que la nouvelle politique sera abandonnée le 31 janvier 1995 est signée le 27 septembre 1994, avec effet rétroactif au 21 juillet 1994. L'entente prévoit aussi que les stocks et les registres des deux sociétés seront séparés et que la somme due à Peoples par Wise ne dépassera pas 3 millions de dollars.

À l'issue des négociations, M & S accepte aussi que la somme à laquelle la Banque TD a droit en priorité soit portée à 15 millions de dollars et qu'un nouvel échéancier de remboursement du reliquat du prix d'achat dû à M & S soit établi. Les parties acceptent de revoir l'échéancier de façon à prévoir 37 versements mensuels à partir de juillet 1995. Chacun des frères Wise fournit aussi à M & S une garantie personnelle de 500 000 $.

En septembre 1994, constatant la situation financière précaire des sociétés et la compétitivité dans le secteur de la vente au détail, la Banque TD annonce son intention de cesser de faire affaire avec Wise et Peoples à la fin de décembre 1994. Toutefois, à la suite de négociations, elle prolonge son soutien financier jusqu'à la fin de juillet 1995. Les frères Wise s'engagent à fournir des garanties personnelles en faveur de la Banque TD, mais ils ne donnent pas suite à cet engagement.

En décembre 1994, trois jours après la présentation par les frères Wise d'états financiers indiquant disappointing results for Peoples in its third fiscal quarter, M & S initiated bankruptcy proceedings against both Wise and Peoples. A notice of intention to make a proposal was filed on behalf of Peoples the same day. Nonetheless, Peoples later consented to the petition by M & S, and both Wise and Peoples were declared bankrupt on January 13, 1995, effective December 9, 1994. The same day, M & S released each of the Wise brothers from their personal guarantees. M & S apparently preferred to proceed with an uncontested petition in bankruptcy rather than attempting to collect on the personal guarantees.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

The assets of Wise and Peoples were sufficient to cover in full the outstanding debt owed to the TD Bank, satisfy the entire balance of the purchase price owed to M & S, and discharge almost all the landlords' lease claims. The bulk of the unsatisfied claims were those of trade creditors.

Following the bankruptcy, Peoples' trustee filed a petition against the Wise brothers. In the petition, the trustee claimed that they had favoured the interests of Wise over Peoples to the detriment of Peoples' creditors, in breach of their duties as directors under s. 122(1) of the CBCA. The trustee also claimed that the Wise brothers had, in the year preceding the bankruptcy, been privy to transactions in which property had been transferred for conspicuously less than fair market value within the meaning of s. 100 of the BIA.

Pursuant to art. 2501 of the Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64 ("C.C.Q."), the trustee named Chubb Insurance Company of Canada ("Chubb"), which had provided directors' insurance to Wise and its subsidiaries, as a defendant in addition to the Wise brothers.

The trial judge, Greenberg J., relying on decisions from the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand, held that the fiduciary duty and the duty of care under s. 122(1) of the CBCA extend to a company's creditors when a company is insolvent or in the vicinity of insolvency. Greenberg J. found that the implementation, by the Wise brothers qua des résultats décevants pour le troisième trimestre de Peoples, M & S engage des procédures de faillite contre Wise et Peoples. Un avis d'intention de faire une proposition est déposé au nom de Peoples le même jour. Peoples accepte néanmoins plus tard la requête présentée par M & S, et Wise et Peoples sont déclarées en faillite le 13 janvier 1995, avec effet rétroactif au 9 décembre 1994. Le même jour, M & S accorde à chacun des frères Wise mainlevée de leurs garanties personnelles. Au lieu de tenter de réaliser les garanties personnelles, il semble que M & S préférait que la requête en faillite ne soit pas contestée.

24 Les biens de Wise et de Peoples sont suffisants pour rembourser entièrement la Banque TD, pour payer le reliquat du prix de vente dû à M & S et pour payer la presque totalité des créances des locateurs. La grande majorité des créances impayées sont celles de fournisseurs.

25 Après la faillite, le syndic de Peoples présente contre les frères Wise une requête dans laquelle il prétend que ces derniers ont privilégié les intérêts de Wise plutôt que ceux de Peoples au détriment des créanciers de Peoples, en contravention des obligations que le par. 122(1) de la LCSA leur imposait en tant qu'administrateurs. Le syndic soutient aussi que, au cours de l'année ayant précédé la faillite, les frères Wise étaient des parties intéressées aux transactions en vertu desquelles des biens avaient été transférés pour une contrepartie manifestement inférieure à la juste valeur du marché au sens de l'art. 100 de la LFI.

26 Se fondant sur l'art. 2501 du Code civil du Québec, L.Q. 1991, ch. 64 (« C.c.Q. »), le syndic désigne la Compagnie d'assurance Chubb du Canada (« Chubb »), qui avait assuré les administrateurs de Wise et de ses filiales, à titre de codéfenderesse des frères Wise.

27 Invoquant des décisions rendues au Royaume-Uni, en Australie et en Nouvelle-Zélande, le juge Greenberg statue en première instance que l'obligation fiduciaire et l'obligation de diligence énoncées au par. 122(1) de la LCSA s'imposaient aussi à l'égard des créanciers d'une société lorsque celle-ci est insolvable ou au bord de l'insolvabilité. Il directors of Peoples, of a corporate policy that affected both companies, had occurred while the corporation was in the vicinity of insolvency and was detrimental to the interests of the creditors of Peoples. The Wise brothers were therefore found liable and the trustee was awarded $4.44 million in damages. As Chubb had provided insurance coverage for directors, it was also held liable. Greenberg J. also considered the alternative grounds under the BIA advanced by the trustee and found the Wise brothers liable for the same $4.44 million amount on that ground as well. All the parties appealed.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

NBC BOA 001081

conclut que c'est au moment où l'entreprise était au bord de l'insolvabilité que les frères Wise, en leur qualité d'administrateurs de Peoples, ont appliqué une politique corporative qui touchait les deux sociétés et qui était préjudiciable aux intérêts des créanciers de Peoples. Les frères Wise sont donc jugés responsables et des dommages-intérêts de 4,44 millions de dollars sont accordés au syndic. Comme elle avait assuré les administrateurs, Chubb est elle aussi jugée responsable. Le juge Greenberg examine également les moyens subsidiaires fondés sur la LFI qu'avait avancés le syndic et il conclut que les frères Wise doivent être tenus responsables du paiement de la somme de 4,44 millions de dollars sur le fondement de ces mêmes moyens. Toutes les parties interjettent appel.

28 The Quebec Court of Appeal, per Pelletier J.A., with Robert C.J.Q. and Nuss J.A. concurring, allowed the appeals by Chubb and the Wise brothers: [2003] R.J.Q. 796, [2003] Q.J. No. 505 (QL). The Court of Appeal expressed reluctance to follow Greenberg J. in equating the interests of creditors with the best interests of the corporation when the corporation was insolvent or in the vicinity of insolvency, stating that an innovation in the law such as this is a policy matter more appropriately dealt with by Parliament than the courts. In considering the trustee's claim under s. 100 of the BIA, Pelletier J.A. held that the trial judge had committed a palpable and overriding error in concluding that the amounts owed by Wise to Peoples in respect of inventory "were neither collected nor collectible" (para. 125 QL). He found that the consideration received for the transactions had been approximately 94 percent of fair market value, and he was not convinced that this disparity could be characterized as being "conspicuously" less than fair market value. Moreover, he did not accept the broad meaning the trial judge gave to the word "privy". Pelletier J.A. declined to exercise his discretion under s. 100(2) of the BIA to make an order in favour of the trustee. In view of his conclusion that the Wise brothers were not liable, Pelletier J.A. allowed the appeal with respect to Chubb.

La Cour d'appel du Québec, par la décision du juge Pelletier avec l'accord du juge en chef Robert et du juge Nuss, accueille les appels de Chubb et des frères Wise : [2003] R.J.Q. 796. La cour exprime sa réticence à assimiler, comme l'a fait le juge Greenberg, les intérêts des créanciers aux intérêts supérieurs de la société lorsque celle-ci est insolvable ou est au bord de l'insolvabilité, précisant que l'opportunité d'une telle innovation en droit est une question de politique générale qui doit être laissée à l'appréciation du législateur plutôt qu'à celle des tribunaux. Examinant la réclamation faite par le syndic en vertu de l'art. 100 de la LFI, le juge Pelletier statue que le juge de première instance a commis une erreur manifeste et dominante en concluant que les sommes dues par Wise à Peoples à l'égard des marchandises [TRADUCTION] « n'ont pas été recouvrées et n'étaient pas recouvrables » (par. 126). Il juge que la contrepartie des transactions effectuées représentait environ 94 pour 100 de la juste valeur du marché et il n'est pas convaincu que l'on puisse affirmer que cet écart était « manifestement » inférieur à la juste valeur du marché. De plus, il n'accepte pas le sens large donné par le juge de première instance aux termes « ayant intérêt ». Le juge Pelletier refuse d'exercer le pouvoir discrétionnaire que lui confère le par. 100(2) de la LFI et d'accorder un jugement favorable au syndic. Concluant que la responsabilité des frères Wise n'est pas engagée, il accueille l'appel en ce qui a trait à Chubb.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

III. Analysis

At the outset, it should be acknowledged that according to art. 300 C.C.Q. and s. 8.1 of the Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, the civil law serves as a supplementary source of law to federal legislation such as the CBCA. Since the CBCA does not entitle creditors to sue directors directly for breach of their duties, it is appropriate to have recourse to the C.C.Q. to determine how rights grounded in a federal statute should be addressed in Quebec, and more specifically how s. 122(1) of the CBCA can be harmonized with the principles of civil liability: see R. Crête and S. Rousseau, Droit des sociétés par actions: principes fondamentaux (2002), at p. 58.

This case came before our Court on the issue of whether directors owe a duty to creditors. The creditors did not bring a derivative action or an oppression remedy application under the CBCA. Instead, the trustee, representing the interests of the creditors, sued the directors for an alleged breach of the duties imposed by s. 122(1) of the CBCA. The standing of the trustee to sue was not questioned.

The primary role of directors is described in s. 102(1) of the CBCA:

102. (1) Subject to any unanimous shareholder agreement, the directors shall manage, or supervise the management of, the business and affairs of a corporation.

As for officers, s. 121 of the CBCA provides that their powers are delegated to them by the directors:

121. Subject to the articles, the by-laws or any unanimous shareholder agreement,

(a) the directors may designate the offices of the corporation, appoint as officers persons of full capacity, specify their duties and delegate to them powers to manage the business and affairs of the corporation, except powers to do anything referred to in subsection 115(3);

III. Analyse

29 Il convient tout d'abord de reconnaître que, suivant l'art. 300 C.c.Q. et l'art. 8.1 de la Loi d'interprétation, L.R.C. 1985, ch. I-21, le droit civil constitue une source de droit complétant les lois fédérales comme la LCSA. Comme la LCSA n'autorise pas les créanciers à poursuivre directement les administrateurs pour manquement à leurs obligations, il faut se reporter au C.c.Q. pour déterminer la façon de mettre en œuvre au Québec les droits trouvant leur fondement dans une loi fédérale et, plus spécifiquement, la façon d'harmoniser le par. 122(1) de la LCSA et les principes de la responsabilité civile : voir R. Crête et S. Rousseau, Droit des sociétés par actions : principes fondamentaux (2002), p. 58.

30 En l'espèce, notre Cour est appelée à trancher la question de savoir si les administrateurs ont des obligations envers les créanciers. Les créanciers n'ont pas exercé leurs droits par voie d'une action oblique ni par voie d'une demande de redressement pour abus de droit fondée sur la LCSA. Le syndic, représentant les intérêts des créanciers, a plutôt poursuivi les administrateurs en alléguant un manquement aux obligations que leur impose le par. 122(1) de la LCSA. La qualité du syndic d'engager les poursuites n'a pas été remise en question.

31 La principale fonction des administrateurs est indiquée au par. 102(1) de la LCSA :

102. (1) Sous réserve de toute convention unanime des actionnaires, les administrateurs gèrent les affaires commerciales et les affaires internes de la société ou en surveillent la gestion.

Pour ce qui est des dirigeants, l'art. 121 de la LCSA prévoit que leurs pouvoirs leurs sont délégués par les administrateurs :

121. Sous réserve des statuts, des règlements administratifs ou de toute convention unanime des actionnaires, il est possible, au sein de la société :

a) pour les administrateurs, de créer des postes de dirigeants, d'y nommer des personnes pleinement capables, de préciser leurs fonctions et de leur déléguer le pouvoir de gérer les activités commerciales et les affaires internes de la société, sauf les exceptions prévues au paragraphe 115(3);

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

NBC BOA 001083

(b) a director may be appointed to any office of the corporation; and

(c) two or more offices of the corporation may be held by the same person.

Although the shareholders are commonly said to own the corporation, in the absence of a unanimous shareholder agreement to the contrary, s. 102 of the CBCA provides that it is not the shareholders, but the directors elected by the shareholders, who are responsible for managing it. This clear demarcation between the respective roles of shareholders and directors long predates the 1975 enactment of the CBCA: see Automatic Self-Cleansing Filter Syndicate Co. v. Cuninghame, [1906] 2 Ch. 34 (C.A.); see also art. 311 C.C.Q.

32 Section 122(1) of the CBCA establishes two distinct duties to be discharged by directors and officers in managing, or supervising the management of, the corporation:

122. (1) Every director and officer of a corporation in exercising their powers and discharging their duties shall

(a) act honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the corporation; and

(b) exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances.

The first duty has been referred to in this case as the "fiduciary duty". It is better described as the "duty of loyalty". We will use the expression "statutory fiduciary duty" for purposes of clarity when referring to the duty under the CBCA. This duty requires directors and officers to act honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the corporation. The second duty is commonly referred to as the "duty of care". Generally speaking, it imposes a legal obligation upon directors and officers to be diligent in supervising and managing the corporation's affairs.

33 The trial judge did not apply or consider separately the two duties imposed on directors by s. 122(1). As the Court of Appeal observed, the trial

b) de nommer un administrateur à n'importe quel poste;

c) pour la même personne, d'occuper plusieurs postes.

Bien que l'on dise souvent que les actionnaires sont propriétaires de l'entreprise, l'art. 102 de la LCSA prévoit que, sous réserve d'une convention unanime des actionnaires, ce ne sont pas les actionnaires mais les administrateurs élus par les actionnaires qui sont chargés de sa gestion. Cette nette démarcation entre les rôles respectifs des actionnaires et des administrateurs est bien antérieure à l'adoption de la LCSA en 1975 : voir Automatic Self-Cleansing Filter Syndicate Co. c. Cuninghame, [1906] 2 Ch. 34 (C.A.); voir aussi l'art. 311 C.c.Q.

Le paragraphe 122(1) de la LCSA impose deux obligations distinctes aux administrateurs et aux dirigeants dans la gestion ou la surveillance de la gestion de l'entreprise :

122. (1) Les administrateurs et les dirigeants doivent, dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions, agir :

a) avec intégrité et de bonne foi au mieux des intérêts de la société;

b) avec le soin, la diligence et la compétence dont ferait preuve, en pareilles circonstances, une personne prudente.

La première obligation a été, en l'espèce, appelée « obligation fiduciaire », une notion que décrit mieux l'expression « devoir de loyauté ». Pour éviter toute confusion, nous utiliserons parfois l'expression « obligation fiduciaire prévue par la loi » pour désigner l'obligation prévue à la LCSA. Cette obligation impose aux administrateurs et aux dirigeants le devoir d'agir avec intégrité et de bonne foi au mieux des intérêts de la société. La deuxième obligation est communément appelée « obligation de diligence ». De manière générale, elle impose aux administrateurs et aux dirigeants l'obligation légale de faire preuve de diligence dans la gestion et la surveillance de la gestion des affaires de la société.

Le juge de première instance n'a ni appliqué ni examiné séparément les deux obligations imposées aux administrateurs par le par. 122(1). Comme l'a judge appears to have confused the two duties. They are, in fact, distinct and are designed to secure different ends. For that reason, they will be addressed separately in these reasons.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

A. The Statutory Fiduciary Duty: Section 122(1)(a) of the CBCA

Considerable power over the deployment and management of financial, human, and material resources is vested in the directors and officers of corporations. For the directors of CBCA corporations, this power originates in s. 102 of the Act. For officers, this power comes from the powers delegated to them by the directors. In deciding to invest in, lend to or otherwise deal with a corporation, shareholders and creditors transfer control over their assets to the corporation, and hence to the directors and officers, in the expectation that the directors and officers will use the corporation's resources to make reasonable business decisions that are to the corporation's advantage.

The statutory fiduciary duty requires directors and officers to act honestly and in good faith vis-à-vis the corporation. They must respect the trust and confidence that have been reposed in them to manage the assets of the corporation in pursuit of the realization of the objects of the corporation. They must avoid conflicts of interest with the corporation. They must avoid abusing their position to gain personal benefit. They must maintain the confidentiality of information they acquire by virtue of their position. Directors and officers must serve the corporation selflessly, honestly and loyally: see K. P. McGuinness, The Law and Practice of Canadian Business Corporations (1999), at p. 715.

The common law concept of fiduciary duty was considered in K.L.B. v. British Columbia, [2003] 2 S.C.R. 403, 2003 SCC 51. In that case, which involved the relationship between the government and foster children, a majority of this Court agreed fait remarquer la Cour d'appel, le juge de première instance semble avoir confondu ces deux obligations. Il s'agit en réalité de deux obligations distinctes visant des fins différentes. C'est pourquoi nous les examinerons séparément dans les présents motifs.

A. L'obligation fiduciaire prévue par la loi : l'al. 122(1)a) de la LCSA

34 Les administrateurs et les dirigeants des sociétés sont investis d'un pouvoir considérable en matière de déploiement et de gestion des ressources financières, humaines et matérielles. Dans le cas des administrateurs de sociétés constituées en vertu de la LCSA, ce pouvoir trouve sa source à l'art. 102 de la Loi. Dans le cas des dirigeants, il s'agit des pouvoirs qui leur sont délégués par les administrateurs. Lorsqu'ils décident d'investir dans une société, de lui consentir un prêt ou de faire autrement affaire avec celle-ci, les actionnaires et les créanciers cèdent le contrôle de leurs actifs à la société et, par conséquent, à ses administrateurs et à ses dirigeants et s'attendent à ce qu'ils utilisent les ressources de la société pour prendre des décisions d'affaires raisonnables qui profiteront à la société.

35 En vertu de l'obligation fiduciaire prévue par la loi, les administrateurs et les dirigeants doivent agir avec intégrité et de bonne foi au mieux des intérêts de la société. Ils doivent respecter la confiance qui leur a été accordée et gérer les actifs qui leur sont confiés de manière à réaliser les objectifs de la société. Ils doivent éviter les conflits d'intérêts avec la société. Ils ne doivent pas profiter du poste qu'ils occupent pour tirer un avantage personnel. Ils doivent préserver la confidentialité des renseignements auxquels leurs fonctions leur donnent accès. Les administrateurs et les dirigeants doivent servir la société de manière désintéressée et avec loyauté et intégrité : voir K. P. McGuinness, The Law and Practice of Canadian Business Corporations (1999), p. 715.

36 La notion d'obligation fiduciaire de la common law a été examinée dans l'arrêt K.L.B. c. Colombie-Britannique, [2003] 2 R.C.S. 403, 2003 CSC 51. Dans cet arrêt concernant la relation entre l'État et des enfants en foyer d'accueil, notre Cour à la with McLachlin C.J. who stated, at paras. 40-41 and 49:

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

Fiduciary duties arise in a number of different contexts, including express trusts, relationships marked by discretionary power and trust, and the special responsibilities of the Crown in dealing with aboriginal interests. . . .

What . . . might the content of the fiduciary duty be if it is understood . . . as a private law duty arising simply from the relationship of discretionary power and trust between the Superintendent and the foster children? In Lac Minerals Ltd. v. International Corona Resources Ltd., [1989] 2 S.C.R. 574, at pp. 646-47, La Forest J. noted that there are certain common threads running through fiduciary duties that arise from relationships marked by discretionary power and trust, such as loyalty and "the avoidance of a conflict of duty and interest and a duty not to profit at the expense of the beneficiary". However, he also noted that "[t]he obligation imposed may vary in its specific substance depending on the relationship" (p. 646). . . .

. . .

. . . concern for the best interests of the child informs the parental fiduciary relationship, as La Forest J. noted in M. (K.) v. M. (H.), supra, at p. 65. But the duty imposed is to act loyally, and not to put one's own or others' interests ahead of the child's in a manner that abuses the child's trust. . . . The parent who exercises undue influence over the child in economic matters for his own gain has put his own interests ahead of the child's, in a manner that abuses the child's trust in him. The same may be said of the parent who uses a child for his sexual gratification or a parent who, wanting to avoid trouble for herself and her household, turns a blind eye to the abuse of a child by her spouse. The parent need not, as the Court of Appeal suggested in the case at bar, be consciously motivated by a desire for profit or personal advantage; nor does it have to be her own interests, rather than those of a third party, that she puts ahead of the child's. It is rather a question of disloyalty — of putting someone's interests ahead of the child's in a manner that abuses the child's trust. Negligence, even aggravated negligence, will not ground parental fiduciary liability unless it is associated with breach of trust in this sense. [Emphasis added.]

majorité a souscrit aux motifs de la juge en chef McLachlin qui a affirmé ce qui suit aux par. 40-41 et 49 :

Les obligations fiduciaires prennent naissance dans divers contextes, notamment dans le contexte des fiducies expresses, dans celui des relations caractérisées par un pouvoir discrétionnaire et par un lien de confiance, ainsi que dans celui des responsabilités particulières qui incombent à l'État concernant les droits des Autochtones. . .

Quel serait [. . .] le contenu de l'obligation fiduciaire si on devait [. . .] l'interpréter comme une obligation de droit privé découlant simplement de la relation entre le surintendant et les enfants en foyer d'accueil, caractérisée par un pouvoir discrétionnaire et par un lien de confiance? Dans l'arrêt Lac Minerals Ltd. c. International Corona Resources Ltd., [1989] 2 R.C.S. 574, le juge La Forest a souligné aux p. 646-647 que certains éléments communs se dégageaient des obligations fiduciaires issues des relations caractérisées par un pouvoir discrétionnaire et par un lien de confiance, notamment la loyauté et « l'obligation d'éviter les conflits de devoirs ou d'intérêts et celle de ne pas faire de profits aux dépens du bénéficiaire ». Il a cependant fait remarquer que « [l]a nature particulière de cette obligation peut varier selon les rapports concernés » (p. 646). . .

. . .

Le souci de promouvoir l'intérêt supérieur de l'enfant se trouve à la base de la relation fiduciaire des parents, comme l'a souligné le juge La Forest dans M. (K.) c. M. (H.), précité, p. 65. Mais l'obligation qui leur incombe est celle d'agir en toute loyauté et de ne pas faire passer leurs propres intérêts ou ceux d'autres personnes avant ceux de l'enfant, en abusant de sa confiance. [. . .] Le parent qui, recherchant son propre profit, abuse de son influence sur l'enfant relativement à des questions financières fait passer ses intérêts avant ceux de l'enfant, en abusant de sa confiance. Cela vaut également pour le parent qui exploite un enfant afin d'assouvir ses désirs sexuels ou pour celui qui, voulant préserver sa tranquillité et celle de la famille, ferme les yeux sur les abus commis par son conjoint. Comme la Cour d'appel l'a dit en l'espèce, il n'est pas nécessaire que le parent soit motivé consciemment par le désir de réaliser un bénéfice ou de tirer un avantage personnel; il n'est pas non plus nécessaire qu'il préfère ses intérêts, plutôt que ceux d'un tiers, à ceux de l'enfant. Il s'agit plutôt d'un manque de loyauté — de faire passer les intérêts d'autres personnes avant ceux de l'enfant, en abusant de sa confiance. La négligence, même grave, ne saurait engager la responsabilité fiduciaire des parents si elle n'implique pas d'abus de confiance en ce sens. [Nous soulignons.]

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

The issue to be considered here is the "specific substance" of the fiduciary duty based on the relationship of directors to corporations under the CBCA.

It is settled law that the fiduciary duty owed by directors and officers imposes strict obligations: see Canadian Aero Service Ltd. v. O'Malley, [1974] S.C.R. 592, at pp. 609-10, per Laskin J. (as he then was), where it was decided that directors and officers may even have to account to the corporation for profits they make that do not come at the corporation's expense:

> The reaping of a profit by a person at a company's expense while a director thereof is, of course, an adequate ground upon which to hold the director accountable. Yet there may be situations where a profit must be disgorged, although not gained at the expense of the company, on the ground that a director must not be allowed to use his position as such to make a profit even if it was not open to the company, as for example, by reason of legal disability, to participate in the transaction. An analogous situation, albeit not involving a director, existed for all practical purposes in the case of Phipps v. Boardman [[1967] 2 A.C. 46], which also supports the view that liability to account does not depend on proof of an actual conflict of duty and self-interest. Another, quite recent, illustration of a liability to account where the company itself had failed to obtain a business contract and hence could not be regarded as having been deprived of a business opportunity is Industrial Development Consultants Ltd. v. Cooley [[1972] 2 All E.R. 162], a judgment of a Court of first instance. There, the managing director, who was allowed to resign his position on a false assertion of ill health, subsequently got the contract for himself. That case is thus also illustrative of the situation where a director's resignation is prompted by a decision to obtain for himself the business contract denied to his company and where he does obtain it without disclosing his intention. [Emphasis added.]

A compelling argument for making directors accountable for profits made as a result of their position, though not at the corporation's expense, is presented by J. Brock, "The Propriety of Profitmaking:

37 L'élément qu'il convient d'examiner en l'espèce est la « nature particulière » de l'obligation fiduciaire découlant des rapports entre les administrateurs et les sociétés en vertu de la LCSA.

38 Il est bien établi en droit que l'obligation fiduciaire à laquelle sont tenus les administrateurs et les dirigeants leur impose des obligations strictes : voir Canadian Aero Service Ltd. c. O'Malley, [1974] R.C.S. 592, p. 609-610, le juge Laskin (plus tard Juge en chef), où il a été décidé que les administrateurs et les dirigeants peuvent même être tenus de rendre compte à la société des profits qu'ils ont réalisés sans que ce soit aux dépens de la société :

> Le fait qu'une personne retire un profit aux dépens d'une compagnie alors qu'elle en est un administrateur, constitue de toute évidence un motif valable sur lequel fonder une obligation de rendre compte. Et pourtant, il peut exister des situations où un profit doit être restitué, bien qu'il n'ait pas été acquis aux dépens de la compagnie, pour le motif qu'un administrateur ne doit pas avoir le droit de se servir de sa position comme telle aux fins de faire un profit, même si la compagnie n'avait pas la faculté, à cause, par exemple, d'une incapacité légale, de participer à l'opération. Une situation analogue, qui toutefois ne mettait pas en cause un administrateur, se retrouve à toutes fins utiles dans l'arrêt Phipps v. Boardman [[1967] 2 A.C. 46], où on a aussi souscrit à l'avis que l'obligation de rendre compte n'est pas subordonnée à la preuve d'un conflit réel d'intérêts et d'obligations. L'arrêt Industrial Development Consultants Ltd. v. Cooley [[1972] 2 All E.R. 162], un jugement émanant d'une cour de première instance, est un autre exemple assez récent d'une obligation de rendre compte lorsque la compagnie elle-même n'a pas réussi à obtenir un contrat d'affaires et ne pouvait donc pas être considérée comme ayant été privée d'une occasion d'affaires. Dans cette dernière affaire, l'administrateur délégué à l'exécutif, à qui on avait permis de démissionner parce qu'il s'était faussement déclaré malade, a par la suite obtenu le contrat en son nom personnel. Cette affaire-là met aussi en évidence la situation où un administrateur donne sa démission après avoir décidé de s'approprier le contrat d'affaires refusé à sa compagnie et où il fait effectivement accepter sa démission sans révéler son intention. [Nous soulignons.]

Dans « The Propriety of Profitmaking : Fiduciary Duty and Unjust Enrichment » (2000), 58 R.D.U.T. 185, p. 204-205, J. Brock présente des raisons convaincantes d'exiger que les administrateurs rendent

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

Fiduciary Duty and Unjust Enrichment" (2000), 58 U.T. Fac. L. Rev. 185, at pp. 204-5.

39 However, it is not required that directors and officers in all cases avoid personal gain as a direct or indirect result of their honest and good faith supervision or management of the corporation. In many cases the interests of directors and officers will innocently and genuinely coincide with those of the corporation. If directors and officers are also shareholders, as is often the case, their lot will automatically improve as the corporation's financial condition improves. Another example is the compensation that directors and officers usually draw from the corporations they serve. This benefit, though paid by the corporation, does not, if reasonable, ordinarily place them in breach of their fiduciary duty. Therefore, all the circumstances may be scrutinized to determine whether the directors and officers have acted honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the corporation.

40 In our opinion, the trial judge's determination that there was no fraud or dishonesty in the Wise brothers' attempts to solve the mounting inventory problems of Peoples and Wise stands in the way of a finding that they breached their fiduciary duty. Greenberg J. stated:

> We hasten to add that in the present case, the Wise Brothers derived no direct personal benefit from the new domestic inventory procurement policy, albeit that, as the controlling shareholders of Wise Stores, there was an indirect benefit to them. Moreover, as was conceded by the other parties herein, in deciding to implement the new domestic inventory procurement policy, there was no dishonesty or fraud on their part.

((1998), 23 C.B.R. (4th) 200, at para. 183)

The Court of Appeal relied heavily on this finding by the trial judge, as do we. At para. 83 QL, Pelletier J.A. stated that:

compte des profits qu'ils réalisent grâce au poste qu'ils occupent, même si ces profits n'ont pas été réalisés aux dépens de la société.

Cependant, il n'est pas obligatoire que les administrateurs et les dirigeants évitent dans tous les cas les gains personnels résultant directement ou indirectement de la surveillance ou de la gestion intègre et de bonne foi de la société. Dans bien des cas, les intérêts des administrateurs et des dirigeants coïncident par hasard mais légitimement avec ceux de la société. Si les administrateurs et les dirigeants sont aussi actionnaires, comme c'est souvent le cas, leur situation s'améliorera automatiquement en même temps que la situation financière de la société. Il en sera de même de la rémunération que les sociétés versent à leurs administrateurs et dirigeants. S'il est raisonnable, cet avantage, même s'il est versé par la société, n'entraîne habituellement pas la violation de leur obligation fiduciaire. Par conséquent, toutes les circonstances peuvent faire l'objet d'un examen minutieux pour déterminer si les administrateurs et les dirigeants ont agi avec intégrité et de bonne foi au mieux des intérêts de la société.

À notre avis, le juge de première instance ayant conclu qu'il n'y a eu ni fraude ni malhonnêteté de la part des frères Wise lorsqu'ils ont tenté de régler les problèmes d'approvisionnement de plus en plus graves de Peoples et de Wise, il est impossible de conclure qu'ils ont manqué à leur obligation fiduciaire. Le juge Greenberg a dit ce qui suit :

> [TRADUCTION] Nous nous empressons d'ajouter qu'en l'espèce, les frères Wise n'ont tiré aucun avantage personnel direct de la nouvelle politique d'approvisionnement commun même si, en tant qu'actionnaires majoritaires de Wise Stores, ils en ont tiré un avantage indirect. De plus, comme l'ont reconnu les autres parties à l'instance, il n'y a eu ni malhonnêteté ni fraude de leur part lorsqu'ils ont décidé d'appliquer la nouvelle politique d'approvisionnement.

((1998), 23 C.B.R. (4th) 200, par. 183)

La Cour d'appel s'est fortement appuyée sur cette conclusion du juge de première instance, tout comme nous d'ailleurs. Au paragraphe 84, le juge Pelletier a dit ce qui suit :

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

[TRANSLATION] In regard to fiduciary duty, I would like to point out that the brothers were driven solely by the wish to resolve the problem of inventory procurement affecting both the operations of Peoples Inc. and those of Wise. [This is a] motivation that is in line with the pursuit of the interests of the corporation within the meaning of paragraph 122(1)(a) C.B.C.A. and that does not expose them to any justified criticism.

À l'égard du devoir de loyauté, je rappelle que les frères n'étaient animés que du désir de solutionner le problème de gestion des inventaires, qui affectait tout autant les opérations de Peoples Inc. que celles de Wise. Voilà donc une motivation qui s'inscrit dans la poursuite des intérêts de la société au sens de l'article 122(1)a) L.C.S.A. et qui ne prête le flanc à aucun reproche justifié.

As explained above, there is no doubt that both Peoples and Wise were struggling with a serious inventory management problem. The Wise brothers considered the problem and implemented a policy they hoped would solve it. In the absence of evidence of a personal interest or improper purpose in the new policy, and in light of the evidence of a desire to make both Wise and Peoples "better" corporations, we find that the directors did not breach their fiduciary duty under s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA. See 820099 Ontario Inc. v. Harold E. Ballard Ltd. (1991), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 123 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)) (aff'd (1991), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 113 (Ont. Div. Ct.)), in which Farley J., at p. 171, correctly observes that in resolving a conflict between majority and minority shareholders, it is safe for directors and officers to act to make the corporation a "better corporation".

41 Comme nous l'avons expliqué précédemment, il est indubitable que Peoples et Wise étaient aux prises avec un grave problème de gestion des stocks. Les frères Wise ont examiné le problème et ont mis en application une politique qui, espéraient-ils, permettrait de le régler. En l'absence d'éléments de preuve de l'existence d'un intérêt personnel ou d'une fin illégitime de la nouvelle politique, et compte tenu de la preuve d'une volonté de faire de Wise et de Peoples de « meilleures » entreprises, nous concluons que les administrateurs n'ont pas manqué à leur obligation fiduciaire énoncée à l'al. 122(1)a) de la LCSA. Voir la décision 820099 Ontario Inc. c. Harold E. Ballard Ltd. (1991), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 123 (C. Ont. (Div. gén.)) (conf. par (1991), 3 B.L.R. (2d) 113 (C. div. Ont.)), dans laquelle le juge Farley a fait remarquer à juste titre, à la p. 171, qu'en réglant un différend entre actionnaires majoritaires et actionnaires minoritaires, il est prudent pour les administrateurs et les dirigeants d'agir de manière à faire de la société une [TRADUCTION] « meilleure entreprise ».

This appeal does not relate to the non-statutory duty directors owe to shareholders. It is concerned only with the statutory duties owed under the CBCA. Insofar as the statutory fiduciary duty is concerned, it is clear that the phrase the "best interests of the corporation" should be read not simply as the "best interests of the shareholders". From an economic perspective, the "best interests of the corporation" means the maximization of the value of the corporation: see E. M. Iacobucci, "Directors' Duties in Insolvency: Clarifying What Is at Stake" (2003), 39 Can. Bus. L.J. 398, at pp. 400-1. However, the courts have long recognized that various other factors may be relevant in determining what directors should consider in soundly managing with a view to the best interests of the corporation. For example, in Teck Corp. v. Millar

42 Le présent pourvoi ne porte pas sur l'obligation non prévue par la loi qui incombe aux administrateurs à l'égard des actionnaires. Il concerne uniquement les obligations légales que leur impose la LCSA. Pour ce qui est de l'obligation fiduciaire prévue par la loi, il est évident qu'il ne faut pas interpréter l'expression « au mieux des intérêts de la société » comme si elle signifiait simplement « au mieux des intérêts des actionnaires ». D'un point de vue économique, l'expression « au mieux des intérêts de la société» s'entend de la maximisation de la valeur de l'entreprise : voir E. M. Iacobucci, « Directors' Duties in Insolvency : Clarifying What Is at Stake » (2003), 39 Rev. can. dr. comm. 398, p. 400-401. Les tribunaux reconnaissent toutefois depuis longtemps que divers autres facteurs peuvent servir à déterminer les

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

(1972), 33 D.L.R. (3d) 288 (B.C.S.C.), Berger J. stated, at p. 314:

> A classical theory that once was unchallengeable must yield to the facts of modern life. In fact, of course, it has. If today the directors of a company were to consider the interests of its employees no one would argue that in doing so they were not acting bona fide in the interests of the company itself. Similarly, if the directors were to consider the consequences to the community of any policy that the company intended to pursue, and were deflected in their commitment to that policy as a result, it could not be said that they had not considered bona fide the interests of the shareholders.
>
> I appreciate that it would be a breach of their duty for directors to disregard entirely the interests of a company's shareholders in order to confer a benefit on its employees: Parke v. Daily News Ltd., [1962] Ch. 927. But if they observe a decent respect for other interests lying beyond those of the company's shareholders in the strict sense, that will not, in my view, leave directors open to the charge that they have failed in their fiduciary duty to the company.

The case of Re Olympia & York Enterprises Ltd. and Hiram Walker Resources Ltd. (1986), 59 O.R. (2d) 254 (Div. Ct.), approved, at p. 271, the decision in Teck, supra. We accept as an accurate statement of law that in determining whether they are acting with a view to the best interests of the corporation it may be legitimate, given all the circumstances of a given case, for the board of directors to consider, inter alia, the interests of shareholders, employees, suppliers, creditors, consumers, governments and the environment.

43 The various shifts in interests that naturally occur as a corporation's fortunes rise and fall do not, however, affect the content of the fiduciary duty under s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA. At all times, directors and officers owe their fiduciary obligation to the corporation. The interests of the corporation are not to be éléments dont les administrateurs devraient tenir compte dans une gestion judicieuse au mieux des intérêts de la société. Par exemple, dans l'affaire Teck Corp. c. Millar (1972), 33 D.L.R. (3d) 288 (C.S.C.-B.), le juge Berger a dit ce qui suit à la p. 314 :

> [TRADUCTION] Une théorie classique auparavant incontestable doit être abandonnée devant l'évidence des faits de la vie moderne. C'est effectivement ce qui s'est passé. Si, aujourd'hui, les administrateurs d'une société devaient tenir compte des intérêts de ses employés, nul n'alléguerait que, ce faisant, ils n'ont pas agi de bonne foi dans l'intérêt de la société elle-même. De même, si les administrateurs devaient tenir compte des répercussions pour la collectivité d'une politique que l'entreprise a l'intention d'appliquer et ne pouvaient, en conséquence, s'en tenir à cette politique, on ne saurait dire qu'ils n'ont pas tenu compte de bonne foi des intérêts des actionnaires.
>
> Je suis conscient que les administrateurs manqueraient à leur devoir s'ils faisaient totalement abstraction des intérêts des actionnaires d'une société afin de conférer un avantage à ses employés : Parke c. Daily News Ltd., [1962] Ch. 927. Cependant, s'ils tiennent dûment compte des autres intérêts qui ne sont pas strictement ceux des actionnaires de la société, il ne sera pas possible, à mon avis, de les accuser d'avoir manqué à leur obligation fiduciaire envers la société.

Dans la décision Re Olympia & York Enterprises Ltd. and Hiram Walker Resources Ltd. (1986), 59 O.R. (2d) 254 (C. div.), la cour a approuvé à la p. 271 la décision Teck, précitée. Nous considérons qu'il est juste d'affirmer en droit que, pour déterminer s'il agit au mieux des intérêts de la société, il peut être légitime pour le conseil d'administration, vu l'ensemble des circonstances dans un cas donné, de tenir compte notamment des intérêts des actionnaires, des employés, des fournisseurs, des créanciers, des consommateurs, des gouvernements et de l'environnement.

Les changements qui se produisent naturellement dans les intérêts en cause en fonction des succès et des échecs d'une entreprise n'ont cependant aucune incidence sur le contenu de l'obligation fiduciaire énoncée à l'al. 122(1)a) de la LCSA. Les administrateurs et les dirigeants ont en tout temps leur confused with the interests of the creditors or those of any other stakeholders.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

The interests of shareholders, those of the creditors and those of the corporation may and will be consistent with each other if the corporation is profitable and well capitalized and has strong prospects. However, this can change if the corporation starts to struggle financially. The residual rights of the shareholders will generally become worthless if a corporation is declared bankrupt. Upon bankruptcy, the directors of the corporation transfer control to a trustee, who administers the corporation's assets for the benefit of creditors.

Short of bankruptcy, as the corporation approaches what has been described as the "vicinity of insolvency", the residual claims of shareholders will be nearly exhausted. While shareholders might well prefer that the directors pursue high-risk alternatives with a high potential payoff to maximize the shareholders' expected residual claim, creditors in the same circumstances might prefer that the directors steer a safer course so as to maximize the value of their claims against the assets of the corporation.

The directors' fiduciary duty does not change when a corporation is in the nebulous "vicinity of insolvency". That phrase has not been defined; moreover, it is incapable of definition and has no legal meaning. What it is obviously intended to convey is a deterioration in the corporation's financial stability. In assessing the actions of directors it is evident that any honest and good faith attempt to redress the corporation's financial problems will, if successful, both retain value for shareholders and improve the position of creditors. If unsuccessful, it will not qualify as a breach of the statutory fiduciary duty.

For a discussion of the shifting interests and incentives of shareholders and creditors, see W. D. Gray, obligation fiduciaire envers la société. Les intérêts de la société ne doivent pas se confondre avec ceux des actionnaires, avec ceux des créanciers ni avec ceux de toute autre partie intéressée.

44 Les intérêts des actionnaires, ceux des créanciers et ceux de la société peuvent concorder et vont concorder si l'entreprise est rentable, dispose de capitaux suffisants et a de bonnes perspectives de croissance. La situation pourra toutefois être différente si la société commence à avoir des difficultés financières. Les droits résiduels des actionnaires perdront généralement toute valeur si une société est déclarée en faillite. Au moment de la faillite, les administrateurs de la société en cèdent le contrôle à un syndic qui gère les actifs de la société au profit des créanciers.

45 En l'absence de faillite comme telle, lorsque la société approche ce qu'on appelle le « bord de l'insolvabilité », les droits résiduels des actionnaires seront presque épuisés. Alors que les actionnaires pourraient préférer que les administrateurs cherchent des solutions de rechange à risque et à potentiel de rendement très élevés afin de maximiser leurs droits résiduels éventuels, les créanciers, en de telles circonstances, pourraient préférer que les administrateurs adoptent une stratégie plus prudente afin de maximiser la valeur de leurs créances par rapport aux actifs de la société.

46 L'obligation fiduciaire des administrateurs reste la même lorsqu'une société se trouve dans la situation que décrit l'expression nébuleuse « au bord de l'insolvabilité ». Cette expression n'a pas été définie; elle ne peut être définie et n'a aucune signification en droit. Elle vise manifestement à illustrer une détérioration de la stabilité financière de la société. Dans l'évaluation des mesures prises par les administrateurs, il est évident que toute tentative faite avec intégrité et de bonne foi pour redresser la situation financière de la société aura, si elle réussit, conservé une valeur pour les actionnaires tout en améliorant la situation des créanciers. En cas d'échec, on ne pourra y voir un manquement à l'obligation fiduciaire prévue par la loi.

47 Pour une analyse des intérêts et de la motivation variables des actionnaires et des créanciers,

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

"Peoples v. Wise and Dylex: Identifying Stakeholder Interests upon or near Corporate Insolvency — Stasis or Pragmatism?" (2003), 39 Can. Bus. L.J. 242, at p. 257; E. M. Iacobucci and K. E. Davis, "Reconciling Derivative Claims and the Oppression Remedy" (2000), 12 S.C.L.R. (2d) 87, at p. 114. In resolving these competing interests, it is incumbent upon the directors to act honestly and in good faith with a view to the best interests of the corporation. In using their skills for the benefit of the corporation when it is in troubled waters financially, the directors must be careful to attempt to act in its best interests by creating a "better" corporation, and not to favour the interests of any one group of stakeholders. If the stakeholders cannot avail themselves of the statutory fiduciary duty (the duty of loyalty, supra) to sue the directors for failing to take care of their interests, they have other means at their disposal.

48 The Canadian legal landscape with respect to stakeholders is unique. Creditors are only one set of stakeholders, but their interests are protected in a number of ways. Some are specific, as in the case of amalgamation: s. 185 of the CBCA. Others cover a broad range of situations. The oppression remedy of s. 241(2)(c) of the CBCA and the similar provisions of provincial legislation regarding corporations grant the broadest rights to creditors of any common law jurisdiction: see D. Thomson, "Directors, Creditors and Insolvency: A Fiduciary Duty or a Duty Not to Oppress?" (2000), 58 U.T. Fac. L. Rev. 31, at p. 48. One commentator describes the oppression remedy as "the broadest, most comprehensive and most open-ended shareholder remedy in the common law world": S. M. Beck, "Minority Shareholders' Rights in the 1980s", in Corporate Law in the 80s (1982), 311, at p. 312. While Beck was concerned with shareholder remedies, his observation applies equally to those of creditors.

49 The fact that creditors' interests increase in relevancy as a corporation's finances deteriorate is apt to be relevant to, inter alia, the exercise of discretion voir W. D. Gray, « Peoples v. Wise and Dylex : Identifying Stakeholder Interests upon or near Corporate Insolvency — Stasis or Pragmatism? » (2003), 39 Rev. can. dr. comm. 242, p. 257; E. M. Iacobucci et K. E. Davis, « Reconciling Derivative Claims and the Oppression Remedy » (2000), 12 S.C.L.R. (2d) 87, p. 114. Pour concilier ces intérêts opposés, il incombe aux administrateurs d'agir avec intégrité et de bonne foi au mieux des intérêts de la société. En utilisant leurs compétences au profit de la société lorsqu'elle a des difficultés financières, les administrateurs doivent essayer d'agir au mieux des intérêts de la société en créant une « meilleure » société, et éviter de favoriser les intérêts d'un groupe d'intéressés en particulier. Si les intéressés ne peuvent invoquer l'obligation fiduciaire prévue par la loi (le devoir de loyauté déjà mentionné) pour poursuivre les administrateurs qui auraient négligé leurs intérêts, d'autres moyens s'offrent à eux.

Le régime juridique applicable au Canada aux parties intéressées est unique en son genre. Les créanciers ne constituent qu'une catégorie de parties intéressées, mais leurs intérêts sont protégés de nombreuses manières. Certaines mesures sont particulières, par exemple en cas de fusion : art. 185 de la LCSA. D'autres visent un large éventail de situations. Le redressement prévu en cas d'abus de droit à l'al. 241(2)c) de la LCSA et les dispositions similaires des lois provinciales sur les sociétés accordent aux créanciers les droits les plus étendus dans tous les ressorts de common law : voir D. Thomson, « Directors, Creditors and Insolvency : A Fiduciary Duty or a Duty Not to Oppress? » (2000), 58 R.D.U.T. 31, p. 48. Un auteur considère que le recours en cas d'abus de droit est [TRADUCTION] « le recours le plus général, le plus complet et le plus vaste de tous les pays de common law qui soit offert aux actionnaires » : S. M. Beck, « Minority Shareholders' Rights in the 1980s », dans Corporate Law in the 80s (1982), 311, p. 312. Beck traitait alors des recours offerts aux actionnaires, mais ses observations s'appliquent également aux recours offerts aux créanciers.

Le fait que les intérêts des créanciers deviennent de plus en plus importants au fur et à mesure que les finances de la société se détériorent peut être by a court in granting standing to a party as a "complainant" under s. 238(d) of the CBCA as a "proper person" to bring a derivative action in the name of the corporation under ss. 239 and 240 of the CBCA, or to bring an oppression remedy claim under s. 241 of the CBCA.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

Section 241(2)(c) authorizes a court to grant a remedy if

> (c) the powers of the directors of the corporation or any of its affiliates are or have been exercised in a manner > that is oppressive or unfairly prejudicial to or that unfairly disregards the interests of any security holder, creditor, director or officer . . . .
>

A person applying for the oppression remedy must, in the court's opinion, fall within the definition of "complainant" found in s. 238 of the CBCA:

> (a) a registered holder or beneficial owner, and a former registered holder or beneficial owner, of a security of a corporation or any of its affiliates,
>
> (b) a director or an officer or a former director or officer of a corporation or any of its affiliates,
>
> (c) the Director, or
>
> (d) any other person who, in the discretion of a court, is a proper person to make an application under this Part.

Creditors, who are not security holders within the meaning of para. (a), may therefore apply for the oppression remedy under para. (d) by asking a court to exercise its discretion and grant them status as a "complainant".

Section 241 of the CBCA provides a possible mechanism for creditors to protect their interests from the prejudicial conduct of directors. In our view, the availability of such a broad oppression valable et pertinent, par exemple, lorsqu'un tribunal exerce son pouvoir discrétionnaire d'accorder à une partie la qualité de « plaignant » en vertu de l'al. 238*d*) de la LCSA parce qu'elle est la personne qui « a qualité » pour présenter une action oblique au nom d'une société en vertu des art. 239 et 240 de la LCSA, ou pour présenter une demande de redressement pour abus de droit en vertu de l'art. 241 de la LCSA.

50 L'alinéa 241(2)c) autorise un tribunal à accorder un redressement si

> . . . la société ou l'une des personnes morales de son groupe [. . .] abuse des droits des détenteurs de valeurs mobilières, créanciers, administrateurs ou dirigeants, ou, se montre injuste à leur égard en leur portant préjudice ou en ne tenant pas compte de leurs intérêts :
>
> . . .
>
> c) soit par la façon dont ses administrateurs exercent ou ont exercé leurs pouvoirs.

La personne qui demande un redressement en cas d'abus de droit doit, de l'avis du tribunal, être visée par la définition de « plaignant » que l'on trouve à l'art. 238 de la LCSA :

> a) Le détenteur inscrit ou le véritable propriétaire, ancien ou actuel, de valeurs mobilières d'une société ou de personnes morales du même groupe;
>
> b) tout administrateur ou dirigeant, ancien ou actuel, d'une société ou de personnes morales du même groupe;
>
> c) le directeur;
>
> d) toute autre personne qui, d'après un tribunal, a qualité pour présenter les demandes visées à la présente partie.

Les créanciers qui ne sont pas détenteurs de valeurs mobilières au sens de l'al. a) peuvent donc solliciter un redressement en cas d'abus de droit en vertu de l'al. d) en demandant au tribunal d'exercer son pouvoir discrétionnaire pour leur conférer la qualité de « plaignant ».

51 L'article 241 de la LCSA prévoit un mécanisme qui permet aux créanciers d'obtenir la protection de leurs intérêts en cas de conduite préjudiciable des administrateurs. À notre avis, l'existence d'un remedy undermines any perceived need to extend the fiduciary duty imposed on directors by s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA to include creditors.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

52 The Court of Appeal, at paras. 98-99 QL, referred to 373409 Alberta Ltd. (Receiver of) v. Bank of Montreal, [2002] 4 S.C.R. 312, 2002 SCC 81, as an indication by this Court that the interests of creditors do not have any bearing on the assessment of the conduct of directors. However, the receiver in that case was representing the corporation's rights and not the creditors' rights; therefore, the case has no application in this appeal. 373409 Alberta involved an action taken by the receiver on behalf of the corporation against a bank for the tort of conversion. The sole shareholder, director and officer of 373409 Alberta Ltd., who was also the sole shareholder, director and officer of another corporation, Legacy Holdings Ltd., had deposited a cheque payable to 373409 Alberta Ltd. into the account of Legacy. While it was recognized, at para. 22, that the diversion of money from 373409 Alberta Ltd. to Legacy "may very well have been wrongful vis-à-vis [373409 Alberta Ltd.]'s creditors" (none of whom were involved in the action), no fraud had been committed against the corporation itself and the bank, acting on proper authority, had not wrongfully interfered with the cheque by carrying out the deposit instructions. The statutory duties of the directors were not at issue, nor were they considered, and no assessment of the creditors' rights was made. With respect, Pelletier J.A.'s broad reading of 373409 Alberta was misplaced.

53 In light of the availability both of the oppression remedy and of an action based on the duty of care, which will be discussed below, stakeholders have viable remedies at their disposal. There is no need to read the interests of creditors into the duty set out in s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA. Moreover, in the circumstances of this case, the Wise brothers did not breach the statutory fiduciary duty owed to the corporation.

recours aussi général en cas d'abus de droit remet en cause l'utilité apparente d'étendre aux créanciers l'obligation fiduciaire imposée aux administrateurs par l'al. 122(1)a) de la LCSA.

La Cour d'appel a indiqué, aux par. 99 et 100, que selon l'arrêt 373409 Alberta Ltd. (Séquestre de) c. Banque de Montréal, [2002] 4 R.C.S. 312, 2002 CSC 81, notre Cour considère que les intérêts des créanciers n'ont aucune incidence sur l'appréciation de la conduite des administrateurs. Cependant, dans cette affaire, le séquestre faisait valoir les droits de la société et non ceux des créanciers; par conséquent, cette décision ne s'applique pas au présent pourvoi. L'arrêt 373409 Alberta concernait une action intentée par le séquestre au nom de la société contre une banque pour délit de détournement. L'unique actionnaire, administrateur et directeur de 373409 Alberta Ltd., qui était aussi l'unique actionnaire, administrateur et directeur d'une autre société, Legacy Holdings Ltd., avait déposé un chèque payable à l'ordre de 373409 Alberta Ltd. au compte de Legacy. Même s'il a été reconnu, au par. 22, que le détournement des fonds de 373409 Alberta Ltd. au bénéfice de Legacy « peut fort bien avoir été préjudiciable aux créanciers de [373409 Alberta Ltd.] » (dont aucun n'était partie à l'action), aucune fraude n'avait été commise envers la société elle-même et la banque, qui avait été dûment autorisée, n'avait pas détourné injustement le chèque en se conformant aux instructions données quant au dépôt. Les obligations que la loi impose aux administrateurs n'étaient pas en litige et n'ont pas été examinées, et aucune évaluation des droits des créanciers n'a été faite. Avec égards, l'interprétation large qu'a donnée le juge Pelletier à l'arrêt 373409 Alberta n'était pas fondée.

Compte tenu de la possibilité d'un recours en cas d'abus de droit, en plus de l'action fondée sur l'obligation de diligence, qui est analysée ci-après, les parties intéressées peuvent exercer des recours efficaces. Il n'est pas nécessaire d'interpréter les intérêts des créanciers comme étant visés par l'obligation prévue à l'al. 122(1)a) de la LCSA. En outre, dans les circonstances du présent pourvoi, les frères Wise n'ont pas manqué à l'obligation fiduciaire que leur impose la loi envers la société.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

NBC BOA 001094

B. The Statutory Duty of Care: Section 122(1)(b) of the CBCA

As mentioned above, the CBCA does not provide for a direct remedy for creditors against directors for breach of their duties and the C.C.Q. is used as suppletive law.

In Quebec, directors have been held liable to creditors in respect of either contractual or extra-contractual obligations. Contractual liability arises where the director personally guarantees a contractual obligation of the company. Liability also arises where the director personally acts in a manner that triggers his or her extra-contractual liability. See P. Martel, "Le 'voile corporatif' — l'attitude des tribunaux face à l'article 317 du Code civil du Québec" (1998), 58 R. du B. 95, at pp. 135-36; Brasserie Labatt ltée v. Lanoue, [1999] Q.J. No. 1108 (QL) (C.A.), per Forget J.A., at para. 29. It is clear that the Wise brothers cannot be held contractually liable as they did not guarantee the debts at issue here. Extra-contractual liability is the remaining possibility.

To determine the applicability of extra-contractual liability in this appeal, it is necessary to refer to art. 1457 C.C.Q.:

> Every person has a duty to abide by the rules of conduct which lie upon him, according to the circumstances, usage or law, so as not to cause injury to another.
>
> Where he is endowed with reason and fails in this duty, he is responsible for any injury he causes to another person by such fault and is liable to reparation for the injury, whether it be bodily, moral or material in nature.
>
> He is also liable, in certain cases, to reparation for injury caused to another by the act or fault of another person or by the act of things in his custody. [Emphasis added.]

Three elements of art. 1457 C.C.Q. are relevant to the integration of the director's duty of care into the principles of extra-contractual liability: who has the duty ("every person"), to whom is the duty owed ("another") and what breach will trigger liability ("rules of conduct"). It is clear that directors and officers come within the expression "every

B. L'obligation de diligence prévue par la loi : l'al. 122(1)b) de la LCSA

54 Tel qu'indiqué précédemment, la LCSA n'offre aux créanciers aucun recours exprès contre les administrateurs pour manquement à leurs obligations, et le C.c.Q. est employé à titre de droit supplétif.

55 Au Québec, les administrateurs sont tenus responsables envers les créanciers de leurs obligations contractuelles ou extracontractuelles. Il y a responsabilité contractuelle lorsque l'administrateur garantit personnellement une obligation contractuelle de la société. Sa responsabilité est aussi retenue lorsque l'administrateur agit personnellement de manière à engager sa responsabilité extracontractuelle. Voir P. Martel, « Le "voile corporatif" — l'attitude des tribunaux face à l'article 317 du Code civil du Québec » (1998), 58 R. du B. 95, p. 135-136; Brasserie Labatt ltée c. Lanoue, [1999] J.Q. n^{o} 1108 (QL) (C.A.), le juge Forget, par. 29. Il est évident que les frères Wise ne peuvent être tenus responsables contractuellement puisqu'ils n'ont pas garanti les dettes en litige en l'espèce. Il reste à examiner la responsabilité extracontractuelle.

56 Pour déterminer s'il y a responsabilité extracontactuelle dans le présent pourvoi, il faut se reporter à l'art. 1457 C.c.Q. :

> Toute personne a le devoir de respecter les règles de conduite qui, suivant les circonstances, les usages ou la loi, s'imposent à elle, de manière à ne pas causer de préjudice à autrui.
>
> Elle est, lorsqu'elle est douée de raison et qu'elle manque à ce devoir, responsable du préjudice qu'elle cause par cette faute à autrui et tenue de réparer ce préjudice, qu'il soit corporel, moral ou matériel.
>
> Elle est aussi tenue, en certains cas, de réparer le préjudice causé à autrui par le fait ou la faute d'une autre personne ou par le fait des biens qu'elle a sous sa garde. [Nous soulignons.]

Trois éléments de l'art. 1457 C.c.Q. sont pertinents à l'intégration, dans les principes de la responsabilité extracontractuelle, de l'obligation de diligence de l'administrateur : la personne à qui incombe l'obligation (« [t]oute personne »), le bénéficiaire de l'obligation (« autrui ») et le manquement qui engage la responsabilité (« règles de conduite »).

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

person". It is equally clear that the word "another" can include the creditors. The reach of art. 1457 C.C.Q. is broad and it has been given an open and inclusive meaning. See Regent Taxi & Transport Co. v. Congrégation des Petits Frères de Marie, [1929] S.C.R. 650, per Anglin C.J., at p. 655 (rev'd on other grounds, [1932] 2 D.L.R. 70 (P.C.)):

> . . . to narrow the prima facie scope of art. 1053 C.C. [now art. 1457] is highly dangerous and would necessarily result in most meritorious claims being rejected; many a wrong would be without a remedy.

This liberal interpretation was also affirmed and treated as settled by this Court in Lister v. McAnulty, [1944] S.C.R. 317, and Hôpital Notre-Dame de l'Espérance v. Laurent, [1978] 1 S.C.R. 605.

57 This interpretation can be harmoniously integrated with the wording of the CBCA. Indeed, unlike the statement of the fiduciary duty in s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA, which specifies that directors and officers must act with a view to the best interests of the corporation, the statement of the duty of care in s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA does not specifically refer to an identifiable party as the beneficiary of the duty. Instead, it provides that "[e]very director and officer of a corporation in exercising their powers and discharging their duties shall . . . exercise the care, diligence and skill that a reasonably prudent person would exercise in comparable circumstances." Thus, the identity of the beneficiary of the duty of care is much more open-ended, and it appears obvious that it must include creditors. This result is clearly consistent with the civil law interpretation of the word "another". Therefore, if breach of the standard of care, causation and damages are established, creditors can resort to art. 1457 to have their rights vindicated. The only issue thus remaining is the determination of the "rules of conduct" likely to trigger extracontractual liability. On this issue, art. 1457 is explicit.

L'expression « [t]oute personne » englobe manifestement les administrateurs et les dirigeants. De même, le mot « autrui » peut comprendre les créanciers. L'article 1457 C.c.Q. a une portée étendue et on lui a donné un sens large et inclusif. Voir l'arrêt Regent Taxi & Transport Co. c. Congrégation des Petits Frères de Marie, [1929] R.C.S. 650, le juge en chef Anglin, p. 655 (infirmé pour d'autres motifs, [1932] 2 D.L.R. 70 (C.P.)) :

> [TRADUCTION] . . . il est très dangereux de restreindre la portée apparente de l'art. 1053 du C.c. [maintenant l'art. 1457] car cela pourrait inévitablement entraîner le rejet des demandes les mieux fondées; nombreux seraient les actes répréhensibles pour lesquels il n'existerait pas de recours.

Dans les arrêts Lister c. McAnulty, [1944] R.C.S. 317, et Hôpital Notre-Dame de l'Espérance c. Laurent, [1978] 1 R.C.S. 605, notre Cour a aussi confirmé cette interprétation large et a considéré qu'elle était constante.

Il est possible d'intégrer harmonieusement cette interprétation au texte de la LCSA. En fait, contrairement à l'énoncé de l'obligation fiduciaire prévue par l'al. 122(1)a) de la LCSA, qui précise que les administrateurs et les dirigeants doivent agir au mieux des intérêts de la société, l'énoncé de l'obligation de diligence figurant à l'al. 122(1)b) de la LCSA ne précise pas une personne identifiable qui serait bénéficiaire de l'obligation. L'alinéa prévoit plutôt que « [l]es administrateurs et les dirigeants doivent, dans l'exercice de leurs fonctions, agir [. . .] avec le soin, la diligence et la compétence dont ferait preuve, en pareilles circonstances, une personne prudente. » Ainsi, le bénéficiaire de l'obligation de diligence est identifié de façon beaucoup plus générale et il semble évident qu'il faut y inclure les créanciers. Cette solution est clairement conforme à l'interprétation que le droit civil donne au mot « autrui ». Par conséquent, si un bris de l'obligation de diligence, le lien de causalité et les dommages sont établis, les créanciers peuvent avoir recours à l'art. 1457 pour faire valoir leurs droits. La seule question qu'il reste maintenant à examiner est donc celle des « règles de conduite » susceptibles de mettre en cause la responsabilité extracontractuelle. Sur ce point, l'art. 1457 est clair.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

The first paragraph of art. 1457 does not set the standard of conduct. Instead, it incorporates by reference s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA. The statutory duty of care is a "duty to abide by [a] rul[e] of conduct which lie[s] upon [them], according to the . . . law, so as not to cause injury to another". Thus, for the purpose of determining whether the Wise brothers can be held liable, only the CBCA is relevant. It is therefore necessary to outline the requirements of the duty of care embodied in s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA.

58 Le premier paragraphe de l'art. 1457 n'énonce pas la norme de conduite. Il incorpore plutôt par renvoi l'al. 122(1)b) de la LCSA. L'obligation de diligence prévue par la loi est un « devoir de respecter [une] règl[e] de conduite qui, suivant [. . .] la loi, s'impos[e] à [eux], de manière à ne pas causer de préjudice à autrui ». Ainsi, pour déterminer si les frères Wise peuvent être tenus responsables, seule la LCSA est pertinente. Il est donc nécessaire de rappeler les exigences de l'obligation de diligence prévue à l'al. 122(1)b) de la LCSA.

That directors must satisfy a duty of care is a long-standing principle of the common law, although the duty of care has been reinforced by statute to become more demanding. Among the earliest English cases establishing the duty of care were Dovey v. Cory, [1901] A.C. 477 (H.L.); In re Brazilian Rubber Plantations and Estates, Ltd., [1911] 1 Ch. 425; and In re City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., [1925] 1 Ch. 407 (C.A.). In substance, these cases held that the standard of care was a reasonably relaxed, subjective standard. The common law required directors to avoid being grossly negligent with respect to the affairs of the corporation and judged them according to their own personal skills, knowledge, abilities and capacities. See McGuinness, supra, at p. 776: "Given the history of the case law in this area, and the prevailing standards of competence displayed in commerce generally, it is quite clear that directors were not expected at common law to have any particular business skill or judgment."

59 La common law reconnaît depuis longtemps le principe suivant lequel les administrateurs sont tenus à une obligation de diligence. Cette obligation est cependant plus exigeante depuis qu'elle est accentuée par la loi. Les arrêts Dovey c. Cory, [1901] A.C. 477 (H.L.), In re Brazilian Rubber Plantations and Estates, Ltd., [1911] 1 Ch. 425, et In re City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., [1925] 1 Ch. 407 (C.A.), comptent parmi les décisions anglaises les plus anciennes à l'origine de l'obligation de diligence. Essentiellement, selon ces décisions, la norme de diligence était une norme subjective plutôt souple. La common law exigeait que les administrateurs évitent les fautes grossières eu égard aux affaires de la société et prévoyait qu'ils devaient être jugés suivant leurs compétences, leurs connaissances et leurs aptitudes personnelles. Selon McGuinness, op. cit., p. 776, [TRADUCTION] « [c]ompte tenu de la jurisprudence dans ce domaine et des principales normes de compétence dans le commerce en général, il est assez évident que la common law n'exigeait pas que les administrateurs possèdent des compétences spéciales en affaires ou un sens particulier des affaires. »

The 1971 report entitled Proposals for a New Business Corporations Law for Canada (1971) ("Dickerson Report") culminated the work of a committee headed by R. W. V. Dickerson which had been appointed by the federal government to study the need for new federal business corporations legislation. This report preceded the enactment of the CBCA by four years and influenced the eventual structure of the CBCA.

60 Le rapport de 1971 intitulé Propositions pour un nouveau droit des corporations commerciales canadiennes (1971) (« Rapport Dickerson ») fut l'aboutissement des travaux d'un comité présidé par R. W. V. Dickerson qui fut chargé, par le gouvernement fédéral, d'examiner s'il était nécessaire d'adopter une nouvelle loi fédérale sur les sociétés par actions. Ce rapport a précédé de quatre ans l'adoption de la LCSA et il a influencé la forme que celle-ci a finalement prise.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

61 The standard recommended by the Dickerson Report was objective, requiring directors and officers to meet the standard of a "reasonably prudent person" (vol. II, at. p. 74):

9.19

(1) Every director and officer of a corporation in exercising his powers and discharging his duties shall

. . .

(b) exercise the care, diligence and skill of a reasonably prudent person.

The report described how this proposed duty of care differed from the prevailing common law duty of care (vol. I, at p. 83):

242. The formulation of the duty of care, diligence and skill owed by directors represents an attempt to upgrade the standard presently required of them. The principal change here is that whereas at present the law seems to be that a director is only required to demonstrate the degree of care, skill and diligence that could reasonably be expected from him, having regard to his knowledge and experience — Re City Equitable Fire Insurance Co., [1925] Ch. 425 — under s. 9.19(1)(b) he is required to conform to the standard of a reasonably prudent man. Recent experience has demonstrated how low the prevailing legal standard of care for directors is, and we have sought to raise it significantly. We are aware of the argument that raising the standard of conduct for directors may deter people from accepting directorships. The truth of that argument has not been demonstrated and we think it is specious. The duty of care imposed by s. 9.19(1)(b) is exactly the same as that which the common law imposes on every professional person, for example, and there is no evidence that this has dried up the supply of lawyers, accountants, architects, surgeons or anyone else. It is in any event cold comfort to a shareholder to know that there is a steady supply of marginally competent people available under present law to manage his investment. [Emphasis added.]

62 The statutory duty of care in s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA emulates but does not replicate the language proposed by the Dickerson Report. The main difference is that the enacted version includes the words "in comparable circumstances", which modifies the La norme recommandée dans le Rapport Dickerson était objective, obligeant les administrateurs et les dirigeants à se conformer à la norme de la « personne raisonnablement prudente » (vol. II, p. 81) :

9.19

(1) Dans l'exercice de ses pouvoirs et l'accomplissement de ses obligations tout administrateur et tout fonctionnaire d'une corporation doit

. . .

b) exercer le soin, la diligence et de l'habileté d'une personne raisonnablement prudente.

Le rapport expliquait la distinction entre l'obligation de diligence proposée et l'obligation de diligence reconnue par la common law (vol. I, p. 92) :

242. La formulation de l'obligation de soin, de diligence et d'habileté à laquelle les administrateurs sont tenus, représente une tentative de hausser le standard de conduite présentement exigé d'eux. Le changement principal modifie la loi actuelle qui semble exiger que l'administrateur fasse preuve du degré de soin, de diligence et d'habileté auquel on pourrait raisonnablement s'attendre de lui, eu égard à sa connaissance et à son expérience (Re City Equitable Fire Insurance Co. (1925) Ch. 425). L'article 9.19(1)b) lui impose l'obligation de se comporter en homme raisonnablement prudent. L'expérience récente ayant démontré que le standard de conduite généralement reconnu par la loi pour des administrateurs est fort bas, nous avons songé à le rehausser considérablement. Nous sommes conscients du fait que hausser ces standards peut faire hésiter certaines personnes à accepter un poste d'administrateur. La justesse de cet argument n'a pas été démontrée et nous le croyons spécieux. L'obligation imposée par l'article 9.19(1)b) est exactement la même que celle imposée par la common law à tout professionnel. Il n'y a pourtant pas de signes que cela a tari la source des avocats, comptables, architectes, chirurgiens ou autres. De plus c'est de toute façon un bien piètre réconfort pour un actionnaire de savoir qu'il existe un vaste réservoir de personnes de compétence très moyenne qui, d'après la loi actuelle, ont la charge de gérer son investissement. [Nous soulignons.]

Le texte de l'al. 122(1)b) de la LCSA qui énonce l'obligation de diligence reprend presque mot à mot celui que propose le Rapport Dickerson. La principale différence réside dans le fait que la version qui a été adoptée comprend les mots « en pareilles statutory standard by requiring the context in which a given decision was made to be taken into account. This is not the introduction of a subjective element relating to the competence of the director, but rather the introduction of a contextual element into the statutory standard of care. It is clear that s. 122(1)(b) requires more of directors and officers than the traditional common law duty of care outlined in, for example, Re City Equitable Fire Insurance, supra.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

The standard of care embodied in s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA was described by Robertson J.A. of the Federal Court of Appeal in Soper v. Canada, [1998] 1 F.C. 124, at para. 41, as being "objective subjective". Although that case concerned the interpretation of a provision of the Income Tax Act, it is relevant here because the language of the provision establishing the standard of care was identical to that of s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA. With respect, we feel that Robertson J.A.'s characterization of the standard as an "objective subjective" one could lead to confusion. We prefer to describe it as an objective standard. To say that the standard is objective makes it clear that the factual aspects of the circumstances surrounding the actions of the director or officer are important in the case of the s. 122(1)(b) duty of care, as opposed to the subjective motivation of the director or officer, which is the central focus of the statutory fiduciary duty of s. 122(1)(a) of the CBCA.

The contextual approach dictated by s.122(1)(b) of the CBCA not only emphasizes the primary facts but also permits prevailing socio-economic conditions to be taken into consideration. The emergence of stricter standards puts pressure on corporations to improve the quality of board decisions. The establishment of good corporate governance rules should be a shield that protects directors from allegations that they have breached their duty of care. However, even with good corporate governance rules, directors' decisions can still be open to criticism from outsiders. Canadian courts, like their counterparts in the United States, the United Kingdom, Australia and New Zealand, have tended circonstances », ce qui modifie la norme légale en exigeant qu'il soit tenu compte du contexte dans lequel une décision donnée a été prise. Le législateur n'a pas introduit un élément subjectif relatif à la compétence de l'administrateur, mais plutôt un élément contextuel dans la norme de diligence prévue par la loi. Il est clair que l'al. 122(1)b) est plus exigeant à l'égard des administrateurs et des dirigeants que la norme traditionnelle de diligence prévue par la common law et expliquée, par exemple, dans la décision Re City Equitable Fire Insurance, précitée.

63 Dans l'arrêt Soper c. Canada, [1998] 1 C.F. 124, par. 41, le juge Robertson de la Cour d'appel fédérale a décrit la norme de diligence énoncée à l'al. 122(1)b) de la LCSA comme étant une norme « objective subjective ». Même s'il portait sur l'interprétation d'une disposition de la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu, cet arrêt est pertinent en l'espèce parce que le libellé de la disposition établissant la norme de diligence est identique à celui de l'al. 122(1)b) de la LCSA. Nous estimons pour notre part que le fait, pour le juge Robertson, de qualifier la norme par l'expression « objective subjective » peut semer la confusion. Nous préférons la décrire comme une norme objective. Ainsi, il devient évident que dans le cas de l'obligation de diligence prévue à l'al. 122(1)b), ce sont les éléments factuels du contexte dans lequel agissent l'administrateur ou le dirigeant qui sont importants, plutôt que les motifs subjectifs de ces derniers, qui sont l'objet essentiel de l'obligation fiduciaire prévue à l'al. 122(1)a) de la LCSA.

64 La méthode contextuelle dictée par l'al. 122(1)b) de la LCSA fait ressortir non seulement les faits primaires mais elle permet aussi qu'il soit tenu compte des conditions socio-économiques existantes. L'apparition de normes plus strictes force les sociétés à améliorer la qualité des décisions des conseils d'administration. L'établissement de règles de régie d'entreprise devrait servir de bouclier protégeant les administrateurs contre les allégations de manquement à leur obligation de diligence. Toutefois, même en présence de règles de régie d'entreprise, les décisions des administrateurs peuvent parfois prêter le flanc aux critiques de tiers. En ce qui concerne les mesures prises pour to take an approach with respect to the enforcement of the duty of care that respects the fact that directors and officers often have business expertise that courts do not. Many decisions made in the course of business, although ultimately unsuccessful, are reasonable and defensible at the time they are made. Business decisions must sometimes be made, with high stakes and under considerable time pressure, in circumstances in which detailed information is not available. It might be tempting for some to see unsuccessful business decisions as unreasonable or imprudent in light of information that becomes available ex post facto. Because of this risk of hindsight bias, Canadian courts have developed a rule of deference to business decisions called the "business judgment rule", adopting the American name for the rule.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

NBC BOA 001099

65 In Maple Leaf Foods Inc. v. Schneider Corp. (1998), 42 O.R. (3d) 177, Weiler J.A. stated, at p. 192:

> The law as it has evolved in Ontario and Delaware has the common requirements that the court must be satisfied that the directors have acted reasonably and fairly. The court looks to see that the directors made a reasonable decision not a perfect decision. Provided the decision taken is within a range of reasonableness, the court ought not to substitute its opinion for that of the board even though subsequent events may have cast doubt on the board's determination. As long as the directors have selected one of several reasonable alternatives, deference is accorded to the board's decision. This formulation of deference to the decision of the Board is known as the "business judgment rule". The fact that alternative transactions were rejected by the directors is irrelevant unless it can be shown that a particular alternative was definitely available and clearly more beneficial to the company than the chosen transaction. [Emphasis added; italics in original; references omitted.]

assurer le respect de l'obligation de diligence, les tribunaux canadiens, tout comme ceux des États-Unis, du Royaume-Uni, de l'Australie et de la Nouvelle-Zélande, ont eu tendance à tenir compte du fait que les administrateurs et les dirigeants ont souvent, en matière commerciale, des connaissances que ne possèdent pas les tribunaux. De nombreuses décisions prises dans le cours des activités d'une entreprise sont raisonnables et justifiables au moment où elles sont prises, même si elles ont éventuellement conduit à un échec. Les décisions d'affaires doivent parfois être prises dans un contexte où les renseignements sont incomplets, les enjeux sont élevés et la situation est pressante. On pourrait être tenté de considérer à la lumière de renseignements qui deviennent disponibles ultérieurement que des décisions d'affaires qui n'ont pas abouti étaient déraisonnables ou imprudentes. En raison de ce risque d'examen a posteriori, les tribunaux canadiens ont élaboré à l'égard des décisions d'affaires une règle de retenue appelée, suivant la terminologie employée aux États-Unis, la « règle de l'appréciation commerciale ».

Dans l'arrêt Maple Leaf Foods Inc. c. Schneider Corp. (1998), 42 O.R. (3d) 177, la juge Weiler de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario a dit ce qui suit, à la p. 192 :

> [TRADUCTION] Tels qu'ils ont évolué, le droit applicable en Ontario et celui applicable au Delaware ont une exigence commune, savoir que le tribunal doit être convaincu que les administrateurs ont agi de façon raisonnable et équitable. Le tribunal examine si les administrateurs ont pris une décision raisonnable et non pas la meilleure décision. Dès lors que la décision prise conserve un caractère raisonnable, le tribunal ne devrait pas substituer son avis à celui du conseil, même si les événements ultérieurs peuvent avoir jeté le doute sur la décision du conseil. Dans la mesure où les administrateurs ont choisi l'une des diverses solutions raisonnables qui s'offraient, la retenue est de mise à l'égard de la décision du conseil. Cette retenue à l'égard de la décision du conseil est ce qu'on appelle la « règle de l'appréciation commerciale ». Il importe peu que les administrateurs aient écarté d'autres transactions, sauf si on peut démontrer que l'une de ces autres transactions pouvait effectivement être réalisée et était manifestement plus avantageuse pour l'entreprise que celle qui a été choisie. [Nous soulignons; italiques dans l'original; renvois omis.]

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

In order for a plaintiff to succeed in challenging a business decision he or she has to establish that the directors acted (i) in breach of the duty of care and (ii) in a way that caused injury to the plaintiff: W. T. Allen, J. B. Jacobs and L. E. Strine, Jr., "Function Over Form: A Reassessment of Standards of Review in Delaware Corporation Law" (2001), 26 Del. J. Corp. L. 859, at p. 892.

Directors and officers will not be held to be in breach of the duty of care under s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA if they act prudently and on a reasonably informed basis. The decisions they make must be reasonable business decisions in light of all the circumstances about which the directors or officers knew or ought to have known. In determining whether directors have acted in a manner that breached the duty of care, it is worth repeating that perfection is not demanded. Courts are ill-suited and should be reluctant to second-guess the application of business expertise to the considerations that are involved in corporate decision making, but they are capable, on the facts of any case, of determining whether an appropriate degree of prudence and diligence was brought to bear in reaching what is claimed to be a reasonable business decision at the time it was made.

The trustee alleges that the Wise brothers breached their duty of care under s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA by implementing the new procurement policy to the detriment of Peoples' creditors. After considering all the evidence, we agree with the Court of Appeal that the implementation of the new policy was a reasonable business decision that was made with a view to rectifying a serious and urgent business problem in circumstances in which no solution may have been possible. The trial judge's conclusion that the new policy led inexorably to Peoples' failure and bankruptcy was factually incorrect and constituted a palpable and overriding error.

In fact, as noted by Pelletier J.A., there were many factors other than the new policy that 66 Pour obtenir gain de cause lorsqu'il conteste une décision d'affaires, le demandeur doit établir que les administrateurs ont manqué à leur obligation de diligence et ce, d'une manière qui lui a causé un préjudice : W. T. Allen, J. B. Jacobs et L. E. Strine, Jr., « Function Over Form : A Reassessment of Standards of Review in Delaware Corporation Law » (2001), 26 Del. J. Corp. L. 859, p. 892.

67 On ne considérera pas que les administrateurs et les dirigeants ont manqué à l'obligation de diligence énoncée à l'al. 122(1)b) de la LCSA s'ils ont agi avec prudence et en s'appuyant sur les renseignements dont ils disposaient. Les décisions prises doivent constituer des décisions d'affaires raisonnables compte tenu de ce qu'ils savaient ou auraient dû savoir. Lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si les administrateurs ont manqué à leur obligation de diligence, il convient de répéter que l'on n'exige pas d'eux la perfection. Les tribunaux ne doivent pas substituer leur opinion à celle des administrateurs qui ont utilisé leur expertise commerciale pour évaluer les considérations qui entrent dans la prise de décisions des sociétés. Ils sont toutefois en mesure d'établir, à partir des faits de chaque cas, si l'on a exercé le degré de prudence et de diligence nécessaire pour en arriver à ce qu'on prétend être une décision d'affaires raisonnable au moment où elle a été prise.

68 Le syndic prétend que les frères Wise ont manqué à l'obligation de diligence que leur impose l'al. 122(1)b) de la LCSA en instaurant la nouvelle politique d'approvisionnement au détriment des créanciers de Peoples. Après avoir examiné l'ensemble de la preuve, nous convenons avec la Cour d'appel que l'instauration de la nouvelle politique était une décision d'affaires raisonnable qui a été prise en vue de corriger un problème d'ordre commercial grave et urgent dans un cas où il n'existait peut-être aucune solution. En concluant que la nouvelle politique avait inexorablement entraîné le déclin et la faillite de Peoples, le juge de première instance a mal interprété les faits et a commis une erreur manifeste et dominante.

69 Comme l'a fait remarquer le juge Pelletier, de nombreux facteurs, outre la nouvelle politique, ont contributed more directly to Peoples' bankruptcy. Peoples had lost $10 million annually while being operated by M & S. Wise, which was only marginally profitable and solvent with annual sales of $100 million (versus $160 million for Peoples), had hoped to improve the performance of its new acquisition. Given that the transaction was a fully leveraged buyout, for Wise and Peoples to succeed, Peoples' performance needed to improve dramatically. Unfortunately for both Wise and Peoples, the retail market in eastern Canada had become very competitive in the early 1990s, and this trend continued with the arrival of Wal-Mart in 1994. At paras. 152 and 154 QL, Pelletier J.A. stated:

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

[TRANSLATION] In reality, it was that particularly unfavourable financial situation in which the two corporations found themselves that caused their downfall, and it was M. & S. that, to protect its own interests, sounded the charge in December, rightly or wrongly judging that Peoples Inc.'s situation would only worsen over time. It is crystal-clear that the bankruptcy occurred at the most propitious time for M. & S.'s interests, when inventories were high and suppliers were unpaid. In fact, M. & S. recovered the entire balance due on the selling price and almost all of the other debts it was owed.

. . .

. . . the trial judge did not take into account the fact that the brothers derived no direct benefit from the transaction impugned, that they acted in good faith and that their true intention was to find a solution to the serious inventory management problem that each of the two corporations was facing. Because of an assessment error, he also ignored the fact that Peoples Inc. received a sizable consideration for the goods it delivered to Wise. Lastly, I note that the act for which the brothers were found liable, i.e. the adoption of a new joint inventory procurement policy, is not as serious as the trial judge made it out to be and that, in opposition to his view, the act was also not the true cause of the bankruptcy of Peoples Inc. [Emphasis added.]

70 The Wise brothers treated the implementation of the new policy as a decision made in the contribué plus directement à la faillite de Peoples. Les pertes annuelles de Peoples, pendant qu'elle était exploitée par M & S, s'élevaient à 10 millions de dollars. Wise, qui était à peine rentable et à peine solvable avec des ventes annuelles de 100 millions de dollars (contre 160 millions de dollars pour Peoples), avait espéré accroître la rentabilité de sa nouvelle acquisition. Étant donné qu'il s'agissait d'une acquisition réalisée entièrement par emprunt, si Wise et Peoples voulaient que leurs efforts soient couronnés de succès, il devait y avoir une amélioration considérable de la rentabilité de Peoples. Malheureusement pour Wise et Peoples, la concurrence dans le marché de la vente au détail dans l'Est du Canada était devenue féroce au début des années 1990, une tendance qui s'est poursuivie avec l'arrivée de Wal-Mart en 1994. Aux paragraphes 153 et 155, le juge Pelletier a dit ce qui suit :

En réalité, c'est la présence de cette conjoncture financière particulièrement défavorable aux deux sociétés qui a provoqué leur chute et c'est M. & S. qui, pour la protection de ses intérêts propres, a sonné la charge en décembre, jugeant à tort ou à raison que la situation de Peoples Inc. ne pouvait qu'empirer avec le temps. Il saute aux yeux que la faillite est survenue au moment le plus propice aux intérêts de M. & S., lorsque les inventaires étaient élevés et les fournisseurs impayés. M. & S. a d'ailleurs récupéré la totalité du reliquat dû sur le prix de vente de même que la presque totalité de ses autres créances.

. . .

. . . le premier juge ne tient pas compte du fait que les frères n'ont retiré aucun avantage direct de la transaction attaquée, qu'ils étaient de bonne foi et que leur intention véritable consistait à rechercher une solution au sérieux problème de gestion d'inventaire auquel chacune des deux sociétés était confrontée. En raison d'une erreur d'appréciation, il ignore aussi que Peoples Inc. a reçu une contrepartie importante pour les biens qu'elle a livrés à Wise. Je note enfin que le geste à l'origine de la condamnation, en l'occurrence, l'adoption du nouveau système d'approvisionnement commun, n'a pas le caractère de gravité que lui attribue le premier juge et que, contrairement à la perception qu'il exprime, ce geste n'a pas non plus été la véritable cause de la faillite de Peoples Inc. [Nous soulignons.]

Les frères Wise ont traité la mise en œuvre de la nouvelle politique comme une décision prise ordinary course of business and, while no formal agreement evidenced the arrangement, a monthly record was made of the inventory transfers. Although this may appear to be a loose business practice, by the autumn of 1993, Wise had already consolidated several aspects of the operations of the two companies. Legally they were two separate entities. However, the financial fate of the two companies had become intertwined. In these circumstances, there was little or no economic incentive for the Wise brothers to jeopardize the interests of Peoples in favour of the interests of Wise. In fact, given the tax losses that Peoples had carried forward, the companies had every incentive to keep Peoples profitable in order to reduce their combined tax liabilities.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

dans le cours normal des activités de l'entreprise et, même si aucune entente formelle ne constatait l'arrangement, les transferts des stocks étaient consignés mensuellement. Bien qu'on puisse penser qu'il s'agit d'une pratique commerciale peu rigoureuse, dès l'automne 1993, Wise avait déjà, en pratique, intégré plusieurs des services des deux sociétés. Légalement, il s'agissait de deux entités distinctes. Toutefois, l'avenir financier des deux sociétés était inextricablement lié. Dans les circonstances, les frères Wise n'avaient, au plan financier, aucun avantage à privilégier les intérêts de Wise au détriment de ceux de Peoples. En fait, vu les pertes fiscales que Peoples avait reportées, les deux sociétés avaient toutes les raisons de s'assurer de la rentabilité de Peoples afin de réduire leurs dettes fiscales combinées.

Arguably, the Wise brothers could have been more precise in pursuing a resolution to the intractable inventory management problems, having regard to all the troublesome circumstances involved at the time the new policy was implemented. But we, like the Court of Appeal, are not satisfied that the adoption of the new policy breached the duty of care under s. 122(1)(b) of the CBCA. The directors cannot be held liable for a breach of their duty of care in respect of the creditors of Peoples.

71 Les frères Wise auraient peut-être, compte tenu de la situation difficile à l'époque de l'instauration de la nouvelle politique, pu être plus minutieux dans leur recherche d'une solution aux épineux problèmes de gestion des stocks. Mais, comme la Cour d'appel, nous ne sommes pas convaincus que l'adoption de la nouvelle politique ait contrevenu à l'obligation de diligence énoncée à l'al. 122(1)b) de la LCSA. Les administrateurs ne peuvent pas être tenus responsables pour manquement à leur obligation de diligence à l'égard des créanciers de Peoples.

The Court of Appeal relied on two additional provisions of the CBCA that in its view could rescue the Wise brothers from a finding that they breached the duty of care: ss. 44(2) and 123(4).

72 La Cour d'appel s'est appuyée sur deux autres dispositions de la LCSA qui, selon elle, pourraient empêcher de conclure que les frères Wise ont manqué à leur obligation de diligence; il s'agit du par. 44(2) et du par. 123(4).

Section 44 of the CBCA, which was in force at the time of the impugned transactions but has since been repealed, permitted a wholly-owned subsidiary to give financial assistance to its holding body corporate:

73 L'article 44 de la LCSA, qui était en vigueur à l'époque des transactions contestées mais qui a été abrogé depuis, autorisait une filiale à part entière à fournir une aide financière à sa société mère :

44. (1) Subject to subsection (2), a corporation or any corporation with which it is affiliated shall not, directly or indirectly, give financial assistance by means of a loan, guarantee or otherwise

44. (1) Sauf dans les limites prévues au paragraphe (2), il est interdit à la société ou aux sociétés de son groupe de fournir une aide financière même indirecte, notamment sous forme de prêt ou de caution :

. . . . . .

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

(2) A corporation may give financial assistance by means of a loan, guarantee or otherwise

. . .

(c) to a holding body corporate if the corporation is a wholly-owned subsidiary of the holding body corporate;

(2) La société peut accorder une aide financière, notamment sous forme de prêt ou de caution :

. . .

c) à sa société mère, si elle lui appartient en toute propriété;

74 While s. 44(2) as it then read qualified the prohibition under s. 44(1), it did not serve to supplant the duties of the directors under s. 122(1) of the CBCA. The Court of Appeal erred in concluding that s. 44(2) served as a blanket legitimization of financial assistance given by wholly-owned subsidiaries to parent corporations. In our opinion, it is incumbent upon directors and officers to exercise their powers in conformity with the duties of s. 122(1).

Même s'il restreignait la portée de l'interdiction prévue au par. 44(1), l'ancien par. 44(2) ne faisait pas disparaître les obligations imposées aux administrateurs par le par. 122(1) de la LCSA. La Cour d'appel a conclu à tort que le par. 44(2) servait à légitimer de façon générale l'aide financière fournie par une filiale à part entière à sa société mère. À notre avis, il incombe aux administrateurs et aux dirigeants d'exercer leurs pouvoirs conformément aux obligations qu'impose le par. 122(1).

75 Although s. 44(2) authorized certain forms of financial assistance between corporations, this cannot exempt directors and officers from potential liability under s. 122(1) for any financial assistance given by subsidiaries to the parent corporation.

Bien qu'il autorisait certaines formules d'aide financière entre sociétés, le par. 44(2) ne permet pas de soustraire les administrateurs et les dirigeants à leur responsabilité éventuelle en vertu du par. 122(1) pour toute aide financière fournie par une filiale à sa société mère.

76 When faced with the serious inventory management problem, the Wise brothers sought the advice of the vice-president of finance, David Clément. The Wise brothers claimed as an additional argument that in adopting the solution proposed by Clément, they were relying in good faith on the judgment of a person whose profession lent credibility to his statement, in accordance with the defence provided for in s. 123(4)(b) (now s. 123(5)) of the CBCA. The Court of Appeal accepted the argument. We disagree.

Face au grave problème de gestion des stocks, les frères Wise ont demandé conseil au vice-président aux finances, David Clément. Ils ont fait valoir comme argument additionnel qu'en retenant la solution proposée par M. Clément, ils se sont fiés de bonne foi au jugement d'une personne dont la profession permettait d'accorder foi à sa déclaration, conformément au moyen de défense prévu à l'al. 123(4)b) (maintenant le par. 123(5)) de la LCSA. La Cour d'appel a retenu cet argument. Nous ne sommes pas d'accord avec celle-ci.

77 The reality that directors cannot be experts in all aspects of the corporations they manage or supervise shows the relevancy of a provision such as s. 123(4)(b). At the relevant time, the text of s. 123(4) read:

L'utilité d'une disposition telle que l'al. 123(4)b) tient à ce que les administrateurs ne peuvent connaître à fond toutes les facettes des entreprises qu'ils gèrent ou dont ils surveillent la gestion. À l'époque pertinente, le par. 123(4) prévoyait ce qui suit :

123. . . .

. . .

(4) A director is not liable under section 118, 119 or 122 if he relies in good faith on

123. . . .

. . .

(4) N'est pas engagée, en vertu des articles 118, 119 ou 122, la responsabilité de l'administrateur qui s'appuie de bonne foi sur :

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

(a) financial statements of the corporation represented to him by an officer of the corporation or in a written report of the auditor of the corporation fairly to reflect the financial condition of the corporation; or

(b) a report of a lawyer, accountant, engineer, appraiser or other person whose profession lends credibility to a statement made by him.

Although Clément did have a bachelor's degree in commerce and 15 years of experience in administration and finance with Wise, this experience does not correspond to the level of professionalism required to allow the directors to rely on his advice as a bar to a suit under the duty of care. The named professional groups in s. 123(4)(b) were lawyers, accountants, engineers, and appraisers. Clément was not an accountant, was not subject to the regulatory overview of any professional organization and did not carry independent insurance coverage for professional negligence. The title of vice-president of finance should not automatically lead to a conclusion that Clément was a person "whose profession lends credibility to a statement made by him". It is noteworthy that the word "profession" is used, not "position". Clément was simply a non-professional employee of Wise. His judgment on the appropriateness of the solution to the inventory management problem must be regarded in that light. Although we might accept for the sake of argument that Clément was better equipped and positioned than the Wise brothers to devise a plan to solve the inventory management problems, this is not enough. Therefore, in our opinion, the Wise brothers cannot successfully invoke the defence provided by s. 123(4)(b) of the CBCA but must rely on the other defences raised.

a) des états financiers de la société reflétant équitablement sa situation, d'après l'un de ses dirigeants ou d'après le rapport écrit du vérificateur;

b) les rapports des personnes dont la profession permet d'accorder foi à leurs déclarations, notamment les avocats, comptables, ingénieurs ou estimateurs.

78 Même si M. Clément était titulaire d'un baccalauréat en commerce et qu'il avait 15 ans d'expérience en administration et en finance chez Wise, cette expérience ne correspond pas au degré de professionnalisme requis pour que les administrateurs puissent invoquer les conseils reçus de lui pour faire échec à une poursuite fondée sur l'obligation de diligence. Les groupes de professionnels désignés à l'al. 123(4)b) sont les avocats, les comptables, les ingénieurs et les estimateurs. Monsieur Clément n'était pas comptable, ses activités n'étaient pas réglementées par une organisation professionnelle et il n'avait pas lui-même souscrit à une police d'assurance-responsabilité professionnelle. On ne saurait conclure qu'en raison de son titre de vice-président aux finances, M. Clément était une personne « dont la profession permet d'accorder foi à [ses] déclarations ». Il convient de signaler que c'est le mot « profession » et non le mot « poste » qui est utilisé. Monsieur Clément était un simple employé non professionnel de Wise. C'est à la lumière de ces faits qu'il convient d'analyser son appréciation de l'opportunité de la solution proposée aux problèmes de gestion des stocks. Même si nous admettions, pour les fins de la discussion, que M. Clément était mieux en mesure que les frères Wise d'élaborer un plan destiné à régler les problèmes de gestion des stocks, cela ne suffirait pas. Par conséquent, nous estimons que les frères Wise ne peuvent faire valoir avec succès le moyen de défense prévu à l'al. 123(4)b) de la LCSA mais doivent s'appuyer sur les autres moyens de défense invoqués.

C. The Claim Under Section 100 of the BIA

The trustee also claimed against the Wise brothers under s. 100 of the BIA. That section reads:

100. (1) Where a bankrupt sold, purchased, leased, hired, supplied or received property or services in a reviewable transaction within the period beginning on

C. La réclamation fondée sur l'art. 100 de la LFI

79 Le syndic a également fondé sur l'art. 100 de la LFI sa réclamation contre les frères Wise. Selon cet article :

100. (1) Le tribunal peut, sur demande du syndic, enquêter pour déterminer si le failli qui a vendu, acheté, loué, engagé, fourni ou reçu des biens ou services au

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

the day that is one year before the date of the initial bankruptcy event and ending on the date of the bankruptcy, both dates included, the court may, on the application of the trustee, inquire into whether the bankrupt gave or received, as the case may be, fair market value in consideration for the property or services concerned in the transaction.

(2) Where the court in proceedings under this section finds that the consideration given or received by the bankrupt in the reviewable transaction was conspicuously greater or less than the fair market value of the property or services concerned in the transaction, the court may give judgment to the trustee against the other party to the transaction, against any other person being privy to the transaction with the bankrupt or against all those persons for the difference between the actual consideration given or received by the bankrupt and the fair market value, as determined by the court, of the property or services concerned in the transaction.

80 The provision has two principal elements. First, subs. (1) requires the transaction to have been conducted within the year preceding the date of bankruptcy. Second, subs. (2) requires that the consideration given or received by the bankrupt be "conspicuously greater or less" than the fair market value of the property concerned.

81 The word "may" is found in both ss. 100(1) and 100(2) of the BIA with respect to the jurisdiction of the court. In Standard Trustco Ltd. (Trustee of) v. Standard Trust Co. (1995), 26 O.R. (3d) 1, a majority of the Ontario Court of Appeal held that, even if the necessary preconditions are present, the exercise of jurisdiction under s. 100(1) to inquire into the transaction, and under s. 100(2) to grant judgment, is discretionary. Equitable principles guide the exercise of discretion. We agree.

82 Referring to s. 100(2) of the BIA, in Standard Trustco, supra, at p. 23, Weiler J.A. explained that:

When a contextual approach is adopted it is apparent that although the conditions of the section have been satisfied the court is not obliged to grant judgment. The court has a residual discretion to exercise. The contextual approach indicates that the good faith of the parties, the intention with which the transaction took place, and moyen d'une transaction révisable, au cours de la période allant du premier jour de l'année précédant l'ouverture de la faillite jusqu'à la date de la faillite inclusivement, a donné ou reçu, selon le cas, une juste valeur du marché en contrepartie des biens ou services.

(2) Lorsque le tribunal, dans des instances en vertu du présent article, constate que la contrepartie donnée ou reçue par le failli dans la transaction révisable était manifestement supérieure ou inférieure à la juste valeur du marché des biens ou services sur lesquels portait la transaction, il peut accorder au syndic un jugement contre l'autre partie à la transaction ou contre toute autre personne ayant intérêt à la transaction avec le failli ou contre toutes ces personnes, pour la différence entre la contrepartie réellement donnée ou reçue par le failli et la juste valeur du marché, telle qu'elle est déterminée par le tribunal, des biens ou services sur lesquels porte la transaction.

Cette disposition comporte deux éléments principaux. Premièrement, le par. (1) exige que la transaction soit effectuée au cours de l'année précédant la date de la faillite. Deuxièmement, le par. (2) exige que la contrepartie donnée ou reçue par le failli soit « manifestement supérieure ou inférieure » à la juste valeur marchande des biens en cause.

Le mot « peut » est utilisé tant au par. 100(1) qu'au par. 100(2) de la LFI relativement à la compétence du tribunal. Dans Standard Trustco Ltd. (Trustee of) c. Standard Trust Co. (1995), 26 O.R. (3d) 1, la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario a statué à la majorité que, même si les conditions préalables nécessaires sont remplies, l'exercice du pouvoir d'enquêter sur la transaction prévu au par. 100(1) et du pouvoir d'accorder un jugement prévu au par. 100(2) est discrétionnaire. Les principes d'équité encadrent l'exercice de ce pouvoir discrétionnaire. Nous souscrivons à cette décision.

Au sujet du par. 100(2) de la LFI, dans Standard Trustco, précité, p. 23, la juge Weiler a donné les explications suivantes :

[TRADUCTION] Lorsque la méthode contextuelle est retenue, il est évident que, même si les conditions prévues par l'article sont remplies, le tribunal n'est pas tenu d'accorder un jugement. Le tribunal exerce un pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel. Suivant la méthode contextuelle, la bonne foi des parties, le but de la transaction et l'échange whether fair value was given and received in the transaction are important considerations as to whether that discretion should be exercised.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

We agree with Weiler J.A. and adopt her position; however, this appeal does not turn on the discretion to ultimately impose liability. In our view, the Court of Appeal did not interfere with the trial judge's exercise of discretion in reviewing the facts and finding a palpable and overriding error.

Within the year preceding the date of bankruptcy, Peoples had transferred inventory to Wise for which the trustee claimed Peoples had not received fair market value in consideration. The relevant transactions involved, for the most part, transfers completed in anticipation of the busy holiday season. Given the non-arm's length relationship between Wise and its wholly-owned subsidiary Peoples, there is no question that these inventory transfers could have constituted reviewable transactions.

We share the view of the Court of Appeal that it is not only the final transfers that should be considered. In fairness, the inventory transactions should be considered over the entire period from February to December 1994, which was the period when the new policy was in effect.

In Skalbania (Trustee of) v. Wedgewood Village Estates Ltd. (1989), 37 B.C.L.R. (2d) 88 (C.A.), the test for determining whether the difference in consideration is "conspicuously greater or less" was held to be not whether it is conspicuous to the parties at the time of the transaction, but whether it is conspicuous to the court having regard to all the relevant factors. This is a sound approach. In that case, a difference of $1.18 million between fair market value and the consideration received by the bankrupt was seen as conspicuous, where the fair market value was $6.6 million, leaving a discrepancy of more than 17 percent. While there is no particular percentage that definitively sets the threshold for a conspicuous difference, the percentage difference is a factor.

d'une contrepartie représentant la juste valeur du marché sont des éléments importants pour déterminer s'il y a lieu d'exercer ce pouvoir discrétionnaire.

Nous sommes d'accord avec la juge Weiler et nous adoptons sa position; toutefois, le présent pourvoi ne porte pas sur le pouvoir discrétionnaire d'imposer ultimement une responsabilité. À notre avis, la Cour d'appel ne s'est pas ingérée dans l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire du juge de première instance en examinant les faits et en concluant à l'existence d'une erreur manifeste et dominante.

83 Au cours de l'année qui a précédé la faillite, Peoples a transféré à Wise des marchandises pour lesquelles, selon le syndic, Peoples n'a pas reçu de contrepartie représentant la juste valeur du marché. Les transactions en cause concernaient principalement les transferts effectués en prévision de la période occupée que constitue le temps des Fêtes. Vu le lien de dépendance entre Wise et Peoples, sa filiale à part entière, il n'y a aucun doute que ces transferts de stocks auraient pu constituer des transactions révisables.

84 Nous estimons comme la Cour d'appel qu'il ne faut pas se contenter d'examiner les derniers transferts. En toute équité, il convient d'analyser les transactions effectuées au cours de toute la période de février à décembre 1994, soit la période pendant laquelle la nouvelle politique était appliquée.

85 Selon l'arrêt Skalbania (Trustee of) c. Wedgewood Village Estates Ltd. (1989), 37 B.C.L.R. (2d) 88 (C.A.), le critère permettant de déterminer si la différence entre la contrepartie et sa juste valeur marchande est « manifestement supérieure ou inférieure » n'est pas de savoir si la différence est manifeste pour les parties au moment de la transaction, mais plutôt si elle l'est pour le tribunal eu égard à tous les facteurs pertinents. Il s'agit d'une méthode judicieuse. Dans cette affaire, une différence de 1,18 million de dollars entre la juste valeur du marché et la contrepartie reçue par le failli a été jugée manifeste, la juste valeur du marché étant de 6,6 millions de dollars, ce qui laissait un écart de plus de 17 pour 100. Bien qu'aucun pourcentage particulier ne soit fixé pour déterminer ce qui constitue une différence manifeste, le pourcentage de différence constitue un facteur.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

86 As for the factors that would be relevant to this determination, the court might consider, inter alia: evidence of the margin of error in valuing the types of assets in question; any appraisals made of the assets in question and evidence of the parties' honestly held beliefs regarding the value of the assets in question; and other circumstances adduced in evidence by the parties to explain the difference between the consideration received and fair market value: see L. W. Houlden and G. B. Morawetz, Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law of Canada (3rd ed. (loose-leaf)), vol. 2, at p. 4-114.1.

87 Over the lifespan of the new policy, Peoples transferred to Wise inventory valued at $71.54 million. As of the date of bankruptcy, it had received $59.50 million in property or money from Wise. As explained earlier, the trial judge adjusted the outstanding difference down to a balance of $4.44 million after taking into account, inter alia, the reallocation of general and administrative expenses, and adjustments necessitated by imported inventory transferred from Wise to Peoples. Neither party disputed these figures before this Court. We agree with the Court of Appeal's observation that these findings directly conflict with the trial judge's assertion that Peoples had received no consideration for the inventory transfers on the basis that the outstanding accounts were "neither collected nor collectible" from Wise. Like Pelletier J.A., we conclude that the trial judge's finding in this regard was a palpable and overriding error, and we adopt the view of the Court of Appeal.

88 We are not satisfied that, with regard to all the circumstances of this case, a disparity of slightly more than 6 percent between fair market value and the consideration received constitutes a "conspicuous" difference within the meaning of s. 100(2) of the BIA. Accordingly, we hold that the trustee's claim under the BIA also fails.

Pour ce qui est des autres facteurs qui seraient pertinents à cette décision, le tribunal peut examiner notamment les facteurs suivants : la preuve de la marge d'erreur dans l'évaluation du type de biens en cause; les évaluations qui ont été faites des biens en cause et la preuve de la croyance sincère des parties en ce qui a trait à la valeur de ces biens; les autres éléments présentés en preuve par les parties pour expliquer la différence entre la contrepartie obtenue et la juste valeur du marché : voir L. W. Houlden et G. B. Morawetz, Bankruptcy and Insolvency Law of Canada (3e éd. (feuilles mobiles)), vol. 2, p. 4-114.1.

Pendant la période d'application de la nouvelle politique, Peoples a transféré à Wise des stocks d'une valeur de 71,54 millions de dollars. À la date de la faillite, elle avait reçu de Wise des biens ou des sommes s'élevant à 59,5 millions de dollars. Comme nous l'avons expliqué précédemment, le juge de première instance a ramené la différence à un solde de 4,44 millions de dollars après avoir tenu compte, notamment, de la nouvelle répartition des frais généraux et administratifs et des rajustements nécessaires découlant des transferts par Wise à Peoples des stocks importés. Aucune des parties n'a contesté ces chiffres devant notre Cour. Nous sommes d'accord avec la Cour d'appel qui a fait remarquer que ces conclusions contredisent directement ce qu'a dit le juge de première instance, savoir que Peoples n'avait reçu aucune contrepartie pour les transferts de stocks puisque les comptes recevables [TRADUCTION] « n'ont pas été recouvrés et n'étaient pas recouvrables » de Wise. Comme le juge Pelletier, nous estimons que la conclusion du juge de première instance à cet égard était une erreur manifeste et dominante et nous souscrivons au point de vue de la Cour d'appel.

Nous ne sommes pas convaincus que, compte tenu de toutes les circonstances de la présente espèce, un écart d'un peu plus de 6 pour 100 entre la juste valeur du marché et la contrepartie reçue constitue une différence « manifeste » au sens du par. 100(2) de la LFI. Par conséquent, nous statuons que la réclamation du syndic fondée sur la LFI échoue également.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

In addition to permitting the court to give judgment against the other party to the transaction, s. 100(2) of the BIA also permits it to give judgment against someone who was not a party but was "privy" to the transaction. Given our finding that the consideration for the impugned transactions was not "conspicuously less" than fair market value, there is no need to consider whether the Wise brothers would have been "privy" to the transaction for the purpose of holding them liable under s. 100(2). Nonetheless, the disagreement between the trial judge and the Court of Appeal on the interpretation of "privy" in s. 100(2) of the BIA warrants the following observations.

The trial judge in this appeal had little difficulty finding that the Wise brothers were privy to the transaction within the meaning of s. 100(2). Pelletier J.A., however, preferred a narrow construction in finding that the Wise brothers were not privy to the transactions. He held, at para. 135 QL, that:

> [TRANSLATION] . . . the legislator wanted to provide for the case in which a person other than the co-contracting party of the bankrupt actually received all or part of the benefit resulting from the lack of equality between the respective considerations.

To support this direct benefit requirement, Pelletier J.A. also referred to the French version which uses the term ayant intérêt. While he conceded that the respondent brothers received an indirect benefit from the inventory transfers as shareholders of Wise, Pelletier J.A. found this too remote to be considered "privy" to the transactions (paras. 139-40 QL).

The primary purpose of s. 100 of the BIA is to reverse the effects of a transaction that stripped value from the estate of a bankrupt person. It makes sense to adopt a more inclusive understanding of the word "privy" to prevent someone who might receive indirect benefits to the detriment of a bankrupt's unsatisfied creditors from frustrating the provision's remedial purpose. The word "privy" should be given a broad reading to include those who benefit directly or indirectly from and have knowledge of a transaction occurring for less than fair market value. In our opinion, this rationale is particularly apt when 89 Le paragraphe 100(2) de la LFI autorise le tribunal à accorder un jugement non seulement contre l'autre partie à la transaction, mais aussi contre une partie non contractante « ayant intérêt » à la transaction. Comme nous avons conclu que la contrepartie reçue dans les transactions contestées n'était pas « manifestement inférieure » à la juste valeur du marché, il est inutile d'examiner si les frères Wise auraient eu un « intérêt » à la transaction qui permettrait de conclure à leur responsabilité en vertu du par. 100(2). Quoi qu'il en soit, le désaccord entre le juge de première instance et la Cour d'appel sur l'interprétation des mots « ayant intérêt » au par. 100(2) de la LFI justifie les observations suivantes.

90 En l'espèce, le juge de première instance n'a pas hésité à conclure que les frères Wise avaient un intérêt à la transaction au sens du par. 100(2). Cependant, le juge Pelletier a privilégié une interprétation stricte en concluant que les frères Wise n'avaient pas intérêt aux transactions. Il a dit ce qui suit au par. 136 :

> Le législateur me semble avoir voulu prévoir le cas où c'est une personne autre que le cocontractant du failli qui, en réalité, encaisse tout ou partie du bénéfice résultant de l'absence d'équivalence entre les contreparties respectives.

Pour justifier cette exigence d'un avantage direct, le juge Pelletier a mentionné le texte français où l'on utilise l'expression « ayant intérêt ». Même s'il a admis que les frères intimés ont, en leur qualité d'actionnaires de Wise, tiré un avantage indirect des transferts de stocks, le juge Pelletier a conclu que cet avantage était trop éloigné pour qu'ils aient eu un « intérêt » aux transactions (par. 140-141).

91 L'article 100 de la LFI a principalement pour objet d'annuler les effets d'une transaction qui a diminué la valeur des actifs d'un failli. Il est logique d'adopter une conception plus large des termes « ayant intérêt » pour éviter qu'une personne qui pourrait tirer un avantage indirect au détriment des créanciers du failli puisse contrecarrer l'objet réparateur de cette disposition. Il convient de donner aux termes « ayant intérêt » un sens large afin qu'ils s'appliquent aux personnes qui tirent un avantage direct ou indirect d'une transaction tout en sachant que la contrepartie est inférieure à la juste valeur du those who benefit are the controlling minds behind the transaction.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

92 A finding that a person was "privy" to a reviewable transaction does not of course necessarily mean that the court will exercise its discretion to make a remedial order against that person. For liability to be imposed, it must be established that the transaction occurred: (a) within the past year; (b) for consideration conspicuously greater or less than fair market value; (c) with the person's knowledge; and (d) in a way that directly or indirectly benefited the person. In addition, after having considered the context and all the above factors, the judge must conclude that the case is a proper one for holding the person liable. In light of these conditions and of the discretion exercised by the judge, we find that a broad reading of "privy" is appropriate.

IV. Disposition

93 For the foregoing reasons, we would dismiss the appeal with costs to the respondents.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant: Kugler Kandestin, Montréal.

Solicitors for the respondents Lionel Wise, Ralph Wise and Harold Wise: de Grandpré Chait, Montréal.

Solicitors for the respondent Chubb Insurance Company of Canada: Lavery, de Billy, Montréal.

marché. À notre avis, ce raisonnement est particulièrement pertinent lorsque les personnes qui touchent un avantage sont les instigatrices de la transaction.

Conclure qu'une personne a « intérêt » à la transaction révisable ne signifie évidemment pas que le tribunal exercera son pouvoir discrétionnaire pour rendre une ordonnance réparatrice contre cette personne. Pour conclure à la responsabilité de cette personne, il doit être démontré que la transaction est effectuée a) au cours de l'année précédente, b) en échange d'une contrepartie manifestement supérieure ou inférieure à la juste valeur du marché, c) au su de la personne en cause, et d) d'une manière qui a permis à la personne de tirer un avantage direct ou indirect. De plus, après avoir examiné le contexte et tous les facteurs ci-dessus, le juge doit conclure qu'il y a lieu dans ce cas d'imposer une responsabilité à la personne. Compte tenu de ces conditions et du pouvoir discrétionnaire exercé par le juge, nous concluons qu'une interprétation large des termes « ayant intérêt » s'impose.

IV. Dispositif

Pour les motifs qui précèdent, nous sommes d'avis de rejeter le pourvoi avec dépens en faveur des intimés.

Pourvoi rejeté avec dépens.

Procureurs de l'appelante : Kugler Kandestin, Montréal.

Procureurs des intimés Lionel Wise, Ralph Wise et Harold Wise : de Grandpré Chait, Montréal.

Procureurs de l'intimée Chubb du Canada, Compagnie d'assurance : Lavery, de Billy, Montréal.

2004 SCC 68 (CanLII)

In the Court of Appeal of Alberta

Citation: Repsol Canada Energy Partnership v Delphi Energy Corp, 2020 ABCA 364

Date: 20201015
Docket: 2001-0193-AC
Registry: Calgary

2020 ABCA 364 (CanLII)

In the Matter of the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, RSC 1985, c C-36, as amended

And in the Matter of a Plan of Compromise or Arrangement of Delphi Energy Corp. and Delphi Energy (Alberta) Limited

Between:

Repsol Canada Energy Partnership and Repsol Oil & Gas Canada Inc.

Applicants

- and -

Delphi Energy Corp. and Delphi Energy (Alberta) Limited

Respondents

- and -

PricewaterhouseCoopers Inc. and Luminus Management LLC

Interested Parties

Reasons for Decision of The Honourable Madam Justice Marina Paperny

---

Application for Leave to Appeal

2020 ABCA 364 (CanLII)

Reasons for Decision of
The Honourable Madam Justice Marina Paperny

2020 ABCA 364 (CanLII)

[1] The applicants, Repsol Canada Energy Partnership and Repsol Oil & Gas Inc. (collectively, Repsol), seek leave to appeal certain provisions of a Sanction Order granted by the supervising judge under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, RSC 1985, c C-36 (CCAA).

[2] The Sanction Order relates to a plan of compromise and arrangement under the CCAA (the Plan) of the respondents, Delphi Energy (Alberta) Limited and Delphi Energy Partnership (collectively, Delphi). The background of the Plan is more thoroughly dealt with in the companion decision of Trican Well Service Ltd v Delphi Energy Corp, 2020 ABCA 363, and is briefly summarized below.

[3] Delphi and Repsol are both oil and gas producers and hold certain petroleum and natural gas rights jointly. Delphi is the operator pursuant to the Joint Operating Agreement, which is governed by the CAPL operating procedure. Between December 2019 and March 2020, Delphi undertook independent operations to drill three wells on the joint lands, with respect to which Repsol elected not to participate.

[4] The combination of the collapse of oil prices and the COVID-19 pandemic led to Delphi's financial wherewithal becoming seriously imperiled. As a result, on April 14, 2020, Delphi filed for and received an order for protection pursuant to the CCAA (the Filing Date). Shortly thereafter, numerous builders' liens were filed against the joint lands respecting work on Delphi's independent operations completed before the Filing Date.

[5] The Plan provides for a compromise and release of all "Affected Claims" as against Delphi, and was approved by the requisite majorities on September 9, 2020. On September 10, the day before the hearing to sanction the Plan, Repsol served materials opposing paragraph 33(i) of the Sanction Order, arguing it "improperly impacts the post-filing rights of Repsol's Unaffected Claims" under the Plan. The issue was whether Repsol's potential indemnity claim against Delphi arising from the builders' liens, and under the Joint Operating Agreement and CAPL operating procedures, is a pre-filing claim for purposes of the CCAA. If the potential indemnity claim is a pre-filing claim as defined in s.19 of the CCAA, then it is an "Affected Claim" under the Plan.

[6] The supervising judge determined the indemnity claim against Delphi arising from the builders' liens was a pre-filing claim and therefore an Affected Claim.

[7] Repsol seeks leave to appeal the Sanction Order. It submits that the paragraph of the Sanction Order that extinguishes the claims of joint interest owners arising from the builders' lien claims renders useless the indemnity provisions in the CAPL operating procedures. At the very least, the decision of the supervising judge creates uncertainty for the ability of joint interest owners to rely on the provisions in their Joint Operating Agreement.

[8] The test for leave to appeal is well known. It requires "serious and arguable grounds that are of real and significant interest to the parties", which can be assessed by considering four factors (see Liberty Oil & Gas Ltd (Re), 2003 ABCA 158 at paras 15-16, 44 CBR (4th) 96; Bellatrix Exploration Ltd v BP Canada Energy Group ULC, 2020 ABCA 178 at para 16):

1. whether the point on appeal is of significance to the practice;
2. whether the point raised is of significance to the action itself;
3. whether the appeal is prima facie meritorious or, on the other hand, whether it is frivolous; and
4. whether an appeal will unduly hinder the progress of the action.

[9] In considering whether to grant leave to appeal, appellate courts must appreciate that decisions of a supervising judge are accorded considerable deference and will be interfered with only if the judge acted unreasonably, erred in principle, or made a manifest error: Uti Energy Corp v Fracmaster Ltd, 1999 ABCA 178 at para 3, 244 AR 93; 9354-9186 Québec inc v Callidus Capital Corp, 2020 SCC 10 at para 53.

[10] The first aspect of the test for leave requires consideration of whether the issue is of importance to the practice, or in this case the industry, which here includes insolvency practitioners and those in the oil and gas business. The question raised on this appeal is important, but, as is discussed further below, whether it warrants an appeal to this court depends on the extent to which there is no binding or guiding precedent on the point at issue.

[11] The second factor concerns whether the point is significant to the action. In a CCAA context, the answer to this question is generally "yes", as issues raised on appeal often will have important consequences to the CCAA plan in question and to all stakeholders involved. In this case, whether the claim to indemnity is a pre- or post-filing claim impacts the entirety of the Plan.

[12] The third inquiry, whether the appeal is prima facie meritorious, is in this case directly related to the first factor. The third factor involves consideration of whether there appears to be an error in principle of law, or a palpable and overriding error of fact, or an improper exercise of discretion, for example by taking into consideration irrelevant factors or failing to consider relevant factors: Liberty Oil & Gas at para 19. The key point in this case is whether the issue is one of settled or unsettled law.

[13] Repsol submits that the determination of when its claim for indemnity arises ought to be guided by the terms of the indemnity agreement, and not by when a claim arises under the Builders' Lien Act, RSA 2000, c B-7. Repsol relies on Dean v Kociniak, 2001 ABQB 412 and Condominium Plan No 95121180 v Prairie Land Corporation, 2008 ABQB 269, decisions from the Court of Queen's Bench that deal with when a contractual claim for contribution and indemnity arises for purposes of the Limitations Act, RSA 2000, c L-12.

2020 ABCA 364 (CanLII)

[14] With respect, I cannot agree. Section 19(1) of the CCAA defines pre-filing claims as:

> 19 (1) Subject to subsection (2), the only claims that may be dealt with by a compromise or arrangement in respect of a debtor company are
>
> > (a) claims that relate to debts or liabilities, present or future, to which the company is subject on the earlier of
> >
> > > (i) the day on which proceedings commenced under this Act, and
> > >
> > > (ii) if the company filed a notice of intention under section 50.4 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act or commenced proceedings under this Act with the consent of inspectors referred to in section 116 of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, the date of the initial bankruptcy event within the meaning of section 2 of that Act; and
> >
> > (b) claims that relate to debts or liabilities, present or future, to which the company may become subject before the compromise or arrangement is sanctioned by reason of any obligation incurred by the company before the earlier of the days referred to in subparagraphs (a)(i) and (ii).
>
> [emphasis added]

[15] Delphi submits, and I agree, that the section provides that any claim that relates to a debt or liability to which a company may become subject by reason of an obligation incurred by the company prior to the CCAA filing date is a pre-filing claim, regardless of when the damage was suffered or the claim itself arose. The section is clear and is directed at facilitating a plan of arrangement.

[16] In determining whether something is a pre-filing claim under the CCAA, regard must be had to the wording of the CCAA itself. Analysis of the issue in the context of the Limitations Act of a particular jurisdiction, while interesting, cannot provide guidance if it is directly in contradiction to what the CCAA provides. The specific provisions of s 19 were designed to capture claims that are broader than crystallized causes of action. Those claims include present and future liabilities to ensure that all stakeholders understand the contingent or unliquidated claims that might arise so they can determine their position on the plan and, in particular, whether the plan is fair and reasonable having regard to all the circumstances. Not the least of those circumstances is the viability of the company post-arrangement.

[17] This purposive interpretation accords with the analysis of Romaine J in Re: SemCanada Crude Company (Celtic Exploration Ltd. #2), 2012 ABQB 489, leave to appeal denied 2012 ABCA 313, where she held at para 24:

> This interpretation of Section 19(1) ignores the words “that relate to liabilities, present or future” that modify the term “claims”. It is clear that SemCAMS was > subject to the possibility of liability under the IGPA before the CCAA proceedings commenced. The claims for suspension damages are claims that relate to the IGPA and to the suspension of the IGPA that occurred as a result of the CCAA proceedings. Section 19(1) does not limit the claims that may be dealt with by a Plan under the CCAA to presently existing liabilities. This is made clear by the addition of the word "future" in both Section 19(1)(a) and Section 19(1)(b).

2020 ABCA 364 (CanLII)

[18] As was noted by Romaine J at para 25 of SemCanada, a "claim" for the purpose of the CCAA includes any "indebtedness, liability or obligation that would be provable under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, RSC 1985, c B-3". Section 121(1) of the BIA defines "provable claims" as "all debts and liabilities, present and future, to which the bankrupt is subject... , or to which the bankrupt may become subject... by reason of any obligation incurred before the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt..."; s 121(2) of the BIA makes clear that this includes contingent or unliquidated claims: SemCanada at paras 25-26.

[19] The Supreme Court of Canada has confirmed that a claim may be provable in bankruptcy even if it is a contingent claim: see AbitibiBowater Inc., Re, 2012 SCC 67 at para 28; Orphan Well Association v Grant Thornton Ltd., 2019 SCC 5 at para 36. "A 'contingent claim is 'a claim which may or may not ever ripen into a debt, according as some future event does or does not happen'"": Orphan Well Association, citing Peters v Remington, 2004 ABCA 5 at para 23.

[20] More recently, the Quebec Court of Appeal commented that "post-debts are only those incurred after and also resulting from an obligation originating after Determination", and that "an obligation can be contingent, unliquidated, or not exigible as at the day of Determination, but existing and able to give rise to a claim if a court decision 'deems it provable'": Arrangement relatif à Kitco Metals Inc, 2017 QCCA 268 at para 77-78 [unofficial English translation].

[21] In light of the plain language of s 19, and the authorities interpreting that provision and conducting a similar analysis under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, I am not satisfied that the issue raised is sufficiently meritorious to warrant an appeal. Accordingly, the application for leave to appeal is dismissed.

Application heard on October 7, 2020

Reasons filed at Calgary, Alberta this 15th day of October, 2020

Paperny J.A.

2020 ABCA 364 (CanLII)

Appearances:

J.W. Reid
for the Applicants

R.S. Van de Mosseler
T. Sandler
for the Respondents

J.G.A. Kruger, Q.C.
for PricewaterhouseCoopers Inc.

J.L. Oliver
J.W. Hocher
J.J. Bellissimo for Luminus Management LLC

2020 ABCA 364 (CanLII)

Sattva Capital Corporation (formerly Sattva Capital Inc.) Appellant

v.

Creston Moly Corporation (formerly Georgia Ventures Inc.) Respondent

and

Attorney General of British Columbia and BCICAC Foundation Interveners

Sattva Capital Corporation (anciennement Sattva Capital Inc.) Appelante

c.

Creston Moly Corporation (anciennement Georgia Ventures Inc.) Intimée

et

Procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique et BCICAC Foundation Intervenants

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

Indexed as: Sattva Capital Corp. v. Creston Moly Corp.

2014 SCC 53

File No.: 35026.

2013: December 12; 2014: August 1.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver, Karakatsanis and Wagner JJ.

Répertorié : Sattva Capital Corp. c. Creston Moly Corp.

2014 CSC 53

N° du greffe : 35026.

2013 : 12 décembre; 2014 : 1er août.

Présents : La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges LeBel, Abella, Rothstein, Moldaver, Karakatsanis et Wagner.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR BRITISH COLUMBIA

Arbitration — Appeals — Commercial arbitration awards — Parties entering into agreement providing for payment of finder's fee in shares — Parties disagreeing as to date on which to price shares for payment of finder's fee and entering into arbitration — Leave to appeal arbitral award sought pursuant to s. 31(2) of the Arbitration Act — Leave to appeal denied but granted on appeal to Court of Appeal — Appeal of award dismissed but dismissal reversed by Court of Appeal — Whether Court of Appeal erred in granting leave to appeal — What is appropriate standard of review to be applied to commercial arbitral decisions made under Arbitration Act — Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 55, s. 31(2).

Contracts — Interpretation — Parties entering into agreement providing for payment of finder's fee in shares — Parties disagreeing as to date on which to price the shares for payment of finder's fee and entering into arbitration — Whether arbitrator reasonably construed contract

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE LA COLOMBIE-BRITANNIQUE

Arbitrage — Appels — Sentences arbitrales commerciales — Conclusion d'une entente entre les parties prévoyant le versement en actions des honoraires d'intermédiation — Désaccord des parties sur la date applicable à l'évaluation du cours de l'action aux fins du versement des honoraires d'intermédiation et recours à l'arbitrage — Autorisation d'appel de la sentence arbitrale demandée en application de l'art. 31(2) de l'Arbitration Act — Rejet initial de la demande d'autorisation d'appel, qui est accueillie à l'issue d'un appel devant la Cour d'appel — Rejet de l'appel interjeté de la sentence infirmé par la Cour d'appel — La Cour d'appel a-t-elle accordé à tort l'autorisation d'appel? — Quelle est la norme de contrôle applicable aux sentences arbitrales commerciales rendues sous le régime de l'Arbitration Act? — Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 55, art. 31(2).

Contrats — Interprétation — Conclusion d'une entente entre les parties prévoyant le versement en actions des honoraires d'intermédiation — Désaccord des parties sur la date applicable à l'évaluation du cours de l'action aux fins du versement des honoraires d'intermédiation as a whole — Whether contractual interpretation is question of law or of mixed fact and law.

S and C entered into an agreement that required C to pay S a finder's fee in relation to the acquisition of a molybdenum mining property by C. The parties agreed that under this agreement, S was entitled to a finder's fee of US$1.5 million and was entitled to be paid this fee in shares of C. However, they disagreed on which date should be used to price the shares and therefore the number of shares to which S was entitled. S argued that the share price was dictated by the date set out in the Market Price definition in the agreement and therefore that it should receive approximately 11,460,000 shares priced at $0.15. C claimed that the agreement's "maximum amount" proviso prevented S from receiving shares valued at more than US$1.5 million on the date the fee was payable, and therefore that S should receive approximately 2,454,000 shares priced at $0.70. The parties entered into arbitration pursuant to the B.C. Arbitration Act and the arbitrator found in favour of S. C sought leave to appeal the arbitrator's decision pursuant to s. 31(2) of the Arbitration Act, but leave was denied on the basis that the question on appeal was not a question of law. The Court of Appeal reversed the decision and granted C's application for leave to appeal, finding that the arbitrator's failure to address the meaning of the agreement's "maximum amount" proviso raised a question of law. The superior court judge on appeal dismissed C's appeal, holding that the arbitrator's interpretation of the agreement was correct. The Court of Appeal allowed C's appeal, finding that the arbitrator reached an absurd result. S appeals the decisions of the Court of Appeal that granted leave and that allowed the appeal.

Held: The appeal should be allowed and the arbitrator's award reinstated.

Appeals from commercial arbitration decisions are narrowly circumscribed under the Arbitration Act. Under s. 31(1), they are limited to questions of law, and leave to appeal is required if the parties do not consent to the appeal. Section 31(2)(a) sets out the requirements for leave at issue in the present case: the court may grant leave if it determines that the result is important to the parties and et recours à l'arbitrage — L'arbitre a-t-il donné une interprétation raisonnable de l'entente dans son ensemble? — L'interprétation contractuelle constitue-t-elle une question de droit ou une question mixte de fait et de droit?

S et C ont conclu une entente selon laquelle C devait payer à S des honoraires d'intermédiation relativement à l'acquisition d'une propriété minière de molybdène par C. Les parties reconnaissaient qu'en vertu de l'entente, S a droit à des honoraires d'intermédiation de 1,5 million $US, versés en actions de C. Cependant, elles ne s'entendaient pas sur la date qui devrait être retenue pour évaluer le cours de l'action et, par conséquent, sur le nombre d'actions que S doit recevoir. S prétendait que la valeur de l'action était dictée par la date établie dans la définition du cours prévue dans l'entente et, par conséquent, qu'elle devait recevoir environ 11 460 000 actions, à raison de 0,15 $ l'unité. C prétendait que la stipulation relative au « plafond », qui figure dans l'entente, empêchait S de recevoir des actions d'une valeur supérieure à 1,5 million $US à la date du versement des honoraires et donc que S devait obtenir environ 2 454 000 actions, à raison de 0,70 $ l'unité. Les parties ont soumis le différend à l'arbitrage conformément à l'Arbitration Act de la Colombie-Britannique et l'arbitre a statué en faveur de S. C a demandé l'autorisation d'interjeter appel de la sentence arbitrale en vertu du par. 31(2) de l'Arbitration Act. La demande a été rejetée au motif que la question soulevée n'était pas une question de droit. La Cour d'appel a infirmé la décision et accueilli la demande, présentée par C, en autorisation d'interjeter appel, jugeant que l'omission par l'arbitre d'examiner la signification de la stipulation de l'entente relative au « plafond » soulevait une question de droit. Le juge de la cour supérieure saisi de l'appel a rejeté l'appel de C et conclu que l'interprétation de l'entente par l'arbitre était correcte. La Cour d'appel a accueilli l'appel de C, concluant que l'interprétation de l'arbitre menait à un résultat absurde. S interjette appel des décisions de la Cour d'appel ayant accordé l'autorisation d'appel et ayant accueilli l'appel.

Arrêt : Le pourvoi est accueilli et la sentence arbitrale est rétablie.

L'appel d'une sentence arbitrale commerciale est étroitement circonscrit par l'Arbitration Act. Aux termes du par. 31(1), il ne peut être interjeté appel que sur une question de droit, et l'autorisation d'appel est requise lorsque les parties ne consentent pas à l'appel. L'alinéa 31(2)(a) énonce les critères d'autorisation sur lesquels porte le présent litige, à savoir que le tribunal peut accorder the determination of the point of law may prevent a miscarriage of justice.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

In the case at bar, the Court of Appeal erred in finding that the construction of the finder's fee agreement constituted a question of law. Such an exercise raises a question of mixed fact and law, and therefore, the Court of Appeal erred in granting leave to appeal.

The historical approach according to which determining the legal rights and obligations of the parties under a written contract was considered a question of law should be abandoned. Contractual interpretation involves issues of mixed fact and law as it is an exercise in which the principles of contractual interpretation are applied to the words of the written contract, considered in light of the factual matrix of the contract.

It may be possible to identify an extricable question of law from within what was initially characterized as a question of mixed fact and law; however, the close relationship between the selection and application of principles of contractual interpretation and the construction ultimately given to the instrument means that the circumstances in which a question of law can be extricated from the interpretation process will be rare. The goal of contractual interpretation, to ascertain the objective intentions of the parties, is inherently fact specific. Accordingly, courts should be cautious in identifying extricable questions of law in disputes over contractual interpretation. Legal errors made in the course of contractual interpretation include the application of an incorrect principle, the failure to consider a required element of a legal test, or the failure to consider a relevant factor. Concluding that C's application for leave to appeal raised no question of law is sufficient to dispose of this appeal; however, the Court found it salutary to continue with its analysis.

In order to rise to the level of a miscarriage of justice for the purposes of s. 31(2)(a), an alleged legal error must pertain to a material issue in the dispute which, if decided differently, would affect the result of the case. According to this standard, a determination of a point of law "may prevent a miscarriage of justice" only where the appeal itself has some possibility of succeeding. An appeal with no chance of success will not meet the threshold of "may prevent a miscarriage of justice" because there would be no chance that the outcome of the appeal would cause a change in the final result of the case.

l'autorisation s'il estime que, selon le cas, l'issue est importante pour les parties et que le règlement de la question de droit peut permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire.

En l'espèce, la Cour d'appel a assimilé à tort l'interprétation de l'entente relative aux honoraires d'intermédiation à une question de droit. Un tel exercice soulève une question mixte de fait et de droit, et la Cour d'appel a donc commis une erreur en accueillant la demande d'autorisation d'appel.

Il faut rompre avec l'approche historique selon laquelle la détermination des droits et obligations juridiques des parties à un contrat écrit ressortit à une question de droit. L'interprétation contractuelle soulève des questions mixtes de fait et de droit, car il s'agit d'en appliquer les principes aux termes figurant dans le contrat écrit, à la lumière du fondement factuel de ce dernier.

Il peut se révéler possible de dégager une pure question de droit de ce qui paraît au départ constituer une question mixte de fait et de droit, mais le rapport étroit qui existe entre, d'une part, le choix et l'application des principes d'interprétation contractuelle et, d'autre part, l'interprétation que recevra l'instrument juridique en dernière analyse fait en sorte que rares seront les circonstances dans lesquelles il sera possible d'isoler une question de droit au cours de l'exercice d'interprétation. Le but de l'interprétation contractuelle — déterminer l'intention objective des parties — est, de par sa nature même, axé sur les faits. Par conséquent, le tribunal doit faire preuve de prudence avant d'isoler une question de droit dans un litige portant sur l'interprétation contractuelle. L'interprétation contractuelle peut occasionner des erreurs de droit, notamment appliquer le mauvais principe ou négliger un élément essentiel d'un critère juridique ou un facteur pertinent. Conclure que la demande d'autorisation d'appel présentée par C ne soulevait aucune question de droit suffit à trancher le présent pourvoi; toutefois, la Cour juge salutaire de poursuivre l'analyse.

Pour que l'erreur de droit reprochée soit une erreur judiciaire pour l'application de l'al. 31(2)(a), elle doit se rapporter à une question importante en litige qui, si elle était tranchée différemment, aurait une incidence sur le résultat. Suivant cette norme, le règlement d'un point de droit « peut permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire » seulement lorsqu'il existe une certaine possibilité que l'appel soit accueilli. Un appel qui est voué à l'échec ne saurait « permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire » puisque les possibilités que l'issue d'un tel appel joue sur le résultat final du litige sont nulles.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

At the leave stage, it is not appropriate to consider the full merits of a case and make a final determination regarding whether an error of law was made. However, some preliminary consideration of the question of law by the leave court is necessary to determine whether the appeal has the potential to succeed and thus to change the result in the case. The appropriate threshold for assessing the legal question at issue under s. 31(2) is whether it has arguable merit, meaning that the issue raised by the applicant cannot be dismissed through a preliminary examination of the question of law.

Assessing whether the issue raised by an application for leave to appeal has arguable merit must be done in light of the standard of review on which the merits of the appeal will be judged. This requires a preliminary assessment of the standard of review. The leave court's assessment of the standard of review is only preliminary and does not bind the court which considers the merits of the appeal.

The words "may grant leave" in s. 31(2) of the Arbitration Act confer on the court residual discretion to deny leave even where the requirements of s. 31(2) are met. Discretionary factors to consider in a leave application under s. 31(2)(a) include: conduct of the parties, existence of alternative remedies, undue delay and the urgent need for a final answer. These considerations could be a sound basis for declining leave to appeal an arbitral award even where the statutory criteria have been met. However, courts should exercise such discretion with caution.

Appellate review of commercial arbitration awards is different from judicial review of a decision of a statutory tribunal, thus the standard of review framework developed for judicial review in Dunsmuir v. New Brunswick, 2008 SCC 9, [2008] 1 S.C.R. 190, and the cases that followed it, is not entirely applicable to the commercial arbitration context. Nevertheless, judicial review of administrative tribunal decisions and appeals of arbitration awards are analogous in some respects. As a result, aspects of the Dunsmuir framework are helpful in determining the appropriate standard of review to apply in the case of commercial arbitration awards.

Ce n'est pas à l'étape de l'autorisation qu'il convient d'examiner exhaustivement le fond du litige et de se prononcer définitivement sur l'absence ou l'existence d'une erreur de droit. Cependant, le tribunal saisi de la demande d'autorisation doit procéder à un examen préliminaire de la question de droit pour déterminer si l'appel a une chance d'être accueilli et, par conséquent, de modifier l'issue du litige. Ce qu'il faut démontrer, pour l'application du par. 31(2), c'est que la question de droit invoquée a un fondement défendable, à savoir que l'argument soulevé par le demandeur ne peut être rejeté à l'issue d'un examen préliminaire de la question de droit.

L'examen visant à décider si la question soulevée dans la demande d'autorisation d'appel a un fondement défendable doit se faire à la lumière de la norme de contrôle applicable à l'analyse du bien-fondé de l'appel. Il faut donc procéder à un examen préliminaire ayant pour objet cette norme. Le tribunal saisi de la demande d'autorisation ne procède qu'à un examen préliminaire à l'égard de la norme de contrôle, qui ne lie pas celui qui se penchera sur le bien-fondé de l'appel.

Les termes « peut accorder l'autorisation » figurant au par. 31(2) de l'Arbitration Act confèrent au tribunal un pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel qui lui permet de refuser l'autorisation même quand les critères prévus par la disposition sont respectés. Les facteurs à prendre en considération dans l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire à l'égard d'une demande d'autorisation présentée en vertu de l'al. 31(2)(a) comprennent : la conduite des parties, l'existence d'autres recours, un retard indu et le besoin urgent d'obtenir un règlement définitif. Ces facteurs pourraient justifier le rejet de la demande sollicitant l'autorisation d'interjeter appel d'une sentence arbitrale même dans le cas où il est satisfait aux critères légaux. Cependant, les tribunaux devraient faire preuve de prudence dans l'exercice de ce pouvoir discrétionnaire.

L'examen en appel des sentences arbitrales commerciales diffère du contrôle judiciaire d'une décision rendue par un tribunal administratif, de sorte que le cadre relatif à la norme de contrôle judiciaire établi dans l'arrêt Dunsmuir c. Nouveau-Brunswick, 2008 CSC 9, [2008] 1 R.C.S. 190, et les arrêts rendus depuis, ne peut être tout à fait transposé dans le contexte de l'arbitrage commercial. Il demeure que le contrôle judiciaire d'une décision rendue par un tribunal administratif et l'appel d'une sentence arbitrale se ressemblent dans une certaine mesure. Par conséquent, certains éléments du cadre établi dans l'arrêt Dunsmuir aident à déterminer le degré de déférence qu'il convient d'accorder aux sentences arbitrales commerciales.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

In the context of commercial arbitration, where appeals are restricted to questions of law, the standard of review will be reasonableness unless the question is one that would attract the correctness standard, such as constitutional questions or questions of law of central importance to the legal system as a whole and outside the adjudicator's expertise. The question at issue here does not fall into one of those categories and thus the standard of review in this case is reasonableness.

In the present case, the arbitrator reasonably construed the contract as a whole in determining that S is entitled to be paid its finder's fee in shares priced at $0.15. The arbitrator's decision that the shares should be priced according to the Market Price definition gives effect to both that definition and the "maximum amount" proviso and reconciles them in a manner that cannot be said to be unreasonable. The arbitrator's reasoning meets the reasonableness threshold of justifiability, transparency and intelligibility.

A court considering whether leave should be granted is not adjudicating the merits of the case. It decides only whether the matter warrants granting leave, not whether the appeal will be successful, even where the determination of whether to grant leave involves a preliminary consideration of the question of law at issue. For this reason, comments by a leave court regarding the merits cannot bind or limit the powers of the court hearing the actual appeal.

Cases Cited

Referred to: British Columbia Institute of Technology (Student Assn.) v. British Columbia Institute of Technology, 2000 BCCA 496, 192 D.L.R. (4th) 122; King v. Operating Engineers Training Institute of Manitoba Inc., 2011 MBCA 80, 270 Man. R. (2d) 63; Thorner v. Major, [2009] UKHL 18, [2009] 3 All E.R. 945; Prenn v. Simmonds, [1971] 3 All E.R. 237; Reardon Smith Line Ltd. v. Hansen-Tangen, [1976] 3 All E.R. 570; Jiro Enterprises Ltd. v. Spencer, 2008 ABCA 87 (CanLII); QK Investments Inc. v. Crocus Investment Fund, 2008 MBCA 21, 290 D.L.R. (4th) 84; Dow Chemical Canada Inc. v. Shell Chemicals Canada Ltd., 2010 ABCA 126, 25 Alta. L.R. (5th) 221; Minister of National Revenue v. Costco Wholesale Canada Ltd., 2012 FCA 160, 431 N.R. 78; WCI Waste Conversion Inc. v. ADI International Inc., En matière d'arbitrage commercial, la possibilité d'interjeter appel étant subordonnée à l'existence d'une question de droit, la norme de contrôle est celle de la décision raisonnable, à moins que la question n'appartienne à celles qui entraînent l'application de la norme de la décision correcte, comme les questions constitutionnelles ou les questions de droit qui revêtent une importance capitale pour le système juridique dans son ensemble et qui sont étrangères au domaine d'expertise du décideur. La question dont nous sommes saisis n'appartient pas à l'une ou l'autre de ces catégories; la norme de la décision raisonnable s'applique donc à la présente affaire.

En l'espèce, l'arbitre a donné une interprétation raisonnable de l'entente considérée dans son ensemble en déterminant que S était en droit de recevoir ses honoraires d'intermédiation en actions, à raison de 0,15 $ l'action. La sentence arbitrale, selon laquelle l'action devrait être évaluée en fonction de la définition du cours, donne effet à cette dernière et à la stipulation relative au « plafond » en les conciliant d'une manière qui ne peut être considérée comme déraisonnable. Le raisonnement de l'arbitre satisfait à la norme du caractère raisonnable dont les attributs sont la justification, la transparence et l'intelligibilité.

Le tribunal chargé de statuer sur une demande d'autorisation ne tranche pas l'affaire sur le fond. Il détermine uniquement s'il est justifié d'accorder l'autorisation, et non si l'appel sera accueilli, même lorsque l'étude de la demande d'autorisation appelle un examen préliminaire de la question de droit en cause. C'est pourquoi les remarques sur le bien-fondé de l'affaire formulées par le tribunal saisi de la demande d'autorisation ne sauraient lier le tribunal chargé de statuer sur l'appel ni restreindre ses pouvoirs.

Jurisprudence

Arrêts mentionnés : British Columbia Institute of Technology (Student Assn.) c. British Columbia Institute of Technology, 2000 BCCA 496, 192 D.L.R. (4th) 122; King c. Operating Engineers Training Institute of Manitoba Inc., 2011 MBCA 80, 270 Man. R. (2d) 63; Thorner c. Major, [2009] UKHL 18, [2009] 3 All E.R. 945; Prenn c. Simmonds, [1971] 3 All E.R. 237; Reardon Smith Line Ltd. c. Hansen-Tangen, [1976] 3 All E.R. 570; Jiro Enterprises Ltd. c. Spencer, 2008 ABCA 87 (CanLII); QK Investments Inc. c. Crocus Investment Fund, 2008 MBCA 21, 290 D.L.R. (4th) 84; Dow Chemical Canada Inc. c. Shell Chemicals Canada Ltd., 2010 ABCA 126, 25 Alta. L.R. (5th) 221; Canada c. Costco Wholesale Canada Ltd., 2012 CAF 160 (CanLII); WCI Waste Conversion Inc. c. ADI International Inc., 2011 PECA 14, 309

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

NBC BOA 001122

2011 PECA 14, 309 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 1; 269893 Alberta Ltd. v. Otter Bay Developments Ltd., 2009 BCCA 37, 266 B.C.A.C. 98; Hayes Forest Services Ltd. v. Weyerhaeuser Co., 2008 BCCA 31, 289 D.L.R. (4th) 230; Bell Canada v. The Plan Group, 2009 ONCA 548, 96 O.R. (3d) 81; Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748; Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235; Jesuit Fathers of Upper Canada v. Guardian Insurance Co. of Canada, 2006 SCC 21, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 744; Tercon Contractors Ltd. v. British Columbia (Transportation and Highways), 2010 SCC 4, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 69; Moore Realty Inc. v. Manitoba Motor League, 2003 MBCA 71, 173 Man. R. (2d) 300; Investors Compensation Scheme Ltd. v. West Bromwich Building Society, [1998] 1 All E.R. 98; Glaswegian Enterprises Inc. v. B.C. Tel Mobility Cellular Inc. (1997), 101 B.C.A.C. 62; Eli Lilly & Co. v. Novopharm Ltd., [1998] 2 S.C.R. 129; United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Local 579 v. Bradco Construction Ltd., [1993] 2 S.C.R. 316; Gutierrez v. Tropic International Ltd. (2002), 63 O.R. (3d) 63; Domtar Inc. v. Belkin Inc. (1989), 39 B.C.L.R. (2d) 257; Quan v. Cusson, 2009 SCC 62, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 712; Quick Auto Lease Inc. v. Nordin, 2014 MBCA 32, 303 Man. R. (2d) 262; R. v. Fedossenko, 2013 ABCA 164 (CanLII); Enns v. Hansey, 2013 MBCA 23 (CanLII); R. v. Hubley, 2009 PECA 21, 289 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 174; R. v. Will, 2013 SKCA 4, 405 Sask. R. 270; Newfoundland and Labrador Nurses' Union v. Newfoundland and Labrador (Treasury Board), 2011 SCC 62, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 708; Immeubles Port Louis Ltée v. Lafontaine (Village), [1991] 1 S.C.R. 326; MiningWatch Canada v. Canada (Fisheries and Oceans), 2010 SCC 2, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 6; R. v. Bellusci, 2012 SCC 44, [2012] 2 S.C.R. 509; R. v. Bjelland, 2009 SCC 38, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 651; R. v. Regan, 2002 SCC 12, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 297; Homex Realty and Development Co. v. Corporation of the Village of Wyoming, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 1011; Dunsmuir v. New Brunswick, 2008 SCC 9, [2008] 1 S.C.R. 190; Alberta (Information and Privacy Commissioner) v. Alberta Teachers' Association, 2011 SCC 61, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 654; Canadian Western Bank v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 22, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 3; Pacifica Mortgage Investment Corp. v. Laus Holdings Ltd., 2013 BCCA 95, 333 B.C.A.C. 310, leave to appeal refused, [2013] 3 S.C.R. viii; Tamil Co-operative Homes Inc. v. Arulappah (2000), 49 O.R. (3d) 566.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Administrative Tribunals Act, S.B.C. 2004, c. 45, ss. 58, 59.
Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 55 [formerly Commercial Arbitration Act], s. 31.
Civil Code of Québec.

Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 1; 269893 Alberta Ltd. c. Otter Bay Developments Ltd., 2009 BCCA 37, 266 B.C.A.C. 98; Hayes Forest Services Ltd. c. Weyerhaeuser Co., 2008 BCCA 31, 289 D.L.R. (4th) 230; Bell Canada c. The Plan Group, 2009 ONCA 548, 96 O.R. (3d) 81; Canada (Directeur des enquêtes et recherches) c. Southam Inc., [1997] 1 R.C.S. 748; Housen c. Nikolaisen, 2002 CSC 33, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 235; Jesuit Fathers of Upper Canada c. Cie d'assurance Guardian du Canada, 2006 CSC 21, [2006] 1 R.C.S. 744; Tercon Contractors Ltd. c. Colombie-Britannique (Transports et Voirie), 2010 CSC 4, [2010] 1 R.C.S. 69; Moore Realty Inc. c. Manitoba Motor League, 2003 MBCA 71, 173 Man. R. (2d) 300; Investors Compensation Scheme Ltd. c. West Bromwich Building Society, [1998] 1 All E.R. 98; Glaswegian Enterprises Inc. c. B.C. Tel Mobility Cellular Inc. (1997), 101 B.C.A.C. 62; Eli Lilly & Co. c. Novopharm Ltd., [1998] 2 R.C.S. 129; Fraternité unie des charpentiers et menuisiers d'Amérique, section locale 579 c. Bradco Construction Ltd., [1993] 2 R.C.S. 316; Gutierrez c. Tropic International Ltd. (2002), 63 O.R. (3d) 63; Domtar Inc. c. Belkin Inc. (1989), 39 B.C.L.R. (2d) 257; Quan c. Cusson, 2009 CSC 62, [2009] 3 R.C.S. 712; Quick Auto Lease Inc. c. Nordin, 2014 MBCA 32, 303 Man. R. (2d) 262; R. c. Fedossenko, 2013 ABCA 164 (CanLII); Enns c. Hansey, 2013 MBCA 23 (CanLII); R. c. Hubley, 2009 PECA 21, 289 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 174; R. c. Will, 2013 SKCA 4, 405 Sask. R. 270; Newfoundland and Labrador Nurses' Union c. Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador (Conseil du Trésor), 2011 CSC 62, [2011] 3 R.C.S. 708; Immeubles Port Louis Ltée c. Lafontaine (Village), [1991] 1 R.C.S. 326; Mines Alerte Canada c. Canada (Pêches et Océans), 2010 CSC 2, [2010] 1 R.C.S. 6; R. c. Bellusci, 2012 CSC 44, [2012] 2 R.C.S. 509; R. c. Bjelland, 2009 CSC 38, [2009] 2 R.C.S. 651; R. c. Regan, 2002 CSC 12, [2002] 1 R.C.S. 297; Homex Realty and Development Co. c. Corporation of the Village of Wyoming, [1980] 2 R.C.S. 1011; Dunsmuir c. Nouveau-Brunswick, 2008 CSC 9, [2008] 1 R.C.S. 190; Alberta (Information and Privacy Commissioner) c. Alberta Teachers' Association, 2011 CSC 61, [2011] 3 R.C.S. 654; Banque canadienne de l'Ouest c. Alberta, 2007 CSC 22, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 3; Pacifica Mortgage Investment Corp. c. Laus Holdings Ltd., 2013 BCCA 95, 333 B.C.A.C. 310, autorisation d'appel refusée, [2013] 3 R.C.S. viii; Tamil Co-operative Homes Inc. c. Arulappah (2000), 49 O.R. (3d) 566.

Lois et règlements cités

Administrative Tribunals Act, S.B.C. 2004, ch. 45, art. 58, 59.
Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 55 [auparavant Commercial Arbitration Act], art. 31.
Code civil du Québec.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

NBC BOA 001123

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

Authors Cited

Brown, Donald J. M., and John M. Evans, with the assistance of Christine E. Deacon. Judicial Review of Administrative Action in Canada. Toronto: Canvasback, 1998 (loose-leaf updated May 2014, release 1).

Dyzenhaus, David. "The Politics of Deference: Judicial Review and Democracy", in Michael Taggart, ed., The Province of Administrative Law. Oxford: Hart, 1997, 279.

Hall, Geoff R. Canadian Contractual Interpretation Law, 2nd ed. Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis, 2012.

Lewison, Kim. The Interpretation of Contracts, 5th ed. London: Sweet & Maxwell, 2011 & Supp. 2013.

McCamus, John D. The Law of Contracts, 2nd ed. Toronto: Irwin Law, 2012.

APPEAL from a judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (Newbury, Low and Levine JJ.A.), 2010 BCCA 239, 7 B.C.L.R. (5th) 227, 319 D.L.R. (4th) 219, [2010] B.C.J. No. 891 (QL), 2010 CarswellBC 1210, setting aside a decision of Greyell J., 2009 BCSC 1079, [2009] B.C.J. No. 1597 (QL), 2009 CarswellBC 2096, and from a subsequent judgment of the British Columbia Court of Appeal (Kirkpatrick, Neilson and Bennett JJ.A.), 2012 BCCA 329, 36 B.C.L.R. (5th) 71, 326 B.C.A.C. 114, 554 W.A.C. 114, 2 B.L.R. (5th) 1, [2012] B.C.J. No. 1631 (QL), 2012 CarswellBC 2327, setting aside a decision of Armstrong J., 2011 BCSC 597, 84 B.L.R. (4th) 102, [2011] B.C.J. No. 861 (QL), 2011 CarswellBC 1124. Appeal allowed.

Michael A. Feder and Tammy Shoranick, for the appellant.

Darrell W. Roberts, Q.C., and David Mitchell, for the respondent.

Jonathan Eades and Micah Weintraub, for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia.

David Wotherspoon and Gavin R. Cameron, for the intervener the BCICAC Foundation.

Doctrine et autres documents cités

Brown, Donald J. M., and John M. Evans, with the assistance of Christine E. Deacon. Judicial Review of Administrative Action in Canada. Toronto : Canvasback, 1998 (loose-leaf updated May 2014, release 1).

Dyzenhaus, David. « The Politics of Deference : Judicial Review and Democracy », in Michael Taggart, ed., The Province of Administrative Law. Oxford : Hart, 1997, 279.

Hall, Geoff R. Canadian Contractual Interpretation Law, 2nd ed. Markham, Ont. : LexisNexis, 2012.

Lewison, Kim. The Interpretation of Contracts, 5th ed. London : Sweet & Maxwell, 2011 & Supp. 2013.

McCamus, John D. The Law of Contracts, 2nd ed. Toronto : Irwin Law, 2012.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique (les juges Newbury, Low et Levine), 2010 BCCA 239, 7 B.C.L.R. (5th) 227, 319 D.L.R. (4th) 219, [2010] B.C.J. No. 891 (QL), 2010 CarswellBC 1210, qui a infirmé une décision du juge Greyell, 2009 BCSC 1079, [2009] B.C.J. No. 1597 (QL), 2009 CarswellBC 2096, et contre un arrêt subséquent de la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique (les juges Kirkpatrick, Neilson et Bennett), 2012 BCCA 329, 36 B.C.L.R. (5th) 71, 326 B.C.A.C. 114, 554 W.A.C. 114, 2 B.L.R. (5th) 1, [2012] B.C.J. No. 1631 (QL), 2012 CarswellBC 2327, qui a infirmé une décision du juge Armstrong, 2011 BCSC 597, 84 B.L.R. (4th) 102, [2011] B.C.J. No. 861 (QL), 2011 CarswellBC 1124. Pourvoi accueilli.

Michael A. Feder et Tammy Shoranick, pour l'appelante.

Darrell W. Roberts, c.r., et David Mitchell, pour l'intimée.

Jonathan Eades et Micah Weintraub, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique.

David Wotherspoon et Gavin R. Cameron, pour l'intervenante BCICAC Foundation.

TABLE OF CONTENTS

Paragraph

I. Facts 2

II. Arbitral Award 11

III. Judicial History 19

A. British Columbia Supreme Court — Leave to Appeal Decision, 2009 BCSC 1079 19

B. British Columbia Court of Appeal — Leave to Appeal Decision, 2010 BCCA 239 21

C. British Columbia Supreme Court — Appeal Decision, 2011 BCSC 597 23

D. British Columbia Court of Appeal — Appeal Decision, 2012 BCCA 329 28

IV. Issues 31

V. Analysis 32

A. The Leave Issue Is Properly Before This Court 32

B. The CA Leave Court Erred in Granting Leave Under Section 31(2) of the AA 38

(1) Considerations Relevant to Granting or Denying Leave to Appeal Under the AA 38

(2) The Result Is Important to the Parties 41

TABLE DES MATIÈRES

Paragraphe

I. Faits 2

II. Sentence arbitrale 11

III. Historique judiciaire 19

A. Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique — décision sur la demande d'autorisation d'appel, 2009 BCSC 1079 19

B. Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique — décision sur la demande d'autorisation d'appel, 2010 BCCA 239 21

C. Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique — décision sur l'appel, 2011 BCSC 597 23

D. Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique — décision sur l'appel, 2012 BCCA 329 28

IV. Questions en litige 31

V. Analyse 32

A. Notre Cour est saisie à bon droit de la question de l'autorisation 32

B. La Cour d'appel a commis une erreur en autorisant l'appel en vertu du par. 31(2) de l'AA 38

(1) Facteurs qui entrent en ligne de compte dans l'analyse de la demande d'autorisation d'appel présentée au titre de l'AA 38

(2) L'issue est importante pour les parties 41

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

(3) The Question Under Appeal Is Not a Question of Law 42

(a) When Is Contractual Interpretation a Question of Law? 42

(b) The Role and Nature of the "Surrounding Circumstances" 56

(c) Considering the Surrounding Circumstances Does Not Offend the Parol Evidence Rule 59

(d) Application to the Present Case 62

(4) May Prevent a Miscarriage of Justice 68

(a) Miscarriage of Justice for the Purposes of Section 31(2)(a) of the AA 68

(b) Application to the Present Case 80

(5) Residual Discretion to Deny Leave 85

(a) Considerations in Exercising Residual Discretion in a Section 31(2)(a) Leave Application 85

(b) Application to the Present Case 93

C. Standard of Review Under the AA 102

D. The Arbitrator Reasonably Construed the Agreement as a Whole 107

(3) La question soulevée n'est pas une question de droit 42

a) Dans quelles circonstances l'interprétation contractuelle est-elle une question de droit? 42

b) Le rôle et la nature des « circonstances » 56

c) Tenir compte des circonstances n'est pas contraire à la règle d'exclusion de la preuve extrinsèque 59

d) Application au présent pourvoi 62

(4) Le règlement de la question de droit peut permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire 68

a) L'erreur judiciaire pour l'application de l'al. 31(2)(a) de l'AA 68

b) Application au présent pourvoi 80

(5) Le pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel qui habilite à refuser l'autorisation 85

a) Éléments à examiner dans l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel à l'égard d'une demande d'autorisation présentée en vertu de l'al. 31(2)(a) 85

b) Application au présent pourvoi 93

C. Norme de contrôle applicable aux affaires régies par l'AA 102

D. L'arbitre a donné une interprétation raisonnable de l'entente considérée dans son ensemble 107

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

E. Appeal Courts Are Not Bound by Comments on the Merits of the Appeal Made by Leave Courts.....120

VI. Conclusion.....125

APPENDIX I

Relevant Provisions of the Sattva-Creston Finder's Fee Agreement

APPENDIX II

Section 3.3 of TSX Venture Exchange Policy 5.1: Loans, Bonuses, Finder's Fees and Commissions

APPENDIX III

Commercial Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 55 (as it read on January 12, 2007) (now the Arbitration Act)

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

[1] Rothstein J. — When is contractual interpretation to be treated as a question of mixed fact and law and when should it be treated as a question of law? How is the balance between reviewability and finality of commercial arbitration awards under the Commercial Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 55 (now the Arbitration Act, hereinafter the "AA"), to be determined? Can findings made by a court granting leave to appeal with respect to the merits of an appeal bind the court that ultimately decides the appeal? These are three of the issues that arise in this appeal.

I. Facts

[2] The issues in this case arise out of the obligation of Creston Moly Corporation (formerly Georgia Ventures Inc.) to pay a finder's fee to Sattva Capital

E. La formation saisie de l'appel n'est pas liée par les observations formulées par la formation saisie de la demande d'autorisation sur le bien-fondé de l'appel.....120

VI. Conclusion.....125

ANNEXE I

Dispositions pertinentes de l'entente relative aux honoraires d'intermédiation conclue entre Sattva et Creston

ANNEXE II

Point 3.3 de la politique 5.1 de la Bourse de croissance TSX : Emprunts, primes, honoraires d'intermédiation et commissions

ANNEXE III

Commercial Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 55 (dans sa version du 12 janvier 2007) (maintenant l'Arbitration Act)

Version française du jugement de la Cour rendu par

[1] Le juge Rothstein — Dans quelles circonstances l'interprétation contractuelle est-elle une question mixte de fait et de droit et dans quelles circonstances est-elle une question de droit? Comment établir l'équilibre entre le caractère révisable et l'irrévocabilité des sentences arbitrales commerciales prononcées sous le régime de la Commercial Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 55 (maintenant l'Arbitration Act, ci-après l'« AA »)? Les conclusions relatives au bien-fondé de l'appel tirées par le tribunal qui autorise l'appel peuvent-elles lier celui qui est appelé à trancher l'appel? Voilà trois questions qui sont soulevées dans le présent pourvoi.

I. Faits

[2] Les questions soulevées dans le présent pourvoi découlent de l'obligation de Creston Moly Corporation (anciennement Georgia Ventures Inc.) de

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

Corporation (formerly Sattva Capital Inc.). The parties agree that Sattva is entitled to a finder's fee of US$1.5 million and is entitled to be paid this fee in shares of Creston, cash or a combination thereof. They disagree on which date should be used to price the Creston shares and therefore the number of shares to which Sattva is entitled.

[3] Mr. Hai Van Le, a principal of Sattva, introduced Creston to the opportunity to acquire a molybdenum mining property in Mexico. On January 12, 2007, the parties entered into an agreement (the "Agreement") that required Creston to pay Sattva a finder's fee in relation to the acquisition of this property. The relevant provisions of the Agreement are set out in Appendix I.

[4] On January 30, 2007, Creston entered into an agreement to purchase the property for US$30 million. On January 31, 2007, at the request of Creston, trading of Creston's shares on the TSX Venture Exchange ("TSXV") was halted to prevent speculation while Creston completed due diligence in relation to the purchase. On March 26, 2007, Creston announced it intended to complete the purchase and trading resumed the following day.

[5] The Agreement provides that Sattva was to be paid a finder's fee equal to the maximum amount that could be paid pursuant to s. 3.3 of Policy 5.1 in the TSXV Policy Manual. Section 3.3 of Policy 5.1 is incorporated by reference into the Agreement at s. 3.1 and is set out in Appendix II of these reasons. The maximum amount pursuant to s. 3.3 of Policy 5.1 in this case is US$1.5 million.

[6] According to the Agreement, by default, the fee would be paid in Creston shares. The fee would only be paid in cash or a combination of shares and cash if Sattva made such an election. Sattva made no such election and was therefore entitled to be paid the fee in shares. The finder's fee was to be paid no later than five working days after the closing of the transaction purchasing the molybdenum mining property.

payer des honoraires d'intermédiation à Sattva Capital Corporation (anciennement Sattva Capital Inc.). Les parties reconnaissent que Sattva a droit à des honoraires d'intermédiation de 1,5 million $US, qui peuvent lui être versés en argent, en actions de Creston, ou en argent et en actions. Elles ne s'entendent pas sur la date qui devrait être retenue pour évaluer le cours de l'action et, par conséquent, sur le nombre d'actions que Sattva recevra.

[3] M. Hai Van Le, un directeur de Sattva, a fait part à Creston de la possibilité d'acquérir une propriété minière de molybdène au Mexique. Le 12 janvier 2007, les parties ont conclu une entente (l'« entente »), selon laquelle Creston devait payer à Sattva des honoraires d'intermédiation relativement à l'acquisition de cette propriété. Les dispositions pertinentes de l'entente sont énoncées à l'annexe I.

[4] Le 30 janvier 2007, Creston a conclu une convention d'achat de la propriété, le prix étant fixé à 30 millions $US. Le 31 janvier 2007, Creston a demandé que la négociation de ses actions à la Bourse de croissance TSX (la « Bourse ») soit suspendue afin d'empêcher la spéculation le temps d'achever le contrôle diligent préalable à l'achat. Le 26 mars 2007, Creston a annoncé qu'elle avait l'intention de conclure l'achat, et la négociation à la bourse a repris le lendemain.

[5] Aux termes de l'entente, Sattva doit recevoir des honoraires d'intermédiation correspondant au plafond autorisé par le point 3.3 de la politique 5.1 qui se trouve dans le Guide du financement des sociétés de la Bourse. Le point 3.3 est incorporé par renvoi à l'entente, à l'art. 3.1, et il est reproduit à l'annexe II des présents motifs. Dans le cas qui nous occupe, le plafond autorisé au point 3.3 de la politique 5.1 est de 1,5 million $US.

[6] Aux termes de l'entente, à moins d'indication contraire, les honoraires sont payés sous forme d'actions de Creston. Ils ne seraient versés en argent ou en argent et en actions que si Sattva avait indiqué avoir fait tel choix, ce qu'elle n'a pas fait. Ses honoraires devaient donc lui être versés sous forme d'actions au plus tard cinq jours ouvrables après la conclusion de l'achat de la propriété minière de molybdène.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[7] The dispute between the parties concerns which date should be used to determine the price of Creston shares and thus the number of shares to which Sattva is entitled. Sattva argues that the share price is dictated by the Market Price definition at s. 2 of the Agreement, i.e. the price of the shares "as calculated on close of business day before the issuance of the press release announcing the Acquisition". The press release announcing the acquisition was released on March 26, 2007. Prior to the halt in trading on January 31, 2007, the last closing price of Creston shares was $0.15. On this interpretation, Sattva would receive approximately 11,460,000 shares (based on the finder's fee of US$1.5 million).

[8] Creston claims that the Agreement's "maximum amount" proviso means that Sattva cannot receive cash or shares valued at more than US$1.5 million on the date the fee is payable. The shares were payable no later than five days after May 17, 2007, the closing date of the transaction. At that time, the shares were priced at $0.70 per share. This valuation is based on the price an investment banking firm valued Creston at as part of underwriting a private placement of shares on April 17, 2007. On this interpretation, Sattva would receive approximately 2,454,000 shares, some 9 million fewer shares than if the shares were priced at $0.15 per share.

[9] The parties entered into arbitration pursuant to the AA. The arbitrator found in favour of Sattva. Creston sought leave to appeal the arbitrator's decision pursuant to s. 31(2) of the AA. Leave was denied by the British Columbia Supreme Court (2009 BCSC 1079 (CanLII) ("SC Leave Court")). Creston successfully appealed this decision and was granted leave to appeal the arbitrator's decision by the British Columbia Court of Appeal (2010 BCCA 239, 7 B.C.L.R. (5th) 227 ("CA Leave Court")).

[10] The British Columbia Supreme Court judge who heard the merits of the appeal (2011 BCSC

[7] Le différend qui oppose les parties porte sur la date à retenir pour fixer le cours de l'action de Creston et, par conséquent, le nombre d'actions auquel Sattva a droit. Cette dernière prétend que la valeur de l'action est dictée par la définition du « cours », à l'art. 2 de l'entente, c.-à-d. la valeur de l'action [TRADUCTION] « le dernier jour ouvrable avant la publication du communiqué de presse annonçant l'acquisition ». Le communiqué de presse a été publié le 26 mars 2007. Avant la suspension de la négociation des actions le 31 janvier 2007, le dernier cours de clôture de l'action de Creston s'établissait à 0,15 $. Suivant cette interprétation, Sattva recevrait environ 11 460 000 actions (selon le calcul effectué en fonction des honoraires d'intermédiation de 1,5 million $US).

[8] Creston prétend que la stipulation relative au « plafond », qui figure dans l'entente, a pour effet de limiter à 1,5 million $US la somme d'argent ou la valeur des actions que peut recevoir Sattva à la date de versement des honoraires. Les actions devaient être cédées au plus tard cinq jours après le 17 mai 2007, date de conclusion de l'achat. À ce moment-là, l'action de Creston valait 0,70 $, selon les calculs effectués par une société bancaire d'investissement en vue d'un placement privé par voie de prise ferme le 17 avril 2007. Suivant cette interprétation, Sattva recevrait environ 2 454 000 actions, soit environ 9 millions d'actions de moins que si chacune valait 0,15 $.

[9] Les parties ont soumis le différend à l'arbitrage conformément à l'AA. L'arbitre a statué en faveur de Sattva. Creston a demandé l'autorisation d'interjeter appel de la sentence arbitrale en vertu du par. 31(2) de l'AA. La Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique a refusé l'autorisation (2009 BCSC 1079 (CanLII) (« formation de la CS saisie de la demande d'autorisation »)). Creston a appelé de cette décision et obtenu l'autorisation de la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique d'interjeter appel de la sentence arbitrale (2010 BCCA 239, 7 B.C.L.R. (5th) 227 (« formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation »)).

[10] Le juge de la Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique chargé de statuer sur le bien-fondé de

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

597, 84 B.L.R. (4th) 102 ("SC Appeal Court")) upheld the arbitrator's award. Creston appealed that decision to the British Columbia Court of Appeal (2012 BCCA 329, 36 B.C.L.R. (5th) 71 ("CA Appeal Court")). That court overturned the SC Appeal Court and found in favour of Creston. Sattva appeals the decisions of the CA Leave Court and CA Appeal Court to this Court.

II. Arbitral Award

[11] The arbitrator, Leon Getz, Q.C., found in favour of Sattva, holding that it was entitled to receive its US$1.5 million finder's fee in shares priced at $0.15 per share.

[12] The arbitrator based his decision on the Market Price definition in the Agreement:

> What, then, was the "Market Price" within the meaning of the Agreement? The relevant press release is that issued on March 26 . . . . Although there was no closing price on March 25 (the shares being on that date halted), the "last closing price" within the meaning of the definition was the $0.15 at which the [Creston] shares closed on January 30, the day before trading was halted "pending news" . . . . This conclusion requires no stretching of the words of the contractual definition; on the contrary, it falls literally within those words. [para. 22]

[13] Both the Agreement and the finder's fee had to be approved by the TSXV. Creston was responsible for securing this approval. The arbitrator found that it was either an implied or an express term of the Agreement that Creston would use its best efforts to secure the TSXV's approval and that Creston did not apply its best efforts to this end.

[14] As previously noted, by default, the finder's fee would be paid in shares unless Sattva made an election otherwise. The arbitrator found that l'appel (2011 BCSC 597, 84 B.L.R. (4th) 102 (« formation de la CS saisie de l'appel ») a confirmé la sentence arbitrale. Creston a interjeté appel de cette décision devant la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique (2012 BCCA 329, 36 B.C.L.R. (5th) 71 (« formation de la CA saisie de l'appel »)), laquelle a infirmé la décision de la formation de la CS saisie de l'appel et a donné gain de cause à Creston. Sattva interjette appel des décisions des deux formations de la CA, soit celle saisie de la demande d'autorisation et celle saisie de l'appel, devant la Cour.

II. Sentence arbitrale

[11] L'arbitre, Leon Getz, c.r., a donné gain de cause à Sattva, concluant qu'elle était en droit de recevoir des honoraires d'intermédiation de 1,5 million $US en actions, à raison de 0,15 $ l'action.

[12] L'arbitre a fondé sa décision sur la définition du « cours » figurant dans l'entente :

> [TRADUCTION] Qu'était donc le « cours » au sens de l'entente? Le communiqué de presse pertinent est celui qui a été publié le 26 mars [. . .] Il n'y avait pas de cours de clôture le 25 mars (la négociation des actions était suspendue à cette date). Par conséquent, le « dernier cours de clôture », au sens où cette expression est employée dans la définition, était de 0,15 $, soit le cours de clôture des actions de [Creston] le 30 janvier, le jour précédant la suspension des opérations « jusqu'à nouvel ordre » [. . .] Cette conclusion ne nécessite aucune extension de sens des mots employés dans la définition qui figure au contrat. Au contraire, elle concorde littéralement avec la définition. [par. 22]

[13] L'entente et les honoraires d'intermédiation devaient être approuvés par la Bourse. Creston était chargée d'obtenir cette approbation. L'arbitre a conclu qu'il était implicitement ou expressément prévu dans l'entente que Creston ferait de son mieux pour obtenir l'approbation de la Bourse. Selon lui, Creston n'avait pas fait de son mieux pour y arriver.

[14] Comme nous l'avons expliqué, les honoraires d'intermédiation se payaient en actions à moins d'avis contraire de la part de Sattva. L'arbitre a

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

Sattva never made such an election. Despite this, Creston represented to the TSXV that the finder's fee was to be paid in cash. The TSXV conditionally approved a finder's fee of US$1.5 million to be paid in cash. Sattva first learned that the fee had been approved as a cash payment in early June 2007. When Sattva raised this matter with Creston, Creston responded by saying that Sattva had the choice of taking the finder's fee in cash or in shares priced at $0.70.

[15] Sattva maintained that it was entitled to have the finder's fee paid in shares priced at $0.15. Creston asked its lawyer to contact the TSXV to clarify the minimum share price it would approve for payment of the finder's fee. The TSXV confirmed on June 7, 2007 over the phone and August 9, 2007 via email that the minimum share price that could be used to pay the finder's fee was $0.70 per share. The arbitrator found that Creston "consistently misrepresented or at the very least failed to disclose fully the nature of the obligation it had undertaken to Sattva" (para. 56(k)) and "that in the absence of an election otherwise, Sattva is entitled under that Agreement to have that fee paid in shares at $0.15" (para. 56(g)). The arbitrator found that the first time Sattva's position was squarely put before the TSXV was in a letter from Sattva's solicitor on October 9, 2007.

[16] The arbitrator found that had Creston used its best efforts, the TSXV could have approved the payment of the finder's fee in shares priced at $0.15 and such a decision would have been consistent with its policies. He determined that there was "a substantial probability that [TSXV] approval would have been given" (para. 81). He assessed that probability at 85 percent.

[17] The arbitrator found that Sattva could have sold its Creston shares after a four-month holding period at between $0.40 and $0.44 per share, netting proceeds of between $4,583,914 and $5,156,934.

conclu que Sattva n'avait pas manifesté de choix. Malgré cela, Creston a déclaré à la Bourse que les honoraires d'intermédiation seraient versés en argent. La Bourse a donc approuvé conditionnellement le versement d'une somme de 1,5 million $US en argent. Sattva a appris qu'un versement en argent de ses honoraires avait été approuvé au début du mois de juin 2007. Quand Sattva a abordé ce point avec Creston, cette dernière a répondu que Sattva avait le choix de percevoir ses honoraires en argent ou en actions, à raison de 0,70 $ l'action.

[15] Sattva a soutenu qu'elle avait droit au versement des honoraires d'intermédiation en actions, à raison de 0,15 $ l'action. Creston a demandé à ses avocats de communiquer avec la Bourse afin qu'elle indique la valeur minimale de l'action qu'elle approuverait pour le versement des honoraires d'intermédiation. La Bourse a confirmé, par téléphone le 7 juin 2007 et par courriel le 9 août de la même année, qu'un cours minimal de 0,70 $ l'action s'appliquait aux fins du calcul des honoraires d'intermédiation. Selon l'arbitre, Creston [TRADUCTION] « a constamment fait des déclarations inexactes quant à l'obligation qu'elle avait contractée envers Sattva ou, à tout le moins, omis d'en divulguer complètement la nature » (par. 56(k)) et qu'« à moins que Sattva n'en décide autrement, elle a le droit aux termes de l'entente de percevoir ces honoraires sous forme d'actions, à raison de 0,15 $ l'action » (par. 56(g)). Selon l'arbitre, la position de Sattva a été véritablement présentée à la Bourse pour la première fois dans la lettre de l'avocat de celle-ci datée du 9 octobre 2007.

[16] L'arbitre était d'avis que si Creston avait fait de son mieux, la Bourse aurait pu approuver le versement des honoraires d'intermédiation sous forme d'actions, à 0,15 $ l'action, et qu'une telle décision aurait été conforme à ses politiques. Il a affirmé que [TRADUCTION] « [la Bourse] aurait fort probablement donné son approbation » (par. 81) et il a évalué cette probabilité à 85 p. 100.

[17] Selon l'arbitre, Sattva aurait pu vendre ses actions de Creston après quatre mois à un prix variant entre 0,40 et 0,44 $ l'unité, ce qui aurait représenté un produit net situé dans une fourchette de

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

The arbitrator took the average of those two amounts, which came to $4,870,424, and then assessed damages at 85 percent of that number, which came to $4,139,860, and rounded it to $4,140,000 plus costs.

[18] After this award was made, Creston made a cash payment of US$1.5 million (or the equivalent in Canadian dollars) to Sattva. The balance of the damages awarded by the arbitrator was placed in the trust account of Sattva's solicitors.

III. Judicial History

A. British Columbia Supreme Court — Leave to Appeal Decision, 2009 BCSC 1079

[19] The SC Leave Court denied leave to appeal because it found the question on appeal was not a question of law as required under s. 31 of the AA. In the judge's view, the issue was one of mixed fact and law because the arbitrator relied on the "factual matrix" in coming to his conclusion. Specifically, determining how the finder's fee was to be paid involved examining "the TSX's policies concerning the maximum amount of the finder's fee payable, as well as the discretionary powers granted to the Exchange in determining that amount" (para. 35).

[20] The judge found that even had he found a question of law was at issue he would have exercised his discretion against granting leave because of Creston's conduct in misrepresenting the status of the finder's fee to the TSXV and Sattva, and "on the principle that one of the objectives of the [AA] is to foster and preserve the integrity of the arbitration system" (para. 41).

4 583 914 $ à 5 156 934 $. Établissant la moyenne de ces deux sommes d'argent à 4 870 424 $, l'arbitre a ensuite évalué les dommages-intérêts à 85 p. 100 de ce nombre, soit 4 139 860 $, qu'il a ensuite arrondis à la hausse, pour obtenir 4 140 000 $, plus les dépens.

[18] Après le prononcé de cette sentence arbitrale, Creston a versé 1,5 million $US (ou l'équivalent en dollars canadiens) à Sattva. Le solde des dommages-intérêts accordés par l'arbitre a été placé dans le compte en fiducie des avocats de Sattva.

III. Historique judiciaire

A. Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique — décision sur la demande d'autorisation d'appel, 2009 BCSC 1079

[19] La Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique a rejeté la demande d'autorisation d'appel parce qu'elle était d'avis que la question soulevée n'était pas une question de droit, un critère prévu à l'art. 31 de l'AA. Selon le juge, il s'agissait d'une question mixte de fait et de droit puisque l'arbitre avait appuyé sa conclusion sur le [TRADUCTION] « fondement factuel ». Plus précisément, pour déterminer sous quelle forme les honoraires d'intermédiation devaient être versés, il fallait examiner « les politiques de la TSX se rapportant au plafond applicable aux honoraires d'intermédiation, ainsi que les pouvoirs discrétionnaires dont dispose la Bourse pour déterminer le montant des honoraires » (par. 35).

[20] Le juge a conclu que, même s'il avait été d'avis que le litige soulevait une question de droit, il aurait exercé son pouvoir discrétionnaire pour refuser l'autorisation d'appel en raison des déclarations inexactes faites par Creston à propos des honoraires d'intermédiation à la Bourse et à Sattva, et par égard pour le [TRADUCTION] « principe selon lequel l'[AA] a notamment pour objectif de favoriser et de préserver l'intégrité du système d'arbitrage » (par. 41).

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

B. British Columbia Court of Appeal — Leave to Appeal Decision, 2010 BCCA 239

[21] The CA Leave Court reversed the SC Leave Court and granted Creston's application for leave to appeal the arbitral award. It found the SC Leave Court "err[ed] in failing to find that the arbitrator's failure to address the meaning of s. 3.1 of the Agreement (and in particular the 'maximum amount' provision) raised a question of law" (para. 23). The CA Leave Court decided that the construction of s. 3.1 of the Agreement, and in particular the "maximum amount" proviso, was a question of law because it did not involve reference to the facts of what the TSXV was told or what it decided.

[22] The CA Leave Court acknowledged that Creston was "less than forthcoming in its dealings with Mr. Le and the [TSXV]" but said that "these facts are not directly relevant to the question of law it advances on the appeal" (para. 27). With respect to the SC leave judge's reference to the preservation of the integrity of the arbitration system, the CA Leave Court said that the parties would have known when they chose to enter arbitration under the AA that an appeal on a question of law was possible. Additionally, while the finality of arbitration is an important factor in exercising discretion, when "a question of law arises on a matter of importance and a miscarriage of justice might be perpetrated if an appeal were not available, the integrity of the process requires, at least in the circumstances of this case, that the right of appeal granted by the legislation also be respected" (para. 29).

C. British Columbia Supreme Court — Appeal Decision, 2011 BCSC 597

[23] Armstrong J. reviewed the arbitrator's decision on a correctness standard. He dismissed the

B. Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique — décision sur la demande d'autorisation d'appel, 2010 BCCA 239

[21] La Cour d'appel a infirmé la décision de la Cour suprême et a accueilli la demande, présentée par Creston, en autorisation d'interjeter appel de la sentence arbitrale. Selon elle, la Cour suprême avait [TRADUCTION] « commis une erreur en ne reconnaissant pas que l'omission par l'arbitre d'examiner la signification de l'art. 3.1 de l'entente (et plus particulièrement de la stipulation relative au "plafond") soulevait une question de droit » (par. 23). La Cour d'appel a conclu que l'interprétation de l'art. 3.1 de l'entente, et plus particulièrement de la stipulation relative au « plafond », constituait une question de droit parce qu'elle ne reposait pas sur les faits de l'affaire, à savoir les renseignements communiqués à la Bourse et la décision de cette dernière.

[22] La Cour d'appel a reconnu que Creston s'était montrée [TRADUCTION] « moins que franche dans ses démarches auprès de M. Le et de [la Bourse] », mais a déclaré que « ces faits n'intéressent pas directement la question de droit qu'elle soulève en appel » (par. 27). Au sujet de la remarque sur la préservation de l'intégrité du système d'arbitrage formulée par la formation de la CS saisie de la demande d'autorisation d'appel, la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation a dit que les parties, quand elles ont choisi de soumettre leur différend à l'arbitrage en vertu de l'AA, savaient que l'appel d'une question de droit était possible. De plus, bien que l'irrévocabilité de la sentence arbitrale constitue un facteur important dans l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire, lorsqu'« une question de droit importante est soulevée et qu'il y a risque d'erreur judiciaire en cas d'impossibilité d'interjeter appel, l'intégrité du processus exige, du moins dans les circonstances de l'espèce, que le droit d'appel conféré par la loi soit respecté » (par. 29).

C. Cour suprême de la Colombie-Britannique — décision sur l'appel, 2011 BCSC 597

[23] Le juge Armstrong a contrôlé la sentence arbitrale selon la norme de la décision correcte. Il appeal, holding the arbitrator's interpretation of the Agreement was correct.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[24] Armstrong J. found that the plain and ordinary meaning of the Agreement required that the US$1.5 million fee be paid in shares priced at $0.15. He did not find the meaning to be absurd simply because the price of the shares at the date the fee became payable had increased in relation to the price determined according to the Market Price definition. He was of the view that changes in the price of shares over time are inevitable, and that the parties, as sophisticated business persons, would have reasonably understood a fluctuation in share price to be a reality when providing for a fee payable in shares. According to Armstrong J., it is indeed because of market fluctuations that it is necessary to choose a specific date to price the shares in advance of payment. He found that this was done by defining "Market Price" in the Agreement, and that the fee remained US$1.5 million in $0.15 shares as determined by the Market Price definition regardless of the price of the shares at the date that the fee was payable.

[25] According to Armstrong J., that the price of the shares may be more than the Market Price definition price when they became payable was foreseeable as a "natural consequence of the fee agreement" (para. 62). He was of the view that the risk was borne by Sattva, since the price of the shares could increase, but it could also decrease such that Sattva would have received shares valued at less than the agreed upon fee of US$1.5 million.

[26] Armstrong J. held that the arbitrator's interpretation which gave effect to both the Market Price definition and the "maximum amount" proviso should be preferred to Creston's interpretation of the agreement which ignored the Market Price definition.

[27] In response to Creston's argument that the arbitrator did not consider s. 3.1 of the Agreement a rejeté l'appel et conclu que l'interprétation de l'entente proposée par l'arbitre était correcte.

[24] Le juge Armstrong estimait que, selon le sens ordinaire de l'entente, les honoraires de 1,5 million $US devaient être versés en actions, à raison de 0,15 $ l'unité. Il n'estimait pas une telle interprétation absurde du simple fait que le cours de l'action à la date du versement des honoraires était supérieur à celui déterminé suivant la définition du cours. Selon lui, avec le temps, la fluctuation des cours est inévitable, et dès lors qu'elles ont prévu la possibilité du versement des honoraires en actions, les parties, des entreprises averties, devaient raisonnablement s'attendre à la fluctuation du marché. De l'avis du juge Armstrong, c'est d'ailleurs à cause de cette fluctuation qu'il faut indiquer une date précise qui servira à déterminer la valeur de l'action avant le versement. Il est arrivé à la conclusion que pour ce faire, le « cours » était défini dans l'entente et que le montant des honoraires demeurait 1,5 million $US, à payer sous forme d'actions à raison de 0,15 $ l'unité, cette valeur étant établie suivant la définition du cours, sans égard à la valeur de l'action à la date du versement des honoraires.

[25] Selon le juge Armstrong, il était prévisible que le cours de l'action à la date du versement soit supérieur à celui établi conformément à la définition du cours et il s'agissait là d'une [TRADUCTION] « conséquence naturelle de l'entente relative aux honoraires d'intermédiation » (par. 62). Il était d'avis que le risque était assumé par Sattva, puisque le prix de l'action pouvait certes augmenter, mais il pouvait aussi diminuer, de sorte que Sattva aurait alors reçu un portefeuille d'actions d'une valeur inférieure au montant des honoraires (1,5 million $US) qui avait été convenu.

[26] Le juge Armstrong était d'avis que l'interprétation de l'arbitre, laquelle donnait effet à la définition du cours et à la stipulation relative au « plafond », était préférable à celle de Creston, qui faisait fi de la définition du cours.

[27] En réponse à l'argument de Creston selon lequel l'arbitre n'avait pas examiné l'art. 3.1 de which contains the "maximum amount" proviso, Armstrong J. noted that the arbitrator explicitly addressed the "maximum amount" proviso at para. 23 of his decision.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

D. British Columbia Court of Appeal — Appeal Decision, 2012 BCCA 329

[28] The CA Appeal Court allowed Creston's appeal, ordering that the payment of US$1.5 million that had been made by Creston to Sattva on account of the arbitrator's award constituted payment in full of the finder's fee. The court reviewed the arbitrator's decision on a standard of correctness.

[29] The CA Appeal Court found that both it and the SC Appeal Court were bound by the findings made by the CA Leave Court. There were two findings that were binding: (1) it would be anomalous if the Agreement allowed Sattva to receive US$1.5 million if it received its fee in cash, but shares valued at approximately $8 million if Sattva took its fee in shares; and (2) the arbitrator ignored this anomaly and did not address s. 3.1 of the Agreement.

[30] The Court of Appeal found that it was an absurd result to find that Sattva is entitled to an $8 million finder's fee in light of the fact that the "maximum amount" proviso in the Agreement limits the finder's fee to US$1.5 million. The court was of the view that the proviso limiting the fee to US$1.5 million "when paid" should be given paramount effect (para. 47). In its opinion, giving effect to the Market Price definition could not have been the intention of the parties, nor could it have been in accordance with good business sense.

IV. Issues

[31] The following issues arise in this appeal:

l'entente, qui contient la stipulation relative au « plafond », le juge Armstrong a souligné que l'arbitre avait fait expressément référence à cette stipulation au par. 23 de la sentence arbitrale.

D. Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique — décision sur l'appel, 2012 BCCA 329

[28] La Cour d'appel a accueilli l'appel de Creston et a statué que la somme de 1,5 million $US versée par Creston en faveur de Sattva en exécution de la sentence arbitrale constituait le paiement intégral des honoraires d'intermédiation. La cour a contrôlé la sentence arbitrale suivant la norme de la décision correcte.

[29] La formation de la CA saisie de l'appel s'estimait liée, de même que la Cour suprême, par deux conclusions tirées par la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation, à savoir : 1º il serait incongru que l'entente permette à Sattva, si elle opte pour le versement de ses honoraires en argent, de toucher 1,5 million $US alors que, si elle opte pour le versement sous forme d'actions, elle recevra un portefeuille valant environ 8 millions $ et 2º l'arbitre n'a pas tenu compte de cette anomalie et a fait fi de l'art. 3.1 de l'entente.

[30] Selon la Cour d'appel, conclure que Sattva avait droit à des honoraires d'intermédiation de 8 millions $ menait à un résultat absurde, étant donné la stipulation de l'entente relative au « plafond », qui limite le montant de tels honoraires à 1,5 million $US. La cour était d'avis qu'il faudrait donner l'effet prépondérant à cette stipulation qui limite à 1,5 million $US les honoraires [TRADUCTION] « à la date de leur versement » (par. 47). Elle était d'avis que donner effet à la définition du cours ne saurait avoir été l'intention des parties, et ce n'était pas non plus une décision sensée sur le plan commercial.

IV. Questions en litige

[31] Les questions suivantes sont soulevées dans le présent pourvoi :

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

(a) Is the issue of whether the CA Leave Court erred in granting leave under s. 31(2) of the AA properly before this Court?

(b) Did the CA Leave Court err in granting leave under s. 31(2) of the AA?

(c) If leave was properly granted, what is the appropriate standard of review to be applied to commercial arbitral decisions made under the AA?

(d) Did the arbitrator reasonably construe the Agreement as a whole?

(e) Did the CA Appeal Court err in holding that it was bound by comments regarding the merits of the appeal made by the CA Leave Court?

V. Analysis

A. The Leave Issue Is Properly Before This Court

[32] Sattva argues, in part, that the CA Leave Court erred in granting leave to appeal from the arbitrator's decision. In Sattva's view, the CA Leave Court did not identify a question of law, a requirement to obtain leave pursuant to s. 31(2) of the AA. Creston argues that this issue is not properly before this Court. Creston makes two arguments in support of this point.

[33] First, Creston argues that this issue was not advanced in Sattva's application for leave to appeal to this Court. This argument must fail. Unless this Court places restrictions in the order granting leave, the order granting leave is "at large". Accordingly, appellants may raise issues on appeal that were not set out in the leave application. However, the Court may exercise its discretion to refuse to deal with issues that were not addressed in the courts below, if there is prejudice to the respondent, or if for any other reason the Court considers it appropriate not to deal with a question.

a) La Cour a-t-elle été saisie à bon droit de la question de savoir si la Cour d'appel a commis une erreur en autorisant l'appel en vertu du par. 31(2) de l'AA?

b) La Cour d'appel a-t-elle commis une erreur en autorisant l'appel en vertu du par. 31(2) de l'AA?

c) Si l'autorisation a été accordée à bon droit, quelle norme de contrôle convient-il d'appliquer aux sentences arbitrales commerciales rendues sous le régime de l'AA?

d) L'arbitre a-t-il donné une interprétation raisonnable de l'entente dans son ensemble?

e) La Cour d'appel a-t-elle commis une erreur en s'estimant liée par les remarques formulées par la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation au sujet du bien-fondé de l'appel?

V. Analyse

A. Notre Cour est saisie à bon droit de la question de l'autorisation

[32] Sattva prétend notamment que la Cour d'appel a commis une erreur en accordant l'autorisation d'interjeter appel de la sentence arbitrale. Selon elle, la Cour d'appel n'a cerné aucune question de droit, alors que l'autorisation est subordonnée à l'existence d'une telle question, aux termes du par. 31(2) de l'AA. Creston soutient que la Cour n'est pas saisie à bon droit de cette question et avance deux arguments à l'appui de sa position.

[33] Premièrement, Creston fait valoir que cette question n'était pas soulevée dans la demande d'autorisation d'appel que Sattva a présentée à la Cour. Cet argument ne saurait tenir. À moins que la Cour n'impose des restrictions dans l'ordonnance accordant l'autorisation, cette ordonnance est de « portée générale ». Par conséquent, l'appelant peut soulever en appel une question qui n'était pas énoncée dans la demande d'autorisation. La Cour peut toutefois exercer son pouvoir discrétionnaire et refuser de trancher une question qui n'a pas été abordée par les tribunaux d'instance inférieure, s'il en résulte un préjudice pour l'intimé, ou si, pour toute autre raison, elle juge opportun de ne pas la trancher.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[34] Here, this Court's order granting leave to appeal from both the CA Leave Court decision and the CA Appeal Court decision contained no restrictions (2013 CanLII 11315). The issue — whether the proposed appeal was on a question of law — was expressly argued before, and was dealt with in the judgments of, the SC Leave Court and the CA Leave Court. There is no reason Sattva should be precluded from raising this issue on appeal despite the fact it was not mentioned in its application for leave to appeal to this Court.

[35] Second, Creston argues that the issue of whether the CA Leave Court identified a question of law is not properly before this Court because Sattva did not contest this decision before all of the lower courts. Specifically, Creston states that Sattva did not argue that the question on appeal was one of mixed fact and law before the SC Appeal Court and that it conceded the issue on appeal was a question of law before the CA Appeal Court. This argument must also fail. At the SC Appeal Court, it was not open to Sattva to reargue the question of whether leave should have been granted. The SC Appeal Court was bound by the CA Leave Court's finding that leave should have been granted, including the determination that a question of law had been identified. Accordingly, Sattva could hardly be expected to reargue before the SC Appeal Court a question that had been determined by the CA Leave Court. There is nothing in the AA to indicate that Sattva could have appealed the leave decision made by a panel of the Court of Appeal to another panel of the same court. The fact that Sattva did not reargue the issue before the SC Appeal Court or CA Appeal Court does not prevent it from raising the issue before this Court, particularly since Sattva was also granted leave to appeal the CA Leave Court decision by this Court.

[34] En l'espèce, l'ordonnance accordant l'autorisation d'interjeter appel des deux décisions de la Cour d'appel, sur la demande d'autorisation d'appel et sur l'appel, ne comportait aucune restriction (2013 CanLII 11315). La question — à savoir si l'appel proposé soulevait une question de droit — a été expressément débattue devant les formations de la CS et de la CA saisies de la demande d'autorisation, qui l'ont tranchée. Rien n'empêche Sattva de soulever cette question en appel, même si elle ne l'a pas mentionnée dans la demande d'autorisation d'appel qu'elle a présentée à la Cour.

[35] Deuxièmement, Creston soutient que la Cour n'a pas été saisie à bon droit de la question de savoir si la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation a cerné une question de droit parce que Sattva n'a pas contesté la décision rendue à ce sujet devant tous les tribunaux d'instance inférieure. Plus précisément, aux dires de Creston, Sattva n'aurait pas fait valoir devant la formation de la CS saisie de l'appel que l'appel soulevait une question mixte de fait et de droit et aurait reconnu devant la Cour d'appel que l'appel soulevait une question de droit. Un tel argument ne tient pas. Devant la formation de la CS saisie de l'appel, il n'était pas possible pour Sattva de débattre à nouveau de la question de savoir si l'autorisation aurait dû être accordée. La formation de la CS saisie de l'appel était liée par les conclusions tirées par la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation, à savoir que l'autorisation était opportune et qu'une question de droit avait été cernée. Ainsi, Sattva ne pouvait guère plaider devant la formation de la CS saisie de l'appel un point sur lequel la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation s'était déjà prononcée. Rien dans l'AA n'habilite Sattva à interjeter appel de la décision sur la demande d'autorisation d'appel rendue par une formation de la Cour d'appel à une autre formation de la même cour. Ce n'est pas parce que Sattva n'a pas plaidé à nouveau le point devant la formation de la CS saisie de l'appel ou devant la formation de la CA saisie de l'appel qu'elle ne peut le soulever devant notre Cour, tout particulièrement étant donné que Sattva a obtenu de notre Cour l'autorisation d'appeler de la décision rendue par la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[36] While this Court may decline to grant leave where an issue sought to be argued before it was not argued in the courts appealed from, that is not this case. Here, whether leave from the arbitrator's decision had been sought by Creston on a question of law or a question of mixed fact and law had been argued in the lower leave courts.

[37] Accordingly, the issue of whether the CA Leave Court erred in finding a question of law for the purposes of granting leave to appeal is properly before this Court.

B. The CA Leave Court Erred in Granting Leave Under Section 31(2) of the AA

(1) Considerations Relevant to Granting or Denying Leave to Appeal Under the AA

[38] Appeals from commercial arbitration decisions are narrowly circumscribed under the AA. Under s. 31(1), appeals are limited to either questions of law where the parties consent to the appeal or to questions of law where the parties do not consent but where leave to appeal is granted. Section 31(2) of the AA, reproduced in its entirety in Appendix III, sets out the requirements for leave:

(2) In an application for leave under subsection (1)(b), the court may grant leave if it determines that

(a) the importance of the result of the arbitration to the parties justifies the intervention of the court and the determination of the point of law may prevent a miscarriage of justice,

(b) the point of law is of importance to some class or body of persons of which the applicant is a member, or

(c) the point of law is of general or public importance.

[36] Ainsi, la Cour peut certes refuser l'autorisation si la question que l'on cherche à soulever devant elle n'a pas été plaidée devant les tribunaux d'instance inférieure, mais ce n'est pas le cas en l'espèce. En l'occurrence, les arguments sur le fondement de la demande d'autorisation d'appel de la sentence arbitrale présentée par Creston — à savoir si elle soulevait une question de droit ou une question mixte de fait et de droit — avaient été plaidés devant les formations saisies des demandes d'autorisation.

[37] Par conséquent, la Cour est saisie à bon droit de la question de savoir si la formation de la CA qui a accueilli la demande d'autorisation a conclu à tort que l'appel soulevait une question de droit.

B. La Cour d'appel a commis une erreur en autorisant l'appel en vertu du par. 31(2) de l'AA

(1) Facteurs qui entrent en ligne de compte dans l'analyse de la demande d'autorisation d'appel présentée au titre de l'AA

[38] L'appel d'une sentence arbitrale commerciale est étroitement circonscrit par l'AA. Aux termes du par. 31(1), il ne peut être interjeté appel que sur une question de droit dans le cas où les parties consentent à l'appel ou, en l'absence de consentement, dans les cas où l'autorisation d'appel est accordée. Le paragraphe 31(2) de l'AA, reproduit intégralement à l'annexe III, énonce les critères d'autorisation :

[TRADUCTION]

(2) Relativement à une demande d'autorisation présentée en vertu de l'alinéa (1)(b), le tribunal peut accorder l'autorisation s'il estime que, selon le cas :

(a) l'importance de l'issue de l'arbitrage pour les parties justifie son intervention et que le règlement de la question de droit peut permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire,

(b) la question de droit revêt de l'importance pour une catégorie ou un groupe de personnes dont le demandeur fait partie,

(c) la question de droit est d'importance publique.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[39] The B.C. courts have found that the words "may grant leave" in s. 31(2) of the AA give the courts judicial discretion to deny leave even where the statutory requirements have been met (British Columbia Institute of Technology (Student Assn.) v. British Columbia Institute of Technology, 2000 BCCA 496, 192 D.L.R. (4th) 122 ("BCIT"), at paras. 25-26). Appellate review of an arbitrator's award will only occur where the requirements of s. 31(2) are met and where the leave court does not exercise its residual discretion to nonetheless deny leave.

[40] Although Creston's application to the SC Leave Court sought leave pursuant to s. 31(2)(a), (b) and (c), it appears the arguments before that court and throughout focused on s. 31(2)(a). The SC Leave Court's decision quotes a lengthy passage from BCIT that focuses on the requirements of s. 31(2)(a). The SC Leave Court judge noted that both parties conceded the first requirement of s. 31(2)(a): that the issue be of importance to the parties. The CA Leave Court decision expressed concern that denying leave might give rise to a miscarriage of justice — a criterion only found in s. 31(2)(a). Finally, neither the lower courts' leave decisions nor the arguments before this Court reflected arguments about the question of law being important to some class or body of persons of which the applicant is a member (s. 31(2)(b)) or being a point of law of general or public importance (s. 31(2)(c)). Accordingly, the following analysis will focus on s. 31(2)(a).

(2) The Result Is Important to the Parties

[41] In order for leave to be granted from a commercial arbitral award, a threshold requirement must be met: leave must be sought on a question of law. However, before dealing with that issue, it will be convenient to quickly address another requirement of s. 31(2)(a) on which the parties agree: whether

[39] De l'avis des tribunaux de la C.-B., l'expression [TRADUCTION] « peut accorder l'autorisation » qui figure au par. 31(2) de l'AA confère au tribunal un pouvoir discrétionnaire qui l'habilite à refuser l'autorisation même lorsque les critères légaux sont respectés (British Columbia Institute of Technology (Student Assn.) c. British Columbia Institute of Technology, 2000 BCCA 496, 192 D.L.R. (4th) 122 (« BCIT »), par. 25-26). L'appel d'une sentence arbitrale n'est donc entendu que si les critères du par. 31(2) sont remplis et que le tribunal saisi de la demande d'autorisation ne refuse pas néanmoins l'autorisation en vertu de son pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel.

[40] Bien que Creston ait présenté une demande d'autorisation à la Cour suprême sur le fondement des al. 31(2)(a), (b) et (c), il semble que les arguments invoqués devant elle et au cours des autres instances portaient sur l'al. 31(2)(a). La décision de la Cour suprême sur la demande d'autorisation reprend un long passage tiré de l'affaire BCIT axé sur les éléments de l'al. 31(2)(a). La Cour suprême y souligne que les deux parties reconnaissent qu'il est satisfait au premier élément de l'al. 31(2)(a), c'est-à-dire que la question est importante pour les parties. Dans sa décision sur la demande d'autorisation d'appel, la Cour d'appel a dit craindre que refuser l'autorisation ne donne lieu à une erreur judiciaire — un critère prévu seulement à l'al. 31(2)(a). Enfin, ni les décisions sur les demandes d'autorisation des tribunaux d'instance inférieure ni les arguments soulevés devant notre Cour ne traitent des autres critères, à savoir que la question de droit revêt de l'importance pour une catégorie ou un groupe de personnes dont le demandeur fait partie (al. 31(2)(b)) ou est d'importance publique (al. 31(2)(c)). Par conséquent, l'analyse qui suit porte principalement sur l'al. 31(2)(a).

(2) L'issue est importante pour les parties

[41] L'autorisation d'interjeter appel d'une sentence arbitrale commerciale est subordonnée au respect d'un critère minimal : l'appel doit porter sur une question de droit. Toutefois, avant d'aborder ce sujet, il convient d'examiner sommairement un autre élément requis par l'al. 31(2)(a) et sur lequel the importance of the result of the arbitration to the parties justifies the intervention of the court. Justice Saunders explained this criterion in BCIT as requiring that the result of the arbitration be "sufficiently important", in terms of principle or money, to the parties to justify the expense and time of court proceedings (para. 27). The parties in this case have agreed that the result of the arbitration is of importance to each of them. In view of the relatively large monetary amount in dispute and in light of the fact that the parties have agreed that the result is important to them, I accept that the importance of the result of the arbitration to the parties justifies the intervention of the court. This requirement of s. 31(2)(a) is satisfied.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

(3) The Question Under Appeal Is Not a Question of Law

(a) When Is Contractual Interpretation a Question of Law?

[42] Under s. 31 of the AA, the issue upon which leave is sought must be a question of law. For the purpose of identifying the appropriate standard of review or, as is the case here, determining whether the requirements for leave to appeal are met, reviewing courts are regularly required to determine whether an issue decided at first instance is a question of law, fact, or mixed fact and law.

[43] Historically, determining the legal rights and obligations of the parties under a written contract was considered a question of law (King v. Operating Engineers Training Institute of Manitoba Inc., 2011 MBCA 80, 270 Man. R. (2d) 63, at para. 20, per Steel J.A.; K. Lewison, The Interpretation of Contracts (5th ed. 2011 & Supp. 2013), at pp. 173-76; and G. R. Hall, Canadian Contractual Interpretation Law (2nd ed. 2012), at pp. 125-26). This rule originated in England at a time when there were frequent civil jury trials and widespread illiteracy. Under those circumstances, the interpretation of written documents had to be considered questions of law because only the judge could be s'entendent les parties, à savoir que l'importance de l'issue de l'arbitrage pour les parties doit justifier l'intervention du tribunal. Selon l'explication donnée par la juge Saunders de ce critère dans BCIT, il faut que l'issue de l'arbitrage soit [TRADUCTION] « suffisamment importante » aux yeux des parties, pour le principe ou les sommes d'argent en jeu, pour justifier le coût et la longueur d'une instance (par. 27). Les parties en l'espèce ont convenu que l'issue de l'arbitrage revêt de l'importance pour chacune. Étant donné la somme relativement considérable en litige et compte tenu du fait que les parties s'entendent pour dire que l'issue est importante pour elles, je conviens que l'importance de l'issue de l'arbitrage pour les parties justifie l'intervention du tribunal. Cette condition prévue à l'al. 31(2)(a) est remplie.

(3) La question soulevée n'est pas une question de droit

a) Dans quelles circonstances l'interprétation contractuelle est-elle une question de droit?

[42] Aux termes de l'art. 31 de l'AA, la demande d'autorisation d'appel doit porter sur une question de droit. Pour déterminer la norme de contrôle applicable ou, comme c'est le cas en l'espèce, pour déterminer si les critères d'autorisation sont respectés, le tribunal siégeant en révision est régulièrement appelé à décider si une question tranchée en première instance est une question de droit, une question de fait ou une question mixte de fait et de droit.

[43] Autrefois, la détermination des droits et obligations juridiques des parties à un contrat écrit ressortissait à une question de droit (King c. Operating Engineers Training Institute of Manitoba Inc., 2011 MBCA 80, 270 Man. R. (2d) 63, par. 20, la juge Steel; K. Lewison, The Interpretation of Contracts (5e éd. 2011 et suppl. 2013), p. 173-176; G. R. Hall, Canadian Contractual Interpretation Law (2e éd. 2012), p. 125-126). Cette règle a pris naissance en Angleterre, à une époque où les procès civils devant jury étaient fréquents et l'analphabétisme courant. Dans de telles circonstances, l'interprétation des documents écrits devait être assimilée à une question de droit parce que le juge était le seul dont on assured to be literate and therefore capable of reading the contract (Hall, at p. 126; and Lewison, at pp. 173-74).

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[44] This historical rationale no longer applies. Nevertheless, courts in the United Kingdom continue to treat the interpretation of a written contract as always being a question of law (Thorner v. Major, [2009] UKHL 18, [2009] 3 All E.R. 945, at paras. 58 and 82-83; and Lewison, at pp. 173-77). They do this despite the fact that U.K. courts consider the surrounding circumstances, a concept addressed further below, when interpreting a written contract (Prenn v. Simmonds, [1971] 3 All E.R. 237 (H.L.); and Reardon Smith Line Ltd. v. Hansen-Tangen, [1976] 3 All E.R. 570 (H.L.)).

[45] In Canada, there remains some support for the historical approach. See for example Jiro Enterprises Ltd. v. Spencer, 2008 ABCA 87 (CanLII), at para. 10; QK Investments Inc. v. Crocus Investment Fund, 2008 MBCA 21, 290 D.L.R. (4th) 84, at para. 26; Dow Chemical Canada Inc. v. Shell Chemicals Canada Ltd., 2010 ABCA 126, 25 Alta. L.R. (5th) 221, at paras. 11-12; and Minister of National Revenue v. Costco Wholesale Canada Ltd., 2012 FCA 160, 431 N.R. 78, at para. 34. However, some Canadian courts have abandoned the historical approach and now treat the interpretation of written contracts as an exercise involving either a question of law or a question of mixed fact and law. See for example WCI Waste Conversion Inc. v. ADI International Inc., 2011 PECA 14, 309 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 1, at para. 11; 269893 Alberta Ltd. v. Otter Bay Developments Ltd., 2009 BCCA 37, 266 B.C.A.C. 98, at para. 13; Hayes Forest Services Ltd. v. Weyerhaeuser Co., 2008 BCCA 31, 289 D.L.R. (4th) 230, at para. 44; Bell Canada v. The Plan Group, 2009 ONCA 548, 96 O.R. (3d) 81, at paras. 22-23 (majority reasons, per Blair J.A.) and paras. 133-35 (per Gillese J.A., in dissent, but not on this point); and King, at paras. 20-23.

[46] The shift away from the historical approach in Canada appears to be based on two developments. The first is the adoption of an approach to contractual interpretation which directs courts to have regard for the surrounding circumstances of the contract pouvait être certain qu'il savait lire et écrire et, par conséquent, qu'il était en mesure de prendre connaissance du contrat (Hall, p. 126; Lewison, p. 173-174).

[44] Cette justification historique ne s'applique plus. Néanmoins, pour les tribunaux du Royaume-Uni, l'interprétation d'un contrat écrit ressortit toujours à une question de droit (Thorner c. Major, [2009] UKHL 18, [2009] 3 All E.R. 945, par. 58 et 82-83; Lewison, p. 173-177), et ce, même s'ils tiennent compte des circonstances — un concept que nous aborderons — dans l'interprétation du contrat écrit (Prenn c. Simmonds, [1971] 3 All E.R. 237 (H.L.); Reardon Smith Line Ltd. c. Hansen-Tangen, [1976] 3 All E.R. 570 (H.L.)).

[45] Au Canada, l'approche historique n'a pas perdu tous ses adeptes. Voir par exemple Jiro Enterprises Ltd. c. Spencer, 2008 ABCA 87 (CanLII), par. 10; QK Investments Inc. c. Crocus Investment Fund, 2008 MBCA 21, 290 D.L.R. (4th) 84, par. 26; Dow Chemical Canada Inc. c. Shell Chemicals Canada Ltd., 2010 ABCA 126, 25 Alta. L.R. (5th) 221, par. 11-12; Canada c. Costco Wholesale Canada Ltd., 2012 CAF 160 (CanLII), par. 34. Or, des tribunaux canadiens ont délaissé l'approche historique au profit d'une nouvelle démarche qui conçoit l'interprétation des contrats écrits soit comme une question de droit soit comme une question mixte de fait et de droit. Voir par exemple WCI Waste Conversion Inc. c. ADI International Inc., 2011 PECA 14, 309 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 1, par. 11; 269893 Alberta Ltd. c. Otter Bay Developments Ltd., 2009 BCCA 37, 266 B.C.A.C. 98, par. 13; Hayes Forest Services Ltd. c. Weyerhaeuser Co., 2008 BCCA 31, 289 D.L.R. (4th) 230, par. 44; Bell Canada c. The Plan Group, 2009 ONCA 548, 96 O.R. (3d) 81, par. 22-23 (les juges majoritaires, sous la plume du juge Blair) et par. 133-135 (la juge Gillese, dissidente, mais pas sur ce point); King, par. 20-23.

[46] La tendance à délaisser l'approche historique au Canada semble s'expliquer par deux changements. Le premier est l'adoption d'une méthode d'interprétation contractuelle qui oblige le tribunal à tenir compte des circonstances — que l'on appelle

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

NBC BOA 001141

— often referred to as the factual matrix — when interpreting a written contract (Hall, at pp. 13, 21-25 and 127; and J. D. McCamus, The Law of Contracts (2nd ed. 2012), at pp. 749-51). The second is the explanation of the difference between questions of law and questions of mixed fact and law provided in Canada (Director of Investigation and Research) v. Southam Inc., [1997] 1 S.C.R. 748, at para. 35, and Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235, at paras. 26 and 31-36.

[47] Regarding the first development, the interpretation of contracts has evolved towards a practical, common-sense approach not dominated by technical rules of construction. The overriding concern is to determine "the intent of the parties and the scope of their understanding" (Jesuit Fathers of Upper Canada v. Guardian Insurance Co. of Canada, 2006 SCC 21, [2006] 1 S.C.R. 744, at para. 27, per LeBel J.; see also Tercon Contractors Ltd. v. British Columbia (Transportation and Highways), 2010 SCC 4, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 69, at paras. 64-65, per Cromwell J.). To do so, a decision-maker must read the contract as a whole, giving the words used their ordinary and grammatical meaning, consistent with the surrounding circumstances known to the parties at the time of formation of the contract. Consideration of the surrounding circumstances recognizes that ascertaining contractual intention can be difficult when looking at words on their own, because words alone do not have an immutable or absolute meaning:

> No contracts are made in a vacuum: there is always a setting in which they have to be placed. . . . In a commercial contract it is certainly right that the court should know the commercial purpose of the contract and this in turn presupposes knowledge of the genesis of the transaction, the background, the context, the market in which the parties are operating.

(Reardon Smith Line, at p. 574, per Lord Wilberforce)

[48] The meaning of words is often derived from a number of contextual factors, including the purpose of the agreement and the nature of the relationship created by the agreement (see Moore Realty Inc.

souvent le fondement factuel — dans l'interprétation d'un contrat écrit (Hall, p. 13, 21-25 et 127; J. D. McCamus, The Law of Contracts (2e éd. 2012), p. 749-751). Le deuxième découle des explications formulées dans les arrêts Canada (Directeur des enquêtes et recherches) c. Southam Inc., [1997] 1 R.C.S. 748, par. 35, et Housen c. Nikolaisen, 2002 CSC 33, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 235, par. 26 et 31-36, sur ce qui distingue la question de droit de la question mixte de fait et de droit.

[47] Relativement au premier changement, l'interprétation des contrats a évolué vers une démarche pratique, axée sur le bon sens plutôt que sur des règles de forme en matière d'interprétation. La question prédominante consiste à discerner « l'intention des parties et la portée de l'entente » (Jesuit Fathers of Upper Canada c. Cie d'assurance Guardian du Canada, 2006 CSC 21, [2006] 1 R.C.S. 744, par. 27, le juge LeBel; voir aussi Tercon Contractors Ltd. c. Colombie-Britannique (Transports et Voirie), 2010 CSC 4, [2010] 1 R.C.S. 69, par. 64-65, le juge Cromwell). Pour ce faire, le décideur doit interpréter le contrat dans son ensemble, en donnant aux mots y figurant le sens ordinaire et grammatical qui s'harmonise avec les circonstances dont les parties avaient connaissance au moment de la conclusion du contrat. Par l'examen des circonstances, on reconnaît qu'il peut être difficile de déterminer l'intention contractuelle à partir des seuls mots, car les mots en soi n'ont pas un sens immuable ou absolu :

> [TRADUCTION] Aucun contrat n'est conclu dans l'abstrait : les contrats s'inscrivent toujours dans un contexte. [. . .] Lorsqu'un contrat commercial est en cause, le tribunal devrait certes connaître son objet sur le plan commercial, ce qui présuppose d'autre part une connaissance de l'origine de l'opération, de l'historique, du contexte, du marché dans lequel les parties exercent leurs activités.

(Reardon Smith Line, p. 574, le lord Wilberforce)

[48] Le sens des mots est souvent déterminé par un certain nombre de facteurs contextuels, y compris l'objet de l'entente et la nature des rapports créés par celle-ci (voir Moore Realty Inc. c. Manitoba

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

v. Manitoba Motor League, 2003 MBCA 71, 173 Man. R. (2d) 300, at para. 15, per Hamilton J.A.; see also Hall, at p. 22; and McCamus, at pp. 749-50). As stated by Lord Hoffmann in Investors Compensation Scheme Ltd. v. West Bromwich Building Society, [1998] 1 All E.R. 98 (H.L.):

> The meaning which a document (or any other utterance) would convey to a reasonable man is not the same thing as the meaning of its words. The meaning of words is a matter of dictionaries and grammars; the meaning of the document is what the parties using those words against the relevant background would reasonably have been understood to mean. [p. 115]

[49] As to the second development, the historical approach to contractual interpretation does not fit well with the definition of a pure question of law identified in Housen and Southam. Questions of law "are questions about what the correct legal test is" (Southam, at para. 35). Yet in contractual interpretation, the goal of the exercise is to ascertain the objective intent of the parties — a fact-specific goal — through the application of legal principles of interpretation. This appears closer to a question of mixed fact and law, defined in Housen as "applying a legal standard to a set of facts" (para. 26; see also Southam, at para. 35). However, some courts have questioned whether this definition, which was developed in the context of a negligence action, can be readily applied to questions of contractual interpretation, and suggest that contractual interpretation is primarily a legal affair (see for example Bell Canada, at para. 25).

[50] With respect for the contrary view, I am of the opinion that the historical approach should be abandoned. Contractual interpretation involves issues of mixed fact and law as it is an exercise in which the principles of contractual interpretation are applied to the words of the written contract, considered in light of the factual matrix.

[51] The purpose of the distinction between questions of law and those of mixed fact and law further Motor League, 2003 MBCA 71, 173 Man. R. (2d) 300, par. 15, la juge Hamilton; voir aussi Hall, p. 22; McCamus, p. 749-750). Pour reprendre les propos du lord Hoffmann dans Investors Compensation Scheme Ltd. c. West Bromwich Building Society, [1998] 1 All E.R. 98 (H.L.) :

> [TRADUCTION] Le sens d'un document (ou toute autre déclaration) qui est transmis à la personne raisonnable n'équivaut pas au sens des mots qui le composent. Le sens des mots fait intervenir les dictionnaires et les grammaires; le sens du document représente ce qu'il est raisonnable de croire que les parties, en employant ces mots compte tenu du contexte pertinent, ont voulu exprimer. [p. 115]

[49] Relativement au deuxième changement, l'approche historique de l'interprétation contractuelle ne cadre pas bien avec la définition de la pure question de droit formulée dans les arrêts Housen et Southam. Les questions de droit « concernent la détermination du critère juridique applicable » (Southam, par. 35). Or, lorsqu'il s'agit d'interprétation contractuelle, le but de l'exercice consiste à déterminer l'intention objective des parties — un but axé sur les faits — par l'application des principes juridiques d'interprétation. Il me semble que cela se rapproche plutôt de la question mixte de fait et de droit, définie dans l'arrêt Housen comme supposant « l'application d'une norme juridique à un ensemble de faits » (par. 26; voir aussi Southam, par. 35). Toutefois, certains tribunaux ont émis des doutes sur l'application directe de cette définition, qui avait été établie à l'égard d'une action intentée pour négligence, à des questions d'interprétation contractuelle et laissent entendre que cette dernière est d'abord et avant tout une affaire de droit (voir par exemple Bell Canada, par. 25).

[50] Avec tout le respect que je dois aux tenants de l'opinion contraire, à mon avis, il faut rompre avec l'approche historique. L'interprétation contractuelle soulève des questions mixtes de fait et de droit, car il s'agit d'en appliquer les principes aux termes figurant dans le contrat écrit, à la lumière du fondement factuel.

[51] Cette conclusion est étayée par les raisons qui sous-tendent la distinction établie entre la supports this conclusion. One central purpose of drawing a distinction between questions of law and those of mixed fact and law is to limit the intervention of appellate courts to cases where the results can be expected to have an impact beyond the parties to the particular dispute. It reflects the role of courts of appeal in ensuring the consistency of the law, rather than in providing a new forum for parties to continue their private litigation. For this reason, Southam identified the degree of generality (or "precedential value") as the key difference between a question of law and a question of mixed fact and law. The more narrow the rule, the less useful will be the intervention of the court of appeal:

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

> If a court were to decide that driving at a certain speed on a certain road under certain conditions was negligent, its decision would not have any great value as a precedent. In short, as the level of generality of the challenged proposition approaches utter particularity, the matter approaches pure application, and hence draws nigh to being an unqualified question of mixed law and fact. See R. P. Kerans, Standards of Review Employed by Appellate Courts (1994), at pp. 103-108. Of course, it is not easy to say precisely where the line should be drawn; though in most cases it should be sufficiently clear whether the dispute is over a general proposition that might qualify as a principle of law or over a very particular set of circumstances that is not apt to be of much interest to judges and lawyers in the future. [para. 37] question de droit et la question mixte de fait et de droit. En distinguant ces deux catégories, on visait principalement à restreindre l'intervention de la juridiction d'appel aux affaires qui entraîneraient probablement des répercussions qui ne seraient pas limitées aux parties au litige. Ainsi, le rôle des cours d'appel, qui consiste à assurer la cohérence du droit, et non à offrir aux parties une nouvelle tribune leur permettant de poursuivre leur litige privé, est préservé. C'est pourquoi la Cour dans l'arrêt Southam reconnaît le degré de généralité (ou « la valeur comme précédents ») comme la principale différence entre la question de droit et la question mixte de fait et de droit. Plus la règle est stricte, moins l'intervention de la cour d'appel sera utile :

[52] Similarly, this Court in Housen found that deference to fact-finders promoted the goals of limiting the number, length, and cost of appeals, and of promoting the autonomy and integrity of trial proceedings (paras. 16-17). These principles also weigh in favour of deference to first instance decision-makers on points of contractual interpretation. The legal obligations arising from a contract are, in most cases, limited to the interest of the particular parties. Given that our legal system leaves broad scope to tribunals of first instance to resolve issues of limited application, this supports treating contractual interpretation as a question of mixed fact and law.

> Si une cour décidait que le fait d'avoir conduit à une certaine vitesse, sur une route donnée et dans des conditions particulières constituait de la négligence, sa décision aurait peu de valeur comme précédent. Bref, plus le niveau de généralité de la proposition contestée se rapproche de la particularité absolue, plus l'affaire prend le caractère d'une question d'application pure, et s'approche donc d'une question de droit et de fait parfaite. Voir R. P. Kerans, Standards of Review Employed by Appellate Courts (1994), aux pp. 103 à 108. Il va de soi qu'il n'est pas facile de dire avec précision où doit être tracée la ligne de démarcation; quoique, dans la plupart des cas, la situation soit suffisamment claire pour permettre de déterminer si le litige porte sur une proposition générale qui peut être qualifiée de principe de droit ou sur un ensemble très particulier de circonstances qui n'est pas susceptible de présenter beaucoup d'intérêt pour les juges et les avocats dans l'avenir. [par. 37]

[52] De même, la Cour dans l'arrêt Housen conclut que la retenue à l'égard du juge des faits contribue à réduire le nombre, la durée et le coût des appels tout en favorisant l'autonomie du procès et son intégrité (par. 16-17). Ces principes militent également en faveur de la déférence à l'endroit des décideurs de première instance en matière d'interprétation contractuelle. Les obligations juridiques issues d'un contrat se limitent, dans la plupart des cas, aux intérêts des parties au litige. Le vaste pouvoir de trancher les questions d'application limitée que notre système judiciaire confère aux tribunaux de première instance appuie la proposition selon laquelle l'interprétation contractuelle est une question mixte de fait et de droit.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[53] Nonetheless, it may be possible to identify an extricable question of law from within what was initially characterized as a question of mixed fact and law (Housen, at paras. 31 and 34-35). Legal errors made in the course of contractual interpretation include "the application of an incorrect principle, the failure to consider a required element of a legal test, or the failure to consider a relevant factor" (King, at para. 21). Moreover, there is no question that many other issues in contract law do engage substantive rules of law: the requirements for the formation of the contract, the capacity of the parties, the requirement that certain contracts be evidenced in writing, and so on.

[54] However, courts should be cautious in identifying extricable questions of law in disputes over contractual interpretation. Given the statutory requirement to identify a question of law in a leave application pursuant to s. 31(2) of the AA, the applicant for leave and its counsel will seek to frame any alleged errors as questions of law. The legislature has sought to restrict such appeals, however, and courts must be careful to ensure that the proposed ground of appeal has been properly characterized. The warning expressed in Housen to exercise caution in attempting to extricate a question of law is relevant here:

> Appellate courts must be cautious, however, in finding that a trial judge erred in law in his or her determination of negligence, as it is often difficult to extricate the legal questions from the factual. It is for this reason that these matters are referred to as questions of "mixed law and fact". Where the legal principle is not readily extricable, then the matter is one of "mixed law and fact" . . . . [para. 36]

[55] Although that caution was expressed in the context of a negligence case, it applies, in my opinion, to contractual interpretation as well. As mentioned above, the goal of contractual interpretation, to ascertain the objective intentions of the parties, is inherently fact specific. The close relationship between the selection and application of principles of

[53] Néanmoins, il peut se révéler possible de dégager une pure question de droit de ce qui paraît au départ constituer une question mixte de fait et de droit (Housen, par. 31 et 34-35). L'interprétation contractuelle peut occasionner des erreurs de droit, notamment [TRADUCTION] « appliquer le mauvais principe ou négliger un élément essentiel d'un critère juridique ou un facteur pertinent » (King, par. 21). En outre, il est indubitable que nombre d'autres questions se posant en droit des contrats mettent en jeu des règles de droit substantiel : les critères de formation du contrat, la capacité des parties, l'obligation que soient constatés par écrit certains types de contrat, etc.

[54] Le tribunal doit cependant faire preuve de prudence avant d'isoler une question de droit dans un litige portant sur l'interprétation contractuelle. Compte tenu de l'obligation, prévue au par. 31(2) de l'AA, que la demande d'autorisation soulève une question de droit, le demandeur et son représentant chercheront à qualifier de question de droit toute erreur qu'ils invoquent. Toutefois, le législateur a pris des mesures visant à limiter ce genre d'appels, et les tribunaux doivent examiner soigneusement le motif d'appel proposé pour déterminer s'il est bien caractérisé. La mise en garde exprimée dans Housen qui appelle à la prudence lorsqu'il s'agit d'isoler une question de droit s'applique dans le cas présent :

> Les cours d'appel doivent cependant faire preuve de prudence avant de juger que le juge de première instance a commis une erreur de droit lorsqu'il a conclu à la négligence, puisqu'il est souvent difficile de départager les questions de droit et les questions de fait. Voilà pourquoi on appelle certaines questions des questions « mixtes de fait et de droit ». Si le principe juridique n'est pas facilement isolable, il s'agit alors d'une « question mixte de fait et de droit » . . . [par. 36]

[55] Certes, cette mise en garde a été formulée dans le contexte d'une action pour négligence, mais elle s'applique également à mon avis à l'interprétation contractuelle. Comme je le mentionne précédemment, le but de l'interprétation contractuelle — déterminer l'intention objective des parties — est, de par sa nature même, axé sur les faits. Le rapport contractual interpretation and the construction ultimately given to the instrument means that the circumstances in which a question of law can be extricated from the interpretation process will be rare. In the absence of a legal error of the type described above, no appeal lies under the AA from an arbitrator's interpretation of a contract.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

(b) The Role and Nature of the "Surrounding Circumstances"

[56] I now turn to the role of the surrounding circumstances in contractual interpretation and the nature of the evidence that can be considered. The discussion here is limited to the common law approach to contractual interpretation; it does not seek to apply to or alter the law of contractual interpretation governed by the Civil Code of Québec.

[57] While the surrounding circumstances will be considered in interpreting the terms of a contract, they must never be allowed to overwhelm the words of that agreement (Hayes Forest Services, at para. 14; and Hall, at p. 30). The goal of examining such evidence is to deepen a decision-maker's understanding of the mutual and objective intentions of the parties as expressed in the words of the contract. The interpretation of a written contractual provision must always be grounded in the text and read in light of the entire contract (Hall, at pp. 15 and 30-32). While the surrounding circumstances are relied upon in the interpretive process, courts cannot use them to deviate from the text such that the court effectively creates a new agreement (Glaswegian Enterprises Inc. v. B.C. Tel Mobility Cellular Inc. (1997), 101 B.C.A.C. 62).

[58] The nature of the evidence that can be relied upon under the rubric of "surrounding circumstances" will necessarily vary from case to case. It does, however, have its limits. It should consist only of objective evidence of the background facts at the time of the execution of the contract (King, étroit qui existe entre, d'une part, le choix et l'application des principes d'interprétation contractuelle et, d'autre part, l'interprétation que recevra l'instrument juridique en dernière analyse fait en sorte que rares seront les circonstances dans lesquelles il sera possible d'isoler une question de droit au cours de l'exercice d'interprétation. En l'absence d'une erreur de droit du genre de celles décrites plus haut, aucun droit d'appel de l'interprétation par un arbitre d'un contrat n'est prévu à l'AA.

b) Le rôle et la nature des « circonstances »

[56] Abordons le rôle des circonstances dans l'interprétation du contrat et la nature des éléments admis à l'examen. La présente analyse ne traite que de la démarche d'interprétation contractuelle fondée sur la common law; elle ne se veut ni une application ni une modification du droit relatif à l'interprétation contractuelle régi par le Code civil du Québec.

[57] Bien que les circonstances soient prises en considération dans l'interprétation des termes d'un contrat, elles ne doivent jamais les supplanter (Hayes Forest Services, par. 14; Hall, p. 30). Le décideur examine cette preuve dans le but de mieux saisir les intentions réciproques et objectives des parties exprimées dans les mots du contrat. Une disposition contractuelle doit toujours être interprétée sur le fondement de son libellé et de l'ensemble du contrat (Hall, p. 15 et 30-32). Les circonstances sous-tendent l'interprétation du contrat, mais le tribunal ne saurait fonder sur elles une lecture du texte qui s'écarte de ce dernier au point de créer dans les faits une nouvelle entente (Glaswegian Enterprises Inc. c. B.C. Tel Mobility Cellular Inc. (1997), 101 B.C.A.C. 62).

[58] La nature de la preuve susceptible d'appartenir aux « circonstances » variera nécessairement d'une affaire à l'autre. Il y a toutefois certaines limites. Il doit s'agir d'une preuve objective du contexte factuel au moment de la signature du contrat (King, par. 66 et 70), c'est-à-dire, les renseignements qui at paras. 66 and 70), that is, knowledge that was or reasonably ought to have been within the knowledge of both parties at or before the date of contracting. Subject to these requirements and the parol evidence rule discussed below, this includes, in the words of Lord Hoffmann, "absolutely anything which would have affected the way in which the language of the document would have been understood by a reasonable man" (Investors Compensation Scheme, at p. 114). Whether something was or reasonably ought to have been within the common knowledge of the parties at the time of execution of the contract is a question of fact.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

(c) Considering the Surrounding Circumstances Does Not Offend the Parol Evidence Rule

[59] It is necessary to say a word about consideration of the surrounding circumstances and the parol evidence rule. The parol evidence rule precludes admission of evidence outside the words of the written contract that would add to, subtract from, vary, or contradict a contract that has been wholly reduced to writing (King, at para. 35; and Hall, at p. 53). To this end, the rule precludes, among other things, evidence of the subjective intentions of the parties (Hall, at pp. 64-65; and Eli Lilly & Co. v. Novopharm Ltd., [1998] 2 S.C.R. 129, at paras. 54-59, per Iacobucci J.). The purpose of the parol evidence rule is primarily to achieve finality and certainty in contractual obligations, and secondarily to hamper a party's ability to use fabricated or unreliable evidence to attack a written contract (United Brotherhood of Carpenters and Joiners of America, Local 579 v. Bradco Construction Ltd., [1993] 2 S.C.R. 316, at pp. 341-42, per Sopinka J.).

[60] The parol evidence rule does not apply to preclude evidence of the surrounding circumstances. Such evidence is consistent with the objectives of finality and certainty because it is used as an interpretive aid for determining the meaning of the written words chosen by the parties, not to change or overrule the meaning of those words. The surrounding circumstances are facts known or facts appartenaient ou auraient raisonnablement dû appartenir aux connaissances des deux parties à la date de signature ou avant celle-ci. Compte tenu de ces exigences et de la règle d'exclusion de la preuve extrinsèque que nous verrons, on entend par « circonstances », pour reprendre les propos du lord Hoffmann [TRADUCTION] « tout ce qui aurait eu une incidence sur la manière dont une personne raisonnable aurait compris les termes du document » (Investors Compensation Scheme, p. 114). La question de savoir si quelque chose appartenait ou aurait dû raisonnablement appartenir aux connaissances communes des parties au moment de la signature du contrat est une question de fait.

c) Tenir compte des circonstances n'est pas contraire à la règle d'exclusion de la preuve extrinsèque

[59] Quelques mots sur l'examen des circonstances et la règle d'exclusion de la preuve extrinsèque s'imposent. Cette règle empêche l'admission d'éléments de preuve autres que les termes du contrat écrit qui auraient pour effet de modifier ou de contredire un contrat qui a été entièrement consigné par écrit, ou d'y ajouter de nouvelles clauses ou d'en supprimer (King, par. 35; Hall, p. 53). À cette fin, la règle interdit notamment les éléments de preuve concernant les intentions subjectives des parties (Hall, p. 64-65; Eli Lilly & Co. c. Novopharm Ltd., [1998] 2 R.C.S. 129, par. 54-59, le juge Iacobucci). La règle vise, premièrement, à donner un caractère définitif et certain aux obligations contractuelles et, deuxièmement, à empêcher qu'une partie puisse utiliser des éléments de preuve fabriqués ou douteux pour attaquer un contrat écrit (Fraternité unie des charpentiers et menuisiers d'Amérique, section locale 579 c. Bradco Construction Ltd., [1993] 2 R.C.S. 316, p. 341-342, le juge Sopinka).

[60] La règle d'exclusion de la preuve extrinsèque n'interdit pas au tribunal de tenir compte des circonstances entourant le contrat. Cette preuve est compatible avec les objectifs relatifs au caractère définitif et certain puisqu'elle sert d'outil d'interprétation qui vient éclairer le sens des mots du contrat choisis par les parties, et non le changer ou s'y substituer. Les circonstances sont des faits connus that reasonably ought to have been known to both parties at or before the date of contracting; therefore, the concern of unreliability does not arise.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[61] Some authorities and commentators suggest that the parol evidence rule is an anachronism, or, at the very least, of limited application in view of the myriad of exceptions to it (see for example Gutierrez v. Tropic International Ltd. (2002), 63 O.R. (3d) 63 (C.A.), at paras. 19-20; and Hall, at pp. 53-64). For the purposes of this appeal, it is sufficient to say that the parol evidence rule does not apply to preclude evidence of surrounding circumstances when interpreting the words of a written contract.

(d) Application to the Present Case

[62] In this case, the CA Leave Court granted leave on the following issue: "Whether the Arbitrator erred in law in failing to construe the whole of the Finder's Fee Agreement . . ." (A.R., vol. I, at p. 62).

[63] As will be explained below, while the requirement to construe a contract as a whole is a question of law that could — if extricable — satisfy the threshold requirement under s. 31 of the AA, I do not think this question was properly extricated in this case.

[64] I accept that a fundamental principle of contractual interpretation is that a contract must be construed as a whole (McCamus, at pp. 761-62; and Hall, at p. 15). If the arbitrator did not take the "maximum amount" proviso into account, as alleged by Creston, then he did not construe the Agreement as a whole because he ignored a specific and relevant provision of the Agreement. This is a question of law that would be extricable from a finding of mixed fact and law.

[65] However, it appears that the arbitrator did consider the "maximum amount" proviso. Indeed, ou qui auraient raisonnablement dû l'être des deux parties à la date de signature du contrat ou avant celle-ci; par conséquent, le risque que des éléments d'une fiabilité douteuse soient invoqués ne se pose pas.

[61] Selon une certaine jurisprudence et des auteurs, la règle d'exclusion de la preuve extrinsèque serait un anachronisme ou, à tout le moins, d'application restreinte vu la myriade d'exceptions dont elle est assortie (voir par exemple Gutierrez c. Tropic International Ltd. (2002), 63 O.R. (3d) 63 (C.A.), par. 19-20; Hall, p. 53-64). Dans le cadre du présent pourvoi, il suffit de dire que la règle d'exclusion de la preuve extrinsèque ne s'oppose pas à la présentation d'une preuve des circonstances entourant le contrat pour l'interprétation de ce dernier.

d) Application au présent pourvoi

[62] En l'espèce, la Cour d'appel a accordé l'autorisation d'appel relativement à la question suivante : [TRADUCTION] « L'arbitre a-t-il commis une erreur de droit en n'interprétant pas l'entente relative aux honoraires d'intermédiation dans son ensemble . . . ? » (d.a., vol. I, p. 62)

[63] Comme nous le verrons, l'obligation d'interpréter le contrat dans son ensemble est une question de droit susceptible, si on pouvait l'isoler, de satisfaire au critère minimal exigé à l'art. 31 de l'AA. À mon avis, cette question n'a pas été isolée comme il se doit en l'espèce.

[64] Je reconnais qu'il est un principe fondamental de l'interprétation contractuelle selon lequel le contrat doit être interprété dans son ensemble (McCamus, p. 761-762; Hall, p. 15). Si l'arbitre n'a pas tenu compte de la stipulation relative au « plafond », comme le prétend Creston, il n'a alors pas interprété l'entente dans son ensemble, car il en a négligé une clause précise et pertinente. Voilà une question de droit qui pourrait être isolée de la conclusion mixte de fait et de droit.

[65] Or, il semble que l'arbitre a effectivement tenu compte de la stipulation relative au « plafond ».

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

the CA Leave Court acknowledges that the arbitrator had considered that proviso, since it notes that he turned his mind to the US$1.5 million maximum amount, an amount that can only be calculated by referring to the TSXV policy referenced in the "maximum amount" proviso in s. 3.1 of the Agreement. As I read its reasons, rather than being concerned with whether the arbitrator ignored the maximum amount proviso, which is what Creston alleges in this Court, the CA Leave Court decision focused on how the arbitrator construed s. 3.1 of the Agreement, which included the maximum amount proviso (paras. 25-26). For example, the CA Leave Court expressed concern that the arbitrator did not address the "incongruity" in the fact that the value of the fee would vary "hugely" depending on whether it was taken in cash or shares (para. 25).

En effet, selon la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation, l'arbitre a examiné la stipulation, puisqu'elle signale qu'il a envisagé le plafond de 1,5 million $US, un nombre auquel il ne peut être arrivé que s'il a consulté la politique de la Bourse à laquelle renvoie la stipulation relative au « plafond » à l'art. 3.1 de l'entente. À la lumière de ses motifs, j'estime que la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation, au lieu de se demander si l'arbitre a négligé la stipulation relative au plafond — ce que Creston prétend devant la Cour —, a axé sa décision sur l'interprétation qu'a donnée l'arbitre de l'art. 3.1 de l'entente, qui contient cette stipulation (par. 25-26). Par exemple, la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation s'est dite préoccupée que l'arbitre n'ait pas abordé l'[TRADUCTION] « absurdité » de la variation « considérable » dans la valeur des honoraires selon qu'ils étaient versés en argent ou en actions (par. 25).

[66] With respect, the CA Leave Court erred in finding that the construction of s. 3.1 of the Agreement constituted a question of law. As explained by Justice Armstrong in the SC Appeal Court decision, construing s. 3.1 and taking account of the proviso required relying on the relevant surrounding circumstances, including the sophistication of the parties, the fluctuation in share prices, and the nature of the risk a party assumes when deciding to accept a fee in shares as opposed to cash. Such an exercise raises a question of mixed fact and law. There being no question of law extricable from the mixed fact and law question of how s. 3.1 and the proviso should be interpreted, the CA Leave Court erred in granting leave to appeal.

[66] Avec tout le respect que je lui dois, j'estime que la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation a assimilé à tort l'interprétation de l'art. 3.1 de l'entente à une question de droit. Comme l'explique le juge Armstrong dans la décision de la CS sur l'appel, pour interpréter l'art. 3.1 et tenir compte de la stipulation, il fallait examiner les circonstances pertinentes, y compris le fait que les parties étaient des parties avisées, la fluctuation du cours de l'action et la nature du risque qu'une partie assume quand elle opte pour le versement de ses honoraires en actions plutôt qu'en argent. Un tel exercice soulève une question mixte de fait et de droit. Comme aucune question de droit ne peut être isolée de la question mixte de fait et de droit qui porte sur l'interprétation de l'art. 3.1 et de la stipulation, la Cour d'appel a commis une erreur en accueillant la demande d'autorisation d'appel.

[67] The conclusion that Creston's application for leave to appeal raised no question of law would be sufficient to dispose of this appeal. However, as this Court rarely has the opportunity to address appeals of arbitral awards, it is, in my view, useful to explain that, even had the CA Leave Court been correct in finding that construction of s. 3.1 of the Agreement constituted a question of law, it should have nonetheless denied leave to appeal as the [67] Conclure que la demande d'autorisation d'appel présentée par Creston ne soulevait aucune question de droit suffirait à trancher le présent pourvoi. Toutefois, puisque la Cour a rarement l'occasion de se pencher sur l'appel d'une sentence arbitrale, il est à mon avis utile d'expliquer que même si la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation avait conclu à bon droit que l'interprétation de l'art. 3.1 de l'entente constituait une question de application also failed the miscarriage of justice and residual discretion stages of the leave analysis set out in s. 31(2)(a) of the AA.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

droit, elle devait néanmoins rejeter la demande, car il n'était pas satisfait aux autres volets de l'analyse des demandes d'autorisation que requiert l'al. 31(2)(a) de l'AA, qui concernent l'erreur judiciaire et le pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel.

(4) May Prevent a Miscarriage of Justice

(4) Le règlement de la question de droit peut permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire

(a) Miscarriage of Justice for the Purposes of Section 31(2)(a) of the AA

a) L'erreur judiciaire pour l'application de l'al. 31(2)(a) de l'AA

[68] Once a question of law has been identified, the court must be satisfied that the determination of that point of law on appeal "may prevent a miscarriage of justice" in order for it to grant leave to appeal pursuant to s. 31(2)(a) of the AA. The first step in this analysis is defining miscarriage of justice for the purposes of s. 31(2)(a).

[68] Une fois qu'il a cerné une question de droit, le tribunal doit être convaincu que le fait de statuer sur cette dernière [TRADUCTION] « peut permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire » avant d'accorder l'autorisation d'appel en vertu de l'al. 31(2)(a) de l'AA. La première étape de l'analyse consiste donc à définir l'erreur judiciaire pour l'application de cette disposition.

[69] In BCIT, Justice Saunders discussed the miscarriage of justice requirement under s. 31(2)(a). She affirmed the definition set out in Domtar Inc. v. Belkin Inc. (1989), 39 B.C.L.R. (2d) 257 (C.A.), which required the error of law in question to be a material issue that, if decided differently, would lead to a different result: ". . . if the point of law were decided differently, the arbitrator would have been led to a different result. In other words, was the alleged error of law material to the decision; does it go to its heart?" (BCIT, at para. 28). See also Quan v. Cusson, 2009 SCC 62, [2009] 3 S.C.R. 712, which discusses the test of whether "some substantial wrong or miscarriage of justice has occurred" in the context of a civil jury trial (para. 43).

[69] Dans BCIT, la juge Saunders traite du critère concernant l'erreur judiciaire prévu à l'al. 31(2)(a). Elle confirme la définition énoncée dans l'affaire Domtar Inc. c. Belkin Inc. (1989), 39 B.C.L.R. (2d) 257 (C.A.), selon laquelle l'erreur de droit doit toucher une question importante de sorte qu'une conclusion différente aurait abouti à un résultat différent : [TRADUCTION] « . . . si le point de droit avait été tranché différemment, l'arbitre aurait rendu une décision différente. Autrement dit, l'erreur de droit invoquée a-t-elle eu un effet déterminant sur la décision; touche-t-elle au cœur de la décision? » (BCIT, par. 28). Voir également l'arrêt Quan c. Cusson, 2009 CSC 62, [2009] 3 R.C.S. 712, où la Cour analyse le critère qui sert à déterminer s'il y a « préjudice grave ou [. . .] erreur judiciaire » dans le contexte des procès civils avec jury (par. 43).

[70] Having regard to BCIT and Quan, I am of the opinion that in order to rise to the level of a miscarriage of justice for the purposes of s. 31(2)(a) of the AA, an alleged legal error must pertain to a material issue in the dispute which, if decided differently, would affect the result of the case.

[70] Compte tenu des arrêts BCIT et Quan, je suis d'avis que, pour que l'erreur de droit reprochée soit une erreur judiciaire au sens où il faut l'entendre pour l'application de l'al. 31(2)(a) de l'AA, elle doit se rapporter à une question importante en litige qui, si elle était tranchée différemment, aurait une incidence sur le résultat.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[71] According to this standard, a determination of a point of law "may prevent a miscarriage of justice" only where the appeal itself has some possibility of succeeding. An appeal with no chance of success will not meet the threshold of "may prevent a miscarriage of justice" because there would be no chance that the outcome of the appeal would cause a change in the final result of the case.

[72] At the leave stage, it is not appropriate to consider the full merits of a case and make a final determination regarding whether an error of law was made. However, some preliminary consideration of the question of law is necessary to determine whether the appeal has the potential to succeed and thus to change the result in the case.

[73] BCIT sets the threshold for this preliminary assessment of the appeal as "more than an arguable point" (para. 30). With respect, once an arguable point has been made out, it is not apparent what more is required to meet the "more than an arguable point" standard. Presumably, the leave judge would have to delve more deeply into the arguments around the question of law on appeal than would be appropriate at the leave stage to find more than an arguable point. Requiring this closer examination of the point of law, in my respectful view, blurs the line between the function of the court considering the leave application and the court hearing the appeal.

[74] In my opinion, the appropriate threshold for assessing the legal question at issue under s. 31(2) is whether it has arguable merit. The arguable merit standard is often used to assess, on a preliminary basis, the merits of an appeal at the leave stage (see for example Quick Auto Lease Inc. v. Nordin, 2014 MBCA 32, 303 Man. R. (2d) 262, at para. 5; and R. v. Fedossenko, 2013 ABCA 164 (CanLII), at para. 7). "Arguable merit" is a well-known phrase whose meaning has been expressed in a variety of ways: "a reasonable prospect of success" (Quick Auto Lease, at para. 5; and Enns v. Hansey, 2013 MBCA 23 (CanLII), at para. 2); "some hope of success" and "sufficient merit" (R. v. Hubley, 2009 PECA 21, 289 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 174, at para. 11); and "credible

[71] Suivant cette norme, le règlement d'un point de droit « peut permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire » seulement lorsqu'il existe une certaine possibilité que l'appel soit accueilli. Un appel qui est voué à l'échec ne saurait « permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire » puisque les possibilités que l'issue d'un tel appel joue sur le résultat final du litige sont nulles.

[72] Ce n'est pas à l'étape de l'autorisation qu'il convient d'examiner exhaustivement le fond du litige et de se prononcer définitivement sur l'absence ou l'existence d'une erreur de droit. Cependant, il faut procéder à un examen préliminaire de la question de droit pour déterminer si l'appel a une chance d'être accueilli et, par conséquent, de modifier le résultat du litige.

[73] Selon l'arrêt BCIT, le demandeur doit établir [TRADUCTION] « plus qu'un argument défendable » (par. 30) lors de cet examen préliminaire de l'appel. Pourtant, une fois un argument défendable soulevé, que faudrait-il démontrer de plus pour qu'il soit satisfait à cette norme? Vraisemblablement, le juge saisi de la demande d'autorisation devrait alors examiner les arguments se rapportant à la question de droit soulevée en appel de plus près que ce qui serait indiqué à cette étape pour trouver plus qu'un argument défendable. À mon humble avis, exiger un examen plus approfondi du point de droit brouille les rôles respectifs de la formation saisie de la demande d'autorisation et de celle saisie de l'appel.

[74] Selon moi, ce qu'il faut démontrer, pour l'application du par. 31(2), c'est que la question de droit invoquée a un fondement défendable. Ce critère s'applique souvent à l'étape de l'autorisation, pour établir sommairement le bien-fondé de l'appel (voir par exemple Quick Auto Lease Inc. c. Nordin, 2014 MBCA 32, 303 Man. R. (2d) 262, par. 5; R. c. Fedossenko, 2013 ABCA 164 (CanLII), par. 7). Il est bien connu et a été exprimé de diverses façons : [TRADUCTION] « une possibilité raisonnable d'être accueilli » (a reasonable prospect of success) (Quick Auto Lease, par. 5; Enns c. Hansey, 2013 MBCA 23 (CanLII), par. 2); une « certaine chance de succès » (some hope of success) et un « fondement suffisant » (sufficient merit) (R. c. Hubley, 2009 PECA argument" (R. v. Will, 2013 SKCA 4, 405 Sask. R. 270, at para. 8). In my view, the common thread among the various expressions used to describe arguable merit is that the issue raised by the applicant cannot be dismissed through a preliminary examination of the question of law. In order to decide whether the award should be set aside, a more thorough examination is necessary and that examination is appropriately conducted by the court hearing the appeal once leave is granted.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[75] Assessing whether the issue raised by an application for leave to appeal has arguable merit must be done in light of the standard of review on which the merits of the appeal will be judged. This requires a preliminary assessment of the applicable standard of review. As I will later explain, reasonableness will almost always apply to commercial arbitrations conducted pursuant to the AA, except in the rare circumstances where the question is one that would attract a correctness standard, such as a constitutional question or a question of law of central importance to the legal system as a whole and outside the adjudicator's expertise. Therefore, the leave inquiry will ordinarily ask whether there is any arguable merit to the position that the arbitrator's decision on the question at issue is unreasonable, keeping in mind that the decision-maker is not required to refer to all the arguments, provisions or jurisprudence or to make specific findings on each constituent element, for the decision to be reasonable (Newfoundland and Labrador Nurses' Union v. Newfoundland and Labrador (Treasury Board), 2011 SCC 62, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 708, at para. 16). Of course, the leave court's assessment of the standard of review is only preliminary and does not bind the court which considers the merits of the appeal. As such, this should not be taken as an invitation to engage in extensive arguments or analysis about the standard of review at the leave stage.

21, 289 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 174, par. 11); un « argument plausible » (credible argument) (R. c. Will, 2013 SKCA 4, 405 Sask. R. 270, par. 8). À mon avis, les diverses appellations qui désignent le fondement défendable présentent un élément commun : l'argument soulevé par le demandeur ne peut être rejeté à l'issue d'un examen préliminaire de la question de droit. Pour déterminer s'il faut annuler la sentence arbitrale, un examen approfondi est nécessaire, et c'est au tribunal saisi de l'appel qu'il incombe, une fois l'autorisation accordée.

[75] L'examen visant à décider si la question soulevée dans la demande d'autorisation d'appel a un fondement défendable doit se faire à la lumière de la norme de contrôle applicable à l'analyse du bien-fondé de l'appel. Il faut donc procéder à un examen préliminaire ayant pour objet la norme applicable. Comme nous le verrons, la norme de la décision raisonnable s'appliquera presque toujours aux arbitrages commerciaux régis par l'AA, sauf dans les rares circonstances où l'application de la norme de la décision correcte s'imposera, notamment lorsqu'il s'agit d'une question constitutionnelle ou d'une question de droit qui revêt une importance capitale pour le système juridique dans son ensemble et qui est étrangère au domaine d'expertise du décideur administratif. Par conséquent, dans le cadre de l'examen préalable à l'autorisation le tribunal s'interrogera ordinairement quant à savoir si la prétention — selon laquelle la sentence arbitrale sur la question en litige était déraisonnable — a un fondement défendable, compte tenu du fait que le décideur n'est pas tenu de faire référence à tous les arguments, dispositions ou précédents ni de tirer une conclusion précise sur chaque élément constitutif du raisonnement pour que sa décision soit raisonnable (Newfoundland and Labrador Nurses' Union c. Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador (Conseil du Trésor), 2011 CSC 62, [2011] 3 R.C.S. 708, par. 16). Certes, le tribunal saisi de la demande d'autorisation ne procède qu'à un examen préliminaire ayant pour objet la norme de contrôle, qui ne lie pas celui qui se penchera sur le bien-fondé de l'appel. Ainsi, il ne faudrait pas considérer qu'il s'agit d'une invitation à se perdre en analyses ou en arguments poussés à propos de la norme de contrôle à l'étape de la demande d'autorisation.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[76] In BCIT, Saunders J.A. considered the stage of s. 31(2)(a) of the AA at which an examination of the merits of the appeal should occur. At the behest of one of the parties, she considered examining the merits under the miscarriage of justice criterion. However, she decided that a consideration of the merits was best done at the residual discretion stage. Her reasons indicate that this decision was motivated by the desire to take a consistent approach across s. 31(2)(a), (b) and (c):

> Where, then, if anywhere, does consideration of the merits of the appeal belong? Mr. Roberts for the Student Association contends that any consideration of the merits of the appeal belongs in the determination of whether a miscarriage of justice may occur; that is, under the second criterion. I do not agree. In my view, the apparent merit or lack of merit of an appeal is part of the exercise of the residual discretion, and applies equally to all three subsections, (a) through (c). Just as an appeal woefully lacking in merit should not attract leave under (b) (of importance to a class of people including the applicant) or (c) (of general or public importance), so too it should not attract leave under (a). Consideration of the merits, for consistency in the section as a whole, should be made as part of the exercise of residual discretion. [para. 29]

[77] I acknowledge the consistency rationale. However, in my respectful opinion, the desire for a consistent approach to s. 31(2)(a), (b) and (c) cannot override the text of the legislation. Unlike s. 31(2)(b) and (c), s. 31(2)(a) requires an assessment to determine whether allowing leave to appeal "may prevent a miscarriage of justice". It is my opinion that a preliminary assessment of the question of law is an implicit component in a determination of whether allowing leave "may prevent a miscarriage of justice".

[78] However, in an application for leave to appeal pursuant to s. 31(2)(b) or (c), neither of which contain a miscarriage of justice requirement, I agree with Justice Saunders in BCIT that a preliminary

[76] Dans BCIT, la juge Saunders s'interroge sur l'étape à laquelle il convient d'examiner le bien-fondé de l'appel dans le cadre de l'analyse requise par l'al. 31(2)(a) de l'AA. Contrairement à ce que prétendait une partie, soit que l'évaluation du bien-fondé se rapporte au critère de l'erreur judiciaire, la juge détermine que cet examen se rattache plutôt à l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire. Ses motifs révèlent que sa décision découle de sa volonté d'adopter une approche uniforme à l'égard des al. 31(2)(a), (b) et (c) :

> [TRADUCTION] À quel moment, le cas échéant, faut-il alors examiner le bien-fondé de l'appel? M. Roberts, qui représente l'Association étudiante, prétend qu'il convient de procéder à cet examen lorsqu'on se demande si une erreur judiciaire risque d'être commise, c'est-à-dire, à la deuxième étape. Je ne suis pas d'accord. À mon avis, l'appréciation du bien-fondé ou de l'absence de fondement apparent de l'appel s'inscrit dans l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel et s'applique également aux trois alinéas, de (a) à (c). Tout comme un appel manifestement dénué de fondement ne devrait pas être autorisé en vertu de l'al. (b) (revêt de l'importance pour une catégorie ou un groupe de personnes dont le demandeur fait partie) ou de l'al. (c) (est d'importance publique), un tel appel ne devrait pas non plus être autorisé en vertu de l'al. (a). Dans un but d'uniformité à l'égard de l'article entier, l'appréciation du bien-fondé devrait être intégrée à l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel. [par. 29]

[77] Je reconnais la validité du raisonnement axé sur l'uniformité. Cependant, à mon humble avis, cette volonté d'adopter une démarche semblable au regard des al. 31(2)(a), (b) et (c) ne saurait l'emporter sur le libellé de la disposition. Contrairement aux al. 31(2)(b) et (c), l'al. 31(2)(a) exige que le tribunal détermine si le fait d'autoriser l'appel « peut permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire ». J'estime qu'un examen préliminaire de la question de droit s'inscrit implicitement dans l'examen qui vise à déterminer si l'autorisation « peut permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire ».

[78] Cependant, lorsqu'il s'agit d'une demande d'autorisation d'appel présentée en vertu des al. 31(2)(b) ou (c) — puisque ces dispositions ne prévoient pas le risque d'erreur judiciaire comme examination of the merits of the question of law should be assessed at the residual discretion stage of the analysis as considering the merits of the proposed appeal will always be relevant when deciding whether to grant leave to appeal under s. 31.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[79] In sum, in order to establish that "the intervention of the court and the determination of the point of law may prevent a miscarriage of justice" for the purposes of s. 31(2)(a) of the AA, an applicant must demonstrate that the point of law on appeal is material to the final result and has arguable merit.

(b) Application to the Present Case

[80] The CA Leave Court found that the arbitrator may have erred in law by not interpreting the Agreement as a whole, specifically in ignoring the "maximum amount" proviso. Accepting that this is a question of law for these purposes only, a determination of the question would be material because it could change the ultimate result arrived at by the arbitrator. The arbitrator awarded $4.14 million in damages on the basis that there was an 85 percent chance the TSXV would approve a finder's fee paid in $0.15 shares. If Creston's argument is correct and the $0.15 share price is foreclosed by the "maximum amount" proviso, damages would be reduced to US$1.5 million, a significant reduction from the arbitrator's award of damages.

[81] As s. 31(2)(a) of the AA is the relevant provision in this case, a preliminary assessment of the question of law will be conducted in order to determine if a miscarriage of justice could have occurred had Creston been denied leave to appeal. Creston argues that the fact that the arbitrator's conclusion results in Sattva receiving shares valued at considerably more than the US$1.5 million maximum dictated by the "maximum amount" proviso is critère —, je souscris aux commentaires formulés par la juge Saunders dans BCIT selon lesquels l'examen préliminaire du bien-fondé de la question de droit devrait intervenir à l'étape de l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel dans l'analyse, puisque l'examen du bien-fondé de l'appel proposé demeure pertinent dans la décision d'accorder ou non l'autorisation d'appel en vertu de l'art. 31.

[79] Bref, afin d'établir que l'intervention du tribunal est justifiée [TRADUCTION] « et que le règlement de la question de droit peut permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire » pour l'application de l'al. 31(2)(a) de l'AA, le demandeur doit prouver que le point de droit en appel aura une incidence sur le résultat final et qu'il est défendable.

b) Application au présent pourvoi

[80] La formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation a conclu à la possibilité d'une erreur de droit par l'arbitre qui n'aurait pas interprété l'entente dans son ensemble et, plus particulièrement, aurait fait fi de la stipulation relative au « plafond ». Admettons cette prétention comme question de droit uniquement pour les besoins de la cause. Le règlement de la question est déterminant parce qu'il pourrait avoir pour effet de modifier la sentence de l'arbitre, lequel a accordé 4,14 millions $ en dommages-intérêts au motif qu'il évaluait à 85 p. 100 la probabilité que la Bourse approuve des honoraires d'intermédiation payés en actions, à raison de 0,15 $ l'unité. Si l'argument invoqué par Creston est correct et que le cours de l'action ne peut s'établir à 0,15 $ en raison de la stipulation relative au « plafond », les dommages-intérêts seraient réduits à 1,5 million $US, une amputation considérable de la somme initiale accordée.

[81] Comme l'al. 31(2)(a) de l'AA est la disposition pertinente en l'espèce, il doit être procédé à un examen préliminaire de la question de droit pour déterminer le risque qu'une erreur judiciaire découle du rejet de la demande d'autorisation d'appel présentée par Creston. Cette dernière soutient que le fait que Sattva reçoive un portefeuille d'actions dont la valeur est très supérieure au plafond de 1,5 million $US en exécution de la sentence arbitrale evidence of the arbitrator's failure to consider that proviso.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[82] However, the arbitrator did refer to s. 3.1, the "maximum amount" proviso, at two points in his decision: paras. 18 and 23(a). For example, at para. 23 he stated:

> In summary, then, as of March 27, 2007 it was clear and beyond argument that under the Agreement:
>
> (a) Sattva was entitled to a fee equal to the maximum amount payable pursuant to the rules and policies of the TSX Venture Exchange – section 3.1. It is common ground that the quantum of this fee is US$1,500,000.
>
> (b) The fee was payable in shares based on the Market Price, as defined in the Agreement, unless Sattva elected to take it in cash or a combination of cash and shares.
>
> (c) The Market Price, as defined in the Agreement, was $0.15. [Emphasis added.]

[83] Although the arbitrator provided no express indication that he considered how the "maximum amount" proviso interacted with the Market Price definition, such consideration is implicit in his decision. The only place in the contract that specifies that the amount of the fee is calculated as US$1.5 million is the "maximum amount" proviso's reference to s. 3.3 of the TSXV Policy 5.1. The arbitrator acknowledged that the quantum of the fee is US$1.5 million and awarded Sattva US$1.5 million in shares priced at $0.15. Contrary to Creston's argument that the arbitrator failed to consider the proviso in construing the Agreement, it is apparent on a preliminary examination of the question that the arbitrator did in fact consider the "maximum amount" proviso.

[84] Accordingly, even had the CA Leave Court properly identified a question of law, leave to appeal should have been denied. The requirement that there be arguable merit that the arbitrator's decision was unreasonable is not met and the miscarriage of justice threshold was not satisfied.

prouve que l'arbitre n'a pas tenu compte de la stipulation relative au « plafond ».

[82] Or, l'arbitre renvoie effectivement à l'art. 3.1, la stipulation relative au « plafond », à deux reprises dans sa décision, soit aux par. 18 et 23(a). Par exemple, il affirme ce qui suit au par. 23 :

> [TRADUCTION]
>
> Bref, à partir du 27 mars 2007, il était clair et incontestable qu'aux termes de l'entente :
>
> (a) Sattva avait le droit de recevoir des honoraires équivalant au plafond payable conformément aux règles et politiques de la Bourse de croissance TSX – article 3.1. Les parties conviennent que le montant des honoraires s'établit à 1 500 000 $US.
>
> (b) La commission était payable en actions, en fonction du cours, tel qu'il est défini dans l'entente, à moins que Sattva n'opte pour le versement des honoraires en argent ou en argent et en actions.
>
> (c) Le cours de l'action, tel qu'il est défini dans l'entente, s'établissait à 0,15 $. [Je souligne.]

[83] Ainsi, même si l'arbitre n'indique pas expressément avoir examiné le jeu de la stipulation relative au « plafond » et de la définition du cours, cet examen ressort implicitement de sa sentence. La seule clause de l'entente qui prévoit le montant des honoraires, soit 1,5 million $US, est la stipulation relative au « plafond », qui renvoie au point 3.3 de la politique 5.1 de la Bourse. Reconnaissant que le montant des honoraires s'élève à 1,5 million $US, l'arbitre a accordé à Sattva pareille somme, payable en actions, à raison de 0,15 $ l'unité. Contrairement à l'argument avancé par Creston, selon qui l'arbitre aurait négligé la stipulation dans son interprétation de l'entente, il ressort de l'examen préliminaire de la question que l'arbitre a effectivement tenu compte de la stipulation relative au « plafond ».

[84] Par conséquent, même si la Cour d'appel avait cerné à juste titre une question de droit, elle aurait dû rejeter la demande d'autorisation. Il n'était pas satisfait au critère qui exige que le caractère déraisonnable de la sentence arbitrale ait un fondement défendable, ni à celui de l'erreur judiciaire.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

(5) Residual Discretion to Deny Leave

(a) Considerations in Exercising Residual Discretion in a Section 31(2)(a) Leave Application

[85] The B.C. courts have found that the words "may grant leave" in s. 31(2) of the AA confer on the court residual discretion to deny leave even where the requirements of s. 31(2) are met (BCIT, at paras. 9 and 26). In BCIT, Saunders J.A. sets out a non-exhaustive list of considerations that would be applicable to the exercise of discretion (para. 31):

1. "the apparent merits of the appeal";

2. "the degree of significance of the issue to the parties, to third parties and to the community at large";

3. "the circumstances surrounding the dispute and adjudication including the urgency of a final answer";

4. "other temporal considerations including the opportunity for either party to address the result through other avenues";

5. "the conduct of the parties";

6. "the stage of the process at which the appealed decision was made";

7. "respect for the forum of arbitration, chosen by the parties as their means of resolving disputes"; and

8. "recognition that arbitration is often intended to provide a speedy and final dispute mechanism, tailor-made for the issues which may face the parties to the arbitration agreement".

(5) Le pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel qui habilite à refuser l'autorisation

a) Éléments à examiner dans l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel à l'égard d'une demande d'autorisation présentée en vertu de l'al. 31(2)(a)

[85] Les tribunaux de la C.-B. ont conclu que les termes [TRADUCTION] « peut accorder l'autorisation » figurant au par. 31(2) de l'AA confèrent au tribunal un pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel qui lui permet de refuser l'autorisation même quand les critères prévus par la disposition sont respectés (BCIT, par. 9 et 26). Dans BCIT, la juge Saunders énumère des facteurs à considérer dans l'exercice de ce pouvoir discrétionnaire (par. 31) :

1. [TRADUCTION] « le bien-fondé apparent de l'appel »;

2. « l'importance de la question pour les parties, les tiers et la société en général »;

3. « les circonstances qui sont à l'origine du différend et de l'arbitrage, y compris le besoin urgent d'obtenir un règlement définitif »;

4. « d'autres considérations temporelles, y compris la possibilité pour l'une ou l'autre des parties de remédier autrement aux conséquences »;

5. « la conduite des parties »;

6. « l'étape à laquelle la décision qui a été portée en appel avait été prise »;

7. « le respect du choix des parties d'avoir recours à l'arbitrage pour résoudre leurs différends »;

8. « la reconnaissance du fait que l'arbitrage constitue souvent un moyen expéditif et définitif de régler les différends, spécialement conçu pour traiter les enjeux susceptibles de toucher les parties à la convention d'arbitrage ».

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[86] I agree with Justice Saunders that it is not appropriate to create what she refers to as an "immutable checklist" of factors to consider in exercising discretion under s. 31(2) (BCIT, at para. 32). However, I am unable to agree that all the listed considerations are applicable at this stage of the analysis.

[87] In exercising its statutorily conferred discretion to deny leave to appeal pursuant to s. 31(2)(a), a court should have regard to the traditional bases for refusing discretionary relief: the parties' conduct, the existence of alternative remedies, and any undue delay (Immeubles Port Louis Ltée v. Lafontaine (Village), [1991] 1 S.C.R. 326, at pp. 364-67). Balance of convenience considerations are also involved in determining whether to deny discretionary relief (MiningWatch Canada v. Canada (Fisheries and Oceans), 2010 SCC 2, [2010] 1 S.C.R. 6, at para. 52). This would include the urgent need for a final answer.

[88] With respect to the other listed considerations and addressed in turn below, it is my opinion that they have already been considered elsewhere in the s. 31(2)(a) analysis or are more appropriately considered elsewhere under s. 31(2). Once considered, these matters should not be assessed again under the court's residual discretion.

[89] As discussed above, in s. 31(2)(a), a preliminary assessment of the merits of the question of law at issue in the leave application is to be considered in determining the miscarriage of justice question. The degree of significance of the issue to the parties is covered by the "importance of the result of the arbitration to the parties" criterion in s. 31(2)(a). The degree of significance of the issue to third parties and to the community at large should not be considered under s. 31(2)(a) as the AA sets these out as separate grounds for granting leave to appeal under s. 31(2)(b) and (c). Furthermore, respect for the forum of arbitration chosen by the parties is a consideration that animates the legislation itself and

[86] Je conviens avec la juge Saunders pour dire qu'il n'est pas opportun de dresser ce qu'elle appelle une [TRADUCTION] « liste immuable » de facteurs à considérer dans l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire prévu au par. 31(2) (BCIT, par. 32). Cependant, je ne peux convenir que tous les facteurs qui figurent sur la liste qu'elle a dressée sont applicables à cette étape de l'analyse.

[87] Dans l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire que lui confère l'al. 31(2)(a) et qui l'habilite à rejeter la demande d'autorisation, le tribunal devrait examiner les motifs traditionnels justifiant le refus d'une réparation discrétionnaire : la conduite des parties, l'existence d'autres recours et tout retard indu (Immeubles Port Louis Ltée c. Lafontaine (Village), [1991] 1 R.C.S. 326, p. 364-367). L'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire qui permet de refuser une réparation fait intervenir des considérations relatives à la prépondérance des inconvénients (Mines Alerte Canada c. Canada (Pêches et Océans), 2010 CSC 2, [2010] 1 R.C.S. 6, par. 52). Parmi celles-ci se trouve le besoin urgent d'obtenir un règlement définitif.

[88] Quant aux autres facteurs mentionnés dans la liste et dont je traite successivement ci-après, j'estime qu'ils ont déjà été examinés dans le cadre de l'analyse fondée sur l'al. 31(2)(a) ou qu'il conviendrait mieux de les examiner à un autre volet du critère énoncé au par. 31(2). Une fois examinés, ces facteurs ne devraient pas être réexaminés par le tribunal au moment de l'exercice de son pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel.

[89] Je le rappelle, dans l'analyse fondée sur l'al. 31(2)(a), il faut procéder à l'examen préliminaire du bien-fondé de la question de droit soulevée dans la demande d'autorisation pour déterminer s'il y a risque d'erreur judiciaire. La question de l'importance pour les parties se règle à l'al. 31(2)(a) : [TRADUCTION] « l'importance de l'issue de l'arbitrage pour les parties ». L'importance de la question pour les tiers et pour la société en général ne doit pas être examinée à l'al. 31(2)(a), car l'AA prévoit ces motifs à des dispositions distinctes, soit les al. 31(2)(b) et (c). En outre, le respect du choix des parties d'avoir recours à l'arbitrage sous-tend la loi elle-même, ce dont témoigne le seuil élevé auquel l'autorisation can be seen in the high threshold to obtain leave under s. 31(2)(a). Recognition that arbitration is often chosen as a means to obtain a fast and final resolution tailor-made for the issues is already reflected in the urgent need for a final answer.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[90] As for the stage of the process at which the decision sought to be appealed was made, it is not a consideration relevant to the exercise of the court's residual discretion to deny leave under s. 31(2)(a). This factor seeks to address the concern that granting leave to appeal an interlocutory decision may be premature and result in unnecessary fragmentation and delay of the legal process (D. J. M. Brown and J. M. Evans, with the assistance of C. E. Deacon, Judicial Review of Administrative Action in Canada (loose-leaf), at pp. 3-67 to 3-76). However, any such concern will have been previously addressed by the leave court in its analysis of whether a miscarriage of justice may arise; more specifically, whether the interlocutory issue has the potential to affect the final result. As such, the above-mentioned concerns should not be considered anew.

[91] In sum, a non-exhaustive list of discretionary factors to consider in a leave application under s. 31(2)(a) of the AA would include:

- conduct of the parties;
- existence of alternative remedies;
- undue delay; and
- the urgent need for a final answer.

[92] These considerations could, where applicable, be a sound basis for declining leave to appeal an arbitral award even where the statutory criteria of s. 31(2)(a) have been met. However, courts should est subordonnée aux termes de l'al. 31(2)(a). La reconnaissance du fait que l'arbitrage constitue souvent un moyen expéditif et définitif de régler les différends et spécialement conçu pour traiter les enjeux susceptibles de toucher les parties à la convention d'arbitrage s'inscrit dans le besoin urgent d'obtenir un règlement définitif.

[90] Quant à l'étape du processus à laquelle la décision dont on veut faire appel a été rendue, ce n'est pas un facteur pertinent pour l'exercice par le tribunal du pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel conféré par l'al. 31(2)(a) qui lui permet de refuser l'autorisation. Ce facteur a été défini en réponse à des préoccupations selon lesquelles l'autorisation d'appeler d'une décision interlocutoire risque d'être prématurée et d'entraîner des retards indus ainsi qu'une fragmentation inutile du processus judiciaire (D. J. M. Brown et J. M. Evans, avec la collaboration de C. E. Deacon, Judicial Review of Administrative Action in Canada (feuilles mobiles), p. 3-67 à 3-76). Or, ces préoccupations auront été dissipées par la formation saisie de la demande d'autorisation lorsqu'elle se sera penchée sur le risque d'erreur judiciaire, et, plus précisément, sur la possibilité que la question interlocutoire ait une incidence sur le résultat final. Ainsi, les préoccupations mentionnées précédemment ne devraient donc pas être réexaminées.

[91] En résumé, une liste non exhaustive des facteurs à prendre en considération dans l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire à l'égard d'une demande d'autorisation présentée en vertu de l'al. 31(2)(a) de l'AA comprendrait :

- la conduite des parties;
- l'existence d'autres recours;
- un retard indu;
- le besoin urgent d'obtenir un règlement définitif.

[92] Ces facteurs pourraient, le cas échéant, justifier le rejet de la demande sollicitant l'autorisation d'interjeter appel d'une sentence arbitrale même dans le cas où il est satisfait aux critères prévus à exercise such discretion with caution. Having found an error of law and, at least with respect to s. 31(2)(a), a potential miscarriage of justice, these discretionary factors must be weighed carefully before an otherwise eligible appeal is rejected on discretionary grounds.

(b) Application to the Present Case

[93] The SC Leave Court judge denied leave on the basis that there was no question of law. Even had he found a question of law, the SC Leave Court judge stated that he would have exercised his residual discretion to deny leave for two reasons: first, because of Creston's conduct in misrepresenting the status of the finder's fee issue to the TSXV and Sattva; and second, "on the principle that one of the objectives of the [AA] is to foster and preserve the integrity of the arbitration system" (para. 41). The CA Leave Court overruled the SC Leave Court on both of these discretionary grounds.

[94] For the reasons discussed above, fostering and preserving the integrity of the arbitral system should not be a discrete discretionary consideration under s. 31(2)(a). While the scheme of s. 31(2) recognizes this objective, the exercise of discretion must pertain to the facts and circumstances of a particular case. This general objective is not a discretionary matter for the purposes of denying leave.

[95] However, conduct of the parties is a valid consideration in the exercise of the court's residual discretion under s. 31(2)(a). A discretionary decision to deny leave is to be reviewed with deference by an appellate court. A discretionary decision should not be interfered with merely because an appellate court would have exercised the discretion differently (R. v. Bellusci, 2012 SCC 44, [2012]

l'al. 31(2)(a). Cependant, les tribunaux devraient faire preuve de prudence dans l'exercice de ce pouvoir discrétionnaire. Après avoir conclu à l'existence d'une erreur de droit et, au moins en ce qui concerne l'al. 31(2)(a), d'un risque d'erreur judiciaire, le tribunal doit soupeser ces facteurs avec soin avant de décider s'il va rejeter ou non pour des motifs discrétionnaires une demande par ailleurs admissible.

b) Application au présent pourvoi

[93] Le juge de la CS saisi de la demande d'autorisation a rejeté cette dernière au motif qu'elle ne soulevait aucune question de droit. Il a indiqué que, même s'il avait conclu à l'existence d'une telle question, il aurait refusé l'autorisation en vertu de son pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel, et ce, pour deux raisons : premièrement, à cause de la conduite de Creston qui a présenté inexactement les faits relatifs aux honoraires d'intermédiation à la Bourse et à Sattva; deuxièmement, [TRADUCTION] « par égard pour le principe selon lequel l'[AA] a notamment pour objectif de favoriser et de préserver l'intégrité du système d'arbitrage » (par. 41). La formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation a écarté la décision de la CS pour ces deux raisons discrétionnaires.

[94] Pour les motifs énoncés précédemment, l'objectif qui vise à favoriser et à préserver l'intégrité du système d'arbitrage ne devrait pas constituer une considération distincte dans l'analyse que requiert l'al. 31(2)(a) préalable à l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire. Bien que le régime instauré par le par. 31(2) reconnaît cet objectif, l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire doit se rapporter aux faits et aux circonstances de l'affaire. Cet objectif général ne fait pas partie des considérations susceptibles de justifier le refus discrétionnaire de l'autorisation.

[95] Toutefois, la conduite des parties est un facteur que le tribunal peut prendre en considération dans l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire résiduel que lui confère l'al. 31(2)(a). La cour d'appel doit faire preuve de déférence lorsqu'elle contrôle la décision discrétionnaire de refuser l'autorisation d'interjeter appel. Elle doit se garder d'intervenir seulement parce qu'elle aurait exercé son pouvoir

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

NBC BOA 001159

2 S.C.R. 509, at paras. 18 and 30). An appellate court is only justified in interfering with a lower court judge's exercise of discretion if that judge misdirected himself or if his decision is so clearly wrong as to amount to an injustice (R. v. Bjelland, 2009 SCC 38, [2009] 2 S.C.R. 651, at para. 15; and R. v. Regan, 2002 SCC 12, [2002] 1 S.C.R. 297, at para. 117).

[96] Here, the SC Leave Court relied upon a well-accepted consideration in deciding to deny discretionary relief: the misconduct of Creston. The CA Leave Court overturned this decision on the grounds that Creston's conduct was "not directly relevant to the question of law" advanced on appeal (at para. 27).

[97] The CA Leave Court did not explain why misconduct need be directly relevant to a question of law for the purpose of denying leave. I see nothing in s. 31(2) of the AA that would limit a leave judge's exercise of discretion in the manner suggested by the CA Leave Court. My reading of the jurisprudence does not support the view that misconduct must be directly relevant to the question to be decided by the court.

[98] In Homex Realty and Development Co. v. Corporation of the Village of Wyoming, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 1011, at pp. 1037-38, misconduct by a party not directly relevant to the question at issue before the court resulted in denial of a remedy. The litigation in Homex arose out of a disagreement regarding whether the purchaser of lots in a subdivision, Homex, had assumed the obligations of the vendor under a subdivision agreement to provide "all the requirements, financial and otherwise" for the installation of municipal services on a parcel of land that had been subdivided (pp. 1015-16). This Court determined that Homex had not been accorded procedural fairness when the municipality passed a by-law related to the dispute (p. 1032). Nevertheless, discretionary relief to quash the by-law was denied because, among other things, Homex had sought "throughout all these proceedings to discrétionnaire différemment (R. c. Bellusci, 2012 CSC 44, [2012] 2 R.C.S. 509, par. 18 et 30). La cour d'appel ne saurait intervenir à l'égard de l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire par le juge de l'instance inférieure que si celui-ci s'est fondé sur des considérations erronées en droit ou si sa décision est erronée au point de créer une injustice (R. c. Bjelland, 2009 CSC 38, [2009] 2 R.C.S. 651, par. 15; R. c. Regan, 2002 CSC 12, [2002] 1 R.C.S. 297, par. 117).

[96] En l'espèce, la formation de la CS saisie de la demande d'autorisation a fondé sur un facteur reconnu sa décision de refuser la réparation discrétionnaire : l'inconduite de Creston. La formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation a infirmé cette décision au motif que [TRADUCTION] « ces faits [la conduite de Creston] n'intéressent pas directement la question de droit » soulevée en appel (par. 27).

[97] La formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation n'a pas expliqué pourquoi l'inconduite doit se rapporter directement à une question de droit pour que l'autorisation soit refusée. Rien dans le par. 31(2) de l'AA ne limite l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire du juge saisi de la demande d'autorisation de la façon avancée par la Cour d'appel. Mon interprétation de la jurisprudence ne cadre pas avec le point de vue selon lequel l'inconduite d'une partie doit se rapporter directement à la question devant être tranchée par la cour.

[98] Dans l'arrêt Homex Realty and Development Co. c. Corporation of the Village of Wyoming, [1980] 2 R.C.S. 1011, p. 1037-1038, l'inconduite d'une partie ne se rapportait pas directement à la question en cause devant la Cour, mais cette dernière a néanmoins refusé d'accorder la réparation. Le litige tirait son origine d'un désaccord sur la question de savoir si l'acheteur de lots sur un lotissement, Homex, avait assumé les obligations du vendeur prévues à la convention de lotissement, c'est-à-dire de satisfaire à « toutes les exigences, financières ou autres » relativement à l'installation des services d'utilité publique sur un lotissement (p. 1015-1016). La Cour décide qu'Homex n'a pas bénéficié de l'équité procédurale lorsque la municipalité avait adopté un règlement se rapportant au litige (p. 1032). Néanmoins, la demande visant à obtenir l'annulation discrétionnaire du règlement a été rejetée notamment avoid the burden associated with the subdivision of the lands" that it owned (p. 1037), even though the Court held that Homex knew this obligation was its responsibility (pp. 1017-19). This conduct was related to the dispute that gave rise to the litigation, but not to the question of whether the by-law was enacted in a procedurally fair manner. Accordingly, I read Homex as authority for the proposition that misconduct related to the dispute that gave rise to the proceedings may justify the exercise of discretion to refuse the relief sought, in this case refusing to grant leave to appeal.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[99] Here, the arbitrator found as a fact that Creston misled the TSXV and Sattva regarding "the nature of the obligation it had undertaken to Sattva by representing that the finder's fee was payable in cash" (para. 56(k)). While this conduct is not tied to the question of law found by the CA Leave Court, it is tied to the arbitration proceeding convened to determine which share price should be used to pay Sattva's finder's fee. The SC Leave Court was entitled to rely upon such conduct as a basis for denying leave pursuant to its residual discretion.

[100] In the result, in my respectful opinion, even if the CA Leave Court had identified a question of law and the miscarriage of justice test had been met, it should have upheld the SC Leave Court's denial of leave to appeal in deference to that court's exercise of judicial discretion.

[101] Although the CA Leave Court erred in granting leave, these protracted proceedings have nonetheless now reached this Court. In light of the fact that the true concern between the parties is the merits of the appeal — that is, how much the Agreement requires Creston to pay Sattva — and that the courts below differed significantly in their interpretation of the Agreement, it would be parce que « [t]out au long de ces procédures, Homex a cherché à éviter les obligations qui se rattachent au lotissement des terrains » qu'elle détenait (p. 1037), même si Homex savait, de l'avis de la Cour, qu'elle devait assumer cette obligation (p. 1017-1019). Cette conduite se rapportait, non pas à la question de savoir si le règlement avait été adopté d'une manière équitable sur le plan de la procédure, mais au désaccord à l'origine dulitige. Par conséquent, je crois que l'arrêt Homex étaye la proposition selon laquelle une conduite répréhensible se rapportant au différend à l'origine du litige peut justifier le refus de la réparation discrétionnaire sollicitée, en l'occurrence l'autorisation d'interjeter appel.

[99] En l'espèce, l'arbitre a tiré la conclusion de fait suivante : Creston a induit la Bourse et Sattva en erreur en ce qui concerne [TRADUCTION] « la nature de l'obligation qu'elle avait contractée envers Sattva en affirmant que les honoraires d'intermédiation étaient payables en argent » (par. 56(k)). Bien que cette conduite ne soit pas reliée à la question de droit énoncée par la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation, elle est reliée à l'arbitrage visant à déterminer le cours de l'action applicable aux fins du versement des honoraires d'intermédiation de Sattva. La Cour suprême pouvait à bon droit fonder sur une telle conduite sa décision de refuser l'autorisation, en vertu de son pouvoir discrétionnaire.

[100] Par conséquent, à mon humble avis, même si la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation avait défini une question de droit et qu'il avait été satisfait au critère du risque d'erreur judiciaire, elle aurait dû confirmer la décision de la formation de la CS saisie de la demande d'autorisation de rejeter cette demande, par égard pour l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire de cette cour.

[101] S'il est vrai que la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation a commis une erreur en autorisant l'appel, ces interminables procédures ne s'en trouvent pas moins à l'heure actuelle devant nous. Puisque, par ailleurs, c'est la question de fond de l'appel — soit celle de savoir combien l'entente exige que Creston paie à Sattva — qui intéresse réellement les parties, et que les tribunaux d'instance unsatisfactory not to address the very dispute that has given rise to these proceedings. I will therefore proceed to consider the three remaining questions on appeal as if leave to appeal had been properly granted.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

C. Standard of Review Under the AA

[102] I now turn to consideration of the decisions of the appeal courts. It is first necessary to determine the standard of review of the arbitrator's decision in respect of the question on which the CA Leave Court granted leave: whether the arbitrator construed the finder's fee provision in light of the Agreement as a whole, particularly, whether the finder's fee provision was interpreted having regard for the "maximum amount" proviso.

[103] At the outset, it is important to note that the Administrative Tribunals Act, S.B.C. 2004, c. 45, which sets out standards of review of the decisions of many statutory tribunals in British Columbia (see ss. 58 and 59), does not apply in the case of arbitrations under the AA.

[104] Appellate review of commercial arbitration awards takes place under a tightly defined regime specifically tailored to the objectives of commercial arbitrations and is different from judicial review of a decision of a statutory tribunal. For example, for the most part, parties engage in arbitration by mutual choice, not by way of a statutory process. Additionally, unlike statutory tribunals, the parties to the arbitration select the number and identity of the arbitrators. These differences mean that the judicial review framework developed in Dunsmuir v. New Brunswick, 2008 SCC 9, [2008] 1 S.C.R. 190, and the cases that followed it, is not entirely applicable to the commercial arbitration context. For example, the AA forbids review of an arbitrator's factual findings. In the context of commercial arbitration, such a provision is absolute. Under the inférieure ont considérablement divergé d'opinion quant à l'interprétation qu'il faut donner à l'entente, il serait bien peu satisfaisant que le véritable litige à l'origine de cette instance ne soit pas réglé. Je vais donc examiner les trois autres questions soulevées en appel comme si l'autorisation d'interjeter appel avait été accordée à bon droit.

C. Norme de contrôle applicable aux affaires régies par l'AA

[102] Abordons les décisions des tribunaux siégeant en appel. Tout d'abord, il est nécessaire de déterminer la norme applicable au contrôle de la sentence arbitrale en fonction de la question à l'égard de laquelle la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation a accordé cette dernière : l'arbitre a-t-il interprété la disposition sur les honoraires d'intermédiation à la lumière de l'entente dans son ensemble? Plus particulièrement, l'a-t-il interprétée en tenant compte de la stipulation relative au « plafond »?

[103] D'entrée de jeu, il convient de souligner que l'Administrative Tribunals Act, S.B.C. 2004, ch. 45, laquelle prévoit les normes de contrôle applicables aux décisions rendues par de nombreux tribunaux administratifs de la Colombie-Britannique (art. 58 et 59), ne s'applique pas aux arbitrages régis par l'AA.

[104] L'examen en appel des sentences arbitrales commerciales s'inscrit dans un régime, strictement défini et adapté aux objectifs de l'arbitrage commercial, qui diffère du contrôle judiciaire d'une décision rendue par un tribunal administratif. Par exemple, la plupart du temps, les parties décident d'un commun accord de soumettre leur différend à l'arbitrage. Il ne s'agit pas d'un processus imposé par la loi. De plus, contrairement à la procédure devant un tribunal administratif, dans le cas d'un arbitrage les parties à la convention choisissent le nombre d'arbitres et l'identité de chacun. Ces différences révèlent que le cadre relatif au contrôle judiciaire établi dans l'arrêt Dunsmuir c. Nouveau-Brunswick, 2008 CSC 9, [2008] 1 R.C.S. 190, et les arrêts rendus depuis, ne peut être tout à fait transposé dans le contexte de l'arbitrage commercial. Par exemple, l'AA interdit

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

Dunsmuir judicial review framework, a privative clause does not prevent a court from reviewing a decision, it simply signals deference (Dunsmuir, at para. 31).

[105] Nevertheless, judicial review of administrative tribunal decisions and appeals of arbitration awards are analogous in some respects. Both involve a court reviewing the decision of a non-judicial decision-maker. Additionally, as expertise is a factor in judicial review, it is a factor in commercial arbitrations: where parties choose their own decision-maker, it may be presumed that such decision-makers are chosen either based on their expertise in the area which is the subject of dispute or are otherwise qualified in a manner that is acceptable to the parties. For these reasons, aspects of the Dunsmuir framework are helpful in determining the appropriate standard of review to apply in the case of commercial arbitration awards.

[106] Dunsmuir and the post-Dunsmuir jurisprudence confirm that it will often be possible to determine the standard of review by focusing on the nature of the question at issue (see for example Alberta (Information and Privacy Commissioner) v. Alberta Teachers' Association, 2011 SCC 61, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 654, at para. 44). In the context of commercial arbitration, where appeals are restricted to questions of law, the standard of review will be reasonableness unless the question is one that would attract the correctness standard, such as constitutional questions or questions of law of central importance to the legal system as a whole and outside the adjudicator's expertise (Alberta Teachers' Association, at para. 30). The question at issue here, whether the arbitrator interpreted the Agreement as a whole, does not fall into one of those categories. The relevant portions of the Dunsmuir analysis point to a standard of review of reasonableness in this case.

le contrôle des conclusions de fait tirées par l'arbitre. En matière d'arbitrage commercial, une telle disposition est absolue. Suivant le cadre établi dans Dunsmuir, l'existence d'une disposition d'inattaquabilité (aussi appelée clause privative) n'empêche pas le tribunal judiciaire de procéder au contrôle d'une décision administrative, elle signale simplement que la déférence est de mise (Dunsmuir, par. 31).

[105] Il demeure que le contrôle judiciaire d'une décision rendue par un tribunal administratif et l'appel d'une sentence arbitrale se ressemblent dans une certaine mesure. Dans les deux cas, le tribunal examine la décision rendue par un décideur administratif. En outre, l'expertise constitue un facteur tant en matière de contrôle judiciaire qu'en matière d'arbitrage commercial : quand les parties choisissent leur propre décideur, on peut présumer qu'elles fondent leur choix sur l'expertise de l'arbitre dans le domaine faisant l'objet du litige ou jugent sa compétence acceptable. Pour ces raisons, j'estime que certains éléments du cadre établi dans l'arrêt Dunsmuir aident à déterminer le degré de déférence qu'il convient d'accorder aux sentences rendues en matière d'arbitrage commercial.

[106] La jurisprudence depuis l'arrêt Dunsmuir vient confirmer qu'il est souvent possible de déterminer la norme de contrôle applicable suivant la nature de la question en litige (voir par exemple Alberta (Information and Privacy Commissioner) c. Alberta Teachers' Association, 2011 CSC 61, [2011] 3 R.C.S. 654, par. 44). En matière d'arbitrage commercial, la possibilité d'interjeter appel étant subordonnée à l'existence d'une question de droit, la norme de contrôle est celle de la décision raisonnable, à moins que la question n'appartienne à celles qui entraînent l'application de la norme de la décision correcte, comme les questions constitutionnelles ou les questions de droit qui revêtent une importance capitale pour le système juridique dans son ensemble et qui sont étrangères au domaine d'expertise du décideur (Alberta Teachers' Association, par. 30). La question dont nous sommes saisis, à savoir si l'arbitre a interprété l'entente dans son ensemble, n'appartient pas à l'une ou l'autre de ces catégories. Compte tenu des éléments pertinents de l'analyse établie dans l'arrêt Dunsmuir, la norme de la décision raisonnable s'applique en l'espèce.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

NBC BOA 001163

D. The Arbitrator Reasonably Construed the Agreement as a Whole

[107] For largely the reasons outlined by Justice Armstrong in paras. 57-75 of the SC Appeal Court decision, in my respectful opinion, in determining that Sattva is entitled to be paid its finder's fee in shares priced at $0.15 per share, the arbitrator reasonably construed the Agreement as a whole. Although Justice Armstrong conducted a correctness review of the arbitrator's decision, his reasons amply demonstrate the reasonableness of that decision. The following analysis is largely based upon his reasoning.

[108] The question that the arbitrator had to decide was which date should be used to determine the price of the shares used to pay the finder's fee: the date specified in the Market Price definition in the Agreement or the date the finder's fee was to be paid?

[109] The arbitrator concluded that the price determined by the Market Price definition prevailed, i.e. $0.15 per share. In his view, this conclusion followed from the words of the Agreement and was "clear and beyond argument" (para. 23). Apparently, because he considered this issue clear, he did not offer extensive reasons in support of his conclusion.

[110] In Newfoundland and Labrador Nurses' Union, Abella J. cites Professor David Dyzenhaus to explain that, when conducting a reasonableness review, it is permissible for reviewing courts to supplement the reasons of the original decision-maker as part of the reasonableness analysis:

> "Reasonable" means here that the reasons do in fact or in principle support the conclusion reached. That is, even if the reasons in fact given do not seem wholly adequate to support the decision, the court must first seek to supplement them before it seeks to subvert them. For if it is right that among the reasons for deference are the appointment of the tribunal and not the court as the front line adjudicator, the tribunal's proximity to the dispute, its expertise, etc., then it is also the case that its decision should be presumed to be correct even if its reasons are in

D. L'arbitre a donné une interprétation raisonnable de l'entente considérée dans son ensemble

[107] Essentiellement pour les mêmes motifs que ceux exprimés par le juge Armstrong aux par. 57-75 de la décision de la CS sur l'appel, je suis d'avis que l'arbitre, en déterminant que Sattva était en droit de recevoir ses honoraires d'intermédiation en actions, à raison de 0,15 $ l'action, a donné une interprétation raisonnable de l'entente considérée dans son ensemble. Le juge Armstrong a contrôlé la décision de l'arbitre selon la norme de la décision correcte, mais ses motifs démontrent amplement le caractère raisonnable de cette décision. L'analyse qui suit est largement fondée sur son raisonnement.

[108] La question que devait trancher l'arbitre portait sur la date qui doit être retenue pour évaluer le cours de l'action aux fins du versement des honoraires d'intermédiation : la date établie selon la définition du cours qui figure dans l'entente ou la date du versement des honoraires d'intermédiation.

[109] L'arbitre a conclu que la valeur calculée selon la définition du cours l'emportait, soit 0,15 $ l'action. Selon lui, tel constat découlait des termes de l'entente et était [TRADUCTION] « clair et incontestable » (par. 23). Apparemment, comme il estimait que ce point était clair, il ne l'a pas motivé abondamment.

[110] Dans l'arrêt Newfoundland and Labrador Nurses' Union, la juge Abella cite le professeur David Dyzenhaus pour expliquer que les tribunaux siégeant en révision peuvent compléter les motifs du décideur de première ligne dans le cadre de l'analyse du caractère raisonnable :

> [TRADUCTION] Le « caractère raisonnable » s'entend ici du fait que les motifs étayent, effectivement ou en principe, la conclusion. Autrement dit, même si les motifs qui ont en fait été donnés ne semblent pas tout à fait convenables pour étayer la décision, la cour de justice doit d'abord chercher à les compléter avant de tenter de les contrecarrer. Car s'il est vrai que parmi les motifs pour lesquels il y a lieu de faire preuve de retenue on compte le fait que c'est le tribunal, et non la cour de justice, qui a été désigné comme décideur de

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

some respects defective. [Emphasis added by Abella J.; para. 12.]

(Quotation from D. Dyzenhaus, "The Politics of Deference: Judicial Review and Democracy", in M. Taggart, ed., The Province of Administrative Law (1997), 279, at p. 304)

Accordingly, Justice Armstrong's explanation of the interaction between the Market Price definition and the "maximum amount" proviso can be considered a supplement to the arbitrator's reasons.

[111] The two provisions at issue here are the Market Price definition and the "maximum amount" proviso:

2. DEFINITIONS

"Market Price" for companies listed on the TSX Venture Exchange shall have the meaning as set out in the Corporate Finance Manual of the TSX Venture Exchange as calculated on close of business day before the issuance of the press release announcing the Acquisition. For companies listed on the TSX, Market Price means the average closing price of the Company's stock on a recognized exchange five trading days immediately preceding the issuance of the press release announcing the Acquisition.

And:

3. FINDER'S FEE

3.1 . . . the Company agrees that on the closing of an Acquisition introduced to Company by the Finder, the Company will pay the Finder a finder's fee (the "Finder's Fee") based on Consideration paid to the vendor equal to the maximum amount payable pursuant to the rules and policies of the TSX Venture Exchange. Such finder's fee is to be paid in shares of the Company based on Market Price or, at the option of the Finder, any combination of shares and cash, provided the amount does not exceed the maximum amount as set out in the Exchange Policy 5.1, Section 3.3 Finder's Fee Limitations. [Emphasis added.]

première ligne, la connaissance directe qu'a le tribunal du différend, son expertise, etc., il est aussi vrai qu'on doit présumer du bien-fondé de sa décision même si ses motifs sont lacunaires à certains égards. [Soulignement ajouté par la juge Abella; par. 12.]

(Citation de D. Dyzenhaus, « The Politics of Deference : Judicial Review and Democracy », dans M. Taggart, dir., The Province of Administrative Law (1997), 279, p. 304)

Par conséquent, on peut supposer que l'explication donnée par le juge Armstrong du jeu de la définition du cours et de la stipulation relative au « plafond » complète les motifs de l'arbitre.

[111] Les deux clauses en cause sont la définition du cours et la stipulation relative au « plafond » :

[TRADUCTION]

2. DÉFINITIONS

« cours », pour les sociétés dont les titres sont inscrits à la cote de la Bourse de croissance TSX, a le sens qui lui est attribué dans le Guide du financement des sociétés de la Bourse de croissance TSX, c'est-à-dire qu'il s'entend du cours de clôture des actions le dernier jour ouvrable avant la publication du communiqué de presse annonçant l'acquisition. Pour les sociétés cotées à la Bourse TSX, le cours s'entend du cours de clôture moyen des actions de la société à une bourse reconnue cinq jours de bourse avant la publication du communiqué de presse annonçant l'acquisition.

Et :

3. HONORAIRES D'INTERMÉDIATION

3.1 . . . la société convient qu'à la conclusion d'une acquisition qui lui a été présentée par l'intermédiaire, elle verse à l'intermédiaire des honoraires (des « honoraires d'intermédiation »), calculés en fonction de la contrepartie versée au vendeur, dont le montant est égal au plafond payable conformément aux règles et politiques de la Bourse de croissance TSX. Ces honoraires d'intermédiation sont versés en actions de la société en fonction du cours ou, au choix de l'intermédiaire, en actions et en argent, dans la mesure où le montant des honoraires n'excède pas le plafond énoncé au point 3.3 de la politique 5.1 de la Bourse — Plafond des honoraires d'intermédiation. [Je souligne.]

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[112] Section 3.1 entitles Sattva to be paid a finder's fee in shares based on the "Market Price". Section 2 of the Agreement states that Market Price for companies listed on the TSXV should be "calculated on close of business day before the issuance of the press release announcing the Acquisition". In this case, shares priced on the basis of the Market Price definition would be $0.15 per share. The words "provided the amount does not exceed the maximum amount as set out in the Exchange Policy 5.1, Section 3.3 Finder's Fee Limitations" in s. 3.1 of the Agreement constitute the "maximum amount" proviso. This proviso limits the amount of the finder's fee. The maximum finder's fee in this case is US$1.5 million (see s. 3.3 of the TSXV Policy 5.1 in Appendix II).

[113] While the "maximum amount" proviso limits the amount of the finder's fee, it does not affect the Market Price definition. As Justice Armstrong explained, the Market Price definition acts to fix the date at which one medium of payment (US$) is transferred into another (shares):

> The medium for payment of the finder's fee is clearly established by the fee agreement. The market value of those shares at the time that the parties entered into the fee agreement was unknown. The respondent analogizes between payment of the $1.5 million US finder's fee in shares and a hypothetical agreement permitting payment of $1.5 million US in Canadian dollars. Both agreements would contemplate a fee paid in different currencies. The exchange rate of the US and Canadian dollar would be fixed to a particulate date, as is the value of the shares by way of the Market Price in the fee agreement. That exchange rate would determine the number of Canadian dollars paid in order to satisfy the $1.5 million US fee, as the Market Price does for the number of shares paid in relation to the fee. The Canadian dollar is the form of the fee payment, as are the shares. Whether the Canadian dollar increased or decreased in value after the date on which the exchange rate is based is irrelevant. The amount of the fee paid remains $1.5 million US, payable in the number of Canadian dollars (or shares) equal to the [113] La stipulation relative au « plafond » limite le montant des honoraires d'intermédiation, mais elle ne change rien à la définition du cours. Comme l'explique le juge Armstrong, la définition du cours fixe la date à laquelle un moyen de paiement (dollars américains) est converti en un autre (actions) :

[112] L'article 3.1 de l'entente permet à Sattva de recevoir ses honoraires d'intermédiation en actions en fonction du « cours ». Aux termes de l'art. 2 de l'entente, le cours des titres des sociétés cotées à la Bourse de croissance TSX est égal au « cours de clôture des actions le dernier jour ouvrable avant la publication du communiqué de presse annonçant l'acquisition ». En l'espèce, compte tenu de la définition du cours, l'action vaudrait 0,15 $. Le passage « dans la mesure où le montant des honoraires n'excède pas le plafond énoncé au point 3.3 de la politique 5.1 de la Bourse — Plafond des honoraires d'intermédiation » tiré de l'art. 3.1 de l'entente constitue la stipulation relative au « plafond ». Cette stipulation limite le montant des honoraires d'intermédiation. Le plafond correspond dans le cas qui nous occupe à 1,5 million $US (voir le point 3.3 de la politique 5.1 de la Bourse à l'annexe II).

> [TRADUCTION] Le moyen de paiement des honoraires d'intermédiation est clairement établi par l'entente conclue en ce sens. La valeur marchande de ces actions au moment où les parties ont conclu cette entente était inconnue. L'intimée établit une analogie entre le paiement en actions des honoraires d'intermédiation de 1,5 million $US et une entente hypothétique en vertu de laquelle la somme de 1,5 million $US serait convertie en dollars canadiens. Dans les deux cas, les honoraires seraient payés en devises différentes. Le taux de change d'une à l'autre serait fixé à une date précise, tout comme l'est le cours de l'action dans l'entente relative aux honoraires. Ce taux de change permettrait de calculer la somme à verser en dollars canadiens en règlement des honoraires de 1,5 million $US, tout comme le cours permet de déterminer le nombre d'actions cédées en règlement des honoraires. Le dollar canadien est une forme de paiement, au même titre que l'action. Il importe peu que la valeur du dollar canadien augmente ou diminue après la date fixée pour établir le taux de change. Le amount of the fee based on the value of that currency on the date that the value is determined.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

(SC Appeal Court decision, at para. 71)

[114] Justice Armstrong explained that Creston's position requires the Market Price definition to be ignored and for the shares to be priced based on the valuation done in anticipation of a private placement.

[115] However, nothing in the Agreement expresses or implies that compliance with the "maximum amount" proviso should be reassessed at a date closer to the payment of the finder's fee. Nor is the basis for the new valuation, in this case a private placement, mentioned or implied in the Agreement. To accept Creston's interpretation would be to ignore the words of the Agreement which provide that the "finder's fee is to be paid in shares of the Company based on Market Price".

[116] The arbitrator's decision that the shares should be priced according to the Market Price definition gives effect to both the Market Price definition and the "maximum amount" proviso. The arbitrator's interpretation of the Agreement, as explained by Justice Armstrong, achieves this goal by reconciling the Market Price definition and the "maximum amount" proviso in a manner that cannot be said to be unreasonable.

[117] As Justice Armstrong explained, setting the share price in advance creates a risk that makes selecting payment in shares qualitatively different from choosing payment in cash. There is an inherent risk in accepting a fee paid in shares that is not present when accepting a fee paid in cash. A fee paid in cash has a specific predetermined value. By contrast, when a fee is paid in shares, the price of the shares (or mechanism to determine the price of the shares) is set in advance. However, the price of those shares on the market will change over time. The recipient montant des honoraires payé est toujours égal à 1,5 million $US. Il est converti en un certain nombre de dollars canadiens (ou d'actions) équivalant au montant des honoraires en fonction de la valeur de la devise à la date à laquelle cette valeur est déterminée.

(Décision de la CS sur l'appel, par. 71)

[114] Comme l'explique le juge Armstrong, accepter la position de Creston revient à ne pas tenir compte de la définition du cours et à fixer le cours de l'action en fonction de l'évaluation faite en prévision d'un placement privé.

[115] Cependant, rien dans l'entente n'indique, expressément ou implicitement, qu'il faille réévaluer avant la date du versement des honoraires d'intermédiation la conformité à la stipulation relative au « plafond ». L'entente ne précise pas non plus — ni expressément, ni implicitement — la base sur laquelle il faudrait procéder à une telle réévaluation — en l'occurrence un placement privé. Accepter l'interprétation de Creston reviendrait à faire fi du libellé de l'entente selon lequel les « honoraires d'intermédiation sont versés en actions de la société en fonction du cours ».

[116] La sentence arbitrale, selon laquelle l'action devrait être évaluée en fonction de la définition du cours, donne effet à cette dernière et à la stipulation relative au « plafond ». Comme l'explique le juge Armstrong, l'interprétation par l'arbitre de l'entente atteint cet objectif en conciliant la définition du cours et la stipulation relative au « plafond » d'une manière qui ne peut être considérée comme déraisonnable.

[117] Comme l'explique le juge Armstrong, fixer le cours de l'action en avance engendre un risque qui rend le paiement en actions qualitativement différent du paiement en argent. Le versement des honoraires sous forme d'actions présente un risque inhérent, qui ne se pose pas dans le cas du versement en argent. Les honoraires payés en argent ont une valeur prédéterminée. Par contre, quand les honoraires sont versés en actions, le cours de l'action (ou le mécanisme permettant de le déterminer) est fixé à l'avance. Cependant, le cours de l'action of a fee paid in shares hopes the share price will rise resulting in shares with a market value greater than the value of the shares at the predetermined price. However, if the share price falls, the recipient will receive shares worth less than the value of the shares at the predetermined price. This risk is well known to those operating in the business sphere and both Creston and Sattva would have been aware of this as sophisticated business parties.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[118] By accepting payment in shares, Sattva was accepting that it was subject to the volatility of the market. If Creston's share price had fallen, Sattva would still have been bound by the share price determined according to the Market Price definition resulting in it receiving a fee paid in shares with a market value of less than the maximum amount of US$1.5 million. It would make little sense to accept the risk of the share price decreasing without the possibility of benefitting from the share price increasing. As Justice Armstrong stated:

> It would be inconsistent with sound commercial principles to insulate the appellant from a rise in share prices that benefitted the respondent at the date that the fee became payable, when such a rise was foreseeable and ought to have been addressed by the appellant, just as it would be inconsistent with sound commercial principles, and the terms of the fee agreement, to increase the number of shares allocated to the respondent had their value decreased relative to the Market Price by the date that the fee became payable. Both parties accepted the possibility of a change in the value of the shares after the Market Price was determined when entering into the fee agreement.

(SC Appeal Court decision, at para. 70)

[119] For these reasons, the arbitrator did not ignore the "maximum amount" proviso. The arbitrator's reasoning, as explained by Justice Armstrong, meets the reasonableness threshold of justifiability, transparency and intelligibility (Dunsmuir, at para. 47).

fluctue avec le temps. La personne qui reçoit des honoraires payés en actions espère une augmentation du cours, de sorte que ses actions auront une valeur marchande supérieure à celle qui est établie selon le cours prédéterminé. En revanche, si le cours chute, cette personne reçoit des actions dont la valeur est inférieure à celle des actions selon le cours prédéterminé. Ce risque est bien connu de ceux qui évoluent dans ce milieu, et Creston et Sattva, des parties avisées, en auraient eu connaissance.

[118] En acceptant un paiement en actions, Sattva acceptait de se soumettre à la volatilité du marché. Si l'action de Creston avait chuté, Sattva aurait tout de même été liée par la valeur déterminée en application de la définition du cours, de sorte qu'elle aurait reçu des actions d'une valeur marchande inférieure au plafond de 1,5 million $US. Il ne serait guère logique d'accepter le risque d'une baisse du cours de l'action sans avoir la possibilité de bénéficier d'une hausse. Pour reprendre les propos du juge Armstrong :

> [TRADUCTION] Il serait contraire aux principes commerciaux reconnus de protéger l'appelante de la hausse du cours de l'action dont bénéficiait l'intimée à la date de versement des honoraires, alors qu'une telle augmentation était prévisible et aurait dû être soulevée par l'appelante, tout comme il serait contraire aux principes commerciaux reconnus, et aux termes de l'entente relative aux honoraires, d'augmenter le nombre d'actions cédées à l'intimée dans le cas où leur valeur aurait baissé par rapport au cours en vigueur à la date du versement des honoraires. Les deux parties ont reconnu, quand elles ont conclu l'entente relative aux honoraires, la possibilité de fluctuation de la valeur de l'action après la définition du cours.

(Décision de la CS sur l'appel, par. 70)

[119] Pour ces raisons, on ne peut prétendre que l'arbitre n'a pas tenu compte de la stipulation de l'entente relative au « plafond ». Le raisonnement de l'arbitre, que le juge Armstrong explique, satisfait à la norme du caractère raisonnable dont les attributs sont la justification, la transparence et l'intelligibilité (Dunsmuir, par. 47).

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

E. Appeal Courts Are Not Bound by Comments on the Merits of the Appeal Made by Leave Courts

[120] The CA Appeal Court held that it and the SC Appeal Court were bound by the findings made by the CA Leave Court regarding not simply the decision to grant leave to appeal, but also the merits of the appeal. In other words, it found that the SC Appeal Court erred in law by ignoring the findings of the CA Leave Court regarding the merits of the appeal.

[121] The CA Appeal Court noted two specific findings regarding the merits of the appeal that it held were binding on it and the SC Appeal Court: (1) it would be anomalous if the Agreement allowed Sattva to receive US$1.5 million if it received its fee in cash, but allowed it to receive shares valued at approximately $8 million if Sattva received its fee in shares; and (2) that the arbitrator ignored this anomaly and did not address s. 3.1 of the Agreement:

> The [SC Appeal Court] judge found the arbitrator had expressly addressed the maximum amount payable under paragraph 3.1 of the Agreement and that he was correct.
>
> This finding is contrary to the remarks of Madam Justice Newbury in the earlier appeal that, if Sattva took its fee in shares valued at $0.15, it would receive a fee having a value at the time the fee became payable of over $8 million. If the fee were taken in cash, the amount payable would be $1.5 million US. Newbury J.A. specifically held that the arbitrator did not note this anomaly and did not address the meaning of paragraph 3.1 of the Agreement.
>
> The [SC Appeal Court] judge was bound to accept those findings. Similarly, absent a five-judge division in this appeal, we must also accept those findings. [paras. 42-44]

E. La formation saisie de l'appel n'est pas liée par les observations formulées par la formation saisie de la demande d'autorisation sur le bien-fondé de l'appel

[120] La Cour d'appel a conclu qu'elle-même et la formation de la CS saisie de l'appel étaient liées par les conclusions tirées par la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation en ce qui a trait non seulement à la décision d'autoriser l'appel, mais aussi au bien-fondé de l'appel. Autrement dit, elle a conclu que la formation de la CS saisie de l'appel avait commis une erreur de droit en faisant fi des conclusions de la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation quant au bien-fondé de l'appel.

[121] La formation de la CA saisie de l'appel a mis en relief deux conclusions précises quant au bien-fondé de l'appel qui, à son avis, la liaient elle, et aussi la formation de la CS saisie de l'appel : 1º il serait incongru que l'entente permette à Sattva, si elle opte pour le versement de ses honoraires en argent, de toucher 1,5 million $US alors que, si elle opte pour le versement sous forme d'actions, elle recevra un portefeuille valant environ 8 millions $ et 2º l'arbitre n'a pas tenu compte de cette anomalie et a fait fi de l'art. 3.1 de l'entente :

> [TRADUCTION] Le juge [de la CS saisi de l'appel] a conclu que l'arbitre avait expressément tenu compte du plafond des honoraires payables conformément au paragraphe 3.1 de l'entente et que sa sentence était correcte.
>
> Cette conclusion est contraire aux remarques formulées par la juge Newbury dans l'appel antérieur selon lesquelles, si ses honoraires étaient versés en actions, à raison de 0,15 $ l'unité, Sattva obtiendrait des honoraires d'une valeur, à la date du versement des honoraires, de plus de 8 millions $. Si elle optait pour le versement en argent, elle recevrait un montant de 1,5 million $US. La juge Newbury a statué expressément que l'arbitre n'avait pas soulevé cette anomalie et qu'il n'avait pas tenu compte du sens du paragraphe 3.1 de l'entente.
>
> Le juge [de la CS saisi de l'appel] était tenu d'accepter ces conclusions. De même, à défaut d'une décision d'une formation de cinq juges en l'espèce, nous devons aussi accepter ces conclusions. [par. 42-44]

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

[122] With respect, the CA Appeal Court erred in holding that the CA Leave Court's comments on the merits of the appeal were binding on it and on the SC Appeal Court. A court considering whether leave should be granted is not adjudicating the merits of the case (Canadian Western Bank v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 22, [2007] 2 S.C.R. 3, at para. 88). A leave court decides only whether the matter warrants granting leave, not whether the appeal will be successful (Pacifica Mortgage Investment Corp. v. Laus Holdings Ltd., 2013 BCCA 95, 333 B.C.A.C. 310, at para. 27, leave to appeal refused, [2013] 3 S.C.R. viii). This is true even where the determination of whether to grant leave involves, as in this case, a preliminary consideration of the question of law at issue. A grant of leave cannot bind or limit the powers of the court hearing the actual appeal (Tamil Co-operative Homes Inc. v. Arulappah (2000), 49 O.R. (3d) 566 (C.A.), at para. 32).

[123] Creston concedes this point but argues that the CA Appeal Court's finding that it was bound by the CA Leave Court was inconsequential because the CA Appeal Court came to the same conclusion on the merits as the CA Leave Court based on separate and independent reasoning.

[124] The fact that the CA Appeal Court provided its own reasoning as to why it came to the same conclusion as the CA Leave Court does not vitiate the error. Once the CA Appeal Court treated the CA Leave Court's reasons on the merits as binding, it could hardly have come to any other decision. As counsel for Sattva pointed out, treating the leave decision as binding would render an appeal futile.

[122] Avec tout le respect que je lui dois, j'estime que la formation de la CA saisie de l'appel a commis une erreur en concluant que les commentaires sur le bien-fondé de l'appel formulés par la formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation la liaient elle, de même que la formation de la CS saisie de l'appel. Le tribunal chargé de statuer sur une demande d'autorisation ne tranche pas l'affaire sur le fond (Banque canadienne de l'Ouest c. Alberta, 2007 CSC 22, [2007] 2 R.C.S. 3, par. 88). Il détermine uniquement s'il est justifié d'accorder l'autorisation, et non si l'appel sera accueilli (Pacifica Mortgage Investment Corp. c. Laus Holdings Ltd., 2013 BCCA 95, 333 B.C.A.C. 310, par. 27, autorisation d'appel refusée, [2013] 3 R.C.S. viii). Cela vaut même lorsque l'étude de la demande d'autorisation appelle un examen préliminaire de la question de droit en cause, comme c'est le cas en l'espèce. L'autorisation accordée ne saurait lier le tribunal chargé de statuer sur l'appel ni restreindre ses pouvoirs (Tamil Co-operative Homes Inc. c. Arulappah (2000), 49 O.R. (3d) 566 (C.A.), par. 32).

[123] Creston concède ce point, mais prétend que la conclusion tirée par la formation de la CA saisie de l'appel selon laquelle elle était liée par les conclusions de celle saisie de la demande d'autorisation était sans conséquence parce que la première est arrivée à la même conclusion que la seconde sur le bien-fondé, à l'issue d'un raisonnement distinct et indépendant.

[124] Le fait que la formation de la CA saisie de l'appel soit arrivée à la même conclusion que celle saisie de la demande d'autorisation pour des motifs différents n'annule pas l'erreur. Dès lors que la formation de la CA saisie de l'appel a accordé un caractère obligatoire aux motifs concernant le bien-fondé de l'appel énoncés par celle saisie de la demande d'autorisation, elle ne pouvait guère arriver à une autre décision. Comme le souligne l'avocat de Sattva, considérer comme impérative la décision relative à la demande d'autorisation rendrait l'appel futile.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

VI. Conclusion

[125] The CA Leave Court erred in granting leave to appeal in this case. In any event, the arbitrator's decision was reasonable. The appeal from the judgments of the Court of Appeal for British Columbia dated May 14, 2010 and August 7, 2012 is allowed with costs throughout and the arbitrator's award is reinstated.

APPENDIX I

Relevant Provisions of the Sattva-Creston Finder's Fee Agreement

(a) "Market Price" definition:

2. DEFINITIONS

"Market Price" for companies listed on the TSX Venture Exchange shall have the meaning as set out in the Corporate Finance Manual of the TSX Venture Exchange as calculated on close of business day before the issuance of the press release announcing the Acquisition. For companies listed on the TSX, Market Price means the average closing price of the Company's stock on a recognized exchange five trading days immediately preceding the issuance of the press release announcing the Acquisition.

(b) Finder's fee provision (which contains the "maximum amount" proviso):

3. FINDER'S FEE

3.1 . . . the Company agrees that on the closing of an Acquisition introduced to Company by the Finder, the Company will pay the Finder a finder's fee (the "Finder's Fee") based on Consideration paid to the vendor equal to the maximum amount payable pursuant to the rules and policies of the TSX Venture Exchange. Such finder's fee

VI. Conclusion

[125] La formation de la CA saisie de la demande d'autorisation a commis une erreur en accordant l'autorisation d'interjeter appel en l'espèce. Quoi qu'il en soit, la sentence arbitrale était raisonnable. L'appel interjeté à l'encontre des décisions de la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique datées du 14 mai 2010 et du 7 août 2012 est accueilli avec dépens devant toutes les cours. La sentence arbitrale est rétablie.

ANNEXE I

Dispositions pertinentes de l'entente relative aux honoraires d'intermédiation conclue entre Sattva et Creston

a) Définition du « cours » :

[TRADUCTION]

2. DÉFINITIONS

« cours », pour les sociétés dont les titres sont inscrits à la cote de la Bourse de croissance TSX, a le sens qui lui est attribué dans le Guide du financement des sociétés de la Bourse de croissance TSX, c'est-à-dire qu'il s'entend du cours de clôture des actions le dernier jour ouvrable avant la publication du communiqué de presse annonçant l'acquisition. Pour les sociétés cotées à la Bourse TSX, le cours s'entend du cours de clôture moyen des actions de la société à une bourse reconnue cinq jours de bourse avant la publication du communiqué de presse annonçant l'acquisition.

b) Disposition relative aux honoraires d'intermédiation (laquelle contient la stipulation relative au « plafond ») :

[TRADUCTION]

3. HONORAIRES D'INTERMÉDIATION

3.1 . . . la société convient qu'à la conclusion d'une acquisition qui lui a été présentée par l'intermédiaire, elle verse à l'intermédiaire des honoraires (des « honoraires d'intermédiation »), calculés en fonction de la contrepartie versée au vendeur, dont le montant est égal au plafond payable conformément aux règles et politiques

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

is to be paid in shares of the Company based on Market Price or, at the option of the Finder, any combination of shares and cash, provided the amount does not exceed the maximum amount as set out in the Exchange Policy 5.1, Section 3.3 Finder's Fee Limitations.

APPENDIX II

Section 3.3 of TSX Venture Exchange Policy 5.1: Loans, Bonuses, Finder's Fees and Commissions

3.3 Finder's Fee Limitations

The finder's fee limitations apply if the benefit to the Issuer is an asset purchase or sale, joint venture agreement, or if the benefit to the Issuer is not a specific financing. The consideration should be stated both in dollars and as a percentage of the value of the benefit received. Unless there are unusual circumstances, the finder's fee should not exceed the following percentages:

Benefit	Finder's Fee
On the first $300,000	Up to 10%
From $300,000 to $1,000,000	Up to 7.5%
From $1,000,000 and over	Up to 5%

As the dollar value of the benefit increases, the fee or commission, as a percentage of that dollar value should generally decrease.

APPENDIX III

Commercial Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, c. 55 (as it read on January 12, 2007) (now the Arbitration Act)

Appeal to the court

31 (1) A party to an arbitration may appeal to the court on any question of law arising out of the award if

ANNEXE II

Point 3.3 de la politique 5.1 de la Bourse de croissance TSX : Emprunts, primes, honoraires d'intermédiation et commissions

3.3 Plafond des honoraires d'intermédiation

Les honoraires d'intermédiation sont assujettis à un plafond si l'avantage que retire l'émetteur prend la forme d'un achat ou d'une vente d'actifs ou d'une convention de coentreprise, ou si son avantage n'est pas lié à un financement précis. La contrepartie devrait être exprimée à la fois en valeur monétaire et en pourcentage de la valeur de l'avantage reçu. Sauf dans des circonstances exceptionnelles, les honoraires d'intermédiation ne doivent pas dépasser les pourcentages suivants :

Avantage	Honoraires d'intermédiation
300 000 $ et moins	Jusqu'à 10 %
Entre 300 000 $ et 1 000 000 $	Jusqu'à 7,5 %
1 000 000 $ et plus	Jusqu'à 5 %

De façon générale, les honoraires ou la commission, exprimés en pourcentage de la valeur monétaire de l'avantage, devraient être inversement proportionnels à cette valeur.

ANNEXE III

Commercial Arbitration Act, R.S.B.C. 1996, ch. 55 (dans sa version du 12 janvier 2007) (maintenant l'Arbitration Act)

[TRADUCTION]

Appel devant le tribunal

31 (1) Une partie à l'arbitrage peut interjeter appel au tribunal sur toute question de droit découlant de la sentence si, selon le cas :

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

(a) all of the parties to the arbitration consent, or

(b) the court grants leave to appeal.

(2) In an application for leave under subsection (1) (b), the court may grant leave if it determines that

(a) the importance of the result of the arbitration to the parties justifies the intervention of the court and the determination of the point of law may prevent a miscarriage of justice,

(b) the point of law is of importance to some class or body of persons of which the applicant is a member, or

(c) the point of law is of general or public importance.

(3) If the court grants leave to appeal under this section, it may attach conditions to the order granting leave that it considers just.

(4) On an appeal to the court, the court may

(a) confirm, amend or set aside the award, or

(b) remit the award to the arbitrator together with the court's opinion on the question of law that was the subject of the appeal.

Appeal allowed with costs throughout.

Solicitors for the appellant: McCarthy Tétrault, Vancouver.

Solicitors for the respondent: Miller Thomson, Vancouver.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia: Attorney General of British Columbia, Victoria.

Solicitors for the intervener the BCICAC Foundation: Fasken Martineau DuMoulin, Vancouver.

(a) toutes les parties à l'arbitrage y consentent,

(b) le tribunal accorde l'autorisation.

(2) Relativement à une demande d'autorisation présentée en vertu de l'alinéa (1)(b), le tribunal peut accorder l'autorisation s'il estime que, selon le cas :

(a) l'importance de l'issue de l'arbitrage pour les parties justifie son intervention et que le règlement de la question de droit peut permettre d'éviter une erreur judiciaire,

(b) la question de droit revêt de l'importance pour une catégorie ou un groupe de personnes dont le demandeur fait partie,

(c) la question de droit est d'importance publique.

(3) Si le tribunal accorde l'autorisation en vertu du présent article, il peut assortir des conditions qu'il estime équitables l'ordonnance accordant l'autorisation.

(4) En appel, le tribunal peut, selon le cas :

(a) confirmer, modifier ou annuler la sentence,

(b) renvoyer la sentence à l'arbitre avec l'opinion du tribunal sur la question de droit qui a fait l'objet de l'appel.

Pourvoi accueilli avec dépens devant toutes les cours.

Procureurs de l'appelante : McCarthy Tétrault, Vancouver.

Procureurs de l'intimée : Miller Thomson, Vancouver.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique : Procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique, Victoria.

Procureurs de l'intervenante BCICAC Foundation : Fasken Martineau DuMoulin, Vancouver.

2014 SCC 53 (CanLII)

CANADA STEAMSHIP LINES LTD. v. THE KING

Judicial Committee of the Privy Council, Lords Porter, Normand, Morton of Henryton, Asquith of Bishopstone and Cohen.
January 21, 1952.

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

Geoffrey Cross, K.C., Hazen Hansard, K.C. and R. O. Wilberforce, for appellant company; A. J. Campbell, K.C., D. W. Mundell, K.C. and Frank Gahan, for the Crown.

The judgment of their Lordships was delivered by LORD MORTON OF HENRYTON:—It will be convenient to refer to the appellant company as "the company" and to the respondent as "the Crown".

This is an appeal by special leave from six judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada dated June 23, 1950 [[1950], 4 D.L.R. 703, S.C.R. 532], reversing in part a like number of judgments of the Exchequer Court of Canada (Angers J.) [[1949] 1 D.L.R. 172, [1948] Ex. C.R. 635], which had maintained petitions of right against the Crown for damages arising out of a disastrous fire.

In the first of these six cases the company was suppliant, claiming from the Crown $40,713.72 as the value of the property of the company destroyed in the fire. In the remaining five cases the suppliants were owners of other property destroyed by the fire. The suppliants in these five cases and the amounts respectively claimed by them from the Crown were as follows:

NBC BOA 001175

H. J. Heinz Co. of Canada	$38,430.88
Can. & Dominion Sugar Co. Ltd.	$108,310.83
W. H. Taylor Ltd.	$3,670.25
Raymond Copping	$1,662.37
Cunningham & Wells Ltd.	$15,159.83

In addition to the present six cases, petitions of right were instituted against the Crown in some 250 other cases involving additional claims arising out of the fire to a total amount of $325,636.05, which petitions of right have remained in abeyance pending the outcome of these proceedings.

The events leading up to all these claims must now be set out. By an Indenture of Lease (hereafter called "the lease") dated November 18, 1940, the Crown leased to the company a piece of land on the western side of St. Gabriel Basin No. 1 of the Lachine Canal in the City of Montreal "together with the right and privilege to occupy, use and enjoy, for the purpose of receiving and storing therein freight and goods loaded onto and/or unloaded from vessels owned and operated by the lessee", the whole of a shed known as St. Gabriel Shed No. 1 and hereafter referred to as "the shed". The shed occupied the greater part of the said piece of land. The company was also granted "the right and privilege to construct, maintain and use, at its own cost and expense and over and/or across the said land, along the whole length of the southerly face of the said shed, a loading platform approximately 14 ft. in width, and a canopy extending approximately 20 ft. beyond the southerly edge of the said platform". Between the land demised to the company and the St. Gabriel Basin No. 2 there lay a strip of land 30 ft. in width. The term of the lease was 12 years from May 1st, 1940, and the rent was over $12,000 per annum. The lease was expressed to be "made and executed upon and subject to the covenants, provisoes, conditions and reservations hereinafter set forth and contained, and that the same and every of them, representing and expressing the exact intention of the parties, are to be strictly observed, performed and complied with namely:—". Then follow a number of clauses some of which must be set out, as the decision of this appeal ultimately turns upon the construction of cls. 7 and 17, and these two clauses must be considered in the light of the lease read as a whole. The more important clauses are as follows:

"1. That the Lessee will pay all rental herein reserved at the time and in the manner in these Presents set forth, without any abatement or deduction whatever . . . .

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

NBC BOA 001176

"5. That the Lessor, His Servants or agents, shall at all times and for all purposes, have full and free access to any and every part of the said land, the said shed and the said platform.

"6. That the said land shall be used for purposes in connection with the Lessee's business, only, and for no other purpose or purposes whatever.

"7. That the Lessee shall not have any claim or demand against the Lessor for detriment, damage or injury of any nature to the said land, the said shed, the said platform and the said canopy, or to any motor or other vehicles, materials, supplies, goods, articles, effects or things at any time brought, placed, made or being upon the said land, the said platform or in the said shed.

"8. That the Lessor will, at all times during the currency of this Lease, at His own cost and expense, maintain the said shed, exclusive of the said platform and the said canopy.

"9. That the Lessee shall, in addition to the payment of the yearly rental hereunder, at its own sole cost and expense, insure, concurrently with the execution of this Lease or as soon thereafter as possible, and thereafter keep insured during the currency of this Lease with an insurance company or companies satisfactory to the Minister of Transport the said shed against fire and other casualty in the sum of FORTY-EIGHT THOUSAND DOLLARS ($48,000.00) . . . .

"10. That the Lessee shall before constructing or erecting the said platform, the said canopy or other structures, including alterations to the said shed, on the said land, submit to the General Superintendent plans or drawings showing the location and design and nature of construction of the said platform, the said canopy or such structures, and obtain his approval of such plans or drawings, and shall construct or erect the said platform, the said canopy or such structures on the location and in accordance with the designs as shown on the plans and drawings approved by the General Superintendent, and thereafter maintain the said platform, the said canopy or such structures in accordance with the designs respecting the same, and shall carry on the work of such construction and maintenance of the said platform, the said canopy and such structures at its own cost and expense and under the control and direction of the General Superintendent and to his entire satisfaction . . . .

"12. That it is distinctly understood and agreed that this Lease is granted subject to the condition that the said platform and the said canopy shall forthwith, upon termination of this Lease in any manner, except as provided for in Clause 18 hereof, be and become vested in title in the Lessor without any payment of compensation to the Lessee in respect of the said platform and the said canopy . . .

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

"16. That the parcel or tract of land, thirty (30) feet in width, situated between St. Gabriel Basin No. 2 and the said land may be used by the Lessee in common with the public generally, it being understood and agreed, however, that the Lessee shall, in the discretion of the Superintending Engineer and in accordance with his direction, have preference in the use thereof.

"17. That the Lessee shall at all times indemnify and save harmless the Lessor from and against all claims and demands, loss, costs, damages, actions, suits or other proceedings by whomsoever made, brought or prosecuted, in any manner based upon, occasioned by or attributable to the execution of these Presents, or any action taken or things done or maintained by virtue hereof, or the exercise in any manner of rights arising hereunder."

Pursuant to the lease the company took possession of the leased premises and continued to occupy them at all times material to the present litigation. A few days prior to May 5, 1944, the Department of Transport in Montreal, representing the Crown, received a request from the company to effect certain minor repairs to the premises, including the doors of the shed. An inspection was made and the work undertaken by the employees of the Department of Transport almost immediately.

At this time the shed contained a large variety of merchandise awaiting shipment, other goods stored there by third parties and a quantity of equipment belonging to the company. A number of trucks and motor vehicles were on the wharf delivering or about to deliver further goods for transport.

The shed was constructed of corrugated iron on a steel frame and the shipping doors were hung on hinges bolted to the uprights of the frame. These uprights were in the form of steel "H-Beams", the flanges of which were one-quarter to three-eighths of an inch thick.

The Crown's employees, having almost completed their work on the afternoon of May 5th, had removed and straightened the upper hinge of one of the shipping doors which had to be replaced. These hinges had originally been affixed to the "H-Beam" with three-eighths inch bolts. When they came to replace the hinge in question the Crown's employees found that they had no three-eighths inch bolts with them, the smallest size being one-half inch in diameter. They elected to enlarge the three-eighths inch hole in the "H-Beam" so that it would take the half-inch bolt.

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

Inside the door, immediately opposite and a few feet distant from the "H-Beam" in question were piled a number of bales of cotton waste.

Having decided to enlarge the hole, the Crown's employees proceeded to make use of an oxy-acetylene cutting torch for this purpose. The operation of this torch involved the use of oxygen and acetylene gas which are combined in a cutting-head under pressure and, when ignited, produce extremely high temperatures of from 5,500° to 6,300° Fahrenheit. The flame of the torch, at such temperatures, will cut through steel.

The use of such a torch in the vicinity of inflammable material is dangerous, since, apart from the heat of the torch itself, the operation of cutting the metal necessarily produces a shower of sparks or particles of molten metal which fly off at a tangent from the point of cutting. The Crown's employees directed the torch from the exterior into the interior of the shed. For the purpose of preventing sparks from entering the shed, they placed a board on the inside across the opening of the "H-Beam". This board was some 3 ft. shorter than the beam and did not fit closely at the top because it was cut square whereas the roof of the shed sloped. There was accordingly openings at both the top and bottom of the beam through which sparks might escape. One of the workmen was stationed on the top of the bales of cotton waste and a pail of water was placed inside the shed.

The operation of enlarging the hole involved using the torch for about three or four minutes. Sparks escaped into the shed. The bales of cotton waste caught fire and the flames spread rapidly to the other contents of the shed and consumed the whole. Hence the claims, already mentioned, by the company and others against the Crown.

Angers J., after hearing the evidence, found as a fact that the fire and resulting damage were caused by the gross negligence of the Crown's servants while acting within the scope of their duties or employment. The Crown had denied negligence, and had pleaded that the company's claim was in any event barred by the provisions of cl. 7 of the lease. In third party proceedings the Crown relied upon cl. 17 of the lease as giving rise to a right of indemnity from the company against the claims of the other five suppliants.

The learned trial Judge did not express any view as to the meaning of cls. 7 and 17 of the lease. It was not necessary for him to do so because, basing himself on the law of Quebec which he reviewed exhaustively, he found that no clause would extend to relieve the Crown of liability for damages resulting from the gross negligence (faute lourde) of its servants. He accordingly refused to regard cl. 7 as a bar to the company's action or to hold that cl. 17 gave the Crown a right to indemnity in the other five cases. In the result he condemned the Crown to pay to the company and to the other five suppliants the damages respectively claimed by them, and he dismissed the third party proceedings brought by the Crown against the company. The amount of the damages was agreed and is not in issue.

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

The Supreme Court of Canada (Rinfret C.J.C. and Rand, Kellock, Estey, Locke, Cartwright and Fauteux JJ.) by a majority of six to one (Locke J. dissenting) reversed the trial Judge in the company's own case and unanimously reversed the trial Judge in the cases of the other five suppliants in so far as the third party proceedings of the Crown against the company were concerned.

The Supreme Court concurred in the finding of the trial Judge that the Crown's servants were negligent, but declined to hold that such negligence amounted to gross negligence (faute lourde). On the interpretation which they placed upon cls. 7 (Locke J. dissenting) and 17 of the lease, they held that such clauses must be read as barring the company's action and as entitling the Crown to indemnity in the other actions. They accordingly dismissed the company's petition, confirmed the judgments maintaining the petitions in the five other cases and condemned the company to indemnify the Crown in respect thereof.

In view of the findings of the Supreme Court, the Crown does not now seek to deny that its servants were negligent but contends that their negligence was not gross negligence. Thus the issues arising upon this appeal are whether the Supreme Court rightly construed cls. 7 and 17 of the lease, whether the Crown's servants were guilty of gross negligence and if so whether by the law of Quebec, clauses stipulating immunity from or limitation of liability for the gross negligence of one of the contracting parties or his servants, or indemnity against such liability, are illegal and void. Counsel for the company conceded that such clauses were legal and effective if they applied only to negligence which did not amount to faute lourde. He opened the appeal by submitting that even if the negligence of the Crown's servants did not amount to "faute lourde", on the true construction of cls. 7 and 17 of the lease cl. 7 afforded no answer to the company's claim against the Crown, and cl. 17 did not entitle the Crown to the indemnity claimed in the third party proceedings. As this submission, if successful, would dispose of the appeal, their Lordships thought it well to hear it argued fully before hearing argument upon the other issues in the case.

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

In considering this question of construction their Lordships have had in mind arts. 1013 to 1021 of the Civil Code and also the special principles which are applicable to clauses which purport to exempt one party to a contract from liability. These principles were stated by Lord Greene M.R. in Alderslade v. Hendon Laundry Ltd., [1945] K.B. 189 at p. 192 as follows:

"Where the head of damage in respect of which limitation of liability is sought to be imposed by such a clause is one which rests on negligence and nothing else, the clause must be construed as extending to that head of damage, because [if it were not so construed] it would lack subject-matter. Where, on the other hand, the head of damage may be based on some other ground than that of negligence, the general principle is that the clause must be confined in its application to loss occurring through that other cause, to the exclusion of loss arising through negligence. The reason is that if a contracting party wishes in such a case to limit his liability in respect of negligence, he must do so in clear terms in the absence of which the clause is construed as relating to a liability not based on negligence."

It appears to their Lordships that none of the learned Judges of the Supreme Court regarded this passage as being in any way in conflict with the law of Lower Canada, and Kellock J. observed [p. 719]: "It is well settled that a clause of this nature is not to be construed as extending to protect the person in whose favour it is made from the consequences of the negligence of his own servants unless there is express language to that effect or unless the clause can have no operation except as applied to such a case."

Their Lordships think that the duty of a Court in approaching the consideration of such clauses may be summarized as follows:

(1) If the clause contains language which expressly exempts the person in whose favour it is made (hereafter called "the proferens") from the consequence of the negligence of his own servants, effect must be given to that provision. Any doubts which existed as to whether this was the law in the Province of Quebec were removed by the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada in Glengoil SS. Co. v. Pilkington (1897), 28 S.C.R. 146.

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

(2) If there is no express reference to negligence, the Court must consider whether the words used are wide enough, in their ordinary meaning, to cover negligence on the part of the servants of the proferens. If a doubt arises at this point, it must be resolved against the proferens in accordance with art. 1019 of the Civil Code: "In cases of doubt, the contract is interpreted against him who has stipulated and in favour of him who has contracted the obligation."

(3) If the words used are wide enough for the above purpose, the Court must then consider whether "the head of damage may be based on some ground other than that of negligence" to quote again Lord Greene in the Alderslade case. The "other ground" must not be so fanciful or remote that the proferens cannot be supposed to have desired protection against it; but subject to this qualification, which is no doubt to be implied from Lord Greene's words, the existence of a possible head of damage other than that of negligence is fatal to the proferens even if the words used are prima facie wide enough to cover negligence on the part of his servants.

With these principles in mind, their Lordships turn to a consideration of cl. 7, and they will first consider its language apart from the contents of cl. 8 which immediately follows it. The claim of the company in the present case is "a claim . . . against the lessor for damage to . . . goods . . . being . . . in the said shed", and would therefore prima facie be barred by cl. 7. It is, however, a claim for damage admittedly caused by the negligence of the Crown's servants. Their Lordships must therefore consider the third question stated above, and in considering this question it is necessary to bear in mind that the only liability of the Crown in the Province of Quebec in respect of claims arising ex delicto is based upon s. 19(1)(c) [re-enacted 1938, c. 28, s. 1] of the Exchequer Court Act, R.S.C. 1927, c. 34. That section is in the following terms:

"19(1) The Exchequer Court shall also have exclusive original jurisdiction to hear and determine the following matters:—

"(c) Every claim against the Crown arising out of any death or injury to the person or to property resulting from the negligence of any officer or servant of the Crown while acting within the scope of his duties or employment."

Thus the field for claims against the Crown, not based upon negligence and coming within cl. 7, is not a very wide one, but

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

NBC BOA 001182

counsel for the company has given the following instances of such claims:

1. Claims under art. 1614 of the Civil Code for "defects and faults in the thing leased, which prevent or diminish its use, whether known to the lessor or not".

There might be, says counsel, a defect in the construction of the roof of the shed, not known to the Crown, and as a result of this defect the roof might fall down and injure chattels in the shed which belonged to the company. A claim for damage to these chattels resulting from this breach of the lessor's obligation under art. 1614 is not a claim based on negligence and it would be barred by cl. 7.

2. Claims under art. 1612(3) of the Civil Code.

Suppose, for example, says counsel, that the Crown were to authorize a third party to carry out some operation on adjacent land which caused damage to the shed. In that event, again, the company would have a claim for damages, not based on negligence, which would be barred by cl. 7.

3. Claims for a reduction of the rent, by the joint operation of arts. 1617 and 1660 of the Civil Code, if, for instance, a trespasser caused damage to the shed by setting part of it on fire, and the lessee's right of action for damages against the trespasser proved to be ineffectual.

Counsel for the Crown contended that a claim for a reduction of the rent would not fall within clause 7, but their Lordships think that such a claim, although it would not be a claim for "damages" might fairly be described as "a demand against the lessor for . . . damage . . . of any nature . . . to the said shed" within the meaning of clause 7.

It was contended on behalf of the Crown that these instances of possible claims for damages were fanciful and remote, and would not have been within the contemplation of the parties when the terms of the lease were agreed. No doubt there may be cases in which it may be difficult to draw the line. In the present case, however, their Lordships are not prepared to assume that the obligations imposed upon lessors by the Civil Code were not in the minds of the parties. They think that the Crown may well have desired to protect itself from claims for damage arising out of any breach of these obligations, and yet may not have intended to go so far as to stipulate for protection from claims for damage resulting from the negligence of its servants.

So far, cl. 7 has been considered apart from cl. 8, but these two clauses must be read together, according to the ordinary principles of construction. So reading them, it appears to their Lordships most unlikely that cl. 7 was intended to protect the Crown from claims for damage resulting from the negligence of its servants in carrying out the very obligations which were imposed upon the Crown by cl. 8. It is difficult to imagine the Crown saying to the company, when the lease was being negotiated, "Notwithstanding that the Crown agrees to maintain the shed, at its own expense, throughout the term of the lease and notwithstanding that such an agreement implies an obligation to use due care in its performance, if the Crown's servants set about the work of repair in such a negligent manner that the shed and all the goods therein are destroyed, you are to have no claim for damages against the Crown" and if the Crown had made such a suggestion, it seems unlikely that the company would have accepted it.

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

Counsel for the Crown submitted that inconsistency between cls. 7 and 8 would be avoided if the former clause were read as barring claims for damages for non-feasance or misfeasance under cl. 8, but leaving open to the company any claims for specific performance which it might make as a result of non-feasance, under art. 1641(1) and (2) of the Civil Code. This is not an impossible construction of cl. 7, but it appears to their Lordships to be a somewhat strained and artificial construction. Counsel for the Crown also relied on the fact that under cl. 9 the company was bound to insure the shed, as an indication that the Crown did not intend to be liable for any damage to the shed, howsoever such damage might arise. This argument is not without force, as applied to the shed, but cl. 9 makes no reference to goods within the shed.

Their Lordships will shortly consider how far the construction of cl. 7 is affected by cl. 17, for they entirely agree with the view expressed by the majority of the Supreme Court as to the close inter-relation of these two clauses. If, however, cl. 7 were to be considered apart from cl. 17, their Lordships would conclude that, even if the case is put at its highest in favour of the Crown, the Crown has failed to limit its liability in respect of negligence in clear terms. They would therefore decide against the Crown in accordance with the principles already stated.

Their Lordships now turn to cl. 17, and observe at the outset that if the Crown's contention as to this clause is correct, it imposes a very remarkable and burdensome obligation on the company. However widespread may be the destruction caused by the negligence of the Crown's servants in carrying out the

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

Crown's obligations under cl. 8, the whole of the damage must be paid for by the company. In the present case the claims are heavy, and it is obvious that the damage caused by a fire such as this might be even greater. Such a liability for the negligence of others must surely be imposed by very clear words, if it is to be imposed at all.

The opening words of cl. 17 are certainly very wide: "That the Lessee shall at all times indemnify and save harmless the Lessor from and against all claims and demands, loss, costs, damages, actions, suits or other proceedings by whomsoever made, brought or prosecuted." They are, however, considerably narrowed in their scope by the words which follow. These words limit the application of the clause to claims, etc., "in any manner based upon, occasioned by or attributable to" any one of three specified matters, namely, (1) "The execution of these Presents", (2) "Any action taken or things done or maintained by virtue hereof", (3) "The exercise in any manner of rights arising hereunder".

Are these words, in their ordinary meaning, wide enough to cover the negligent act of the Crown's servants, which caused the damage now under consideration?

The learned Chief Justice appears to have placed some reliance on the words "occasioned by or attributable to the execution of these Presents", treating "execution" as synonymous with "performance", but their Lordships are unable to take that view. They think that the words "execution of these Presents" refer only to the signing and sealing of the lease. This is the usual meaning of these words, and the word "executed" is used in the same sense at the end of the document, where it is stated that "The Lessee has executed these Presents". Their Lordships think that by this phrase the Crown must have desired to protect itself against third parties claiming that they had contractual rights against the Crown which had been violated by the execution of the lease and the resulting grant of various rights to the company.

The remaining part of cl. 17 gives rise to questions of great difficulty. Counsel for the Crown submitted that the negligent act of the Crown's servants was covered by the words "any action taken or things done . . . by virtue hereof". They contended that the words "by virtue of" may fairly be construed as meaning "in consequence of" and that the act of the Crown's servants in enlarging the hole was done in consequence of the lease, none the less so because it was negligently done. They pointed out, quite rightly, that the intent of the clause was to protect the Crown against claims by third parties and submitted (a) that the only acts which could involve claims against the Crown by third parties would be acts of the Crown's servants, and therefore the words in question must refer to, or at least include, acts of the Crown's servants; and (b) that the acts contemplated must be negligent acts, otherwise they would give rise to no liability to third parties.

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

Counsel for the company contended that this argument involved a strained and unnatural construction of the words in question and that the phrase "any action taken or things done . . . by virtue hereof" would naturally refer to the doing of an act in pursuance of some right or privilege conferred by the lease rather than to the doing of an act in performance of some obligation imposed by the lease. They further contended that even if the words in question could cover an act properly done in performance of an obligation imposed by the lease, they could not extend to cover an act negligently done in the course of carrying out such an obligation. They submitted the following argument on the construction of cl. 17. By the phrase "occasioned by or attributable to the execution of these Presents" the Crown was seeking to protect itself against the possible claims already mentioned, while by the rest of the clause the Crown was seeking to protect itself against possible liability to third parties occasioned by or attributable to acts of the company. The reference to the execution of the lease is closely linked up with the words which follow it. In executing the lease the Crown was conferring a large number of rights and privileges upon the company. The party who is likely to "take actions" or "do things" or "exercise rights" under the lease is the company. By cl. 17 the Crown is saying, in effect to the company "Nothing that you do under the lease is to involve the Crown in any liability. Third Parties may consider that they have a claim against the Crown by reason of the Crown's act in granting to you the right of occupying the shed, or by reason of acts done by you with the sanction of the Crown such as the erection of the loading platform and canopy in accordance with plans approved by the Crown under cl. 10 of the lease, or the exercise of 'preferential' rights under cl. 16. If any such claim is made against the Crown, and succeeds, you must indemnify the Crown". In support of this argument counsel referred to the latter part of art. 1618 of the Civil Code as showing that the Crown might become a party to an action by a third party claiming some "right in or upon the thing leased".

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

NBC BOA 001186

The choice between these two contentions is not an easy one, but their Lordships have come to the conclusion that the company's contention is to be preferred, for the following reasons. First, it gives the more natural construction to the words "any action done by virtue hereof". It is at least doubtful whether these words can be applied to a negligent act done in the course of carrying out an obligation. Secondly, even if the words are wide enough to include such a negligent act, the principle laid down in the Alderslade case must be applied and their Lordships are inclined to think that on the company's construction, "the head of damage may be based on some other ground than that of negligence", although the possible grounds are somewhat limited in extent. Thirdly, their Lordships think it is manifest that the meaning and effect of cl. 17 are far from clear, and if this is so the Crown has failed to impose in clear terms the burdensome obligation which has already been described. There would have been no difficulty in inserting an express reference to negligence of the Crown's servants, in cls. 7 and 17, if these clauses had been intended to protect the Crown against the consequences of such negligence.

If their Lordships had agreed with the Supreme Court that cl. 17 extended so far as to cover negligent acts of the Crown's servants, they might well have had to reconsider the provisional view already expressed as to cl. 7, but as they have arrived at the contrary opinion, their provisional view as to cl. 7, so far from being disturbed, is strengthened. It would seem unlikely that if negligent acts by the Crown's servants are outside the scope of one clause, they are within the scope of the other.

The result is that, after hearing an able argument as to the construction of the lease from both sides, their Lordships find that the Crown has failed to establish either its defence under cl. 7 or its claim for indemnity under cl. 17. This being so, no other question arises for decision on this appeal.

Their Lordships will humbly advise His Majesty that this appeal should be allowed, the orders of the Supreme Court in the petition of the company against the Crown and in the five third party proceedings should be set aside, and the orders of Anger J. restored. The Crown must pay the company's costs in each of these six petitions, here and in the Courts of Canada.

Appeal allowed.

1952 CanLII 260 (UK JCPC)

The Consumers' Gas Company (Defendant) Appellant;

and

The Corporation of the City of Peterborough and Peterborough Utilities Commission (Defendants—Third-Parties) Respondents;

and

Gerard Fenn, Sandra Fenn, Candice Ann Fenn, by her next friend John Fenn, and the said John Fenn personally (Plaintiffs).

1981: December 10; 1981: December 17.

Present: Martland, Ritchie, Estey, McIntyre and Lamer JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR ONTARIO

Negligence — Contribution and indemnification — Appellant 25 per cent and respondents 75 per cent at fault — Appellant claiming full indemnification for liability as to damages from respondents — Appellant owing duty of care to Commission — No contractual provision for provision of indemnification for own negligence — Appeal dismissed — The Negligence Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 296, s. 2(1).

At trial, Consumers' and the Utilities Commission were found to be negligent with respect to a gas line rupture and explosion following work in the vicinity of the main. The action against the City was dismissed. On appeal, the City was also found to be liable. The Court of Appeal apportioned fault as to 75 per cent against the Commission and the City and as to 25 per cent against Consumers' and denied Consumers' claim for full indemnity from the Commission and the City in respect of any damages it was required to pay. Both courts below found that Consumers' owed a duty of care to the Commission. There was no evidence of any contract between the parties providing for one party's being indemnified for its own negligence by the other. The sole issue before this Court was Consumers' claim for full indemnity.

Held: The appeal should be dismissed.

The bar to recovery by Consumers' was its own negligence to the plaintiffs, independent of anyone else's negligence, and it could not recover indemnity from the

The Consumers' Gas Company (Défenderesse) Appelante;

et

The Corporation of the City of Peterborough et Peterborough Utilities Commission (Défenderesses—Tiers appelés) Intimées;

et

Gerard Fenn, Sandra Fenn, Candice Ann Fenn, représentée ad litem par John Fenn, et ledit John Fenn personnellement (Demandeurs).

1981: 10 décembre; 1981: 17 décembre.

Présents: Les juges Martland, Ritchie, Estey, McIntyre et Lamer.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE L'ONTARIO

Responsabilité — Contribution et indemnisation — Responsabilité partagée à 25 pour cent contre l'appelante et 75 pour cent contre les intimées — L'appelante demande d'être indemnisée entièrement par les intimées pour la responsabilité des dommages — Obligation de diligence de l'appelante envers la Commission — Aucune disposition contractuelle ne prévoit l'indemnisation pour sa propre négligence — Pourvoi rejeté — The Negligence Act, R.S.O. 1970, chap. 296, art. 2(1).

En première instance, le juge a conclu que Consumer et la Commission avaient été négligentes relativement à la rupture d'une conduite de gaz et à une explosion consécutives à des travaux exécutés dans le voisinage de la conduite. L'action contre la Ville a été rejetée. En appel, la Ville a également été tenue responsable. La Cour d'appel a partagé la responsabilité à 75 pour cent contre la Commission et la Ville et 25 pour cent contre Consumer et ont rejeté la demande faite par Consumer à la Commission et à la Ville de l'indemniser entièrement des dommages qu'elle était tenue de payer. Les cours d'instance inférieure ont conclu que Consumer avait une obligation de diligence envers la Commission. Il n'y avait aucune preuve d'un contrat entre les parties prévoyant qu'une partie doit être indemnisée par l'autre partie pour sa propre négligence. La seule question en litige devant cette Cour porte sur la demande de Consumer d'être indemnisée entièrement.

Arrêt: Le pourvoi est rejeté.

Ce qui empêche Consumer de recouvrer une indemnisation, c'est sa propre négligence envers les demandeurs, indépendamment de la négligence de toute autre per-

1981 CanLII 66 (SCC)

NBC BOA 001188

Commission beyond that allowed by The Negligence Act. The mere fact that the parties were members of an informal committee did not establish mutual contractual obligations and would not support a claim for indemnity arising out of claimant's own negligence. An indemnity clause spelling out this obligation on the other party must be in the clearest terms.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Ontario Court of Appeal[1], dismissing an appeal from a judgment of R. E. Holland J. dismissing a claim to full indemnity for damages awarded. Appeal dismissed.

Warren H. O. Mueller, Q.C., for the appellant.

John Fitzpatrick, Q.C., for the respondents.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

MARTLAND J.—As a result of a natural gas explosion and subsequent fire at the residence leased by the plaintiffs Gerard Fenn and Sandra Fenn, the plaintiff Sandra Fenn was severely injured, three children of Gerard Fenn and Sandra Fenn died and the plaintiff Candice Ann Fenn was injured.

The plaintiffs brought action against the appellant The Consumers' Gas Company ("Consumers' "), the respondent Peterborough Utilities Commission ("the Commission") and the respondent The Corporation of the City of Peterborough ("the City").

The natural gas which, upon ignition, exploded had escaped from a fracture in a four-inch wrought iron gas main owned and operated by Consumers'. The trial judge found that the fracture occurred because of strains placed upon the gas main as a result of lack of support or blocking following an excavation in the vicinity of the gas main by the Commission and as a result of inadequate and improper backfilling by the Commission. The trial judge also held that there had been negligence on the part of Consumers' in that the senior officers of Consumers' should have made clear, in some institutional way, the extreme danger of excavating in the vicinity of wrought iron mains. Furthermore, in the circumstances that existed, an employee of Consumers' should have sonne, et elle ne peut recouvrer de la Commission une indemnisation supérieure à celle que lui permet The Negligence Act. Le simple fait que les parties étaient membres d'un comité officieux n'établit pas des obligations contractuelles réciproques et ne donne pas droit à une indemnisation résultant de la négligence de la partie qui la réclame. Une clause d'indemnisation qui énonce cette obligation de l'autre partie doit être rédigée très clairement.

[1] (1979), 104 D.L.R. (3d) 174.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario[1], rejetant l'appel d'un jugement du juge R. E. Holland qui a rejeté une demande d'indemnisation intégrale des dommages à payer. Pourvoi rejeté.

Warren H. O. Mueller, c.r., pour l'appelante.

John Fitzpatrick, c.r., pour les intimées.

Version française du jugement de la Cour rendu par

LE JUGE MARTLAND—Par suite d'une explosion de gaz naturel et d'un incendie qui a suivi à la résidence que louaient les demandeurs Gerard Fenn et Sandra Fenn, la demanderesse Sandra Fenn a été grièvement blessée, trois enfants de Gerard Fenn et Sandra Fenn sont décédés et la demanderesse Candice Ann Fenn a été blessée.

Les demandeurs ont intenté une action contre l'appelante The Consumers' Gas Company («Consumer»), l'intimée Peterborough Utilities Commission («la Commission») et l'intimée The Corporation of the City of Peterborough («la Ville»).

Le gaz naturel qui a fait explosion lorsqu'il a été allumé s'échappait d'une fissure dans une conduite de gaz en fer de quatre pouces de diamètre dont Consumer était propriétaire et qu'elle exploitait. Le juge de première instance a conclu que la fissure résultait des tensions imposées à la conduite de gaz du fait de l'insuffisance d'appui ou de support consécutive à une excavation faite par la Commission dans le voisinage de la conduite et du fait d'un remplissage insuffisant par la Commission. Le juge de première instance a en outre conclu que Consumer a été négligente en ce que les dirigeants de Consumer auraient dû énoncer clairement, d'une façon spéciale, le très grand danger de creuser près des conduites en fer. En outre, dans les circonstances qui prévalaient, un employé de inspected the site of the excavation on a regular basis and arrangements should have been made so that an inspection could be carried out before any backfilling occurred.

[1] (1979), 104 D.L.R. (3d) 174.

1981 CanLII 66 (SCC)

NBC BOA 001189

The trial judge awarded damages, as varied by the Court of Appeal, to Sandra Fenn in the amount of $773,179.43, to Gerard Fenn in the amount of $52,470.29 and to Candice Fenn in the amount of $6,526.55 as against Consumers' and the Commission. The action against the City was dismissed. As between Consumers' and the Commission, responsibility was apportioned 25 per cent against Consumers' and 75 per cent against the Commission. With respect to the right of Consumers' to indemnity, it was ordered that:

> ... the Defendant, The Consumers' Gas Company, is entitled to contribution and indemnity from Peterborough Utilities Commission for any amount the Defendant, The Consumers' Gas Company, is required to pay to the Plaintiff in respect of judgment and costs hereunder in excess of 25 per cent thereof.

On appeal, the Court of Appeal held the City liable as well as the Commission. The Court sustained the findings of negligence made by the trial judge as against Consumers' and the Commission. The apportionment of fault was not varied, the Commission and the City being held responsible as to 75 per cent and Consumers' as to 25 per cent.

Consumers' claimed full indemnity from the Commission and the City in respect of any damages which it was required to pay. This claim failed both at trial and in the Court of Appeal. Consumers' appealed, with leave, to this Court. The sole issue before this Court is as to Consumers' claim for full indemnity.

Subsection (1) of s. 2 of The Negligence Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 296, provides as follows:

> 2.—(1) Where damages have been caused or contributed to by the fault or neglect of two or more persons, the court shall determine the degree in which each of such persons is at fault or negligent, and, except as provided by subsections 2, 3 and 4, where two or more persons are found at fault or negligent, they are jointly and severally liable to the person suffering loss or damage for such fault or negligence, but as between themselves, in the absence of any contract express or

Consumer aurait dû inspecter régulièrement le chantier d'excavation et on aurait dû voir à ce qu'une inspection soit faite avant de procéder au remplissage.

Le juge de première instance a condamné Consumer et la Commission à payer des dommages-intérêts, que la Cour d'appel a modifiés aux montants de $773,179.43 à Sandra Fenn, de $52,470.29 à Gerard Fenn et $6,526.55 à Candice Fenn. L'action contre la Ville a été rejetée. Entre Consumer et la Commission, la responsabilité a été partagée à 25 pour cent contre Consumer et 75 pour cent contre la Commission. Quant au droit de Consumer à une indemnisation, il a été ordonné que > [TRADUCTION] ... la défenderesse, The Consumers' Gas Company, a droit de réclamer à Peterborough Utilities Commission, en indemnisation, la partie du montant que la défenderesse The Consumers' Gas Company est tenue de payer aux demandeurs en exécution du jugement et des dépens qui excède 25 pour cent du montant total.

En appel, la Cour d'appel a tenu la Ville responsable au même titre que la Commission. La Cour a maintenu les conclusions du juge de première instance quant à la négligence de Consumer et de la Commission. Le partage de la responsabilité n'a pas été modifié, la Commission et la Ville étant tenues responsables à 75 pour cent et Consumer à 25 pour cent.

Consumer a demandé à la Commission et à la Ville de l'indemniser entièrement des dommages qu'elle était tenue de payer. Sa demande a échoué tant en première instance qu'en appel. Consumer a été autorisé à se pourvoir à cette Cour. La seule question en litige devant cette Cour porte sur la demande de Consumer d'être indemnisée entièrement.

Le paragraphe 2(1) de The Negligence Act, R.S.O. 1970, chap. 296, se lit comme suit:

> [TRADUCTION] 2.—(1) Lorsque la faute ou la négligence de deux ou plusieurs personnes ont causé ou ont contribué à des dommages, le tribunal déterminera la part de chacun dans la faute ou dans la négligence; sous réserve des cas prévus aux paragraphes 2, 3 et 4, lorsque deux ou plusieurs personnes ont commis une faute ou une négligence, elles sont conjointement et solidairement responsables envers la personne qui a subi une perte ou un préjudice imputable à cette faute ou à cette négli-

1981 CanLII 66 (SCC)

NBC BOA 001190

implied, each is liable to make contribution and indemnify each other in the degree in which they are respectively found to be at fault or negligent.

The judgment of the Court of Appeal dealt with Consumers' claim to full indemnity in the following passage:

> As we have agreed with the trial judge in his finding that Consumers owed a duty of care, not only to the plaintiffs but also to the Commission, we know of no authority which allows a party to be indemnified for its own negligence in the absence of a contractual right thereto and we were referred to none.

The authorities to which we were referred were not similar to the instant case in that in none of the cases cited was there found to be negligence by the one claiming indemnity towards the one from whom indemnity was claimed. Further, in most of the cases cited, there were contractual warranties between the parties and damages were being claimed for breach of such warranties. The evidence here does not establish that, by the mere fact of being members of an informal Committee, the parties had contractual obligations one to the other. If one is to be protected against and indemnified for one's own negligence there would have to be an indemnity clause spelling out this obligation on the other party in the clearest terms. In our view there is nothing in the relationship between the parties arising out of their membership in the Co-ordinating Committee which would support a claim for indemnity for loss occasioned by the claimant's own negligence (Canada Steamship Lines Ltd. v. The King, [1952] A.C. 192; Smith and others v. South Wales Switchgear Ltd., [1978] 1 All E.R. 18). The bar to recovery of indemnity by Consumers is its negligence to the plaintiffs, independent of anyone else's negligence, and it cannot recover indemnity from the Commission beyond the 75 per cent allowed by The Negligence Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 296.

I am in agreement with these reasons and, accordingly, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

Appeal dismissed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellant: Outerbridge, Thomas, Mueller and Betts, Toronto.

Solicitors for the respondents: Fitzpatrick and Poss, Toronto.

gence; mais, entre elles, en l'absence de contrat exprès ou implicite, elles sont tenues de faire une contribution et de s'indemniser mutuellement dans la mesure de leur participation respective à la faute ou à la négligence.

Les passages suivants de l'arrêt de la Cour d'appel traitent de la demande d'indemnisation complète de Consumer:

> [TRADUCTION] Puisque nous souscrivons aux conclusions du juge de première instance que Consumer avait une obligation de diligence, non seulement envers les demandeurs mais aussi envers la Commission, nous ne connaissons aucune jurisprudence qui permette à une partie de se faire indemniser pour sa propre négligence si aucun contrat ne lui donne ce droit, et on ne nous en a cité aucune.

La jurisprudence qui a été soumise diffère du cas en l'espèce en ce que dans aucun des arrêts cités, la partie qui réclamait l'indemnité n'avait commis de négligence à l'égard de la partie à qui elle réclamait l'indemnité. En outre, dans la plupart des arrêts cités, il y avait entre les parties des garanties prévues par contrat, et les dommages-intérêts étaient réclamés pour violation des garanties. La preuve en l'espèce n'établit pas que, du simple fait qu'elles étaient membres d'un comité officieux, les parties avaient l'une envers l'autre des obligations contractuelles. Si une partie doit être protégée contre sa propre négligence et être indemnisée, il doit y avoir une clause d'indemnisation qui énonce très clairement cette obligation de l'autre partie. A notre avis, rien dans les relations qu'a établies entre les parties leur qualité de membre du comité de coordination n'appuie une demande d'indemnisation pour une perte causée par la propre négligence de la partie qui la réclame (Canada Steamship Lines Ltd. v. The King, [1952] A.C. 192; Smith and others v. South Wales Switchgear Ltd., [1978] 1 All E.R. 18). Ce qui empêche Consumer de recouvrer une indemnisation, c'est sa négligence envers les demandeurs, indépendamment de la négligence de toute autre personne, et elle ne peut recouvrer de la Commission une indemnisation supérieure aux 75 pour cent que lui permet The Negligence Act, R.S.O. 1970, chap. 296.

Je souscris à ces motifs et, par conséquent, je suis d'avis de rejeter le pourvoi avec dépens.

Pourvoi rejeté avec dépens.

Procureurs de l'appelante: Outerbridge, Thomas, Mueller et Betts, Toronto.

Procureurs des intimées: Fitzpatrick et Poss, Toronto.

1981 CanLII 66 (SCC)

NBC BOA 001191

Fenn et al. v. City of Peterborough et al.; Peterborough Utilities Commission et al., Third Parties

25 O.R. (2d) 399
104 D.L.R. (3d) 174

ONTARIO
COURT OF APPEAL
MACKINNON, A.C.J.O., JESSUP, ARNUP, ZUBER AND MORDEN, JJ.A.
8TH MAY 1979.

Limitation of actions -- Defendant negligently undermining gas main -- Main fracturing five months later and escaping gas causing explosion which killed some people and injured others -- Writ issued less than six months after explosion -- Statute providing that action must be brought within "six months next after the act committed" -- Whether action barred -- Public Utilities Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 390, s. 32.

In early August, defendant utilities commission was replacing water service lines in a residential neighbourhood. The excavation work exposed a gas main. A fracture occurred in the gas main in early January because of stresses placed upon the main as a result of lack of support or blocking and inadequate and improper backfilling during and following the excavation. Gas escaped from the main and an explosion occurred destroying a house, killing some of its occupants and injuring others. An action was commenced less than six months later. The commission raised as a defence s. 32 of the Public Utilities Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 390, which provides that: "No action shall be brought against any person for anything done in pursuance of this Act, but within six months next after the act committed ...". The trial Judge held that the action was not barred. On appeal by the commission to the Ontario Court of Appeal, held, the appeal should be dismissed.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The trial Judge was correct in holding that the six months did not begin to run until the date of the explosion. The basic purpose of a statutory limitation provision is to prevent the bringing of stale claims. In the case of claims against persons acting pursuant to statutory authority, the traditional legislative approach has been to provide for a much shorter period of time than for similar claims against defendants not so acting. However, it would be absurd to attribute to the Legislature an intention, in the public interest or otherwise, to bar claims which not only are not stale but which could never have been brought before the running of the stipulated time. Having regard to the provision's basic purpose, the words "the act committed" in s. 32 of the Public Utilities Act, should be interpreted to mean "the cause of action arose". "The act committed" is a compendious term referring to an act that, because of its consequences, has legal significance.

[Davies v. Traders Finance Corp., [1959] O.W.N. 99, 18 D.L.R. (2d) 48, [1956-60] I.L.R. 1065n, distd; Berardinelli v. Ontario Housing Corp. et al., [1979] 1 S.C.R. 275, 90 D.L.R. (3d) 481, 8 C.P.C. 100; Carey v. Metropolitan Borough of Bermondsey (1903), 67 J.P. 447; Huyton & Roby Gas Co. v. Liverpool Corp., [1926] 1 K.B. 146; Roberts v. Read et al. (1812), 16 East. 215, 104 E.R. 1070; Gillon v. Boddington (1824), Ry. & Mood. 161, 171 E.R. 979; Nicklin et al. v. Williams (1854), 10 Ex. 259, 156 E.R. 440; Whitehouse v. Fellowes (1861), 10 C.B. (N.S.) 765, 142 E.R. 654; Turley v. Daw (1906), 94 L.T. 216; Freeborn v. Leeming, [1926] 1 K.B. 160; Watson v. Fram Reinforced Concrete Co. (Scotland), Ltd. and Winget, Ltd., [1960] S.C. (H.L.) 92, refd to]

Municipal law -- Plaintiff injured as result of negligence of public utilities commission or its servants -- Whether commission statutory agent of municipality for which it was created -- Whether both commission and municipality liable to plaintiff -- Whether municipality entitled to be indemnified by commission.

Principal and agent -- Plaintiff injured as result of negligence of public utilities commission or its servants -- Whether commission statutory agent of municipality for which it was created -- Whether both commission and municipality liable to plaintiff -- Whether municipality entitled to be indemnified by commission.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

A public utilities commission is the statutory agent of the municipality for which it was created. Where injury is sustained or damage suffered because of the negligence of the commission or its servants, both the municipality and the commission may be sued by the injured party on the basis of the common law principles applicable to principal and agent. However, as between the municipality and the commission, the municipality is entitled to be indemnified by the commission on the basis of the common law right of a principal, who is found vicariously liable to a plaintiff by reason of the negligence of his agent, to be indemnified by the agent.

[Campbell Flour Mills Co. Ltd. v. City of Peterborough (1925), 57 O.L.R. 458, [1925] 4 D.L.R. 23; Ridgway v. City of Toronto (1878), 28 U.C.C.P. 579; Young v. Town of Gravenhurst (1910), 22 O.L.R. 291; affirmed 24 O.L.R. 467; Scott v. Hydro-Electric Com'n of City of Hamilton (1914), 7 O.W.N. 385; Stevens-Willson v. City of Chatham et al., [1933] O.R. 305, [1933] 2 D.L.R. 407, disaprvd; MacDougall, Sons & Co. et al. v. Water Com'rs of City of Windsor (1901), 31 S.C.R. 326; affirming 27 O.A.R. 566; Gibbs et al. v. Trustees of Liverpool Docks (1856), 1 H. & N. 439, 156 E.R. 1273; revd 3 H. & N. 164, 157 E.R. 429; affd L.R. 1 H.L. 93, sub nom. Mersey Docks & Harbour Board Trustees v. Gibbs et al.; Humphreys v. City of London, [1935] O.R. 91, [1935] 1 D.L.R. 300; affd [1935] O.R. 295, [1935] 3 D.L.R. 39; Collins v. Hydro-Electric Com'n of Renfrew, [1948] O.R. 29; MacKinder and MacKinder v. City of London et al., [1953] O.R. 52, [1953] 1 D.L.R. 452; G.N.J. Properties Ltd. v. Barriesim Developments Ltd., City of Barrie Public Utilities Com'n, Third Party, [1973] 3 O.R. 614; Jones v. Manchester Corp. et al., [1952] 2 Q.B. 852; T.T.C. v. Metro. Toronto, [1960] O.R. 487; Re City of Berlin and County Judge of County of Waterloo (1914), 33 O.L.R. 73, 22 D.L.R. 296; Re Gillis; Township of Tisdale v.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

County of York, [1950] O.W.N. 21; Re Wright, [1938] O.R. 117, [1938] 2 D.L.R. 52, 69 C.C.C. 397; McFee v. Joss (1925), 56 O.L.R. 578, [1925] 2 D.L.R. 1059; Custom Ceilings Inc. v. S.W. Fleming & Co. Ltd. et al., [1970] 3 O.R. 17, 12 D.L.R. (3d) 209; Lister v. Romford Ice & Cold Storage Co. Ltd., [1957] A.C. 555; Ryan v. Fildes et al., [1938] 3 All E.R. 517; Morris v. Ford Motor Co. Ltd., [1973] Q.B. 792, refd to]

Damages -- Personal injuries -- Limit on awards of non-pecuniary general damages for pain and suffering and loss of amenities of life -- Plaintiff suffering devastating and totally disabling injury -- Cases in Supreme Court of Canada not establishing an absolute limit of $100,000 -- Higher award justified because of erosion of value of money since Supreme Court of Canada cases and because of fact that this plaintiff suffered more pain than plaintiffs in those cases -- Award of $125,000 appropriate for non-pecuniary general damages.

[Andrews et al. v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd. et al., [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229; 83 D.L.R. (3d) 452, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 577, 19 N.R. 50; Thornton et al. v. Board of School Trustees of School District No. 57 (Prince George) et al., [1978] 2 S.C.R. 267, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 480, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 607, 19 N.R. 552; Arnold et al. v. Teno et al., [1978] 2 S.C.R. 287, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 609, 19 N.R. 1; Lindal v. Lindal, [1978] 4 W.W.R. 592, refd to]

APPEAL by the defendant utilities commission and gas company, from a judgment of R. E. Holland, J., 14 O.R. (2d) 137, 73 D.L.R. (3d) 177, in favour of the plaintiffs in an action for damages for personal injuries and wrongful death; CROSS-APPEAL by the plaintiffs in respect of damages and the dismissal of their action against the defendant city; APPEAL by the gas company from the dismissal of its third party action against the commission and the city, and by the city from the dismissal of its third party action against the gas company and the commission.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

John J. Fitzpatrick, Q.C., and Harvey Poss, for appellant, Peterborough Utilities Commission.

Ian W. Outerbridge, Q.C., and Warren H. O. Mueller, for appellant, Consumers' Gas Company.

David A. L. Britnell, Q.C., Gordon H. T. Farquharson, Q.C., and Paul D. Blanchard, for respondent, City of Peterborough.

Eric R. Murray, Q.C., Barry G. A. MacDougall and William E. Pepall, for plaintiffs, respondents and cross-appellants.

W. Graham Dutton, Q.C., for Ontario Hospital Insurance Plan.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

BY THE COURT:-- On January 8, 1973, disaster stalked the household and entered the home of the respondents, Gerard and Sandra Fenn, with tragic and lasting consequences. At 12 o'clock noon of that day a natural gas explosion, followed by a fire, totally demolished their rented home at 521 Bolivar St. in the City of Peterborough, horribly injuring and mutilating Sandra Fenn and killing their three young children. It is accepted that this terrible event occurred through no fault or act of the Fenns.

The learned trial Judge gave judgment, after a 33-day trial, for, inter alia, damages of $719,074.43 in favour of Sandra Fenn against the appellant Consumers' Gas Company (Consumers) and the appellant Peterborough Utilities Commission (the Commission). He apportioned the liability at 75% to the Commission and 25% to Consumers and directed the usual contribution and indemnity each from the other. He dismissed the action as against the respondent City of Peterborough (the City) as well as the third party proceedings brought by Consumers against the Commission and the City and the third party proceedings by the City against Consumers and the Commission.

Consumers and the Commission appealed, both arguing that the negligence of the other was the sole cause of the explosion and, in any event, that its proportion of negligence which contributed to the damage should be no more than 10%. Consumers also argued on various grounds that, if it should be held liable to any degree for the damages, it should be indemnified by either or both the Commission and the City in the third party proceedings. The Commission further argued that, as a matter of law, it was insulated from any finding of negligence in that the liability was that of the City. The Commission's final argument on liability, supported by the City, was that the action fails against it because of the effect of the limitation period found in s. 32 of the Public Utilities Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 390.

Consumers and the Commission also appealed the quantum of damages awarded and Sandra Fenn cross-appealed on the issue of damages. Finally, counsel for the plaintiffs argued that the City should be liable to his clients on the basis of the applicability to the facts of this case of the principle enunciated in Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330, affirming L.R. 1 Ex. 265.

The facts

The trial Judge carefully and comprehensively reviewed the evidence and made his findings of fact on that review. It is necessary for us to repeat some of those facts, less comprehensively, in order that our conclusions on various issues, some of which were not argued before the trial Judge, may be understood in their factual context. We do say, at the outset, that we agree completely with the trial Judge's findings of fact, his determination of liability and his apportionment of negligence based on those findings and determination. There was ample credible evidence to support those findings.

Bolivar St., on which the Fenns lived, runs east and west. Number 521 was on the south side of the street, being a two-storey, semi-detached brick residence with a basement. Its companion was No. 519, the more easterly of the two houses. Between the front lawn of the two houses and the roadway, was a sidewalk and a boulevard. Underneath the boulevard was an eight-inch steel gas main which did not service the house and a four-inch wrought iron gas main from which two service lines extended, one being a capped line ending in the wall of No. 519 and one servicing the water heater in No. 521. On the north side of Bolivar St. was a trunk water main with a service connection running south to the boulevard in front of No. 521 with a connection into No. 519.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The mid point of the eight-inch gas main, which was located close to the curb, to the mid point of the four-inch gas main was a distance of 3.5 ft. The top of the eight-inch main was 4.2 ft. from the surface and the top of the four-inch main was 3.5 ft. from the surface. The water service pipes varied slightly in their distance from the surface but were approximately six feet below the surface. The finding of fact by the trial Judge was that it was a fracture in the four-inch wrought iron gas main which caused a leak of natural gas. The gas was trapped below the surface by the frozen ground, percolating through the soil following the path of least resistance and entering the basements of Nos. 519 and 521, where it was probably ignited by the pilot light of the natural gas-fired hot-water heater in the basement of No. 521. The trial Judge held it was the combined negligence of the Commission and Consumers which led to the fracture and the resulting explosion, and, as already stated, apportioned the fault 75% to the Commission and 25% to Consumers.

The wrought iron gas main was laid in 1909 and operated by the City and the Commission for almost 50 years as part of a propane-air plant. It apparently was not much used in later years and in 1958 and 1959 the plant, piping and all physical assets, were sold to Consumers by the City. Transferred to Consumers as part of the sale were 227,450 ft. of wrought iron pipe which included, of course, the four-inch main running along Bolivar St. It was established that the fracture in the wrought iron pipe occurred through the threads where two lengths of pipe were joined by a threaded coupling. The trial Judge described the fracture as follows [14 O.R. (2d) 137 at pp. 141-2, 73 D.L.R. (3d) 177 at pp. 181-2]:

> The fracture occurred through the threads at the east edge of the coupling. The minimum thickness of the pipe at the fracture surface occurred at 40degrees counter-clockwise and was .043 ins. The maximum thickness was at 90degrees counter-clockwise and was .216 ins. A considerable amount of corrosion product was found over approximately 40degrees of the bottom surface of the pipe. The threads under this corrosion product had deteriorated. Relatively little corrosion had occurred at the thin section of the fracture face. The fracture had followed the route of a single thread over the top 120degrees in a brittle manner, leaving a granular flat surface on both sides of the fracture. Over approximately the next 65degrees on each side, the fracture was considerably rougher and included a step of one thread towards the west on both sides. The remaining approximately 110degrees followed the route on an individual thread down on both sides. At approximately 20degrees counter-clockwise from the bottom these two parts were connected by two sharp steps across the intervening thread. It is apparent that the main fractured in an almost completely brittle manner. It appears that the fracture initiated either near the top of the pipe or at the thinnest point in the pipe 40degrees counter-clockwise from the top. It appears probable that the fracture occurred without any measurable time between initiation and complete fracture.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The threaded portion where the fracture occurred was not overlapped and protected by the partner pipe.

Although little corrosion had occurred at the thin section where the fracture had occurred, there was a considerable amount of corrosion on the bottom surface of the pipe, and the threads under the corrosion had deteriorated. The pipe was oval shaped or asymmetric so that, the theory was, the thread cutter, which itself was round, would cut more deeply into certain portions of the pipe when cutting the thread. As noted, the trial Judge found that "the main fractured in an almost completely brittle manner".

The evidence was that the pipe as it lay in the ground was at a temperature of about 40degrees Fahrenheit and would be in what was termed a "brittle mode". This means that in cold weather the wrought iron pipe was particularly susceptible to fracture, and with the application of moderate force a brittle fracture would follow. It was accepted that stresses were sharply increased and concentrated at the roots of the notches made by the threading of the pipes. In addition, there is a propensity for fracture at grooved areas, called "notch sensitivity", that is unexplained by simple stress concentration. This concentration of stress at the root of the notch makes it even more sensitive to fracture when it is brittle in cold weather. This particular susceptibility of wrought iron pipe to fracture under the circumstances recited required that great care be taken when working around it and necessitated an adequate system being set up to protect against this susceptibility.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

In the summer of 1972 a tenant at 519 Bolivar St. complained about a water leak. The Commission decided to excavate and replace the water service lines leading to Nos. 519 and 521. Prior to any excavation work being done, the Commission notified Consumers that work was to be done in the area. Consumers sent out Kenneth Davis, an employee for some 14 years, who marked out the location of the gas mains using paint and stakes. This was a regular and routine part of his job. He met George Cheel, a senior foreman of the Commission and with the Commission some 30 years, at the site where the locations of the four-inch and eight-inch gas mains were staked out. The stake-out report, a printed form, completed by Davis, contained this:

WARNING

> The Contractor must not work outside the area mentioned in part "C'' without a further stake-out by the Company.
>
> If excavation is necessary over or near underground gas plant, extreme caution must be observed especially where mechanical equipment is used. The actual location of the gas plant must be determined in advance by exposing it by hand.

There is no notation on the form that if pipe (or "gas plant", to use the terminology of the report) were exposed Consumers was to be notified immediately. The trial Judge noted that it was obvious from the evidence that Consumers knew excavations were to be carried out in the area of the old wrought iron main, although at the commencement of the work no one, either from the Commission or Consumers, had any real idea as to the extent of the excavations that would be required. We agree with the trial Judge's view that any excavation in the area of the wrought iron pipe should have been of concern to Consumers.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

A four-man crew from the Commission commenced work on August 3, 1972. They first made an excavation through the asphalt surface at the north side of Bolivar and cut the old water service off at the main. They then moved to the south of the sidewalk at the property line of Nos. 519 and 521 to disconnect the old service pipe. A further excavation was then made north of the sidewalk, along its edge, in the boulevard from the area of the service to No. 521, in an easterly direction along the line of the water pipe, to the area where the pipe to No. 519 ran south. This excavation was approximately 12 ft. long and extended down some six feet to the water pipe. The south edge of this trench was at the north edge of the sidewalk. A backhoe was used to assist with the digging and with its two-foot bucket the width of the bottom of the trench was at least two feet. It was at this stage of the operation that the Commission's employees had to make a further excavation that had not been anticipated. In attempting to pull the old water pipe, followed by the new copper pipe replacement, under the roadway and through the excavation on the north side of the street the old pipe broke or stuck. It then became necessary to excavate in the boulevard between the eight-inch steel gas main and the four-inch wrought iron main. It should be noted that during these excavations there was no inspection by Consumers.

In this final excavation the backhoe was once again used to assist in the digging. The excavation was approximately five feet from east to west and at least two feet wide at the bottom, which was some six feet down. The backfilling of this excavation was done with the backhoe and blade and there was little or no compacting done in the course of completing the backfilling.

The distance between the four-inch and eight-inch main was only three feet. The trial Judge found, as he well could on the evidence and the reasonable inferences from that evidence, that, as a result of this last excavation, the four-inch gas main was partially exposed for a distance of five feet or so, and "at best, was supported, or appeared to be supported, by a wedge of soil" [p. 140 O.R., p. 180 D.L.R.]. Counsel for the Commission argued strenuously that there was no evidence to support this conclusion of the trial Judge and that the opinion of the expert who gave evidence for Consumers was based on different hypotheses which the evidence did not support. In our view there was ample evidence to support the trial Judge's finding that the support for the four-inch main had been interfered with to such an extent that it was a contributing cause to the fracture which led to the escape of gas on January 8, 1973. It was noted by the trial Judge that in the course of the digging of this last trench the backhoe bucket had struck the eight-inch main but such striking, and the exposure of the four-inch main, were not reported to Consumers.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Some time prior to 1973 a co-ordinating committee had been set up by the City's engineering department in co-operation with certain other companies and utilities including Consumers and the Commission. This committee met fairly regularly to discuss matters of common concern and "regulations" were issued by the co-ordinating committee from time to time. A meeting of the committee was held on June 1, 1972, and the chairman of the committee (who was employed in the City's engineering department) "was requested to review the present regulations in regard to road cuts and make any necessary revisions, and present to the Committee at a future meeting". On June 9, 1972, "regulations" with respect to "cuts" in street allowances were circulated. A note to the regulations reads, in part, as follows:

> Normally no one will be given permission to cut into any portion of a City street allowance except the Peterborough Utilities Commission ... the Consumers' Gas Company ... These regulations are meant to apply to the above-mentioned agencies.

Included in the regulations was the requirement for a permit before any cut was made into a roadway or sidewalk. No permit was required where the cut only affected grass areas or private driveways or sidewalks. The regulations required that in trench restoration, the trench would be backfilled with material similar to the original material so that the frost effect on the compacted trench would be the same as on the ground around it. Further, the backfill was to be compacted in layers not exceeding six inches in depth. These directions were not followed by the Commission employees in backfilling either the five-foot or the twelve-foot trench.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Findings of negligence

1. The Commission

The trial Judge, having recited these and other facts, came to the conclusion, as already noted, that the Commission was 75% at fault for the explosion and Consumers 25% at fault. His reasons, based on his findings of fact, for holding the Commission liable were as follows [at pp. 145-6 O.R., pp. 185-6 D.L.R.]:

> It is common knowledge that gas is dangerous and when mixed with air in certain proportions and ignited it will burn or explode. It is to be expected, therefore, that gas distribution and transmission systems and gas-operated equipment will be treated with the greatest of care. There is a high risk and this produces a correspondingly high duty. This high duty of care rested in this case not only on the Gas Co. but also on the Commission. The officers and employees of the Commission, particularly William Powell, the general manager, who has been with the Commission 26 years, and George Cheel, the senior foreman, who had been with the Commission 30 years, had operated or assisted in the operation of this very system when it was used for the distribution of manufactured gas prior to its sale to the Gas Co. in 1959. Through their own experience they should have realized that the system was old and subject to leaks. With hindsight it is easy to set too high a standard. However, in my view, the senior officers of the Commission had an obligation to ensure that if digging was to be performed in the area of a gas main the following steps would be taken:

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

(1) A full description of the proposed work would be given to the Gas Co. with the request that the Gas Co. stake out the gas mains;

(2) If any change in the proposed work occurred requiring any further excavation in the proximity of a gas main, then the Gas Co. should be immediately advised of the change;

(3) Digging in the vicinity of gas mains should be done very carefully and if necessary by hand;

(4) Any gas mains uncovered should be immediately reported to the Gas Co.;

(5) The Gas Co. should be given the opportunity of making a decision on the support of any exposed mains and backfilling. That is, the Gas Co. should have the opportunity of doing the support work or requiring the Commission to do the work and also should be given the opportunity of either doing the backfilling itself or supervising backfilling by the Commission;

(6) Any backfilling performed by the servants of the Commission should be done with great care and with proper and adequate compaction.

These precautions were not taken and the senior officers of the Commission were negligent in this regard. I am also of the view that the servants of the Commission in this case were negligent in that:

(1) Although it was the original intention of the Commission to replace the defective water line without disturbing the gas main, it should have been clear that by the time the excavating work was finished the four-inch gas main had been exposed and was not adequately supported. In spite of this the exposure of the main and lack of support was not reported to the Gas Co.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

(2) No effort was made to properly backfill around the gas main and to make sure that the backfill was properly and adequately compacted so as to provide adequate support for the main.

Counsel for the Commission argued that the negligence found against his client did not, in law, contribute to the damage because once work was done around the old wrought iron gas main, no matter how carefully done, it was then susceptible to fracture to the knowledge of Consumers which had not set up an adequate system to protect against this susceptibility. The trial Judge did advert to the failure of Consumers to maintain any inspection or supervision of the work when it was immediately adjacent to its pipes and held it negligent in that failure. However, as he also pointed out, the fact of the matter is that the main had been in the ground for 64 years without fracture and then fractured following the excavation work. This goes beyond coincidence and "natural" causes. Further, we agree entirely with his characterization of the conduct of the servants of the Commission as "reckless", not only in the way they backfilled around the gas main, but in carrying out their excavation work around it. There was, in this entire operation, on the part of the servants of the Commission, as said by the trial Judge, "a callous disregard for the safety of others". The Commission was negligent qua the plaintiffs and Consumers.

2. Consumers

In turning to the liability of Consumers one must have regard, as did the trial Judge, to the statement of Lord Wright, in Northwestern Utilities, Ltd. v. London Guarantee & Accident Co., Ltd. et al., [1936] A.C. 108 at pp. 118-9, [1935] 4 D.L.R. 737 at pp. 741-2, [1935] 3 W.W.R. 446:

> That gas is a dangerous thing within the rules applicable to things dangerous in themselves is beyond question. Thus the appellants who are carrying in their mains the inflammable and explosive gas are prima facie within the principle of Rylands v. Fletcher, L.R. 3 H.L. 330, affirming Fletcher v. Rylands (1866) L.R. 1 Ex. 265: that is to say, > that though they are doing nothing wrongful in carrying the dangerous thing so long as they keep it in their pipes, they come prima facie within the rule of strict liability if the gas escapes: the gas constitutes an extraordinary danger created by the appellants for their own purposes, and the rule established by Rylands v. Fletcher, L.R. 3 H.L. 330, requires that they act at their peril and must pay for damage caused by the gas if it escapes, even without any negligence on their part. The rule is not limited to cases where the defendant has been carrying or accumulating the dangerous thing on his own land: it applies equally in a case like the present where the appellants were carrying the gas in mains laid in the property of the City (that is in the sub-soil) in exercise of a franchise to do so. ... [T]he rule of strict liability has been modified by admitting as a defence that what was being done was properly done in pursuance of statutory powers, and the mischief that has happened has not been brought about by any negligence on the part of the undertakers. ... [T]he rule has been held inapplicable where the casualty is due to the act of God; or to the independent or conscious volition of a third party, as in Box v. Jubb, 4 Ex. D. 76, which was approved by the Judicial Committee in Richards v. Lothian, [1913] A.C. 263; and not to any negligence of the defendants.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Counsel for Consumers argued before the trial Judge and again before us that his client was not guilty of any negligence and that the whole cause of the explosion was the negligence of the Commission's workmen, who exposed the four-inch gas main and struck the eight-inch steel main but reported neither to their foreman. If it had been reported to the foreman and then to Consumers, Consumers, he argued, would have dealt with the matter in some appropriate way and there would have been no explosion. His argument, in detail, went to support the finding of negligence made by the learned trial Judge against the Commission and with this portion of his argument we have no difficulty in agreeing.

However, in assessing the negligence and the liability of Consumers, without any finding of strict liability on the basis of Rylands v. Fletcher, the trial Judge noted Lord Wright's description of the responsibility of a corporation in carrying inflammable gas as "tremendous" and went on to say [at p. 147 O.R., p. 187 D.L.R.]:

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> I must bear this tremendous responsibility in mind. We are dealing with an old main that was fragile and delicate and entitled to be treated with care and respect. Some 25% of the Peterborough system consisted of old cast iron or wrought iron mains. It was these mains that produced leaks. The only way of checking the condition of the mains was through leak surveys and by visually examining the mains when exposed. The mains were subject to corrosion and corrosion had been a problem in Peterborough. Professor Sawers was called as an expert witness on behalf of the Gas Co. and said that as soon as you excavate anything under the level of the main you affect its support and the closer you get and the deeper you go, the greater the loss of support. Roderick Long, an engineer with the Gas Co. for many years, and who was general superintendent of operations in 1972, was even more specific and testified that any parallel excavation closer than six feet to a gas main three feet below the level of the line would be of concern. It was his view that in excavating you should stay at least two feet out from the main for every foot you go below the level of the main. It is perfectly obvious that an escape of gas from a fractured main can result in an explosion and fire with the attendant loss of life, injury and damage to property. The officers and employees of the Gas Co. should have had in mind at all times the danger inherent in excavating in the proximity of this old wrought iron main and should have borne in mind at all times the tremendous responsibility that rested upon them to do everything reasonable within their power to ensure that there be no escape of gas as a result of any act or neglect on their part or as a result of any act or neglect on the part of third parties. A main of this age required the greatest care and consideration. The alternative was to remove wrought iron mains from the system completely or to line them with plastic.

He then pointed out that Lord Wright in Northwestern Utilities (at p. 127 A.C., p. 749 D.L.R.) had discussed the standard of care imposed on a company like Consumers and had stated:

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> If they did know [of the City Works] they should have been on their guard: they might have ascertained what work was being done and carefully investigated the position, or they might have examined the pipes likely to be affected so as to satisfy themselves that the bed on which they lay was not being disturbed. Their duty to the respondents was at the lowest to be on the watch and to be vigilant:

The trial Judge went on to hold [at pp. 148-9 O.R., pp. 188-9 D.L.R.]:

> The officers and employees of the Gas Co. were negligent.
>
> In the first place the senior officers of the Gas Co. should have made clear, in some institutional way, the extreme danger of excavating in the proximity of wrought iron gas mains. Some system should have been in effect to clearly inform all Gas Co. field men of the danger and, through them, other companies or utilities engaged in excavating anywhere in the area of gas mains. The failure to do this undermines any justification the Gas Co. might have in relying on other utilities to inform them of any exposure of their gas mains. Roderick Long, general superintendent of the Gas Co., knew that any parallel [excavation] closer than six feet to a gas main three feet below the level of the line would be of concern and this sort of knowledge should have been passed on to the field men. The Gas Co. could not very well rely on warnings from some other utility if the employees of that other utility did not themselves fully realize the danger.
>
> In the second place, in the circumstances that existed, I am of the opinion that a Gas Co. employee should have inspected the site of the excavation on a regular basis and arrangements should have been made so that an inspection could be carried out before any backfilling occurred. If this had been done it is probable that the exposed main would have been properly supported and the backfill properly compacted.

Counsel for Consumers argued that the trial Judge's statement, supra, that the knowledge of Consumers should have been passed on to the field men was not a finding of negligence and was not a cause contributing to the explosion. Further, while acknowledging that a duty of care was owed to the plaintiffs, counsel for Consumers submitted that there was no such duty owed by Consumers to the Commission. His position was that the Commission knew as much about the extreme danger in working close to this ancient pipe as did Consumers and there was no duty on Consumers to protect the Commission from its own negligence. However, there was evidence, much of which was recited to us and some of which was referred to by the trial Judge, from which he could properly draw the inference that Consumers, and Consumers alone, were aware of the various factors that made this wrought iron pipe much more susceptible to fracture than steel pipe and of the extreme danger involved in excavating near such pipe and interfering with its support. The Commission was not shown to have this particular knowledge and it is clear, as found by the trial Judge, that the employees of the Commission did not fully realize the danger in excavating near the wrought iron pipes. Consumers should have made known to those excavating the great danger attendant upon such work in the circumstances recited, and have been present as a matter of routine. There was, of course, another benefit or security which Consumers could realize on such occasions by being present: the opportunity to inspect, visually, the pipe for potential danger areas.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

To restate the matter: Consumers had a duty to warn the Commission of the great danger involved in excavating near the wrought iron pipe and an obligation when such excavation work was proceeding "to be on the watch and to be vigilant". Such a duty goes well beyond the "system" which Consumers argued it already had of "snifters" driving up and down the street from time to time, participation in the co-ordinating committee and the practice of "staking-out" the location of gas mains. If the Commission had been given notice of the extreme danger it would thereby have had the opportunity of exercising the necessary great care and of involving Consumers in ensuring that all necessary protective measures were taken. We agree with the trial Judge that the failure to warn and to supervise was a contributing cause of and to the explosion.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

It was the combined negligence of both the Commission and Consumers which led to the disastrous explosion. The division of liability was made by the trial Judge on his assessment of their degrees of fault which contributed to the explosion based on his knowledge and understanding of the evidence. As stated at the beginning, we agree with the trial Judge that, on the facts, the Commission's negligence which contributed to the explosion and the ensuing damage was considerably greater than that of Consumers. As was noted by Dickson, J., in his dissenting reasons for judgment in Taylor v. Asody, [1975] 2 S.C.R. 414 at p. 423, 49 D.L.R. (3d) 724 at p. 728, 3 N.R. 381, an appellate Court is not free to substitute its apportionment of fault for that made by the trial Judge "unless there has been palpable and demonstrable error in appreciation of the legal principles to be applied or misapprehension of the facts by the trial Judge". The other members of the Supreme Court were in agreement with this statement of principle. We can see no error in the trial Judge's appreciation of the legal principles which he had to apply in determining liability and the apportionment of fault, and there was no misapprehension by him of the relevant facts, even though there might be some minor errors in his recital of the facts not relevant to the final determinations he made. Accordingly, we would not interfere with his apportionment of fault.

Consumers argued that, in any event, it was entitled to be indemnified by the Commission for the 25% of the damages it was ordered to pay the plaintiffs. It based its argument on various grounds but it was all predicated on the submission that it owed no duty of care to the Commission. The grounds advanced which, counsel submitted, supported Consumers' right to be totally indemnified by the Commission were:

(a) The Commission had interfered with its common law right to support (of the wrought iron pipe);
(b) the Commission had interfered with its statutory right to support;
(c) Consumers had a claim in contract or quasi-contract against the Commission based on the fact that both the Commission and Consumers were members of the co-ordinating committee and had agreed to abide by the regulations and understandings of that committee. This constituted a contract inter se and the failure of the Commission to restore the boulevard in accordance with the applicable regulation was a breach of that contract;

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

(d) Consumers was entitled to recover from the Commission on the basis of a rather ill-defined claim in "equity and good conscience";
(e) Consumers was entitled to be indemnified by the City in that the City, in allowing its servant or agent, the Commission, to remove or interfere with the pipe's support, had "derogated from its grant".

We shall deal later with the relationship between the City and the Commission but the same answer must be given to all these submissions whether Consumers' claim for indemnity is made against the Commission or against the City.

As we have agreed with the trial Judge in his finding that Consumers owed a duty of care, not only to the plaintiffs but also to the Commission, we know of no authority which allows a party to be indemnified for its own negligence in the absence of a contractual right thereto and we were referred to none.

The authorities to which we were referred were not similar to the instant case in that in none of the cases cited was there found to be negligence by the one claiming indemnity towards the one from whom indemnity was claimed. Further, in most of the cases cited, there were contractual warranties between the parties and damages were being claimed for breach of such warranties. The evidence here does not establish that, by the mere fact of being members of an informal committee, the parties had contractual obligations one to the other. If one is to be protected against and indemnified for one's own negligence there would have to be an indemnity clause spelling out this obligation on the other party in the clearest terms. In our view there is nothing in the relationship between the parties arising out of their membership in the co-ordinating committee which would support a claim for indemnity for loss occasioned by the claimant's own negligence: Canada Steamship Lines Ltd. v. The King, [1952] A.C. 192, [1952] 2 D.L.R. 786, 5 W.W.R. (N.S.) 609; Smith et al. v. South Wales Switchgear Ltd.,

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

[1978] 1 All E.R. 18. The bar to recovery of indemnity by Consumers is its negligence to the plaintiffs, independent of anyone else's negligence, and it cannot recover indemnity from the Commission beyond the 75% allowed by the Negligence Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 296.

The defence of the Commission and the City based on s. 32 of the Public Utilities Act

The Commission and the City relied upon the limitation provision contained in s. 32 of the Public Utilities Act as a bar to this action. The section reads:

> 32. No action shall be brought against any person for anything done in pursuance of this Act, but within six months next after the act committed, or in case there is a continuation of damage, within one year after the original cause of action arose.

This action was commenced on July 6, 1973, and the submission of the defendants, relying on s. 32, was, quite simply, that "the act committed" was the excavation and backfilling in August of 1972, and, therefore, the limitation period expired in February of 1973. The defendants relied on what was said by this Court in Davies v. Traders Finance Corp., [1959] O.W.N. 99 at p. 100, 18 D.L.R. (2d) 48 at p. 54, [1956-60] I.L.R. 1065n, with respect to the similar terms of s. 11 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, R.S.O. 1950, c. 303, which read:

> 11. No action, prosecution or other proceedinq shall lie or be instituted against any person for an act done in pursuance or execution or intended execution of any statutory or other public duty or authority, or in respect of any alleged neglect or default in the execution of any such duty or authority, unless it is commenced within six months next after the act, neglect or default complained of, or, in case of continuance of injury or damage, within six months after the ceasing thereof.

It may be noted now that the language of this provision remained unchanged until its amendment by 1976 (Ont.), c. 19,

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

s. 1, which amendment will be referred to later in these reasons.

One of the claims asserted in Davies was for damages for breach of warranty of title against a Sheriff who had, under an execution against a conditional sale purchaser of a motor vehicle, sold the vehicle to the plaintiff. It was held that the purchase was subject to the riqhts of the conditional sale vendor. The Sheriff's sale was on May 3, 1956, but the conditional sale vendor did not seize the vehicle from the plaintiff until February 27, 1957. The action was commenced on August 26, 1957.

Morden, J.A., for the Court, said at p. 54 of 18 D.L.R.(2d):

> Under s. 11 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, the time runs from the date of the act, neglect or default complained of. If the act or default was a breach of warranty, it occurred on May 3, 1956, and the time began running then: Tremaine v. Canada Sand Lime Pressed Brick Co. (1921), 21 O.W.N. 110; (1922), 22 O.W.N. 12. Incidentally the plaintiff suffered no damages until the seizure which was made long after the time had run. His cause of action did not accrue until the seizure. This leads to the startling result pointed out by Scrutton, L.J. in Huyton & Roby Gas Co. v. Liverpool Corp., [1926] 1 K.B. 146 at p. 155: "that you may lose a cause of an action before you have got it." It is interesting to note that English statute law, which was until 1939 in the same terms as the Ontario Act, was amended in that year to provide that the limitation period begins running "from the date on which the cause of action accrued": 1939 (Imp.), c. 21, s. 21(1). This unfair result is no longer possible in England but it is in this Province.

In the case before us the trial Judge referred to Davies in the following passage [at p. 153 O.R., p. 193 D.L.R.]:

> To hold that s. 32 of the Act bars the action would have the effect, had the explosion occurred a month or so later, of barring a cause of action before it even accrued. This unfair result is said to be still possible in Ontario: Davies

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

v. Traders Finance Corp., [1959] O.W.N. 99 at p. 100, 18 D.L.R. (2d) 48 at p. 54, [1956-60] I.L.R. 1065n.

He held that the six-month period provided for in s. 32 did not commence to run until the date of the explosion for two reasons:

1. Because the "fraud" of the Commission prevented the time running until discovery of the facts. He quoted from judgments of Lord Denning, M.R., in Eddis et al. v. Chichester Constable et al., [1969] 2 All E.R. 912 at p. 915, and in King v. Victor Parsons & Co. (a firm), [1973] 1 All E.R. 206 at p. 209.
2. Because the Commission was negligent in failing to backfill properly and thereby provide adequate support for the gas main, which lack of support continued to the explosion. Reference was made to passages in the judgments of Bankes, L.J., and Scrutton, L.J., in Huyton & Roby Gas Co. v. Liverpool Corp., [1926] 1 K.B. 146 at pp. 152 and 155 respectively, a case concerned with the application of s. 1(a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (U.K.), c. 61.

In our view the trial Judge was correct in holding that the six months did not begin to run until the date of the explosion. We base our conclusion on reasoning different from that of the trial Judge but which is more direct, in our respectful view, having regard to the issues to be resolved. We should mention that, having regard to what was said in Davies v. Traders Finance Corp. Ltd., supra, the reasoning we propose to follow may not have appeared to the trial Judge to have been open to him.

Before embarking on these reasons we shall deal with some preliminary matters. It is not disputed that the Commission, if the requisite facts are shown, is entitled to the benefit of s. 32 of the Public Utilities Act. Mention is made of this because s. 32 appears in Part III of the Act which begins with s. 26, which provides:

> 26. This Part applies to all municipal corporations owning or operating public utilities.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

A reading of the plain opening language of s. 32 itself, which refers to "any person", and of other sections in Part III, makes it reasonably clear that the Part's sections are not exclusively confined to the rights and duties of municipal corporations. However, if for the reason mentioned above, or any similar reason, the Commission were not entitled to argue the applicability of s. 32, then it clearly could argue the applicability of s. 11 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 374, which it has pleaded and which, as indicated, uses similar language to that in s. 32. If the 1976 amendment to this provision were applicable to this action (the amendment applies "in respect of causes of action arising before or after this Act comes into force" (April 14, 1976): 1976 (Ont.), c. 19, s. 2), then there could be no possible defence available to the Commission based on a limitation provision.

Further, we accept that the Commission, in carrying out its activities in front of Nos. 519 and 521 Bolivar St. in August of 1972, was acting in pursuance of the Public Utilities Act, even though the Act contains no express provisions relating to excavating and backfilling. Such work is obviously directly incidental to the operation of the waterworks system. Reference should be made to s. 4(3) which requires "... land, not being the property of the [municipal] corporation, [to] be restored to [its] original condition without unnecessary delay". The inapplicability of this provision, because the pipe was in City property, should not be read as excluding an implicit duty to excavate and backfill with due care.

Also, we see no need to enter into a detailed analysis of the meaning of the word "act" from the vantage point of the distinction between a positive act and an omission, because the conduct of the Commission which gave rise to the claim against it would seem to be a combination of excavation and backfilling, whether the backfilling be described as bad backfilling or failure to backfill adequately. In any event, it would seem to be generally accepted that "anything done" or "act" would include failures to act or omissions: see, e.g., Wilson v. Mayor and Corp. of Halifax (1868), L.R. 3 Ex. 114 at pp. 119-20, and Watson v. Fram Reinforced Concrete Co.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

(Scotland), Ltd. and Winget, Ltd., [1960] S.C. (H.L.) 92 at pp. 111 and 115. The fact that another section in the Act (s. 52), which is of later origin, uses more extended language, "act, default, neglect, or omission", does not persuade us otherwise.

The basic purpose of a statutory limitation provision is to prevent the bringing of stale claims. This purpose may be accomplished by providing that the kind of legal claim in question must be brought, if at all, within a specified period of time. In the case of claims against persons acting pursuant to statutory authority, the traditional legislative approach has been to provide for a much shorter period of time than for similar claims against defendants not so acting. For example, the six-month period provided for in s. 11 of the Public Authorities Protection Act, and in the provision we are considering, may be contrasted with the six-year period provided for in s. 45(1)(g) of the Limitations Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 246, with respect to general negligence claims. However, it may reasonably be thought to be absurd to attribute to the Legislature an intention, in the public interest or otherwise, to bar claims which not only are not stale but which could never have been brought before the running of the stipulated time.

The approach recently enunciated by Estey, J., for the Supreme Court of Canada in Berardinelli v. Ontario Housing Corp. et al., [1979] 1 S.C.R. 275, 90 D.L.R. (3d) 481, 8 C.P.C. 100, to the interpretation of s. 11 of the Public Authorities Protection Act is clearly relevant to s. 32 of the Public Utilities Act (at p. 280 S.C.R., p. 492 D.L.R.):

> Section 11, being a restrictive provision wherein the rights of action of the citizen are necessarily circumscribed by its terms, attracts a strict interpretation and any ambiguity found upon the application of the proper principles of statutory interpretation should be resolved in favour of the person whose right of action is being truncated.

With these approaches in mind it is reasonable to interpret "the act committed" in s. 32 of the Public Utilities Act as having the same meaning as the "anything done in pursuance of this Act" (in the first clause of the section) for which an "action [may] be brought". Surely, the "anything" must embrace that minimum combination of facts which must exist to enable the action to be brought and the word "act" should also receive such an interpretation.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

This approach is consistent with the meaning of the second part of s. 32 which provides for a one-year limitation period where there is a continuation of damage, i.e., a continuation of the act which causes the damage (Carey v. Metropolitan Borough of Bermondsey (1903), 67 J.P. 447) "after the original cause of action arose''. With respect to a claim for damages for negligence, with which we are now concerned, the original cause of action could not arise until the plaintiff had suffered some damage as a result of the defendant's act. It is unreasonably inconsistent to construe the section as not requiring, in the context of a negligence action, any infliction of damage on the plaintiff to start the time running for a "once-and-for-all" act or omission but to require it for an action based on a continuing cause of action where, indeed, the limitation period is longer.

In our view, having regard to its basic purpose, the legislation is capable of the interpretation we have placed on it, in effect, construing "the act committed" as "the cause of action arose'', and it should receive this interpretation. It is not unreasonable to think that the various Legislatures (and we shall be turning to similar provisions shortly) which have used this, or almost identical language, have intended by "the act committed" to use somewhat compendious terms to refer to an act having legal significance to the plaintiff -- but only after the act has, because of its consequences, such significance.

It may be that the original draftsman of the language of s. 32 considered, wrongly, that with respect to actions for damages, the defendant's conduct and the infliction of damages, which together give rise to the cause of action (where such damages are a necessary element) will always be concurrent; or, to express the point differently, that the breach of duty causing the damages would be a very short-lived temporal event, the event including the infliction of the damages. The use of the expression "act committed", with such an assumption in mind, is understandable. If there should be a time lag between the defendant's conduct and its infliction of the plaintiff's injuries or damages there is no "act", i.e., breach of duty, until the wrongful infliction of damage and, in our view, it does no violence to either the language or the undoubted policy of the provision to read it this way.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Admittedly, the language is capable of the more restrictive interpretation which would confine "act" solely to the conduct of the defendant, isolated from its legally significant consequences. This approach was apparently adopted in Davies v. Traders Finance Corp. Ltd., supra, and was mentioned in Huyton & Roby Gas Co. v. Liverpool Corp., supra, and other cases. Nonetheless, if regard is had to previous judicial decisions, it can be seen that the great preponderance of them supports the interpretation which we prefer.

First, it should be noted that there is nothing new or unique in the language of s. 32. In Ontario this particular provision traces its lineage back to the Municipal Water-works Act, 1882 (Ont.), c. 25, s. 24, which read:

> 24. If any action or suit be brought against any person or persons for anything done in pursuance of this Act, the same shall be brought within six calendar months next after the act committed, or in case there shall be a continuation of damages, then within one year after the original cause of such action arising.

An earlier local statute, "An Act for the construction of Water Works for the Town of Peterborough", 1874 (Ont.), c. 78, s. 31, read:

> 31. If any action or suit be brought against any person or persons for anything done in pursuance of this Act, the same shall be brought within six calendar months next after the act committed, or in case there shall be a continuation of damages, then within one year after the original cause of such action arising.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Reference may also be made to "An Act to Protect Justices of the Peace in Upper Canada from Vexatious Actions", 1853 (U.C.) c. 180, s. 7, which read:

> 7. And be it enacted, That no Action shall be brought against any Justice of the Peace for any thing done by him in the execution of his Office, unless the same be commenced within Six Calendar Months next after the act complained of shall have been committed.

This, undoubtedly, was based on identical English legislation enacted in 1848, the Justices Protection Act (U.K.), c. 44, s. 8.

A great many English statutes, beginning in the 18th century, contained limitation provisions relating to actions "for anything done in pursuance of this Act" and provided that the action "shall be commenced within six calendar months after the fact committed, and not afterwards": see, for example, the Schedule to the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (U.K.), c. 61; Darby & Bosanquet, A Practical Treatise on the Statutes of Limitations in England and Ireland, 2nd ed. (1893), with Supplement (1899), pp. 577-89, and Chartres, The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (1912), pp. 142-82. Such legislation may reasonably be regarded, as indicated, as the model copied by identical or similar legislation in Ontario.

One of the earliest English cases was Roberts v. Read et al. (1812), 16 East. 215, 104 E.R. 1070. There, surveyors of highways, in the execution of their office, undermined a wall adjoining a highway. The wall fell in more than three months afterwards. An action on the case was commenced within three months of this event. The applicable statute was the Highway Act, 1773 (U.K.), c. 78, which in s. 82 provided that:

> 82. ... if any Action or Suit shall be commenced against any Person or Persons for any Thing done or acted in pursuance of this Act; then, and in every such Case, such Action or Suit shall be commenced or prosecuted within Three

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> Calendar Months after the Fact committed, and not afterwards ...

The reasons refer to s. 81 but the correct section appears to be s. 82.

The defendants contended that the "thing done or acted" was the undermining of the wall and not the falling of the wall, which was a mere consequence of such wrongful act. The whole of the judgment of Lord Ellenborough, C.J., for the Court, is as follows, at p. 217:

> It is sufficient that the action was brought within three months after the wall fell, for that is the gravamen: the consequential damage is the cause of action in this case. If this had been trespass, the action must have been brought within three months after the act of trespass complained of; but being an action on the case for the consequential damage, it could not have been brought till the specific wrong had been suffered; and that only happened within three months before the action was brought.

This judgment was followed 12 years later in Gillon v. Boddington (1824), Ry. & Mood. 161, 171 E.R. 979, which was an action against the London Dock Company which, two years before the commencement of the action, had undermined the wall of the plaintiff's wharf. The wall subsequently fell down. The action was commenced within six months of this event. The London Dock Act, 1880 (U.K.), c. 47, in s. 151 provided that no action should be commenced against any person for anything done pursuant to that Act after six calendar months next after the fact committed. To the defendant's argument based on this provision, Abbott, L.C.J., said at p. 164:

> I am of opinion that the case of Roberts v. Read is an answer in point of authority to the objection which has been taken upon the Act of Parliament, and I cannot forbear saying, that I have great pleasure in finding such a decision in the books; for it appears to me to be one in which the wisdom of the common law has been interposed to prevent the injustice which might arise from too literal an adherence to the words of an Act of Parliament.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

In a subsequent case, Nicklin et al. v. Williams (1854), 10 Ex. 259 at p. 268, 156 E.R. 440, with reference to the statutes requiring that the action be brought within a certain time "from the fact committed", Parke, B., said: "Those statutes mean, no doubt, the limitation to run from the act, that is, the cause of action." [Emphasis added.]

In Whitehouse v. Fellowes (1861), 10 C.B. (N.S.) 765, 142 E.R. 654, identical language appeared in the relevant statutory limitation provision: "within three months after the fact committed". There were several issues in the case relating to the application of the provision but it represents, at the least, a further clear affirmation of the principle that "fact committed", where damage is a required element of the cause of action in question, includes the occurrence of such damage.

The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (U.K.), c. 61, repealed public general statutory provisions of the kind referred to in the foregoing cases, and substituted therefor, in s. 1(a), a general and somewhat more elaborate provision requiring that the action be commenced "within six months next after the act, neglect, or default complained of".

With reference to the earlier statutes there seems to have been little doubt in the cases or treatises that "fact [or act]" committed meant the accrual of a complete cause of action. Chartres, The Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893 (1912), at pp. 142-3, states the law as follows:

> By "the act complained of" is, of course, denoted an act such as is capable of being complained of in a Court of law, that is, an act such as gives rise to a cause of action. Now, it may be that an act causing damage is in itself the legitimate exercise of a right, and that the damage which has resulted from it constitutes the sole ground of complaint. In such a case the damage, and not the act from which it flows, is "the act complained of," and the period of limitation will run not from the date of the act causing the damage, but from the date at which the damage itself was sustained. And as the infliction of the damage, not the causal act, is "the act complained of," it follows that in such cases every recurrence or repetition of damage at successive intervals will give rise to a fresh "act complained of," and will afford a fresh starting-point for a new limitation period.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Darby and Bosanquet, op. cit., sum up the earlier law as follows, at p. 589:

> It will be noticed that in many of the public Acts referred to above the time runs not from the accrual of the cause of action, but from the "time of the act or fact committed," and it is believed that this was the most usual expression in local and personal Acts, and hence, questions have frequently arisen whether time begins to run from the time of the committal of the act which causes the damage, or from the time when the damage happened. It is clear from the case of Whitehouse v. Fellowes 10 C.B.N.S. 765, in which most of the former cases on the subject were referred to, that for this purpose the words "from the act or fact committed," must be treated as substantially the same as "from the accrual of the cause of action, and that, if the cause of action, as laid, is the happening of the damage and not the mere doing of the act which causes the damage, the principle laid down in Bonomi v. Backhouse in the Exchequer Chamber 28 L.J.Q.B. 378, which was subsequently confirmed by the House of Lords 9 H.L. 503, and followed by the House of Lords in the Darley Main Colliery Co. v. Mitchell, 11 App. Cas. 127, will apply, and time will run, not from the doing of the act, but from the happening of the damage.

Halsbury's Laws of England, 2nd ed., vol. 8 (1936), p. 771, para. 1063, stated:

> In many of the statutes which fix a special period of limitation, such period commences from the act or fact committed; these words mean substantially the same as "from the accrual of the cause of action". Thus if the cause of action, as laid, is the happening of the damage and not the mere doing of the act which causes the damage, time will run not from the doing of the act, but from the happening of the damage.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

It may have been thought that because of the well-settled state of judicial interpretation of the language we are considering there would be no issue respecting the quite similar language in the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893. However, in Turley v. Daw (1906), 94 L.T. 216, Bray, J., at p. 218, expressed the view that "act, neglect or default" did not mean cause of action, as did Salter, J., in Freeborn v. Leeming, [1926] 1 K.B. 160 at pp. 165-6 and, apparently, Atkin, L.J., in Huyton & Roby Gas Co. v. Liverpool Corp., [1926] 1 K.B. 146 at pp. 156-7. In Huyton & Roby, Scrutton, L.J., left the point open. At p. 155 he said:

> It is not necessary to decide in the present case what is the result where no damage occurs till six months has elapsed from the act, and damage is a necessary part of the cause of action. If time runs from the act this leads to the startling result that you may lose a cause of an action before you have got it. Possibly this remarkable result might be avoided by holding that the words "neglect complained of," "default complained of," involve something which can be legally complained of, and therefore the time runs from the accruing of the cause of action, though not from the latest development of the damage; but it is not necessary so to decide in the present case.

This was a case turning on later language in the section: "... in case of a continuance of injury or damage, within six months next after the ceasing thereof".

As far as more recent legislation is concerned, s. 1(a) of the Public Authorities Protection Act, 1893, except in so far as it relates to criminal proceedings, was replaced by s. 21 of the Limitation Act, 1939 (U.K.), c. 21, which used the language "one year from the date on which the cause of action accrued". In Ontario, by 1976 (Ont.), c. 19, s. 1(1), s. 11 of the Public Authorities Protection Act was amended in the same way -- by substituting "cause of action arose" for "act, neglect or default complained of". Of course, this amendment, which seems to have been a somewhat delayed response to what was said in Davies v. Traders Finance Corp. Ltd., supra, and which, probably by inadvertence, was not made with respect to s. 32 of the Public Utilities Act, should not be construed as a declaration that the previous state of the law was different: the Interpretation Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 225, s. 17.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

With respect to Davies we would observe that, notwithstanding what was said therein, it was not a case where the cause of action was defeated by the statute before it arose. The claim was for breach of warranty of title and the cause of action arose on the sale by the Sheriff, and not on the subsequent seizure, even though the plaintiff may not have been aware of it at the time. This latter feature raises problems of a different order.

To return to the United Kingdom jurisprudence, very useful reference may be made to the majority reasons for judgment of the House of Lords in Watson v. Fram Reinforced Concrete Co. (Scotland), Ltd. and Winget, Ltd., [1960] S.C. (H.L.) 92, where the relevant part of the limitation period under consideration read "... before the expiration of three years from the date of the act, neglect or default giving rise to the action". The pursuer was injured in August of 1956 while working, for his employer, with a cement mixer which had been manufactured by the second defender and supplied by it to the employer in July of 1955. The injuries were alleged to have been caused by a defect in the manufacture of the mixer. The second defender was joined in the action in March of 1959. It pleaded the limitation period mentioned above, submitting that there could be no act, neglect, or default on its part after the machine had been sold and delivered to the pursuer's employers.

The House of Lords, by a majority, held that the three-year period ran from the date the cause of action accrued, that is, when the workman was injured, and that, accordingly, the action was not time-barred. We would refer, in particular, to the judgments of Lord Keith of Avonholm at pp. 112-3, and of Lord Denning at pp. 115-9. It may be that the words "giving rise to the action" provide additional support for the decision reached but there is still much in the reasons given to support the conclusion which we have arrived at with respect to s. 32 of the Public Utilities Act.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Having regard to the foregoing, it is our conclusion that when this action was commenced on July 6, 1973, it was commenced in time.

The position of the Public Utilities Commission as statutory agent of the City

The trial Judge rejected the submission of the Commission that it "was a mere statutory agent for the City and that as such the City and not the Commission is liable for the negligence of the Commission and its employees" [p. 150 O.R., p. 190 D.L.R.]. He relied upon the decision of the Ontario Appellate Division in Campbell Flour Mills Co. Ltd. v. City of Peterborough (1925), 57 O.L.R. 458, [1925] 4 D.L.R. 23, from which he quoted extensively, and concluded that so far as this particular commission was concerned, it did not appear that it was the statutory agent of the City, under the relevant legislation.

He then went on to hold that the common law doctrine of respondeat superior did not impose liability on the City for the negligence of the Commission. He found that the Commission was an independent authority and there was not the control vested in the City that would impose vicarious liability on the City as master or principal for the acts of its servant or agent. He therefore dismissed the action against the City with costs, but gave the plaintiffs the right to recover those costs against the Commission and Consumers. The third party proceedings by the City against the Commission were dismissed without costs.

In this Court the Commission, as already noted, raised the point that even if it were negligent, the liability would be that of the City and not of the Commission. No one in this Court asserted that the City was liable for the negligence of the Commission on the common law basis of respondeat superior, and no more need be said about it.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

However, counsel for the Commission has urged upon us, as he did at trial, that a long line of authority in Ontario has established that where a public utilities commission has been negligent in carrying out its activities, only the municipal corporation and not the public utilities commission is liable to the injured party. The City submitted that the Commission's position was wrong in law, that if it was supported by authority, the cases were wrongly decided, but that in any event, if the Commission's position was correct as a general proposition, it had no application in Peterborough. Support for the last point was to be found, the City submitted, in the Campbell Flour Mills case, supra, which was correctly decided, was binding on this Court, and had properly been followed by the trial Judge.

Alternatively, the City submitted that if it was vicariously liable for the negligence of the Commission, acting as the City's "statutory agent", the City had a right of complete indemnity from the Commission. The City was without fault of its own, and the ultimate responsibility should rest upon the actual wrongdoer, the Commission.

Counsel for Consumers stated that it was in his interest to have a finding of liability against both the City and the Commission, since he had a claim for indemnity against the City, but had one argument in support of the claim against the City that was not available against the Commission. Counsel for the plaintiffs had no submissions to make on the question of "statutory agency", saying he was not concerned with whether it was the City or the Commission who was liable for the Commission's negligence.

The earliest Ontario public utility statutes dealt with the supply of water, and were applied for by individual municipalities. They "seem to have been drafted by different persons" employed by the municipality in question: see MacDougall, Sons & Co. et al. v. Water Com'rs of City of Windsor (1901), 31 S.C.R. 326 at p. 329. The first such statute appears to be that of Toronto, passed in 1872 (c. 79), simultaneously with that of Ottawa (c. 80). In 1874 came the first Peterborough statute (c. 78), passed simultaneously with that of Windsor (c. 79): see MacDougall, supra, at pp. 331-2 (that case involved the Windsor statute).

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The Peterborough Act contained in s. 1 the same words as the Toronto Act: "by and through the agency of commissioners". Section 2 of the Act provided that: "The commissioners and their successors shall be a body corporate, under the name of 'The Water Commissioners for the Town of Peterborough ...' ". However, s. 38 provided that the Act "shall not have any force or effect until the council of the corporation of the Town of Peterborough shall pass a by-law authorizing the construction of the said water works". It is an historical fact that no such by-law was ever passed. Hence the Act never became operative.

The Toronto statute was the subject of consideration in Ridgway v. City of Toronto (1878), 28 U.C.C.P. 579. Section 1 of that statute enacted that the city "by and through the agency of commissioners" should have power to purchase, construct and manage waterworks. The commissioners and their successors were created a body corporate under the name of "The Water Works Commission for the City of Toronto". The case involved a man who, while shovelling snow off the sidewalk in front of his house, suddenly had one foot sink into the ground a few inches off the sidewalk, owing to the negligent construction of a drain to carry water away from an old reservoir, not in use. The work was done by the water commissioners. Although described as "the defendants", the city appears to have been the sole defendant. It was held liable. The case is of interest here primarily because of the following passage in the reasons of Hagarty, C.J., at p. 584:

> 2. The whole of the operations of the water commission were, in the words of the statute, the acts of the city corporation through their agency. They were merely the means through and by which the city erected the water works.

In 1882 the first general Act in this field was passed: the Municipal Water-works Act, 1882, c. 25 (earlier referred to). Section 38 of that Act provided, in part:

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> 38. The council of the city, town, or village may itself, or by its officers, exercise and enjoy the powers, rights, authorities and immunities hereby conferred upon the corporation of such municipality, or such council may, either before the commencement of the works, or at any time while they are in course of construction, or after their completion, by by-law, assented to by the electors of the municipality, provide for the election of commissioners for such purpose:
>
> (2) Upon the election of commissioners, all the powers, rights, authorities or immunities which, under this Act, might have been exercised or enjoyed by the council and the officers of the corporation acting for the corporation, shall and may be exercised by the commissioners and the officers appointed by the commissioners, and the council thenceforth during the continuance of the board of commissioners shall have no authority in respect of such works;
>
> . . . . .
>
> (4) Nothing herein contained shall be construed to divest the council of its authority with reference to the providing of moneys required in respect of such works, and the treasurer of the municipality shall, upon the written certificate of the said commissioners, pay out any moneys so provided.

The words in earlier private Acts, "by and through the agency of commissioners", do not appear in this Act, nor does it constitute the commissioners a body corporate. The Act was carried forward, without significant amendment, into R.S.O. 1887, c. 192, and became R.S.O. 1897, c. 235 (in which s. 38 became s. 40).

In 1899 the Court of Appeal decided McDougall [sic] v. Windsor Water Com'rs, 27 O.A.R. 566, already referred to. The action was in contract. The city was not sued. The water commissioners pleaded that under the statute incorporating them, they were merely agents for the City of Windsor for the purpose of managing the city's system of waterworks and that the city should be a party to the action. There were other defences raised. Osler, J.A., after quoting at length from the Act incorporating the commissioners (1874, c. 79), said at pp. 576-7:

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> The general provisions of this Act are of a somewhat similar character to those of other Acts passed about the same period for a like purpose. In some of these, e.g. the Toronto Act, 35 Vict. ch. 79 (O.), and the Peterborough Act, 37 Vict. ch. 78 (O.), the status of the commissioners as agents of the municipal corporation is more expressly declared by enacting that the municipal corporation "by and through the agency of commissioners," who are created a corporation, shall have and may exercise the powers subsequently conferred upon the commissioners and their successors.
>
> The Ottawa Act, 35 Vict. ch. 80 (O.), which says nothing about agency, seems to place the commissioners in that respect in a more independent situation, although they can rent or purchase property for the purposes of their works only with the assent of the city.
>
> I think the commissioners are to be regarded, as were those appointed under the Toronto Act, as the statutory agents of the corporation for many purposes: Ridgway v. Toronto (1878), 28 C.P. 579; Bailey v. Mayor of New York (1842), 3 Hill (N.Y.) 531. They evidently have a large discretion as to the system to be adopted, the method of managing the works, and the contracts into which they will enter for purposes of carrying them out. These contracts are intended to be entered into by them in their own corporate name, and the Act does not in terms require any prior assent thereto on the part of the city. And it seems also clear that in relation to such contracts they may sue and be sued in their own corporate name. Nevertheless inasmuch as they have no funds or property of their own which they can apply for the purposes of such a contract as that in question, they are wholly dependent therefor upon money raised or to be raised by the paramount authority, the city, for such purposes, under the borrowing powers of the latter. The city is the principal, the commissioners, the agent.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Osler, J.A., concluded that the contract sued upon was ultra vires the commissioners. Moss, J.A., likewise held that while the commissioners undoubtedly had the power to contract and be contracted with, their powers were subject to certain limitations as to the mode of raising or procuring the funds for purposes going beyond "incidental maintenance", and that the contract in question was beyond their powers. He did not discuss agency, in terms.

The case was taken to the Supreme Court of Canada; the appeal of the plaintiffs was dismissed: 31 S.C.R. 326. Gwynne, J., for the Court, said at p. 329, with reference to the judgments of the Court of Appeal, that he entirely concurred in their construction of the statute that corporations incorporated as water commissioners "act as agents of, and not as paramount to, the municipal corporation of the city". The history of such statutes is traced at pp. 329-32. At p. 337 Gwynne, J., said:

> The water commissioners corporation are not by the Act made paramount to the city corporation, nor have they any power to compel the municipal council to pass a by-law, the principle of which they may utterly disapprove of as wasteful, extravagant, ineffectual for the purpose contemplated or of an experimental character, or the principle of which had been disapproved of and rejected by the ratepayers, or for the purpose of experimenting upon suggestions of the commissioners. The statute does not place the council of the municipality in subjection to the water commissioners of the city in any such manner. I am of opinion also that the city corporation were a necessary party if not the sole necessary party to be made defendants in the present action, for if the instrument sued upon constituted a valid contract under the provisions of the Act of 1874 the question really at issue was. Were the city corporation bound by the act of their agents, the water commissioners corporation? To an action raising such an issue the city corporation was the necessary party.

It is important to recall the context in which this statement was made. Two of the three water commissioners, including the mayor of Windsor, determined to build a filter plant, although they knew the City Council had approved a settlement of certain litigation with the Town of Walkerville which involved the city moving its intake pipe beyond or above the point of discharge of the Walkerville sewage, which action would make a filter plant unnecessary. The city refused to consent to be made a party to the action of the contractor who was building the filter plant; the ratepayers had voted against a by-law to raise the money for the plant.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

At p. 334 Gwynne, J., made the suggestion that the municipal corporation should not only be a defendant but perhaps the sole defendant:

> Then the sec. 45 of 37 Vict. ch. 79 declares, as it appears to me, in clear terms, that in the exercise of the powers vested by the Act in the water commissioners incorporation, that body acts only as agents of, and as subordinate to, or concurrently with the municipal corporation in the matter of waterworks, for the whole cost of the construction and maintenance of which, as the property of the municipal corporation, they alone are liable, and therefore, as it seems to me, they should be made defendants, if not sole defendants, in every action brought to recover any sum of money made payable in respect of every valid contract for such purposes entered into by their agents the water commissioners incorporation.

(Emphasis added.) Riddell, K.C., was counsel for the plaintiff throughout. Ten years later, as a trial Judge, he was to give judgment in what became the leading case on the position of public utility commissions vis a vis the municipality to which they supplied a utility.

That case is Young v. Town of Gravenhurst (1910), 22 O.L.R. 291, affirmed with a minor variation as to damages 24 O.L.R. 467. With the rapid increase in the use of electricity, municipal corporations had been authorized in 1883 to establish local hydro-electric power commissions: see the Municipal Light and Heat Act, 1883 (Ont.), c. 21, later R.S.O. 1897, c. 234.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The Town of Gravenhurst had constituted a board of commissioners in 1904 to manage the distribution of both electric power and water. This action was brought by a young boy and his mother against the town, as sole defendant, as a result of injuries received by him through the negligent "leak" of electric power, which found its way to a light socket in the plaintiffs' home. The defendant contended that the action did not lie against the town at all; if anyone was liable, it was the commissioners.

Riddell, J., reviewed the relevant portions of what, for convenience, may be called "the water-works Act" and the "hydro-electric power Act", and said, at p. 295:

> The whole effect of sec. 40 of [the water-works Act] is to permit the council, instead of acting for the "corporation," i.e., the "body corporate" themselves, to deliver this agency to officers appointed by the council or to Commissioners. The Commissioners then become the body which acts for the corporation --and so "statutory agents."

(The phrase "statutory agents", first used by Osler, J.A., in McDougall, is here adopted by Riddell, J., and appears frequently in later cases. It appears to have no more special meaning than "agents by virtue of statute".)

Riddell, J., referred to the McDougall case and to Ridgway v. City of Toronto, supra, saying of the latter (at pp. 295-6):

> It is true that the word "agency" appears in the statute, but it is not used in the technical sense, and adds nothing to the meaning--the Act might have read "through Commissioners," and then it would have meant precisely the same thing.

At p. 296, Riddell, J., referred to Gibbs et al. v. Trustees of Liverpool Docks (1856), 1 H. & N. 439, 156 E.R. 1273; reversed 3 H. & N. 164, 157 E.R. 429; appeal dismissed sub nom. Mersey Docks & Harbour Board Trustees v. Gibbs et al. (1866), L.R. 1 H.L. 93, which had laid down that "in every case the liability of a body created by statute must be determined upon a true interpretation of that statute". He then said:

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> In all the many cases in which this case is mentioned, I do not find that any one has ever again made the suggestion that a statutory commissioner is not merely an agent.

He concluded (at p. 297) that "it is the corporation of the town which is the principal, and the Board of Commissioners but the agent".

> On appeal it was again contended for the town that the board of commissioners alone was liable. The argument was rejected. Moss, C.J.O., said at 24 O.L.R., p. 472:

> The Board of Commissioners, when constituted and elected, is a body which assumes not the ownership but the management and conduct of the works, very much in the same way as, but for the by-law, the council would, in the exercise by it of the powers of the corporation as provided by sec. 5 of the Municipal Act, 1903.
>
> The law on this point seems to be well settled so far as this Province is concerned; and it does not support the defendants' contention.

> Garrow, J.A., held that Riddell, J., had "quite properly" overruled the objection that the board of commissioners was the proper body to be sued; he paraphrased the judgment below as "holding that the Board was merely a statutory agent to carry out for the defendants objects which the Legislature had placed under the defendants' management and control" (p. 476).

> In Scott v. Hydro-Electric Com'n of City of Hamilton (1914), 7 O.W.N. 385, an action in negligence, brought against the commission alone, the jury disagreed on negligence, but Kelly, J., dismissed the action, following Young v. Town of Gravenhurst, supra, and holding that the Act constituting the Hamilton commission (the Public Utilities Act, 1913, c. 41) "does not give them a position higher or more independent than that of agent for the municipal corporation" (p. 386).

> The Public Utilities Act of 1913 consolidated the Municipal

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Water-works Act, and the Municipal Light and Heat Act and incorporated certain provisions of several related Acts. Under ss. 34(2) and 36(1) of the new Act, all public utility commissions established under the two general Acts mentioned were created corporate bodies. Previously, the particular Acts creating commissions in certain cities sometimes made the commission a body corporate, and sometimes did not. As we shall note later, the Peterborough Commission had become a body corporate in 1907, and would have been one much earlier if the 1872 legislation had been implemented by a municipal by-law.

The Public Utilities Act of 1913 has of course continued down to the present time; the section creating a public utility commission a body corporate is s. 42(1) of the present Act.

Leaving aside the Peterborough legislation and the Campbell Flour Mills case which considered it, Ontario Courts have consistently followed Young v. Town of Gravenhurst, supra. In 1932 Rose, C.J.H.C., tried the action of Stevens-Willson v. City of Chatham et al., [1933] O.R. 305, [1933] 2 D.L.R. 407. (His judgment is there reported along with that of the Court of Appeal.) There the plaintiff's factory was damaged by a fire caused by a short circuit of high-voltage electric power wires. The city's firemen were alleged to have been negligent in not putting water on the fire because they thought it was unsafe in view of the fire's electrical origin. Employees of the hydro-electric branch of the commission were alleged to have been negligent in being too slow in turning off the power. Rose, C.J.H.C., said of the commission, at p. 308 O.R., p. 409 D.L.R.:

> Then as to the Public Utilities Commission. There has been argument as to the legal position of the Commission, as to whether under the statute (R.S.O. 1927, ch. 249, sec. 33 and the following sections) and under the by-law and agreement put in as exhibits 3 and 4, the Commission is merely an agent of the municipality, and whether for an act of an employee of the Commission--an employee controlled, it is true, by the Commission--the Commission is responsible, or whether the action must be against the municipality. The matter is dealt with in Young v. Town of Gravenhurst (1910), 22 O.L.R. 291, and 24 O.L.R. 467, and in Scott v. Hydro-Electric Commission of the City of Hamilton, of which there is a note, but not a full report in (1914), 7 O.W.N. 385. It looks rather as if any action based upon negligence of persons employed by the Commission ought to be an action against the municipality and not against the Commission; but that point need not be decided if the view that I am about to state is correct.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

In the end the Chief Justice found no negligence on anyone's part.

On appeal, counsel for the commission is noted as having relied in argument on the Young and Scott cases as justifying dismissal of the action against it. Riddell, J.A., said at p. 313 O.R., p. 413 D.L.R., that it was "admitted" on the hearing, on the authority of Young, that there was no cause of action against the commission. Fisher, J.A. (dissenting on the merits), said at p. 315 O.R., p. 414 D.L.R., that on the argument, plaintiffs' counsel "abandoned" the appeal against the commission; Davis, J.A., at p. 324 O.R., p. 424 D.L.R., also said that counsel "abandoned" the appeal against the commission "recognizing, on the authority of such cases as Young v. Town of Gravenhurst (1910), 22 O.L.R. 291; 24 O.L.R. 467, that there was no cause of action against the Commission, it being merely a statutory agent of the Municipality". The only mention of the Campbell Flour Mills case was by counsel for the city, who is noted as having referred to it in support of the proposition that the city was not bound to maintain a fire department or provide it with equipment.

The plaintiffs appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada, [1934] S.C.R. 353, [1934] 3 D.L.R. 1, but only against the city. On the point now under consideration by us, Duff, C.J.C., said at p. 363 S.C.R., p. 6 D.L.R.:

> Two other questions were considered in the Court of Appeal. First, the question whether the Commission is answerable in legal proceedings for the negligence of its servants, in such a situation as that presented here, where negligence is established. It may be that--by reason of the pertinent decisions and the re-enactment, more than once, of the > pertinent legislation after the decisions were pronounced, and the acceptance of the decisions as expressing the effect of the legislation, and, consequently, as giving an authoritative guidance in the conduct of municipal affairs --it may be that, for these reasons, these decisions are not now open to review. I express no opinion on that, or on the effect of the legislation. Neither do I discuss the question whether, by force of the legislation, the Corporation is responsible for the collateral negligence of the servants of the Commission in the execution of the duties of the Commission under the by-law and the statutes. On these questions it is better, I think, to say nothing, until a case arises in which a decision on one or more of them is necessary.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Rinfret, J., even "assuming" that the city was liable for the negligence of the servants of the commission, declined to interfere with the concurrent findings of the Courts below. Lamont, J., expressed himself thus, at p. 364 S.C.R., p. 7 D.L.R.:

> The learned trial judge held that the course pursued by the officials and servants of the Utilities Commission was a reasonable one and was justified under the circumstances. He, therefore, absolved the Commission from any blame in connection with the burning of the appellants' mills. This finding was affirmed by the majority of the Court of Appeal, and I am not prepared to differ from it. As the Utilities Commission was not guilty of any negligence contributing to the appellants' loss, it is unnecessary to determine whether or not the Commission was the statutory agent of the municipality; and that question I wish to leave open for future consideration.

Crocket, J. (dissenting), said at p. 366 S.C.R., pp. 8-9 D.L.R.

> During the hearing of the plaintiffs' appeal from the trial judgment their counsel, acting upon the suggestion of the court that the Public Utilities Commission was the statutory agent of the City Corporation on the principle affirmed in

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Young v. Town of Gravenhurst and other cases and was therefore an unnecessary party to the action, abandoned their appeal against that corporation, though maintaining that the City of Chatham was liable for the negligence, if any, of the Utilities Commission. The Appeal Court accordingly considered the appeal upon that assumption and dismissed it on a division of opinion, Riddell and Davis, JJ.A., supporting the judgment of the learned trial judge, while Fisher, J.A., dissented.

Notwithstanding the abandonment in the lower Court of the case against the commission, Crocket, J., discussed the matter of "statutory agency", saying at pp. 368-9 S.C.R., pp. 10-1 D.L.R.:

> By their abandonment of their appeal against the Commission the plaintiffs have staked their whole case, in so far as it concerns the negligence which they charge against the Commission or its servants, upon the assumption that the Commission, though a separate corporation, is the agent of the municipality for the management of its light and power system, and that the present respondent, the City of Chatham, is therefore quite as fully responsible for any negligence on the part of the Commission or its servants as it is for the negligence of any other department of the civic government.
>
> This at once raises the question as to whether the Commission is in fact the statutory agent of the respondent in the sense that its negligence is the negligence of the respondent and, if so, whether it is now open to the plaintiff to impeach the finding of the learned trial judge that the Commission was guilty of no negligence in the circumstances.
>
> . . . . .
>
> The intention of the court and of the parties plainly was that the plaintiffs' case, in so far as it was based upon charges of negligence on the part of the Commission, should be dealt with in the same way as if it had been charged against the municipality as being responsible for the negligence of its statutory agent.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> Considering this branch of the case from this standpoint, the first question which naturally arises is as to whether the Commission is in fact the statutory agent of the respondent for the management of its light and power plant. As to this we think the Court of Appeal were right in holding that it was. All three of the Appeal Judges concurred in this view, though differing upon the question of negligence. It was argued by the learned counsel for the respondent that Young v. Town of Gravenhurst, on which the Appeal Court's decision was based, was not correctly decided. We think it was and that there is no substantial difference between the provisions of R.S.O., 1897, caps. 234 and 235, upon which that case was decided, and the provisions of the Public Utilities Act, R.S.O. 1914, cap. 204, in pursuance of which the Public Utilities Commission of the Corporation of the City of Chatham was constituted.

At p. 374 S.C.R., p. 16 D.L.R., Crocket, J., observed:

> I am glad therefore, convinced, as I am, that the judgment of the Appeal Court ought not to be affirmed on the question of the negligence of the Commission, that a careful comparison of the statutory provisions under which the Public Utilities Commission of the City of Chatham was constituted with those upon which Young v. Town of Gravenhurst was decided, has firmly assured me that the Appeal Court was fully justified in holding that the Commission is the statutory agent of the respondent municipality and that any negligence, of which it may be guilty, is properly chargeable against the municipality as its principal. The principle affirmed in Young v. Gravenhurst has indeed been so consistently followed by the courts of Ontario in so many other cases that it may well be said to be the established law of that province.

Less than two years later, Kerwin, J., then an Ontario trial Judge, decided Humphreys v. City of London, [1935] O.R. 91, [1935] 1 D.L.R. 300; affirmed O.R. loc. cit., p. 295, [1935] 3 D.L.R. 39. There the plaintiff's husband had been killed while working in a park owned by the City of London. By the statute 1912, c. 107, the management and control of all public parks in London had been given to the water commissioners for the City of London. The city relied upon this as relieving it from liability.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The only way counsel for the city sought to distinguish Young v. Gravenhurst and Stevens-Willson, supra, was to say that in Young v. Gravenhurst the commissioners were not a body corporate, and only became such under the Public Utilities Act of 1913. Kerwin, J., pointed out that Stevens-Willson was decided years after the change (although the point had not been there taken), and while noting that Duff, C.J.C., had left the point open in the Supreme Court, he (Kerwin, J.) could not find that any change had been made in the law, merely because the Commission had now been created a corporation. "The Commission is still the statutory agent of the municipality" (p. 95 O.R., p. 304 D.L.R.). The judgment was affirmed [1935] O.R. 295, [1935] 3 D.L.R. 39, but the point involving the commission was not taken on appeal.

Collins v. Hydro-Electric Com'n of Renfrew, [1948] O.R. 29, was a case involving a contract for the sale of lands. The defence was that a necessary consent from the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario had not been obtained. The town was not a party to the action (or the contract).

Robertson, C.J.O., said at p. 32:

> I agree with the judgment of Mr. Justice Hogg disposing of this appeal. In my opinion the appellant has misconceived the relation of the respondent to the municipal corporation. The respondent is a mere agent of the municipal corporation, exercising whatever powers it has for and on behalf of the municipality. I am aware that in some of the legislation passed in recent years the relationship has become somewhat confused, and it seems to have been considered that a hydro-electric commission established in a municipality had some independent status other than that of the agent and trustee of the municipality. In my opinion the true relationship is still the same as it was when Young v. Town of Gravenhurst

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

(1911), 24 O.L.R. 467, was decided.

Hogg, J.A., with whom Fisher, J.A., agreed, did not discuss the question of the relationship of the town to the Renfrew commission.

MacKinder and MacKinder v. City of London et al., [1953] O.R. 52, [1953] 1 D.L.R. 452, was again a case involving a park owned by the City of London, but this time both the city and the Public Utilities Commission were sued, following an accident in the park. Judson, J., at trial, followed the Humphreys case, holding the commission was the statutory agent of the city; the city was the occupier of the park through its agent. Judgment was given against the city. The action against the commission was dismissed, although the negligence was that of two of its employees.

The city appealed, and solely as a precautionary measure, the plaintiffs cross-appealed against the dismissal of the action against the commission. The Court of Appeal agreed with the trial Judge that the commission was in law the statutory agent of the city, and that any occupancy of the agent would be in law the occupancy of the city (p. 61 O.R., p. 454 D.L.R.).

The latest case to which we were referred is the judgment of Pennell, J., in G.N.J. Properties Ltd. v. Barriesim Developments Ltd.; City of Barrie Public Utilities Com'n, Third Party, [1973] 3 O.R. 614. The plaintiff was the purchaser of land from the defendant. The defendant had entered into a prior subdivision agreement with the City of Barrie. The plaintiff was charged $1,800 by the Public Utilities Commission of Barrie for the installation of underground hydro services, and sued to recover that amount from the defendant, who sought to claim over against the commission in third party proceedings. An appeal from an unsuccessful motion to strike out the third party claim came before Pennell, J. After referring to the submission that the appellant commission was the statutory agent of the City of Barrie and in consequence of that fact there was no cause of action against the commission, Pennell, J., said at p. 616:

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> Now several high authorities have held that any action based upon the negligence of persons employed by a public utilities commission in the Province of Ontario ought to be an action against the municipality and not against the commission. Of course, the present case involves an alleged breach of contract, but the cases which I have selected for mention have a peculiar value in relation to the matter now under consideration.

He then discussed the Young and the Stevens-Willson cases, reproduced the portion of the judgment of Crocket, J., in the latter case, already quoted herein, and held there was no cause of action against the commission; the City of Barrie was the principal and the commission "merely the agent".

> This line of cases, which began over a century ago, has been regarded in this Province as establishing these propositions:

(1) A public utilities commission is the statutory agent of the municipality for which it was created.
(2) Where a public utilities commission enters into a contract relating to some aspect of its operations, only the municipal corporation and not the commission may be sued on the contract.
(3) Where injury is sustained or damage suffered because of the negligence of the commission or its servants, only the municipality and not the commission may be sued by the injured party.

> Reference to Rogers, The Law of Canadian Municipal Corporations, 2nd ed. (1971), para. 259.5 at p. 1439, and to 17 C.E.D. (Ont. 2nd), p. 495, para. 24, indicates that these propositions represent the generally held view. The Supreme Court of Canada in Stevens-Willson v. City of Chatham et al., supra, expressly left open the third proposition, in the passage already quoted above from the judgment of Duff, C.J.C., and in the light of what Lamont, J., said, supra, the first proposition is probably also open in that Court.

> However, so far as this Court is concerned, the first proposition has been firmly adhered to in every case in which the subject has arisen. Even though it developed in an age when the nature and size of public utility operations bore no relationship to the complex operations of many of today's commissions, the proposition is so firmly embedded in the law of Ontario, and has been followed so consistently in the Court of Appeal, that we see no reason to depart from it.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The second proposition flows logically from the first. If a contract is made with an entity known to be acting as agent for a known principal, only the principal and not the agent can be sued on the contract. On this basis, there is no reason to question the actual results in McDougall v. Windsor Water Com'rs; Collins v. Hydro-Electric Com'n of Renfrew, or G.N.J. Properties Ltd. v. Barriesim Developments, all of which were contract cases.

It is the third proposition, relating to cases of negligence of a commission, that gives us serious difficulty. Of the cases falling into this group, the judgment of Kerwin, J., at trial in Humphreys v. City of London is not binding on this Court; the Court of Appeal did not deal with the point. The other "London park" case (MacKinder and MacKinder v. City of London) was treated as a case of occupier's liability, and the crucial issue was: who was in occupation? At trial and on appeal the City of London was held to be in occupation, through its agent, the public utilities commission; the city had turned over to the commission the occupation and management of the park. The park was not a public utility, a fact which doubtless strengthened the argument that the commission was not performing a function independent of the city but was its designated agent.

This leaves for consideration four of the cases already discussed: Ridgway v. Toronto; Young v. Town of Gravenhurst; Scott v. Hydro-Electric Com'n of City of Hamilton, and the Stevens-Willson case. Of these, the Scott case is not binding on us. In none of the four cases does the argument appear to have been made that at common law, a plaintiff injured by the negligence of an agent acting in the course of his duties can sue the principal or the agent or both. We accept the holding of these cases that the municipality can be successfully sued for the negligence of its "statutory agent", the public utilities commission, but we are not prepared to perpetuate the alleged corollary, that only the municipality can be held liable. Because the common law principle that both the principal and his negligent agent can be sued does not appear to have been considered, we regard these four judgments, so far as they hold that only the principal, the municipality, can be held liable, as having been delivered per incuriam.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The common law principle that both the negligent agent and his principal are liable is discussed in 25 Hals., 3rd ed., p. 546, para. 1030; Bowstead on Agency, 13th ed. (1968), p. 305, and Jones v. Manchester Corp. et al., [1952] 2 Q.B. 852 at pp. 868-71. Until the U.K. legislation of 1935 (the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 (U.K.), c. 30), the principal and his agent were regarded in the United Kingdom as joint tortfeasors in some circumstances; that Act permitted contribution between joint tortfeasors. We will revert to this aspect later in these reasons.

Mr. Britnell, for the City of Peterborough, submitted that the law applicable to Peterborough and its public utilities commission is different from the law applicable in other municipalities, because of what has been termed "the peculiar legislation relating to Peterborough".

The submission is founded upon Campbell Flour Mills Co. Ltd. v. City of Peterborough (1925), 57 O.L.R. 458, [1925] 4 D.L.R. 23, a unanimous judgment of the Appellate Division, comprising the five Judges of the First Divisional Court. The argument is not reported save for a listing of the statutes and cases referred to. The statutes mentioned include the Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1914, c. 192, s. 248; the Public Utilities Act, R.S.O. 1914, c. 204, ss. 26-45; the Power Commission Act, R.S.O. 1914, c. 39, ss. 18-24; "An Act respecting the City of Peterborough", 1907, c. 82, ss. 1, 2 and 6, and two references respecting public inquiries. The cases include Young v. Town of Gravenhurst, supra, and Scott v. Hydro-Electric Com'n of City of Hamilton, supra, and several cases on public inquiries.

The case involved the power of the Council of the City of Peterborough to initiate an inquiry before the County Court

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Judge under s. 248 of the Municipal Act into the hydro bills rendered to the plaintiff by the Public Utilities Commission of Peterborough for the period March, 1919 to December, 1921. An alderman who was himself a miller had raised the matter before the Municipal Council and had successfully pressed for a judicial inquiry.

This action was then launched claiming an injunction to restrain the city and the Judge from proceeding with the inquiry. The commission was also a defendant. Middleton, J.A., sitting as a High Court Judge, granted the injunction.

Section 248 of the Municipal Act authorized a municipal council to request the Judge to "investigate any matter relating to a supposed malfeasance or breach of trust ... or to inquire into or concerning any matter connected with the good government of the municipality or the conduct of any part of its public business". The argument for the plaintiff, put simply, was that the City of Peterborough had handed over to the Public Utilities Commission the matter of the distribution of hydro-electric power in Peterborough, including the billing, and that this subject had ceased to be part of the city's public business. The Appellate Division agreed with this submission and dismissed the appeal.

Hodgins, J.A., for the Court, put what may be termed the broad basis for its decision in these words (pp. 465-6 O.L.R., pp. 28-9 D.L.R.):

> It is urged that, as the Corporation of Peterborough is by statute entitled to any surplus resulting from the operations of the business managed and controlled by the Water Commissioners of Peterborough, it follows naturally that the business must be that of the corporation and so within the section, but it is difficult to regard that fact as an exact test in this matter, for two reasons. It ignores the object of setting up an authority, different from the council, which, under the statute, represents the people of the municipality, which authority is elected by and is responsible to the same constituency, to deal with this particular enterprise. It must be clear to every one that the Legislature has from time to time vested in independently elected or appointed bodies various parts of what was originally the business of the municipality, and has specially favoured in that respect the segregation of what are called public utilities. In particular the management and control of electrical energy has generally been placed in the hands of local commissions on account of its technical character. And this has been done to establish contact between these bodies and the Ontario Power Commission, so that the production and distribution of power may be kept up to a proper and scientific standard, a thing hardly possible if they were managed as only one of many municipal activities. But another reason is that the argument is manifestly too wide in its scope, for nothing in which the inhabitants of the municipality can be said to be pecuniarily or indirectly interested or concerned as affecting their good or welfare could then be excluded. It would lead to unexpected results if the passing of a resolution by the council should be taken to authorise an inquiry merely because the council therein asserted that its interests were involved.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

It is when Hodgins, J.A., analyzed the statutes involved, and drew certain conclusions from that analysis that problems emerged and remain. He begins (at p. 467 O.L.R., p. 30 D.L.R.) by quoting s. 40(2) of the Municipal Waterworks Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 235 (the italics are his):

> "Upon the election of commissioners, all the powers, rights, authorities, or immunities which, under this Act, might have been exercised or enjoyed by the council and the officers of the corporation acting for the corporation, shall and may be exercised by the commissioners and the officers appointed by the commissioners, and the council thenceforth during the continuance of the Board of Commissioners shall have no authority in respect of such works."

Reference is next made to the 1906 statute, "An Act to provide for the Transmission of Electrical Power to Municipalities, 1906, c. 15, whereby the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario ("H.E.P.C.") was constituted, and municipalities were empowered to contract with it for a supply of electrical power for themselves and the inhabitants of the municipality.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Next is mentioned the 1907 Act, c. 82, "An Act respecting the City of Peterborough," upon which counsel for the city laid great stress in the argument before us. Hodgins, J.A., noted that by this Act the city obtained power to purchase the plant and business of the Peterborough Light and Power Company, subject to the approval of the agreement by H.E.P.C., and to develop and sell electric energy or to receive, rent or lease it, subject to such conditions as to rates, etc., as H.E.P.C. prescribed. He noted that the Water Commissioners of Peterborough were constituted a body corporate by s. 6 of this Act, that the management, control and operation of "the business" was vested in them, and "they were thenceforth to have vested in them all the rights, powers, authorities, immunities and duties conferred upon a municipal council entering into a contract with [H.E.P.C.] under 6 Edw. VII, ch. 15" (p. 468 O.L.R., p. 31 D.L.R., emphasis by Hodgins, J.A.).

Hodgins, J.A., referred to s. 3 of the 1907 Act making rates charged subject to regulations of H.E.P.C. and giving H.E.P.C. power to examine the books of the water commissioners and examine their rates. He referred to a contract entered into in 1913 between the city and H.E.P.C. for the exclusive supply of power by H.E.P.C. to the city for 30 years. This agreement, he noted, was confirmed by the Power Commission Act, 1913, c. 12, s. 5 (along with a considerable number of similar agreements).

The next portion of his judgment must be quoted in full (commencing at p. 468 O.L.R., p. 31 D.L.R.):

> By (1914) 4 Geo. V. ch. 87, an Act respecting the City of Peterborough, which recites the statute of 1907, the Peterborough Water Commissioners are declared to be a Public Utilities Commission under R.S.O. 1914, ch. 204, and are to continue, as the statute states, "to be a body corporate, and all special or general authority, powers and duties conferred or imposed by any Act now in force upon the Peterborough Water Commissioners or conferred or imposed by the Public Utilities Act on a Public Utilities Commission and the commissioners thereof are hereby conferred and imposed upon the Peterborough Utilities Commission and the commissioners thereof and the provisions of any Act now in force affecting the Peterborough Water Commissioners, together with the provisions of the Public Utilities Act in so far as they are applicable to and not inconsistent with any such Act, shall apply to the said Peterborough Utilities Commission and the commissioners thereof."

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The authority, powers, and duties conferred on a Public Utilities Commission by the Public Utilities Act, R.S.O. 1914, ch. 204, are those of control and management, and, when a contract is made by the corporation with the Hydro-Electric Power Commission, a Public Utilities Commission is required to be established for that purpose. Section 35 provides that after the establishment of such a commission its powers, rights, etc., shall be exercised by the commission and not by the council. By this statute authority was given to take over the Peterborough Light and Power Company.

It was argued that secs. 8, 9, and 10 of the Consolidated Municipal Act, 1922, 12 & 13 Geo. V. ch. 72, enlarged the meaning of the words "part of its public business." These sections make the "inhabitants" a body corporate, under the name of "The Corporation of the City of Peterborough," and provide that the powers of a municipal corporation shall be exercised by its council. But these sections in no way, in my opinion, derogate from the devolution upon the Water Commissioners of Peterborough of the authority to manage and direct the business entrusted to them as a statutory corporation by the statute of 1907, and a Public Utilities Commission, under the statute R.S.O. 1914, ch. 204. These were formerly conferred upon the municipal council, whose authority was by the statute of 1897 and by that of 1914 excluded while the Board of Commissioners continued.

To hold otherwise would be to beg the question, because, while the Corporation of the City of Peterborough represents the inhabitants, it does so only so far as the Legislature consents to the business of those inhabitants being so represented, and not where they are, as to the supply and distribution of electrical energy, represented directly, by force of special legislation, by the Public Utilities Commission. There is no power, save that of the Legislature, to divert from the Water Commission of Peterborough the power and authority given to it by the legislation I have outlined. It is for this reason that I do not think Young v. Town of Gravenhurst, 24 O.L.R. 467, is in point. Under the peculiar legislation relating to Peterborough, which I have set out, the Water Commission are not merely the servants and agents of the Corporation, as was the case there. They are constituted an independent authority, and, while they exist, the Corporation of Peterborough is debarred from exercising the powers, etc., entrusted to them.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The conclusion to which I feel bound to arrive is that the matter sought to be investigated under the council's resolution is no "part of its public business," but is solely that of the Water Commission of Peterborough as a Public Utilities Commission.

In that view the injunction was properly granted and the appeal must be dismissed with costs.

With the greatest respect, we are unable to agree with the suggested distinction between Young v. Town of Gravenhurst, supra, and the Campbell Flour Mills case. Statutory provisions stating that upon the creation of water commissioners (incorporated or unincorporated) for a municipality, or of a public utilities commission, all of the powers of management and control of the utility in question should thereafter be in the commissioners or commission, and not in the council of the municipality, had been not unusual since 1872. Reference may be made to the first Toronto Act, 1871-72, c. 79, s. 25, and the Ottawa Act, 1871-72, c. 80, s. 25, each of which provided that the commissioners "shall have the full, entire and exclusive possession, control and management of the said lands and water works and all things appertaining thereto"; and to the Windsor Act, 1874, c. 79, s. 1 of which prescribed that the waterworks already constructed or to be constructed "shall be placed under the management of commissioners, and their successors ... who shall have power to design, construct, build, purchase, improve, alter, hold, and generally maintain, manage and conduct water works, and all buildings, matters, machinery and appliances therewith connected or necessary thereto, in the Town of Windsor ...". Section 45 of the Windsor Act gave the Town of Windsor the option of itself operating the water works; it read:

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> 45. Notwithstanding the provisions of this Act, authorizing the working, management and extension of the water works of the said Town of Windsor through the agency of commissioners, if the Corporation of the town of Windsor shall desire to retain the working and management in its own hands, then all the powers, rights, authorities, duties and liabilities by this Act given to, granted and vested in the said commissioners shall be vested in the said Corporation, and the said Corporation shall be vested with all the powers, privileges and immunities necessary for carrying into effect the intentions and objects of this Act.

The Municipal Waterworks Act, R.S.O. 1897, c. 235, s. 40(2), quoted by Hodgins, J.A., supra, was of general application. So was the H.E.P.C. Act, 1906, c. 15. While Hodgins, J.A., does not mention the Act, the Municipal Light and Heat Act of 1883 was likewise of general application. As already indicated, that statute became merged in the first Public Utilities Act of 1913. In the following year the Peterborough Water Commissioners were declared a public utilities commission, by a special Act, referred to by Hodgins, J.A. Hodgins, J.A., italicized the words of the 1914 special Act which preserved in the Peterborough Public Utilities Commission all special statutory powers and duties conferred on the Peterborough water commissioners "by any Act now in force".

There were no special powers or duties in prior statutes which made peculiar to Peterborough the basic characteristics of water commissioners or public utility commissions, which were that the land and works were owned by the municipality, the management, control and maintenance, and the collection of rates, was the function of the commission, and surplus revenue was to be turned back to the municipality.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The Peterborough P.U.C. is deemed to be a commission established under Part III of the Public Utilities Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 390, by virtue of s. 39 of that Act. It is at least arguable that as such, the P.U.C.'s existence may be terminated, with the assent of the electors, under s. 45 of the Act, in the same way as any commission established by by-law.

In our respectful view, in so far as Campbell Flour Mills may be said to hold that the legal relationship between the City and the P.U.C. is different in Peterborough from the situation in other municipalities, the decision is either obiter or wrong.

With the actual decision we have no quarrel. The H.E.P.C. Act, coupled with s. 3 of the 1907 Peterborough Act, gave H.E.P.C. express power to examine the books and the rates of the commissioners. In this sense, the examination of rates charged to a particular user of power had been given by statute to H.E.P.C., and such rates were not to be examined elsewhere under the guise of investigating "the business of the city".

If Campbell Flour Mills Co. Ltd. v. City of Peterborough, supra, on that part of its holding that "it's different in Peterborough" was wrongly decided, should we follow it anyway, as we have decided to do with the first proposition established by the "statutory agency" cases? In connection with Campbell Flour Mills, the situation differs factually in that it is not simply part of a long line of consistent cases. Until the instant case, it appears to have been cited only once on the question of the relationship of a public utility to the municipality. That single instance was in T.T.C. v. Metro. Toronto, [1960] O.R. 487, where the T.T.C. sought to enjoin the Metropolitan Corporation from carrying out an inquiry by a County Court Judge of certain expenditures of the T.T.C. Counsel for the T.T.C. relied on Campbell Flour Mills and Re City of Berlin and County Judge of County of Waterloo (1914), 33 O.L.R. 73, 22 D.L.R. 296. Thompson, J., pointed out that in 1927 the Legislature had amended s. 248 of the Municipal Act to include within the ambit of inquiry the activities of local boards and commissions, and observed (at p. 492) that since the amendment of 1927 the Campbell Flour Mills case and another case relied on had little or no application. Obviously, on that view of the law, Thompson, J., had no occasion to consider the correctness of Campbell Flour Mills, even if it had been open to him to do so. He said, at p. 492:

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> In the Berlin case the inquiry sought was with respect to matters under the administrative jurisdiction of a police commission. It was there held that the inquiry required was not within the scope of the section as it related to matters solely within the paramount, statutory, jurisdiction of the police commission, an independent statutory body, and not to matters within the jurisdiction of the municipal council. It was said, in effect, that although the term good government of the municipality embraced a very wide ambit, some limitation must be placed upon it and that it was limited to matters within the jurisdiction of the council.
>
> Likewise, in the Peterborough case, and for similar reasons, it was held that such an inquiry did not lie with respect to matters within the statutory jurisdiction of a public utility commission.
>
> The decisions in these cases proceed upon the basis that the powers of government relating to the questions involved were the powers of the particular board or commission concerned and not of the municipality, and that such questions, as matters of business, public or otherwise, related exclusively to the business of such independent body and not to the business of the council.
>
> In my view, since the amendment of 1927, already referred to, these cases have little or no application; and it would appear that it was enacted to overcome their effect.

Thus we are not dealing with a case which has been relied on and followed in other cases, on the question of statutory agency between the City and the Commission, nor one on the faith of which citizens have "ordered their affairs". We therefore propose not to follow it.

While this Court will generally follow one of its own decisions in a civil case, the Court has occasionally departed from this long-standing practice. In Re Gillis; Township of Tisdale v. County of York, [1950] O.W.N. 21, the Court of Appeal on November 16, 1949, gave judgment in which, inter alia, the Court expressed its views upon s. 10 of the Children's Protection Act, R.S.O. 1937, c. 312. After the reasons for judgment had been handed out, counsel for one of the parties drew to the attention of the Court its decision in Re Wright, [1938] O.R. 117, [1938] 2 D.L.R. 52, 69 C.C.C. 397. Robertson, C.J.O., in additional reasons given on December 12, 1949, said at p. 23:

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> While we had not that case before us in considering our judgment, the provisions of s. 10 of The Children's Protection Act have been frequently considered by members of this Court, and with every respect to the opinion expressed in Re Wright, we are not able to read the provisions of subs. 4 of s. 10 as they were interpreted in that case. In our opinion the time referred to in the first line of subs. 4 is the time of residence of the child in subs. 2, and of the mother in subs. 3, and has no relation to the period of five years referred to in the latter part of subs. 3. Added to this, the concluding clause of subs. 4, in our opinion, supports this view. We, therefore, deem it unnecessary either to change our judgment or to call for further argument.

In our view, the ratio of the Campbell Flour Mills case should be confined strictly to the point actually decided, namely, that the City of Peterborough had no power to initiate a judicial inquiry into the rates for hydro-electric power charged to a particular customer of the Peterborough Public Utilities Commission. It should not be regarded as authority for the proposition that while public utilities commissions elsewhere are statutory agents for the municipality which they serve, and if the commission is negligent, both the municipality and the commission are liable, in Peterborough the commission operates independently of the city and is not its statutory agent.

The trial Judge should, therefore, have held that the City was vicariously liable for the negligence of the Commission, and the Commission was also liable to the plaintiff. As between the City and the Commission on the one hand and Consumers on the other, the City and the Commission are responsible for 75% of the judgment and costs of the plaintiffs and Consumers for 25% with contribution and indemnity between them on that basis, subject to the City's separate rights to indemnity, which we now discuss.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The City's claims for indemnity

The City has asserted, in third party proceedings, that if it is found liable to the plaintiffs, it is entitled to be indemnified by Consumers, and on different grounds, by the Commission. The City did not formally cross-appeal the dismissal of its third party claim against the Commission and Consumers but the issue was clearly raised in its statement and full argument was heard without objection. We are, accordingly, prepared to grant leave to the City to file such a notice of cross-appeal nunc pro tunc. The City's claim against Consumers is based on the following provision of the franchise agreement between the City and Consumers:

> 3. The Company [Consumers] shall at all times wholly indemnify the City from and against all loss, damage and injury and expense to which the City may be put by reason of any damage or injury to persons or property caused by the construction, repair, maintenance or operation by the Company of its works in the said City as well as against any damage or injury resulting from the imprudence, neglect or want of skill of the employees or agents of the Company in connection with the construction, repair, maintenance or operation by the Company of any of its works in the City unless the cause of such loss, costs, damage, injury or expense can be traced elsewhere.

The proper interpretation of cl. 3, in the context of the whole agreement, is that it is intended to indemnify the City against loss occasioned by acts of Consumers or of those for whom Consumers may be responsible in law.

Furthermore, this clause does not state in clear and unambiguous language that Consumers is to indemnify the City against the results of the City's own negligence or of negligence for which it is responsible in law. Without such clear language, an indemnity clause ought not to be construed as conferring a right of indemnity for loss occasioned by one's own negligence (the principle is stated early in these reasons, along with two cases supporting it: Canada Steamship Lines Ltd. v. The King, [1952] A.C. 192, [1952] 2 D.L.R. 786, 5 W.W.R. (N.S.) 609, and Smith et al. v. South Wales Switchgear Ltd., [1978] 1 All E.R. 18). We think the same rule applies to negligence of another for the results of which one is in law responsible.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The City's appeal as to its claim for indemnity against Consumers in the third party proceedings instituted by the City is, therefore, dismissed.

The City's claim against the Commission, made in the same third party proceedings, rests on the common law right of a principal who is found vicariously liable to a plaintiff by reason of the negligence of his agent in the performance of his authorized duties to be indemnified by the agent. It is not a right which has been pursued frequently, but its existence is clear. It is an exception to the common law rule that there could be no contribution between joint tortfeasors. The principal asserting the right must himself have been without fault in the occurrence which caused the damage. No one in this case has alleged any positive fault on the part of the City. Its liability is purely vicarious. Hence all the necessary ingredients of a good claim for indemnity are present.

The underlying principle is not confined to cases of agency; it has been applied even where there are no contractual relations at all between the wrongdoer and a person who is vicariously liable for the damages occasioned by the wrongful act. Thus, in McFee v. Joss (1925), 56 O.L.R. 578, [1925] 2 D.L.R. 1059, McFee, the owner of a motor vehicle, had been held liable under the Highway Traffic Act to a person injured by the negligence of Robert Joss, to whom McFee had rented a car for use by Robert Joss in his father's business. McFee sued Robert Joss and his father for indemnity for the damages and costs assessed against him, plus his own costs of his unsuccessful defence. Ferguson, J.A., for the Court said, at p. 584 O.L.R., p. 1064 D.L.R.:

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> ... as I read the cases, an implied contract of indemnity arises in favour of a person who, without fault on his part, is exposed to liability and compelled to pay damages on account of the negligence or tortious act of another, provided the parties were not joint tort-feasors in such a sense as to prevent recovery; that is, where the act done is not clearly illegal in itself. The right of indemnity is based upon the principle that every one is responsible for his own negligence, and if another is, by a judgment of a court, compelled to pay damages which ought to have been paid by the wrongdoer, such damages may be recovered from the wrongdoer. I am also of opinion that such right of indemnity exists independently of the statute [the Highway Traffic Act], and whether or not contractual relations exist between the parties, and whether or not the negligent person owed the other a special or particular duty not to be negligent.

The case was considered and its principle adopted by Morand, J., in Custom Ceilings Inc. v. S.W. Fleming & Co. Ltd. et al., [1970] 3 O.R. 17, 12 D.L.R. (3d) 209.

In Lister v. Romford Ice & Cold Storage Co. Ltd., [1957] A.C. 555, the House of Lords unanimously held that a servant owes a duty to his master to carry out his work with reasonable care, and if damages are recovered against the master by a person injured by the servant's negligence, the master can recover from the servant the damages and costs the master has been obliged to pay. The cause of action was characterized as breach of an implied term of the contract between the master and the servant. (The House divided three to two on the question whether there was a duty on the master fo effect insurance protecting his servant (a lorry driver) and whether, if there was, this afforded the servant a defence to the master's action, which was, in fact, brought by the master's insurers.)

The author of Powell, The Law of Agency, 2nd ed. (1961), states at p. 322, that "as a result of the decision in [the Lister case] an agent would seem to be liable to indemnify his principal against damages and costs which the principal has had to pay to a third party by reason of a tort committed by the agent against that third party".

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Most of the English cases have arisen in situations where the master was seeking contribution from his servant whose negligence had rendered the master vicariously liable. In Ryan v. Fildes et al., [1938] 3 All E.R. 517, Tucker, J., in discussing the argument that the Law Reform (Married Women and Tortfeasors) Act, 1935 provided for contribution but not indemnity among joint tortfeasors, noted (at p. 525) that it was immaterial that the master "might have had" a right of indemnity at common law. In Jones v. Manchester Corp. et al., [1952] 2 Q.B. 852, Singleton, L.J., at p. 865, quoted with apparent approval this passage from Salmond on the Law of Torts, 10th ed. (1945), p. 78:

> "It would seem clear on principle that in all cases of true vicarious liability the person held vicariously liable for the tort of another should have a right of indemnity as against that other. Thus, a master who has paid for the negligence of his servant should be able to sue that servant for indemnity."

Denning, L.J., while acknowledging that the existence of the right "has often been assumed to be the law" (p. 868), was clearly sceptical of the existence of such a right, apart from express contract, and said that he knew of no case in which it had actually been decided. As appears from his judgment in Morris v. Ford Motor Co. Ltd., [1973] Q.B. 792, his main concern was that an insured employer might sue (and recover from) an uninsured employee.

The existence of the right was made clear in the Lister case, supra, and Salmond in the 15th edition (1969), at p. 648, treats the matter as settled. See also Atiyah, Vicarious Liability in the Law of Torts (1967), c. 38; Morris v. Ford Motor Co. Ltd., supra; Davenport v. Com'r for Railways et al. (1953), 53 S.R. (N.S.W.) 552, per Owen, J., at pp. 556-7 and Herron, J., at pp. 559-60; Winfield and Jolowicz on Tort, 10th

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

ed. (1975), at pp. 532-4; Fridman, The Law of Agency, 3rd ed. (1971), at p. 250; Finnegan v. Riley, [1939] 4 D.L.R. 434 (Ont. C.A.), and Prosser, Handbook of the Law of Torts, 4th ed. (1971), at p. 311.

We therefore hold that the City is entitled to judgment against the Commission in the third party proceedings for the amount the City is required to pay to the plaintiffs by way of damages and costs, together with the City's costs of its defence in the main action (see McFee v. Joss, supra, at p. 586 O.L.R., p. 1066 D.L.R.), and its costs of the third party proceedings. The City is also entitled to recover against the Commission that portion of its costs of the appeal in the third party proceedings as if the successful portion of its appeal had taken one-half day. This allocation of its costs will reflect adequately the fact that the City failed in its attempts to overcome the line of cases on statutory agency and to persuade us that the law in Peterborough was different from that applicable elsewhere.

Liability of the City based on Rylands v. Fletcher

As mentioned earlier, the plaintiffs sought to have liability imposed upon the City based on the principle of Rylands v. Fletcher (1868), L.R. 3 H.L. 330, affirming L.R. 1 Ex. 265. The plaintiffs did not serve a notice of cross-appeal on this issue. We think that such a notice should have been served for the matter to be properly before us. The City was before the Court as a respondent with respect to the issue of its liability to the plaintiffs on the Commission's appeal and counsel for the City was prepared to argue the issue on the merits. We, accordingly, heard such argument from both sides as though the requisite notice had been served.

Without repeating all the details of the factual background, the essential facts are that the pipe at the point of fracture was on City property within the limits of the street allowance and it was owned by Consumers, having, as already stated, been sold to it by the City as part of an underground system in 1959. It was in that year that the City granted to Consumers the franchise to supply natural gas.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The oft-quoted statement of the principle in question is that of Blackburn, J., at p. 279 of (1866), L.R. 1 Ex. 265:

> We think that the true rule of law is, that the person who for his own purposes brings on his lands and collects and keeps there anything likely to do mischief if it escapes, must keep it in at his peril, and, if he does not do so, is prima facie answerable for all the damage which is the natural consequence of its escape.

It may be noted at the outset that the facts of the present case, as far as the City is concerned, do not come within a literal application of this language. The City did not (a) bring the gas into its land (b) for its purposes. However, the plaintiffs' argument is, essentially, that the City is liable because it permitted Consumers to bring the gas onto its lands. On the issue raised several cases and textual statements were cited to us or otherwise came to our attention. Those apparently helpful to the plaintiffs are: Humphries v. Cousins (1877), 2 C.P.D. 239; Aikman v. Geo Mills & Co. Ltd. et al., [1934] O.R. 597; Aldridge and O'Brien v. Van Patter et al., [1952] O.R. 595, [1952] 4 D.L.R. 93, and Winfield and Jolowicz on Tort, 10th ed. (1975), at p. 375. Those favouring the City are: Whitmores (Edenbridge), Ltd. v. Stanford, [1909] 1 Ch. 427 at p. 438; St. Anne's Well Brewery Co. v. Roberts et al. (1928), 140 L.T. 1 at pp. 5, 6 and 9; 28 Hals., 3rd ed., p. 158, para. 222, and Charlesworth on Negligence, 5th ed. (1971), at pp. 279-81. In our view, none of the foregoing compels a particular result on the facts of this case.

For a combination of reasons we think that it is not appropriate that the Rylands v. Fletcher principle be applicable to the City. The gas distribution enterprise was entirely that of Consumers, with all of its attendant benefits and risks. Consumers had the ownership not only of the gas but also, together with the control and care thereof, of the pipe from which the gas could escape. In light of these considerations we do not think that the mere fact that the City has permitted Consumers to assume ownership of a chattel on its lands, for the purposes of Consumers, should entail strict liability on the part of the City. Cases in which an owner leases land for a hazardous purpose, or for a purpose that inevitably has to amount to a nuisance, may be distinguished on the ground that in such cases it can be said that the owner, in a sense, shares in the use of the land for such purpose.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Related to the foregoing is the fact that the City is acting pursuant to statutory powers in granting the franchise. As far as the current legislation is concerned reference may be made to the Municipal Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 284, s. 354(1), para. 102, and various provisions in the Municipal Franchises Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 289. In the latter statute particular reference may be made to the powers of the Ontario Energy Board respecting the right to supply gas in municipalities (s. 8) and to approve gas franchise by-laws (s. 9). It must be assumed that all of such powers are conferred to be exercised in the public interest. Thus it cannot be said that the Consumers pipe runs through City land merely because the City has permitted it to do so and that the public interest has not been taken into account in the granting of the right to Consumers to supply gas in the City. These considerations should be taken into account in considering the appropriateness of the City being strictly liable for damages resulting from the activities of Consumers.

In the result, then, we see no merit in this particular claim advanced by the plaintiffs.

Damages

We turn now to the important issue of damages. As a result of the explosion and the fire which followed, Sandra Fenn, who was then 24 years of age, was horribly injured. Her children were killed; Candice Fenn, a sister-in-law, was injured; Gerard Fenn, Sandra's husband, returned home to find his house destroyed, his children dead and his wife being loaded into an ambulance, and as a result he suffered severe nervous shock. The learned trial Judge in his reasons for judgment described the injuries to Sandra Fenn and the effect of the explosion on Gerard Fenn. It is unnecessary to review again the injuries, the treatment and the result of the injuries in the same detail. It will be sufficient for the purposes of this appeal simply to quote and adopt a portion of the trial Judge's reasons as follows [14 O.R. (2d) 137 at pp. 158-60, 73 D.L.R. (3d) 177 at pp. 198-200]:

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

> Following the explosion Mrs. Fenn was pinned to the floor by rubble. Her baby Gregory had been in her arms and was beside her. She was conscious until her rescue. She watched the fire spread. Her legs were consumed by fire and her body and hands terribly burned. She heard her children crying. When she was rescued the burns to her legs were so severe that her feet fell off. When admitted to hospital she was in a tremendous amount of pain, in deep shock and crying out about her children. What was left of her legs below the knees was badly burned and charred and consisted of little more than bits of completely burned flesh clinging to exposed bones. Her entire back was deeply burned and charred. Her upper thighs and buttocks were deeply burned, and also her upper arms and fingers. The little fingers were completely charred and mummified. She was taken to the operating-room where both ler legs were amputated just above the knee. Her burns were cleaned up and dressed, she was placed face down on a Stryker frame and transferred to the intensive care unit. Further surgery was performed on January 15th, when both fifth fingers were amputated and further surgery was performed on both hands. Mrs. Fenn was subjected to a number of further operations and skin grafts and on March 8, 1973, obstruction of an airway was caused as a result of a malfunctioning intravenous infusion. This necessitated an emergency tracheotomy.
>
> I do not think it is necessary to describe in detail the treatment that Sandra Fenn received. She suffered excruciating pain for several months. She became very depressed and on one occasion, more than a year following the accident, attempted suicide. She is still easily depressed. She suffers from continuing nightmares. She is permanently incapacitated.
>
> Mrs. Fenn's present condition was described by Dr. Hoyle Campbell, a well recognized plastic surgeon, who was called as a witness at trial. Her whole back has been grafted, together with her right arm and elbow. She still has an unstable scar on her right elbow. The right medial aspect of her right wrist and the flexor surface of the right palm and wrist have been grafted but there is contracture present which will be permanent unless further work is done. There is a fusion of the proximal intraphalangeal joints of the third and the fifth digits on the right hand and the fifth has been transposed to the fourth position. This hand does work and she can grasp with it, although inefficiently. The thumb is drawn by the contracture into the palm and while some extension is possible, the extensor mechanism is working at a considerable disadvantage. The posterior aspect of the left arm has been grafted and there is some scar drag, particularly noticed when she trys to flex her elbow fully. There is gross scarring in the dorsum of the wrist, with loss of the fourth digit at the proximal joint. The legs have been amputated through the lower thighs and healing is complete although there is extensive scarring on the posterior aspect of the stumps, extending up the posterior thighs which pull it very taut when she flexes her hips, almost to the point of tearing. She has undergone so many operations and so much pain that the thought of further reconstructive surgery is abhorrent to her.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Following Mrs. Fenn's release from hospital in the autumn of 1972, she moved into an apartment with her husband. It was impossible for either of them to adjust to the changed circumstances. Mr. Fenn was terribly depressed and eventually attempted suicide with the result that he was admitted to hospital. No one was left to care for Mrs. Fenn and she was also admitted to hospital. After counselling, it was agreed that it would be in the best interests of both Mr. and Mrs. Fenn if they separated. They have lived separate and apart ever since.

. . . . .

Attempts have been made in the past to mobilize Mrs. Fenn on artificial limbs. These attempts have failed.

Damages for the injury to Sandra Fenn were assessed at

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

$712,417.56. Damages under the Fatal Accidents Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 164 (repealed by s. 79 of the Family Law Reform Act, 1978 (Ont.), c. 2), for the deaths of the three Fenn children were assessed at $5,000. Damages were also assessed for the claim of Gerard Fenn and Candice Fenn, but these amounts are not relevant to this appeal.

The assessments were made by a trial Judge of great experience in cases of personal injury and the appeals as originally launched did not involve the issue of damages. However, following judgments of the Supreme Court of Canada in Andrews et al. v. Grand & Toy Alberta Ltd. et al., [1978] 2 S.C.R. 229, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 452, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 577, Thornton et al. v. Board of School Trustees of School District No. 57 (Prince George) et al., [1978] 2 S.C.R. 267, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 480, [1978] 1 W.W.R. 607, and Arnold et al. v. Teno et al., [1978] 2 S.C.R. 287, 83 D.L.R. (3d) 609, 19 N.R. 1, the defendants applied for and received leave to enlarge their appeals to include appeals against the assessment of damages for Sandra Fenn. These appeals in turn led to a cross-appeal by Sandra Fenn respecting her damages and the assessment under the Fatal Accidents Act for the death of her children.

Sandra Fenn's damages were assessed as follows:

1. General damages including future loss of income $250,000.00

2. Cost of the purchase of a specially equipped vehicle 9,000.00

3. Out-of-pocket expenses excluding that portion apportioned to OHIP 15,026.95

4. Present value of future economic loss 351,354.63

5. Cost of past insured services apportioned to OHIP 37,035.98

6. Estimated future cost of insured services apportioned in favour of OHIP 50,000.00

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

$712,417.56

Items 2, 3 and 5 are not in dispute.

(a) Non-pecuniary general damages

The figure of $250,000 is stated to include amounts for pain and suffering and the loss of amenities of life as well as an amount for loss of future income. It is now necessary to separate these two heads of damage and identify an amount for pain and suffering and loss of the amenities of life, i.e., the non-pecuniary damages.

Stated bluntly, the position of the appellants is that the trilogy of cases decided by the Supreme Court of Canada has established a limit of $100,000 for non-pecuniary damages. In those cases the plaintiffs suffered devastating and totally disabling injuries; the non-pecuniary damages in each case were fixed or confirmed at $100,000. In Andrews, Dickson, J., said at p. 263 S.C.R., p. 477 D.L.R.:

> Cases like the present enable the Court to establish a rough upper parameter on these awards. It is difficult to conceive of a person of his age losing more than Andrews has lost. Of course, the figures must be viewed flexibly in future cases in recognition of the inevitable differences in injuries, the situation of the victim, and the changing economic conditions.

In Teno, Spence, J., said at p. 334 S.C.R., p. 640 D.L.R.:

> I am in respectful agreement with Dickson J. that there should be uniformity, always allowing flexibility to meet each differing individual case, in awards for non-pecuniary damages. Perhaps one should say there must be upper limits with awards lower in some cases and some higher in exceptional cases.

In our opinion, these cases do not establish an absolute limit for non-pecuniary damages. The figure of $100,000 is put forward as a rough level of non-pecuniary general damages which is reached by those plaintiffs whose lives are left in total ruin but who are made economically whole by the assessment of pecuniary damages.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

In Lindal v. Lindal, [1978] 4 W.W.R. 592, Fulton, J., addressed himself to the question whether $100,000 constituted an absolute limit for non-pecuniary general damages and concluded, at p. 602:

> The door is thus open to make a higher award and, as I say, the problem which has been of real concern to me is whether there are facts here which move this case through that door.

There can be little doubt that Sandra Fenn's crushing and totally disabling injuries move her to at least the $100,000 plateau. The question is whether or not this amount should be increased.

In this case there are two factors which justify an award somewhat higher than $100,000. Firstly, the trial in this case (the point in time as of which damages are to be assessed) took place approximately a year and a half after the latest of the trials in the trilogy of cases decided by the Supreme Court. It is apparent that during that time there has been an appreciable erosion in the value of money. Secondly, it appears that Sandra Fenn has suffered substantially more pain than any of the plaintiffs in Teno, Andrews and Thornton. We do not in any way wish to minimize the suffering of the plaintiffs in any of those three cases. Assuredly, any of these plaintiffs suffers terribly with the dawn of each new day which renews the recognition of cold reality. However, unlike the other plaintiffs, Sandra Fenn suffered excruciating, prolonged, raw physical pain which requires an increase in her assessment of damages. Taking into account these two additional factors, an appropriate figure for general damages would be $125,000.

(b) The discount rate

Before dealing with the balance of the assessment of damages, it is necessary to direct our attention to the problem of the appropriate discount rate. Substantial parts of the plaintiff's claim involve the provision of periodic payments for care and maintenance, etc. Critical to the actuarial calculation of a fund sufficient to such a task is the selection of a discount rate. In earlier times, this was a relatively simple operation which involved only the proper estimate of the interest rate which would prevail over the life of the fund. Now, however, the discount rate must take into account not only the interest rate but also the eroding effect of inflation. In Teno, Andrews and Thornton, these factors were considered and a discount rate of 7% was selected by the Supreme Court of Canada. In this case the trial Judge accepted a discount rate of 3%.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

It cannot be said that the 7% discount rate is a matter of law for, as Dickson, J., said in Andrews, at p. 259 S.C.R., p. 474 D.L.R., "[t]he result in future cases will depend upon the evidence adduced in those cases." (See also Sheppard et al. v. Wells et al., Ontario Court of Appeal, unreported, released June 21, 1978 [summarized [1978] 2 A.C.W.S. 323], and Richards v. B and B Moving & Storage Ltd. et al., Ontario Court of Appeal, unreported, released September 8, 1978 [summarized [1978] 3 A.C.W.S. 113].)

However, it was argued that Teno, Thornton and Andrews as a matter of law provided a formula for the ascertainment of a discount rate and this is accomplished by subtracting the long-term inflation rate from present interest rates. In support of this proposition the appellants quoted from Dickson, J., in the Andrews case, at p. 255 S.C.R., p. 471 D.L.R.:

> In my opinion, it would be better to proceed from what known factors are available rather than to ignore economic reality. Analytically, the alternate approach to assuming a stable economy is to use existing interest rates and then make an allowance for the long-term expected rate of inflation.

In our view, it is apparent from the context from which these remarks are taken that Dickson, J., was speaking of present interest rates for long-term investments. It is further implicit in this analysis that when one speaks of long-term investments and long-term inflation rates one is speaking of the same long-term and that the long-term so far as possible should correspond to the projected life of the fund which is the subject of the calculation. However, it is not necessary for a Court to struggle unduly with these economic concepts when, as in this case, it is given the ample assistance of expert witnesses. In this case, the uncontradicted evidence, accepted by the trial Judge, was that the long-term probable differential between investment return and inflation was not greater than 3% and this figure should be used as the discount rate.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

On the other hand, counsel for the plaintiff urged that the discount rate should be lower than 3% and based his argument on the proposition that at least some of the funds that the plaintiff would be required to expend for her care and maintenance would be subject to income tax and the discount rate should be decreased in order to ensure that these funds would be tax paid in her hands. In our view, the question of the tax burden is far too complex and too personal to each plaintiff to be accommodated by a simple reduction of the discount rate.

The plaintiff further argued that in future she will be compelled to expend funds on wages for persons to assist her and that the evidence in this case demonstrates that because of increased productivity, wages will rise at a rate faster than the ordinary inflation rate. This argument fails, however, for want of a sufficient evidentiary base. The evidence in this case is of a general character and is not sufficient to warrant the conclusion that the services that the plaintiff will require will increase in cost at a rate beyond the inflation rate. We adopt the 3% discount rate which was selected by the trial Judge and which was fully supported by the evidence.

(c) Cost of future care

The trial Judge accepted a figure of $15,861 as the yearly cost of future care which included household help, nursing care, wheelchairs, home modification, transportation and the like. He estimated that this expense would continue for the next 32 years until Sandra Fenn attained the age of 60 years

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

(she was 28 at the date of trial). He then estimated that the cost of her care would escalate to $18,861 for the next five years until she attained the age of 65. These figures were not challenged. The cost of future care was attacked simply on the basis that the trial Judge had used an incorrect discount rate in calculating the present cost of these future expenses. Accepting as we do that the trial Judge used the correct discount rate, we are in agreement with his assessment of the cost of future care at $351,354.63. In addition to this cost of future care, it was estimated that the Ontario Hospital Insurance Plan would incur future costs for medical treatment as well as costs of Sandra Fenn's permanent care beyond age 65. Utilizing the same discount rate of 3% the trial Judge calculated that the future cost to OHIP would be $50,000 and we are in agreement with him.

(d) Basic costs of living: lost earning capacity

It is now appropriate to return to an issue which the learned trial Judge doubtless had in mind when he allowed an unspecified amount for loss of income within the assessment of general damages at $250,000. The amounts assessed under the prior heading of future care include nothing for the basic cost of living, i.e., food and shelter, etc., until Sandra Fenn reaches 65 years of age, at which point the cost of institutional care is provided.

Prior to the explosion, Sandra Fenn was not employed in the sense that she earned a wage from an outside source. She was, however, employed, and one might say gainfully, in the care of her family and the management of her household. This household, funded by the earnings of Gerard Fenn, provided Sandra Fenn with a modest but comfortable living. The explosion destroyed not only the Fenn house but the household as well. The marriage was unable to withstand the tragedy heaped upon it and without the fault of either Gerard or Sandra Fenn, crumbled. The plaintiff Sandra Fenn is now left without support or any realistic likelihood of ever being supported by her husband. Her injuries have rendered her utterly incapable of supporting herself.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

It appears that this issue can be approached in either one of two ways and each leads to substantially the same result. The funds necessary to provide for the basic living costs can be classed simply as part of the cost of future care made necessary as a result of the explosion. Dickson, J., in Andrews, having spoken of moderation in the assessment of non-pecuniary damages, included this significant sentence at p. 261 S.C.R., p. 476 D.L.R.:

> Money can provide for proper care: this is the reason that I think the paramount concern of the courts when awarding damages for personal injuries should be to assure that there will be adequate future care.

The loss of basic living expenses is a pecuniary loss. The appellants who seek moderation in non-pecuniary damages in accord with the principles enunciated in Andrews, Teno and Thornton, must surely yield to the counterbalancing principle of full compensation for pecuniary losses.

On the other hand, the matter might be approached as an assessment of damages for the lost earning capacity of Sandra Fenn. Support for this approach is found in the words of Spence, J., in Teno, who said at p. 328 S.C.R., p. 636 D.L.R.:

> I turn next to the consideration of an award to cover the income which the infant plaintiff would have earned had she grown to womanhood and joined the work force. This amount was not separately assessed or considered by the learned trial judge although he did emphasize in discussing the global award that it would have to be made to cover the plaintiff's own living costs even apart from the award to cover the special care with which I have already dealt as "she had been deprived of an opportunity to provide for herself".

And at pp. 329-30 S.C.R., p. 637 D.L.R.:

> If there is no allowance for the loss of future income, then the fund from which her ordinary living costs would be supplied would have to come from the amount awarded for non-pecuniary damages and there can be no excuse for depriving the infant plaintiff of an allowance for those non-pecuniary damages fixed in a fashion which I shall discuss hereafter by requiring her to use those non-pecuniary damages to live on.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The remaining problem is the selection of an amount. There is no helpful employment history of Sandra Fenn to be used as a guide. We select the figure of $6,000 per year as a reasonable estimate of her earning capacity, a figure barely above the poverty level and a figure which is consistent with the approach used by Spence, J., in Teno. Further, the sum of $6,000 a year is a reasonable, if somewhat arbitrary, estimate of her basic living expenses. Thus this sum, it seems to us, can be justified on either basis. Using the actuarial evidence supplied, the provision of this sum from the date of trial until Sandra Fenn reaches age 65, using a 3% discount rate, would cost $154,105. Age 65 is significant as the customary end of one's working life expectancy and in this case the age at which the trial Judge estimated Sandra Fenn would require institutional care. Thus, the termination date will be the same whether this annual sum is classed as the cost of basic living expenses or as lost earning capacity.

(e) Income tax

In his reasons for judgment the trial Judge spoke of the income tax burden that would fall upon the plaintiff and the necessity of providing the cost of future care as a tax paid sum in the plaintiff's hands. It does not appear in his assessment, however, that any specific allowance was made to cover the tax burden. The appellants took the position that the Supreme Court of Canada in Teno, Thornton and Andrews established a rule of law that the extra amount of money required to pay tax to ensure the cost of future care will be tax paid in the plaintiff's hands is not an allowable claim. We do not agree that those cases stand for that proposition. It is true that in none of those cases was a claim for amounts sufficient to meet tax liability allowed, but it appears that the claims failed for want of adequate proof. In Andrews (p. 260 S.C.R., p. 475 D.L.R.) and Teno (p. 325 S.C.R., p. 633 D.L.R.) reference was made to the possibility that the tax laws might be amended to afford more generous treatment to accident victims. Thus far, there has been no legislative response.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

It is important, however, to keep the tax question within its proper limits. The defendants are not obliged to provide a sum to pay the taxes that will be incurred on the interest income on the general damage award. We are concerned simply with the amount for future care. However, it must be recognized that other amounts which generate income will propel a plaintiff into a position where the tax rate applicable on the amounts in question will be higher. However, as was pointed out in both Andrews and Teno, the existence of s. 110(1)(c)(iv.1) of the Income Tax Act diminishes the problem. The tax problem is further complicated by the fact that the funds paid to a plaintiff such as Sandra Fenn out of a self-exhausting fund are part capital and part income and it is only the income portion which is subject to tax. In this case there was evidence given as to the tax burden that would fall upon the plaintiff but this evidence is not sufficient to enable us to make any specific assessment because this evidence fails to take into account the fact that the funds payable to Sandra Fenn are mixed capital and income and further the tax calculations mixed inextricably the tax liability on the income from her general damage award and the cost of future care. Thus, despite the commonly recognized fact of the inevitability of death and taxes, the evidence in this case falls short of enabling us to make a specific assessment under this head.

(f) Management fee

In her cross-appeal, the plaintiff Sandra Fenn asked that the assessment of damages be increased by the award of a management fee to enable her to seek professional assistance in the handling of the funds awarded to her. It is inherent in the award that the fund must be managed in such a way as to produce income which will exceed the inflation rate by 3%. The management of a large self-exhausting fund which must endure over a very long term and achieve its objects is a task which requires professional assistance. Sandra Fenn is a person of modest capacity who would have found the management of such a fund difficult under the best of circumstances; the facts of this case make it abundantly clear that the explosion has seriously diminished her capacity. In Teno a sum of $35,000 was allowed to provide a self-exhausting fund out of which management fees could be paid over the life of the principal award. It has been pointed out that Diane Teno was a much younger plaintiff and that the fund in this case will not endure for quite so long a period. In all of the circumstances, we are of the opinion that the sum of $25,000 under this head would be appropriate.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

(g) The contingencies

It was lastly argued by the appellants that the sums awarded to the plaintiff under the various heads of damage should be reduced by some percentage to reflect the contingencies, i.e., the possibilities, that she might not require all of the care estimated, or she might require institutional care (less expensive than home care) earlier; that if the $6,000 a year is characterized as lost income that it would be affected by the possibility of layoffs or illnesses, etc. In speaking of contingencies, Dickson, J., said in Thornton, at p. 283 S.C.R., p. 489 D.L.R.:

> The imposition of a contingency deduction is not mandatory, although it is sometimes treated almost as if it were to be imposed in every case as a matter of law. The deduction, if any, will depend upon the facts of the case, including the age and nature of employment of the plaintiff. Most forms of employment, however, are exposed to the possibility of layoff, illness, accidents and the like.

And in Andrews, at pp. 249-50 S.C.R., p. 468 D.L.R.:

> This whole question of contingencies is fraught with difficulty, for it is in large measure pure speculation. It is a small element of the illogical practice of awarding lump sum payments for expenses and losses projected to continue over long periods of time. To vary an award by the value of the chance that certain contingencies may occur is to assure either over-compensation or under-compensation, depending on whether or not the event occurs.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

In this case, the trial Judge in his calculations for future institutional care has already reduced Sandra Fenn's statistical life expectancy of 78 to 70 and on the facts of the case we are satisfied that he was not in error in so doing. This reduction in life expectancy reflects itself in the diminished costs of institutional care beyond age 65. The appellants, however, argued that there should be a substantial reduction in whatever sum is allowed for either lost income or the basic cost of living. It would appear that none of the other sums awarded realistically lend themselves to the concept of reduction premised on the contingencies. However, one may appropriately ask why the concept of contingencies has almost always been interpreted as a factor which should diminish a damage award. Surely there are contingent factors which may lead to the enlargement of damages. In this case there exists the spectre of tax liability which will to some extent diminish the funds which Sandra Fenn will receive for the cost of future care.

As mentioned earlier, the evidence falls short of demonstrating exactly what that tax liability will be but the fact of some tax liability has not been dispelled and it would seem reasonable that this tax liability is a contingency which should be weighed in favour of the plaintiff. In Oliver et al. v. Ashman et al., [1961] 3 All E.R. 323 at p. 340, Pearson, L.J., said:

> Where a plaintiff has been rendered helpless by his injuries, which have been caused by the defendants' negligence, the sum awarded as compensation should be sufficient to ensure that he will be properly looked after by others in any situation which can reasonably be foreseen, so that even rather improbable contingencies will be covered.

In cases such as this where a plaintiff has been totally disabled and Courts are faced with the task of providing sums to ensure proper care for a lifetime, one should not be quick to reduce those sums under a ritualistic theory of contingencies. In this case, it is not difficult to foresee that in countless ways Sandra Fenn will be put to extra expense to accomplish the ordinary small tasks and to partake of the small pleasures in life and this contingency should as well be weighed in the balance. In the result we are not persuaded that there should be any percentage reduction of the figures already arrived at under the theory of contingencies. Those possibilities which may tend to increase the financial burden on Sandra Fenn are at least the equal to those possibilities which may tend to diminish the sums awarded.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

(h) Summary of damages

In summary, Sandra Fenn's damages should be assessed as follows:

1. Non-pecuniary damages for loss of the amenities of life, pain and suffering $125,000.00

2. Cost of the purchase of a specially equipped vehicle 9,000.00

3. Out-of-pocket expenses excluding that portion apportioned to OHIP 15,026.95

4. Present value of future care 351,354.63

5. Cost of past insured services apportioned to OHIP 37,035.98

6. Estimated future cost of insured services appor- tioned in favour of OHIP 50,000.00

7. Present cost of future basic living allowance or lost earning capacity 154,105.00

9. Management fee 25,000.00

TOTAL: $766,522.56

(i) Damages under the Fatal Accidents Act

As a result of the explosion the three Fenn children, Dean age four and a half, Virginia two and a half, and Gregory four months, were killed. In his reasons for judgment the trial Judge awarded the sum of $5,000 for the death of all three children and described the amount as "so small and so insignificant compared to the death of these three children". However, as he rightly observed, the calculations of these damages must be based upon a reasonable expectation of pecuniary benefit. The plaintiffs by way of cross-appeal ask that this assessment be substantially increased. We are, however, not persuaded that in selecting this largely conventional sum the trial Judge was in error, and we would not interfere with the award in this connection.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Interest

Pursuant to leave granted by the order of Houlden, J.A., on December 21, 1977, the plaintiffs cross-appeal for an order that the judgment in appeal be varied to provide for interest on the judgment at a rate of 10% per annum, or such rate as this Court deems just, from the date of judgment to the date of payment. The plaintiffs in their application to Houlden, J.A., had sought to remove the stay of execution and the matter of a stay was adjourned to the Court hearing the appeal.

While this cross-appeal was brought on behalf of all of the plaintiffs, we propose to give effect to it only with respect to the plaintiff Sandra Fenn.

The first branch of the argument on behalf of the plaintiff Sandra Fenn was based upon what was said to be delay on the part of the defendants in perfecting the appeal. This delay is said to have occurred prior to the actual ordering of the entire transcript; discussions were then going on, on a rather spasmodic basis, on the subject of whether part of the transcript could be omitted for the purposes of the appeal. The plaintiff was not involved in any controversy with the defendants on that matter.

While undoubtedly there were delays in the perfecting of the appeal, particularly with respect to the making of a decision as to what evidence was required, there was another considerable delay later, occasioned by the application brought by the plaintiffs for leave to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from the order granting the defendants leave to broaden their grounds of appeal to this Court so as to attack the award of damages by the trial Judge. In all the circumstances, we do not think this is a case in which delay should be a factor in our decision whether to make a special order regarding interest.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Once judgment in an action has been "given", which in this case means when the reasons for judgment were released on October 7, 1976, the judgment bears interest from the time of "giving the judgment": the Judicature Act, R.S.O. 1970, c. 228, s. 40. The rate is 5%: Rule 548 and Form 115 [am. O. Reg. 307/72, s. 12].

The amended s. 38 of the Judicature Act, permitting the allowance of interest at the prime rate in the circumstances specified in the amended section, applies only to judgments delivered after the section came into force on November 25, 1977: see 1977 (Ont.), c. 51, s. 3(2). Although s. 39 of the Judicature Act was repealed on the same date, it was in force when the trial judgment was delivered, but it was not suggested in argument that s. 39 had any relevance to the facts of this case.

The plaintiff's further submission was that the calculation of the sum needed to produce the required annual amount to look after the plaintiff was made and given in evidence in July, 1976. It assumed that the requisite capital payment would be made at once. It assumed also the obvious mathematical fact that if the fund were invested at once at an average return of 10% per annum, the encroachments on the fund in the initial years would have a much greater content of interest than of capital. Later the capital portion of each payment would eventually exceed the interest portion, and towards the end of the plaintiff's lifetime, the payments to her would be mostly all capital. The annual payments out of the fund will have to be increased year by year because of the impact of inflation. The payment in 1979 will have to be greater than the $15,000 estimated for the year commencing in 1976.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

It is now two and a half years since the evidence was given. The fund has not yet been set up. The interest that should have accumulated in that period has not been received. Hence the fund will be exhausted sooner than the judgment contemplates. In Mr. Murray's colourful phrase, "Mr. Walker's evidence becomes a myth if the fund doesn't get set up until 1979." The defendants who are ultimately found liable will have had the benefit of this money since October, 1976, at a cost to them of 5% per annum if the submissions of the defendants are accepted.

Mr. Mueller's submissions on interest on the award may be summarized as follows:

(1) The specific provisions of the Judicature Act and Rule 548 relating to interest should be resorted to, and not the general powers of the Court of Appeal conferred on it by s. 30 of the Act. If s. 40 and Rule 548 do not fix the rate at 5%, s. 3 of the Interest Act, R.S.C. 1970, c. I-18, fixes the rate at 5%.
(2) The power of the trial Judge to award interest at a rate other than 5% was (before 1977) confined to interest up to the date of giving of judgment; thereafter, only 5% interest was payable: Sidan Investments Ltd. v. W.B. Sullivan Construction Ltd. (1974), 3 O.R. (2d) 121 at p. 131, 44 D.L.R. (3d) 641 at p. 651; Babineau v. MacDonald (1974), 9 N.B.R. (2d) 382 at p. 389.
(3) The powers of the Court of Appeal are to pronounce the judgment the trial Judge should have pronounced. Those powers are as set out in point (2).

The recent judgment of the House of Lords in Pickett v. British Rail Engineering Ltd., [1978] 3 W.L.R. 955, has some bearing, by analogy only, to Mr. Murray's point that the defendants found liable have had the use of the money, at the statutory rate of 5% since the date of the trial judgment. In Pickett the trial Judge had allowed interest from the date of the writ to the date of judgment, as the English Rule permitted him to do. The Court of Appeal increased the damages from (STERLING)7,500 to (STERLING)10,000 but disallowed the interest "on the theory that as damages are now normally subject to increase to take account of inflation, there is no occasion to award interest as well" (the quoted words are those of Lord Wilberforce at p. 963). The House of Lords restored the provision for interest. Lord Wilberforce, id. cit., said: "Increase for inflation is designed to preserve the 'real' value of money: interest to compensate for being kept out of that 'real' value. The one has no relation to the other." Lord Edmund-Davies, after quoting (and finding fallacious) the reasoning of Lord Denning, M.R., in Cookson v. Knowles, [1977] Q.B. 913 at p. 921, which the Court of Appeal in Pickett had followed, also emphasized at pp. 975-6 the aspect of the defendant having the use of the money, and therefore not being prejudiced by being required to pay interest on it.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

In the present case the governing provisions respecting interest, as such, on a judgment are s. 40 of the Judicature Act and Rule 548 (and Form 115). The prescribed rate is 5% (unless there is a written contract making interest payable at a higher rate, after judgment, in which case the judgment may so provide). We agree with the judgment of Lerner, J., in Sidan Investments Ltd. v. W.B. Sullivan Construction Ltd., supra. However, we think it is clear that with respect to the cost of future care the evidence on behalf of the plaintiff was designed to prove what capital sum, paid at once, would be required to make available to the plaintiff the necessary amount per annum for the rest of her life, presuming a rate of 10% per annum on the amount of capital from time to time in the plaintiff's hands. We accept the argument that if payment of the required capital sum is delayed for two and a half years, the calculations made by the trial Judge are no longer valid. The plaintiff will run out of money while she still needs care.

This could have been guarded against if the trial Judge had ordered that the capital sum awarded for future care should bear interest at 10% per annum from the date of his judgment to the date of payment -- not as interest on the sum awarded but as part of the sum awarded. Thereby the requisite capital sum, when eventually paid, would be sufficient to provide for the plaintiff's care for life. The trial Judge was not asked to do so, and could not have foreseen the delay in payment that has in fact occurred (and may become greater if there is a further appeal).

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

We can make such an award now, and in the circumstances, justice requires that we do so. The judgment should be amended to provide that the sum of $351,354.63 awarded for present value of future care shall bear interest at 10% per annum from October 7, 1976, to the date of payment.

The same principle applies to the award of $154,105 as the present cost of future basic living allowance or lost earning capacity. We have selected a figure of $6,000 per year as a reasonable estimate of the plaintiff's earning capacity, and have said that the same figure is a reasonable estimate of her basic living expenses. In arriving at the present value of the capital amount required to produce $6,000 per annum, we have again used an investment return of 10%, minus the inflation rate of 7%, to produce a discount factor of 3%. Hence, the award of $154,105 should bear interest at the rate of 10% per annum from the date of the judgment (October 7, 1976), to the date of payment.

In each case the allowance of 10% interest is in lieu of the 5% provided for by Rule 548 and Form 115.

As to the award of $50,000 for the future cost to OHIP of insured services, while undoubtedly there is some discount element involved, OHIP did not cross-appeal, and when its counsel addressed us in support of the $50,000 award, he did not suggest that any special consideration of the interest on it should be given. That part of the award will, therefore, bear interest at the usual rate of 5% from the date of judgment.

The plaintiff has received $135,000 from the defendants, or some of them, and Mr. Murray told us he was not claiming interest on that amount. We do not know whether the payment was specified by the defendants to be made in respect of some particular head of damage. We propose to treat it as paid in respect of heads of damage other than future economic loss and future basic living allowance or lost earning capacity. We are not allowing interest on those other heads of damage at a rate higher than 5%. The parties can work out the arithmetic, based on the dates of payment and in the light of these reasons.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Summary of our conclusions and the disposition of costs

The appeals of Consumers and the Commission with regard to liability and damages are dismissed with costs (with one set of counsel fees) payable to the plaintiffs. These costs are to be paid equally by these appellants. The plaintiffs are, however, to have judgment with costs against the City as well as the Commission, on the basis of the City's vicarious liability. Contribution and indemnity as between the City and the Commission on the one hand and Consumers on the other will take place on the basis that the City and the Commission were 75% at fault and Consumers 25% at fault. The City is to have judgment against the Commission in the third party proceedings for the amount the City is required to pay to the plaintiffs by way of damages and costs together with the City's costs of its defence in the main action and its costs of the third party proceedings. The City is also to recover the costs of the appeal in the third party proceedings as of one-half day's proceedings. The appeals with relation to the damages awarded to OHIP are dismissed without costs.

The cross-appeal of the plaintiffs seeking to impose liability on the City under Rylands v. Fletcher is dismissed but under the circumstances without costs.

The cross-appeal of the plaintiffs with regard to the damages awarded to the plaintiff Sandra Fenn is allowed with costs and the damages increased to $773,179.43, being the sum of the $766,522.56 already itemized, plus $2,500 (one-half of the award of $5,000 under the Fatal Accidents Act) plus $4,156.87 (one-half of the agreed joint out-of-pocket expenses of Gerard Fenn and Sandra Fenn of $8,313.75). These costs, which, as between Consumers and the Commission are to be paid equally, include the costs of the motion before Houlden, J.A., on December 21, 1977. The plaintiff is to have interest at 10% on the sum of $505,459.63 from October 7, 1976, to the day of payment. This allowance of 10%, as stated, is in lieu of the 5% provided by Rule 548. The cross-appeal of the plaintiffs with regard to damages under the Fatal Accidents Act, which took very little time, is dismissed without costs.

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

The costs in the interlocutory proceedings before this Court on June 6, 1978, were finally dealt with at that time, and nothing more need be said about them.

Appeals by defendants, Peterborough Utilities Commission and Consumers' Gas Company dismissed; cross-appeal by plaintiffs allowed; appeal by Consumers' Gas Company from dismissal of its third party action dismissed; appeal by City of Peterborough from dismissal of its third party action dismissed as against Consumers' Gas Company and allowed as against Peterborough Utilities Commission.

MVRT

1979 CanLII 77 (ON CA)

Date: 20140220
Docket: 10/120
Citation: Ryan v. Dew Enterprises Limited, 2014 NLCA 11

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

IN THE SUPREME COURT OF NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR
COURT OF APPEAL

BETWEEN:

OTTO RYAN, OPERATING AS RYAN DESIGNS	FIRST APPELLANT

AND:

CARL KNIGHT	SECOND APPELLANT

AND:

DEW ENTERPRISES LIMITED	RESPONDENT

AND:

PAKARA APARTMENTS LIMITED	COURT-REQUESTED PARTICIPANT (PLAINTIFF AT TRIAL)

Coram: Green C.J.N.L., White and Harrington JJ.A.

Court Appealed From: Supreme Court of Newfoundland and Labrador
Trial Division (G) 200705T0065

Appeal Heard: September 14, 2011
Judgment Rendered: February 20, 2014

Reasons for Judgment by Green C.J.N.L.
Concurred in by White and Harrington JJ.A.

Counsel for the First Appellant, Otto Ryan: Michael Griffin Counsel for the Second Appellant, Carl Knight: David Moores Counsel for the Respondent, Dew Enterprises Limited: Gerry Wentzell Counsel for Pakara Apartments Limited: Gerald Ralph and Stacy MacDonald

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

Green C.J.N.L.:

[1] This appeal requires the Court to re-examine the principles applicable to joinder of third parties.

[2] The challenge on the appeal is to an application judge's decision to authorize the issuance and service of third party notices by a defendant contractor against a building designer and engineer in circumstances where the contractor was being sued by the building owner for breach of contract and negligence.

Case History

A. Relevant Pleading History

[3] The pleading history is tangled and confusing.

[4] Pakara Apartments Limited (Pakara) sued Dew Enterprises Limited (Dew) for breach of contract and negligence as a result of alleged delays and deficiencies in the construction of a septic system designed to service an apartment building being constructed for Pakara. Pakara alleged that Dew subcontracted the design of the sewage disposal system to Otto Ryan, operating as a sole proprietorship under the name "Ryan Designs." Both the proprietorship and Ryan personally were named as additional defendants.[1] The statement of claim made allegations of both negligence and (even though no privity of contract was alleged between Pakara and Ryan Designs) breach of contract against Ryan Designs.

[5] In its defence, Dew took the position that it did not subcontract the design of the sewage disposal system to Ryan Designs and that, in fact, Pakara contracted directly with Ryan Designs for the performance of this work, thereby asserting that there was privity of contract between Pakara and Ryan Designs. Dew further denied any negligence with respect to the design or the choice of designer.

[6] Ryan Designs filed a defence in which they asserted that there was no contract between them and Pakara and that their contractual relationship with Dew was limited to providing drafting, not design, services. They then issued a third party claim against Dew claiming "indemnity and contribution" for damages for which they might be held liable to Pakara assuming (but not conceding) that there was a contract between them and Pakara as alleged by Dew. They took this position because they claimed that the drafting (but not the design) of the drawings was done by them at the request of Dew. Dew responded by reasserting that it was merely the "intermediary" between Pakara and Ryan Designs for the purpose of assisting Pakara to engage a sewage system designer.

[7] Ryan Designs subsequently issued a further third party claim against Carl Knight, an engineer and the Second Appellant in this appeal, alleging that Knight directed them to make changes to the drawings, which were stamped and approved by Knight, and that if the drawings were deficient, the responsibility lay with Knight. They claimed that if, as alleged by Dew, there was a contract between Pakara and them for the preparation of the drawings and they were in some manner responsible to Pakara for any deficiencies, Knight should indemnify them because the drawings were changed at Knight's direction. Knight responded by denying any contractual relationship with any of the parties.

[1] Although the sole proprietorship, "Ryan Designs," and its principal, Otto Ryan, were named as separate defendants, the allegations against them are identical and their interests in the litigation are the same; indeed, they are legally one and the same entity. This was recognized by the applications judge in the order under appeal when he ordered that that they be "merged as one party in the style of cause." Thenceforward, they appear in the style of cause in the Trial Division as "Otto Ryan, Operating as Ryan Designs". In like manner, during the hearing of the appeal, all parties consented to an amendment in the same terms to the appeal style of cause. For convenience, I will refer to this party in this judgment as simply "Ryan Designs."

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[8] Subsequently, Ryan Designs applied to be removed as defendant in the action. That would have involved the incidental discontinuance of their third party claims against Dew and Knight.

[9] By Order dated June 28, 2010, over the objection of Dew but with the consent of the other parties, Pakara's claim against Ryan Designs was discontinued, with respect to both the negligence and breach of contract claims. This Court was not told the reason for Pakara's consent to removal of Ryan Designs as a defendant. It would be improper, therefore, to speculate that Pakara concluded it had no direct claim against Ryan Designs, or perhaps had reached an undisclosed Perringer-style settlement agreement with Ryan Designs, or was animated by some other motive.

[10] As a result of the removal of Ryan Designs as a defendant, Ryan Designs' third party claims against Dew and Knight for contribution and indemnity were necessarily also discontinued. In addition, Dew was given leave to "make application" to join Ryan Designs, as well as Knight, as third parties in respect of a claim by Dew against them.

B. The Result of the Pleading History

[11] When the dust settled from this convoluted pleading history, what remained was a claim by Pakara against Dew for breach of contract and negligence. Although Ryan Designs was no longer named as a defendant, Pakara's statement of claim still alleged that Dew subcontracted the sewerage design work to Ryan Designs. The body of the statement of claim also continued – inconsistently with the removal of Ryan Designs as defendant and the absence of any allegation of a contractual relationship with them – to claim breach of contract (as well as negligence) against them. Counsel for Pakara confirmed during the appeal hearing, however, that it was his client's intention to amend the statement of claim to remove all claims and allegations of negligence and breach of contract against Ryan Designs.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[12] For the purposes of this appeal, it will be assumed that Pakara's proposed amendments are effective, thus leaving Pakara's claim simply as one in contract or negligence against Dew on the basis that Dew subcontracted the work to Ryan Designs. Counsel for Pakara confirmed that Pakara was pursuing claims against Dew for both breach of contract and negligence.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[13] Dew's defence continued to maintain that the contract for the provision of septic design services was between Pakara and Ryan Designs and not between Dew and Ryan Designs, as Pakara alleged. There remained, therefore, a fundamental factual disagreement between the parties as to the nature of the contractual and business relationship among Pakara, Dew and Ryan Designs and, to a lesser extent, Knight. It does not appear that any of these relationships were documented in writing.

C. The Interlocutory Application

[14] In accordance with the Order of June 28, 2010, Dew applied to bring Ryan Designs and Knight back into the litigation as third parties to a claim by Dew "to ensure that all parties having potential liability in this matter be brought in as parties before the Court so that the matter may be fully adjudicated" (paragraph 7 of the Application).

[15] The application was brought under Rule 12 of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1986, which reads in pertinent part as follows:

> 12.02(1) Where a defendant claims against any person, who is a co-defendant or who is not a party to the proceeding, that the latter is or may be liable to the defendant for all or any part of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant, the defendant may, before the defendant issues a defence or appears on a hearing under an originating application, issue and serve a third party notice without the leave of the Court, and thereafter with leave.
>
> …
>
> 12.03(2) An application for leave to issue a third party notice shall be supported by an affidavit stating

(a) the nature of the claim made by the plaintiff in the proceeding;

(b) the stage which the proceeding has reached;

(c) the nature of the claim made by the applicant and the facts upon which the third party notice is based; and

(d) the name and address of the person against whom the third party notice is to be issued and served.

[16] Dew described the basis for the application in this way:

> In essence [Dew] claims that [Ryan Designs] … and Carl Knight were the parties who designed [Pakara's] septic disposal system and were accountable directly to [Pakara]. Further, Ryan Designs, Otto Ryan and Carl Knight are the parties responsible for the preparation and certification of the design. They were also the parties responsible for any flaws, correction of errors and the timely submission of the design to [Pakara]. Therefore, [Dew] is claiming indemnity from the proposed Third Parties should any of the claims by [Pakara] against [Dew] for breach of contract and negligence be successful.
>
> [Application, paragraph 8; underlining added.]

[17] Ryan Designs opposed the application, as did Knight. Ryan Designs submitted that the claim was "a contract case and not one of fault or negligence". On this basis, they argued that because Dew took the position in its defence that it was not contractually obligated to Pakara to design the sewer system nor to subcontract out the work to anyone, and that the contract was between Pakara and Ryan Designs directly, Dew could not, on its pleadings, have any liability to Pakara and therefore there were no potential damages which Dew could pass on by way of indemnity to Ryan Designs. Accordingly, the stated objective of Dew to have all parties with potential liability before the court was not a justification to add a third party, because Pakara itself discontinued any direct claim against Ryan Designs.

[18] Knight, for his part, took the position that in addition to Ryan Designs' arguments (which he adopted), there was no pleaded relationship at all between Dew and him that could justify any third party claim.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

D. The Ruling under Appeal

[19] In an oral judgment, the applications judge granted the application and ordered that Ryan Designs and Knight be joined as third parties. The formal order did not state the basis upon which the third party claims could be made.

[20] The judge explained the purpose of Rule 12 as follows:

> …The purpose of rule 12 in large part is to avoid several difficulties in procedure, one of which is the multiplicity of actions…[T]he procedure…provides a substitute for multiple actions and disposes of issues that have some common thread to a transaction that's before the court, a transaction where there is a common thread between the plaintiff and the defendant and then the defendant and a third party and then further down, if necessary, by a third party against a fourth party and so on.
>
> It's also meant to avoid the possibility that there could be multiple actions with inconsistent findings in the different actions based on the same transaction or set of facts. It's also meant to try and avoid and save costs to the litigants.
>
> [Transcript, p. 46]

He then described the scope of the Rule:

> The rule, as I understand it, is divided into two parts and…the applicant…would have to either fall under the category of qualifying as…claiming a contribution or, in the alternative that he is claiming or falling under the category of an indemnity. The rule is split in two. It can be either/or that would ground the right of the applicant to proceed with the third party notice.
>
> [Transcript, pp. 46-47]

[21] Dealing with "the indemnity situation," the applications judge adopted the comments of Goodridge J. in Memorial University of Newfoundland v. Lundrigan

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

Group Ltd. (1985), 57 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 85 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.) as stating the current law:

> [15] Referring to indemnity, Lamonte J.A. mentioned the case of Wynne v. Tempest, [1897] 1 Ch. 110, and said that a right to indemnity is a right to be saved from loss. In the great majority of cases the right arises from a contract, express or implied, but it may be statutory or it may arise out of a relationship existing between the parties which make[s] it equitable that one should save the other from loss.

[22] The judge then explained his conclusion that a third party claim for indemnity existed in this case:

> In the present case, it appears to me that a relationship existed between all of the parties that are now before the court. [Pakara] was involved with [Dew] in the construction of a building. [Ryan Designs and Knight] in some manner provided a service for the completion of that building, all related to the same area. It wasn't like an electrician and a plumber. These were people who worked on the same design, the sewer disposal field or the sewer design, septic design and the things that went along with it. Each one of them played a role in that which is alleged by [Pakara] to have been performed wrong by [Dew]. They're saying they're primarily responsible. Initially, they've said the plaintiff [sic; should be the defendant, Dew?] was responsible as well as [Ryan Designs] but have come to an accommodation or have somehow discontinued that…
>
> Clearly, since 2007, when the first defence was filed…and then the third party notices went out, [Ryan Designs] and then later…Knight were all aware that there were allegations swirling that they had a contract with [Pakara] to do this work and they were responsible for this loss…
>
> I say that because that's part of…looking at something that arises out of the relationship between the parties which makes it equitable, that one should save the other from the loss. It's not just dealing with what's right or wrong in equity and not in a vacuum. In the context of this particular set of facts, as I know them to be from the pleadings that have been filed, there was a construction project in which all three parties, and the fourth party being [Dew], played a role in the provision of the same type of service to [Pakara] which [Pakara] is alleging went wrong. So there could be a multiplicity of actions and individual costs. There could be, on the same facts, the possibility of different findings in a situation where actions are not either amalgamated or if they're not, as in this case, the parties brought before the court in the form of third party action.
>
> …
>
> … I have to weigh it on the basis that I believe Goodridge J. outlined [in Memorial University of Newfoundland v. Lundrigan Group Ltd.], that if there is a relationship

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

> arising and existing between the parties which in equity, in fairness, could save one from loss, then that third party notice should be granted.
>
> [Transcript, pp. 48-50; 52; underlining added.]

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

E. The Third Party Notices

[23] It is apparent from the reasoning of the applications judge that the application to issue the third party notices was based on the notion that Dew had a potential claim to be indemnified by either Ryan Designs or Knight or both. However, the judge's reasons did not make it clear what the basis of the cause of action in indemnity was.

[24] The third party notice issued against Ryan Designs following the judge's order[2] alleged-contrary to what Pakara alleged in its original statement of claim-that Pakara contracted with Ryan Designs, not Dew, to design the sewage disposal system for Pakara's building, and Ryan Designs contracted with Knight to "review and place his professional stamp" on Ryan Designs' drawings. It alleges, further, that Ryan Designs and Knight "are solely responsible for the sewage system design that [Pakara] alleges was defective…" [and] that "it (Dew) has no liability for any of the delays and damages claimed by [Pakara] in relation to the sewage disposal system…". On those allegations, the third party notice claims :

> Indemnity from [Ryan Designs] with respect to any damages, costs or interest which [Dew] may be ordered to pay to [Pakara] in relation to the damages, interest or costs arising from the faulty design or approval of the septic sewage disposal system for [Pakara's] building.

[2] Dew had, in fact, purported to issue and serve third party notices on Ryan Designs and Knight following the judge's order of June 28, 2010, believing that leave to issue had been granted at that time. When it was subsequently discovered that all that had been ordered on June 28 was that Dew had leave to "make application" to issue third party notices, Dew made the application, resulting in the order under appeal. The Third Party Notices issued pursuant to the latter order used different language than in the prematurely-issued Notices to describe the claims Dew was making against Ryan and Knight. It is the claims set out in the latter Notices which must be considered when determining whether the judge ought to have allowed the third party claims to proceed, as they are the ones which will be used to define the issues on the pleadings for the purpose of proceeding with the action.

[25] The Third Party Notice issued against Knight contains similar allegations, to the effect that Ryan Designs engaged Knight to review and certify the drawings, following which Ryan Designs submitted the plans to Pakara. It further alleges that as a result of errors of Ryan Designs and Knight, the approval of the sewage disposal design by government authorities was delayed but that Pakara is claiming damages and costs against Dew for those delays that were caused by Ryan and Knight. The Notice then asserts that "in the event [Dew] is found liable for any damages to [Pakara]," Dew claims indemnity from Knight with respect to those damages.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

Leave to Appeal

[26] This case involves an appeal from an interlocutory order that requires leave to appeal pursuant to rule 57.02(1)(a) of the Rules of the Supreme Court, 1986. The parties were content to argue the issue of leave at the time of hearing of the appeal itself, as is permitted by rule 57.02(5)(c).

[27] I am satisfied that this case involves issues that require further consideration by this Court. The appellants have submitted that the applications judge did not apply the proper criteria for determining whether leave to issue a third party notice should be granted. As will become evident from the analysis contained later in these reasons, there is reason to doubt whether the applications judge described or applied the proper test. As well, other decisions in the Trial Division have expressed concern as to whether the practice followed in the course of joining third parties in some cases has in fact been within the scope of the rules. For example, Goodridge J. in Collavino v. Newfoundland (1985), 56 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 265 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.), commenting on the operation of the pre-1986 rules of court, observed:

> [19] There certainly have been cases heard in this Court where claims against third parties were not strictly claims for either contribution or indemnity. The prevalence of the practice does not justify it…

[28] Cases from this jurisdiction relied on by the parties in this appeal discuss the issue of joining third parties in the context of the language of the pre-1986 rules.

That language is different from the current Rule 12. Those cases cannot now be said to be controlling on the issue of joinder in the current context.

[29] There is a further reason for dealing with this interlocutory appeal at this juncture. As is evident from the foregoing discussion, the parties are mired in a morass of confusing, and in some cases inconsistent, pleadings. Each step in the process so far has compounded the number of permutations and combinations the parties have to consider and argue in the alternative whenever a further procedural step is taken. If the third party proceedings are allowed to stand at all or in their present form, it would be helpful, in my view, to attempt to define with clarity what issues are in fact at stake so that future proceedings and the resulting trial itself may operate with a clearer focus.

[30] Accordingly, leave to appeal should be granted pursuant to rule 57.02(4)(a), (b) and (e) as well as rule 57.02(6).

The Appeal

A. Issues

[31] The parties each expressed the issues on appeal differently. The essence of the appeal, however, can be expressed in the following question:

> Did the applications judge err in his application of the applicable principles in exercising his discretion to join Ryan Designs and Carl Knight as third parties in respect of claims by Dew?

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

B. Standard of Appellate Review

[32] Issuance of a third party notice may be made as of right if the defendant does so before filing a defence (subject, of course, to a subsequent application by the third party to strike out the notice on the ground that no cause of action is disclosed or its issuance is otherwise improper). Thereafter, application for leave must be made to the court. Such an application involves a judicially-exercised discretion.

[33] On appeal, the court will only interfere with such a discretionary order where the judge who made it has exceeded his or her jurisdiction, has failed to apply or has misapplied an applicable principle or made a palpable and overriding error in his or her appreciation of the facts, or the failure to interfere would otherwise cause a manifest injustice: Langor v. Spurrell (1997), 157 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 301 (NFCA) at para. 33.

Analysis

A. Scope of the Authority to add Third Parties

[34] This application in front of the applications judge and the argument in this Court were presented on the basis of the applicability of Rule 12. No arguments were made on the basis of the relevant provisions of the Judicature Act, RSNL 1990, c. J-4 or the Contributory Negligence Act, RSNL 1990, c. C- 33. It is necessary, however, to consider the statutory basis of the scope of third party procedure before proceeding to the rules.

i. Statutory Jurisdiction

a. Judicature Act

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[35] The starting point in considering the power of the court to authorize the issuance of a third party notice is the interrelation of sections 93 and 94 of the Judicature Act:

> 93. The court may grant to a defendant
>
> (a) in respect of an equitable estate or right, or other matter of equity; and
>
> (b) in respect of a legal estate, right or title claimed or asserted by that defendant,
>
> all the relief against a plaintiff or petitioner that the defendant has properly claimed and that the court might have granted in a proceeding instituted for that purpose by the same defendant against the same plaintiff or petitioner.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[36] This section, which is not directly related to the disposition of the current appeal, provides the authority for a defendant in a proceeding to counterclaim against the plaintiff in the same proceeding instead of commencing a separate action. There is nothing in this provision that restricts the ability of a counterclaiming defendant to raise issues arising out of the subject matter of the plaintiff's initial claim. Thus, as against a plaintiff, as opposed to a subsequently-joined third party who is not also a plaintiff, a defendant can make any unrelated counterclaim (subject, of course, to the power of the court to sever such a counterclaim and order that it be tried separately, if the original claim and counterclaim cannot be conveniently tried together: Rule 40.12; Bank of Montreal v. H. O. House Ltd. (1978), 15 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 33 (NFCA)).

[37] Section 94, which is more directly relevant to the current appeal, provides:

> 94.(1) Relief
>
> (a) claimed under section 93;
>
> (b) related to or connected with the original subject matter of the proceeding; and
>
> (c) in a similar manner claimed against another person whether a party to the same proceeding or not,
>
> may be granted against a person who has been served with written notice of the claim under a rule or an order of the court, and that might have been granted against that person > if that person had been made a defendant to a proceding instituted by the defendant seeking relief under section 93 for a similar purpose.

>
> (2) A person served with a notice under subsection (1) is considered to be a party to the proceeding with the same rights in respect of that person's defence against the claim as if that person had been sued in the ordinary way by a defendant seeking relief under section 93.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[38] Section 94 is the provision that authorizes a defendant to include in existing litigation a separate issue involving a claim by him or her against a person not then a party to that litigation, i.e. a third party claim. The right is not open-ended, however. Such a third party claim must be, as section 94(1)(b) indicates, "related to or connected with the original subject matter of the proceeding". Thus, unlike the right to counterclaim, which could involve a claim completely unrelated to the original action, a third party claim must arise out of, in the sense of being "related to or connected with", the original litigation. The classic situation where this connection exists is where a defendant seeks, by way of a claim for indemnity or contribution, to pass any liability to which he or she might be subject at the hands of the plaintiff on to another person.

[39] Other aspects of section 94 are problematic from an interpretation point of view. It will be noted that the section, by its terms, only authorizes third party proceedings where relief is being "claimed under section 93". Read literally, that would mean that a defendant wishing to claim against a third party must also be making a counterclaim against the plaintiff and it is only that relief that can also be claimed against the third party. Read this way, the section makes no sense, since the purpose of third party proceedings is usually not to make a claim against an existing plaintiff but against someone not already a party, and such a claim, e.g. a claim for indemnity or contribution, by its nature will not be the same cause of action forming the basis of the counterclaim.

[40] The answer to this conundrum is found in the legislative history of sections 93 and 94. Their genesis is found in the English Judicature Act, 1873, 36 & 37 Vict., c. 66, which essentially encompassed the essence of both sections 93 and 94 in one provision. The English provision found its way into section 13(3) of the Newfoundland Judicature Act of 1889, 52 Vict., c. 29 which under the heading "Counterclaims and third parties" provided:

13…

(3.) The said Court and every Judge thereof, shall also have power to grant to any defendant in respect of any equitable estate or right, or other matter of equity, and also in respect of any legal estate, right, or title claimed or asserted by him, all such relief against any plaintiff or petitioner as such defendant shall have properly claimed by his pleading, and as the said Court, or any Judge thereof, might have granted in any suit instituted for that purpose by the same defendant against the same plaintiff or petitioner; and also all such relief relating to or connected with the original subject of the cause or matter, and in like manner claimed against any other person, whether already a party to the same cause or matter or not, who shall have been duly served with notice in writing of such claim pursuant to any rule of Court or any order of the Court, as might properly have been granted against such person if he had been made a defendant to a cause duly instituted by the same defendant for the like purpose; and every person served with any such notice shall thenceforth be deemed a party to such cause or matter, with the same rights in respect of his defence against such claims as if he had been duly sued in the ordinary way by such defendant.

(Italics added.)

[41] The non-italicized words correspond to the current section 93. The italicized words correspond to section 94. It will be seen that the original section was attempting to deal with two related but different issues: the assertion of counterclaims between existing parties and the assertion of third party claims against non-parties. It did not tie the scope of one jurisdiction to that of the other.

[42] This provision remained unchanged in all material respects through the statutory consolidations of 1896 (CSN 1896, c. 50, s. 13(3)), 1916 (CSN 1916, c. 83, s. 25(3)), 1952 (RSN 1952, c. 114, s. 25(3)) and 1970 (RSN 1970, c. 187, s. 21(c)). At the time of the re-enactment of the judicature provisions in 1986, however, the section was split into the two related sections that today are sections 93 and 94: Judicature Act, SN 1986, c. 42, ss. 91 and 92. It was at this point that the reference to relief claimed under what is now section 93 was inserted. This is the only substantial change in the language of the sections.

[43] When viewed from this historical perspective, it appears that, in the effort by the consolidator to divide a very long one-sentence section into two, the reference in section 94 to relief claimed under section 93 was an attempt to maintain some linguistic continuity between the two sections in accordance with the original legislative scheme. Arguably, the change in the structure of the provisions was not intended to affect the substance of the original language. The infelicitous manner in which it was done should not be allowed to effect a major substantive change to the original intent as to the scope of third party procedure. Where a statute is consolidated or re-enacted, the presumption is that the legislature did not intend to make any substantive change in the law; rather, it is treated as declaratory of the existing law. See Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes, 5th ed. (Markham, ON: Lexis Nexis, 2008), pages 653-659; Pierre-André Coté, The Interpretation of Legislation in Canada, 4th ed. (Toronto, ON: Carswell, 2011), pages 112-113; Interpretation Act, RSNL 1990, c. I-19, s. 31(2); Statutes and Subordinate Legislation Act, RSNL 1990, c. s-27, s. 5(1)(d) and (g). While the 1986 enactment was not technically undertaken as part of a general statutory consolidation and revision, the 1986 statute did involve a general consolidation and reorganization of all Supreme Court judicature provisions that had been enacted since 1970, including the previous creation of appeal and trial divisions of the Court, and, as well, provided for the merger of the District Court into the Supreme Court. In so doing, it did not appear to change substantively any of the other foundational provisions of the Court relating to its procedural jurisdiction.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[44] I am satisfied, therefore, that the insertion of the references to relief being claimed under section 93, in section 94, was not intended to attenuate substantively the scope of the previous jurisdiction of the Supreme Court to permit third party proceedings. I would read the reference to relief being claimed in section 93 as meaning simply that relief of the type ("such relief") that could be claimed in a counterclaim can also be claimed against a third party ("against any other person, whether a party to the same cause or matter or not") provided it is "relating to or connected with" the original subject of the action. Alternatively, had I not reached this conclusion, I would have been prepared, in the special circumstances of this case, to treat paragraph 94(1)(a) as being omitted from the statute completely on the ground that to retain it would produce an absurdity in that it would virtually eliminate the possibility of utilizing third party proceedings, a result that would make the procedural law in this jurisdiction completely out of step with that in every other Canadian jurisdiction. That could not have been intended by such an incidental linguistic change. Where it appears that the words chosen by the drafter of the statute lead to an absurd result or one that could not have been intended, the court is entitled to disregard them. See Sullivan, supra, pages 173-177.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[45] I conclude, therefore, that section 94 of the Judicature Act continues to confer jurisdiction on the Supreme Court to allow for independent claims to be initiated by third party procedure regardless of whether they amount to claims for indemnity or contribution, provided the claim is related to or connected with the original subject matter of the action.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

b. Contributory Negligence Act

[46] The other statutory provision that is tangentially relevant to the issues engaged here is the Contributory Negligence Act, which provides:

> 3. Where damage or loss has been caused by the fault of 2 or more persons, the court shall determine the degree in which each was at fault, and where 2 or more persons are found at fault they shall be jointly and individually liable to the person suffering damage or loss, but as between themselves, in the absence of a contract express or implied, they shall be liable to make contribution to and indemnify each other in the degree in which they are respectively found to have been at fault.
>
> …
>
> 7. Where it appears that a person not a party to an action is or may be wholly or partly responsible for the damages claimed, that person may be added as a party defendant or may be made a 3rd party to the action, upon the terms that are considered just.

[47] At common law, there was no contribution between tortfeasors: Merryweather v. Nixon (1799), 8 T.R. 186; 101 E.R. 1337 (K.B.); Churchill v. Young (1981), 35 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 412 (NFCA). In other words, a concurrent tortfeasor did not acquire any rights, merely by paying the whole of the judgment, against any other tortfeasor who was partly responsible for the damage. The right to claim contribution or indemnity as between concurrent tortfeasors therefore depends solely on the Contributory Negligence Act.

[48] These provisions create a right to contribution between two or more tortfeasors who cause damage by their "fault" (section 3) and provide the procedural mechanism by which the right can be asserted and adjudicated if all tortfeasors have not been brought before the court at the suit of the plaintiff

(section 7). Section 7 allows a non-party in a tort claim to be brought in as a third party with a view to ensuring that the person so brought in will contribute to any judgment that might ultimately be made, if the third party is also found to be at fault. This procedure exists outside of the procedures set out in the Rules of Court which apply in other circumstances.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[49] A defendant seeking to invoke the provisions of section 7 must allege in his defence that the putative third party is at least partly at fault. Alleging simply that the defendant is not responsible at all and that the putative third party is wholly responsible is not sufficient: Seabord Construction Ltd. v. Pack & Noel Ltd. & Canadian National Railway (1970), 1 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 331 (Nfld. S.C.); Churchill v. Young. There must be an issue, even if it is an alternative claim, of some kind of potential joint responsibility for the tort alleged by the plaintiff. (It may be possible to have joinder of a non-party as an additional defendant where it is alleged that that person is wholly responsible for the damage or loss claimed by the plaintiff, but it is not necessary to say any more about this in the context of the current case.)

ii. Rules

[50] Rule 12.02 (1) provides that where a defendant claims against any person "who is not a party to the proceeding" that that person is or may be liable to the defendant "for all or any part of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant", the defendant may (with or without leave, depending on the circumstances) join that person as a third party.

[51] It is to be noted that the rule is not limited in express terms to claims for indemnity or contribution from the third party. There is only a requirement that the defendant assert some sort of claim "for all or any part of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant".

[52] The wording of this provision is to be contrasted with the pre-1986 rule. Order XV, rule 43 provided in pertinent part:

> 43. Where a defendant claims to be entitled to contribution, or indemnity over against any person not a party to the action, he may, by leave of the Court or a Judge issue a notice (hereinafter called the third party notice) to that effect, stamped with the seal of the Court.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[53] Under the former rule, the only basis for asserting a third party claim was if the claim could be fitted under the rubric of a claim for indemnity or contribution. This was the ruling of Goodridge J. in Canadian Acceptance Corp. v. Victoria Insurance Co. of Canada et al. (1983), 46 Nfld & P.E.I.R. 44 (Nfld S.C.T.D.) where he wrote at paragraph 161 that "third party procedures under the rules of this court involve contribution and indemnity only", and in Collavino Inc. v. Newfoundland (1985), 56 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 265 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.) at paragraph 19 where he observed, as quoted earlier, "the prevalence of the practice [of making third party claims that were not strictly claims for either contribution of indemnity] does not justify it." See also Memorial University of Newfoundland v. Lundrigan Group Ltd. (1985), 57 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 85 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.) at paras. 6-11 and 35.

[54] A claim for indemnity is a claim that another party save the indemnity-claimant harmless against loss or damage which the indemnity-claimant has incurred or suffered or will incur or suffer at the hands of another, and to reimburse the claimant in respect of such loss or damage. The claim may arise from an express contract, by implication of law or from statute. An example of a claim to indemnity arising from implication of law is where an act is done at the request of another, the act turns out to be injurious to a third party and in consequence of doing the act the doer incurs liability to the third party (Birmingham and District Land Co. v. London and North Western Railway Co. (1886), 34 Ch. D. 261 (C.A.)). Other diverse examples include: (i) where an agent incurs loss while lawfully carrying out the mandate of his or her principal; (ii) where a principal suffers loss by incurring liability to a third party as a result of the wrongful actions of his or her agent or employee; (iii) where a trustee causes a co-trustee to incur costs through the trustee's negligent management of the trust; and (iv) where an obligation arises in equity from the relationship between the parties, such as between trustee and beneficiary. While the circumstances where an obligation to indemnify arises by implication of law are diverse, they are not open-ended. The obligation cannot be imposed simply by the exercise of ad hoc discretion. As noted by Goodridge J. in Collavino, at paragraphs 18-21, just because a party may have a claim for damages over against a third party does not entitle him or her to a claim in indemnity or contribution. This was the traditional English position as enunciated in Birmingham and District Land Co. v. London and North Western Railway Co, supra., at pages 272 and 274-275, which was cited and relied on by Goodridge J. in Collavino at paragraphs 15-16 and Lundrigan at paragraphs 18-19.

[55] A claim for contribution, on the other hand, is in one sense a claim to a partial indemnity. However, the basis of the right is different. As noted by Goodridge J. in Collavino at paragraph 18, the right to contribution is based on general principles of justice involving the equitable sharing of responsibility among persons who are jointly responsible for a claimed loss. It usually arises as between joint debtors, contractors, trustees, sureties or tortfeasors. In the case of contribution between joint tortfeasors, that type of third party claim is now governed by the Contributory Negligence Act.

[56] The application of the former rule respecting joinder of third parties therefore focused on whether a recognized category of indemnity or contribution was claimed. If not, the rule was inapplicable and the procedure was unavailable even if there was potentially a claim over against a third party for damages in negligence or under a separate contract. The question now arises whether the scope of the right to join someone as a third party is so limited under the current rule.

[57] The current rule does not, as noted, refer to the words "contribution or indemnity". It does, however, focus on circumstances where the putative third party "is or may be liable to the defendant for all or any part of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant" (emphasis added). It could be said, therefore, that the only circumstance where a person could be brought into the litigation as a third party is where the defendant is claiming to pass on to the third party all or a part of what the defendant is found liable for to the plaintiff. The traditional way in which that could be done was, of course, by way of claims for contribution or indemnity. On this analysis, the phrase "is or may be liable to the defendant for all or any part of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant" is simply another way of saying "contribution or indemnity" and the scope of the current rule has not been effectively expanded.

[58] I do not accept this interpretation. In the first place, there appears to have been a conscious change in use of language in the drafting of the rule. That is normally taken as an indication of an intention to change the law. Secondly, a more expansive interpretation is consistent with the broader language of section 94 of the Judicature Act . As noted, this section is the statutory authorization for third party procedure. It contemplates a person being joined as a third party whenever the defendant is making a claim "related to or connected with the original subject matter of the proceeding". That language extends beyond contribution or indemnity claims, inasmuch as it does not require the defendant to claim to pass on liability for the plaintiff's claim to the third party. All that would appear to be required is to show that the defendant's cause of action against the third party arises out of the same general factual and/or legal matrix of the extant issues between the plaintiff and defendant.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[59] In England the case law recognized that the English equivalent of section 94 was broader in scope than was specifically authorized by their "contribution and indemnity" rule (which was essentially the same as Newfoundland's previous rule). However, the English Court of Appeal regarded the rules of court as limiting the application of the broader statutory language. See McCheane v. Gyles, [1901] 1 Ch. 287 (C.A.) and Wynne v. Tempest, [1897] 1 Ch. 110. In this jurisdiction, the decisions in Collavino and Lundrigans can also be said to stand implicitly for the same proposition, although there was no express reference to section 94 in those decisions.

[60] With all due respect to the early English authorities (the English rules were amended in 1929 to allow third party claims, in addition to contribution and indemnity, where the defendant claimed relief "relating to or connected with the original subject matter of the action", i.e. in substantially the same terms as the authorizing statute), I would approach the matter differently. In my view, if the statutory provision confers jurisdiction on the Court to allow third party procedure where the claim is "related to or connected with the original subject matter of the proceeding", then that is the scope of the third party jurisdiction that the Court has. The rules of court are merely the means whereby the Court purports to give guidance as to how the Court's adjudicative jurisdiction will generally be exercised. If the rules are expressed or interpreted to circumscribe more narrowly the circumstances where third party proceedings will be allowed, that would effectively involve the Court in wrongfully declining its jurisdiction. Thus, even if the rule is expressed in a manner that, if literally applied, would be tantamount to declining jurisdiction, that does not mean that the Court cannot exercise its jurisdiction in other circumstances not contemplated by the rule.

[61] Accordingly, the provisions of section 94 are controlling and should inform the interpretation and application of the current rule 12.02. The touchstone for determining whether the court should exercise its discretion to allow a third party claim should therefore be whether the third party claim is related to or connected with the original subject matter of the proceeding.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[62] A third reason why the rule should be given a more expansive interpretation is found in case law construing similarly worded provisions in other jurisdictions. In Burry et al. v. Centennial Properties Ltd. et al. (1979), 38 N.S.R. (2d) 450 (N.S.S.C., App. D.), motion for leave to appeal to SCC refused (1979), 35 N.S.R. (2d) 630, a condominium corporation sued the developer under a homeowner's warranty for building deficiencies. The developer-defendant third partied the contractor for damages for breach of contract and negligence, claiming the deficiencies were attributable to the contractor's faulty workmanship. There was no express contract of indemnity between the developer and the contractor. The contractor argued that it could be found liable as a third party only when the third party was bound by an agreement to indemnify the defendant from liability to the plaintiff (which was not the case on the facts) and not when their claim was based merely on a contractual obligation which happened to be similar to the one under which the defendant was liable to the plaintiff. This argument was rejected.

[63] The Nova Scotia Court of Appeal held that Nova Scotia's rule 17.02, the equivalent of our rule 12.02, should be construed to allow the claim. After tracing the history of the linguistic development of the English and Nova Scotian judicature provisions and rules, Hart J.A. explained:

> [31] I am unable … to confine the rule so narrowly [i.e. to encompass only claims for indemnity and contribution]. There are no words, as in the former rule, that limit proceedings to cases of "contribution or indemnity", and, in my opinion, the wording of s. 17.02 is broad enough to cover the situations envisaged by the rule adopted in this province in 1960 [i.e. a provision similar to the revised English rule which contemplated, in addition to contribution or indemnity claims, claims for relief "related to or connected with the original subject-matter of the action"]. All the defendant must show is that the plaintiff is claiming against him something for which the third party is liable to the > defendant and it then becomes convenient to have the common issues tried at the same time unless good reason is shown by one of the parties to convince the Court that it would be unfair to have a joint trial of the two causes. The wording of our present rule encompasses not only situations in which contribution or indemnity is involved but also those other circumstances referred to in…the modern English rule.

>
> [32] The only real limitation on the use of third party proceedings is contained in the Judicature Act where the second cause of action must be "relating to or connected with the original subject of the proceeding", but once that connection is established then procedurally all common issues should be tried and disposed of at the one time.
>
> …
>
> [35] Surely, as here, where one party undertakes an obligation to provide a housing unit to its customer "constructed in a thorough and workmanlike manner" and then contracts with another party to construct that unit in a similar manner, and it was subsequently alleged that the unit was not properly constructed, there are sufficient common issues to justify the holding of a single trial in which all parties may participate and in which the rights of all parties will be determined in accordance with the findings of the Judge.
>
> [36] The defendant would simply know that if he was liable for failure to live up to his contractual obligation to the plaintiff he could pass this obligation over to the third party, who did not agree to indemnify him, but did agree to do all the things necessary to enable him to meet his obligations to the plaintiff. This, in my opinion, is the plain meaning of the words in rule 17.02.
>
> (Emphasis added.)

[64] Although the conclusion reached in Burry was helped by the fact that the Nova Scotia Judicature Act had been amended in 1960, in language which tracked English amendments, to refer not only to indemnity and contribution claims but also other claims for relief "relating to or connected with the original subject-matter of the action", the reasoning in the case – to the effect that the language of Nova Scotia's rule 17.02 encompassed more than indemnity and contribution – is equally applicable to the Newfoundland rule. Furthermore, section 94 of our Judicature Act contains the same critical language as the Nova Scotia and English statutory provisions both before and after their 1960 amendment.

[65] Burry stands, at the least, for the proposition that a rule of court in the words of our rule 12.02 encompasses claims by a defendant against a third party where the defendant is seeking to recoup from the third party for losses to which the defendant is exposed as a result of a claim by the plaintiff regardless of whether, technically, the defendant's claim is for indemnity or contribution (see paragraphs 35 and 36 in Burry quoted above). In fact, the analysis and comment in paragraphs 31 and 32 reproduced above can also support an even broader interpretation which gives primacy to the statutory language rather than to the language in the rule, namely, that a claim could be made against a third party by a defendant even though he is not seeking to pass on to the third party the losses associated with the plaintiff's claim against the defendant but instead wishes to assert a completely separate cause of action that happens to arise out of the same factual matrix of the claim made by the plaintiff and the defendant and to use that claim to offset his losses associated with the plaintiff's claim against him.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[66] It should also be noted that Hart J.A. in Burry also commented by way of obiter dicta that had a claim been made by the defendant against the third party in negligence as well as in contract, third party joinder might well have been justified on that basis as a claim of apportionment of liability, or contribution, under the Nova Scotia equivalent of our Contributory Negligence Act on the basis that both the defendant and third party owed a duty of care to the plaintiff. See paragraphs 20 and 34. Since negligence had not been pleaded against the third party, however, it was not necessary to decide that point in that case.

[67] A fourth reason to construe rule 12.02 to encompass claims additional to those of contribution and indemnity is that such a construction is more consonant with the underlying purpose of third party procedure. The purpose of the procedure is to prevent multiplicity of actions and to enable the Court to prevent the same question or claims resulting from the same factual circumstances from being tried twice with possibly different results. (See also Fitzpatrick v. A. Harvey & Co. Ltd. et al.(1986), 59 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 144 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.) at para. 147 where the additional related purposes of allowing the third party to defend the plaintiff's claim saving costs and preventing the plaintiff from enforcing a judgment against the defendant before the third party issue is determined, are mentioned at paragraph 14.) Claims against third parties arising out of the circumstances surrounding the plaintiff's claim against the defendant but not strictly involving claims for contribution and indemnity can also fall within these policy objectives. This is certainly the view expressed in Burry, when the Court concluded on the facts of that case that "there are sufficient common issues to justify the holding of a single trial in which all the parties may participate and in which the rights of all parties will be determined…" (paragraph 35).

[68] Accordingly, I conclude, contrary to the assertion in Canadian Acceptance Corp. v. Victoria Insurance Co. of Canada et al., supra to the effect that third party procedure "should not be used in 'claims over' grounded in negligence" (paragraph 161), (or, I would add, claims for damages under a separate contract that did not provide for indemnity), the current rule now allows for those types of claims to be asserted within the third party procedure contemplated by rule 12.02. This means that one does not approach the question of whether the claim is "for all or any part of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant" on the basis of whether, within the rules relating to contribution or indemnity, such liability as a matter of law can be passed on to the third party. Rather, the question is, as a practical matter, can the defendant, by asserting a separate claim arising out of the same factual circumstances and by recovering damages from the third party on the basis of the third party's involvement in those circumstances, effectively make the third party ultimately answer in whole or in part for the losses that have occurred? To the extent that Canadian Acceptance, Collavino and Lundrigan stand for the narrower proposition that third party claims are limited to contribution and indemnity, they should now be regarded as overruled.

[69] Whether third party procedure as contemplated by section 94 of the Judicature Act would also allow, outside the words of rule 12.02, a third party claim that is not "for all or any part of the plaintiff's claim against the defendant" and not dependent in any sense on liability between plaintiff and defendant (provided it still can be said to be "related to or connected with the original subject-matter of the proceeding") is not necessary to be decided in this case and is better left for another day.

B. Procedure for Making a Third Party Claim

[70] The current rules allow a defendant to issue and serve a third party notice without leave of the Court at any time before the defendant files a defence. Once a defence has been filed, however, leave of the Court must be obtained. In situations where leave is not required, therefore, it is possible that a third party notice that makes claims that do not fall within the scope of rule 12.02 may be issued. In those cases, the appropriateness of making a third party claim may nevertheless be raised on an application for directions under rule 12.06(1) or on an application to strike the notice under rule 14.24. In situations where leave to issue is required, the appropriateness of the proposed third party procedure may be dealt with on the leave application. In either situation the considerations are the same.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[71] It is common practice for a defendant who wishes to third party another person to set out in the statement of defence the factual circumstances that justify the claim. Dew has not done so here. However, subject to any irremediable prejudice that may be caused to other parties, that is not fatal to its position. There is nothing in the rules that makes it mandatory.

[72] The nature of the third party claim and "the facts upon which the third party notice is based" must, however, at the very least, be set out in the affidavit supporting the third party application: rule 12.03(2)(c). Furthermore, the facts so relied on must not be inconsistent with the facts pleaded in the defence (rule 14.10) unless they are pleaded in the alternative (rule 14.08: Montana Band v. Canada, [1991] 2 F.C. 273 (Fed. T.D.), aff'd on appeal [1993] 2 C.N.L.R. 134 (FCA)). Failing that, a party must seek leave to amend the factual substratum of the defence before proceeding with the third party application.

[73] On the third party application, the Court must address whether the nature of the claim falls within the scope of third party claims allowed by the rules (or by the Contributory Negligence Act where the claim alleges joint tortfeasors). Although the rules require that all existing parties be given notice of the application, the intended third party (unless already a party in another capacity) need not be given notice or be heard at that stage. This means that if, following service of the notice, the third party believes the procedure is not appropriate, the objection can be raised on an application for directions or for striking out. In practice, notice to the intended third party is often given and the third party appears and may be heard. In the current case, the third parties were heard on the application.

[74] In addition to determining whether the nature of the claim is within the scope of third party procedure, the Court must also consider practical questions related to whether, from a logistical and timing point of view, the third party claim can be accommodated within the contemplated litigation between the plaintiff and defendant. The granting of leave, or the determination of whether a third party claim should be set aside, is a discretionary matter. In exercising the discretion the court must be animated by considerations of justice and fairness to all parties or potential parties. Thus, if the timing of the application to join the third party may compromise a trial between the plaintiff and defendant that is imminent, the Court may exercise its discretion to refuse joinder even if the claim is such that it falls within the scope of the rule: Chain Stores Limited v. Blundon's Realty Limited et al. (1976), 17 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 327 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.).

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[75] Although the third party issues substantively only involve the defendant and third party, the plaintiff nevertheless has an interest in the outcome of a third party joinder application because he or she might be adversely affected both with respect to delay of the proceedings and costs: Canadian Paraplegic Assn. (Newfoundland and Labrador) Inc. v. Sparcott Engineering Ltd. (1997), 150 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 203 (NFCA) at para. 20.

[76] Factors other than delay of the proceeding and proximity to an existing trial date that may be considered include the possibility that the inclusion of third party issues in the trial would unduly complicate the disposition of the trial (Bow Valley Husky (Bermuda) Ltd. v. Saint John Shipbuilding Ltd. (1991), 93 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 104 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.) or would "embarrass or delay the trial or [be] otherwise inconvenient" within the meaning of rule 40.13. It has also been suggested in some cases that a lack of an explanation for delay in making an application to join the third party may justify exercising the discretion to deny the application (Stanford v. Lawton's Drug Stores Ltd., 2013 NLTD(G) 161 at para 20); in most cases, however, delay in applying would not normally, in itself, result in refusal unless another party can show prejudice as a result of the joinder (Congregation of the Sisters of Mercy of Newfoundland v. Stokes Management Ltd. (2002), 217 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 153 (Nfld. S.C.T.D.) at para. 22; Churchill v. Eveleigh, 2012 NLTD(G) 39, 320 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 342 at paras. 25-27), such as substantial increased cost or interference with an existing trial date or significantly prolonging the time before the matter would get to trial.

[77] On an application to join a third party, the accompanying affidavit should not be "limited to a perfunctory recitation of the chronology of events that have occurred to date but [should encompass] a requirement that the applicant make serious efforts to provide the judge information to enable the judge to have as good an overall sense as possible of the impact of the application on the future progress of the proceeding" (Canadian Paraplegic Assn. at paragraph 20).

[78] At the end of the day, the burden is on the applicant for the issuance of the third party notice to justify its issuance.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

Considerations

A. Positions of the Appellant

[79] Ryan Designs and Knight take the position that Dew, as the applicant for the issuance of the third party notice, did not show and could not have shown any reason for joining them as a third party. They argue that the judge's expressed reasoning for ordering joinder (because a relationship existed between all parties which makes it fair and equitable that the third parties save Dew from loss) cannot form a sufficient basis of a decision to join them. It is not simply a sense of perceived fairness and equity which can provide a justification; there must, instead, be a recognized cause of action that is apparent from the pleadings. Without that, it is not enough merely allow third party proceedings solely because it might be more convenient to have all parties involved before the court.

[80] Essentially, Ryan Designs claims, citing Collavino, that Dew must show that there was a contract, either express or implied by law, between Dew and Ryan Designs whereby Ryan Designs was obligated to indemnify Dew with respect to any potential claims made by Pakara, the plaintiff, against Dew. Relying on Dew's defence, to the effect there was no sub-contract between Dew and Ryan Designs but, rather, a direct contract between Pakara and Ryan Designs, Ryan Designs submits that no possible claim for indemnity could be made out. Again relying on Collavino, Ryan says there must be an obligation to indemnify and not simply a right to claim damages over against the third party. Implicit in this argument is that rule 12.02 is limited to claims for contribution and indemnity.

[81] Ryan Designs also submits that Dew could not claim contribution from Ryan Designs on the basis that they were joint tortfeasors because "the parties in this case are not joint tortfeasors as it is a contract case" (Appellant's Factum, paragraph 8).

[82] While supporting Ryan Designs' submissions, Knight additionally submits that on the pleadings and in the affidavit supporting the application there is even a more tenuous connection between Knight and Dew and/or Pakara than there is involving Ryan Designs. The absence of a pleaded relationship of responsibility is, Knight submits, fatal to any claim by Dew that would justify being dragged in as a third party.

B. Analysis of Applications Judges' Approach

[83] The applications judge erred when he concluded that "the applicant…would have to either fall under the category of qualifying as…claiming contribution or, in the alternative that he is claiming or falling under the category of indemnity". For reasons expressed above, rule 12.02 is not limited to claims for indemnity or contribution. That said, it does not follow that the judge had an open-ended discretion to join parties based solely on a perception that it would be "equitable", based on the relationships of the parties and intended third parties, to join a person as a third party even if it might have the incidental effect of eliminating a multiplicity of actions and possible inconsistent findings.

[84] The applications judge ultimately concluded that a third party claim for indemnity existed in this case. He reached that conclusion on the basis of the quotation from Wynne v. Tempest referred to by Goodridge J. in Lundrigan to the effect that a right to indemnity "may arise out of a relationship existing between the parties which makes it equitable that one should save the other from loss." Read in context, that statement does not allow a judge, whenever he thinks it equitable, to declare a right to indemnity to exist just because there is a close relationship between or among the parties. There are established relationships where the principles of equity recognize that a person may, because of the relationship, be obligated in conscience, i.e. in equity, to indemnify another from loss. An example given by Chitty J. in Wynne was:

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

> Such an obligation [to indemnify] arises in equity from the relation of the parties where two trustees are liable for a breach of trust and one has applied the trust fund to his own use; in that case the trustee who has so misapplied the fund is liable to indemnify his co-trustee. (p. 113).

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[85] By concluding that a right to indemnity existed on the pleaded facts without considering whether the relationship was one which was recognized in equity as imposing on the conscience of the potential third party an obligation to save the defendant from loss, the applications judge also erred.

[86] It does not follow from these conclusions of error, however, that the decision reached by the applications judge was necessarily incorrect. There may be other bases, considering the true scope of rule 12.02 or the application of the Contributory Negligence Act, on which the issuance of third party notices could be justified. It is necessary to consider the third party claims against Ryan Designs and Knight separately.

C. Third Party Claim Against Ryan Designs

[87] The starting point in determining whether a third party claim by a defendant is supported by a recognized cause of action is the initial statement of claim. That pleading identifies the nature of the claim to which the defendant is exposed and which the defendant wishes to pass on, in whole or in part, to the putative third party or for which the defendant wishes the third party to face ultimate responsibility. In this case, Pakara claims damages from Dew based on breach of contract and negligence with respect to the construction and design of the apartment septic system by engaging Ryan Designs by way of subcontract to design the system. Pakara therefore claims that Dew engaged Ryan Designs by contract to do the work at issue.

[88] The second place of focus is the defence of the defendant. This defines the position of the defendant and helps identify whether the defendant is asserting that there is a risk of liability to him or her which could be passed on to the third party or for which the defendant considers the third party is ultimately responsible in a chain of responsibility. In this case, Dew's fundamental position is that it did not agree to subcontract the impugned work to Ryan Designs but that Pakara contracted directly with Ryan. That is an assertion that Dew had nothing to do by way of contract or breach of tortious duty with respect to the septic design work. Dew's position is summarized in paragraphs 8 and 19 of its Defence as follows:

> 8. … [Dew] denies it ever had any responsibility for the subcontracting of the sewage disposal design or for ensuring the sewage disposal design was put through the proper government approval process. [Dew] states that responsibility for preparing a sewage disposal system for [Pakara's] apartment complex was the sole and exclusive responsibility of [Ryan Designs].
>
> 19. In summation, [Dew] denies that his work on the design of [Pakara's] apartment building was done negligently or in breach of contract with [Pakara].

The defence is a straightforward denial of any liability with a request for dismissal of the action. In essence, Dew is saying that Pakara has sued the wrong party.

[89] Viewed in isolation, this position does not justify any third party pleading. There is nothing to which, on Dew's position, it can be exposed that needs to be passed on to anyone else. Viewed against Pakara's statement of claim, however, it is obvious that there is a risk of exposure to Dew because the court might ultimately side with Pakara's version of the facts. In that scenario, Dew would face potential liability which it might wish to try to pass on.

[90] Although there is nothing in Dew's defence that pleads any position in the alternative to Dew's stated position that it has no contractual or tortious relationship with Ryan Designs, that is not, as indicated previously, fatal to Dew's position. The basis for a third party claim need not be stated in the defence. It is necessary, however, for a basis for a claim to be disclosed and asserted in the third party notice that is ultimately issued (especially where it can be issued without leave of the court) and as well in the affidavit supporting an application for leave to issue a notice: rule 12.03(2)(c).

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[91] It is necessary therefore to examine Dew's third party application to see if a potential third party claim has been set up. The only assertions in Dew's Interlocutory Application, which was verified by affidavit, that are germane to the current discussion involve four points: (i) a reference to Pakara's statement of claim against Dew (paragraph 1); (ii) the assertion that Ryan Designs and Knight should be joined "to ensure that all parties having potential liability in this matter be brought in as parties before the Court so that the matter can be fully adjudicated" (paragraph 7); (iii) the assertion that Ryan Designs and Knight were "directly accountable" to Pakara and were "the parties responsible for the preparation and certification of the design" and "for any flaws and correction of errors" (paragraph 8); and (iv) a conclusory statement that "therefore" Dew claims indemnity from Ryan Designs and Knight "should any of the claims by [Pakara] against [Dew] for breach of contract and negligence be successful" (paragraph 8).

[92] Item (i) is relevant because it indicates the potential exposure of Dew to liability at the hands of Pakara, if Pakara's version of the facts is ultimately accepted, on the basis that Dew engaged Ryan Designs by virtue of a subcontract and requested them to do the septic design work. Item (ii) is irrelevant because, as noted previously, the prospect of having all involved parties before the court so that the matter can be "fully adjudicated" is not in itself a sufficient justification for joining third parties. Item (iii) does not, by itself, assist a third party claim because it is in effect a disclaimer of all responsibility; although it could be said to assert a possible tortious duty of care ("directly accountable") owed by Ryan Designs to Pakara, it does not also assert that a duty of care is owed jointly by Ryan Designs to Dew as well as Pakara. Item (iv) is an assertion of a right to indemnity as an alternative position if Pakara is successful in its claim that there was a contract between it and Dew and a corresponding subcontract between Dew and Ryan Designs.

[93] The third party notice may also be looked at to glean how the applicant conceptualizes the third party claims. Regrettably, in this case, it is of little help. The notice asserts that Dew has "no liability" for the damages claimed by Pakara and that Pakara's claims "are entirely the responsibility" of Ryan Designs and Knight. It does go on, however, and claim "indemnity" from Ryan Designs for damages, costs and interest "which [Dew] may be ordered to pay to [Pakara]", without stating the basis on which the right to indemnity is being asserted.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[94] This is very thin pleading indeed. It may well leave Dew open to being required to respond to a demand for particulars. It would have been preferable for the applications judge to have required Dew to submit particulars of its proposed third party claim before considering the application further. Nevertheless, it is enough of an indication as to the nature of the type of claim that Dew is asserting. While Dew does not state anywhere the basis on which the indemnity claim is made, it is a fair inference from a reading of Pakara's statement of claim, Dew's defence and the third party application as a whole that Dew is claiming, in the alternative to its view of the facts, that if Pakara's assertions of a contract with Dew, followed by a request by Dew, by way of subcontract with Ryan Designs, that Ryan Designs prepare the septic system design, a right of indemnity arises in the event Ryan Designs did not do the design properly. It is this assertion, which is implicit in the approach Dew has taken to this matter in the pleadings, that must be evaluated as to whether a basis for third party proceedings exists.

[95] In the first place, there is no basis for Dew to claim that it has a claim for damages over against Ryan Designs for negligence (which even though such a claim does not fall within the concept of indemnity is nevertheless covered, in principle, by the scope of rule 12.02 as discussed earlier). Dew does not plead, even in the alternative, a duty of care in tort owed by Ryan Designs to Dew nor are any particulars of negligence asserted. Furthermore, there is nothing in Pakara's statement of claim which could be said, even on Pakara's version of the facts, to allege any tortious relationship between Dew and Ryan Designs as the basis of a duty of care owed by Ryan Designs to Dew. The pleadings are completely deficient with regard to setting up such a claim.

[96] Secondly, in the circumstances, the contribution provisions of the Contributory Negligence Act do not provide a basis for a third party claim here. Those provisions depend on their being alleged, either directly or in the alternative, that the claimed loss was caused "by the fault of 2 or more persons" (section 3). It is only in such circumstances that it could be argued that one tortfeasor can claim contribution from the other for losses to which both contributed. In this case, that would mean there must be a possibility that both Dew and Ryan Designs could be held jointly responsible on the basis of a duty of care owed by each of them to Pakara. See Stanford v. Lawton's Drug Stores Ltd., 2013 NLTD(G) 161 at para. 13. No duties of care have been pleaded by Dew, even in the alternative, as owing by Dew and Ryan Designs to Pakara. Dew has supplied no pleaded facts which would go to support the scenario of fault of both Dew and Ryan Designs contributing to the loss to Pakara.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[97] While it is true that Pakara, in its yet-unamended statement of claim, alleges negligence against both Dew and Ryan Designs, thereby setting up a potential for contribution claims between Dew and Ryan Designs if Pakara's version of the facts is ultimately accepted, Pakara has since discontinued its action against Ryan Designs and has, as indicated earlier, stated its intention to amend the statement of claim to remove all allegations of negligence and breach of contract against Ryan Designs. This appeal proceeded on that basis. There is nothing arising from Pakara's pleading, therefore, that can be relied on by Dew to raise the possibility of a contribution claim against Ryan Designs (indeed, Dew based its application on indemnity alone, not contribution) without Dew amending its own pleadings and re-applying to make a third party claim on this basis.

[98] Thirdly, no express or contractual indemnity is pleaded, simply an obligation to indemnify without asserting how such obligation arises on the facts. Consequently, there is no basis for claiming an express right of indemnity.

[99] That leaves two questions: (i) whether it can be said Dew has sufficiently claimed an indemnity arising by operation of law, and (ii) whether Dew may third party Ryan Designs on the basis of a claim of breach of contract not amounting to an indemnity. While, as I have said, the pleadings leave a lot to be desired, the indemnity claim may be able to be supported on the basis of a claim by Dew, in the alternative, that if Dew is responsible to Pakara under a contract between them, and Dew in fact requested Ryan Designs to perform the design work, a right to claim indemnity from Ryan Designs arose if Ryan Designs did not perform their work adequately, thereby causing Dew to breach its contract with Pakara. While the evidence at trial might well not establish this factual scenario, it remains a possible conclusion to which the court might come.

[100] In Birmingham and District Land Co., Cotton, L.J. observed in obiter at p. 272:

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

> [I]f A. requests B. to do a thing for him, and B. in consequence of his doing that act is subject to some liability or loss, then in consequence of the request to do the act the law implies a contract by A. to indemnify B. from the consequences of his doing it.

[101] The situation thus described is, of course, the reverse of the situation here, where the indemnity is being sought from the requested party. It does not follow in the reverse situation, however, that an implied obligation to indemnify would necessarily arise simply from the party being requested undertaking the work. In Birmingham, Fry L.J. observed at p. 276:

> When a man contracts that he will do a thing, it can hardly be taken as implying a contract as to what will arise if he does not do the thing. In the same manner with regard to tort, the right to damages for tort does not arise from any implied contract that if I do wrong I will indemnify the person wronged for the wrong I have done. It is the common law right which everyone has to damages for a wrong which has been done to him. Therefore the right to such damages is not a right to indemnity…

Something more is required before a right to indemnity can arise. The situation has to be such that from the relationship of the parties, it was understood or implied that by doing the work the requested party was undertaking that if it was done incorrectly, he or she would stand behind the work and indemnify the requestor from resulting loss. It was put this way by Bowen L.J. in Birmingham at p. 274:

> [A right to indemnity arises] by implied contract if the true inference to be drawn from the facts is that the parties intended such indemnity, even if they did not express themselves to that effect, or if there is a state of circumstances to which the law attaches a legal or equitable duty to indemnify, there being many cases in which a remedy is given on an assumed promise by a person to do what, under the circumstances, he ought to do.

[102] While it is impossible to tell at this point whether this scenario is a likely result, it cannot be discounted entirely. Even if such an implied indemnity cannot be said to have been contemplated, however, a claim by Dew against Ryan Designs for damages for breach of contract for failing to design the septic system properly clearly remains a possibility on Pakara's version of the facts and as an alternative claim by Dew. As noted previously, rule 12.02 permits a claim over for damages even if the claim does not amount to a claim for indemnity. This is recognized in Burry, where Hart J.A. commented:

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

> [35] Surely, as here, where one party undertakes an obligation to provide a housing unit to its customer "constructed in a thorough and workmanlike manner" and then contracts with another party to construct that unit in a similar manner, and it was subsequently alleged that the unit was not properly constructed, there are sufficient common issues to justify the holding of a single trial in which all parties may participate and in which the rights of all parties will be determined in accordance with the findings of the judge.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

[103] In the current context, therefore, depending on how the evidence unfolds and what findings the trial judge makes, it is possible that Dew could have a claim against Ryan Designs to be indemnified for losses Dew faces at the hands of Pakara on the basis that, having been requested to undertake the work in a competent manner and undertaking it, Ryan Designs was implicitly undertaking that if it was not competently performed, Ryan Designs would indemnify Dew from any resulting loss. Alternatively, and perhaps more likely, Dew could have a claim against Ryan Designs for damages for breach of contract. Either of these types of claims can be the subject of third party proceedings.

[104] Of course, at this point all of this is speculative. One of the reasons for this is the high level of abstraction with which all of the claims have been made and the fundamental disagreement between Dew and Pakara as to who contracted with whom (presumably - and surprisingly - because the engagements were not reduced to writing or evidenced in writing). The result has been an absence of particulars that might better define the scope of claims being advanced, especially against third parties in the event alternative scenarios come to pass.

[105] Nevertheless, given the state of the pleadings and the possibility that a third party claim could arise for the reasons earlier expressed, it would be inappropriate not to allow the third party claim to proceed against Ryan Designs on the bases mentioned. It would be important, however, for further particulars of the claim to be provided on the alternative basis that Dew will not be able to establish its claim of lack of any responsibility. Perhaps when further discoveries are undertaken or the basis of Pakara's position otherwise becomes clearer, it will be easier to flesh out such alternative claims. This Court has the power on appeal to allow amendments to pleadings, especially where the matter has not yet proceeded to trial and the substantive issues between the parties remain to be decided: rules 15.09 and 57.23(1)(b); Kavanagh v. Newfoundland (Minister of Education), 2000

NFCA 2, 183 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 282 at paragraph 15. Dew should therefore be given leave to amend its third party claim.

[106] Finally, I would observe in passing that none of the discretionary factors that might nevertheless justify the Court in refusing leave to issue the third party notice – even if a potential third party claim was disclosed as discussed previously in paragraphs 74-77 – were not raised on the original application and hence do not need to be addressed here.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

D. Third Party Claim Against Knight

[107] Many of the foregoing comments also apply to Knight except in one important respect. There is nothing in any of the pleadings, including Pakara's statement of claim, to suggest that Knight's engagement was as a result of any request from or subcontract with Dew. Thus, the bases upon which Dew could justify third party proceedings against Ryan Designs do not apply to Knight. There is no basis therefore for allowing the third party claim in that respect to proceed. The third party notice against Knight should therefore be set aside.

Conclusion and Disposition

[108] The appeal should be allowed in part. The order of the applications judge authorizing the joinder of Carl Knight as a third party should be set aside with costs on a party and party basis being paid by Dew.

[109] The appeal against the order of the applications judge authorizing the joinder of Otto Ryan, operating as Ryan Designs should be dismissed with costs payable by Otto Ryan to Dew on a party and party basis.

[110] Counsel for Pakara Apartments Ltd. appeared at the request of the Court to clarify certain pleading and procedural matters but did not participate in the substantive issues engaged on the appeal. No costs order should be made for or against their client.

[111] Dew Enterprises Ltd. should also be granted leave to amend its third party claim against Otto Ryan to further particularize, as an alternative claim, the bases upon which its claim for indemnity is being pursued.

_____

J.D. Green C.J.N.L.

I Concur: _____

C.W. White J.A.

I Concur: _____

M.F. Harrington J.A.

2014 NLCA 11 (CanLII)

Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta

Citation: Paramount Resources Ltd v Grey Owl Engineering Ltd, 2022 ABQB 333

2022 ABQB 333 (CanLII)

Date: 20220509
Docket: 1909 00014
Registry: Peace River

Between:

Paramount Resources Ltd

Plaintiff/Respondent/Applicant

- and -

Grey Owl Engineering Ltd., Keith Osmond, WF Holdings Ltd., Chad Sletten, 2088752 Alberta Ltd. carrying on business as Custom Fiberglass Contractors Ltd., P.G.T. Holdings Ltd. carrying on business as Chief Pipeline Contractors Limited, and Crossfire Energy Services Inc.

Defendant/Applicant/Respondent

Memorandum of Decision
of the
Honourable Madam Justice S.L. Kachur

---

[1] The Plaintiff, Paramount Resources Ltd. ("Paramount"), is a pipeline owner and operator. In early 2018, Paramount became aware of an environmental leak from its pipeline that it was required to remediate, allegedly at a cost of some $20 million. The Defendants were involved in the construction of the pipeline or the insertion of a fiberglass liner into the pipeline in 2004.

[2] On February 6, 2019, Paramount commenced an action against the Defendants for negligence related to alleged deficiencies in the construction of the pipeline. In particular, Paramount alleges that some or all of the Defendants failed to bury the pipeline deep enough underground to avoid exposure to frost, as was necessary to prevent damage to the fiberglass material used in construction, and further that the Defendants failed to inform Paramount of this failure.

[3] The Defendants apply for summary dismissal of the negligence claim on the grounds that it was filed after the 10-year ultimate limitation date in section 3(1)(b) of the Limitations Act, RSA 2000, c L-12, and further that the claim warrants summary dismissal on the merits.

[4] Paramount denies that the 10-year drop-dead date in the Limitations Act has passed or, in the alternative, cross-applies for an extension to the limitation period under section 218 of the Environmental Protection and Enhancement Act, RSA 2000, c E-12 ("EPEA"). Paramount also opposes summary dismissal on the merits.

[5] For the reasons that follow, I grant Defendants' application and summarily dismiss Paramount's claim.

2022 ABQB 333 (CanLII)

Factual Background

[6] In 2004, Paramount (under its previous name "Apache") undertook a project to convert its pipeline from a simple steel pipe to a "carrier" pipe. This involved inserting a fiberglass liner into the existing pipeline.

[7] The Defendants were involved in this project in various ways. Grey Owl Engineering and its project manager Keith Osmond (collectively "Grey Owl") acted as project manager and submitted the necessary regulatory application on behalf of Paramount. WF Holdings and its quality control supervisor Chad Sletten (collectively "WF") supplied and installed the fiberglass liner. 2088752 Alberta Ltd. and P.G.T. Holdings Ltd. assisted in the installation of the liner.

[8] The project was completed in 2004 and the pipeline operated for 11 years without incident until it was discontinued in 2015. In 2017, Paramount began taking steps to re-activate the pipeline. A successful hydro pressure test was completed in December 2017 and pipeline operation resumed, but in April 2018 two environmental leaks were found and the operation was discontinued.

[9] In order avoid damage that can be caused by water freezing inside the pipeline, the technical specifications of the fiberglass liner stipulate that it must be buried below the frost line. The evidence suggests an appropriate depth of between 1.5m-1.8m. Subsequent investigation revealed several places where the pipeline was not buried deep enough. In some places, it was as shallow as 0.4m.

[10] Paramount was forced to remediate the environmental damage, the cost of which has already been significant and is expected to rise further.

Issues

[11] The issues before me are:

1. Has the 10-year ultimate limitation period expired?
2. If so, should an extension be granted under section 218 of the EPEA?
3. If the action is not limitation-barred, should Paramount's action be summarily dismissed for lack of merit?

Has the 10-year drop-dead limitation period expired?

[12] The relevant passages from section 3 of the Limitations Act are:

> 3(1) Subject to subsections (1.1) and (1.2) and sections 3.1 and 11, if a claimant does not seek a remedial order within
>
> …
>
> (b) 10 years after the claim arose,
>
> whichever period expires first, the defendant, on pleading this Act as a defence, is entitled to immunity from liability in respect of the claim.
>
> …
>
> (3) For the purposes of subsections (1)(b) and (1.1)(b),
>
> (a) a claim or any number of claims based on any number of breaches of duty, resulting from a continuing course of conduct or a series of related acts or omissions, arises when the conduct terminates or the last act or omission occurs;
>
> …
>
> (e) a claim for contribution arises when the claimant for contribution is made a defendant in respect of, or incurs a liability through the settlement of, a claim seeking to impose a liability on which the claim for contribution can be based, whichever occurs first;

[13] Paramount argues the 10-year ultimate limitation clock only started running when the pipeline leak was discovered in April 2018. The basis for its argument is its interpretation of section 3(3)(e).

[14] Paramount says that the negligence claim is, at its heart, a claim for contribution and indemnity. Paramount has remediation obligations under the EPEA which it says result from negligent construction work done by the Defendants. It claims only for the remediation expenses, not for any other damage done to Paramount's pipeline or operations. Therefore, it is essentially making claim for contribution to its statutory remediation obligations.

[15] Once it has been established that this is a contribution claim, Paramount says section 3(3)(e) of the Limitations Act applies, and the 10-year limitation period thus began when Paramount became liable under the EPEA in April 2018.

[16] A similar interpretation of section 3(3)(e) was advanced in Addison & Leyen Ltd v Fraser Milner Casgrain LLP, 2014 ABCA 230, though I note the decision mistakenly refers to it as section 3(3)(b) at para 14. An allegedly negligent tax opinion led to a statutory obligation to the Minister of National Revenue the plaintiff's tax filing was re-assessed. The plaintiffs brought a claim against the lawyers who had prepared the opinion, attempting to characterize it as a contribution claim for limitation purposes.

[17] While the Court of Appeal did not foreclose the possibility of section 3(3)(e) applying to equitable contribution claims, the panel rejected the characterization of the claim as one of contribution. The Court noted that equitable contribution has narrow application, at para 29:

2022 ABQB 333 (CanLII)

[29] While these cases provide diverse factual examples giving rise to a right of implied indemnity, courts have cautioned against the unprincipled expansion of these claims. In R v Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd, the Supreme Court of Canada stated (at para 147):

> Equitable indemnity is a narrow doctrine, confined to situations of an express or implied understanding that a principal will indemnify its agent for acting on the directions given. As stated in Parmley v. Parmley, [1945] S.C.R. 635, claims of equitable indemnity "proceed upon the notion of a request which one person makes under circumstances from which the law implies that both parties understand that the person who acts upon the request is to be indemnified if he does so" (p. 648, quoting Bowen L.J. in Birmingham and District Land Co. v. London and North Western Railway Co. (1886), 34 Ch. D. 261, at p. 275.)

[18] The Court identified three major issues with the plaintiffs' argument, at paras 34, 39, and 40-43:

> [34] There are several problems with the appellants' approach. First, the common law of implied indemnity is rooted in the principles of restitution and unjust enrichment. An indemnity permits the reimbursement of damages paid by an innocent party to a third party on behalf of the true wrongdoer, where that wrongdoer should otherwise have been liable to pay. A right to reimbursement through an implied indemnity does not arise in every situation in which A becomes liable to C in connection with the negligence of B. That connection must be supported by a theory of legal or equitable liability between the third party and the party against whom the indemnity is sought (Ryan v Dew Enterprises Ltd at para 54).
>
> ...
>
> [39] Secondly, the appellants' approach does not distinguish between the availability of a claim for implied indemnity and a claim for damages in tort or contract. A common law right to damages for a wrong is not an implied contract that the defendant will indemnify the plaintiff in connection with the wrongdoing (Birmingham at 276*; Ryan v Dew Enterprises Ltd* at para 54).
>
> ...
>
> [40] An implied indemnity may arise where the wrongdoer's negligence causes damage to a third party for which the party seeking the indemnity is held liable. However, there must be a connection between the wrongdoer, the third party, and the damage.
>
> [41] For example, in Edmonton (City) v Lovat Tunnel Equipment Inc, 2000 ABQB 882, 279 AR 1, the court concluded that a right of indemnity could have been implied had the party who was not at fault (the seller of defective equipment) been held liable for damage suffered by the City of Edmonton as a result of using the defective equipment manufactured by the negligent party (at para 385). By contrast, where a plaintiff is liable for damages or expenses to a > third party, and that liability is, at law, independent of the wrongdoer and his negligent act, no implied indemnity can follow. The plaintiff's common law right is only in damages.

2022 ABQB 333 (CanLII)

>
> [42] In this case, the appellants have admittedly suffered losses as a result of relying on the respondents' tax opinion. The respondents' negligent act, however, had no impact on the Minister as the third party to which the tax liability was owed. That liability flowed from the Minister's assessment of the appellants for York's outstanding tax liability and the appellants' obligations under the Income Tax Act.
>
> [43] Finally, the policy implications of such an extension of the common law are significant. Anyone who gives advice could be considered to provide an implied indemnity to their clients, covering any loss incurred in relying on that advice. Under the Limitations Act, those professionals would be subject to indeterminate litigation under a never-ending limitations period. It is, of course, open to the parties to negotiate for and include a specific promise of indemnity in a retainer agreement. The agreement at issue in this case did not include a specific indemnity clause.
>
> [Emphasis added]

[19] A key point in Addison was that the negligent law firm could never have been liable directly to the Minister. On this issue, Paramount advances an interpretation of the EPEA to argue that the Defendants could have been directly liable to for the environmental damage.

[20] Section 107 is found at the beginning of Part 5 of the EPEA, which concerns the release of substances. The following is taken directly from Paramount's brief:

> 107(1) In this Part,
>
> …
>
> (c) "person responsible for the contaminated site" means
>
> (i) a person responsible for the substance that is in, on or under the contaminated site,
>
> …
>
> Section 1(tt) defines "person responsible", when used with reference to a substance or a thing containing a substance, as including "every person who has or has had charge, management or control of the substance or thing, including, without limitation, the manufacture, treatment, sale, handling, use, storage, disposal, transportation, display or method of application of the substance or thing". The Defendants had charge or responsibility for ensuring that the Pipeline installation was properly done and complied with the CSA. The Pipeline was used to transport the emulsion in Paramount's Zama field.
>
> [Emphasis in original]

[21] Paramount points to Lakeview Village Professional Centre Corporation v Suncor Energy Inc, 2016 ABQB 288 as support for a broad interpretation of sections 218 and 107, that would include the Defendants as "persons responsible" under the EPEA.

2022 ABQB 333 (CanLII)

[22] On the facts before me, I cannot accept Paramount's position. To suggest that "person responsible" includes everyone who was ever involved in construction of a pipeline is not, in my view, what the EPEA contemplates. I am not persuaded that, having been contracted to build a pipeline to carry a potentially polluting substance, the Defendants ever had "charge" of the substances transported within the pipeline. In my view, only Paramount ever had charge of the substances.

[23] Therefore, even if they had committed negligence that resulted in the leak, it has not been made clear that the Defendants could have been liable under the EPEA. They would certainly be liable in negligence to Paramount, but Addison is clear: that alone is not enough for equitable contribution.

[24] Absent clear legislative language or appellate guidance, I believe it would be an unwarranted expansion of equitable indemnity to allow it in this case. The policy concerns raised in Addison are also relevant here. I am greatly concerned about exposing contractors and subcontractors to limitless liability simply because their work carries environmental risk. Exceptions to limitation periods are few, and they should not be expanded lightly.

[25] I find that Paramount's claim is simple negligence, not contribution, and section 3(3)(e) therefore does not apply. The claim arose when the alleged negligent act occurred in 2004, per section 3(3)(a) of the Limitations Act, and the 10-year ultimate limitation period has passed.

[26] Therefore, subject to an extension under section 218 of the EPEA, I would summarily dismiss the claim on limitation grounds.

Should an extension be granted under section 218 of the EPEA?

[27] Section 218 reads:

> 218 (1) A judge of the Court of Queen's Bench may, on application, extend a limitation period provided by a law in force in Alberta for the commencement of a civil proceeding where the basis for the proceeding is an alleged adverse effect resulting from the alleged release of a substance into the environment.
>
> (2) An application under subsection (1) may be made before or after the expiry of the limitation period.
>
> (3) In considering an application under subsection (1), the judge shall consider the following factors, where information is available:
>
> (a) when the alleged adverse effect occurred;
>
> (b) whether the alleged adverse effect ought to have been discovered by the claimant had the claimant exercised due diligence in ascertaining the presence of the alleged adverse effect, and whether the claimant exercised such due diligence;
>
> (c) whether extending the limitation period would prejudice the proposed defendant's ability to maintain a defence to the claim on the merits;

2022 ABQB 333 (CanLII)

> (d) any other criteria the court considers to be relevant.

[28] As noted in Paramount's brief, applying section 218 requires a balancing of the competing policy objectives of the Limitations Act and the EPEA.

[29] The 10-year time limit in section 3(1)(b) of the Limitations Act favours finality. It is important that potential liabilities are eventually put to rest so that people can move forward without having to keep reserves in case an ancient claim rears its head. It is also a recognition of the practical problems that arise from lost records and faded memories, which only add to the difficulties associated with proof at trial: Brookfield Residential (Alberta) LP (Carma Developers LP) v Imperial Oil Limited, 2019 ABCA at para 12.

[30] By contrast, section 218 of the EPEA accords with the broader environmental objectives of the Act. It places primacy on the societal benefit of having a polluter to pay for cleanup, and recognizes the practical reality that environmental damage can sometimes go undetected for many years and place a substantial burden on innocent parties: Brookfield at para 13.

[31] Paramount correctly notes that the extension it requests is quite small in the context of the section 218 jurisprudence. The statement of claim was filed on February 6, 2019, approximately five years after the 10-year limitation period expired in 2014. Much longer extensions have been granted, see for example Wainwright Equipment Rentals Ltd. v Imperial Oil Limited, 2003 ABQB 898.

[32] However, it is not the length of the requested extension but rather the facts of this case that distinguish Paramount's request from the jurisprudence on section 218 extensions.

[33] I have been offered no case law where a property owner has attempted, let alone succeeded, in using section 218 make claims against other alleged contributors. The section is aimed at ensuring that there is someone to pay for the cost of environmental damage that would otherwise be borne by society. Whether there is anyone to bear the cost is not at issue here, this dispute is about who will pay.

[34] This is also not a case of a long-undetected emission that became a problem for an innocent party many years later, as was the case in every decision on section 218 that was provided to me. According to Paramount, it conducted a flyover examination of the pipeline on April 3, 2018 and found nothing out of the ordinary, and then the leak was discovered on April 11. This would appear to indicate, to Paramount's credit, that the leak was detected after only a few days.

[35] If the leak truly was caused the Defendants' negligence, then dismissing the claim on the basis of the Limitations Act will result in unfairness. This is a necessary side effect of limitations legislation, counterbalanced by other policy considerations as discussed above. But section 218 does not exist as a remedy to the inherent unfairness that can result from claims being limitation-barred. Rather, the EPEA intervenes to balance this against the societal injustice that can result when polluters escape expensive environmental remediation bills which, by their very nature, often go undetected for long periods of time: Lakeview Village at para 7.

[36] In sum, it is not clear to me that granting an extension on these facts would accord whatsoever with the purposes of section 218. There was no long-undetected leak, and there is no question that a "person responsible" is available to pay. Absent these factors, and bearing in mind that section 218 applications are about balancing the competing objectives of the EPEA and the Limitations Act, I can find no path to granting an extension.

2022 ABQB 333 (CanLII)

[37] On this basis, I decline to grant an extension under section 218 of the EPEA. In the result, Paramount's claim against the Defendants is time-barred, and I grant the Defendants' application for summary dismissal.

If the action is not time-barred, should Paramount's action be summarily dismissed for lack of merit?

[38] My decisions on the issues above are sufficient to dispose of this application. However, in the event that I am wrong, I will briefly address the merits issue.

[39] Summary dismissal on the merits is appropriate where there is no genuine issue requiring trial, as explained in Hryniak v Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7 at para 49:

> [49] There will be no genuine issue requiring a trial when the judge is able to reach a fair and just determination on the merits on a motion for summary judgment. This will be the case when the process (1) allows the judge to make the necessary findings of fact, (2) allows the judge to apply the law to the facts, and (3) is a proportionate, more expeditious and less expensive means to achieve a just result.

[40] The key considerations of this test were articulated in Weir-Jones Technical Services Incorporated v Purolator Courier Ltd, 2019 ABCA 49 at para 47:

> [47] The proper approach to summary dispositions, based on the Hryniak v Mauldin test, should follow the core principles relating to summary dispositions, the standard of proof, the record, and fairness. The test must be predictable, consistent, and fair to both parties. The procedure and the outcome must be just, appropriate, and reasonable. The key considerations are:
>
> a) Having regard to the state of the record and the issues, is it possible to fairly resolve the dispute on a summary basis, or do uncertainties in the facts, the record or the law reveal a genuine issue requiring a trial?
>
> b) Has the moving party met the burden on it to show that there is either "no merit" or "no defence" and that there is no genuine issue requiring a trial? At a threshold level the facts of the case must be proven on a balance of probabilities or the application will fail, but mere establishment of the facts to that standard is not a proxy for summary adjudication.
>
> c) If the moving party has met its burden, the resisting party must put its best foot forward and demonstrate from the record that there is a genuine issue requiring a trial. This can occur by challenging the moving party's case, by identifying a positive defence, by showing that a fair and just summary disposition is not realistic, or by otherwise demonstrating that there is a genuine issue requiring a trial. If there is a genuine issue requiring a trial, summary disposition is not available.

2022 ABQB 333 (CanLII)

> d) In any event, the presiding judge must be left with sufficient confidence in the state of the record such that he or she is prepared to exercise the judicial discretion to summarily resolve the dispute.
>
> To repeat, the analysis does not have to proceed sequentially, or in any particular order. The presiding judge may determine, during any stage of the analysis, that summary adjudication is inappropriate or potentially unfair because the record is unsuitable, the issues are not amenable to summary disposition, a summary disposition may not lead to a "just result", or there is a genuine issue requiring a trial.

[41] The record before me leaves too much uncertainty to be resolved on a summary basis. There are credibility issues as to how much Paramount knew about the depth of the pipeline. The Defendants raise a potential intervening cause, namely the hydro pressure test conducted prior to the re-activation of the pipeline, which would require competing expert testimony to resolve.

[42] Some of the uncertainty is a result of the time that has passed. One of the Defendant's key witnesses has passed away. There appear to be documents missing which might have helped explain the issues, but they have been lost due to the passage of time. These problems further support my decision that the policy considerations of the Limitations Act indicate against an extension under the EPEA.

[43] If I am incorrect about the claim being limitation-barred, I would decline to grant summary dismissal on the merits.

Conclusion

[44] I grant the Defendants' application for summary dismissal. The Plaintiff's claim is dismissed. If the parties cannot agree on costs, they may write to me within 30 days of this decision.

Heard on the 14th and 15th days of October, 2021.
Dated at the City of Calgary, Alberta this 9th day of May, 2022.

S. L. Kachur
J.C.Q.B.A.

2022 ABQB 333 (CanLII)

Appearances:

Raj Datt
for the Plaintiff, Paramount Resources Ltd.

Geoffrey Duckworth
for the Defendants, Grey Owl Engineering Ltd. and Keith Osmond

David M. Pick for the Defendant, 2088752 Alberta Ltd. carrying on business as Custom Fibreglass Contractors Ltd.

Don Dear, Q.C.
for the Defendants, WF Holdings Ltd. and Chad Sletten

David M. Stults for the Defendant, P.G.T. Holdings Ltd. carrying on business as Chief Pipeline Contractors Limited

2022 ABQB 333 (CanLII)

Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta

Citation: Isfeld v. Petersen Pontiac Buick GMC (Alta.) Inc., 2012 ABQB 444

Date: 20120710
Docket: 0403 01390
Registry: Edmonton

2012 ABQB 444 (CanLII)

Between:

Lawrence Robert Isfeld and 257353 B.C. Ltd.

Plaintiffs

- and -

Petersen Pontiac Buick GMC (Alta.) Inc. and John J.K. Campbell

Defendants

Corrected judgment: A corrigendum was issued on June 10, 2013; the corrections have been made to the text and the corrigendum is appended to this judgment.

Supplemental Reasons
of the
Honourable Mr. Justice R.A. Jerke

---

[1] Oral reasons for Judgment were given on May 17, 2012. The parties have requested clarification on four matters.

Several Liability

[2] In my Reasons I stated as follows:

> Mr. Campbell and Petersen Pontiac were not acting in concert or in furtherance of a common purpose. The causes of action against them are separate and distinct, and therefore their liability to the Plaintiffs is several. This is the case even though > the nature and quantum of the damages claimed against each defendant are identical.

>
> Here, both Petersen Pontiac's breach of contract and Mr. Campbell's negligence and breach of contract led to the same result: the Easement amendments are not effective against the Purchaser of Lot 4A.
>
> I am of the view that where one defendant is found liable for professional malpractice in a case where separate causes of action lead to the same consequence, plaintiffs who are the defendant's former clients are not bound to exhaust all remedial efforts against the other contracting party before claiming from their professional advisor.
>
> Therefore, as in 789538 Ontario Ltd v Gambin Associates, I find that the nature of Mr. Campbell's liability is secondary, but this does not prohibit the Plaintiffs from collecting judgment against him first. Once Mr. Campbell makes the Plaintiffs whole, he is entitled to an assignment of the Plaintiffs' Judgment against Petersen Pontiac.

[3] Paragraph 5 of the draft Judgment Roll as proposed by Mr. Cranston, Q.C. is appropriate.

Commencement Date for Interest

[4] In my Reasons I stated as follows:

> Petersen Pontiac moved off Lot 4B in July 2003, and Park Mazda moved in. Mr. Isfeld testified that when Park Mazda took possession of Lot 4B in July 2003, it would not agree to purchase at that time due to the existence of the unamended Easement. ...
>
> The Plaintiffs are entitled to Pre-judgment Interest from August 1, 2003.

[5] The commencement date for interest is August 1, 2003.

The Rate of Interest

[6] In my Reasons I stated as follows:

> The Plaintiffs are entitled to Pre-judgment Interest from ...

[7] After delivery of my Reasons a question was raised concerning interest. I directed that interest would be as per the rate prescribed by the Regulation. While my intention was to make an award of interest under s. 4 of the Judgment Interest Act, further analysis is required to determine whether the award is non-pecuniary (so s. 4(1) applies) or pecuniary (so s. 4(2) applies). While no definition is found in the Judgment Interest Act, > Pecuniary loss refers to loss of financial benefit such as loss of future income or loss of support. Non-pecuniary loss refers to those losses traditionally viewed as intangible ones. ...

2012 ABQB 444 (CanLII)

>
> Ferraiuolo Estate v Olson, (2004), 357 AR 68 (Alta CA), para 18

[8] Applying this definition, the diminution in value due to the easement ($108,333.00) and the loss due to Operational Impact ($50,000.00) are pecuniary, where s. 4(2) applies to them. The intangible losses ($50,000.00) are non-pecuniary where s. 4(1) applies to them.

Costs

[9] After delivery of my Reasons there was discussion about costs. I directed that the usual rules would apply and costs were awarded under the appropriate column in accordance with the award. Accordingly, the Plaintiffs are not entitled to costs for first or second counsel for the 9.5 estimated trial days not used for trial.

Heard on the 17th day of May, 2012.
Dated at the City of Lethbridge, Alberta this 6th day of July, 2012

R.A. Jerke
J.C.Q.B.A.

2012 ABQB 444 (CanLII)

Appearances:

Fraser Milner Casgrain LLP
Richard J. Cotter, Q.C.
For the Plaintiffs

Nicholl & Akers
George H. Akers
for the Defendant Petersen Pontiac Buick GMC (Alta.) Inc.

Bennett Jones LLP
Donald Cranston, Q.C.
for the Defendant John J.K. Campbell

2012 ABQB 444 (CanLII)

Corrigendum of the Supplemental Reasons of
The Honourable Mr. Justice R.A. Jerke

---

1. On page 1, in the style of cause and throughout the Judgment changed the spelling of the Defendant “Peterson” to “Petersen”.

2012 ABQB 444 (CanLII)

Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta

Citation: RBC Life Insurance Company v Heritage Insurance & Consulting Ltd, 2014 ABQB 595

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

Date: 20140929
Docket: 1103 19632
Registry: Edmonton

Between:

RBC Life Insurance Company

Appellant (Plaintiff)

- and -

Heritage Insurance & Consulting Ltd. v Dennis M. Erker

Respondents (Defendants)

Reasons for Judgment
of the
Honourable Mr. Justice K.G. Nielsen

I. Introduction

[1] RBC Life Insurance Company (RBC Life) claims indemnity of, or in the alternative, contribution to the amount of $866,000 plus interest against Heritage Insurance and Consulting Ltd. (Heritage) and Dennis M. Erker (Erker) (collectively the Defendants).

[2] A Master concluded that the action is barred by s. 3(1)(b) of the Limitations Act, RSA 2000, c L-12 and granted summary judgment dismissing RBC Life's claim (2014 ABQB 130).

[3] RBC Life appeals that decision.

II. Background

[4] Two affidavits are in evidence before the Court: the Affidavit of Erker, dated December 6, 2012, and the Affidavit of Kim Prestidge, Director, Client Services of RBC Life, dated May 30, 2013. The questioning of each affiant is also before the Court.

[5] Erker is an insurance agent employed by an insurance broker, Heritage. Erker is licenced to sell life and disability insurance products in the Province of Alberta. In 1991 and 1995, Heritage and Erker entered into separate Agent Agreements with The Prudential of America Life Insurance Company (Canada) (Prudential). Under those agreements, the Defendants were appointed as agents of Prudential for the purposes of soliciting applications for Prudential products, and servicing the resulting contracts and insurance policies.

[6] Erker, through Heritage, provided services as an insurance agent to Mr. and Mrs. S (the Clients). Erker assisted the Clients in obtaining a Prudential life insurance policy, effective November 16, 1999 (the Policy). Both Clients were insured pursuant to the Policy which provided for a basic life benefit of $6,000,000 at an annual premium of $127,952.41, payable over 10 years.

[7] The premium payable for the Policy is based on what is referred to as the Mortality Charge Method (MCM). The Policy provided that the MCM options included: Level For Life also referred to as Level Cost of Insurance (LCOI), and Yearly Renewable Term (YRT). The MCM chosen affects the amount of premium payable and the length of the term over which the premiums are to be paid. The premiums are determined in part by the rate of return on the premiums paid which is expected to be earned as at the inception of the Policy. The rate of return actually achieved over the course of the Policy could result in the insurer demanding that the insureds make additional premium contributions during the currency of the Policy to maintain it in good standing.

[8] When the Policy was initially issued, the Clients chose YRT as the MCM. This resulted in a premium of $127,952.41 payable over 10 years.

[9] In examination on his affidavit, Erker stated that shortly after receipt of the Policy, the Clients elected to change the MCM to LCOI with payments of $47,125 over life.

[10] On December 29, 1999, Prudential received an Application for Policy Change (the Application). The Application was prepared by Heritage and requested a change "from annual premium $127,952.41 over 10 years to annual premium $47,125 over life". The attached illustration described the "Cost of Insurance" as being LCOI.

[11] A representative of Prudential reviewed the Application and noted: "Agent's illustration sent not valid as showing Policy LCOI (it is YRT)". This conclusion was not communicated to Heritage or Erker.

[12] On January 1, 2000, RBC Life assumed Prudential's contractual duties, obligations and liabilities with respect to the Policy.

[13] Ms. Prestidge acknowledged in questioning on her affidavit that Prudential or RBC Life made an administrative error in failing to carry out the instruction that the annual premium of $47,126 would continue "over life" as requested in the Application, but that such a change would not have necessitated a change to the MCM. She stated that the Defendants should have recorded on the Application that they wanted to reissue the Policy, and requested a change in the MCM to LCOI "so that everybody was clear".

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

[14] On January 20, 2000, RBC Life issued a Policy Change Summary, which changed the premium for the Policy from $127,952.41 for 10 years to $47,125 for 10 years.

[15] Ms. Prestidge acknowledged during questioning that RBC Life did not send the Policy Change Summary to the Defendants.

[16] She further stated that PPI Financial Group (PPI) was a Managing General Agent which performed services for agents including the Defendants. Those services included obtaining policy information from RBC Life. She could not confirm that the Policy Change Summary was sent to PPI.

[17] On February 1, 2000, RBC Life issued a Confirmation Notice which stated that "the new scheduled premium shall be $47,125 payable annually for Policy Years 1 through 10", effective as of the initial date of the Policy.

[18] On February 12, 2003, March 25, 2003 and June 16, 2003, RBC Life received Client Services Request forms with respect to the Policy from PPI. Following receipt of these Client Service Requests from PPI, RBC Life did not receive any requests from the Defendants or the Clients to make any changes to the Policy.

[19] In questioning on his Affidavit, Erker stated that PPI provided local service to Heritage for insurers including RBC Life, and from time to time PPI would look at Heritage's "block of business" for opportunities to increase revenue for both PPI and Heritage. Erker further testified that neither he, nor to his knowledge anyone else from Heritage, requested any of the changes referred to in the Client Services Requests in early 2003.

[20] On December 18, 2009, Heritage advised RBC Life that the Clients had not received a premium notice from RBC Life for the current year. It was determined at that time that, upon receipt of the Application, RBC Life had changed the premium from $127,952.41 to the amount of $47,125 but the period for payment of the premium had not been changed from 10 years to life.

[21] On January 6, 2010, RBC Life advised the Clients that effective November 16, 2009 the premium of $47,125 for the Policy would be payable for policy years 11 through 48 which would take the Policy to the 100th birthday of the youngest of the two Clients. The effect of this change was to extend the term for payment of the premium but not to change the MCM.

[22] On March 22, 2010, the Policy was assigned from the Clients to a numbered company.

[23] On August 27, 2010, RBC Life wrote to the Defendants, putting them on notice of a potential claim in respect of the Policy.

[24] On October 14, 2011, RBC Life wrote to the Clients advising that RBC Life was prepared to retroactively change the MCM from YRT to LCOI.

[25] On November 10, 2011 the Clients sent RBC Life a letter and Investment Allocation Form requesting amendment of the Policy to change the MCM from YRT to LCOI effective December 22, 1999. This request was accepted by RBC Life. The effect of this change was to retroactively issue the Policy effective December 22, 1999 on an LCOI basis and to charge premiums therefor at the rates applicable as at December 22, 1999.

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

[26] On December 14, 2011, RBC filed the Statement of Claim naming Heritage and Erker as defendants. RBC Life claims the sum of $866,000, being the losses it alleges it has suffered as a result of converting the MCM from YRT to LCOI in the fall of 2011.

[27] Since 2000, RBC Life has received annual premium payments from the Clients in the sum of $47,125.

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

III. Statement of Claim

[28] RBC Life advances two types of claim in the Statement of Claim filed on December 14, 2011: a contribution claim relating to breach of duties owed by the Defendants to the Clients, and a direct claim relating to breach of duties owed by the Defendants to RBC Life and its predecessor.

[29] RBC Life claims that the Defendants:

- owed a duty of care to the Clients to apply for the policy changes they desired and to properly inform the Clients of the ongoing status of their Policy (para 19);

- owed RBC Life a duty of care to convey, clearly and unambiguously, any policy change request, and furthermore to properly notify RBC Life on a timely basis that the life insurance currently in force did not reflect what the client intended (para 20);

- negligently failed to inform RBC Life (and Prudential), that the Clients intended to change the MCM under the policy from YRT to LCOI in December 1999 (para 21);

- negligently failed to take any subsequent steps to submit a proper policy change request to RBC Life, when they knew or ought to have known from and after December 1999, that the MCM under the Policy continued to be YRT with an annual premium payable of $47,125 (para 21).

IV. Positions of the Parties

[30] RBC Life argues that the agent has an ongoing duty to the insured and the insurer during the currency of the Policy. The claim is based on a number of breaches of duty, resulting from a continuing course of conduct or a series of related acts or omissions, and the claim arose when the conduct terminated or the last act or omission occurred. Therefore, it falls within the exception in s. 3(3)(a) of the Limitations Act. The Defendants committed an act or omission as recently as 2003 in failing to advise RBC Life that the Clients wanted the MCM to be changed from YRT to LCOI.

[31] Further, RBC Life argues that it did not incur any liability until it reached a settlement with the Clients on November 10, 2011. As the claim for contribution arose when it incurred that liability, it falls within the exception in s. 3(3)(e) of the Limitations Act. RBC Life submits that it is doubtful that the Clients would have been out of time to commence legal proceedings against the agent for damages, had RBC Life not corrected the error.

[32] RBC Life also argues that it is unsettled whether its claim against Heritage and Erker would be barred, as RBC Life and the Defendants each had separate contracts with the Clients.

[33] The Defendants argue that the direct claim in relation to the Defendants' submission of the Application on December 29, 1999 is barred by the ultimate 10 year limitation period in s. 3(1)(b) of the Limitations Act (the ultimate limitation period). Section 3(3)(b) provides that for the purposes of s. 3(1)(b), a claim based on breach of a duty arises when the conduct, act or omission occurs. The fact that RBC Life was not aware of the potential for the direct claim until December 2009 does not enable RBC Life to avoid the ultimate limitation period.

[34] The Defendants further argue that RBC Life's claim for "contribution" is actually a direct claim based on RBC Life's own lost opportunity, as the "damages" claimed appear to be the difference between what it could have charged the Clients if they had made the change to LCOI in 2011, and the amount charged based on a change to LCOI as at December 1999.

[35] The Defendants also argue that the ability to make a claim in contribution from an alleged joint tort-feasor for duties owed to another is available only under the Tort-feasors Act, RSA 2000, c T-5, and only for contribution from any other tort-feasor who is or would, if sued, have been liable in respect of the same damage. The contribution claim relates to the alleged duty of care owed by the Defendants to the Clients to submit the Application correctly. Again, the ultimate limitation period applies. At the time the Statement of Claim was filed, any claim filed by the Clients against the Defendants would have been statute-barred. RBC Life may have been within time to file a contribution claim. However, the real issue is whether the Defendants could have been liable to the Clients in relation to any breach of a duty to them at the time the Statement of Claim was filed. If a procedural bar protects the Defendants from judgment in favour of the Clients, they have no liability to the Clients and no statutory liability to contribute to the second tortfeasor.

[36] The Defendants submit that there are no allegations in the Statement of Claim of a breach by the Defendants of a contract between them and the Clients. Therefore, no common law claim in contribution has been advanced based on such separate contracts. The basis of RBC Life's claim is that the Application did not reflect the desired change, which can only be a negligence claim. If the Client's claim against RBC Life is in negligence, and the claim against the Defendants is for breach of contract, there can be no contribution. Breaches of separate contracts by RBC Life and by the Defendants would be mutually exclusive.

[37] Finally, the Defendants argue that the alleged damages resulted from the Application submitted on December 29, 1999, not from a series of acts occurring over time. The uncontroverted evidence is clear that neither of the Defendants had knowledge that the MCM had not been changed. RBC Life alleges a continuing duty on the part of the Defendants to discover a breach by RBC Life, which would import a discoverability requirement into the limitation period for every claim. That is what the ultimate limitation period was enacted to avoid. This is not a case of concealment under s. 4 of the Limitations Act.

V. Issues

[38] The Court must decide whether the Master erred in concluding that the action is barred by s. 3(1)(b) of the Limitations Act. Specifically, the Court must determine whether:

1. the claim is based on a continuing course of conduct or a series of related acts or omissions;

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

2. the claim for contribution arose when RBC Life incurred a liability through settlement;

3. the principle that would bar a claim for contribution under the Tort-feasors Act would bar a claim for contribution at common law, where RBC Life and the Defendants had separate contracts with the Clients.

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

VI. Standard of Review

[39] The standard of review on an appeal from a Master to a Judge is correctness on all issues: Bahcheli v Yorkton Securities Inc, 2012 ABCA 166, 5 24 AR 382.

VII. Legislation

A. Alberta Rules of Court, Alta Reg 124/2010

[40] Rule 7.3(1) of the Alberta Rules of Court provides in part:

> 7.3(1) A party may apply to the Court for summary judgment in respect of all or part of a claim on one or more of the following grounds:
>
> ... (b) there is no merit to a claim or part of it...

B. Limitations Act

[41] The following sections of the Limitations Act are relevant to this appeal:

> 3(1) Subject to section 11, if a claimant does not seek a remedial order within
>
> (a) 2 years after the date on which the claimant first knew, or in the circumstances ought to have known,
>
> (i) that the injury for which the claimant seeks a remedial order had occurred,
>
> (ii) that the injury was attributable to conduct of the defendant, and
>
> (iii) that the injury, assuming liability on the part of the defendant, warrants bringing a proceeding,
>
> or
>
> (b) 10 years after the claim arose,
>
> whichever period expires first, the defendant, on pleading this Act as a defence, is entitled to immunity from liability in respect of the claim.
>
> ...
>
> (3) For the purposes of subsection (1)(b),

(a) a claim or any number of claims based on any number of breaches of duty, resulting from a continuing course of conduct or a series of related acts or omissions, arises when the conduct terminates or the last act or omission occurs;

(b) a claim based on a breach of a duty arises when the conduct, act or omission occurs;

...

(e) a claim for contribution arises when the claimant for contribution is made a defendant in respect of, or incurs a liability through the settlement of, a claim seeking to impose a liability on which the claim for contribution can be based, whichever first occurs;

...

(5) Under this section,

...

(b) the defendant has the burden of proving that a remedial order was not sought within the limitation period provided by subsection (1)(b).

C. Tort-feasors Act

[42] Section 3(1)(c) of the Tort-feasors Act is relevant to this appeal:

3(1) When damage is suffered by any person as a result of a tort, whether a crime or not,

...

(c) any tort-feasor liable in respect of that damage may recover contribution from any other tort-feasor who is or would, if sued, have been liable in respect of the same damage, whether as a joint tort-feasor or otherwise, but no person is entitled to recover contribution under this section from any person entitled to be indemnified by the person first mentioned in respect of the liability regarding which the contribution is sought.

VIII. Test for Summary Judgment

[43] The Supreme Court of Canada recently considered the matter of summary judgement in the context of the Ontario Rules of Court in Hryniak v Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7, [2014] 1 SCR 87. The Court held that summary judgment rules must be interpreted broadly, favoring proportionality and fair access to the affordable, timely and just adjudication of claims. Summary judgment is appropriate where there is no genuine issue to be tried. The Court outlined when no genuine issue exists:

> 49 There will be no genuine issue requiring a trial when the judge is able to reach a fair and just determination on the merits on a motion for summary judgment. This will be the case when the process (1) allows the judge to make the necessary findings of fact, (2) allows the judge to apply the law to the facts, and

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

> (3) is a proportionate, more expeditious and less expensive means to achieve a just result.

[44] Our Court of Appeal in Windsor v Canada Pacific Railway Ltd, 2014 ABCA 108 confirmed that the principles enunciated in Hryniak are applicable to summary judgment applications pursuant to Rule 7.3:

> 14 While Hryniak v Mauldin applied Ontario R. 20, the principles stated in it are consistent with modern Alberta summary judgment practice as set out in Alberta R. 7.3:
>
> > 7.3(1) A party may apply to the Court for summary judgment in respect of all or part of a claim on one or more of the following grounds:
> >
> > (a) there is no defence to a claim or part of it;
> >
> > (b) there is no merit to a claim or part of it;
> >
> > (c) the only real issue is the amount to be awarded.
>
> ... New R. 7.3 calls for a more holistic analysis of whether the claim has "merit", and is not confined to the test of "a genuine issue for trial" found in the previous rules. ...
>
> 15 The theory that disputes eventually "went to trial" was always something of a legal fiction. Even when the court implied that a trial was called for, and declined to grant summary judgment, or declined to strike pleadings, it was well known that trials were a rarity. Hryniak v. Mauldin refers several times to the need for a change in culture. In other words, the myth of trial should no longer govern civil procedure. It should be recognized that interlocutory proceedings are primarily to "prepare an action for resolution", and only rarely do they actually involve "preparing an action for trial". Interlocutory decisions that can resolve a dispute in whole or in part should be made when the record permits a fair and just adjudication. Hryniak v. Mauldin rejected the ruling by the Ontario Court of Appeal to the effect that the old test for summary judgment should continue to apply even in the face of the newly amended Ontario rule.

[45] Therefore, if a judge on a summary judgment application can make the necessary findings of fact, is able to apply the law to the facts and the process is proportionate, more expeditious and less expensive than a trial, summary judgment is appropriate. If a fair and just adjudication can be made in determining whether a claim has merit, it is appropriate for a court to consider summary judgment.

IX. Analysis

A. Limitations Act – s. 3(1)(a)

[46] RBC Life alleges that it first learned of the problem with respect to the Policy upon receipt of an email from Heritage on December 18, 2009. The Statement of Claim was filed December 14, 2011, within the two year limitation period set out in s. 3(1)(a) of the Limitations Act. The Defendants agree that the action was commenced within the limitation period applicable pursuant to s. 3(1)(a). However, they argue that the ultimate limitation period bars the action.

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

B. Limitations Act – s. 3(3)(a)

[47] RBC Life argues that the ultimate limitation period does not bar its action against the Defendants, as the Defendants had an ongoing relationship with both the Clients and Prudential/RBC Life from 1999 to 2011, and they had the opportunity and the responsibility to notify RBC Life that the MCM for the policy had not been changed from YRT to LCOI. RBC Life claims that the Defendants breached their duties to RBC Life on a continuous basis by failing to advise of the problem with the Policy prior to December 2009.

[48] In my view, s. 3(3)(a) of the Limitations Act does not apply merely by virtue of the fact of a continuing relationship between a professional and a client. If it did, in cases where a specific act of the professional which was in breach of any duties owed to the client could be identified, the ultimate limitation period would never arise. Section 3(3)(a) was intended to cover situations where damage does not result from a single act, but rather from the effect of many related acts occurring over time. In such cases, difficulty is created in determining when the action arose and when the damage became apparent: Meek (Trustee of) v San Juan Resources Inc, 2005 ABCA 448 at para 46, 376 AR 202.

[49] The other difficulty in this regard is that the undisputed evidence indicates that RBC Life was in possession of the Application, which indicated on its face that the request was a change to an "annual premium over life", along with an illustration indicating "Level Cost of Insurance". It was RBC Life who decided that the Application, which did not specifically address MCM, was inconsistent with the "illustration", which indicated LCOI. It was also RBC Life who decided, unilaterally, that the inconsistency must be resolved so as to maintain the Policy as YRT. Finally, it was RBC Life who failed to carry out the instruction that the annual premium of $47,125 would continue "over life" as requested in the Application.

[50] Ms. Prestidge stated that the Defendants should have recorded on the Application that they wanted to reissue the contract and request a change in the MCM to LCOI "so that everybody was clear". However, this does not detract from the fact that RBC Life was aware in 1999 of what it perceived as an inconsistency in the Application and accompanying illustration. RBC Life clearly had knowledge that the policy change was not in accordance with the Application as a whole, as reflected in the note: "Agent's illustration sent not valid as showing Policy LCOI (it is YRT)". Ms. Prestidge acknowledged that RBC Life did not send its own Policy Change Summary to the Defendants, and she could not confirm that it was sent to PPI.

[51] Ms. Prestidge confirmed on questioning that Prudential did not advise the Defendants that it considered the agent's illustration to be invalid. There is simply no evidence that this conclusion was communicated to the Defendants. The Confirmation Notice dated February 1, 2000 acknowledged the request and indicated a new premium of $47,125 payable annually for policy years 1 through 10. It makes no mention of the MCM. During questioning, Erker stated he assumed that his office would have received confirmation that the requested change was made to the Policy, but could not swear to that, and there was nothing in his file reflecting receipt of the document.

[52] The e-mail from Heritage dated December 18, 2009 advised RBC Life of a problem with the Policy, in that the Clients had not received an annual premium notice. In questioning, Erker stated that the e-mail did not mention anything at that time about changing the MCM because his office assumed that the Policy had been changed pursuant to the Application in 1999.

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

[53] RBC Life purports to place a continuous burden on the Defendants to determine and advise RBC Life of a problem with the policy, where RBC Life had construed the Application as containing a material inconsistency, had unilaterally chosen to ignore the illustration based on LCOI, and further had failed to change the premiums to $47,125 "over life", none of which it communicated to the Defendants.

[54] Assuming that Heritage and Erker did commit an error, it occurred in December 1999 when the Application was submitted to Prudential. Any damages would have resulted from that single act, and not from any ongoing duty.

[55] During questioning, Ms. Prestidge, testified as follows (at pp 45 and 46):

> Q [...] And what, if anything, do you say was the error that was made by the defendants [Heritage and Erker] in this case?
>
> A You want my opinion as to what would have made this go right?
>
> Q What would have made it go away?
>
> A Go right?
>
> Q Go right.
>
> A It would have been recording on the Policy Change Form that they wanted to reissue the contract and request a mortality charge change to LCOI so everybody was clear what was actually discussed with the client. And had the client – sorry. And had the client sign that.
>
> Q And if that error was made, that was made at the time of the application for the policy change in December 1999, correct?
>
> A Yes.

While obviously not determinative of the date that the error occurred, her testimony, in my view, undermines RBC Life's own positon in this regard.

[56] The sole fact that the Defendants had ongoing relationships with both the Clients and RBC Life between December 1999 and December 2009 does not extend the commencement date of the limitation period pursuant to s. 3(1)(b) of the Limitations Act to December 2009 when Heritage advised RBC Life of the problem with respect to the Policy. Discoverability principles do not apply to the ultimate limitation period: Meek (Trustee of) v San Juan Resources Inc, 2005 ABCA 448, 376 AR 202. There is no suggestion here of fraudulent concealment.

[57] RBC Life also argues that even if there were not multiple breaches of a continuous duty or course of conduct by the Defendants, the commencement date for the running of the ultimate limitation period must be June 2003 when the last Client Services Request with respect to the Policy was submitted to it.

[58] RBC Life relies on a Client Services Request from Tim Clooney, Life Insurance Consultant with PPI dated June 16, 2003, stating:

> Can I please get 2 quotes on the above policy.
> Assuming switching to level cost of insurance beginning of year 6 in both instances.

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

> 1. Assume credited rate 5%, calculate to pay up as quickly as possible without raising the face amount.
> 2. Assume credited rate 2.5%, calculate minimum premium for life.
> Let me know if you have questions.
> Can we get this as soon as possible as the agent has meeting with the client next Tuesday.

[59] It is clear that PPI had a relationship with both RBC Life and Heritage. Based on the evidence before the Court, it appears that communications between Heritage and RBC Life flowed through PPI. Ms. Prestidge described PPI as the Managing General Agent although she did not elaborate on PPI's duties and responsibilities.

[60] Erker on questioning indicated that from time to time, PPI would review the Heritage "block of business" for opportunities to increase revenue for both PPI and Heritage. Sometimes PPI would share information received with Heritage and sometimes it would not. Further, Erker did not initiate any of the Client Services Requests submitted by PPI to RBC Life in early 2003, and to his knowledge no one else on behalf of Heritage initiated such requests. Erker was the agent involved in the Policy and would, therefore, have known about the initiation of such requests by Heritage.

[61] During questioning, Mr. Erker testified as follows (at pp 18 and 19):

> Q Okay. At that time [June 2003], were you aware that the policy still had a mortality charge method of YRT?
>
> A Absolutely not.
>
> Q Okay. And you had – and you don't recall any discussion about changing the policy mortality charge method to LCOI in 2003?
>
> A Absolutely not.

[62] RBC Life submits that the Client Services Request dated June 16, 2003, is evidence that the request was initiated by Heritage. The Client Services Request dated June 16, 2003 does suggest that Tim Clooney had knowledge of an upcoming appointment between the agent and the Clients. However, this Request identifies Tim Clooney of PPI Edmonton as the requestor. There is no mention of Erker on the Request. The Inforce Illustration Requests attached to the Client Services Requests dated February 12, 2003 and March 25, 2003 do indicate Erker as the agent. There is no mention at all of Erker in the Client Services Request or attached Inforce Illustration dated June 16, 2003.

[63] It is true that s. 3(5)(b) of the Limitations Act places the burden on the Defendants to prove that the action of RBC Life was not commenced within the applicable limitation period provided for by s. 3(1)(b).

[64] Ms. Prestidge presumed in questioning that the information generated by RBC Life in response to the Client Services Requests dated February 12, 2003, March 25, 2003 and June 16, 2003, would have been shared by PPI with Heritage. However, she could point to no evidence to this effect. There is simply no evidence before the Court to support a finding that there is any issue of merit in this regard that genuinely requires a trial. Speculation that such evidence may be forthcoming at trial is not sufficient: Windsor at para 21.

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

[65] Therefore, based on the evidence on this Application, I am left to conclude that PPI undertook a review of the Policy in early 2003. The review suggests that it understood that the MCM on the Policy continued to be based on YRT as opposed to LCOI. Further, it appears to have been aware of an upcoming appointment between the agent and the Clients. However, there is nothing to suggest that Heritage or Erker had knowledge as of June 2003 that the MCM on the Policy continued to be based on YRT.

[66] There is no evidence to support the position that PPI's involvement in 2003 somehow extended the commencement date for the ultimate limitation period for the purposes of RBC Life's claim against Heritage and Erker.

C. Limitations Act – s. 3(3)(e), Tort-feasors Act – s. 3(1)(c)

[67] RBC Life further argues that it has a claim for contribution in relation to damages suffered by the Clients and, therefore, s. 3(3)(e) of the Limitations Act applies. RBC Life alleges that this claim for contribution arose when it reached a settlement with the Clients to retroactively change the MCM to LCOI from YRT effective December 22, 1999. RBC Life argues that the limitation period for the claim for contribution commenced when this retroactive change was effected in the fall of 2011.

[68] It is true that on August 27, 2010, RBC Life wrote to the Defendants, putting them on notice of a potential claim in respect of the Policy. However, there is nothing before the Court to indicate in any way that there was a settlement between RBC Life and the Clients. J. Yogis' Barron's Canadian Law Dictionary (Hauppauge, NY: Barron's Educational Series, 2009) (QL) defines "settlement" as:

> Generally, the conclusive fixing or resolving of a matter; the arrangement of a final disposition of it. A compromise achieved by the adverse parties in a civil suit before final judgment whereby they agree between themselves upon their respective rights and obligations, thus eliminating the necessity of judicial resolution of the controversy. Compare plea bargaining in the criminal context ...

[69] There is no evidence that RBC Life paid the Clients any damages, that there was a final disposition of any claims the Clients may have had against RBC Life or that the Clients released RBC Life in respect of any such claims.

[70] Further, in her letter of October 14, 2011 to the Clients, Ms. Prestidge acknowledged that the Clients on December 22, 1999 had requested a change in the MCM from YRT to LCOI. On the face of it, RBC Life was simply rectifying an error in the processing of the Application, not responding to a claim. RBC Life did reduce the Clients' current cash value on the Policy of $290,789.50 as at October 13, 2011 to $0 as reflecting the difference in rates between December 22, 1999 and October 13, 2011. However, that cash value was a windfall to the Clients resulting from the mistake, and the Clients essentially acknowledged that they were ultimately getting what they had bargained for in 1999.

[71] Given the foregoing, in my view, the steps taken by RBC Life in October 2011 do not constitute a settlement as that term is used in s 3(3)(e) of the Limitations Act.

[72] However, even if there was a settlement, the Defendants would be entitled to immunity from liability in tort pursuant to s. 3(1)(c) of the Tort-feasors Act. It provides that damages may be recovered from a contributing tort-feasor only if that tort-feasor would have been liable in respect of the same damage, whether as a joint tort-feasor or otherwise, if sued.

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

[73] As previously indicated, any error on the part of Heritage and Erker occurred on or before December 29, 1999. This is not a situation in which the claim is based on a continuing course of conduct by the Defendants. If the Clients had sued the Defendants after December 29, 2009, the Defendants would have had an absolute defence to such claim.

[74] In Dean v Kociniak, 2001 ABQB 412, 289 AR 201, Slatter J. (as he then was) held that the law changed under the Limitations Act. He opined that the defendant who is the claimant is the one who suffers the "injury" under s. 3(1)(a) of the Limitations Act, by having to pay more than its share to the plaintiff if another party fails to contribute for the loss it caused to the plaintiff. He concluded that the 2 year limitation period runs from when the defendant tort-feasor knew or ought to have known of the contribution claim against the other tort-feasor. Slatter J.'s decision has been followed in other Queen's Bench cases: see, for example, Whitecourt Power Limited Partnership v Interpro Technical Services Ltd, 2014 ABQB 135, 95 Alta LR (5th) 415, Campbell v Calgary (Police Service), 2009 ABQB 58, 467 AR 244; Pagcnucco v Sears Canada Inc, 2011 ABQB 810, 528 AR 209.

[75] However, the Court of Appeal in Howalta Electrical Services Inc v CDI Career Development Institutes Ltd, 2011 ABCA 234, 515 AR 163 observed that it is a condition precedent under the Tort-feasors Act that the contribution is from a tort-feasor who "is or would, if sued, have been liable in respect of the same damage". The Court confirmed previous case law to the effect that a tort-feasor's claim for contribution is barred if the plaintiff's claim against the other tort-feasor is barred by a limitation:

> 27 The first tortfeasor has no "liability" to the plaintiff, and so no statutory liability to contribute to a second tortfeasor, no matter how great its own fault, if procedural bars protect the first tortfeasor from a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. What bars? For example, an expired limitation period, whether statutory or contractual: Giffels Assoc (Dom Chain Co) v E Constr Co [1978] 2 SCR 1346, 19 NR 298; CDIC v Prisco (1996) 181 AR 161 (CA) (paras 20-35); dicta in Parkland v Stetar, infra (para 17) ; dicta in JR Paine & Assoc v Strong Lamb & Co (1979) 18 AR 112, 116 (CA) (para 10). Another example is statutory protection because of the plaintiff's failure to give timely notice: Parkland (Cty) v Stetar [1975] 2 SCR 884, [1975] 1 WWR 441, 449-51, 3 NR 311 (paras 16-18). All those bars are purely procedural, and in no way negative fault. But they do prevent granting a judgment. These authorities all bind all courts in Alberta. See also HSBC Securs v Davies Ward & Beck (2005) 194 OAC 1, 249 DLR (4th) 571, lv den [2005] S.C.C.A. No. 145, (SCC 2005) 345 NR 394. All these cases are about co-tortfeasors' claims.

[76] See also Arcelormittal Tubular Products Roman SA v Fluor Canada Ltd, 2013 ABCA 279, 556 AR 188, leave denied [2013] SCCA No 403.

[77] The Defendants had immunity from any claim by the Clients against them as at the date of the Statement of Claim. Therefore, RBC Life has no claim for contribution against Heritage or Erker. Section 3(3)(e) of the Limitations Act does not apply, and the limitation period pursuant to s. 3(1)(b) of the Limitations Act did not start to run on the date that matters were resolved between RBC Life and the Clients, even assuming that resolution constituted a "settlement".

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

[78] As for RBC Life's arguments based on breach of contract, the Court of Appeal in Arcelormittal confirmed that the Tort-feasors Act does not allow contribution between a person liable to a plaintiff for breach of contract and a tort-feasor.

[79] RBC Life cites Petersen Pontiac Buick GMC (Alta) Ltd v Campbell, 2013 ABCA 251, 556 AR 118, in which the Court saw no impediment in contract law to dividing liability between two parties who have breached two different contracts, causing the same damages to a plaintiff.

[80] The Defendants note that the claim in Petersen was not a contribution claim between defendants, but apportionment of liability between two defendants who were found to be liable in contract to the plaintiff for the same damages. However, the Court of Appeal in Arcelormittal at para 37 indicated that its decision in Petersen confirmed that there may be a claim for contribution at common law as between parties where each had its own separate contract with the plaintiff. The Defendants argue that the comment was made in the context of an application to strike pleadings.

[81] The Statement of Claim appears to be framed entirely in negligence. It refers to the Agent Agreements between Erker and Heritage and RBC Life/Prudential, and the Policy between Prudential and the Clients. Specifically, no common law claim in contribution appears to have been advanced based on separate contracts between the Clients and RBC Life on one hand, and the Clients and the Defendants, or either of them, on the other.

[82] Even if the Court were to infer the content of a contract between the Clients and the Defendants, I am not satisfied that it could be said on this basis that the insurer and the agent both contributed to the same damage suffered by the Clients.

[83] There are no particulars of the alleged contractual breaches. However, the Policy which was rectified by RBC Life had an MCM of YRT, not LCOI. If that were the contract, RBC Life would not have been in breach in relation to the MCM, as it was acting in compliance with the Policy. Rectification would not have been necessary because RBC Life had acted in accordance with the instructions which it had received.

[84] Alternatively, if the instructions had been to issue the Policy on the basis of an MCM of LCOI, RBC Life's rectification would have been to reflect those instructions and the true intention of the Clients. Heritage and Erker would not be liable to the Clients in breach of contract.

[85] In the result, RBC Life and the Defendants would be alternatively liable to the Clients and not jointly and severally liable. The same reasoning would apply if the potential claims by the Clients were for negligent breach of separate contracts.

[86] In Petersen, the Court of Appeal also notes that contribution may be available on equitable principles. At para 54 the Court states that a claimant for contribution must show:

1. the claimant and the defendant were both liable to the third party,
2. who was forbidden to accumulate full recoveries from both of them, but
3. who could choose to recover in full from either of them, and that
4. some or all of the burden of paying him should ultimately be borne by the defendant.

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

[87] Unlike the situation in Petersen, all of the conditions are not met in the case now before the Court. In this case, the Claimant (RBC Life) and the Defendants (Erker and Heritage) are not both liable to the third party (the Clients). Erker and Heritage have immunity from any claim by the Clients pursuant to s. 3(1)(b) of the Limitations Act. Therefore, contribution pursuant to equitable principles is not available to RBC Life.

D. Limitations Act – s. 3(1)(b)

[88] As previously indicated, if Heritage or Erker breached any duty owed to either the Clients or RBC Life, it occurred when the Defendants completed and submitted the Application to Prudential on December 29, 1999. This date is the commencement date of the limitation period pursuant to s. 3(1)(b) of the Limitations Act.

[89] There is nothing before the Court to support the position that ss. 3(3)(a) or (e) of the Limitations Act applies in this case so as to extend the commencement date of that limitation period to some date beyond December 29, 1999. Therefore, it was imperative that any action by RBC Life against Heritage and Erker be commenced on or before December 29, 2009.

[90] The Statement of Claim was filed on December 14, 2011 which is outside the ultimate limitation period. Therefore, Heritage and Erker are entitled to immunity from liability in respect of this claim.

E. Damages

[91] Finally, I would note that RBC Life's alleged damages apparently resulted from conversion of the Policy in order to provide a basis for the Clients to continue to pay to RBC Life $47,125 annually, beyond the 10 year period, for life.

[92] Ms. Prestidge explained that if the Clients had converted to LCOI in 2010, they would have paid higher premiums than they would have paid in 1999 because they were older in 2010. Ms. Prestidge was unable to explain how the damages were calculated, but she did indicate in questioning that the reserves had to be changed to LCOI.

[93] However, RBC Life reduced the current cash value of $290,789.50 as at October 13, 2011 to $0 as reflecting the difference in rates between December 22, 1999 and October 13, 2011.

[94] RBC Life characterizes the damages in the Statement of Claim as a loss resulting from the conversion, not the settling of a loss to the Clients. It is not clear, on the basis of the material before the Court, how the Clients' continued payment of $47,125, and RBC Life's reduction of the cash value for which the Clients had not bargained, could equate to RBC Life having "settled" the matter in the amount of $866,000.

[95] In effect, the remedy to the Clients on a suit against RBC Life would have been rectification, which is what RBC Life provided to the Clients. It was the rectification which allegedly created a loss to RBC Life. Therefore, the damages claimed reflect the possibility of a direct claim by RBC Life against the Defendants, not a contribution claim for an amount paid to the Clients in settlement of a claim.

F. Application of the Summary Judgment Test

[96] This is an appropriate case for summary judgment. A fair and just determination of the merits of the claim is possible on the motion for summary judgment. I am able to make the necessary findings of fact, apply the law to the facts and the findings are proportionate, expeditious and less expensive than having this matter proceed to trial. Applying a holistic analysis to the claim before me, I am satisfied that there is no merit to the claim advanced by RBC Life against Heritage and Erker. The claim is barred by limitations. Summary judgment is therefore granted, and the claim of RBC Life is dismissed.

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

X. Conclusion

[97] The Master was correct in the decision under appeal. The appeal is dismissed.

XI. Costs

[98] The parties may speak to me within 30 days of the date of these Reasons for Judgment if they are otherwise unable to agree on costs in this matter.

Heard on the 30th day of July, 2014.
Dated at the City of Edmonton, Alberta this 29th day of September, 2014.

K.G. Nielsen
J.C.Q.B.A.

Appearances:

James T. Neilson, QC
Parlee McLaws LLP
for the Appellant (Plaintiff)

W.J. Kenny, Q.C. and Alisha L. Hurley
Miller Thomson LLP
for the Respondents (Defendants)

2014 ABQB 595 (CanLII)

In the Court of Appeal of Alberta

Citation: Swift v Tomecek Roney Little & Associates Ltd., 2014 ABCA 49

Date: 20140204
Docket: 1301-0042-AC
1301-0056-AC
Registry: Calgary

Docket: 1301-0042-AC

Between:

Philip Swift and Cindy McInnis-Swift

Cross-Respondents on Cross-Appeal
Appellants on Appeal
(Plaintiffs)

- and -

Tomecek Roney Little & Associates Ltd. and Brian Tomecek

Cross-Appellants on Cross-Appeal
Respondents on Appeal
(Defendants)

- and -

Eleven Eleven Architecture Inc., McKinley Dang
Burkart Design Group Inc.

Cross-Respondents on Cross-Appeal
Appellants on Appeal
(Defendants)

Docket: 1301-0056-AC

Between:

Philip Swift and Cindy McInnis-Swift

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

Respondents
(Plaintiffs)

- and -

Tomecek Roney Little & Associates Ltd. and Brian Tomecek

Appellants
(Defendants)

- and -

Eleven Eleven Architecture Inc., McKinley Dang
Burkart Design Group Inc.

Respondents
(Defendants)

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

Corrected judgment: A corrigendum was issued on February 6, 2014; the corrections have been made to the text and the corrigendum is appended to this judgment.

The Court:

The Honourable Madam Justice Marina Paperny
The Honourable Mr. Justice Peter Martin
The Honourable Mr. Justice Alan Macleod

Memorandum of Judgment

Appeal from the Judgment by
The Honourable Mr. Justice Bruce A. Millar
Dated the 14th day of December, 2012
Filed on the 25th day of February, 2013
(Docket: 0801-08299)

Memorandum of Judgment

The Court:

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

Introduction

[1] As a result of defective structural design, a new home on Vancouver Island has become dangerous to its occupants. This appeal considers who must bear the cost of remediation. In making that determination we must also determine the scope of a limitation of liability clause in an architectural design agreement, including who is bound by the clause and who is entitled to take the benefit of it.

Background

[2] In 2004, Mr. and Ms. Swift (the Swifts) purchased land on Vancouver Island for the purpose of building a family home. Mr. Swift engaged Eleven Eleven Architecture Inc. (Eleven Eleven) and McKinley Dang Burkart Design Group Inc. (collectively, the Architects) to design the home. On April 29, 2005, Mr. Swift and Eleven Eleven entered into an agreement (Agreement) which contained the following limitation of liability clause (Limitation Clause):

> 3.8.1 With respect to the provision of services by the Designer to the Client under this Agreement, the Client agrees that any and all claims which the Client has or hereafter may have against the Designer which arise solely and directly out of the Designer's duties and responsibilities pursuant to this Agreement (hereinafter referred to in this Article 3 as "claims"), whether such claims sound in contract or in tort, shall be limited to the amount of $500,000.00.
>
> The Designer in this paragraph includes officers, directors, his or her employees, representatives and consultants.

[3] The Agreement defines both "Designer" and "Prime Consultant/Designer" as Eleven Eleven and the "Client" as Mr. Swift.

[4] Ms. Swift was not a signatory to the Agreement.

[5] The Agreement specified that the home was to be approximately 6,375 square feet. The structural engineering aspect of the design was subcontracted by the Architects to the respondent Tomecek Roney Little & Associates Ltd. and performed by its principal, Mr. Tomecek (Engineers). The Agreement states:

> 3.8.2 The Prime Consultant/Designer agrees to enlist the services of a registered Professional Engineer (whose fees for services are included within the contract amount of this agreement) whose professional stamp will be included on all relevant drawings and who shall certify to the structural soundness of the design.

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

[6] A building permit was issued in October 2005, and construction began shortly thereafter. The home design was required to comply with the 1998 British Columbia Building Code (Code) which categorized buildings as Part 9 or Part 4. Part 9 buildings must generally be under 600 square metres in area and no more than 3 stories in height. If the building exceeds those limits, it is categorized as a Part 4 building. Part 4 buildings must comply with more stringent rules regarding, among other things, seismic design requirements.

[7] Mr. Tomecek's initial design treated the home as a Part 9 building, and was not designed with seismic issues in mind. However, during the summer of 2006, the building contractor raised concerns about the adequacy of the structural design and another structural engineer, Mr. Galloway, was retained to review the Tomecek design. Mr. Galloway wrote a letter outlining his concerns about the seismic stability of the home as designed. The Chief Building Inspector sent a letter to the Engineers expressing his opinion that the home needed to be designed under Part 4 of the Code.

[8] The Architects met with Mr. Tomecek shortly thereafter. Mr. Tomecek spent several days doing a "Part 4 analysis" and agreed to redo the design in compliance with Part 4. He confirmed to the Architects that he had in fact done so.

[9] It later became apparent that there were serious deficiencies in the seismic design of the home, and the Swifts filed claims against both the Architects and the Engineers, with Mr. Swift claiming in contract and tort and Ms. Swift claiming only in tort.

[10] The trial judge held that the structural engineering failed to satisfy Part 4, the relevant portion of the Code, and in particular certain seismic design criteria. He found that the Engineers were negligent in the performance of their obligation to provide a suitable structural design for the residence and that this failure created a real and substantial danger to the Swifts. The trial judge found no negligence on the part of the Architects, but concluded that, to the extent the structural engineering work done by their subcontractor was deficient, the Architects were in breach of the Agreement.

[11] The trial judge concluded that the Swifts suffered damages of approximately $1.9 million arising from the breach of the Agreement and the negligent structural engineering. However, he also concluded that the Limitation Clause applied to the Swifts' claims so as to limit the total amount payable to $500,000.

[12] The trial judge further determined that the Limitation Clause bound not only Mr. Swift, as signatory to the Agreement, but Ms. Swift as well. In this regard, he said, "the evidence is sufficient to establish that Mr. Swift, in executing the Architect Agreement, was acting both on his own behalf and on behalf of Mrs. Swift": para 66. The trial judge determined that the fact that Ms. Swift was not a signatory to the Agreement was of "no moment" as this was typical of the Swifts' family arrangements.

[13] Finally, the trial judge had to consider whether the Architects were entitled to an indemnity from the Engineers. He concluded that they were entitled to be indemnified, but that the Limitation Clause applied to limit the amount of that indemnity to $500,000, notwithstanding that the Architects had already paid $1,000,000 to the Swifts under a settlement agreement.

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

Grounds of Appeal

[14] The Swifts and the Architects appeal the trial judge's order. The Engineers have submitted a contingent cross-appeal. The arguments of all the parties may be summarized as follows.

The Swifts

[15] The Swifts submit that the trial judge erred, first, in finding that Mr. Swift was acting as Ms. Swift's agent in signing the Agreement and, second, that the Limitation Clause applied to Ms. Swift. They further submit that the trial judge erred in failing to address Mr. Swift's claim of negligent misrepresentation against the Engineers.

[16] The Swifts also submit that the trial judge erred in ruling that the Limitation Clause in the Agreement, if applicable, limits the liability of the Engineers to $500,000 in total rather than to each individual claim of the Swifts. They do not argue that the Engineers are not party to the Limitation Clause.

The Architects

[17] The Architects argue that the trial judge erred in his interpretation of the Limitation Clause and that it should have been construed more narrowly so as to not shelter the Engineers from liability, and that the Limitation Clause does not disentitle the Architects to a full indemnity from the Engineers.

The Engineers

[18] The Engineers respond that the finding that Mr. Swift acted as agent for Ms. Swift is a question of fact and the trial judge's reasons reveal no palpable error. This finding, they say, was based on ample evidence and the trial judge made a finding of credibility that Ms. Swifts' evidence on this point was "suspect". The Engineers argue that the Limitation Clause is unambiguous and that it can bear no interpretation other than that found by the trial judge. Finally, they say there was no negligent misrepresentation giving rise to an independent tort and if there was, it too would be subject to the Limitation Clause.

[19] Finally, the Engineers say that if this Court allows any part of the appeal, they cross-appeal the trial judge's conclusion that they were negligent in the performance of the structural engineering service as the trial judge misapprehended the engineering evidence on all the determinative issues.

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

Analysis

Who is party to the Agreement?

[20] The crux of this appeal is, who is party to the Agreement and who is bound by or can benefit from the Limitation Clause? First, is Ms. Swift a party to the Agreement, and if so, on what basis? Second, are the Engineers entitled to benefit from a Limitation Clause contained in an Agreement to which they are not party? This aspect of the appeal requires us to resolve whether one non-party, the Engineers, can bind another non-party, Ms. Swift, to the Agreement, thereby limiting any liability on the part of the Engineers to $500,000.

Agency

[21] The analysis must begin with the Agreement. The only express parties to the Agreement are Eleven Eleven and Mr. Swift, respectively defined as the Prime Consultant/Designer and the Client. The Swifts argue that the trial judge did not consider or apply the correct legal principles relating to agency in concluding that Mr. Swift had executed the Agreement on behalf of his wife. This raises a question of law reviewable on the correctness standard. For the reasons that follow, we conclude that there is nothing in the Agreement or in the conduct of the parties that would make Ms. Swift a party to the Agreement. Mr. Swift did not have express authority to bind Ms. Swift to the contract, nor is it possible on the record before us to draw any inference of apparent authority.

[22] An agency relationship arises when one person gives another the power to affect his or her legal relationships: Rockland Industries v Amerada Minerals Corp of Canada Ltd, [1980] 2 SCR 2. Most agency relationships arise from an express contract between the agent and principal. Actual authority may be implied, but the implied authority is actual authority to perform "all subordinate acts which are necessary or ordinarily incidental to the exercise of ... express authority": see Auer v Lionstone Holdings Inc, 2005 ABCA 78, 363 AR 84 at para 14, citing McDonald v Lawlor (1908), 7 WLR 639 at 642 (Sask KB). Some courts have found the existence of implied authority in the absence of express authority (see, for example, Williams (Litigation guardian of) v BC Conference of the Mennonite Brethren Churches, 2010 BCSC 791, [2010] BCJ No 1065). However, as noted by Fridman, "[w]here such an implication can be made, it is made on the basis that the principal has in fact consented to the agent's having authority to act in such a manner or as regards such a transaction. If there is evidence that the principal has not consented to this ... no implication of authority permitting the agent to act can be made" (GHL Fridman, Canadian Agency Law, 2d ed (Markham, Ont: LexisNexis Canada, 2012) at 70). Implied authority does not exist in a vacuum. In the absence of express authority, courts should be extremely reluctant to find implied authority unless there is clear unequivocal evidence that demonstrates that a principal has in fact consented to the agent's having authority to act on his or her behalf.

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

[23] An agency relationship can also be apparent, arising from the impression of authority that the principal has created: see Auer at para 15 citing Deer Valley Shopping Centre Ltd v Sniderman Radio Sales and Services Ltd (1989), 96 AR 321 (QB). A finding of apparent authority arises when there is a representation by the principal to the third party and reliance on that representation by the third party: Auer at para 15 citing Keddie v Horne, 1999 BCCA 541 at para 28, 179 DLR (4th) 1.

[24] The trial judge here concluded that, although Ms. Swift did not sign the Agreement, there was sufficient evidence to establish that in executing it Mr. Swift was acting both on his own behalf and on behalf of Ms. Swift. Although the trial judge noted some of the applicable agency principles, those dealing with both express and apparent authority, he did not articulate on what basis he found that Mr. Swift was acting as agent for Ms. Swift.

[25] The Swifts submit that the trial judge incorrectly found agency on the sole basis that the Swifts are spouses and joint owners of the relevant property. The Engineers respond that the trial judge relied on numerous factors that, in the aggregate, established an agency relationship between the Swifts.

[26] The trial judge's conclusions with respect to agency are reproduced in full below. He stated at para 66:

> The case law indicates that such an agency can be found between spouses in appropriate circumstances and I am satisfied that such circumstances exist in this case. While the Residence may have been Mr. Swift's "vision", it is apparent from all of the evidence that Mrs. Swift was "on board" with it. This was to be their family home and was to be built on land of which she was the joint owner. It was to be designed by architects they previously had engaged in respect of family properties. While Mr. Swift clearly took the lead in the process, that was typical of their family arrangements and the evidence shows that Mrs. Swift did have some input in the design process. Mr. Swift testified that the move to the Residence was intended to be "a joyous, happy event". Had Mrs. Swift been opposed to the project, I consider it unlikely that Mr. Swift would have proceeded with it in the face of that opposition. I find that this was, in effect, their joint project.

[27] And at para 67:

> The fact that Mrs. Swift was not a signatory to the Architect Agreement is of no moment. Again, this was typical of the Swifts' family arrangements and Mrs. Swift's signature on the document as witness indicates that she was aware that Mr. Swift was engaging the Architects; indeed, she testified that she was aware of that. The Plaintiffs point out that she did not have independent legal advice in respect of the Architect Agreement. That, however, is also true of other documents Mr. Swift signed without her, > including the listing agreement for their Calgary home. I find that Mrs. Swift was aware of the Architect Agreement. Had she wished to seek legal advice in respect of it, there is nothing in the evidence that indicates she could not have done so. Instead, I find that she simply relied on her husband as she had often done. There is nothing untoward in that, but it does not permit Mrs. Swift to escape the legal consequences of agreements entered into by Mr. Swift on her behalf.

[28] As noted above, there are two types of authority found in the law of agency: express or apparent authority. The trial judge stated there was no express authority. We agree. Mr. Swift testified that he was signing the Agreement on his own behalf only. Ms. Swift testified that Mr. Swift did not have authority to sign an agreement or the Agreement on her behalf. The Architects testified that they did not believe that Mr. Swift was executing the Agreement on Ms. Swift's behalf. This evidence, together with the language of the Agreement defining only Mr. Swift as the "client", ought to have ended the discussion on actual authority.

[29] No argument on apparent authority was advanced. It was not suggested that Ms. Swift had held out to the Architects that her husband was acting as her agent, and no evidentiary basis for that argument can be found in the record.

[30] Having concluded that there was no express authority one can only assume that the trial judge found there was implied authority based on the parties' conduct. This is an error in law. As noted above, implied authority is normally incidental to express authority. Implying this type of authority based on conduct is inherently problematic in the absence of clear and unequivocal evidence to support it. Why this is so is highlighted by considering the conduct used to establish the purported agency relationship here.

[31] The trial judge relied on the following in finding an agency relationship between the Swifts: they are spouses; Ms. Swift was "on board" with the project; they are joint tenants; it was typical of the Swifts' family arrangements that Mr. Swift would sign on Ms. Swift's behalf; Ms. Swift was aware of the Agreement and had relied on her husband.

[32] There are several problems with the trial judge's inferences. First, marriage and/or cohabitation cannot, without more, give rise to an agency relationship. To do so anachronistically ignores the separate legal identity of each spouse, a fundamental legal concept that courts in the 21st century should not easily trample upon or dismiss. The same is true of joint tenants. As stated in Griffiths v Zambosco (2001), 54 OR (3d) 397 at para 43 (CA): "[o]ne joint tenant is not, by the existence of the joint tenancy, the agent of the other ... Joint tenants have a separate, albeit indivisible, interest in the jointly held asset."

[33] That Ms. Swift was "on board" with the project cannot equate to authorizing Mr. Swift to bind her to a contract. Similarly, the fact that Ms. Swift knew about the Agreement does not establish that she represented to anyone, let alone her husband, that he had the authority to legally bind her to the Agreement.

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

[34] Finally, the trial judge relied on the fact that it was typical of the Swifts' family arrangements for Mr. Swift to sign on Ms. Swift's behalf. This conclusion is not supported on the record. The trial judge noted at para 67 that there were other documents besides the Agreement that had been signed solely by Mr. Swift to illustrate such a practice, such as the building permit authorization and the listing agreement. But the record includes other equally relevant evidence: when Ms. Swift signs agreements, such as the mortgage on the house and a matrimonial property agreement, she reads the agreements and obtains independent legal advice if required. There is therefore no clear evidence of Mr. Swift "typically" signing on Ms. Swift's behalf. The trial judge failed to advert to the evidence that contradicted the existence of a "practice". This includes the specific documents referred to above and the testimony of both the Swifts that there was no authority given by Mr. Swift to Ms. Swift. The failure to consider relevant evidence amounts to palpable and overriding error.

[35] Looking at these factors in the aggregate cannot lead to a finding of agency. Courts should be cautious in relying on inferences to find agency between spouses and must recognize the pitfalls of relying on subjective assumptions about marital relationships. Here the trial judge relied on three trial decisions where agency was found: Ryan v Kaukab, 2011 ONSC 6826; Century 21 Maritime Realty Ltd v LeClerc (1994), 144 NBR (2d) 87 (QB); and Hadley v Venetian Blind Service Centre, 2000 BCSC 1321. This Court is not asked to opine on the correctness of those decisions or the agency analysis undertaken in each. We do note, however, that in Ryan, the trial judge found an express agency relationship relying on the testimony of each spouse to that effect. In Century 21 Maritime Realty Ltd, the court relied on the concept of apparent authority and subsequent ratification. In Hadley, the nature of the agency was not addressed. In this case, the trial judge erred in finding that Mr. Swift was acting as agent for Ms. Swift and that Ms. Swift was bound by the Agreement.

[36] From a policy perspective, relying on equivocal conduct to impose legal liability in the face of a contract is problematic. Inferences are subjective and lead to uncertain results, all the more so when inferences are used to contradict the express terms of an agreement.

The Parol Evidence Rule

[37] The Swifts submit that, given the clear language of the Agreement, the parol evidence rule precluded the trial judge from going beyond its four corners. They say that in finding agency the trial judge incorrectly permitted extrinsic evidence to be used to contradict the express terms of the Agreement.

[38] This argument highlights the tension between two concepts: that of undisclosed principal on the one hand, and on the other, the principle of contract law that extrinsic evidence may not be admitted absent ambiguity within the contract. As explained by Fridman at 164, "[a]n undisclosed principal … is one of whose existence the third party is unaware, so that the third party does not know that the person with whom he is dealing is somebody's agent, and believes that he is contracting with that person acting on his own behalf and in his own name." Under this doctrine, a person who is not overtly party to a contract can acquire rights and be subjected to liabilities under it. Fridman notes that this doctrine is anomalous and is inconsistent with the elementary rules of contract and agency.

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

[39] The Supreme Court in Friedmann Equity Developments v Final Note Ltd, 2000 SCC 34 at paras 15-18, [2000] 1 SCR 842 recognized the criticism associated with the undisclosed principal rule, stating at para 16:

> The rule which allows an undisclosed principal to sue or be sued on a simple contract has been criticized. Some argue that the doctrine is anomalous and that it violates some of the basic tenets of the laws of contract and of agency: see, e.g., J. B. Ames, "Undisclosed Principal – His Rights and Liabilities" (1909), 18 Yale L.J. 443; M. Schiff, "The Undisclosed Principal: An Anomaly in the Laws of Agency and Contract" (1983), 88 Com. L.J. 229. Critics of the rule argue that contracts are premised upon the agreement of two or more persons to be bound to each other and to the terms pursuant to which they will be so bound. It appears to be inconsistent with this fundamental principle to bind the third parties to principals with whom they did not contract.

[40] Bastarache J, writing for the court, went on to state at para 18 that:

> Regardless of the criticism of the rule, it is firmly established that undisclosed principals may sue or be sued on simple contracts entered into by their agents. Parties are presumed to be aware of the possibility that those with whom they are bargaining are acting on behalf of an unnamed principal. The parties to a contract can avoid the application of the rule, either by including an express term in the contract which limits liability to the parties named in the contract itself, or by executing the contract under seal. [emphasis added]

[41] The extent to which an undisclosed principal can sue and be sued in his own name on any contract made on his behalf remains fluid. The Nova Scotia Court of Appeal recently concluded that there are several important qualifications to the rule pertaining to an undisclosed principal in CNH Capital Canada Ltd v Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, 2013 NSCA 35, [2013] NSR (2d) 213. They are: a) the terms of the contract and the surrounding circumstances must permit the possibility of identifying the undisclosed principal, by showing that the agent was not acting as the real and only principal; b) the personality of the principal was a matter of indifference to the third party; and c) the agent acted with authority in making the contract in issue. Writing for the court, Fichaud JA states at para 61 that:

> I do not read Friedmann as rejecting the qualifications to the undisclosed principal rule that are discussed in the passages I have quoted from Fridman's Canadian Agency Law. Friedmann focussed on whether a sealed contract should remain as a qualification to the undisclosed principal rule. The Supreme Court neither reviewed nor purported to re-state exhaustively all the > detailed principles that govern the other qualifications to the undisclosed principal rule. Professor Fridman's 2009 text, from which I have quoted, postdated Friedmann by nine years. In my view, the qualifications to the undisclosed principal rule, quoted above from Fridman's Canadian Agency Law, remain on the current menu of governing principles.

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

[42] We agree. In particular, we agree that the admissibility of parol evidence to identify an undisclosed principal should depend on the type of description in the agreement. For example, where an agreement is clear and expressly or impliedly excludes the possibility of an undisclosed principal, there should be no room for admission of evidence to establish another principal. If, however, there is ambiguity within the contract as to who the parties are, extrinsic evidence may be admissible to show the existence of an undisclosed principal. As stated by Fridman at 167, in such circumstances "the evidence would explain the contract, not vary or contradict it, and would not produce a result that was inconsistent with the terms of the contract."

[43] The Agreement here does not permit the identification of Ms. Swift as a possible principal. Moreover, the evidence at trial established that the Architects intended to contract with Mr. Swift only and that Mr. Swift had no express authority to bind Ms. Swift.

The Scope of the Limitation Clause

[44] The trial judge interpreted the Limitation Clause in a manner that allowed the Engineers to shelter under it, thereby limiting the damages payable by them. The appellants submit this was an error in law and put forward three arguments in support.

[45] First, the Architects argue that there is a distinction between the term "Designer" as used in the Limitation Clause and the term "Prime Consultant/Designer" as used in other parts of the Agreement. They submit that the trial judge erred in not examining the Agreement as a whole and in failing to apply the presumption of consistent expression.

[46] The Limitation Clause, by its wording, applies to any and all claims that arise "against the Designer which arise solely and directly out of the Designer's duties and responsibilities". The Architects submit that the use of the term "Designer" in the Limitation Clause was no error. Eleven Eleven as "Prime Consultant/Designer", was acting in its capacity as "Prime Consultant" when it retained the Engineers to do structural engineering design work, not in its capacity as "Designer". The use of the term "Designer" in the Limitation Clause meant that the Swifts could only recover in respect of Eleven Eleven's architectural design work, not the Engineers' work. In other words, the Architects when acting as "Prime Consultant" are not liable for the Engineers' negligence.

[47] We disagree. The distinction put forward by the Architects is not supported when one looks at the Agreement, which clearly defines "Designer" and "Prime Consultant" as Eleven Eleven. In substituting "Designer" for Eleven Eleven in the Limitation Clause, it becomes clear that the Limitation Clause applies to the liability of the Architects or those retained by them to carry out the prescribed services under the Agreement.

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

[48] The second argument advanced by the Architects and the Swifts is that the that the wording "any and all claims … shall be limited to the amount of $500,000.00" means that each individual claim should be limited to $500,000, but if there are several distinct claims the aggregate amount that could be claimed is $500,000 for each such claim. The absence of the word "aggregate" before "amount", they argue, is fatal to the trial judge's conclusion that the Limitation Clause applied to the totality of the Swifts' claims. This argument may have merit, particularly where, as here, the causes of action are separate claims in relation to: (1) the gravity load resisting system, and (2) the seismic load resisting system. The phrase "any and all" does not necessarily import the meaning of an aggregate sum. This ought to have been considered by the trial judge and may have led to a narrow interpretation of the Limitation Clause, as mandated by Hunter Engineering v Syncrude Canada Ltd, [1989] 1 SCR 426 at 497, [1989] SCJ No 23. However, given our findings on the issue of negligent misrepresentation, dealt with below, it is unnecessary for us to opine on the issue.

The claim for negligent misrepresentation

[49] The Swifts argue that the trial judge erred in ruling that the Limitation Clause applied to limit Mr. Swift's recovery in total as the trial judge had failed to address Mr. Swift's claim against the Engineers for negligent misrepresentation. Even if the tort claims contemplated within the contract were limited by the Limitation Clause, the negligent misrepresentation claim was not so limited.

[50] The foundation of the negligent misrepresentation claim is as follows. Mr. Tomecek represented, in late 2006 or thereabouts, that certain seismic redesign work would be or had been done. Mr. Swift relied on these representations and completed the construction of the home before doing the necessary remedial work. Since it costs more to do such remedial work as the construction process progresses, the delay in starting the remedial work caused by Mr. Tomecek's misrepresentations directly caused certain damages that are separate from (but overlapping with) the damage caused by his negligent engineering work. Mr. Swift submits that this claim was not contemplated by the Limitation Clause as it does not arise "solely and directly out of the Designer's duties and responsibilities" pursuant to the Agreement.

[51] The trial judge failed to address the negligent misrepresentation claim altogether, although it was put forward in the pleadings and in oral and written submissions. The Engineers state that while the trial judge gave no express reasons on this claim, it had no merit and was inferentially properly dismissed. They argue that there was no representation, and that it would be unreasonable to restrict the application of the Limitation Clause in this way because service providers will almost invariably represent that their services meet an acceptable standard at the time that the services are rendered. Exclusion clauses would be of little value if a separate claim could be made in respect of a service provider's assertion that his work was done properly.

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

[52] We disagree. On the record before us, we conclude the claim does have merit and the trial judge ought to have considered it. For the reasons that follow, we also conclude that the Limitation Clause does not apply to the negligent misrepresentation.

[53] In order to find negligent misrepresentation, the following criteria must be met: (1) there must be a duty of care based upon a "special relationship" between the representor and representee; (2) the representation in question must be untrue, inaccurate, or misleading; (3) the representor must have acted negligently in making said representation; (4) the representee must have relied, in a reasonable manner, on said negligent representation; and (5) the reliance must have been detrimental to the representee in the sense that damages resulted: see Queen v Cognos Inc, [1993] 1 SCR 87 at 110, 99 DLR (4th) 626.

[54] There was clearly a "special relationship" between the parties such that a duty of care exists. Indeed, the trial judge found at para 72 that: "there seems to me to be little doubt that a duty of care was owed by the TRL Defendants in the circumstances of this case".

[55] The representation in question is that Mr. Tomecek promised the Architects that he would do a full Part 4 analysis and provide structural engineering to Part 4 of the Code as it related to live earthquake loads. The Engineers argue that Mr. Tomecek believed he was working within the parameters of Part 4 as he understood it. This argument is not a defence. The trial judge found the following at para 34:

> In September 2006, in response to concerns raised by Mr. Galloway and by the Chief Building Inspector about the seismic stability of the Residence, Mr. Taylor of Eleven Eleven requested that the TRL Defendants revise the structural design to comply with Part 4 of the [Code]. Mr. Tomecek testified that he asked Mr. Taylor to confirm with Mr. Swift that he wanted the structural engineering for the Residence to be done to the Part 4 standard; Mr. Taylor obtained that confirmation and testified that Mr. Tomecek promised to bring the structural engineering up to Part 4. The Plaintiffs submit that Mr. Tomecek acknowledged the importance of doing the Part 4 design before the Residence was "closed in". [emphasis added]

[56] Mr. Tomecek effectively stated: "I have complied with Part 4". He did not do so. This representation was reasonably relied upon by Mr. Swift given the Engineers' expertise. Mr. Swift suffered damage resulting from the representation. The deficiencies in the structural design of the home presented a real and substantial danger to its occupants. Mr. Tomecek's representation caused a delay in starting the needed remedial work and as construction progressed, it became more expensive to undertake the required work.

[57] In our view, the Limitation Clause did not contemplate Mr. Tomecek's representation that he had complied with Part 4. It would be unreasonable to conclude that such negligent misrepresentation was contemplated as being something that "arises solely and directly" out of Eleven Eleven's duties and responsibilities. This is particularly so given that the structural defects presented a real and substantial danger to its occupants. As stated in Winnipeg Condominium Corporation No 36 v Bird Construction Co Ltd, [1995] 1 SCR 85 at para 37: "[a]part from the logical force of holding contractors liable for the cost of repair of dangerous defects, there is also a strong underlying policy justification for imposing liability in these cases."

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

[58] The negligent misrepresentation in these circumstances fell outside the parameters of the Limitation Clause.

[59] Given the above, we conclude that Mr. Swift is entitled to recover fully in tort for the negligent misrepresentation of the Engineers. Ms. Swift would also have been entitled to recover in full in tort for the Engineers' negligent design. The trial judge concluded that the total amount of damages amounted to $1,905,318.70. The Swifts have received $1,000,000 pursuant to a settlement agreement with the Architects. We therefore conclude that they should receive a further $905,318.70 from the Engineers.

Indemnity

[60] The Architects seek to increase their right of indemnity against the Engineers from $500,000 to the $1,000,000 they paid to the Swifts pursuant to the settlement agreement entered into prior to trial. The terms of the settlement are set out in the settlement agreement dated March 5, 2012. The amount of the payment has been redacted but it is common ground that the settling defendants paid to the Swifts the sum of $1,000,000. The parties agreed to absorb their own legal costs and reserved the right to proceed further against the Engineers. The Architects and their insurers were released from any further exposure.

[61] The trial judge limited the Architects' right of indemnity to $500,000 because of his interpretation of the Limitation Clause. However, he failed to consider the Engineers' independent liability for negligent misrepresentation, which we have concluded falls outside that Clause. Given that we have found the Engineers entirely liable for the loss arising from their negligence, it follows that the Architects should be indemnified in full.

[62] There are other principles at play, including the fair apportionment of liability. The Architects find themselves in this position because they settled their differences with the Swifts prior to trial and discharged their liability by paying the agreed amount. The courts encourage settlement.

[63] Regardless of whether or not the respondent's liability arises out of tort or breach of contract, the parties ought to be required to contribute their fair share of the judgment commensurate with their share of fault. In this case, the trial judge found that the fault which gave rise to the loss lay squarely with the Engineers, notwithstanding that the Architects were also liable to the Swifts on a contractual basis. That finding is amply supported by the record. This Court in the past has used restitutionary principles to resolve issues of contribution: see

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

Petersen Pontiac Buick GMC (Alta) Ltd v Campbell, 2013 ABCA 251. In that case Hunt JA for this court said at para 54:

> I consider that this result can also be justified on the basis of equitable principles. According to Charles Mitchell, Paul Mitchell & Stephen Watterson, eds, Goff & Jones The Law of Unjust Enrichment, 8th ed (Common Law Library, Sweet & Maxwell, 2011) at para 20-1, a claimant for contribution must show:
>
> (1) the claimant and the defendant were both liable to the third party,
> (2) who was forbidden to accumulate full recoveries from both of them, but
> (3) who could choose to recover in full from either of them, and that
> (4) some or all of the burden of paying him should ultimately be borne by the defendant.

[64] In this case, the Architects effectively discharged $1,000,000 of the defendants' liability pursuant to the settlement agreement entered into prior to trial. The Swifts, by virtue of this judgment, will have recovered more than that and the responsibility for the loss rests with the Engineers.

[65] Accordingly, the Architects' judgment for indemnity against the Engineers is increased from $500,000 to $1,000,000.

Cross-Appeal

[66] The Engineers have filed a contingent cross-appeal. Having allowed the appeal we now address their arguments. They submit the trial judge erred in accepting the evidence of the appellants' experts as to the requirements of the Code and the deficiency of the design.

[67] Specifically, the Engineers take issue with the trial judge's wholesale acceptance of Mr. Galloway's expert evidence and his rejection of the evidence of their expert, Mr. Lam, who testified was that it was appropriate to design the home based on a "hybrid" approach to Parts 4 and 9 of the Code. The Engineers also argue that Mr. Galloway's interpretation of the Code was incorrect, as he misinterpreted the "fundamental period" under the Code. Finally, the Engineers argue that the trial judge erred in his analysis of the duty of care and in the calculation of damages.

[68] A trial judge is entitled to a high degree of deference with respect to the weight and scope given to expert evidence: Canadian 88 Energy Corp v Union Carbide Canada, 2009 ABCA 126 at para 11, 457 AR 47. In our view, the trial judge's rejection of Mr. Lam's hybrid approach withstands appellate scrutiny. He clearly stated at para 134 that the home should have been built to satisfy Part 4 of the Code. The Engineers have not persuaded us that the home could have, or should have, properly been categorized as a Part 9 building. As such, the rejection of the expert that put forth a "hybrid approach" was not an overriding and palpable error. The home was either built to satisfy the requirements of Part 4, or it was not. The trial judge's conclusion on this point was clearly reasonable.

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

[69] The Engineers submit that Mr. Galloway relied on certain calculations that were inconsistent with reality. Specifically, he erroneously used the entire length of the building as one of the variables in calculating the fundamental period of the building and he "introduced, or perhaps invented, the concept of 'equivalent length'". As such, argue the Engineers, the trial judge should have rejected his testimony.

[70] The trial judge carefully considered the expert evidence and preferred that of Mr. Galloway. This is the role of the trial judge we see no overriding and palpable error in his preference. He concluded at para 134:

> Having said that, I find on all of the evidence before me that, given its architectural design and the risk of a seismic event, the Residence should have been built to satisfy Part 4 of the BCBC. With respect to the seismic load issues, I prefer the evidence of Mr. Galloway to that of Mr. Lam. In my view, Mr. Lam attempted to walk too fine a line and I am satisfied that his hybrid approach is not appropriate in this case.

This was a reasonable conclusion. This ground of the cross-appeal is dismissed.

[71] We must also dismiss the Engineers' argument that the trial judge failed to determine the standard of care. The trial judge explicitly found that the standard of care with which the Engineers were required to comply necessitated that the home be built to meet the Part 4 standard. The evidence he accepted supported the conclusion that the Engineers failed to meet this standard. The Engineers' own expert witness, Mr. Lam, stated that there were "obvious deficiencies" in the home even at the time of trial, after Mr. Tomecek had done redesign work in response to the concerns that had been raised in 2006.

[72] We also dismiss the Engineers' argument on the quantification of damages. They challenge the trial judge's calculation of damages under eight categories and submit that in total, the trial judge overestimated the damages by $415,837. We have reviewed these arguments and cannot find any overriding and palpable error. The trial judge was entitled, for example, to calculate a contingency and did not exaggerate the amount, nor did he commit overriding and palpable errors in quantifying the remaining damages. The calculation of complicated damages can sometimes be more akin to an art than to a science. The trial judge carefully calculated the relevant damages and his conclusion is entitled to deference.

[73] The Engineers also appeal the June 2013 costs order. Ten days prior to the trial, the Architects and the Engineers made a joint settlement offer to the Swifts in which the Swifts would receive $645,000 plus interest (Joint Offer). This was not accepted and the Swifts and

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

Architects settled shortly before the trial. The Engineers argue: (1) the Swifts were not a "successful party" at trial, therefore, they are entitled to costs for all steps taken after the service of the Joint Offer; (2) the Joint Offer was a valid formal offer because it was made at least 10 days before the scheduled start date of the trial; and (3) the Joint Offer was a "Calderbank offer" that the trial judge was required by law to consider even if it was not a valid formal offer under the Rules.

[74] This aspect of the cross-appeal must also be dismissed. The rules only give the Engineers an entitlement to costs if they succeed at trial, as measured relative to the offer that they made. The Engineers were clearly not the successful party at trial. They were found negligent, and liable to pay more than they would have been required to pay under the terms of the Joint Offer.

[75] The parties have 30 days to make submissions as to costs, failing which this Court's default rule will apply.

Appeal heard on December 4, 2013

Memorandum filed at Calgary, Alberta
This 4th day of February, 2014

Paperny J.A.

Martin J.A.

Authorized to sign for: Macleod J.

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

Appearances:

D.T. Gallagher, Q.C.
D.K. Docheva
for the Appellant/Cross-Respondents on Cross-Appeal No. 1301-0042-AC and Respondents on Appeal No. 1301-0056-AC, Philip Swift and Cindy McInnis-Swift

S.J. Hammel, Q.C.
P.A. Carson
for the Respondents/Cross-Appellants on Cross-Appeal No. 1301-0042-AC and Appellants on Appeal No. 1301-0056-AC, Tomecek Roney Little & Associates Ltd. and Brian Tomecek

T.C. Hagg, Q.C.
for the Appellants/Cross-Respondents on Cross-Appeal No. 1301-0042-AC and Respondents on Appeal No. 1301-0056-AC, Eleven Eleven Architecture Inc. and McKinley Dang Burkart Design Group Inc.

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

Corrigendum of the Memorandum of Judgment

2014 ABCA 49 (CanLII)

The appearance page now reads:

Appearances:

D.T. Gallagher, Q.C.
D.K. Docheva
for the Appellant/Cross-Respondents on Cross-Appeal No. 1301-0042-AC and Respondents on Appeal No. 1301-0056-AC, Philip Swift and Cindy McInnis-Swift

S.J. Hammel, Q.C.
P.A. Carson
for the Respondents/Cross-Appellants on Cross-Appeal No. 1301-0042-AC and Appellants on Appeal No. 1301-0056-AC, Tomecek Roney Little & Associates Ltd. and Brian Tomecek

T.C. Hagg, Q.C.
for the Appellants/Cross-Respondents on Cross-Appeal No. 1301-0042-AC and Respondents on Appeal No. 1301-0056-AC, Eleven Eleven Architecture Inc. and McKinley Dang Burkart Design Group Inc.

Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta

Citation: Re: SemCanada Crude Company (Celtic Exploration Ltd. #2), 2012 ABQB 489

Date: 20120731
Docket: 0801 08510
Registry: Calgary

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

In the Matter of the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985 c. C-36, as amended and In the Matter of a Plan of Compromise or Arrangement of SemCanada Crude Company, SemCAMS ULC, SemCanada Energy Company, A.E. Sharp Ltd., CEG Energy Options Inc. and 1380331 Alberta ULC

(Re: Celtic Exploration Ltd.#2)

Reasons for Decision
of the
Honourable Madam Justice B.E. Romaine

Introduction

[1] Celtic Exploration Ltd. applies for relief arising from the suspension of an inlet gas purchase agreement (the "IGPA") that it had entered into with SemCAMS ULC. The IGPA was suspended in July, 2008 in connection with SemCAMS' filing for protection under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, as amended, and was the subject of reasons for decision dated August 27, 2010, cited as 2010 ABQB 531 (the "IGPA decision"). Leave to appeal the IGPA decision was denied on December 17, 2010.

[2] Celtic seeks an order (i) permitting it to file a late amended claim for damages arising from the suspension of the IGPA for the period from July 22, 2008 (the date of the Initial Order in the CCAA proceedings) to and including November 30, 2009 when the Plan of Arrangement (the "Plan") came into effect and SemCAMS emerged from the protection of the CCAA (the "CCAA Period"), and (ii) declaring that its claims for suspension damages for the periods from December 1, 2009 to and including September 30, 2009 (the "Post Plan Implementation Period") and from October 1, 2010 onwards (the "Post October 2010 Period") are not Affected Claims compromised, barred and released by the Plan or otherwise.

[3] Alternatively, in the event that the Court finds that the suspension damages claims for the Post Plan Implementation Period and the Post October 2010 Period are subject to the claims process established under the CCAA proceedings (the "Claims Process") and are therefore Affected Claims as defined in the Plan, Celtic seeks an order permitting it to file a late amended claim for those damages.

[4] SemCAMS objects to Celtic's application and, in response, has brought an application pursuant to which it seeks an order declaring that (i) Celtic's proposed damages claim, including its claim for suspension damages arising from the CCAA Period, the Post Plan Implementation Period and the Post October 2010 Period, is subject to the Claims Process, (ii) the proposed damages claim is an Affected Claim within the meaning of the Plan that was comprised, released and barred by the Plan and the order approving and sanctioning the Plan dated October 27, 2009 (the "Sanction Order"), and (iii) Celtic is precluded from filing a late or amended claim. SemCAMS also seeks an order declaring the Statement of Claim filed by Celtic with respect to the proposed damages claim to be a breach of the Plan and the Sanction Order, and directing that it be struck out.

[5] The Bank of America (the "BA") as Agent on behalf of the Secured Lenders of SemCAMS (as defined in the Plan) supports SemCAMS' application in so far that it submits that, if the proposed damages claim by Celtic is an Affected Claim, it should be declared to be barred, extinguished and released by the Plan and Sanction Order and Celtic should not be allowed to file any late or amended claim.

Issues

[6] The main issues arising from these applications are as follows:

a) Are Celtic's claims for suspension damages for the Post Plan Implementation Period and/or the Post October 2010 Period "Affected Claims" under the CCAA proceedings, and therefore subject to the Claims Process?

b) Should Celtic be allowed to file a late amended claim for suspension damages during the CCAA Period? If Celtic's claims for suspension damages for the Post Plan Implementation Period and/or the Post October 2010 Period are "Affected Claims", should Celtic be allowed to file a late claim for these damages?

c) Should Celtic's Statement of Claim be struck out?

Analysis

a) Are Celtic's claims for suspension damages for the Post Plan Implementation Period and/or the Post October 2010 Period "Affected Claims" under the CCAA proceedings and therefore subject to the Claims Process?

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

[7] As part of a Settlement Agreement dated March 18, 2011 and approved by the Court, Celtic agreed that, if its claim for suspension damages for the CCAA Period was found not to be barred by the Claims Process Order, it would not take the position that this portion of its damages claim would be other than an unsecured claim compromised by the Plan. Thus, the only issue with respect to any damages that Celtic submits it may have a claim to during the CCAA Period is whether Celtic should be allowed to amend its previously filed Proof of Claim to include damages arising from the suspension of the IGPA during this period. This issue will be discussed later in this decision.

[8] However, Celtic submits that its claims for damages arising from the suspension of the IGPA for the Post Plan Implementation Period and/or the Post October 2010 Period are not subject to compromise under the Plan.

Relevant Facts

[9] To understand the submissions that have been made on this issue, it is necessary to refer to some of the long and complicated history of this claim and the prior litigation between the parties. I described in paragraphs 3 through 53 of the IGPA decision the nature of the contractual relationship between SemCAMS and Celtic and what occurred between July 22, 2008, the date of the Initial Order under the CCAA, and February, 2010 when the application that resulted in that decision was heard, and those paragraphs are incorporated into this decision for clarity.

[10] I found in the IGPA decision that an agreement had been reached between SemCAMS and Celtic to suspend the IGPA because of SemCAMS' inability to market sales gas and related product as a result of the CCAA proceedings: para. 103. I found that parties to a contract may by mutual agreement suspend a contract even if the contract itself does not specifically provide for suspension: para. 110. Specifically, I found that Celtic purported to suspend the IGPA, given SemCAMS' anticipatory breach of its obligations to market the sales gas and products, and that SemCAMS agreed to the suspension.

[11] Celtic submits that I made a finding of fact in the IGPA decision that Celtic had exercised a right under the IGPA to suspend delivery of natural gas, and identifies that right as arising from Section 10.2 of the Gas EDI Base Contract for Sale and Purchase of Natural Gas that forms part of the IGPA. This is an out-of-context interpretation of paragraph 111 of the IGPA decision. Section 10.2 of the Gas EDI Base Contract was not in issue before me at the time of the IGPA decision, and I made no finding that the mutual agreement to suspend the contract arose from any right specifically referred to in the IGPA. At any rate, as SemCAMS notes, the precondition of notice of the intention to exercise Section 10.2 required by the contract was never given by Celtic to SemCAMS at the time of suspension. There was only an anticipatory, and not an actual, breach of the IGPA at the point of suspension. In its submissions on this point, Celtic ignores the fact that Section10.2 of the Gas EDI Base Contract only allows a short-term suspension, and not the lengthy suspension that I found the parties had agreed to. This provision has no connection or application to the finding of suspension I made in the IGPA decision.

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

[12] Celtic submits that it had a unilateral right to reinstate performance under the IGPA effective October 1, 2010 for various reasons. SemCAMS disagrees, but submits that whether or not Celtic had that unilateral right makes no difference to the issue of whether the damages claims for either the Post Plan Implementation Period or the Post October 2010 Period are subject to the CCAA proceedings and should have been part of the Claims Process, or whether these claims were released and discharged by the Plan and the Plan Sanction Order. I agree that, given the decisions I have reached on these issues, it is not necessary that I make any findings with respect to the merits of the reinstatement issue, other than the comments I have made with respect to the applicability of Section 10.2 of the Gas EDI Base Contract and comments made in the IGPA decision.

[13] Prior to the Claims Bar Date of December 1, 2008 set out in the Claims Process Order, Celtic filed a Proof of Claim against SemCAMS that did not include a contingent or other claim for suspension damages arising from the IGPA.

[14] SemCAMS held a meeting of its creditors to consider the Plan on October 8, 2009. It received the requisite creditor support and applied for, and was granted, the Sanction Order on October 26, 2009. Celtic voted on the Plan and was served with a copy of the Sanction Order. The Plan Implementation Date was November 30, 2009.

[15] After the application that resulted in the IGPA decision was heard, but before a decision was released, Celtic purchased an interest in the KA Plant and became a party to the CO & O Agreement with SemCAMS and the other joint owners of the KA Plant. In July, 2010, correspondence was exchanged between SemCAMS and Celtic on the issue of whether gas delivered by Celtic to the KA Plant would thenceforth be processed pursuant to the CO & O Agreement or the IGPA. Celtic advised SemCAMS on September 7, 2010 that it proposed to reinstate deliveries under the IGPA effective October 1, 2010 for all of its gas other than gas that was dedicated to the KA Plant by reason of the CO & O Agreement. On September 30, 2010, SemCAMS advised Celtic that Celtic's change in status to a joint owner of the KA Plant and a counterparty to the CO & O Agreement made it impossible to reinstate the IGPA unless it was first amended to address certain issues, including exclusion of Plant Area Gas. Further correspondence followed.

[16] On October 15, 2010, SemCAMS set out the terms of an amended IGPA that at the time SemCAMS was willing to execute. Celtic did not accept these offered terms.

[17] On February 14, 2011, Celtic advised SemCAMS that it took the position that it had unilaterally reinstated performance of the IGPA effective October 1, 2010, and that SemCAMS was therefore in breach of the agreement. The following day, it filed a Statement of Claim alleging that the granting of the Initial Order under the CCAA Proceedings was an event of default under the IGPA, and that Celtic, as the non-defaulting party, suspended performance of all transactions under the IGPA with the agreement of SemCAMS. Celtic claims damages arising from this suspension.

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

[18] SemCAMS advised Celtic on March 17, 2011 that, in its opinion, the IGPA could not be reinstated unilaterally, and restated its pervious position. SemCAMS also advised Celtic that, if it was found that Celtic could unilaterally reinstate the IGPA effective October 1, 2010 (which SemCAMS denied was the case), SemCAMS gave notice of termination of the IGPA effective March 31, 2013.

[19] Pursuant to the Settlement Agreement, SemCAMS and Celtic jointly instructed the Monitor to hold the amount of $900,000 of surplus funds in the SemCAMS' Ordinary Creditors Pool under the Plan as a reserve for the damages claims. The Settlement Agreement also provides that in the event the damages claims, or any portion of such claims, are determined to be Affected Claims compromised by the Plan and that such Affected Claims are not determined to be barred by the Claims Process Order, the Plan or the Plan Sanction Order, Celtic will only be entitled to a distribution from the damages reserve of the lesser of 4% of such proven damages claim and the amount in the damages reserve, if any. The Monitor is currently holding the damages reserve.

Analysis

[20] On the issue of whether the damages claims for the Post Plan Implementation Period and the Post October 2010 Period are compromised or otherwise affected by the CCAA proceedings, Celtic references Section 19 of the CCAA, the Plan itself, the Plan Sanction Order and what it refers to as the purpose of the CCAA.

[21] The relevant portions of Section 19(1) of the CCAA are as follows:

> 19.(1) Subject to subsection (2), the only claims that may be dealt with by a compromise or arrangement in respect of a debtor company are
>
> (a) claims that relate to debts or liabilities, present or future, to which the company is subject on the earlier of
>
> (i) the day on which proceedings commenced under this Act, and
>
> . . .
>
> (b) claims that relate to debts or liabilities, present or future, to which the company may become subject before the compromise or arrangement is sanctioned by reason of any obligation incurred by the company before the earlier of the days referred to in subparagraphs (a)(i) . . . [emphasis added]

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

Section 19(2) does not apply in this case.

[22] As noted by SemCAMS, Section 19(1) was not proclaimed in force until September 18, 2009, which was after the Initial Order was granted, but prior to the Sanction Order. It may thus be argued that Section 19(1) does not apply to this issue, but I am satisfied that it would not make a difference to Celtic's application if former Section 12 was the applicable statutory provision, and I have conducted the analysis under Section 19.

[23] Celtic submits that Section 19(1) permits the compromise of debts and liabilities in respect of two time periods: the period up to commencement of proceedings under the CCAA and claims that relate to debts or liabilities to which the debtor may become subject before the Sanction Order in respect of obligations incurred by the debtor before the commencement of proceedings.

[24] This interpretation of Section 19(1) ignores the words "that relate to liabilities, present or future" that modify the term "claims". It is clear that SemCAMS was subject to the possibility of liability under the IGPA before the CCAA proceedings commenced. The claims for suspension damages are claims that relate to the IGPA and to the suspension of the IGPA that occurred as a result of the CCAA proceedings. Section 19(1) does not limit the claims that may be dealt with by a Plan under the CCAA to presently existing liabilities. This is made clear by the addition of the word "future" in both Section 19(1)(a) and Section 19(1)(b).

[25] The claims relating to the suspension of the IGPA during the CCAA Period and beyond are exactly the kind of anticipatory, future claims that are referenced in Section 19(1). A "claim" for the purpose of the CCAA includes any indebtedness, liability or obligation that would be provable under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, as amended: Section 2(1) of the CCAA. Section 121(1) of the BIA defines "provable claims" as being:

> . . . (a)ll debts and liabilities, present and future, to which the bankrupt is subject on the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt, or to which the bankrupt may become subject before the bankrupt's discharge by reasons of any obligation incurred before the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt . . .

[26] Section 121(2) of the BIA makes it clear that this includes contingent or unliquidated claims, with the procedure for evaluating contingent or unliquidated claims described in Section 135. Section 20(1)(a) of the CCAA describes how the amount of an unsecured claim that is a provable claim under the BIA may be determined by a court on summary application if it is not admitted by the debtor company.

[27] It may well have been difficult to value a contingent claim for future suspension damages that was filed before the Claims Bar Date, but that is often the nature of a contingent or future claim. In particular, there may have been issues relating to when the IGPA could reasonably be reinstated. As noted by SemCAMS, contingent claims are routinely filed in CCAA proceedings and in proceedings under the BIA.

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

[28] In Abacus Cities Ltd. (Trustee of) v. AMIC Mortgage Investment Corp, [1992] 4 WWR 309 (AltaCA), a fact scenario that occurred after the date of bankruptcy based on a pre-bankruptcy contract was held to give rise to a claim provable in the bankruptcy. The issue was whether mortgagees could claim in the bankruptcy for costs incurred after the date of bankruptcy, where the claims for costs were based on indemnities by the bankrupt found in pre-bankruptcy mortgages.

[29] The trustee in Abacus Cities submitted that future claims had to be limited to those that could be valued before they arise, and that a future liability that could not be calculated in advance could not be a provable claim. The Court commented as follows at page 318:

> I agree that this rule can limit future claims that otherwise fall within the scope of entitlement. In fact, some may not be provable when the trustee calls for proof . . .
>
> One must take care not to overstate the rule. It does not eliminate contingent or future claims. It merely subjects them to a valuation process: . . .

[30] SemCAMS concedes that Celtic would not have known by the Claims Bar Date if and when the IGPA would be reinstated, but argues that Celtic could have claimed damages on the assumption that the IGPA would not be reinstated. There could have been a summary determination of the claim or a reservation for the full amount of claimed damages. Or, the Court may have determined that the contingent claim was too remote or speculative to be properly considered a contingent claim and thus not a provable claim: Re Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. 1997 CarswellOnt 31 43 CBR (3d) 4, (sub nom. Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re) 96 OAC 75 at para. 4.

[31] Celtic submits that, if this was an ordinary action alleging breach of contract, it could not claim continuing damages for any future period of time in the absence of a repudiation of the contract. It therefore submits that it would not have a claim for the alleged suspension damages after the Plan Implementation Date that could be subject to compromise. While it may be true that a creditor cannot sue for contingent damages in the ordinary course, the legislative framework of the CCAA and the BIA allows debtor companies to deal with contingent claims in insolvency proceedings. There was no reason why Celtic could not have filed such a claim.

[32] In a similar argument, Celtic submits that, in order for its claim for suspension damages to be a claim that arises prior to the Plan Implementation Date, it must be an amount of damages that Celtic would have been entitled to recover within the CCAA Period. Again, this ignores the fact that the provisions of the CCAA and the BIA allow the debtor to deal with future and contingent claims within the ambit of the CCAA proceedings.

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

[33] Celtic also submits that its claim for suspension damages does not fall within the type of claim that can be compromised as set out in Section 19(1) because it is not a "debt". That is true, but a provable claim may be a "debt" or a "liability". As noted by the British Columbia Court of Appeal in Re West Bay SonShip Yachts Ltd., 2009 Carswell BC 139, 2009 BCCA 31, [2009] BCWLD 1230, 71 CCEL (3d) 45, 49 CBR (5th) 159, [2009] 4 WWR 415, 89 BCLR (4th) 82, 265 BCAC 203, 446 WAC 203, 306 DLR (4th) 294 at para. 22, "liability" is a broad term that is most often used to describe an unliquidated or unspecified legal obligation, and "debt" is a narrower term that means a specific kind of obligation for a liquidated or certain sum. The definition of "claim" under the CCAA includes both.

[34] Celtic relies in its submissions on the fact that the IGPA was not repudiated. Section 19(1) does not restrict the type of claims that may be compromised under CCAA proceedings to claims arising solely from repudiated contracts. Section 19(1)(b) anticipates that claims may arise by virtue of the CCAA proceedings themselves, and allows the debtor company to put forward for approval by its creditors an arrangement that would compromise those claims. The claim for damages for suspension of the IGPA is that type of claim. It arises from and relates to the suspension of the IGPA that occurred by reason of the CCAA filing, and the inability of SemCAMS as a result of such filing to continue to market the Celtic gas.

[35] Celtic itself concedes that there is no basis in the IGPA itself to distinguish its right to damages before the Plan Implementation Date of November 30, 2009 and after. The obligation to pay damages arising from the suspension is not a a new breach of the IGPA that occurred after the Plan Implementation Date, but a claim of continuing damages that arise from the suspension of the IGPA, whether or not Celtic has the right to unilaterally reinstate the agreement.

[36] I find that the claim for suspension damages as it relates to the Post Plan Implementation Period is a claim that may be dealt with by a compromise under Section 19(1) of the CCAA.

[37] Celtic seeks to distinguish its claim for suspension damages for the Post October 2010 Period onward on the basis that SemCAMS' alleged refusal to accept deliveries under the IGPA after Celtic unilaterally purported to reinstate the agreement was a "distinct" breach of the IGPA, and not the same as either the failure to make payments under the IGPA which precipitated the suspension, or the suspension itself which gives rise to an obligation to pay damages as long as it remains in effect.

[38] I cannot agree that this alleged refusal to reinstate the IGPA was a fresh breach, even if Celtic was entitled to act unilaterally. The issue of reinstatement of the IGPA and whether it could be accomplished unilaterally or required the consent of both parties is an issue that arises from the suspension, and is not a new issue under the IGPA. Celtic seeks to distinguish the IGPA as an executory contract, the non-performance of which can give rise to new breaches, but it is not the non-performance of a properly reinstated executory contract that is at issue here, but when and how the IGPA is to be reinstated. The damages claimed for the alleged breach in the Post October 2010 Period are the same type of damages claimed for the preceding periods. It is not necessary for the analysis of the issue before me that I decide whether Celtic was entitled to unilaterally reinstate the IGPA, and I do not do so. However, I find that the claim for suspension damages in the Post October 2010 Period also is a "claim" that may be dealt with by a compromise under Section 19(1) as this claim does not arise from a fresh breach.

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

[39] I turn next to the portions of the Plan that may be relevant to the issue of whether the damages claim for the Post Plan Implementation Period and the Post October 2010 Period were compromised; Section 8.1 of the Plan states as follows:

> On the Plan Implementation Date . . . the Company . . .shall be released and discharged from any and all demands, claims, actions, causes of action, counterclaims, suits, debts, sums of money, accounts, covenants, damages . . .on account of any liability, obligation, demand or cause of action of whatever nature which any Creditor or other Person may be entitled to assert . . .whether known or unknown, matured or unmatured, foreseen or unforeseen, existing or hereafter arising, based in whole or in part on any act or omission, transaction, duty, responsibility, indebtedness, liability, obligation, dealing or other occurrence existing or taking place on or prior to the Plan Implementation Date in any way relating to, arising out of or in connect with the Claims, the business and affairs of the Company whenever or however conducted, . . the Plan, the CCAA Proceedings, any Claim that has been barred or extinguished by the Claims Process Order and all Claims arising out of such actions or omissions shall be forever waived and released, all to the full extent permitted by Law; . . .

[40] As I have found that the claim for suspension damages during the Post Implementation Period and the Post October 2010 Period are claims that may be subject to compromise under Section 19(1) of the CCAA, it is clear that they are caught by Section 8.1 of the Plan. Paragraphs 28 and 45 of the Sanction Order give effect to Section 8.1 as follows:

> 28. Pursuant to and in accordance with the Plan, any and all Affected Claims of any nature against the Company, . . . shall be forever compromised, discharged and released, and the ability of any Person to proceed against the Company in respect of or relating to any Affected Claims shall be forever discharged and restrained, and all proceedings with respect to, in connection with or relating to such Affected Claims are hereby permanently stayed, subject only to the right of Affected Creditors to receive the distributions pursuant to the Plan and this Plan Sanction Order in respect of their Affected Claims.
>
> . . .
>
> 45. Pursuant to and in accordance with Section 8.1 of the Plan, on the Plan Implementation Date the Released Parties shall be released and discharged from any and all demands, claims, actions, causes of action . . .on account of any liability, obligation, demand or cause of action of whatever nature which any > Creditor or other Person may be entitled to assert. . .whether known or unknown, matured or unmatured, foreseen or unforeseen, existing or hereafter arising, based in whole or in part on any act or omission, transaction, duty, responsibility, indebtedness, liability, obligation, dealing or other occurrence existing or taking place on or prior to the Plan Implementation Date in any way relating to, arising out of or in connection with the Claims, the business and affairs of the Company whenever or however conducted . . .any Claim that has been barred or extinguished by the Claims Process Order and all Claims arising out of such actions or omissions shall be forever waived and released, all to the full extent permitted by Law: . . .

[41] As noted by SemCAMS, the only potential events of default under the IGPA at the time it was suspended were SemCAMS' insolvency and its commencement of CCAA proceedings. Any claim for damages arising from the suspension constitute an Affected Claim. Those potential events of default were cured by the stay imposed under the Initial Order and by the Sanction Order, which provided for a waiver of all defaults. The Affected Claims are caught by the release and discharge contained in section 8.1 of the Plan, which was given effect by the Sanction Order.

[42] Celtic submits that it would be inconsistent with the general purposes of the CCAA if SemCAMS and its counterparties remained bound by existing contracts, but SemCAMS could not be compelled to fully perform its obligations as they arise as a result of the Sanction Order. That would certainly be true if it was in fact the case. However, while Celtic and SemCAMS have not been able to resolve their difference over what is required or necessary to reinstate the IGPA, that does not mean that SemCAMS has been relieved of its obligations under the agreement, or relieved from a claim for damages arising from the suspension.

[43] The fact that the IGPA was suspended by mutual agreement and not terminated implies an obligation to reinstate the agreement when the impediment to performance, here the CCAA proceedings, has ceased to exist. However, changes in the status and positions of the parties in the interim must also be taken into consideration, and it is on that issue that the parties are unable to agree. If SemCAMS failed to agree to the reinstatement of the IGPA on terms that adequately reflected the changed circumstances, the continued suspension would give rise to a damages claim.

[44] However, such a claim would be an Affected Claim within the meaning of the CCAA proceeding that could be, and was, compromised by the Plan and the Sanction Order.

b) Should Celtic be allowed to file a late amended claim for suspension damages during the CCAA Period? If Celtic's claims for suspension damages for the Post Plan Implementation Period and/or the Post October 2010 Period are "Affected Claims", should Celtic be allowed to file a late claim for these damages?

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

[45] Celtic submits that, in the event its claims for suspension damages are found to be Affected Claims under the CCAA proceedings, it should be permitted to amend its previously-filed Proof of Claim to claim such damages. While Celtic divides its claims into three periods: the period it characterizes as the "CCAA Period", the Post Plan Implementation Period and the Post October 2010 Period, I have found that the claims for damages for suspension of the IGPA for all of these periods fall within the definition of "claims" for the purpose of Section 19 and were thus subject to compromise by the Plan and the Sanction Order.

[46] The only distinction that may be made among these three periods of time with respect to a late filing application relates to whether the claim for suspension damages for the CCAA Period would be an amendment to the Proof of Claim filed by Celtic on November 28, 2008 or a new claim.

[47] I find that the claims for suspension damages for all three periods of time are new claims. The previously filed Proof of Claim related to amounts owing for the delivery of raw gas to the KA Plant in the months prior to the Initial Order. The proposed claims for suspension damages relate to losses incurred as a result of the suspension of the IGPA after the Initial Order was granted, arising from Celtic's inability to sell its gas to third parties at the same price it would have received under the IGPA. Thus, there is no reason to distinguish among the three periods of time with respect to the question of whether Celtic should be allowed to file a late claim.

[48] I must agree with the BA and SemCAMS that Celtic's application to file a claim or claims for suspension damages at this late date is extraordinary. Celtic did not file its application until April, 2011, approximately two and a half years after the Claims Bar Date of December 1, 2008 and approximately one and a half years after the Plan Implementation Date of November 30, 2009.

[49] In para. 26 of Re Blue Range Resources Corp, 2000 ABCA 285, the Court of Appeal set out the appropriate criteria to apply to late claims in CCAA proceedings:

1. Was the delay caused by inadvertence and if so, did the claimant act in good faith?

2. What is the effect of permitting the claim in terms of the existence and impact of any relevant prejudice caused by the delay?

3. If relevant prejudice is found, can it be alleviated by attaching appropriate conditions to an order permitting late filing?

4. If relevant prejudice is found that cannot be alleviated, are there any other considerations that may nonetheless warrant an order permitting late filing?

[50] As I noted in Re BA Energy Inc., 2010 ABQB 507 at para. 34:

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

> . . .in identifying these criteria and applying them to specific late claims, Wittmann, J.A. favoured a "blended approach", taking into consideration both the standards set out under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, and the U. S. Bankruptcy Rules, and informed by concepts drawn from the approaches taken in a variety of areas of law when dealing with late notice or delays in process. It is clear from the nature of the criteria that the question of whether a late claim should be accepted is an equitable consideration, taking into account the specific circumstances of each case.

1. Inadvertence and Good Faith

[51] Celtic submits that "inadvertence" should not be taken too literally. However, Wittmann, J.A. noted at para. 27 of Blue Range that "inadvertence" in the context of the first criterion includes carelessness, negligence or accident and is unintentional.

[52] Celtic's failure to make a timely claim was not unintentional. It submits that it "simply" did not perceive it had a right to damages because it did not believe that the IGPA had been suspended. Celtic was aware of the CCAA proceedings from the time of the Initial Order and retained counsel with respect to the proceedings throughout. It filed a Proof of Claim for a different kind of claim. It cannot argue that its failure to file a claim was careless, negligent or accidental: it was Celtic's deliberate choice, acting with the advice of counsel, to maintain its position that the IGPA had not been suspended, but amended, without providing for the possibility that this position would be found to be incorrect and that it may have a claim for damages arising from a suspension. The financial implications to Celtic if the IGPA was found to be suspended were made clear to it when it received draft third party gas processing agreements from SemCAMS on August 26, 2008. In fact, Celtic itself calculated its suspension losses for the period from July 22, 2008 to September 30, 2009 in an affidavit filed in response to the application that resulted in the IGPA decision.

[53] Celtic submits that the possibility of suspension damages must also have been apparent to SemCAMS and the BA before the Plan was negotiated and presented to creditors. That is beside the point: the Claims Process in CCAA proceedings requires creditors to identify and to file their claims or be barred from pursuing them. It is not up to the debtor company to guess at potential claims, or whether creditors will decide to pursue them.

[54] Celtic also submits that its claims for suspension damages are not claims for a "debt". While this is true, the Claims Process provides for contingent claims for liabilities and that is what SemCAMS submits Celtic should have filed.

[55] The Claims Process Order of October 22, 2008, which was served on Celtic and its counsel, makes it clear that "claim" includes contingent claims, defining "claim" as including:

> . . . any . . . claim . . . made, in connection with any indebtedness, liability or obligation of any kind whatsoever, and any interest accrued thereon or costs payable in respect thereof,

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

> including without limitation . . . by reasons of any breach of contract or other agreement (oral or written) . . . and whether or not any indebtedness, liability or obligation is reduced to judgment, liquidated, unliquidated, fixed, contingent, matured, unmatured, disputed, undisputed, legal, equitable, secured, unsecured, present, future, known or unknown . . . and whether or not any right or claim is executory or anticipatory in nature including . . . with respect to any matter, action, cause or chose in action whether existing at present or commenced in the future . . .[emphasis added]

The Monitor's Seventh Report dated October 21, 2008 provided a thorough summary of the claims process.

[56] Had Celtic filed its claim for suspension damages, current and future, such claim would have been determined during the Claims Process or there would have been a reservation for the full amount of its claimed damages.

[57] The first criterian of the Blue Range analysis requires that I consider whether Celtic acted in good faith.

[58] SemCAMS and the BA submit that Celtic knew it had a potential claim for damages arising from the suspension of the IGPA as early as August 28, 2008, more than three months prior to the Claims Bar Date, or at any rate, by September 22, 2008, when it sent a letter to SemCAMS asserting that it had not in fact suspended the sale of gas under the IGPA. Celtic had by August 21, 2009 received the Plan and the Monitor's 20th Report, which identifies and alerts stakeholders to the fact that Affected Claims, which by definition include contingent claims, will be compromised, discharged and released under the Plan. Certainly, the question of suspension damages was a live issue during the application that led to the IGPA decision of August 27, 2010, and Celtic was well aware from submissions that were made that SemCAMS took the position that any such claim was barred by the Claims Process Order and compromised under the Plan. Despite all this, Celtic did not bring its application to file a late claim until April, 2011. I cannot find that Celtic acted in good faith by delaying its claim.

2. Prejudice Caused by the Delay

[59] Celtic submits that, since during the application that gave rise to the IGPA decision, SemCAMS has indicated that it may, under certain conditions, consider agreeing to a late - filed claim for suspension damages. It argues that this is an indication that there is in fact no prejudice to SemCAMS or the ordinary creditors from its late claims. SemCAMS' offer to accept a late filed claim was made at a far earlier date than this application for leave to file a late claim, and at a time when the claim was for far less than the amount now claimed.

[60] SemCAMS points out that several of the conditions to this offer to accept a late claim have not been met. The mere fact that SemCAMS considered agreeing to a late claim at an earlier time and under different circumstances does not indicate lack of prejudice now.

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

[61] Celtic concedes that a late claim will prejudice the BA and its group of secured creditors, but submits that this should not be a factor since the BA has already agreed to an Ordinary Creditors' Pool, and the size of that pool will not increase as a result of granting leave to Celtic to amend its Proof of Claim.

[62] As I indicated in Re BA Energy, the objective of a claims procedure order is to attempt to ensure that all legitimate creditors come forward on a timely basis. A claims procedure provides the debtor company and the Monitor with the information necessary to fashion a plan that may prove acceptable to the requisite majority of creditors, given the financial circumstances of the debtor, and that may be sanctioned by the Court. The fact that accurate information relating to the amount and nature of claims is essential for the formulation of a successful plan requires that the specifics of a claims procedure order should generally be observed and enforced, and that the acceptance of a later claim should not be an automatic outcome. The applicant for such an order must provide some explanation for the late filing and the reviewing court must consider any prejudice caused by the delay.

[63] The claims procedure process was developed to give creditors a level playing field with respect to their claims and to discourage tactics that would give some creditors an unjustified advantage. Situations that give rise to concerns of improper manipulation of the process by a creditor must be carefully considered.

[64] Celtic's proposed suspension damages claim would represent an approximately 22% increase in the total value of Ordinary Claims filed against SemCAMS. The new claim increases Celtic's total claims by about 66%. The Plan and the Monitor's Report made it clear that the Secured Lenders represented by the BA agreed to refrain from making a claim against SemCAMS in respect of their first-ranking, fully secured claim in part because they would receive the surplus remaining in the Ordinary Creditors Pool after the claims of ordinary creditors had been satisfied. It is a reasonable inference that this decision was made on the basis of claims that had been filed as of the Claims Bar Date, which did not include the Celtic $22.5 million suspension damages claim.

[65] One of the tests for prejudice is whether a late claim causes another creditor to lose a realistic opportunity to do something it might otherwise have done: Blue Range at para. 40. While it is true that the secured lenders as represented by the BA were likely aware that Celtic may have a potential claim for suspension damages, they were also entitled to rely on the Claims Bar Process, the release provisions of the Plan and the Sanction Order to expect some finality.

[66] In Blue Range, the applications to accept late claims were made within a few months of the plan sanction order. Here, the delay is much longer, and the decision in Blue Range is clear that the timing of the late claim with respect to the stage of proceedings is a key consideration: para. 36.

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

[67] If Celtic is able to file a late claim for suspension damages, the Secured Lenders could receive up to $900,000 less than they otherwise would. This is a material and significant claim, in contrast to the relatively minor value of late claims in Blue Range that were filed after that plan was implemented.

[68] It is noteworthy that the Secured Lenders did not have to consent to the amount that was made available to Ordinary Creditors in the Ordinary Creditors' Pool, as they had clear priority for their claim of approximately US $2.939 billion.

[69] This application also gives rise to a potential issue of unequal treatment among creditors. There were other unsecured creditors with claims arising from inlet gas purchase agreements. If Celtic's application is successful, it is not impossible that such creditors would seek to file similar late claims for suspension damages.

[70] I find that there is relevant prejudice to other creditors arising from the delay, and I am not satisfied that such prejudice can be alleviated by attaching any conditions to an order permitting late filing.

3. Other Considerations

[71] It is relevant that Celtic brings its application to file a late claim after the Plan has been sanctioned and implemented. In Re T. Eaton Company Limited et al, May 5, 1999 98-CL-2586 (Ont. S.C.J.), Blair J. noted, in a case where notification of the claims bar process had "fallen through the cracks" with respect to one creditor such that she had no opportunity to file a claim, that permitting a creditor to file a late claim after plan sanction and implementation "is tantamount to altering or modifying the Plan", and that the jurisdiction to allow such a late claim should thus be "exercised sparingly and in exceptional circumstances only", citing Algoma Steel Corp. V. Royal Bank (1992), 11 C.B.R. 3d 11. While these comments pre-dated Blue Range, which is now the law in Alberta on this issue, the timing of such an application with reference to plan implementation is relevant to the issue of prejudice.

[72] As previously described, this claim would be paid out of the Ordinary Creditors' Pool. It is clear that this large claim was not anticipated when the Pool was structured as part of the Plan and the BA consented to the Plan. The Plan specifically provides that it cannot be modified without the prior consent of BA as Agent of the secured creditors, acting reasonably, and, in the circumstances, it cannot be said that BA is acting unreasonably in opposing the application.

[73] SemCAMS and the BA submit that to allow a creditor with full knowledge of the CCAA Proceedings and the Claims Process to ignore the Claims Bar Date and file a significant new claim more than two years after such date would throw the entire CCAA restructuring process into disrepute. I must agree. Celtic has no good or satisfactory reason to offer as to why it failed to file a contingent claim for suspension damages within a reasonable time. It decided on this strategy for its own reasons, and at its own peril. None of the factors set out in Blue Range or in

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

BA Energy favour its application. The policy reasons that emphasize the need for certainty and finality in an approved and sanctioned plan and fairness of treatment to all creditors outweigh the prejudice to Celtic of disallowing a late claim. The application to file a late claim for suspension damages is thus dismissed.

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

c) Should Celtic's Statement of Claim be struck out?

[74] Celtic alleges in its Statement of Claim that the granting of the Initial Order in the CCAA Proceedings was an event of default under the IGPA and that Celtic, as non-defaulting party, suspended performance of all transactions under the IGPA with the agreement of SemCAMS. I have found that the suspension damages claimed under the Statement of Claim are Affected Claims that may be, and were, compromised by the Plan and the Plan Sanction Order. Paragraph 44 of the Plan Sanction Order provides as follows:

> Any and all Persons shall be and are hereby stayed from commencing, taking, applying for or issuing or continuing any and all steps or proceedings . . . declarations or assessments, commenced, taken or proceeded with or that may be commenced, taken or proceeded with against any Released Party in respect of all Claims and any other matter which is released pursuant to paragraphs 45 to 47, inclusive, of this Plan Sanction Order and Article 8 of the Plan.

[75] The filing of the Statement of Claim is thus a breach of the Plan Sanction Order and accordingly is struck out.

Conclusion

[76] In summary, I find that Celtic's claims for damages arising from the suspension of the IGPA, whether they arose during the CCAA Period, the Post Plan Implementation Period or the Post October 2010 Period are "Affected Claims" under the CCAA proceedings, subject to the Claims Process and to being compromised by the Plan. I dismiss Celtic's application to file an amended or new late claim for these damages. I find the Statement of Claim claiming such suspension damages to be a breach of the Sanction Order and, accordingly, I direct that it be struck out.

[77] If the parties are unable to agree on costs, that issue may be addressed through written submissions filed with 45 days.

Dated at the City of Calgary, Alberta this 31st day of July, 2012.

B.E. Romaine
J.C.Q.B.A.

Appearances:

A. Robert Anderson, Q.C.
Doug Schweitzer
Osler, Hoskin & Harcourt LLP
for SemCAMS ULC

Anthony Jordan, Q.C.
Gowling Lafleur Henderson LLP
for Celtic Exploration Ltd.

Ashley John Taylor
Erica Tait
Stikeman Elliott LLP for the Bank of America, N.A.

2012 ABQB 489 (CanLII)

Her Majesty The Queen in Right of the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador Appellant

v.

AbitibiBowater Inc., Abitibi-Consolidated Inc., Bowater Canadian Holdings Inc., Ad Hoc Committee of Bondholders, Ad Hoc Committee of Senior Secured Noteholders and U.S. Bank National Association (Indenture Trustee for the Senior Secured Noteholders) Respondents

and

Attorney General of Canada, Attorney General of Ontario, Attorney General of British Columbia, Attorney General of Alberta, Her Majesty The Queen in Right of British Columbia, Ernst & Young Inc., as Monitor, and Friends of the Earth Canada Interveners

Indexed as: Newfoundland and Labrador v. AbitibiBowater Inc.

2012 SCC 67

File No.: 33797.

2011: November 16; 2012: December 7.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and LeBel, Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Moldaver and Karakatsanis JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL FOR QUEBEC

Bankruptcy and Insolvency — Provable claims — Contingent claims — Corporation filing for insolvency protection — Province issuing environmental protection orders against corporation and seeking declaration that orders not "claims" under Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA"), and not subject to claims procedure order — Whether environmental protection orders are monetary claims that

Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de la province de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador Appelante

c.

AbitibiBowater Inc., Abitibi-Consolidated Inc., Bowater Canadian Holdings Inc., comité ad hoc des créanciers obligataires, comité ad hoc des porteurs de billets garantis de premier rang et U.S. Bank National Association (fiduciaire désigné par l'acte constitutif pour les porteurs de billets garantis de premier rang) Intimés

et

Procureur général du Canada, procureur général de l'Ontario, procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique, procureur général de l'Alberta, Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de la Colombie-Britannique, Ernst & Young Inc., en sa qualité de contrôleur, et Les Ami(e)s de la Terre Canada Intervenants Répertorié : Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador c. AbitibiBowater Inc.

2012 CSC 67

N^o^ du greffe : 33797.

2011 : 16 novembre; 2012 : 7 décembre.

Présents : La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges LeBel, Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Moldaver et Karakatsanis.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DU QUÉBEC

Faillite et insolvabilité — Réclamations prouvables — Réclamations éventuelles — Demande de protection contre l'insolvabilité par une société — Ordonnances environnementales émises par la province contre la société et demande, par la province, d'un jugement déclarant que les ordonnances ne constituent pas des « réclamations » aux termes de la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, L.R.C. 1985, can be compromised in corporate restructuring under CCAA — Whether CCAA is ultra vires or constitutionally inapplicable by permitting court to determine whether environmental order is a monetary claim.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

A was involved in industrial activity in Newfoundland and Labrador (the "Province"). In a period of general financial distress, it ended its last operation there, filed for insolvency protection in the United States and obtained a stay of proceedings under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA"). The Province subsequently issued five orders under the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2, requiring A to submit remediation action plans for five industrial sites it had occupied, three of which had been expropriated by the Province, and to complete the remediation actions. The Province also brought a motion for a declaration that a claims procedure order issued under the CCAA in relation to A's proposed reorganization did not bar the Province from enforcing the environmental protection orders. The Province argued that the environmental protection orders were not "claims" under the CCAA and therefore could not be stayed and subject to a claims procedure order. It further argued that Parliament lacked the constitutional competence under its power to make laws in relation to bankruptcy and insolvency to stay orders that were validly made in the exercise of a provincial power. A contested the motion, arguing that the orders were monetary in nature and hence fell within the definition of the word "claim" in the claims procedure order. The CCAA court dismissed the Province's motion. The Court of Appeal denied the Province leave to appeal.

Held (McLachlin C.J. and LeBel J. dissenting): The appeal should be dismissed.

Per Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Moldaver and Karakatsanis JJ.: Not all orders issued by regulatory bodies are monetary in nature and thus provable claims in an insolvency proceeding, but some may be, even if the amounts involved are not quantified ch. C-36 (« LACC »), et qu'elles ne sont pas assujetties à l'ordonnance relative à la procédure de réclamations — Les ordonnances environnementales constituent-elles des réclamations pécuniaires pouvant faire l'objet d'une transaction dans le cadre d'une restructuration sous le régime de la LACC? — La LACC est-elle ultra vires ou constitutionnellement inapplicable en permettant au tribunal de déterminer si une ordonnance environnementale constitue une réclamation pécuniaire?

A a poursuivi des activités industrielles à Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador (la « province »). Dans une période de grandes difficultés financières, elle a mis un terme à ses activités dans la province, elle a présenté une demande de protection contre l'insolvabilité aux États-Unis et elle a obtenu une suspension des procédures en vertu de la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-36 (« LACC »). La province a par la suite prononcé cinq ordonnances environnementales en vertu de l'Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, ch. E-14.2, contraignant A à présenter des plans de restauration pour cinq sites industriels qu'elle avait occupés, dont trois avaient été expropriés par la province, et à réaliser les plans de restauration approuvés. La province a également demandé par requête un jugement déclarant qu'une ordonnance relative à la procédure de réclamations rendue aux termes de la LACC dans le cadre de la réorganisation proposée de A n'empêchait pas la province d'exécuter les ordonnances environnementales. La province a plaidé que les ordonnances environnementales ne constituent pas des « réclamations » au sens de la LACC et que leur exécution ne peut donc être suspendue ni être assujettie à une ordonnance relative à la procédure de réclamations. Elle a de plus fait valoir que le pouvoir du Parlement de légiférer en matière de faillite et d'insolvabilité ne lui confère pas la compétence constitutionnelle pour suspendre l'application des ordonnances prononcées dans l'exercice valide de pouvoirs provinciaux. A a contesté la requête et a soutenu que les ordonnances étaient de nature pécuniaire et qu'elles étaient donc visées par la définition du terme « réclamation » utilisé dans l'ordonnance relative à la procédure de réclamations. Le juge chargé d'appliquer la LACC a rejeté la requête de la province et la Cour d'appel a rejeté la demande d'autorisation d'appel de la province.

Arrêt (la juge en chef McLachlin et le juge LeBel sont dissidents) : Le pourvoi est rejeté.

Les juges Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Moldaver et Karakatsanis : Les ordonnances des organismes administratifs ne sont pas toutes de nature pécuniaire, et donc des réclamations prouvables dans le cadre de procédures d'insolvabilité, mais at the outset of the proceedings. In the environmental context, the CCAA court must determine whether there are sufficient facts indicating the existence of an environmental duty that will ripen into a financial liability owed to the regulatory body that issued the order. In such a case, the relevant question is not simply whether the body has formally exercised its power to claim a debt. A CCAA court does not assess claims or orders on the basis of form alone. If the order is not framed in monetary terms, the CCAA court must determine, in light of the factual matrix and the applicable statutory framework, whether it is a claim that will be subject to the claims process.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

There are three requirements orders must meet in order to be considered claims that may be subject to the insolvency process in a case such as the one at bar. First, there must be a debt, a liability or an obligation to a creditor. In this case, the first criterion was met because the Province had identified itself as a creditor by resorting to environmental protection enforcement mechanisms. Second, the debt, liability or obligation must be incurred as of a specific time. This requirement was also met since the environmental damage had occurred before the time of the CCAA proceedings. Third, it must be possible to attach a monetary value to the debt, liability or obligation. The present case turns on this third requirement, and the question is whether orders that are not expressed in monetary terms can be translated into such terms.

A claim may be asserted in insolvency proceedings even if it is contingent on an event that has not yet occurred. The criterion used by courts to determine whether a contingent claim will be included in the insolvency process is whether the event that has not yet occurred is too remote or speculative. In the context of an environmental protection order, this means that there must be sufficient indications that the regulatory body that triggered the enforcement mechanism will ultimately perform remediation work and assert a monetary claim. If there is sufficient certainty in this regard, the court will conclude that the order can be subject to the insolvency process.

certaines peuvent l'être en dépit du fait qu'elles ne sont pas quantifiées dès le début des procédures. En matière environnementale, le tribunal chargé de l'application de la LACC doit déterminer s'il y a suffisamment de faits indiquant qu'il existe une obligation environnementale de laquelle résultera une dette envers l'organisme administratif qui a prononcé l'ordonnance. En pareil cas, la question pertinente ne se résume pas à déterminer si l'organisme a formellement exercé son pouvoir de réclamer une dette. Le tribunal qui évalue une réclamation ou une ordonnance ne se limite pas à un examen de sa forme. Si l'ordonnance n'est pas formulée en termes pécuniaires, le tribunal doit déterminer, en fonction des faits en cause et du cadre législatif applicable, si elle constitue une réclamation qui sera assujettie au processus de réclamation.

Pour qu'elles constituent des réclamations pouvant être assujetties au processus applicable en matière d'insolvabilité dans une affaire telle celle en l'espèce, les ordonnances doivent satisfaire à trois conditions. Premièrement, il doit s'agir d'une dette, d'un engagement ou d'une obligation envers un créancier. En l'espèce, il a été satisfait à la première condition puisque la province s'est présentée comme créancière en ayant recours aux mécanismes d'application en matière de protection de l'environnement. Deuxièmement, la dette, l'engagement ou l'obligation doit avoir pris naissance à un moment précis. Il a également été satisfait à cette condition puisque les dommages environnementaux sont survenus avant que les procédures en vertu de la LACC ne soient entamées. Troisièmement, il doit être possible d'attribuer une valeur pécuniaire à cette dette, cet engagement ou cette obligation. La présente affaire est centrée sur cette troisième condition, et la question est de savoir si des ordonnances qui ne sont pas formulées en termes pécuniaires peuvent être formulées en de tels termes.

Il est possible de faire valoir une réclamation dans le cadre de procédures d'insolvabilité même si elle dépend d'un événement non encore survenu. Le critère retenu par les tribunaux pour décider si une réclamation éventuelle sera incluse dans le processus d'insolvabilité est celui qui consiste à déterminer si l'événement non encore survenu est trop éloigné ou conjectural. Dans le contexte d'une ordonnance environnementale, cela signifie qu'il doit y avoir des indications suffisantes permettant de conclure que l'organisme administratif qui a eu recours aux mécanismes d'application de la loi effectuera en fin de compte des travaux de décontamination et présentera une réclamation pécuniaire. Si cela est suffisamment certain, le tribunal conclura que l'ordonnance peut être assujettie au processus d'insolvabilité.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

Certain indicators can guide the CCAA court in this assessment, including whether the activities are ongoing, whether the debtor is in control of the property, and whether the debtor has the means to comply with the order. The court may also consider the effect that requiring the debtor to comply with the order would have on the insolvency process. The analysis is grounded in the facts of each case. In this case, the CCAA court's assessment of the facts, particularly its finding that the orders were the first step towards performance of the remediation work by the Province, leads to no conclusion other than that it was sufficiently certain that the Province would perform remediation work and therefore fall within the definition of a creditor with a monetary claim.

Subjecting such orders to the claims process does not extinguish the debtor's environmental obligations any more than subjecting any creditor's claim to that process extinguishes the debtor's obligation to pay a debt. It merely ensures that the Province's claim will be paid in accordance with insolvency legislation. Full compliance with orders that are found to be monetary in nature would shift the costs of remediation to third party creditors and replace the polluter-pay principle with a "third-party-pay" principle. Moreover, to subject environmental protection orders to the claims process is not to invite corporations to restructure in order to rid themselves of their environmental liabilities. Reorganization made necessary by insolvency is hardly ever a deliberate choice, and when the risks corporations engage in materialize, the dire costs are borne by almost all stakeholders.

Because the provisions on the assessment of claims in insolvency matters relate directly to Parliament's jurisdiction, the ancillary powers doctrine is not relevant to this case. The interjurisdictional immunity doctrine is also inapplicable, because a finding that a claim of an environmental creditor is monetary in nature does not interfere in any way with the creditor's activities; its claim is simply subject to the insolvency process.

Per McLachlin C.J. (dissenting): Remediation orders made under a province's environmental protection Certains indicateurs permettent de guider le tribunal dans cette analyse, notamment si les activités se poursuivent, si le débiteur exerce un contrôle sur le bien et s'il dispose des moyens de se conformer à l'ordonnance. Il est également possible pour le tribunal de prendre en compte les conséquences qu'entraînerait sur le processus d'insolvabilité le fait d'exiger du débiteur qu'il se conforme à l'ordonnance. L'analyse est fondée sur les faits propres à chaque cas. En l'espèce, l'appréciation des faits par le tribunal, plus particulièrement sa constatation que les ordonnances constituaient la première étape en vue de la décontamination des sites par la province, ne permet de tirer aucune conclusion autre que celle suivant laquelle il était suffisamment certain que la province exécuterait des travaux de décontamination et qu'elle était par conséquent visée par la définition d'un créancier ayant une réclamation pécuniaire.

Le fait d'assujettir ces ordonnances au processus de réclamations n'éteint pas les obligations environnementales qui incombent au débiteur, pas plus que le fait de soumettre à ce processus les réclamations des créanciers n'éteint l'obligation du débiteur de payer ses dettes. Le fait d'assujettir une ordonnance au processus de réclamation vise simplement à faire en sorte que le paiement au créancier sera fait conformément aux dispositions législatives applicables en matière d'insolvabilité. Le respect intégral des ordonnances dont la nature pécuniaire est reconnue transférerait le coût de la décontamination aux tiers créanciers et substituerait au principe du pollueur-payeur celui du « tiers-payeur ». En outre, l'assujettissement des ordonnances environnementales à la procédure de réclamations n'équivaut pas à convier les sociétés à se réorganiser dans le but d'échapper à leurs obligations environnementales. Une réorganisation rendue nécessaire par l'insolvabilité de la société peut difficilement être assimilée à un choix délibéré, et lorsque les risques auxquels s'exposent les sociétés se concrétisent, la quasi-totalité des personnes ayant des intérêts dans la société en supportent les terribles coûts.

L'application de la doctrine des pouvoirs accessoires n'est pas pertinente en l'espèce car les dispositions régissant l'évaluation des réclamations en matière d'insolvabilité sont directement reliées à la compétence du législateur fédéral. La doctrine de la protection des compétences exclusives ne s'applique pas non plus parce qu'une conclusion selon laquelle un créancier œuvrant dans le domaine de l'environnement détient une réclamation pécuniaire ne modifie en rien les activités de ce créancier; sa réclamation est simplement assujettie au processus d'insolvabilité.

La juge en chef McLachlin (dissidente) : Les ordonnances exigeant la décontamination émises aux termes legislation impose ongoing regulatory obligations on the corporation required to clean up the pollution. They may only be reduced to monetary claims which can be compromised under CCAA proceedings in narrow circumstances where a province has done the remediation work, or where it is "sufficiently certain" that it will do the work. This last situation is regulated by the provisions of the CCAA for contingent or future claims. The test is whether there is a likelihood approaching certainty that the province will do the work. "Likelihood approaching certainty" recognizes that the government's decision is discretionary and may be influenced by competing political and social considerations, which are not normally subject to judicial consideration. Insofar as this determination touches on the division of powers, I am in substantial agreement with Deschamps J.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

Apart from the orders related to the work done or tendered for on the Buchans property, the orders for remediation in this case are not claims that can be compromised. The CCAA maintains the fundamental distinction between regulatory obligations under the general law aimed at the protection of the public and monetary claims that can be compromised in CCAA restructuring or bankruptcy. The CCAA judge never asked himself the critical question of whether it was "sufficiently certain" that the Province would do the work itself. His failure to consider that question requires this Court to answer it in his stead. There is nothing on the record to support the view that the Province will move to remediate the properties. It has not been shown that the contamination poses immediate health risks which must be addressed without delay. It has not been shown that the Province has taken any steps to do any work. And it has not been shown that the Province has set aside or even contemplated setting aside money for this work. The Province retained a number of options, including leaving the sites contaminated, or calling on Abitibi to remediate following its emergence from restructuring. There is nothing in the record that makes it more probable, much less establishes "sufficient certainty", that the Province will opt to do the work itself.

d'une loi provinciale sur la protection de l'environnement imposent des exigences réglementaires continues à la personne morale requise de remédier à la pollution. Ces ordonnances ne peuvent être converties en réclamations pécuniaires pouvant faire l'objet de transactions dans le cadre de procédures engagées aux termes de la LACC que dans certaines circonstances particulières, lorsqu'une province a exécuté les travaux ou lorsqu'il est « suffisamment certain » qu'elle exécutera les travaux. Cette deuxième situation est prévue par les dispositions de la LACC relatives aux réclamations éventuelles ou futures. Le critère consiste à déterminer s'il existe une probabilité proche de la certitude que la province exécutera les travaux. Une « probabilité proche de la certitude » reconnaît que la décision du gouvernement est discrétionnaire et peut être influencée par des considérations politiques et sociales concurrentes qui sont normalement soustraites à l'examen judiciaire. Dans la mesure où cette décision touche le partage des pouvoirs, je souscris pour l'essentiel à l'opinion exprimée par la juge Deschamps.

À l'exception des ordonnances relatives aux travaux sur le site de Buchans déjà exécutés ou à l'égard desquels des appels d'offres ont été lancés, les ordonnances exigeant la décontamination en l'espèce ne constituent pas des réclamations pouvant faire l'objet de transactions dans le cadre d'une restructuration. La LACC établit une distinction fondamentale entre les exigences réglementaires découlant d'une loi d'application générale visant la protection du public, d'une part, et les réclamations pécuniaires pouvant faire l'objet d'une transaction dans le cadre d'une restructuration engagée sous le régime de la LACC ou en matière de faillite, d'autre part. Le juge de première instance ne s'est jamais posé la question cruciale de savoir s'il était « suffisamment certain » que la province exécuterait elle-même les travaux. Le fait qu'il n'ait pas examiné cette question oblige notre Cour à y répondre à sa place. Aucune preuve au dossier ne laisse croire que la province entreprendra la décontamination des sites. Il n'a pas été démontré que la contamination pose pour la santé des risques immédiats exigeant la prise de mesures dans les plus brefs délais. Il n'a pas été démontré que la province a pris quelque mesure que ce soit pour réaliser des travaux. Et il n'a pas été démontré que la province a prévu des sommes d'argent pour ces travaux ou qu'elle a même songé à en prévoir. La province a conservé un certain nombre de choix, notamment laisser les sites contaminés, ou demander à Abitibi d'exécuter les travaux lorsqu'elle aura complété sa restructuration. Rien au dossier n'indique qu'il est plus probable, et encore moins qu'il est « suffisamment certain », que la province choisira d'exécuter elle-même la décontamination.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

Per LeBel J. (dissenting): The test proposed by the Chief Justice according to which the evidence must show that there is a "likelihood approaching certainty" that the Province would remediate the contamination itself is not the established test for determining where and how a contingent claim can be liquidated in bankruptcy and insolvency law. The test of "sufficient certainty" described by Deschamps J. best reflects how both the common law and the civil law view and deal with contingent claims. Applying that test, the appeal should be allowed on the basis that there is no evidence that the Province intends to perform the remedial work itself.

Cases Cited

By Deschamps J.

Distinguished: Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. v. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd. (1991), 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45; referred to: Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453; Canada v. McLarty, 2008 SCC 26, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 79; Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re (1997), 96 O.A.C. 75; Imperial Oil Ltd. v. Quebec (Minister of the Environment), 2003 SCC 58, [2003] 2 S.C.R. 624.

By McLachlin C.J. (dissenting)

Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. v. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd. (1991), 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45; Lamford Forest Products Ltd. (Re) (1991), 86 D.L.R. (4th) 534; Shirley (Re) (1995), 129 D.L.R. (4th) 105; Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453; Air Canada, Re [Regulators' motions] (2003), 28 C.B.R. (5th) 52; General Chemical Canada Ltd., Re, 2007 ONCA 600, 228 O.A.C. 385; Strathcona (County) v. PriceWaterhouseCoopers Inc., 2005 ABQB 559, 47 Alta. L.R. (4th) 138; Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re (1997), 96 O.A.C. 75; Anvil Range Mining Corp., Re (2001), 25 C.B.R. (4th) 1; R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45; Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Abitibi-Consolidated Rights and Assets Act, S.N.L. 2008, c. A-1.01.

Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof, S.C. 1992, c. 27, s. 9.

Act to amend the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act and the Income Tax Act, S.C. 1997, c. 12.

Le juge LeBel (dissident) : Le critère que propose la Juge en chef, selon lequel la preuve doit démontrer une « probabilité proche de la certitude » que la province se chargerait de la décontamination, ne constitue pas le critère établi pour déterminer si, et de quelle façon, une réclamation éventuelle peut être liquidée en droit de la faillite et de l'insolvabilité. Le critère de ce qui est « suffisamment certain » qu'énonce la juge Deschamps reflète mieux la façon dont la common law et le droit civil envisagent et traitent les réclamations éventuelles. En appliquant ce critère, il y aurait lieu d'accueillir le pourvoi puisqu'aucune preuve ne confirme l'intention de la province d'exécuter elle-même les travaux de décontamination.

Jurisprudence

Citée par la juge Deschamps

Distinction d'avec l'arrêt : Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. c. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd. (1991), 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45; arrêts mentionnés : Husky Oil Operations Ltd. c. Ministre du Revenu national, [1995] 3 R.C.S. 453; Canada c. McLarty, 2008 CSC 26, [2008] 2 R.C.S. 79; Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re (1997), 96 O.A.C. 75; Cie pétrolière Impériale ltée c. Québec (Ministre de l'Environnement), 2003 CSC 58, [2003] 2 R.C.S. 624.

Citée par la juge en chef McLachlin (dissidente)

Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. c. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd. (1991), 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45; Lamford Forest Products Ltd. (Re) (1991), 86 D.L.R. (4th) 534; Shirley (Re) (1995), 129 D.L.R. (4th) 105; Husky Oil Operations Ltd. c. Ministre du Revenu national, [1995] 3 R.C.S. 453; Air Canada, Re [Regulators' motions] (2003), 28 C.B.R. (5th) 52; General Chemical Canada Ltd., Re, 2007 ONCA 600, 228 O.A.C. 385; Strathcona (County) c. PriceWaterhouseCoopers Inc., 2005 ABQB 559, 47 Alta. L.R. (4th) 138; Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re (1997), 96 O.A.C. 75; Anvil Range Mining Corp., Re (2001), 25 C.B.R. (4th) 1; R. c. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltée, 2011 CSC 42, [2011] 3 R.C.S. 45; Housen c. Nikolaisen, 2002 CSC 33, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 235.

Lois et règlements cités

Abitibi-Consolidated Rights and Assets Act, S.N.L. 2008, ch. A-1.01.

Code civil du Québec, L.Q. 1991, ch. 64, art. 1497, 1508, 1513.

Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, ch. E-14.2, art. 99, 102(3).

Loi modifiant la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

Act to amend the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, the Wage Earner Protection Program Act and chapter 47 of the Statutes of Canada, 2005, S.C. 2007, c. 36, s. 65.

Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3, ss. 2 "claim provable in bankruptcy", "creditor", 14.06(8), 121(1), (2), 135(1.1).

Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64, arts. 1497, 1508, 1513.

Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, ss. 2(1) "claim", 11, 11.1, 11.8(5), (7), (8), (9), 12(1), (2).

Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2, ss. 99, 102(3).

Treaties and Other International Instruments

North American Free Trade Agreement Between the Government of Canada, the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America, Can. T.S. 1994 No. 2.

Authors Cited

Baird, Douglas G., and Thomas H. Jackson. "Comment: Kovacs and Toxic Wastes in Bankruptcy" (1984), 36 Stan. L. Rev. 1199.

Canada. House of Commons. Evidence of the Standing Committee on Industry, No. 16, 2nd Sess., 35th Parl., June 11, 1996.

Hohfeld, Wesley Newcomb. Fundamental Legal Conceptions as Applied in Judicial Reasoning, new ed. by David Campbell and Philip Thomas, eds. Burlington, Vt.: Ashgate, 2001.

MacCormick, D. N. "Rights in Legislation", in P. M. S. Hacker and J. Raz, eds., Law, Morality, and Society: Essays in Honour of H. L. A. Hart. Oxford: Clarendon Press, 1977, 189.

Saxe, Dianne. "Trustees' and Receivers' Environmental Liability Update" (1998), 49 C.B.R. (3d) 138.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Quebec Court of Appeal (Chamberland J.A.), 2010 QCCA 965, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 57, 52 C.E.L.R. (3d) 1, [2010] Q.J. No. 4579 (QL), 2010 CarswellQue 4782, dismissing the appellant's motion for leave to appeal a decision of Gascon J., 2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1, 52 C.E.L.R. (3d) 17, [2010] Q.J. No. 4006 (QL), 2010 CarswellQue 2812. Appeal dismissed, McLachlin C.J. and LeBel J. dissenting.

David R. Wingfield, Paul D. Guy and Philip Osborne, for the appellant.

compagnies et la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu, L.C. 1997, ch. 12.

Loi modifiant la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, la Loi sur le Programme de protection des salariés et le chapitre 47 des Lois du Canada (2005), L.C. 2007, ch. 36, art. 65.

Loi modifiant la Loi sur la faillite et la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu en conséquence, L.C. 1992, ch. 27, art. 9.

Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, L.R.C. 1985, ch. B-3, art. 2 « créancier », « réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite », 14.06(8), 121(1), (2), 135(1.1).

Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-36, art. 2(1) « réclamation », 11, 11.1, 11.8(5), (7), (8), (9), 12(1), (2).

Traités et autres instruments internationaux

Accord de libre-échange nord-américain entre le gouvernement du Canada, le gouvernement des États-Unis d'Amérique et le gouvernement des États-Unis du Mexique, R.T. Can. 1994 nº 2.

Doctrine et autres documents cités

Baird, Douglas G., and Thomas H. Jackson. « Comment : Kovacs and Toxic Wastes in Bankruptcy » (1984), 36 Stan. L. Rev. 1199.

Canada. Chambre des communes. Témoignages du Comité permanent de l'industrie, nº 16, 2e sess., 35e lég., 11 juin 1996.

Hohfeld, Wesley Newcomb. Fundamental Legal Conceptions as Applied in Judicial Reasoning, new ed. by David Campbell and Philip Thomas, eds. Burlington, Vt. : Ashgate, 2001.

MacCormick, D. N. « Rights in Legislation », in P. M. S. Hacker and J. Raz, eds., Law, Morality, and Society : Essays in Honour of H. L. A. Hart. Oxford : Clarendon Press, 1977, 189.

Saxe, Dianne. « Trustees' and Receivers' Environmental Liability Update » (1998), 49 C.B.R. (3d) 138.

POURVOI contre une décision de la Cour d'appel du Québec (le juge Chamberland), 2010 QCCA 965, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 57, 52 C.E.L.R. (3d) 1, [2010] Q.J. No. 4579 (QL), 2010 CarswellQue 4782, qui a rejeté la requête de l'appelante pour permission d'en appeler d'un jugement du juge Gascon, 2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1, 52 C.E.L.R. (3d) 17, [2010] Q.J. No. 4006 (QL), 2010 CarswellQue 2812. Pourvoi rejeté, la juge en chef McLachlin et le juge LeBel sont dissidents.

David R. Wingfield, Paul D. Guy et Philip Osborne, pour l'appelante.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

Sean F. Dunphy, Nicholas McHaffie, Joseph Reynaud and Marc B. Barbeau, for the respondents.

Christopher Rupar and Marianne Zoric, for the intervener the Attorney General of Canada.

Josh Hunter, Robin K. Basu, Leonard Marsello and Mario Faieta, for the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario.

R. Richard M. Butler, for the intervener the Attorney General of British Columbia.

Roderick Wiltshire, for the intervener the Attorney General of Alberta.

Elizabeth J. Rowbotham, for the intervener Her Majesty The Queen in Right of British Columbia.

Robert I. Thornton, John T. Porter and Rachelle F. Moncur, for the intervener Ernst & Young Inc., as Monitor.

William A. Amos, Anastasia M. Lintner, Hugh S. Wilkins and R. Graham Phoenix, for the intervener the Friends of the Earth Canada.

The judgment of Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Moldaver and Karakatsanis JJ. was delivered by [1] DESCHAMPS J. — The question in this appeal is whether orders issued by a regulatory body with respect to environmental remediation work can be treated as monetary claims under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA").

[2] Regulatory bodies may become involved in reorganization proceedings when they order the debtor to comply with statutory rules. As a matter of principle, reorganization does not amount to a licence to disregard rules. Yet there are circumstances in which valid and enforceable orders will be subject to an arrangement under the CCAA. One such circumstance is where a regulatory body

Sean F. Dunphy, Nicholas McHaffie, Joseph Reynaud et Marc B. Barbeau, pour les intimés.

Christopher Rupar et Marianne Zoric, pour l'intervenant le procureur général du Canada.

Josh Hunter, Robin K. Basu, Leonard Marsello et Mario Faieta, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Ontario.

R. Richard M. Butler, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique.

Roderick Wiltshire, pour l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Alberta.

Elizabeth J. Rowbotham, pour l'intervenante Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de la Colombie-Britannique.

Robert I. Thornton, John T. Porter et Rachelle F. Moncur, pour l'intervenante Ernst & Young Inc., en sa qualité de contrôleur.

William A. Amos, Anastasia M. Lintner, Hugh S. Wilkins et R. Graham Phoenix, pour l'intervenant Les Ami(e)s de la Terre Canada.

Version française du jugement des juges Deschamps, Fish, Abella, Rothstein, Cromwell, Moldaver et Karakatsanis rendu par

[1] LA JUGE DESCHAMPS — La question soulevée dans le présent pourvoi est de savoir si des ordonnances d'un organisme administratif relatives à des travaux de décontamination peuvent être traitées comme des réclamations pécuniaires aux termes de la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-36 (« LACC »).

[2] Un organisme administratif peut être appelé à intervenir dans le cadre de procédures de réorganisation lorsqu'il prononce une ordonnance intimant au débiteur de se conformer à une règle prescrite par la loi. En principe, une réorganisation ne permet pas à une personne d'ignorer ses obligations légales. Par ailleurs, en certaines circonstances, une ordonnance valable et exécutoire sera assujettie makes an environmental order that explicitly asserts a monetary claim.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[3] In other circumstances, it is less clear whether an order can be treated as a monetary claim. The appellant and a number of interveners posit that an order issued by an environmental body is not a claim under the CCAA if the order does not require the debtor to make a payment. I agree that not all orders issued by regulatory bodies are monetary in nature and thus provable claims in an insolvency proceeding, but some may be, even if the amounts involved are not quantified at the outset of the proceeding. In the environmental context, the CCAA court must determine whether there are sufficient facts indicating the existence of an environmental duty that will ripen into a financial liability owed to the regulatory body that issued the order. In such a case, the relevant question is not simply whether the body has formally exercised its power to claim a debt. A CCAA court does not assess claims — or orders — on the basis of form alone. If the order is not framed in monetary terms, the court must determine, in light of the factual matrix and the applicable statutory framework, whether it is a claim that will be subject to the claims process.

[4] The case at bar concerns contamination that occurred, prior to the CCAA proceedings, on property that is largely no longer under the debtor's possession and control. The CCAA court found on the facts of this case that the orders issued by Her Majesty the Queen in right of the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador ("Province") were simply a first step towards remediating the contaminated property and asserting a claim for the resulting costs. In the words of the CCAA court, "the intended, practical and realistic effect of the EPA Orders was to establish a basis for the Province to à un arrangement conclu en vertu de la LACC. C'est le cas notamment lorsqu'un organisme administratif prononce une ordonnance environnementale qui est explicitement formulée en termes pécuniaires.

[3] En d'autres circonstances, il est plus difficile de savoir si une ordonnance peut être traitée comme une réclamation pécuniaire. L'appelante et certains des intervenants affirment qu'une ordonnance émise par un organisme de protection de l'environnement ne constitue pas une réclamation au sens de la LACC si elle n'exige pas du débiteur qu'il lui paye un montant d'argent. Je conviens que les ordonnances des organismes administratifs ne constituent pas toutes des réclamations pécuniaires, et donc des réclamations prouvables dans le cadre de procédures d'insolvabilité, mais certaines peuvent l'être en dépit du fait qu'elles ne sont pas quantifiées dès le début des procédures. En matière environnementale, le tribunal chargé de l'application de la LACC doit déterminer s'il y a suffisamment de faits indiquant qu'il existe une obligation environnementale de laquelle résultera une dette envers l'organisme administratif qui a prononcé l'ordonnance. En pareil cas, la question pertinente ne se résume pas à déterminer si l'organisme a formellement exercé son pouvoir de réclamer une dette. Lorsque le tribunal évalue une réclamation (ou une ordonnance) il ne se limite pas à un examen de sa forme. Si l'ordonnance n'est pas formulée en termes pécuniaires, le tribunal doit déterminer, en fonction des faits en cause et du cadre législatif applicable, si elle constitue une réclamation qui sera assujettie au processus de réclamation.

[4] Le présent pourvoi a trait à des dommages environnementaux survenus avant que les procédures sous le régime de la LACC ne soient engagées, des dommages causés à des terrains qui, en majeure partie, ne sont plus en la possession du débiteur ni sous son contrôle. Le tribunal de première instance a conclu, selon les faits en l'espèce, que les ordonnances émises par Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de la province de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador (« province ») ne constituaient que la première étape en vue de restaurer les sites contaminés et de réclamer les coûts engagés. Comme l'a exprimé le juge de recover amounts of money to be eventually used for the remediation of the properties in question" (2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1, at para. 211). As a result, the CCAA court found that the orders were clearly monetary in nature. I see no error of law and no reason to interfere with this finding of fact. I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

I. Facts and Procedural History

[5] For over 100 years, AbitibiBowater Inc. and its affiliated or predecessor companies (together, "Abitibi") were involved in industrial activity in Newfoundland and Labrador. In 2008, Abitibi announced the closure of a mill that was its last operation in that province.

[6] Within two weeks of the announcement, the Province passed the Abitibi-Consolidated Rights and Assets Act, S.N.L. 2008, c. A-1.01 ("Abitibi Act"), which immediately transferred most of Abitibi's property in Newfoundland and Labrador to the Province and denied Abitibi any legal remedy for this expropriation.

[7] The closure of its mill in Newfoundland and Labrador was one of many decisions Abitibi made in a period of general financial distress affecting its activities both in the United States and in Canada. It filed for insolvency protection in the United States on April 16, 2009. It also sought a stay of proceedings under the CCAA in the Superior Court of Quebec, as its Canadian head office was located in Montréal. The CCAA stay was ordered on April 17, 2009.

[8] In the same month, Abitibi also filed a notice of intent to submit a claim to arbitration under NAFTA (the North American Free Trade Agreement Between the Government of Canada, the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America, première instance, [TRADUCTION] « les ordonnances avaient pour effet attendu, pratique et réaliste d'établir le fondement d'une réclamation permettant à la province de récupérer des sommes d'argent qui seraient utilisées pour procéder aux travaux de décontamination » (2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1, par. 211). Par conséquent, pour le tribunal, les ordonnances étaient clairement de nature pécuniaire. Je ne vois aucune erreur de droit ni aucune raison de modifier ces conclusions de fait. Je suis d'avis de rejeter le pourvoi avec dépens.

I. Faits et historique judiciaire

[5] Pendant plus d'une centaine d'années, AbitibiBowater Inc., et ses auteurs ou sociétés filiales (ensemble, « Abitibi ») ont poursuivi des activités industrielles à Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador. En 2008, Abitibi a annoncé la fermeture de la dernière des scieries qu'elle exploitait dans cette province.

[6] Dans les deux semaines qui ont suivi cette annonce, la province a adopté l'Abitibi-Consolidated Rights and Assets Act, S.N.L. 2008, ch. A-1.01 (« Abitibi Act »), qui transférait immédiatement à la province la plus grande partie des biens d'Abitibi situés à Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador et privait la société de tous recours judiciaires en relation avec cette expropriation.

[7] La fermeture de sa scierie à Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador est l'une des nombreuses décisions prises par Abitibi dans une période où de grandes difficultés financières touchaient ses activités au Canada et aux États-Unis. Le 16 avril 2009, elle a présenté une demande de protection contre l'insolvabilité aux États-Unis. Elle a également demandé à la Cour supérieure du Québec, à Montréal, où elle a son siège social au Canada, une suspension des procédures en vertu de la LACC. La suspension a été ordonnée le 17 avril 2009.

[8] Au cours du même mois, Abitibi a aussi déposé un avis d'intention de soumettre une plainte à l'arbitrage en vertu de l'ALENA (Accord de libre-échange nord-américain entre le gouvernement du Canada, le gouvernement des États-Unis d'Amérique et le gouvernement des États-Unis du Mexique,

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

Can. T.S. 1994 No. 2) for losses resulting from the Abitibi Act, which, according to Abitibi, exceeded $300 million.

[9] On November 12, 2009, the Province's Minister of Environment and Conservation ("Minister") issued five orders (the "EPA Orders") under s. 99 of the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2 ("EPA"). The EPA Orders required Abitibi to submit remediation action plans to the Minister for five industrial sites, three of which had been expropriated, and to complete the approved remediation actions. The CCAA judge estimated the cost of implementing these plans to be from "the mid-to-high eight figures" to "several times higher" (para. 81).

[10] On the day it issued the EPA Orders, the Province brought a motion for a declaration that a claims procedure order issued under the CCAA in relation to Abitibi's proposed reorganization did not bar the Province from enforcing the EPA Orders. The Province argued — and still argues — that non-monetary statutory obligations are not "claims" under the CCAA and hence cannot be stayed and be subject to a claims procedure order. It further submits that Parliament lacks the constitutional competence under its power to make laws in relation to bankruptcy and insolvency to stay orders that are validly made in the exercise of a provincial power.

[11] Abitibi contested the motion and sought a declaration that the EPA Orders were stayed and that they were subject to the claims procedure order. It argued that the EPA Orders were monetary in nature and hence fell within the definition of the word "claim" in the claims procedure order.

R.T. Can. 1994 n^{o} 2) relativement à des pertes découlant de l'application de l'Abitibi Act, lesquelles totalisaient, selon Abitibi, une somme supérieure à 300 millions de dollars.

[9] Le 12 novembre 2009, le ministre provincial de l'Environnement et de la Conservation (« ministre ») a prononcé, en vertu de l'art. 99 de l'Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, ch. E-14.2 (« EPA »), cinq ordonnances (les « ordonnances EPA ») contraignant Abitibi à présenter au ministre des plans de restauration pour cinq sites industriels, dont trois avaient été expropriés, et à réaliser les plans de restauration approuvés. Le juge chargé de l'instance instituée sous le régime de la LACC a évalué les coûts de la mise en œuvre de ces plans à une somme se situant [TRADUCTION] « entre cinquante et cent millions de dollars », ou « plusieurs fois plus élevée » (par. 81).

[10] Le jour même où elle émettait les ordonnances EPA, la province a demandé par requête un jugement déclarant qu'une ordonnance relative à la procédure de réclamations rendue aux termes de la LACC dans le cadre de la réorganisation proposée d'Abitibi n'empêchait pas la province d'exécuter les ordonnances EPA. La province a soutenu — et soutient toujours — que des obligations légales de nature non pécuniaire ne constituent pas des « réclamations » au sens de la LACC et que leur exécution ne peut donc être suspendue ni être assujettie à une ordonnance relative à la procédure de réclamations. Elle fait de plus valoir que le pouvoir du Parlement de légiférer en matière de faillite et d'insolvabilité ne lui confère pas la compétence constitutionnelle pour suspendre l'application des ordonnances prononcées dans l'exercice valide de pouvoirs provinciaux.

[11] Abitibi a contesté la requête et a demandé un jugement déclarant que les ordonnances EPA avaient été suspendues et qu'elles étaient assujetties à l'ordonnance relative à la procédure de réclamations. Abitibi a soutenu que les ordonnances EPA étaient de nature pécuniaire et qu'elles étaient donc visées par la définition du terme « réclamation » utilisé dans l'ordonnance relative à la procédure de réclamations.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[12] Gascon J. of the Quebec Superior Court, sitting as a CCAA court, dismissed the Province's motion. He found that he had the authority to characterize the orders as "claims" if the underlying regulatory obligations "remain[ed], in a particular fact pattern, truly financial and monetary in nature" (para. 148). He declared that the EPA Orders were stayed by the initial stay order and were not subject to the exception found in that order. He also declared that the filing by the Province of any claim based on the EPA Orders was subject to the claims procedure order, and reserved to the Province the right to request an extension of time to assert a claim under the claims procedure order and to Abitibi the right to contest such a request.

[13] In the Court of Appeal, Chamberland J.A. denied the Province leave to appeal (2010 QCCA 965, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 57). In his view, the appeal had no reasonable chance of success, because Gascon J. had found as a fact that the EPA Orders were financial or monetary in nature. Chamberland J.A. also found that no constitutional issue arose, given that the Superior Court judge had merely characterized the orders in the context of the restructuring process; the judgment did not "'immunise' Abitibi from compliance with the EPA Orders" (para. 33). Finally, he noted that Gascon J. had reserved the Province's right to request an extension of time to file a claim in the CCAA process.

II. Positions of the Parties

[14] The Province argues that the CCAA court erred in interpreting the relevant CCAA provisions in a way that nullified the EPA, and that the interpretation is inconsistent with both the ancillary powers doctrine and the doctrine of interjurisdictional immunity. The Province further submits [12] Le juge Gascon de la Cour supérieure du Québec, siégeant aux termes de la LACC, a rejeté la requête de la province. Il a statué qu'il avait le pouvoir de qualifier les ordonnances de « réclamations » si les obligations légales sous-jacentes [TRADUCTION] « demeur[aient], dans une situation factuelle particulière, de nature véritablement financière et pécuniaire » (par. 148). Il a déclaré que les ordonnances EPA avaient été suspendues en vertu de l'ordonnance de suspension initiale et qu'elles n'étaient pas visées par l'exception énoncée dans cette ordonnance. Il a également déclaré que la présentation, par la province, de toute réclamation fondée sur les ordonnances EPA était assujettie à l'ordonnance relative à la procédure de réclamations; il a réservé à la province le droit de demander par requête une prorogation du délai pour présenter une réclamation en vertu de la procédure de réclamations et a confirmé le droit d'Abitibi de contester une telle requête.

[13] En Cour d'appel, le juge Chamberland a rejeté la demande d'autorisation d'appel présentée par la province (2010 QCCA 965, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 57). À son avis, l'appel n'avait aucune chance raisonnable de succès parce que le juge Gascon avait conclu, comme question de faits, que les ordonnances EPA étaient de nature financière ou pécuniaire. Le juge Chamberland a également estimé qu'aucune question constitutionnelle ne se posait, car le juge de la Cour supérieure n'avait fait que qualifier les ordonnances dans le contexte du processus de restructuration; le jugement ne [TRADUCTION] « "soustrayait" pas Abitibi à son obligation de se conformer aux ordonnances EPA » (par. 33). Enfin, il a fait remarquer que le juge Gascon avait réservé à la province le droit de demander la prorogation de délai pour produire une réclamation en vertu de la LACC.

II. Thèses des parties

[14] La province soutient que le tribunal de première instance a commis l'erreur d'interpréter les dispositions applicables de la LACC de façon à invalider l'EPA et que cette interprétation est incompatible tant avec la doctrine des pouvoirs accessoires qu'avec celle de la protection des compétences that, in any event, the EPA Orders are not "claims" within the meaning of the CCAA. It takes the position that "any plan of compromise and arrangement that Abitibi might submit for court approval must make provision for compliance with the EPA Orders" (A.F., at para. 32).

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[15] Abitibi contends that the factual record does not provide a basis for applying the constitutional doctrines. It relies on the CCAA court's findings of fact, particularly the finding that the Province's intent was to establish the basis for a monetary claim. Abitibi submits that the true issue is whether a province that has a monetary claim against an insolvent company can obtain a preference against other unsecured creditors by exercising its regulatory power.

III. Constitutional Questions

[16] At the Province's request, the Chief Justice stated the following constitutional questions:

1. Is the definition of "claim" in s. 2(1) of the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, ultra vires the Parliament of Canada or constitutionally inapplicable to the extent this definition includes statutory duties to which the debtor is subject pursuant to s. 99 of the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2?

2. Is s. 11 of the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, ultra vires the Parliament of Canada or constitutionally inapplicable to the extent this section gives courts jurisdiction to bar or extinguish statutory duties to which the debtor is subject pursuant to s. 99 of the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2?

3. Is s. 11 of the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36, ultra vires the Parliament of Canada or constitutionally inapplicable to the extent this section gives courts jurisdiction to exclusives. La province fait de plus valoir que, de toute façon, les ordonnances EPA ne constituent pas des « réclamations » au sens de la LACC. Elle soutient que [TRADUCTION] « tout plan de transaction et d'arrangement qu'Abitibi pourrait soumettre à l'approbation du tribunal doit prévoir qu'[Abitibi] doit se conformer aux ordonnances EPA » (m.a., par. 32).

[15] Abitibi soutient que l'application des doctrines constitutionnelles ne trouve aucun fondement dans les faits du dossier. Elle appuie sa position sur les conclusions de fait tirées par le tribunal de première instance, plus particulièrement celles où le tribunal conclut que l'intention de la province était d'établir le fondement d'une réclamation pécuniaire. Abitibi plaide que la véritable question est de savoir si, par l'exercice de son pouvoir de réglementation, une province ayant une réclamation pécuniaire à faire valoir contre une entreprise insolvable peut obtenir une préférence à l'encontre d'autres créanciers non garantis.

III. Questions constitutionnelles

[16] À la demande de la province, la Juge en chef a formulé les questions constitutionnelles suivantes :

1. La définition d'une « réclamation » énoncée au par. 2(1) de la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-36, outrepasse-t-elle les pouvoirs du Parlement du Canada ou est-elle constitutionnellement inapplicable dans la mesure où elle englobe les obligations légales auxquelles le débiteur est assujetti en application de l'art. 99 de l'Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, ch. E-14.2?

2. L'article 11 de la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-36, outrepasse-t-il les pouvoirs du Parlement du Canada ou est-il constitutionnellement inapplicable dans la mesure où il confère aux tribunaux la compétence pour libérer le débiteur des obligations légales auxquelles il est ou pourrait être assujetti en application de l'art. 99 de l'Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, ch. E-14.2?

3. L'article 11 de la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-36, outrepasse-t-il les pouvoirs du Parlement du Canada ou est-il constitutionnellement inapplicable dans la mesure review the exercise of ministerial discretion under s. 99 of the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2?

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[17] I note that the question whether a CCAA court has constitutional jurisdiction to stay a provincial order that is not a monetary claim does not arise here, because the stay order in this case did not affect non-monetary orders. However, the question may arise in other cases. In 2007, Parliament expressly gave CCAA courts the power to stay regulatory orders that are not monetary claims by amending the CCAA to include the current version of s. 11.1(3) (An Act to amend the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, the Wage Earner Protection Program Act and chapter 47 of the Statutes of Canada, 2005, S.C. 2007, c. 36, s. 65) (the "2007 amendments"). Thus, future cases may give courts the opportunity to consider the question raised by the Province in an appropriate factual context. The only constitutional question that needs to be answered in this case concerns the jurisdiction of a CCAA court to determine whether an environmental order that is not framed in monetary terms is in fact a monetary claim.

[18] Processing creditors' claims against an insolvent debtor in an equitable and orderly manner is at the heart of insolvency legislation, which falls under a head of power attributed to Parliament. Rules concerning the assessment of creditors' claims, such as the determination of whether a creditor has a monetary claim, relate directly to the equitable and orderly treatment of creditors in an insolvency process. There is no need to perform a detailed analysis of the pith and substance of the provisions on the assessment of claims in insolvency matters to conclude that the federal legislation governing the characterization of an order as a monetary claim is valid. Because the provisions relate directly to Parliament's jurisdiction, où il confère aux tribunaux la compétence pour réviser l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire conféré au ministre par l'art. 99 de l'Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, ch. E-14.2?

[17] Je souligne que la question de savoir si, aux termes de la LACC, un tribunal a compétence constitutionnelle pour suspendre l'application d'une ordonnance provinciale qui ne constitue pas une réclamation pécuniaire ne se pose pas en l'espèce parce que l'ordonnance de suspension en cause ne visait pas ces ordonnances. La question pourrait toutefois se poser dans d'autres affaires. En 2007, par l'ajout du par. 11.1(3) de la LACC, le législateur fédéral a explicitement conféré aux tribunaux compétents aux termes de la LACC le pouvoir de suspendre l'application des ordonnances d'un organisme administratif qui ne constituent pas des réclamations pécuniaires (Loi modifiant la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, la Loi sur le Programme de protection des salariés et le chapitre 47 des Lois du Canada (2005), L.C. 2007, ch. 36, art. 65) (les « modifications de 2007 »). Ainsi, les tribunaux auront l'occasion d'analyser la question soulevée par la province lorsque le contexte factuel s'y prêtera. La seule question constitutionnelle qui requiert une réponse en l'espèce a trait à la compétence d'un tribunal, aux termes de la LACC, de déterminer si une ordonnance environnementale qui n'est pas formulée en termes pécuniaires constitue, en fait, une réclamation pécuniaire.

[18] Le traitement équitable et ordonné des réclamations présentées par des créanciers contre un débiteur insolvable se situe au cœur même de la législation en matière d'insolvabilité, un domaine de compétence attribué au législateur fédéral. L'établissement de règles relatives à l'évaluation des réclamations des créanciers, comme celle permettant de déterminer si un créancier fait valoir une réclamation pécuniaire, concerne directement le traitement équitable et ordonné des créanciers dans le cadre d'un processus établi en matière d'insolvabilité. Il n'est pas nécessaire d'analyser en détail le caractère véritable des dispositions régissant l'évaluation des réclamations en matière d'insolvabilité pour conclure à la validité du texte législatif fédéral

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

the ancillary powers doctrine is not relevant to this case. I also find that the interjurisdictional immunity doctrine is not applicable. A finding that a claim of an environmental creditor is monetary in nature does not interfere in any way with the creditor's activities. Its claim is simply subjected to the insolvency process.

[19] What the Province is actually arguing is that courts should consider the form of an order rather than its substance. I see no reason why the Province's choice of order should not be scrutinized to determine whether the form chosen is consistent with the order's true purpose as revealed by the Province's own actions. If the Province's actions indicate that, in substance, it is asserting a provable claim within the meaning of federal legislation, then that claim can be subjected to the insolvency process. Environmental claims do not have a higher priority than is provided for in the CCAA. Considering substance over form prevents a regulatory body from artificially creating a priority higher than the one conferred on the claim by federal legislation. This Court recognized long ago that a province cannot disturb the priority scheme established by the federal insolvency legislation (Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453). Environmental claims are given a specific, and limited, priority under the CCAA. To exempt orders which are in fact monetary claims from the CCAA proceedings would amount to conferring upon provinces a priority higher than the one provided for in the CCAA.

IV. Claims Under the CCAA

[20] Several provisions of the CCAA have been amended since Abitibi filed for insolvency permettant d'établir qu'une ordonnance constitue une réclamation pécuniaire. L'application de la doctrine des pouvoirs accessoires n'est pas pertinente en l'espèce car les dispositions en cause sont directement reliées à la compétence du législateur fédéral. J'estime également que la doctrine de la protection des compétences exclusives ne s'applique pas en l'espèce. Une conclusion selon laquelle un créancier œuvrant dans le domaine de l'environnement détient une réclamation pécuniaire ne modifie en rien les activités de ce créancier. La réclamation de ce dernier est simplement assujettie au processus d'insolvabilité.

[19] Ce que soutient en fait la province, c'est que les tribunaux devraient examiner la forme des ordonnances plutôt que leur substance. Je ne vois aucune raison empêchant l'examen du choix par la province d'un type d'ordonnance donnée afin de déterminer si la forme choisie concorde avec l'objectif véritable qui se dégage des gestes qu'elle a posés. Si ces gestes indiquent qu'elle fait effectivement valoir une réclamation prouvable au sens de la législation fédérale, alors cette réclamation peut être assujettie au processus d'insolvabilité. Les réclamations en matière d'environnement ne bénéficient pas d'un rang supérieur à celui prévu par les dispositions de la LACC. Privilégier l'examen de la substance d'une ordonnance plutôt que de sa forme permet d'éviter qu'un organisme administratif obtienne de façon artificielle une priorité de rang supérieure à celle que la législation fédérale attribue à la réclamation. Notre Cour a depuis longtemps reconnu qu'une province ne pouvait perturber les priorités établies par le régime fédéral d'insolvabilité (Husky Oil Operations Ltd. c. Ministre du Revenu national, [1995] 3 R.C.S. 453). La LACC établit une priorité précise et limitée à l'égard des réclamations en matière environnementale. Le fait de soustraire aux procédures d'insolvabilité les ordonnances qui sont en fait des réclamations pécuniaires équivaudrait à accorder aux provinces une priorité d'un rang supérieur à celui prévu par la LACC.

IV. Réclamations sous le régime de la LACC

[20] Plusieurs dispositions de la LACC ont été modifiées depuis qu'Abitibi a présenté une demande

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

protection. Except where otherwise indicated, the provisions I refer to are those that were in force when the stay was ordered.

[21] One of the central features of the CCAA scheme is the single proceeding model, which ensures that most claims against a debtor are entertained in a single forum. Under this model, the court can stay the enforcement of most claims against the debtor's assets in order to maintain the status quo during negotiations with the creditors. When such negotiations are successful, the creditors typically accept less than the full amounts of their claims. Claims have not necessarily accrued or been liquidated at the outset of the insolvency proceeding, and they sometimes have to be assessed in order to determine the monetary value that will be subject to compromise.

[22] Section 12 of the CCAA establishes the basic rules for ascertaining whether an order is a claim that may be subjected to the insolvency process:

12. (1) [Definition of "claim"] For the purposes of this Act, "claim" means any indebtedness, liability or obligation of any kind that, if unsecured, would be a debt provable in bankruptcy within the meaning of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act.

(2) [Determination of amount of claim] For the purposes of this Act, the amount represented by a claim of any secured or unsecured creditor shall be determined as follows:

(a) the amount of an unsecured claim shall be the amount

. . .

(iii) in the case of any other company, proof of which might be made under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, but if the amount so provable is not admitted by the company, the amount shall be determined by the court on summary application by the company or by the creditor; . . .

de protection contre l'insolvabilité. À moins d'indication contraire de ma part, les dispositions que je cite sont celles qui étaient en vigueur lorsque la suspension des procédures a été ordonnée.

[21] Une des caractéristiques principales du régime créé par la LACC est de traiter la presque totalité des réclamations contre un débiteur suivant une procédure unique devant un même tribunal. En vertu de ce modèle, le tribunal peut ordonner la suspension de la plupart des mesures d'exécution engagées contre les actifs du débiteur de façon à maintenir le statu quo durant la négociation avec les créanciers. Lorsque la négociation réussit, les créanciers consentent habituellement à recevoir moins que le plein montant de leurs réclamations, lesquelles ne sont pas nécessairement exigibles ou liquidées dès le début des procédures d'insolvabilité. Ces réclamations doivent parfois être évaluées afin d'établir la valeur pécuniaire qui fera l'objet du compromis.

[22] L'article 12 de la LACC énonce les règles de base pour déterminer si une ordonnance constitue une réclamation pouvant être assujettie au processus applicable en matière d'insolvabilité :

12. (1) [Définition de « réclamation »] Pour l'application de la présente loi, « réclamation » s'entend de toute dette, tout engagement ou toute obligation d'un genre quelconque qui, s'il n'était pas garanti, constituerait une dette prouvable en matière de faillite au sens de la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité.

(2) [Détermination du montant de la réclamation] Pour l'application de la présente loi, le montant représenté par une réclamation d'un créancier garanti ou chirographaire est déterminé de la façon suivante :

a) le montant d'une réclamation non garantie est le montant :

. . .

(iii) dans le cas de toute autre compagnie, dont la preuve pourrait être établie en vertu de la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, mais si le montant ainsi prouvable n'est pas admis par la compagnie, ce montant est déterminé par le tribunal sur demande sommaire par la compagnie ou le créancier;

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[23] Section 12 of the CCAA refers to the rules of the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA"). Section 2 of the BIA defines a claim provable in bankruptcy:

"claim provable in bankruptcy", "provable claim" or "claim provable" includes any claim or liability provable in proceedings under this Act by a creditor;

[24] This definition is completed by s. 121(1) of the BIA:

121. (1) All debts and liabilities, present or future, to which the bankrupt is subject on the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt or to which the bankrupt may become subject before the bankrupt's discharge by reason of any obligation incurred before the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt shall be deemed to be claims provable in proceedings under this Act.

[25] Sections 121(2) and 135(1.1) of the BIA offer additional guidance for the determination of whether an order is a provable claim:

121. . . .

(2) The determination whether a contingent or unliquidated claim is a provable claim and the valuation of such a claim shall be made in accordance with section 135.

135. . . .

(1.1) The trustee shall determine whether any contingent claim or unliquidated claim is a provable claim, and, if a provable claim, the trustee shall value it, and the claim is thereafter, subject to this section, deemed a proved claim to the amount of its valuation.

[26] These provisions highlight three requirements that are relevant to the case at bar. First, there must be a debt, a liability or an obligation to a creditor. Second, the debt, liability or obligation must be incurred before the debtor becomes bankrupt. Third, it must be possible to attach a monetary value to the debt, liability or obligation. I will examine each of these requirements in turn.

[23] L'article 12 de la LACC renvoie aux règles de la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, L.R.C. 1985, ch. B-3 (« LFI »). L'article 2 de la LFI définit ainsi une réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite :

« réclamation prouvable en matière de faillite » ou « réclamation prouvable » Toute réclamation ou créance pouvant être prouvée dans des procédures intentées sous l'autorité de la présente loi par un créancier.

[24] Cette définition est complétée par le par. 121(1) de la LFI :

121. (1) Toutes créances et tous engagements, présents ou futurs, auxquels le failli est assujetti à la date à laquelle il devient failli, ou auxquels il peut devenir assujetti avant sa libération, en raison d'une obligation contractée antérieurement à cette date, sont réputés des réclamations prouvables dans des procédures entamées en vertu de la présente loi.

[25] Les paragraphes 121(2) et 135(1.1) de la LFI donnent des indications additionnelles lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si une ordonnance constitue une réclamation prouvable :

121. . . .

(2) La question de savoir si une réclamation éventuelle ou non liquidée constitue une réclamation prouvable et, le cas échéant, son évaluation sont décidées en application de l'article 135.

135. . . .

(1.1) Le syndic décide si une réclamation éventuelle ou non liquidée est une réclamation prouvable et, le cas échéant, il l'évalue; sous réserve des autres dispositions du présent article, la réclamation est dès lors réputée prouvée pour le montant de l'évaluation.

[26] Ces dispositions font ressortir trois conditions pertinentes à la présente affaire. Premièrement, on doit être en présence d'une dette, d'un engagement ou d'une obligation envers un créancier. Deuxièmement, la dette, l'engagement ou l'obligation doit avoir pris naissance avant que le débiteur ne devienne failli. Troisièmement, il doit être possible d'attribuer une valeur pécuniaire à cette dette, cet engagement ou cette obligation. Je vais examiner chacune de ces conditions à tour de rôle.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[27] The BIA's definition of a provable claim, which is incorporated by reference into the CCAA, requires the identification of a creditor. Environmental statutes generally provide for the creation of regulatory bodies that are empowered to enforce the obligations the statutes impose. Most environmental regulatory bodies can be creditors in respect of monetary or non-monetary obligations imposed by the relevant statutes. At this first stage of determining whether the regulatory body is a creditor, the question whether the obligation can be translated into monetary terms is not yet relevant. This issue will be broached later. The only determination that has to be made at this point is whether the regulatory body has exercised its enforcement power against a debtor. When it does so, it identifies itself as a creditor, and the requirement of this stage of the analysis is satisfied.

[28] The enquiry into the second requirement is based on s. 121(1) of the BIA, which imposes a time limit on claims. A claim must be founded on an obligation that was "incurred before the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt". Because the date when environmental damage occurs is often difficult to ascertain, s. 11.8(9) of the CCAA provides more temporal flexibility for environmental claims:

11.8 . . .

(9) A claim against a debtor company for costs of remedying any environmental condition or environmental damage affecting real property of the company shall be a claim under this Act, whether the condition arose or the damage occurred before or after the date on which proceedings under this Act were commenced.

[29] The creditor's claim will be exempt from the single proceeding requirement if the debtor's corresponding obligation has not arisen as of the time limit for inclusion in the insolvency process. This could apply, for example, to a debtor's statutory obligations relating to polluting activities that continue after the reorganization, because in such cases, [27] La définition de réclamation prouvable établie par la LFI et incorporée par renvoi à la LACC exige qu'une personne ait qualité de créancier. Les lois régissant l'environnement pourvoient généralement à la création d'un organisme chargé de voir au respect des obligations qui y sont prévues. La plupart des organismes administratifs peuvent agir à titre de créanciers en relation avec les obligations pécuniaires ou non pécuniaires imposées par ces lois. À cette première étape qui consiste à déterminer si un organisme administratif est un créancier, il n'est pas encore pertinent de décider si l'obligation peut être formulée en termes pécuniaires. Cette question sera abordée à un stade ultérieur. À cette étape, la seule question à trancher est de savoir si l'organisme administratif a exercé, à l'encontre d'un débiteur, son pouvoir de faire appliquer la loi. Lorsqu'il le fait, il s'identifie alors comme créancier et la condition de cette étape est espectée.

[28] L'examen de la seconde condition repose sur le par. 121(1) de la LFI qui impose que la réclamation ait pris naissance dans un délai donné. Celle-ci doit se fonder sur une obligation « contractée antérieurement à cette date [la date à laquelle le failli devient failli] ». Comme il est souvent difficile d'établir la date à laquelle un dommage lié à l'environnement est survenu, le par. 11.8(9) de la LACC prévoit une certaine flexibilité pour ce qui est des réclamations en matière d'environnement :

11.8 . . .

(9) La réclamation pour les frais de réparation du fait ou dommage lié à l'environnement et touchant un bien immeuble de la compagnie débitrice constitue une réclamation, que la date du fait ou dommage soit antérieure ou postérieure à celle où des procédures sont intentées au titre de la présente loi.

[29] La réclamation du créancier sera exemptée de l'exigence découlant de la procédure unique si l'obligation correspondante du débiteur n'a pas pris naissance dans le délai fixé pour que la réclamation soit incluse dans le processus d'insolvabilité. À titre d'exemple, cela pourrait s'appliquer aux obligations que la loi impose à un débiteur concernant the damage continues to be sustained after the reorganization has been completed.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[30] With respect to the third requirement, that it be possible to attach a monetary value to the obligation, the question is whether orders that are not expressed in monetary terms can be translated into such terms. I note that when a regulatory body claims an amount that is owed at the relevant date, that is, when it frames its order in monetary terms, the court does not need to make this determination, because what is being claimed is an "indebtedness" and therefore clearly falls within the meaning of "claim" as defined in s. 12(1) of the CCAA.

[31] However, orders, which are used to address various types of environmental challenges, may come in many forms, including stop, control, preventative, and clean-up orders (D. Saxe, "Trustees' and Receivers' Environmental Liability Update" (1998), 49 C.B.R. (3d) 138, at p. 141). When considering an order that is not framed in monetary terms, courts must look at its substance and apply the rules for the assessment of claims.

[32] Parliament recognized that regulatory bodies sometimes have to perform remediation work (see House of Commons, Evidence of the Standing Committee on Industry, No. 16, 2nd Sess., 35th Parl., June 11, 1996). When one does so, its claim with respect to remediation costs is subject to the insolvency process, but the claim is secured by a charge on the contaminated real property and certain other related property and benefits from a priority (s. 11.8(8) CCAA). Thus, Parliament struck a balance between the public's interest in enforcing environmental regulations and the interest of third-party creditors in being treated equitably.

ses activités polluantes qui se poursuivent après la réorganisation, parce qu'en pareilles circonstances, des dommages sont encore causés après que la réorganisation ait été complétée.

[30] En ce qui concerne la troisième condition, soit qu'il doit être possible d'attribuer à l'obligation une valeur pécuniaire, la question est de savoir si des ordonnances qui ne sont pas formulées en termes pécuniaires peuvent être formulées en de tels termes. Je souligne que lorsqu'un organisme administratif réclame une somme qui est due à la date pertinente, il formule ainsi son ordonnance en termes pécuniaires. Le tribunal n'a alors aucune détermination à faire à cette étape car ce qui est réclamé est une « dette » et est, par conséquent, clairement visé par la définition d'une « réclamation » prévue au par. 12(1) de la LACC.

[31] Toutefois, parce qu'elles sont utilisées pour traiter divers enjeux environnementaux, les ordonnances peuvent se présenter sous plusieurs formes et peuvent viser notamment la cessation ou le contrôle d'une activité, la prévention et la décontamination (D. Saxe, « Trustees' and Receivers' Environnmental Liability Update » (1998), 49 C.B.R. (3d) 138, p. 141). Lorsqu'ils analysent une ordonnance qui n'est pas formulée en des termes pécuniaires, les tribunaux doivent en examiner la substance et appliquer les règles régissant l'évaluation des réclamations.

[32] Le législateur fédéral reconnaît que les organismes administratifs doivent à l'occasion exécuter des travaux de décontamination (voir Chambre des communes, Témoignages du Comité permanent de l'industrie, nº 16, 2e sess., 35e lég., 11 juin 1996). En pareil cas, la réclamation relative aux frais de décontamination est assujettie à la procédure de réclamations en matière d'insolvabilité mais elle est garantie par une charge réelle grevant l'immeuble contaminé et certains immeubles connexes et bénéficie d'un rang prioritaire (par. 11.8(8) LACC). Ainsi, le législateur a établi un équilibre entre l'intérêt du public à l'égard de l'application de la réglementation environnementale et les intérêts des tiers créanciers qui doivent être traités de façon équitable.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[33] If Parliament had intended that the debtor always satisfy all remediation costs, it would have granted the Crown a priority with respect to the totality of the debtor's assets. In light of the legislative history and the purpose of the reorganization process, the fact that the Crown's priority under s. 11.8(8) of the CCAA is limited to the contaminated property and certain related property leads me to conclude that to exempt environmental orders would be inconsistent with the insolvency legislation. As deferential as courts may be to regulatory bodies' actions, they must apply the general rules.

[33] Si le législateur fédéral avait eu l'intention d'obliger le débiteur à supporter dans tous les cas tous les coûts des travaux de décontamination, il aurait accordé à l'État une priorité applicable à la totalité des actifs du débiteur. Compte tenu de l'historique des dispositions législatives et des objectifs du processus de réorganisation, le fait que la priorité de l'État aux termes du par. 11.8(8) de la LACC soit limitée au bien contaminé et à certains biens liés m'amène à conclure qu'une exemption à l'égard des ordonnances environnementales serait incompatible avec la législation en matière d'insolvabilité. Aussi respectueux soient-ils des mesures prises par les organismes administratifs, les tribunaux sont tenus d'appliquer les règles générales.

[34] Unlike in proceedings governed by the common law or the civil law, a claim may be asserted in insolvency proceedings even if it is contingent on an event that has not yet occurred (for the common law, see Canada v. McLarty, 2008 SCC 26, [2008] 2 S.C.R. 79, at paras. 17-18; for the civil law, see arts. 1497, 1508 and 1513 of the Civil Code of Québec, S.Q. 1991, c. 64). Thus, the broad definition of "claim" in the BIA includes contingent and future claims that would be unenforceable at common law or in the civil law. As for unliquidated claims, a CCAA court has the same power to assess their amounts as would a court hearing a case in a common law or civil law context.

[34] Contrairement à l'approche qui prévaut dans le contexte des procédures régies par la common law ou le droit civil, il est possible de faire valoir une réclamation dans le cadre de procédures d'insolvabilité même si elle dépend d'un événement non encore survenu (en common law, voir Canada c. McLarty, 2008 CSC 26, [2008] 2 R.C.S. 79, par. 17-18; en droit civil, voir les art. 1497, 1508 et 1513 du Code civil du Québec, L.Q. 1991, ch. 64). Ainsi, la définition générale de « réclamation » de la LFI englobe des réclamations éventuelles et futures qui seraient inexécutoires en common law ou en droit civil. En ce qui concerne les réclamations non liquidées, le tribunal chargé de l'application de la LACC a le même pouvoir d'évaluer leur montant qu'un tribunal saisi d'une affaire sous le régime de la common law ou du droit civil.

[35] The reason the BIA and the CCAA include a broad range of claims is to ensure fairness between creditors and finality in the insolvency proceeding for the debtor. In a corporate liquidation process, it is more equitable to allow as many creditors as possible to participate in the process and share in the liquidation proceeds. This makes it possible to include creditors whose claims have not yet matured when the corporate debtor files for bankruptcy, and thus avert a situation in which they would be faced with an inactive debtor that cannot satisfy a judgment. The rationale is slightly different in the context of a corporate proposal or reorganization. In such cases, the broad approach serves not only to ensure fairness between creditors, but also to allow the debtor to make as fresh a start as possible after a proposal or an arrangement is approved.

[35] C'est pour assurer l'équité entre les créanciers ainsi que, pour le débiteur, le caractère définitif de la procédure d'insolvabilité que la LFI et la LACC englobent un large éventail de réclamations. Dans le cadre de la liquidation d'une société, il est plus équitable de permettre au plus grand nombre possible de créanciers de participer au processus et de se partager le produit de la liquidation. Cela permet d'inclure les créanciers dont les réclamations ne sont pas venues à échéance lorsque le débiteur corporatif devient failli, et ainsi éviter que, ayant cessé ses activités, le débiteur ne puisse pas satisfaire à un jugement rendu en leur faveur. L'approche est quelque peu différente dans

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

le contexte d'une proposition concordataire présentée par une société ou d'une réorganisation. Dans ces cas, l'objectif que sous-tend une interprétation large est non seulement de garantir l'équité entre créanciers, mais aussi de permettre au débiteur de prendre un nouveau départ dans les meilleures conditions possibles à la suite de l'approbation d'une proposition ou d'un arrangement.

[36] The criterion used by courts to determine whether a contingent claim will be included in the insolvency process is whether the event that has not yet occurred is too remote or speculative (Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re (1997), 96 O.A.C. 75). In the context of an environmental order, this means that there must be sufficient indications that the regulatory body that triggered the enforcement mechanism will ultimately perform remediation work and assert a monetary claim to have its costs reimbursed. If there is sufficient certainty in this regard, the court will conclude that the order can be subjected to the insolvency process.

[36] Le critère retenu par les tribunaux pour décider si une réclamation éventuelle sera incluse dans le processus d'insolvabilité est celui qui consiste à déterminer si l'événement non encore survenu est trop éloigné ou conjectural (Confederation Treasury Service Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re (1997), 96 O.A.C. 75). Dans le contexte d'une ordonnance environnementale, cela signifie qu'il doit y avoir des indications suffisantes permettant de conclure que l'organisme administratif qui a eu recours aux mécanismes d'application de la loi effectuera en fin de compte des travaux de décontamination et présentera une réclamation pécuniaire afin d'obtenir le remboursement de ses débours. Si cela est suffisamment certain, le tribunal conclura que l'ordonnance peut être assujettie au processus d'insolvabilité.

[37] The exercise by the CCAA court of its jurisdiction to determine whether an order is a provable claim entails a certain scrutiny of the regulatory body's actions. This scrutiny is in some ways similar to judicial review. There is a distinction, however, and it lies in the object of the assessment that the CCAA court must make. The CCAA court does not review the regulatory body's exercise of discretion. Rather, it inquires into whether the facts indicate that the conditions for inclusion in the claims process are met. For example, if activities at issue are ongoing, the CCAA court may well conclude that the order cannot be included in the insolvency process because the activities and resulting damages will continue after the reorganization is completed and hence exceed the time limit for a claim. If, on the other hand, the regulatory body, having no realistic alternative but to perform the remediation work itself, simply delays framing the order as a claim in order to improve its position in relation to other creditors, the CCAA court may conclude that this course of action is inconsistent with the insolvency scheme and decide that the order has to be subject to the claims process. Similarly, if the property is not under the debtor's control and the debtor does not, and realistically will not, have the means to perform the remediation work, the CCAA court may conclude that it is sufficiently certain that the regulatory body will have to perform the work.

[37] Lorsqu'il détermine si une ordonnance constitue une réclamation prouvable, le tribunal chargé de l'application de la LACC doit, dans une certaine mesure, examiner les actes posés par l'organisme administratif. Cet examen se rapproche à certains égards de celui d'un contrôle judiciaire. La différence se situe, toutefois, au niveau de l'objet de l'évaluation que doit faire le tribunal. Son examen ne porte pas sur l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire par l'organisme administratif. Il doit plutôt déterminer si le contexte factuel indique que les conditions requises pour que l'ordonnance soit incluse dans le processus de réclamations sont respectées. Par exemple, si le débiteur continue d'exercer les activités faisant l'objet de l'intervention de l'organisme administratif, il est fort possible que le tribunal conclue que l'ordonnance ne peut être incorporée au processus d'insolvabilité parce que ces activités et les dommages en découlant se poursuivront après la réorganisation et qu'elles excéderont donc le délai prescrit pour la production d'une

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[38] Certain indicators can thus be identified from the text and the context of the provisions to guide the CCAA court in determining whether an order is a provable claim, including whether the activities are ongoing, whether the debtor is in control of the property, and whether the debtor has the means to comply with the order. The CCAA court may also consider the effect that requiring the debtor to comply with the order would have on the insolvency process. Since the appropriate analysis is grounded in the facts of each case, these indicators need not all apply, and others may also be relevant.

[39] Having highlighted three requirements for finding a claim to be provable in a CCAA process that need to be considered in the case at bar, I must now discuss certain policy arguments raised by the Province and some of the interveners.

[40] These parties argue that treating a regulatory order as a claim in an insolvency proceeding extinguishes the debtor's environmental obligations, thereby undermining the polluter-pay principle discussed by this Court in Imperial Oil Ltd. v. Quebec (Minister of the Environment), 2003 SCC 58, [2003] 2 S.C.R. 624, at para. 24. This objection réclamation. Par contre, si l'organisme administratif, n'ayant aucune solution réaliste autre que celle d'effectuer lui-même les travaux de décontamination, ne fait que retarder la production d'une réclamation pécuniaire dans le but d'améliorer sa position par rapport à celle des autres créanciers, le tribunal pourrait conclure que cette démarche n'est pas compatible avec le régime d'insolvabilité et décider que l'ordonnance doit être traitée dans le cadre du processus de réclamations. De même, si le débiteur n'exerce aucun contrôle sur le bien et ne dispose pas, ni ne disposera, de façon réaliste, des moyens pour effectuer les travaux de décontamination, le tribunal pourrait conclure de façon suffisamment certaine que l'organisme administratif devra exécuter les travaux.

[38] Il est ainsi possible de discerner, grâce au libellé des dispositions et à leur contexte, certains indicateurs qui permettent de guider le tribunal au moment de déterminer si l'ordonnance constitue une réclamation prouvable, notamment si les activités se poursuivent, si le débiteur exerce un contrôle sur le bien et s'il dispose des moyens de se conformer à l'ordonnance. Il est également possible pour le tribunal de prendre en compte les conséquences qu'entraînerait sur le processus d'insolvabilité le fait d'exiger du débiteur qu'il se conforme à l'ordonnance. Puisque l'analyse qu'il convient de réaliser est fondée sur les faits propres à chaque cas, il n'est pas nécessaire que tous ces indicateurs soient présents, et d'autres peuvent également devenir pertinents.

[39] Après avoir souligné les trois conditions qui permettent en l'espèce de conclure qu'une ordonnance constitue une réclamation prouvable dans le cadre d'un processus régi par la LACC, il me faut examiner certains arguments de principe que la province et certains intervenants ont fait valoir.

[40] Ils ont plaidé que le fait d'assimiler une ordonnance d'un organisme administratif à une réclamation dans le cadre de procédure en insolvabilité éteint les obligations environnementales auxquelles le débiteur est tenu, minant par le fait même le principe du pollueur-payeur examiné par notre Cour dans l'arrêt Cie pétrolière Impériale

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

demonstrates a misunderstanding of the nature of insolvency proceedings. Subjecting an order to the claims process does not extinguish the debtor's environmental obligations any more than subjecting any creditor's claim to that process extinguishes the debtor's obligation to pay its debts. It merely ensures that the creditor's claim will be paid in accordance with insolvency legislation. Moreover, full compliance with orders that are found to be monetary in nature would shift the costs of remediation to third-party creditors, including involuntary creditors, such as those whose claims lie in tort or in the law of extra-contractual liability. In the insolvency context, the Province's position would result not only in a super-priority, but in the acceptance of a "third-party-pay" principle in place of the polluter-pay principle.

[41] Nor does subjecting the orders to the insolvency process amount to issuing a licence to pollute, since insolvency proceedings do not concern the debtor's future conduct. A debtor that is reorganized must comply with all environmental regulations going forward in the same way as any other person. To quote the colourful analogy of two American scholars, "Debtors in bankruptcy have — and should have — no greater license to pollute in violation of a statute than they have to sell cocaine in violation of a statute" (D. G. Baird and T. H. Jackson, "Comment: Kovacs and Toxic Wastes in Bankruptcy" (1984), 36 Stan. L. Rev. 1199, at p. 1200).

[42] Furthermore, corporations may engage in activities that carry risks. No matter what risks are at issue, reorganization made necessary by insolvency is hardly ever a deliberate choice. When the risks materialize, the dire costs are borne by almost all stakeholders. To subject orders to the claims process is not to invite corporations to restructure ltée c. Québec (Ministre de l'Environnement), 2003 CSC 58, [2003] 2 R.C.S. 624, par. 24. Cet argument démontre une mauvaise compréhension de la nature des procédures en matière d'insolvabilité. Le fait d'assujettir une ordonnance au processus de réclamations n'éteint pas les obligations environnementales qui incombent au débiteur, pas plus que le fait de soumettre à ce processus les réclamations des créanciers n'éteint l'obligation du débiteur de payer ses dettes. Le fait d'assujettir une ordonnance au processus de réclamation vise simplement à faire en sorte que le paiement au créancier sera fait conformément aux dispositions législatives applicables en matière d'insolvabilité. De plus, le respect intégral des ordonnances dont la nature pécuniaire est reconnue transférerait le coût de la décontamination aux tiers créanciers, y compris aux créanciers involontaires, par exemple les créanciers en responsabilité délictuelle ou extra-contractuelle. Dans un contexte d'insolvabilité, la position de la province aurait comme résultat de lui accorder non seulement une super-priorité, mais aussi de reconnaître l'application d'un principe du « tiers-payeur » plutôt que celui du pollueur-payeur.

[41] Par ailleurs, l'assujettissement des ordonnances au processus d'insolvabilité n'autorise pas une personne à polluer, car la procédure en insolvabilité ne touche pas les actes que le débiteur posera dans le futur. Le débiteur réorganisé doit se conformer pour l'avenir à la réglementation environnementale, comme le ferait toute autre personne. Pour citer une analogie haute en couleurs de deux universitaires américains, [TRADUCTION] « [l]es débiteurs en faillite n'ont pas — et ne devraient pas avoir — une autorisation plus étendue de polluer en violation d'une loi qu'ils n'en ont de vendre de la cocaïne » (D. G. Baird et T. H. Jackson, « Comment : Kovacs and Toxic Wastes in Bankruptcy » (1984), 36 Stan. L. Rev. 1199, p. 1200).

[42] En outre, il arrive que des sociétés exercent des activités comportant des risques. Peu importe les risques en cause, une réorganisation rendue nécessaire par l'insolvabilité de la société peut difficilement être assimilée à un choix délibéré. Lorsque les risques se concrétisent, la quasi-totalité des personnes ayant des intérêts dans la société en in order to rid themselves of their environmental liabilities.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[43] And the power to determine whether an order is a provable claim does not mean that the court will necessarily conclude that the order before it will be subject to the CCAA process. In fact, the CCAA court in the case at bar recognized that orders relating to the environment may or may not be considered provable claims. It stayed only those orders that were monetary in nature.

[44] The Province also argues that courts have in the past held that environmental orders cannot be interpreted as claims when the regulatory body has not yet exercised its power to assert a claim framed in monetary terms. The Province relies in particular on Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. v. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd. (1991), 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45 (C.A.), and its progeny. In Panamericana, the Alberta Court of Appeal held that a receiver was personally liable for work under a remediation order and that the order was not a claim in insolvency proceedings. The court found that the duty to undertake remediation work is owed to the public at large until the regulator exercises its power to assert a monetary claim.

[45] The first answer to the Province's argument is that courts have never shied away from putting substance ahead of form. They can determine whether the order is in substance monetary.

[46] The second answer is that the provisions relating to the assessment of claims, particularly those governing contingent claims, contemplate instances in which the quantum is not yet established when the claims are filed. Whether, in the supportent les terribles coûts. L'assujettissement des ordonnances à la procédure de réclamations n'équivaut pas à convier les sociétés à se réorganiser dans le but d'échapper à leurs obligations environnementales.

[43] Et le pouvoir de déterminer si une ordonnance constitue une réclamation prouvable ne signifie pas que le tribunal jugera nécessairement que l'ordonnance sera soumise au processus de réorganisation. En fait, le tribunal en l'espèce a reconnu que les ordonnances environnementales pouvaient être ou ne pas être considérées comme des réclamations prouvables. Il n'a rendu une ordonnance de suspension qu'à l'égard des ordonnances de nature pécuniaire.

[44] La province plaide aussi que selon la jurisprudence, les ordonnances environnementales ne peuvent pas être assimilées à des réclamations lorsque l'organisme administratif n'a pas encore exercé son pouvoir de faire valoir une réclamation formulée en termes pécuniaires. La province s'appuie particulièrement sur l'arrêt Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. c. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd. (1991), 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45 (C.A.), et les jugements rendus dans sa foulée. Dans l'arrêt Panamericana, la Cour d'appel de l'Alberta a tenu le séquestre personnellement responsable de l'exécution des travaux ordonnés et a statué que l'ordonnance ne constituait pas une réclamation visée par les procédures en insolvabilité. La cour a conclu que l'obligation d'entreprendre les travaux de décontamination est due au public en général jusqu'à ce que l'organisme administratif exerce son pouvoir de faire valoir une réclamation pécuniaire.

[45] La première réponse à cet argument de la province est que les tribunaux n'ont jamais hésité à privilégier le fond à la forme. Les tribunaux peuvent déterminer si, en substance, l'ordonnance est de nature pécuniaire.

[46] La seconde réponse est que les dispositions concernant l'évaluation des réclamations, en particulier celles régissant les réclamations éventuelles, n'exigent pas que la valeur pécuniaire soit établie au moment où elles sont produites. Un regulatory context, an obligation always entails the existence of a correlative right has been discussed by a number of scholars. Various theories of rights have been put forward (see W. N. Hohfeld, Fundamental Legal Conceptions as Applied in Judicial Reasoning (new ed. 2001); D. N. MacCormick, "Rights in Legislation", in P. M. S. Hacker and J. Raz, eds., Law, Morality, and Society: Essays in Honour of H. L. A. Hart (1977), 189). However, because the Province issued the orders in this case, it would be recognized as a creditor in respect of a right no matter which of these theories was applied. As interesting as the discussion may be, therefore, I do not need to consider which theory should prevail. The real question is not to whom the obligation is owed, as this question is answered by the statute, which determines who can require that it be discharged. Rather, the question is whether it is sufficiently certain that the regulatory body will perform the remediation work and, as a result, have a monetary claim.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[47] The third answer to the Province's argument is that insolvency legislation has evolved considerably over the two decades since Panamericana. At the time of Panamericana, none of the provisions relating to environmental liabilities were in force. Indeed, some of those provisions were enacted very soon after, and seemingly in response to, that case. In 1992, Parliament shielded trustees from the very liability imposed on the receiver in Panamericana (An Act to amend the Bankruptcy Act and to amend the Income Tax Act in consequence thereof, S.C. 1992, c. 27, s. 9, amending s. 14 of the BIA). The 1997 amendments provided additional protection to trustees and monitors (An Act to amend the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act and the Income Tax Act, S.C. 1997, c. 12). The 2007 amendments made it clear that a CCAA court has the power to determine that a regulatory order may be a claim and also provided criteria for staying regulatory orders (s. 65, amending the CCAA to include the current version of s. 11.1). The purpose of these amendments was to balance the creditor's certain nombre d'auteurs ont examiné la question de savoir si, dans un contexte réglementaire, l'existence d'une obligation implique toujours en corrélation celle d'un droit. Diverses théories relatives aux droits ont été avancées (voir W. N. Hohfeld, Fundamental Legal Conceptions as Applied in Judicial Reasoning (nouvelle éd. 2001); D. N. MacCormick, « Rights in Legislation », dans P. M. S. Hacker et J. Raz, dir., Law, Morality, and Society : Essays in Honour of H. L. A. Hart (1977), 189). Toutefois, comme en l'espèce la province a prononcé les ordonnances, elle serait reconnue comme créancière d'un droit en vertu de l'une ou l'autre de ces théories. Par conséquent, malgré l'intérêt que peut susciter ce débat, il n'est pas nécessaire de déterminer la théorie qui prévaut. La véritable question n'est pas de savoir à qui est due l'obligation, puisque la loi y répond en indiquant qui peut en exiger l'exécution. La question est plutôt de savoir s'il est suffisamment certain que l'organisme administratif effectuera les travaux de décontamination et pourra ainsi faire valoir une réclamation pécuniaire.

[47] La troisième réponse à l'argument soulevé par la province est que la législation en matière d'insolvabilité a considérablement évolué au cours des deux décennies écoulées depuis l'arrêt Panamericana. À l'époque où l'arrêt Panamericana a été prononcé, aucune des dispositions concernant les obligations liées à l'environnement n'était en vigueur. Certaines des dispositions ont été adoptées très peu de temps après cette décision et, semble-t-il, en réponse à celle-ci. En 1992, le législateur a permis aux syndics d'échapper à la responsabilité même que l'arrêt Panamericana avait retenue contre le séquestre (Loi modifiant la Loi sur la faillite et la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu en conséquence, L.C. 1992, ch. 27, art. 9, modifiant l'art. 14 de la LFI). Une protection additionnelle a été accordée au syndic et au contrôleur avec les modifications adoptées en 1997 (Loi modifiant la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies et la Loi de l'impôt sur le revenu, L.C. 1997, ch. 12). Les modifications apportées en 2007 ont précisé que le tribunal chargé d'appliquer la LACC a need for fairness against the debtor's need to make a fresh start.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[48] Whether the regulatory body has a contingent claim is a determination that must be grounded in the facts of each case. Generally, a regulatory body has discretion under environmental legislation to decide how best to ensure that regulatory obligations are met. Although the court should take care to avoid interfering with that discretion, the action of a regulatory body is nevertheless subject to scrutiny in insolvency proceedings.

V. Application

[49] I now turn to the application of the principles discussed above to the case at bar. This case does not turn on whether the Province is the creditor of an obligation or whether damage had occurred as of the relevant date. Those requirements are easily satisfied, since the Province had identified itself as a creditor by resorting to EPA enforcement mechanisms and since the damage had occurred before the time of the CCAA proceedings. Rather, the issue centres on the third requirement: that the orders meet the criterion for admission as a pecuniary claim. The claim was contingent to the extent that the Province had not yet formally exercised its power to ask for the payment of money. The question is whether it was sufficiently certain that the orders would eventually result in a monetary claim. To the CCAA judge, there was no doubt that the answer was yes.

le pouvoir de décider qu'une ordonnance d'un organisme administratif peut constituer une réclamation; ces modifications ont de plus établi des critères applicables à la suspension de ces ordonnances (art. 65, modifiant la LACC par l'ajout de l'art. 11.1). Ces modifications visaient à établir un équilibre entre le besoin de traiter les créanciers de façon équitable et celui de permettre au débiteur de prendre un nouveau départ.

[48] La détermination qu'une ordonnance d'un organisme administratif constitue une réclamation éventuelle doit être fondée sur les faits de chaque affaire. La législation en matière d'environnement accorde généralement à un organisme administratif un pouvoir discrétionnaire de décider de la meilleure façon d'assurer le respect des obligations découlant de la réglementation. Quoique le tribunal doive se garder de s'ingérer dans l'exercice du pouvoir discrétionnaire de ces organismes, les mesures qu'ils prennent peuvent néanmoins faire l'objet d'un examen dans le cadre de procédures engagées sous le régime fédéral de l'insolvabilité.

V. Application

[49] J'aborde maintenant l'application des principes énoncés ci-dessus à l'affaire dont notre Cour est saisie. En l'espèce, le débat n'est pas centré sur la question de savoir si la province est créancière d'une obligation ou si des dommages étaient survenus à la date pertinente. Il est facile de répondre à ces questions étant donné que la province s'est elle-même présentée comme créancière en ayant recours aux mécanismes d'application de l'EPA et que les dommages sont survenus avant que les procédures en vertu de la LACC ne soient entamées. Le débat porte plutôt sur la troisième condition, celle qui consiste à savoir si les ordonnances satisfont au critère d'admissibilité à titre de réclamation pécuniaire. La réclamation était éventuelle dans la mesure où la province n'avait pas formellement exercé son pouvoir de demander paiement d'une somme d'argent. La question est de savoir s'il était suffisamment certain que l'ordonnance mènerait éventuellement à la production d'une réclamation pécuniaire. Pour le juge de première instance, une réponse affirmative ne faisait pas de doute.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[50] The Province's exercise of its legislative powers in enacting the Abitibi Act created a unique set of facts that led to the orders being issued. The seizure of Abitibi's assets by the Province, the cancellation of all outstanding water and hydroelectric contracts between Abitibi and the Province, the cancellation of pending legal proceedings by Abitibi in which it sought the reimbursement of several hundreds of thousands of dollars, and the denial of any compensation for the seized assets and of legal redress are inescapable background facts in the judge's review of the EPA Orders.

[51] The CCAA judge did not elaborate on whether it was sufficiently certain that the Minister would perform the remediation work and therefore make a monetary claim. However, most of his findings clearly rest on a positive answer to this question. For example, his finding that "[i]n all likelihood, the pith and substance of the EPA Orders is an attempt by the Province to lay the groundwork for monetary claims against Abitibi, to be used most probably as an offset in connection with Abitibi's own NAFTA claims for compensation" (para. 178), is necessarily based on the premise that the Province would most likely perform the remediation work. Indeed, since monetary claims must, both at common law and in civil law, be mutual for set-off or compensation to operate, the Province had to have incurred costs in doing the work in order to have a claim that could be set off against Abitibi's claims.

[52] That the judge relied on an implicit finding that the Province would most likely perform the work and make a claim to offset its costs is also shown by the confirmation he found in the declaration by the Premier that the Province was attempting to assess the cost of doing remediation work Abitibi had allegedly left undone and that in the Province's assessment, "at this point in [50] En adoptant l'Abitibi Act, ayant ainsi recours à son pouvoir législatif, la province mettait en place un contexte factuel unique qui menait à l'émission des ordonnances. La saisie par la province des actifs d'Abitibi, l'annulation de tous les contrats d'approvisionnement en eau et d'hydroélectricité conclus entre Abitibi et la province, l'annulation des recours intentés par Abitibi pour obtenir le remboursement de plusieurs centaines de milliers de dollars et le refus de toute indemnité et de tous recours en justice à l'égard des actifs saisis tissent un contexte factuel dont le juge ne peut faire abstraction dans son examen des ordonnances EPA.

[51] Le juge de première instance n'a pas fait une analyse distincte du critère suivant lequel le tribunal doit être suffisamment certain que le ministre exécuterait les travaux de décontamination et ferait, par conséquent, valoir une réclamation pécuniaire. Cependant, la plupart de ses conclusions reposent manifestement sur un constat positif à cet égard. Par exemple, le constat que [TRADUCTION] « [s]elon toute vraisemblance, le caractère véritable des ordonnances EPA [consiste] pour la province à tenter de jeter les bases de réclamations pécuniaires contre Abitibi, dans le but de les utiliser tout probablement à titre compensatoire au regard des demandes d'indemnisation d'Abitibi fondées sur l'ALÉNA » (par. 178) repose nécessairement sur la prémisse que la province allait fort probablement exécuter les travaux de décontamination. En effet, puisque les réclamations pécuniaires, en common law comme en droit civil, doivent être réciproques pour opérer compensation, la province devait avoir engagé des dépenses en exécutant des travaux, ce qui établissait la base de la réclamation qu'elle ferait valoir pour compenser celle d'Abitibi.

[52] Un autre fait illustre que le juge de première instance a implicitement conclu que la province allait fort probablement exécuter les travaux et produire une réclamation pour compenser ses coûts est qu'il en a trouvé une confirmation dans la déclaration du premier ministre selon laquelle la province tentait d'évaluer ce qu'il en coûterait pour réaliser les travaux de décontamination qu'Abitibi n'aurait time, there would not be a net payment to Abitibi" (para. 181).

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[53] The CCAA judge's reasons not only rest on an implicit finding that the Province would most likely perform the work, but refer explicitly to facts that support this finding. To reach his conclusion that the EPA Orders were monetary in nature, the CCAA judge relied on the fact that Abitibi's operations were funded through debtor-in-possession financing and its access to funds was limited to ongoing operations. Given that the EPA Orders targeted sites that were, for the most part, no longer in Abitibi's possession, this meant that Abitibi had no means to perform the remediation work during the reorganization process.

[54] In addition, because Abitibi lacked funds and no longer controlled the properties, the timetable set by the Province in the EPA Orders suggested that the Province never truly intended that Abitibi was to perform the remediation work required by the orders. The timetable was also unrealistic. For example, the orders were issued on November 12, 2009 and set a deadline of January 15, 2010 to perform a particular act, but the evidence revealed that compliance with this requirement would have taken close to a year.

[55] Furthermore, the judge relied on the fact that Abitibi was not simply designated a "person responsible" under the EPA, but was intentionally targeted by the Province. The finding that the Province had targeted Abitibi was drawn not only from the timing of the EPA Orders, but also from the fact that Abitibi was the only person designated in them, whereas others also appeared to be responsible — in some cases, primarily responsible — for the contamination. For example, Abitibi was ordered to do remediation work on a site it had surrendered more than 50 years before the orders were issued; the expert report upon which the orders were based made no distinction between Abitibi's activities on the property, on which its source of power had been horse power, and subsequent activities by others who had used fuel-powered vehicles pas exécutés, et que selon l'estimation de la province, [TRADUCTION] « à l'heure actuelle, aucun paiement net ne serait versé à Abitibi » (par. 181).

[53] Les motifs du juge de première instance reposent non seulement sur une constatation implicite que la province exécuterait fort probablement les travaux, mais ils renvoient expressément aux faits qui appuient cette constatation. Pour conclure que les ordonnances EPA étaient de nature pécuniaire, le juge s'est fondé sur le fait qu'Abitibi pouvait mener ses opérations grâce à un financement de débiteur-exploitant et qu'elle n'avait accès à ces fonds que pour ses activités courantes. Étant donné que les ordonnances visaient des sites que, pour la plupart, Abitibi ne possédait plus, cela signifiait qu'Abitibi ne disposait d'aucune ressource pour exécuter les travaux pendant la réorganisation.

[54] De plus, parce qu'Abitibi ne disposait pas des fonds et n'exerçait plus aucun contrôle sur les biens, l'échéancier fixé par la province dans les ordonnances EPA était non seulement irréaliste, mais suggérait que la province n'avait jamais vraiment eu l'intention qu'Abitibi exécute les travaux qu'elle lui ordonnait de faire. Par exemple, les ordonnances en date du 12 novembre 2009 exigeaient que certains travaux particuliers soient terminés le 15 janvier 2010 alors que la preuve démontre qu'il aurait fallu presque un an pour exécuter ces travaux.

[55] En outre, le juge s'est appuyé sur le fait qu'Abitibi n'était pas simplement désignée comme [TRADUCTION] « personne responsable » aux termes de l'EPA, mais qu'elle était intentionnellement visée par la province. Il a fait cette constatation non seulement en raison du choix du moment où les ordonnances ont été prononcées, mais aussi parce qu'Abitibi y était la seule personne désignée alors que d'autres semblaient également responsables — et en certains cas, principalement responsables — de la contamination. Par exemple, la province a ordonné à Abitibi d'effectuer des travaux de décontamination d'un site qu'elle avait abandonné plus de 50 ans avant le prononcé des ordonnances alors que le rapport d'expert sur lequel les ordonnances étaient fondées ne distinguait aucunement les activités d'Abitibi, qui avait utilisé des chevaux, there. In the judge's opinion, this finding of fact went to the Province's intent to establish a basis for performing the work itself and asserting a claim against Abitibi.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

et les activités subséquentes d'autres personnes qui y avaient utilisé des véhicules alimentés au mazout. Ce fait, pour le juge, illustrait l'intention de la province d'établir un fondement pour exécuter elle-même les travaux et présenter une réclamation contre Abitibi.

[56] These reasons — and others — led the CCAA judge to conclude that the Province had not expected Abitibi to perform the remediation work and that the "intended, practical and realistic effect of the EPA Orders was to establish a basis for the Province to recover amounts of money to be eventually used for the remediation of the properties in question" (para. 211). He found that the Province appeared to have in fact taken some steps to liquidate the claims arising out of the EPA Orders.

[56] Ces motifs — et d'autres — ont amené le juge de première instance à conclure que la province ne s'attendait pas à ce qu'Abitibi exécute les travaux de décontamination et que [TRADUCTION] « les ordonnances EPA avaient pour effet voulu, pratique et réaliste de jeter les bases qui permettraient à la province de recouvrer les sommes d'argent devant éventuellement être employées pour la décontamination des terrains en question » (par. 211). Il a conclu que la province semblait avoir en fait pris des mesures en vue de liquider les réclamations découlant des ordonnances EPA.

[57] In the end, the judge found that there was definitely a claim that "might" be filed, and that it was not left to "the subjective choice of the creditor to hold the claim in its pocket for tactical reasons" (para. 227). In his words, the situation did not involve a "detached regulator or public enforcer issuing [an] order for the public good" (para. 175), and it was "the hat of a creditor that best fi[t] the Province, not that of a disinterested regulator" (para. 176).

[57] En fin de compte, le juge a conclu qu'il existait véritablement une réclamation qui « pourrait » être présentée, et qu'on ne pouvait laisser au bon vouloir du créancier [TRADUCTION] « le choix subjectif de la garder en réserve pour des raisons tactiques » (par. 227). Pour reprendre ses propres mots, il ne s'agissait pas d'un cas où « un organisme de réglementation ou d'application de la loi a émis de manière objective une ordonnance dans l'intérêt public » (par. 175), mais que « la province a agi plus comme un créancier que comme un organisme administratif désintéressé » (par. 176).

[58] In sum, although the analytical framework used by Gascon J. was driven by the facts of the case, he reviewed all the legal principles and facts that needed to be considered in order to make the determination in the case at bar. He did at times rely on indicators that are unique and that do not appear in the analytical framework I propose above, but he did so because of the exceptional facts of this case. Yet, had he formulated the question in the same way as I have, his conclusion, based on his objective findings of fact, would have been the same. Earmarking money may be a strong indicator that a province will perform remediation work, and actually commencing the work is the first step towards the creation of a debt, but these are not the only considerations that can lead to a finding that a creditor has a monetary claim. The CCAA judge's assessment of the facts, particularly his finding that the EPA Orders were the first step towards performance of the remediation work by the Province, leads to no conclusion other than that it was sufficiently certain that the Province would perform remediation work and therefore fall within the definition of a creditor with a monetary claim.

[58] En somme, bien que le cadre analytique utilisé par le juge Gascon a été dicté par les faits de l'affaire, il a examiné tous les principes juridiques et les faits qu'il était tenu de prendre en compte pour statuer sur la question qui se posait. À l'occasion, il s'est appuyé sur des indicateurs singuliers qui ne figurent pas dans le cadre analytique que j'ai déjà proposé, mais cela s'explique par les faits exceptionnels en l'espèce. Or, s'il avait formulé la question comme je l'ai posée, sa conclusion, appuyée sur ses constatations de fait objectives, aurait été la même. Le fait de prévoir un budget peut constituer un indicateur clair qu'une province exécutera des travaux de décontamination, et le fait que ces travaux soient entrepris constitue la première étape de

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

la constitution d'une dette, mais ces considérations ne sont pas les seules qui permettent de conclure qu'un créancier fait valoir une réclamation pécuniaire. L'appréciation des faits par le juge de première instance, plus particulièrement sa constatation que les ordonnances constituaient la première étape en vue de la décontamination des sites, ne permet de tirer aucune conclusion autre que celle suivant laquelle il était suffisamment certain que la province exécuterait des travaux de décontamination et qu'elle était par conséquent visée par la définition d'un créancier ayant une réclamation pécuniaire.

VI. Conclusion

VI. Conclusion

[59] In sum, I agree with the Chief Justice that, as a general proposition, an environmental order issued by a regulatory body can be treated as a contingent claim, and that such a claim can be included in the claims process if it is sufficiently certain that the regulatory body will make a monetary claim against the debtor. Our difference of views lies mainly in the applicable threshold for including contingent claims and in our understanding of the CCAA judge's findings of fact.

[59] En somme, je suis d'accord avec la Juge en chef pour dire qu'en règle générale, une ordonnance environnementale d'un organisme administratif peut être traitée comme une réclamation éventuelle et qu'une telle réclamation peut être incluse au processus de réclamation s'il est suffisamment certain que l'organisme administratif fera valoir une réclamation pécuniaire contre le débiteur. Nos divergences de vues portent principalement sur le critère applicable pour que les réclamations éventuelles soient incluses et sur la façon dont nous interprétons les constatations de fait tirées par le juge de première instance.

[60] With respect to the law, the Chief Justice would craft a standard specific to the context of environmental orders by requiring a "likelihood approaching certainty" that the regulatory body will perform the remediation work. She finds that this threshold is justified because "remediation may cost a great deal of money" (para. 86). I acknowledge that remediating pollution is often costly, but I am of the view that Parliament has borne this consideration in mind in enacting provisions specific to environmental claims. Moreover, I recall that in this case, the Premier announced that the remediation work would be performed at no net cost to the Province. It was clear to him that the Abitibi Act would make it possible to offset all the related costs.

[60] En ce qui concerne le droit, la Juge en chef établirait une norme propre au contexte des ordonnances environnementales qui exigerait une « probabilité proche de la certitude » que l'organisme administratif réalisera les travaux de restauration. Elle estime que ce critère s'impose parce que « les travaux de restauration peuvent être très coûteux » (par. 86). Je reconnais que les travaux de décontamination sont souvent coûteux, mais je crois que cette considération a été prise en compte par le législateur fédéral lors de l'adoption des dispositions particulières visant les réclamations en matière environnementale. De plus, je rappelle qu'en l'instance, le premier ministre a annoncé que les travaux de décontamination seraient réalisés sans coût net pour la province. Il était évident pour lui que l'adoption de l'Abitibi Act permettrait de compenser tous les coûts afférents.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[61] Thus, I prefer to take the approach generally taken for all contingent claims. In my view, the CCAA court is entitled to take all relevant facts into consideration in making the relevant determination. Under this approach, the contingency to be assessed in a case such as this is whether it is sufficiently certain that the regulatory body will perform remediation work and be in a position to assert a monetary claim.

[62] Finally, the Chief Justice would review the CCAA court's findings of fact. I would instead defer to them. On those findings, applying any legal standard, be it the one proposed by the Chief Justice or the one I propose, the Province's claim is monetary in nature and its motion for a declaration exempting the EPA Orders from the claims procedure order was properly dismissed.

[63] For these reasons, I would dismiss the appeal with costs.

The following are the reasons delivered by

THE CHIEF JUSTICE (dissenting) —

1. Overview

[64] The issue in this case is whether orders made under the Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, c. E-14.2 ("EPA"), by the Newfoundland and Labrador Minister of Environment and Conservation ("Minister") requiring a polluter to clean up sites (the "EPA Orders") are monetary claims that can be compromised in corporate restructuring under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA"). If they are not claims that can be compromised in restructuring, the Abitibi respondents ("Abitibi") will still have a legal obligation to clean up the sites following their emergence from restructuring. If they are such claims, Abitibi will have emerged from restructuring free of the obligation, able to recommence business without remediating the [61] Par conséquent, je préfère retenir la méthode généralement suivie en matière de réclamations éventuelles. À mon avis, le tribunal chargé de l'application de la LACC peut prendre en compte l'ensemble des faits pertinents en vue de rendre la décision appropriée. Suivant cette approche, l'éventualité qu'il faut évaluer dans une affaire comme celle-ci est de savoir s'il est suffisamment certain que l'organisme administratif exécutera les travaux de décontamination et sera en mesure de faire valoir une réclamation pécuniaire.

[62] Enfin, la Juge en chef réviserait les conclusions de fait du juge de première instance. Pour ma part, je m'en remets à ces conclusions. Quelle que soit la norme juridique appliquée, soit celle proposée par la Juge en chef ou celle que je propose, au vu de ces conclusions, la réclamation de la province est de nature pécuniaire et sa requête demandant de déclarer que les ordonnances EPA n'étaient pas assujetties à l'ordonnance relative à la procédure de réclamations a été à juste titre rejetée.

[63] Pour ces motifs, je suis d'avis de rejeter le pourvoi avec dépens

Version française des motifs rendus par

LA JUGE EN CHEF (dissidente) —

1. Aperçu

[64] Il s'agit en l'espèce de savoir si des ordonnances du ministre de l'Environnement et de la Conservation (le « ministre ») de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador, émises en vertu de l'Environmental Protection Act, S.N.L. 2002, ch. E-14.2 (« EPA »), obligeant un pollueur à décontaminer des sites (les « ordonnances EPA ») constituent des réclamations pécuniaires qui peuvent faire l'objet d'une transaction dans le cadre d'une restructuration d'entreprise engagée sous le régime de la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-36 (« LACC »). Si elles ne constituent pas des réclamations pécuniaires pouvant faire l'objet d'une transaction, les intimées du groupe Abitibi (« Abitibi ») auront encore l'obligation légale de décontaminer les sites lorsque leur properties it polluted, the cost of which will fall on the Newfoundland and Labrador public.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[65] Remediation orders made under a province's environmental protection legislation impose ongoing regulatory obligations on the corporation required to clean up the pollution. They are not monetary claims. In narrow circumstances, specified by the CCAA, these ongoing regulatory obligations may be reduced to monetary claims, which can be compromised under CCAA proceedings. This occurs where a province has done the work, or where it is "sufficiently certain" that it will do the work. In these circumstances, the regulatory obligation would be extinguished and the province would have a monetary claim for the cost of remediation in the CCAA proceedings. Otherwise, the regulatory obligation survives the restructuring.

[66] In my view, the orders for remediation in this case, with a minor exception, are not claims that can be compromised in restructuring. On one of the properties, the Minister did emergency remedial work and put other work out to tender. These costs can be claimed in the CCAA proceedings. However, with respect to the other properties, on the evidence before us, the Minister has neither done the clean-up work, nor is it sufficiently certain that he or she will do so. The Province of Newfoundland and Labrador ("Province") retained a number of options, including requiring Abitibi to perform the remediation if it successfully emerged from the CCAA restructuring.

restructuration sera terminée. Dans le cas contraire, Abitibi sera dégagée de cette obligation; elle pourra reprendre ses activités à l'issue de la restructuration sans avoir à décontaminer les sites qu'elle a pollués et la population de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador devra supporter le coût de la décontamination.

[65] Les ordonnances exigeant la décontamination émises aux termes d'une loi provinciale sur la protection de l'environnement imposent des exigences réglementaires continues à la personne morale requise de remédier à la pollution. Ces ordonnances ne constituent pas des réclamations pécuniaires. En certaines circonstances particulières prévues par la LACC, ces exigences réglementaires continues peuvent être converties en réclamations pécuniaires, lesquelles peuvent faire l'objet de transactions dans le cadre de procédures engagées aux termes de la LACC. Cette situation se produit lorsqu'une province a exécuté les travaux, ou lorsqu'il est « suffisamment certain » qu'elle exécutera les travaux. Dans ces circonstances, l'exigence réglementaire serait éteinte et la province pourrait produire, dans le cadre de procédures engagées sous le régime de la LACC, une réclamation pécuniaire couvrant le coût des travaux de décontamination. Autrement, l'exigence réglementaire subsiste après la restructuration.

[66] À mon avis, les ordonnances exigeant la décontamination en l'espèce, à une exception près, ne constituent pas des réclamations pouvant faire l'objet de transactions dans le cadre d'une restructuration. Dans un des sites, la ministre de l'époque a effectué d'urgence la décontamination et a lancé un appel d'offres pour d'autres travaux. Le coût de ces travaux peut faire l'objet d'une réclamation dans les procédures engagées sous le régime de la LACC. Toutefois, en ce qui concerne les autres sites, selon les éléments de preuve dont nous disposons, le ministre en poste n'a pas effectué les travaux de décontamination et il n'est pas suffisamment certain qu'il le fera. La province de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador (« province ») a conservé un certain nombre de solutions, dont celle d'obliger Abitibi à décontaminer les sites si elle réussit sa restructuration engagée sous le régime de la LACC.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[67] I would therefore allow the appeal and grant the Province the declaration it seeks that Abitibi is still subject to its obligations under the EPA following its emergence from restructuring, except for work done or tendered for on the Buchans site.

[67] Je suis par conséquent d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi et d'accorder à la province le jugement déclaratoire sollicité portant qu'Abitibi reste assujettie à ses obligations en vertu de l'EPA au terme de cette période de restructuration, à l'exception des travaux sur le site de Buchans déjà exécutés ou à l'égard desquels des appels d'offres ont été lancés.

2. The Proceedings Below

[68] The CCAA judge took the view that the Province issued the EPA Orders, not in order to make Abitibi remediate, but as part of a money grab. He therefore concluded that the orders were monetary and financial in nature and should be considered claims that could be compromised under the CCAA (2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1). The Quebec Court of Appeal denied leave to appeal on the ground that this "factual" conclusion could not be disturbed (2010 QCCA 965, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 57).

2. Les décisions des juridictions inférieures

[68] Le juge de première instance a adopté le point de vue selon lequel la province avait émis les ordonnances EPA, non pas pour obliger Abitibi à réparer les dommages causés, mais pour lui soutirer de l'argent. Il a donc conclu que les ordonnances étaient de nature pécuniaire et financière, et qu'elles devraient être considérées comme des réclamations pouvant faire l'objet de transactions sous le régime de la LACC (2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1). La Cour d'appel du Québec a refusé l'autorisation d'interjeter appel de cette décision au motif que rien ne permettait de modifier cette conclusion « de fait » (2010 QCCA 965, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 57).

[69] The CCAA judge's stark view that an EPA obligation can be considered a monetary claim capable of being compromised simply because (as he saw it) the Province's motive was money, is no longer pressed. Whether an EPA order is a claim under the CCAA depends on whether it meets the requirements for a claim under that statute. That is the only issue to be resolved. Insofar as this determination touches on the division of powers, I am in substantial agreement with my colleague Deschamps J., at paras. 18-19.

[69] Le point de vue peu nuancé du juge de première instance, selon lequel une obligation découlant de l'EPA peut être considérée comme une réclamation pécuniaire susceptible de faire l'objet d'une transaction du simple fait (à son avis) que la province n'était motivée que par l'argent, n'est plus en cause. Pour répondre à la question de savoir si une ordonnance émise sous le régime de l'EPA constitue une réclamation au sens de la LACC, il faut déterminer si elle satisfait aux conditions d'existence d'une réclamation établies par cette loi. Il s'agit de la seule question à trancher. Dans la mesure où la décision sur ce point touche le partage des pouvoirs, je souscris pour l'essentiel à l'opinion exprimée par ma collègue la juge Deschamps aux par. 18-19.

3. The Distinction Between Regulatory Obligations and Claims Under the CCAA

3. La distinction entre une exigence réglementaire et une réclamation au titre de la LACC

[70] Orders to clean up polluted property under provincial environmental protection legislation are regulatory orders. They remain in effect until the property has been cleaned up or the matter otherwise resolved.

[70] Les ordonnances exigeant la décontamination des sites pollués émises en vertu des lois provinciales sur l'environnement sont des ordonnances

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[71] It is not unusual for corporations seeking to restructure under the CCAA to be subject to a variety of ongoing regulatory orders arising from statutory schemes governing matters like employment, energy conservation and the environment. The corporation remains subject to these obligations as it continues to carry on business during the restructuring period, and remains subject to them when it emerges from restructuring unless they have been compromised or liquidated.

[72] The CCAA, like the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-3 ("BIA"), draws a fundamental distinction between ongoing regulatory obligations owed to the public, which generally survive the restructuring, and monetary claims that can be compromised.

[73] This distinction is also recognized in the jurisprudence, which has held that regulatory duties owed to the public are not "claims" under the BIA, nor, by extension, under the CCAA. In Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. v. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd. (1991), 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45, the Alberta Court of Appeal held that a receiver in bankruptcy must comply with an order from the Energy Resources Conservation Board to comply with well abandonment requirements. Writing for the court, Laycraft C.J.A. said the question was whether the Bankruptcy Act "requires that the assets in the estate of an insolvent well licensee should be distributed to creditors leaving behind the duties respecting environmental safety . . . as a charge to the public" (para. 29). He answered the question in the negative:

The duty is owed as a public duty by all the citizens of the community to their fellow citizens. When the de nature réglementaire. Elles demeurent en vigueur jusqu'à ce que le site ait été décontaminé ou que l'affaire soit réglée d'une autre façon.

[71] Il n'est pas inhabituel pour les sociétés qui cherchent à se restructurer sous le régime de la LACC d'être assujetties à diverses ordonnances réglementaires continues découlant de régimes législatifs régissant des domaines tels que l'emploi, la conservation de l'énergie et l'environnement. La société demeure assujettie à ces exigences alors qu'elle continue d'exercer ses activités pendant la période de restructuration, et elle y demeure assujettie au terme de cette période de restructuration, à moins que ces exigences n'aient fait l'objet d'une transaction ou qu'elles n'aient été liquidées.

[72] La LACC, à l'instar de la Loi sur la faillite et l'insolvabilité, L.R.C. 1985, ch. B-3 (« LFI »), établit une distinction fondamentale entre les exigences réglementaires continues établies en faveur du public, lesquelles continuent de s'appliquer après la restructuration, et les réclamations pécuniaires qui peuvent faire l'objet d'une transaction.

[73] Cette distinction est aussi reconnue dans la jurisprudence, selon laquelle les obligations réglementaires établies en faveur du public ne sont pas des « réclamations » aux termes de la LFI ni, par extension, aux termes de la LACC. Dans l'arrêt Panamericana de Bienes y Servicios S.A. c. Northern Badger Oil & Gas Ltd. (1991), 81 Alta. L.R. (2d) 45, la Cour d'appel de l'Alberta a statué qu'un séquestre doit se conformer à une ordonnance de l'Energy Resources Conservation Board lui enjoignant de respecter des exigences en matière d'abandon de puits. Le juge en chef Laycraft, au nom de la cour, a affirmé que la question à trancher était de savoir si la Loi sur la faillite [TRADUCTION] « exige que les actifs se trouvant dans le patrimoine d'un titulaire de permis de puits soient distribués aux créanciers en laissant à la charge du public les obligations en matière de sécurité environnementale » (par. 29). Il a répondu par la négative :

[TRADUCTION] L'obligation est établie comme une obligation à caractère public qui doit être respectée par

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

citizen subject to the order complies, the result is not the recovery of money by the peace officer or public authority, or of a judgment for money, nor is that the object of the whole process. Rather, it is simply the enforcement of the general law. The enforcing authority does not become a "creditor" of the citizen on whom the duty is imposed. [Emphasis added; para. 33.]

l'ensemble des citoyens de la collectivité à l'égard de leurs concitoyens. Lorsque le citoyen visé par l'ordonnance s'y conforme, le résultat n'est pas perçu comme le recouvrement d'une somme d'argent par un agent de la paix ou l'autorité publique, ni comme l'exécution d'un jugement ordonnant le paiement d'une somme d'argent; d'ailleurs, cela ne constitue pas non plus l'objectif de l'ensemble du processus. Il faut plutôt y voir l'application d'une loi générale. L'organisme d'application de la loi ne devient pas un « créancier » du citoyen à qui incombe l'obligation. [Je souligne; par. 33.]

[74] The distinction between regulatory obligations under the general law aimed at the protection of the public and monetary claims that can be compromised in CCAA restructuring or bankruptcy is a fundamental plank of Canadian corporate law. It has been repeatedly acknowledged: Lamford Forest Products Ltd. (Re) (1991), 86 D.L.R. (4th) 534 (B.C.S.C.); Shirley (Re) (1995), 129 D.L.R. (4th) 105 (Ont. Ct. (Gen. Div.)), at p. 109; Husky Oil Operations Ltd. v. Minister of National Revenue, [1995] 3 S.C.R. 453, at para. 146, per Iacobucci J. (dissenting). As Farley J. succinctly put it in Air Canada, Re [Regulators' motions] (2003), 28 C.B.R. (5th) 52 (Ont. S.C.J.), at para. 18: "Once [the company] emerges from these CCAA proceedings (successfully one would hope), then it will have to deal with each and every then unresolved [regulatory] matter."

[74] La distinction entre les exigences réglementaires découlant d'une loi d'application générale visant la protection du public, d'une part, et les réclamations pécuniaires pouvant faire l'objet d'une transaction dans le cadre d'une restructuration engagée sous le régime de la LACC ou en matière de faillite, d'autre part, constitue un élément important du droit canadien des sociétés. Cette distinction a maintes fois été reconnue : Lamford Forest Products Ltd. (Re) (1991), 86 D.L.R. (4th) 534 (C.S.C.-B.); Shirley (Re) (1995), 129 D.L.R. (4th) 105 (C. Ont. (Div. gén.)), p. 109; Husky Oil Operations Ltd. c. Ministre du Revenu national, [1995] 3 R.C.S. 453, par. 146, le juge Iacobucci (dissident). Comme l'a dit succinctement le juge Farley dans Air Canada, Re [Regulators' motions] (2003), 28 C.B.R. (5th) 52 (C.S.J. Ont.), par. 18 : [TRADUCTION] « À l'issue des procédures engagées en vertu de la LACC — souhaitons qu'elles soient couronnées de succès — [la société] aura alors à régler chacun des dossiers non résolus [en matière réglementaire]. »

[75] Recent amendments to the CCAA confirm this distinction. Section 11.1(2) now explicitly provides that, except to the extent a regulator is enforcing a payment obligation, a general stay does not affect a regulatory body's authority in relation to a corporation going through restructuring. The CCAA court may only stay specific actions or suits brought by a regulatory body, and only if such action is necessary for a viable compromise to be reached and it would not be contrary to the public interest to make such an order (s. 11.1(3)).

[75] Des modifications apportées récemment à la LACC confirment cette distinction. Le paragraphe 11.1(2) prévoit maintenant expressément que, sauf dans la mesure où un organisme de réglementation fait respecter une obligation de paiement, une suspension générale ne porte aucunement atteinte aux pouvoirs de celui-ci à l'égard d'une société en restructuration. Le tribunal chargé d'appliquer la LACC ne peut ordonner une suspension qu'à l'égard de certaines actions ou poursuites intentées par un organisme administratif, et seulement si cette mesure est nécessaire à la conclusion d'une transaction viable et si une telle ordonnance ne serait pas contraire à l'intérêt public (par. 11.1(3)).

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[76] Abitibi argues that another amendment to the CCAA, s. 11.8(9), treats ongoing regulatory duties owed to the public as claims, and erases the distinction between the two types of obligation: see General Chemical Canada Ltd., Re, 2007 ONCA 600, 228 O.A.C. 385, per Goudge J.A., relying on s. 14.06(8) of the BIA (the equivalent of s. 11.8(9) of the CCAA). With respect, this reads too much into the provision. Section 11.8(9) of the CCAA refers only to the situation where a government has performed remediation, and provides that the costs of the remediation become a claim in the restructuring process even where the environmental damage arose after CCAA proceedings have begun. As stated in Strathcona (County) v. PriceWaterhouseCoopers Inc., 2005 ABQB 559, 47 Alta. L.R. (4th) 138, per Burrows J., the section "does not convert a statutorily imposed obligation owed to the public at large into a liability owed to the public body charged with enforcing it" (para. 42).

[76] Abitibi plaide qu'en vertu d'une autre modification apportée à la LACC, le par. 11.8(9), les exigences réglementaires continues établies en faveur du public sont considérées comme des réclamations, et que cette modification élimine la distinction entre les deux types d'obligations : voir General Chemical Canada Ltd., Re, 2007 ONCA 600, 228 O.A.C. 385, le juge Goudge, citant le par. 14.06(8) de la LFI (la disposition équivalente au par. 11.8(9) de la LACC). Avec égards, cette interprétation de la disposition est trop large. Le paragraphe 11.8(9) de la LACC vise uniquement la situation où un gouvernement a exécuté des travaux de réparation du dommage, et prévoit que les frais de réparation constituent une réclamation dans le cadre du processus de restructuration, même si les dommages ont été causés à l'environnement après l'introduction des procédures au titre de la LACC. Comme l'a déclaré le juge Burrows dans Strathcona (County) c. PriceWaterhouseCoopers Inc., 2005 ABQB 559, 47 Alta. L.R. (4th) 138, la disposition [TRADUCTION] « ne convertit pas une exigence imposée par la loi et établie en faveur du public en général en une dette envers l'organisme public chargé d'appliquer la loi » (par. 42).

4. When Does a Regulatory Obligation Become a Claim Under the CCAA?

[77] This brings us to the heart of the question before us: When does a regulatory obligation imposed on a corporation under environmental protection legislation become a "claim" provable and compromisable under the CCAA?

[78] Regulatory obligations are, as a general proposition, not compromisable claims. Only financial or monetary claims provable by a "creditor" fall within the definition of "claim" under the CCAA. A "creditor" is defined as "a person having a claim": s. 2, BIA. Thus, the identification of a "creditor" hangs on the existence of a "claim". Section 12(1) of the CCAA defines "claim" as "any indebtedness, liability or obligation . . . that . . . would be a debt provable in bankruptcy", which is

4. Quand une exigence réglementaire devient-elle une réclamation au titre de la LACC?

[77] Ceci nous amène au cœur de la question dont nous sommes saisis : quand une exigence réglementaire imposée à une société en vertu d'une loi sur la protection de l'environnement devient-elle une « réclamation » prouvable et pouvant faire l'objet d'une transaction aux termes de la LACC?

[78] En règle générale, les exigences réglementaires ne sont pas des réclamations pouvant faire l'objet d'une transaction. Seules les réclamations financières ou pécuniaires prouvables par un « créancier » correspondent à la définition de « réclamation » au sens de la LACC. Un « créancier » est défini comme étant une « [p]ersonne ayant une réclamation » : art. 2, LFI. Ainsi, l'identification d'un « créancier » repose sur l'existence d'une « réclamation ». Le paragraphe 12(1) de la LACC définit une « réclamation » accepted as confined to obligations of a financial or monetary nature.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[79] The CCAA does not depart from the proposition that a claim must be financial or monetary. However, it contains a scheme to deal with disputes over whether an obligation is a monetary obligation as opposed to some other kind of obligation.

[80] Such a dispute may arise with respect to environmental obligations of the corporation. The CCAA recognizes three situations that may arise when a corporation enters restructuring.

[81] The first situation is where the remedial work has not been done (and there is no "sufficient certainty" that the work will be done, unlike the third situation described below). In this situation, the government cannot claim the cost of remediation: see s. 102(3) of the EPA. The obligation of compliance falls in principle on the monitor who takes over the corporation's assets and operations. If the monitor remediates the property, he can claim the costs as costs of administration. If he does not wish to do so, he may obtain a court order staying the remediation obligation or abandon the property: s. 11.8(5) CCAA (in which case costs of remediation shall not rank as costs of administration: s. 11.8(7)). In this situation, the obligation cannot be compromised.

[82] The second situation is where the government that has issued the environmental protection order moves to clean up the pollution, as the legislation entitles it to do. In this situation, the government has a claim for the cost of remediation that is compromisable in the CCAA proceedings. This is because the government, by moving to clean up the pollution, has changed the outstanding regulatory comme étant « toute dette, tout engagement ou toute obligation [. . .] qui [. . .] constituerait une dette prouvable en matière de faillite », une définition dont la portée reconnue se limite aux obligations de nature financière ou pécuniaire.

[79] La LACC ne s'écarte pas du principe selon lequel une réclamation doit être financière ou pécuniaire. Elle prévoit cependant un régime permettant de régler les différends portant sur la question de savoir si une obligation est de nature pécuniaire, par opposition à une obligation d'une autre nature.

[80] Les obligations environnementales qui incombent à une personne morale peuvent engendrer un tel différend. La LACC reconnaît trois situations susceptibles de se présenter lorsqu'une personne morale s'engage dans un processus de restructuration.

[81] La première situation est celle où les travaux de restauration du site n'ont pas été exécutés (et il n'est pas « suffisamment certain » que les travaux seront exécutés, contrairement à la troisième situation exposée ci-après). En pareil cas, le gouvernement ne peut réclamer le coût de la restauration : voir le par. 102(3) de l'EPA. En principe, l'obligation de se conformer à la loi incombe au contrôleur qui prend en charge l'actif et les activités de la société. Si le contrôleur exécute les travaux de restauration du site, il peut réclamer les frais en tant que frais d'administration. S'il ne désire pas le faire, il peut obtenir de la cour une ordonnance suspendant l'exigence de restauration ou il peut abandonner l'immeuble : par. 11.8(5) de la LACC (dans ce cas, les frais de restauration ne font pas partie des frais d'administration : par. 11.8(7)). En pareil cas, l'obligation ne peut faire l'objet d'une transaction.

[82] La deuxième situation est celle où le gouvernement qui a émis l'ordonnance environnementale prend des mesures de décontamination, ce que la législation l'autorise à faire. En pareil cas, le gouvernement peut produire, pour le coût de la décontamination, une réclamation qui pourra faire l'objet d'une transaction dans le cadre des procédures engagées sous le régime de la LACC. Il en est ainsi obligation owed to the public into a financial or monetary obligation owed by the corporation to the government. Section 11.8(9), already discussed, makes it clear that this applies to damage after the CCAA proceedings commenced, which might otherwise not be claimable as a matter of timing.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[83] A third situation may arise: the government has not yet performed the remediation at the time of restructuring, but there is "sufficient certainty" that it will do so. This situation is regulated by the provisions of the CCAA for contingent or future claims. Under the CCAA, a debt or liability that is contingent on a future event may be compromised.

[84] It is clear that a mere possibility that work will be done does not suffice to make a regulatory obligation a contingent claim under the CCAA. Rather, there must be "sufficient certainty" that the obligation will be converted into a financial or monetary claim to permit this. The impact of the obligation on the insolvency process is irrelevant to the analysis of contingency. The future liabilities must not be "so remote and speculative in nature that they could not properly be considered contingent claims": Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re (1997), 96 O.A.C. 75, at para. 4.

[85] Where environmental obligations are concerned, courts to date have relied on a high degree of probability verging on certainty that the government will in fact step in and remediate the property. In Anvil Range Mining Corp., Re (2001), 25 C.B.R. (4th) 1 (Ont. S.C.J.), Farley J. concluded that a contingent claim was established where the money had already been earmarked in the budget for the remediation project. He observed that parce que le gouvernement, en prenant des mesures pour décontaminer le site, a transformé l'exigence réglementaire non exécutée établie en faveur du public en une obligation financière ou pécuniaire à laquelle la société est tenue envers le gouvernement. Le paragraphe 11.8(9), examiné précédemment, prévoit clairement que cette situation s'applique aux dommages survenus après que les procédures ont été engagées au titre de la LACC; en l'absence d'une telle précision, ces dommages ne pourraient faire l'objet d'une réclamation compte tenu du moment choisi pour agir.

[83] Une troisième situation peut se présenter : le gouvernement n'a pas encore exécuté des travaux de restauration au moment de la restructuration, mais il est « suffisamment certain » qu'il le fera. Cette situation est prévue par les dispositions de la LACC relatives aux réclamations éventuelles ou futures. Aux termes de la LACC, une dette ou un engagement qui dépend d'un événement futur peut faire l'objet d'une transaction.

[84] Il est évident qu'une simple possibilité que les travaux soient exécutés ne suffit pas pour transformer une exigence réglementaire en une réclamation éventuelle au titre de la LACC. Pour en arriver à ce résultat, il faut plutôt qu'il soit « suffisamment certain » que l'exigence sera convertie en une réclamation financière ou pécuniaire. L'incidence de l'exigence sur le processus d'insolvabilité n'est pas pertinente pour l'analyse du caractère éventuel de la réclamation. Les engagements futurs ne doivent pas être [TRADUCTION] « si lointains et hypothétiques qu'ils ne puissent être considérés à bon droit comme des réclamations éventuelles » : Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. (Bankrupt), Re (1997), 96 O.A.C. 75, par. 4.

[85] Lorsque des exigences environnementales sont en cause, les tribunaux se sont jusqu'à ce jour fondés sur un haut degré de probabilité, proche de la certitude, que le gouvernement prendra réellement des mesures et exécutera les travaux de restauration. Dans Anvil Range Mining Corp., Re (2001), 25 C.B.R. (4th) 1 (C.S.J. Ont.), le juge Farley a conclu que la preuve d'une réclamation éventuelle était établie parce que les fonds avaient

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

"there appears to be every likelihood to a certainty that every dollar in the budget for the year ending March 31, 2002 earmarked for reclamation will be spent" (para. 15 (emphasis added)). Similarly, in Shirley (Re), Kennedy J. relied on the fact that the Ontario Minister of the Environment had already entered the property at issue and commenced remediation activities to conclude that "[a]ny doubt about the resolve of the [Ministry's] intent to realize upon its authority ended when it began to incur expense from operations" (p. 110).

déjà été dédiés au projet de restauration dans le budget. Il a fait remarquer qu'[TRADUCTION] « il semble fortement probable et presque certain que chaque dollar dédié aux réclamations figurant au budget établi pour l'année se terminant le 31 mars 2002 sera dépensé » (par. 15 (je souligne)). De même, dans Shirley (Re), le juge Kennedy s'est fondé sur le fait que les employés du ministère de l'Environnement de l'Ontario se trouvaient déjà sur le terrain en cause et avaient commencé les travaux de restauration pour conclure que [TRADUCTION] « [t]ous doutes quant à la détermination du [ministère] d'exercer son droit se sont estompés lorsque l'opération a commencé à lui occasionner des dépenses » (p. 110).

[86] There is good reason why "sufficient certainty" should be interpreted as requiring "likelihood approaching certainty" when the issue is whether ongoing environmental obligations owed to the public should be converted to contingent claims that can be expunged or compromised in the restructuring process. Courts should not overlook the obstacles governments may encounter in deciding to remediate environmental damage a corporation has caused. To begin with, the government's decision is discretionary and may be influenced by any number of competing political and social considerations. Furthermore, remediation may cost a great deal of money. For example, in this case, the CCAA court found that at a minimum the remediation would cost in the "mid-to-high eight figures", and could indeed cost several times that (para. 81). In concrete terms, the remediation at issue in this case may be expected to meet or exceed the entire budget of the Minister ($65 million) for 2009. Not only would this be a massive expenditure, but it would also likely require the specific approval of the legislature and thereby be subject to political uncertainties. To assess these factors and determine whether all this will occur would embroil the CCAA judge in social, economic and political considerations — matters which are not normally subject to judicial consideration: R. v. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltd., 2011 SCC 42, [2011] 3 S.C.R. 45, at para. 74. It is small wonder, then, that courts assessing whether it is "sufficiently certain" that a government will clean up pollution created

[86] Une bonne raison explique pourquoi il convient d'interpréter l'expression « suffisamment certain » comme exigeant une « probabilité proche de la certitude » lorsqu'il s'agit de déterminer si des exigences environnementales continues établies en faveur du public devraient être converties en réclamations éventuelles qui peuvent être rayées ou faire l'objet d'une transaction dans le cadre du processus de restructuration. Les tribunaux ne devraient pas oublier les obstacles auxquels les gouvernements peuvent se heurter lorsqu'ils décident de réparer les dommages environnementaux causés par une société. D'abord, la décision du gouvernement est discrétionnaire, et elle peut être influencée par nombre de considérations politiques et sociales concurrentes. En outre, les travaux de restauration peuvent être très coûteux. En l'espèce, par exemple, le juge de première instance a conclu que ces travaux pourraient coûter au minimum [TRADUCTION] « entre cinquante et cent millions de dollars », et même plusieurs fois cette somme (par. 81). En termes concrets, le coût des travaux en cause en l'espèce pourrait atteindre ou dépasser le budget total du ministre (65 millions de dollars) pour l'exercice 2009. Il s'agirait non seulement d'une dépense énorme, mais il faudrait probablement aussi l'approbation explicite de l'assemblée législative, avec les incertitudes politiques que cela comporte. L'évaluation de ces facteurs et l'appréciation de la possibilité que tout ce qui précède se produise entraîneraient le juge chargé d'appliquer la LACC dans des considérations d'ordre

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

by a corporation have insisted on proof of likelihood approaching certainty.

[87] In this case, as will be seen, apart from the Buchans property, the record is devoid of any evidence capable of establishing that it is "sufficiently certain" that the Province will itself remediate the properties. Even on a more relaxed standard than the one adopted in similar cases to date, the evidence in this case would fail to establish that remediation is "sufficiently certain".

5. The Result in This Case

[88] Five different sites are at issue in this case. The question in each case is whether the Minister has already remediated the property (making it to that extent an actual claim), or if not, whether it is "sufficiently certain" that he or she will remediate the property, permitting it to be considered a contingent claim.

[89] The Buchans site posed immediate risks to human health as a consequence of high levels of lead and other contaminants in the soil, groundwater, surface water and sediment. There was a risk that the wind would disperse the contamination, posing a threat to the surrounding population. Lead has been found in residential areas of Buchans and adults tested in the town had elevated levels of lead in their blood. In addition, a structurally unsound dam at the Buchans site raised the risk of contaminating silt entering the Exploits and Buchans rivers.

[90] The Minister quickly moved to address the immediate concern of the unsound dam and put social, économique et politique — des questions normalement soustraites à l'examen judiciaire : R. c. Imperial Tobacco Canada Ltée, 2011 CSC 42, [2011] 3 R.C.S. 45, par. 74. Il n'est donc pas étonnant que les tribunaux, lorsqu'il s'agit d'apprécier s'il est « suffisamment certain » qu'un gouvernement procédera à la décontamination causée par une société, s'en soient tenus à la preuve d'une probabilité proche de la certitude.

[87] En l'espèce, comme nous le verrons, à l'exclusion du site de Buchans, le dossier est dénué d'éléments de preuve susceptibles d'établir qu'il est « suffisamment certain » que la province exécutera elle-même les travaux de décontamination. Même si l'on applique une norme plus souple que celle retenue jusqu'à ce jour dans des affaires semblables, la preuve en l'espèce n'établirait pas qu'il est « suffisamment certain » que les sites seront décontaminés.

5. L'issue du présent pourvoi

[88] En l'espèce, cinq sites différents sont en cause. La question dans chaque cas est de savoir si le ministre a déjà décontaminé les sites — il aurait alors une réclamation — ou, si tel n'est pas le cas, s'il est « suffisamment certain » qu'il exécutera les travaux de restauration, ce qui permettrait de considérer le coût de la décontamination comme une réclamation éventuelle.

[89] Le site de Buchans posait un risque immédiat à la santé pour les humains en raison de la forte concentration de plomb et d'autres contaminants présente dans le sol, l'eau souterraine et de surface ainsi que dans des sédiments. Il y avait un risque que le vent disperse la contamination, ce qui aurait représenté une menace pour la population environnante. On a trouvé du plomb dans des zones résidentielles de Buchans et les tests de sang ont révélé chez des adultes résidant dans la ville des concentrations élevées de plomb. De plus, un barrage en mauvais état situé sur le site de Buchans augmentait le risque de contamination du limon se déversant dans les rivières Exploits et Buchans.

[90] La ministre de l'époque a rapidement pris des mesures pour régler le problème immédiat du out a request for tenders for other measures that required immediate action at the Buchans site. Money expended is clearly a claim under the CCAA. I am also of the view that the work for which the request for tenders was put out meets the "sufficiently certain" standard and constitutes a contingent claim.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[91] Beyond this, it has not been shown that it is "sufficiently certain" that the Province will do the remediation work to permit Abitibi's ongoing regulatory obligations under the EPA Orders to be considered contingent debts. The same applies to the other properties, on which no work has been done and no requests for tender to do the work initiated.

[92] Far from being "sufficiently certain", there is simply nothing on the record to support the view that the Province will move to remediate the remaining properties. It has not been shown that the contamination poses immediate health risks, which must be addressed without delay. It has not been shown that the Province has taken any steps to do any work. And it has not been shown that the Province has set aside or even contemplated setting aside money for this work. Abitibi relies on a statement by the then-Premier in discussing the possibility that the Province would be obliged to compensate Abitibi for expropriation of some of the properties, to the effect that "there would not be a net payment to Abitibi": R.F., at para. 12. Apart from the fact that the Premier was not purporting to state government policy, the statement simply does not say that the Province would do the remediation. The Premier may have simply been suggesting that outstanding environmental liabilities made the properties worth little or nothing, obviating any net payment to Abitibi.

[93] My colleague Deschamps J. concludes that the findings of the CCAA court establish that it was barrage en mauvais état et a lancé un appel d'offres relatif aux autres mesures nécessitant une intervention immédiate sur le site de Buchans. Il est clair que les sommes d'argent dépensées constituent une réclamation au sens de la LACC. J'estime également que les travaux à l'égard desquels des appels d'offres ont été lancés satisfont à la norme de ce qui est « suffisamment certain » et qu'ils constituent une réclamation éventuelle.

[91] Quant au reste, on n'a pas établi qu'il soit « suffisamment certain » que la province exécutera les travaux de décontamination de façon à pouvoir considérer comme des dettes éventuelles les exigences réglementaires continues que les ordonnances EPA ont imposées à Abitibi. La même conclusion s'applique à l'égard des autres sites, où aucun travail n'a été réalisé et pour lesquels aucun appel d'offres n'a été lancé pour l'exécution des travaux.

[92] Il n'est pas « suffisamment certain » que la province entreprenne la décontamination des autres sites : aucune preuve au dossier ne laisse entrevoir cette possibilité. Il n'a pas été démontré que la contamination pose pour la santé des risques immédiats exigeant la prise de mesures dans les plus brefs délais. Il n'a pas été démontré que la province a pris quelque mesure que ce soit pour réaliser des travaux. Et il n'a pas été démontré que la province a prévu des sommes d'argent pour ces travaux ou qu'elle a même songé à en prévoir. Abitibi se fonde sur une déclaration du premier ministre de l'époque, qui examinait la possibilité que la province soit tenue de verser à Abitibi une indemnité pour l'expropriation de certains terrains, selon laquelle [TRADUCTION] « aucun montant net ne serait versé à Abitibi » : m.i., par. 12. Mis à part le fait que le premier ministre ne prétendait pas établir une politique gouvernementale, sa déclaration n'indique aucunement que la province exécuterait la décontamination. Le premier ministre indiquait peut-être simplement qu'en raison des exigences environnementales non respectées, les terrains ne valaient plus rien ou presque et qu'il serait inutile de verser quoi que ce soit à Abitibi.

[93] Ma collègue la juge Deschamps conclut que les constatations du juge de première instance

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

"sufficiently certain" that the Province would remediate the land, converting Abitibi's regulatory obligations under the EPA Orders to contingent claims that can be compromised under the CCAA. With respect, I find myself unable to agree.

[94] The CCAA judge never asked himself the critical question of whether it was "sufficiently certain" that the Province would do the work itself. Essentially, he proceeded on the basis that the EPA Orders had not been put forward in a sincere effort to obtain remediation, but were simply a money grab. The CCAA judge buttressed his view that the Province's regulatory orders were not sincere by opining that the orders were unenforceable (which if true would not prevent new EPA orders) and by suggesting that the Province did not want to assert a contingent claim, since this might attract a counterclaim by Abitibi for the expropriation of the properties (something that may be impossible due to Abitibi's decision to take the expropriation issue to NAFTA (the North American Free Trade Agreement Between the Government of Canada, the Government of the United Mexican States and the Government of the United States of America, Can. T.S. 1994 No. 2), excluding Canadian courts). In any event, it is clear that the CCAA judge, on the reasoning he adopted, never considered the question of whether it was "sufficiently certain" that the Province would remediate the properties. It follows that the CCAA judge's conclusions cannot support the view that the outstanding obligations are contingent claims under the CCAA.

[95] My colleague concludes:

[The CCAA judge] did at times rely on indicators that are unique and that do not appear in the analytical framework I propose above, but he did so because of the exceptional facts of this case. Yet, had he formulated the établissent qu'il est « suffisamment certain » que la province décontaminerait les terrains, transformant ainsi les exigences réglementaires que les ordonnances EPA imposent à Abitibi en réclamations éventuelles pouvant faire l'objet d'une transaction sous le régime de la LACC. Avec égards, je ne puis souscrire à cette conclusion.

[94] Le juge de première instance ne s'est jamais posé la question cruciale de savoir s'il était « suffisamment certain » que la province exécuterait elle-même les travaux. Essentiellement, il a tenu pour acquis que les ordonnances EPA n'avaient pas été émises avec l'intention sincère d'obtenir la décontamination des sites, mais qu'il s'agissait simplement d'une manœuvre pour soutirer de l'argent. Le juge a renforcé son point de vue selon lequel les ordonnances réglementaires émises par la province étaient dépourvues de sincérité en exprimant l'avis qu'elles n'étaient pas susceptibles d'exécution (ce qui, si cela s'avérait exact, n'empêcherait pas que de nouvelles ordonnances soient émises). Le juge a également laissé entendre que la province ne voulait pas produire une réclamation éventuelle, ce qui aurait pu provoquer le dépôt d'une demande reconventionnelle d'Abitibi pour l'expropriation des propriétés (un résultat qui peut s'avérer impossible étant donné la décision d'Abitibi de soumettre la question de l'expropriation à l'ALÉNA (Accord de libre-échange nord-américain entre le gouvernement du Canada, le gouvernement des États-Unis d'Amérique et le gouvernement des États-Unis du Mexique, R.T. Can. 1994 n^{o} 2), en écartant la juridiction des tribunaux canadiens). Quoi qu'il en soit, il est évident que dans son raisonnement, le juge de première instance n'a jamais examiné la question de savoir s'il était « suffisamment certain » que la province décontaminerait les sites. Il s'ensuit que les conclusions du juge ne peuvent soutenir le point de vue selon lequel les obligations non exécutées constituent des réclamations éventuelles au sens de la LACC.

[95] Ma collègue conclut comme suit :

À l'occasion, [le juge] s'est appuyé sur des indicateurs singuliers qui ne figurent pas dans le cadre analytique que j'ai déjà proposé, mais cela s'explique par les faits exceptionnels en l'espèce. Or, s'il avait formulé la question question in the same way as I have, his conclusion, based on his objective findings of fact, would have been the same. . . . The CCAA judge's assessment of the facts . . . leads to no conclusion other than that it was sufficiently certain that the Province would perform remediation work and therefore fall within the definition of a creditor with a monetary claim. [Emphasis added; para. 58.]

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

[96] I must respectfully confess to a less sanguine view. First, I find myself unable to decide the case on what I think the CCAA judge would have done had he gotten the law right and considered the central question. In my view, his failure to consider that question requires this Court to answer it in his stead on the record before us: Housen v. Nikolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 S.C.R. 235, at para. 35. But more to the point, I see no objective facts that support, much less compel, the conclusion that it is "sufficiently certain" that the Province will move to itself remediate any or all of the pollution Abitibi caused. The mood of the regulator in issuing remediation orders, be it disinterested or otherwise, has no bearing on the likelihood that the Province will undertake such a massive project itself. The Province has options. It could, to be sure, opt to do the work. Or it could await the result of Abitibi's restructuring and call on it to remediate once it resumed operations. It could even choose to leave the sites contaminated. There is nothing in the record that makes the first option more probable than the others, much less establishes "sufficient certainty" that the Province will itself clean up the pollution, converting it to a debt.

[97] I would allow the appeal and issue a declaration that Abitibi's remediation obligations under the EPA Orders do not constitute claims compromisable under the CCAA, except for work done or tendered for on the Buchans site.

comme je l'ai posée, sa conclusion, appuyée sur ses constatations de fait objectives, aurait été la même. [. . .] L'appréciation des faits par le juge [. . .] ne permet de tirer aucune conclusion autre que celle suivant laquelle il était suffisamment certain que la province exécuterait des travaux de décontamination et qu'elle était par conséquent visée par la définition d'un créancier ayant une réclamation pécuniaire. [Je souligne; par. 58.]

[96] Avec égards, je dois avouer que je ne partage pas la certitude de ma collègue à ce titre. Premièrement, j'estime ne pas pouvoir trancher le pourvoi en me fondant sur ce que je crois qu'aurait fait le juge de première instance s'il avait alors saisi correctement le droit et examiné la question réellement en jeu. À mon avis, le fait qu'il n'ait pas examiné cette question oblige notre Cour à y répondre à sa place au vu du dossier : Housen c. Nikolaisen, 2002 CSC 33, [2002] 2 R.C.S. 235, par. 35. Mais, plus précisément, je ne vois pas de faits objectifs qui appuient, et encore moins qui imposent, la conclusion selon laquelle il est « suffisamment certain » que la province entreprendra elle-même de décontaminer un site ou tous les sites pollués par Abitibi. L'humeur de l'organisme de réglementation qui ordonne la décontamination, qu'il soit ou non désintéressé, n'a aucune incidence sur la probabilité que la province entreprenne elle-même un projet d'une telle ampleur. Des choix s'offrent à la province. Elle pourrait certes choisir d'exécuter les travaux. Ou elle pourrait attendre le résultat de la restructuration d'Abitibi et lui demander d'exécuter les travaux d'assainissement une fois qu'elle aura repris ses activités. Elle pourrait même choisir de laisser les sites contaminés. Rien au dossier n'indique que le premier choix est plus susceptible d'être retenu que les autres, et encore moins qui établisse qu'il est « suffisamment certain » que la province exécutera elle-même la décontamination, convertissant ainsi l'opération en une créance.

[97] Je suis d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi et de déclarer que les obligations de décontaminer les sites qui incombent à Abitibi aux termes des ordonnances EPA ne constituent pas des réclamations pouvant faire l'objet d'une transaction aux termes de la LACC, à l'exception des travaux exécutés sur le site de Buchans ou à l'égard desquels des appels d'offres ont été lancés.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

The following are the reasons delivered by

[98] LeBel J. (dissenting) — I have read the reasons of the Chief Justice and Deschamps J. They agree that a court overseeing a proposed arrangement under the Companies' Creditors Arrangement Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-36 ("CCAA"), cannot relieve debtors of their regulatory obligations. The only regulatory orders that can be subject to compromise are those which are monetary in nature. My colleagues also accept that contingent environmental claims can be liquidated and compromised if it is established that the regulatory body would remediate the environmental contamination itself, and hence turn the regulatory order into a monetary claim.

[99] At this point, my colleagues disagree on the proper evidentiary test with respect to whether the government would remediate the contamination. In the Chief Justice's opinion, the evidence must show that there is a "likelihood approaching certainty" that the province would remediate the contamination itself (para. 86). In my respectful opinion, this is not the established test for determining where and how a contingent claim can be liquidated in bankruptcy and insolvency law. The test of "sufficient certainty" described by Deschamps J., which does not look very different from the general civil standard of probability, better reflects how both the common law and the civil law view and deal with contingent claims. On the basis of the test Deschamps J. proposes, I must agree with the Chief Justice and would allow the appeal.

[100] First, no matter how I read the CCAA court's judgment (2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1), I find no support for a conclusion that it is consistent with the principle that the CCAA does not apply to purely regulatory obligations, or that the court had evidence that would satisfy the test of "sufficient certainty" that the province of Newfoundland and

Version française des motifs rendus par

[98] Le juge LeBel (dissident) — J'ai pris connaissance des motifs de la Juge en chef et de la juge Deschamps. Elles s'entendent pour affirmer qu'un tribunal qui supervise un arrangement proposé aux termes de la Loi sur les arrangements avec les créanciers des compagnies, L.R.C. 1985, ch. C-36 (« LACC »), ne peut soustraire les débiteurs aux exigences réglementaires qui leurs sont imposées. Seules peuvent faire l'objet d'une transaction les ordonnances réglementaires de nature pécuniaire. Mes collègues reconnaissent également que les réclamations environnementales éventuelles peuvent être liquidées ou faire l'objet d'une transaction s'il est établi que l'organisme administratif se chargerait de la décontamination, transformant ainsi l'ordonnance réglementaire en une réclamation pécuniaire.

[99] Sur ce, mes collègues diffèrent d'opinion quant au critère de preuve applicable pour déterminer si le gouvernement entend effectuer la décontamination. De l'avis de la Juge en chef, la preuve doit démontrer une « probabilité proche de la certitude » que la province se chargerait de la décontamination (par. 86). À mon humble avis, il ne s'agit pas du critère établi pour déterminer si, et de quelle façon, une réclamation éventuelle peut être liquidée en droit de la faillite et de l'insolvabilité. Le critère de ce qui est « suffisamment certain » qu'énonce la juge Deschamps ne semble pas différer beaucoup de la norme générale de probabilité en matière civile et reflète mieux la façon dont la common law et le droit civil envisagent et traitent les réclamations éventuelles. Cependant, en appliquant le critère que propose la juge Deschamps, je dois souscrire aux motifs de la Juge en chef et je suis d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi.

[100] Tout d'abord, sans égard à la façon d'envisager le jugement du tribunal chargé d'appliquer la LACC (2010 QCCS 1261, 68 C.B.R. (5th) 1), rien à mon sens ne permet de conclure qu'il soit conforme au principe selon lequel la LACC ne s'applique pas aux exigences purement réglementaires, ou que la preuve faite devant le tribunal respecterait le critère

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

Labrador ("Province") would perform the remedial work itself.

[101] In my view, the CCAA court was concerned that the arrangement would fail if the Abitibi respondents ("Abitibi") were not released from their regulatory obligations in respect of pollution. The CCAA court wanted to eliminate the uncertainty that would have clouded the reorganized corporations' future. Moreover, its decision appears to have been driven by an opinion that the Province had acted in bad faith in its dealings with Abitibi both during and after the termination of its operations in the Province. I agree with the Chief Justice that there is no evidence that the Province intends to perform the remedial work itself. In the absence of any other evidence, an offhand comment made in the legislature by a member of the government hardly satisfies the "sufficient certainty" test. Even if the evidentiary test proposed by my colleague Deschamps J. is applied, this Court can legitimately disregard the CCAA court's finding as the Chief Justice proposes, since it did not rest on a sufficient factual foundation.

[102] For these reasons, I would concur with the disposition proposed by the Chief Justice.

Appeal dismissed with costs, McLachlin C.J. and LeBel J. dissenting.

Solicitors for the appellant: WeirFoulds, Toronto; Attorney General of Newfoundland and Labrador, St. John's.

Solicitors for the respondents AbitibiBowater Inc., Abitibi-Consolidated Inc. and Bowater Canadian Holdings Inc.: Stikeman Elliott, Toronto.

Solicitors for the respondent the Ad Hoc Committee of Bondholders: Goodmans, Toronto.

Solicitors for the respondents the Ad Hoc Committee of Senior Secured Noteholders and the U.S. Bank National Association (Indenture Trustee voulant qu'il soit « suffisamment certain » que la province de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador (« province ») exécuterait elle-même les travaux de décontamination.

[101] À mon avis, le tribunal de première instance craignait un échec de l'arrangement si les sociétés du groupe Abitibi intimées (« Abitibi ») ne pouvaient se libérer des exigences réglementaires relatives à la pollution. Le tribunal voulait écarter l'incertitude qui aurait assombri l'avenir de ces sociétés après leur réorganisation. De plus, sa décision semble motivée par l'opinion suivant laquelle la province avait traité de mauvaise foi avec Abitibi dès que cette dernière eût cessé ses activités dans cette province. Je suis d'accord avec la Juge en chef pour conclure qu'aucune preuve ne confirme l'intention de la province d'exécuter elle-même les travaux de décontamination. En l'absence de tout autre élément de preuve, une remarque faite en passant par un ministre devant l'assemblée législative peut difficilement satisfaire au critère de ce qui est « suffisamment certain ». Même si l'on applique le critère de preuve que propose ma collègue la juge Deschamps, notre Cour peut légitimement écarter les conclusions du tribunal de première instance comme le propose la Juge en chef car elles ne reposent sur aucun fondement factuel suffisant.

[102] Pour ces motifs, je suis d'avis de souscrire au dispositif que propose la Juge en chef.

Pourvoi rejeté avec dépens, la juge en chef McLachlin et le juge LeBel sont dissidents.

Procureurs de l'appelante : WeirFoulds, Toronto; procureur général de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador, St. John's.

Procureurs des intimées AbitibiBowater Inc., Abitibi-Consolidated Inc. et Bowater Canadian Holdings Inc. : Stikeman Elliott, Toronto.

Procureurs de l'intimé le comité ad hoc des créanciers obligataires : Goodmans, Toronto.

Procureurs des intimés le comité ad hoc des porteurs de billets garantis de premier rang et U.S. Bank National Association (fiduciaire for the Senior Secured Noteholders): Borden Ladner Gervais, Toronto.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Canada: Attorney General of Canada, Ottawa.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Ontario: Attorney General of Ontario, Toronto.

Solicitor for the interveners the Attorney General of British Columbia and Her Majesty The Queen in Right of British Columbia: Attorney General of British Columbia, Victoria.

Solicitor for the intervener the Attorney General of Alberta: Attorney General of Alberta, Edmonton.

Solicitors for the intervener Ernst & Young Inc., as Monitor: Thornton Grout Finnigan, Toronto.

Solicitors for the intervener the Friends of the Earth Canada: Ecojustice, University of Ottawa, Ottawa; Fasken Martineau DuMoulin, Toronto.

désigné par l'acte constitutif pour les porteurs de billets garantis de premier rang) : Borden Ladner Gervais, Toronto.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général du Canada : Procureur général du Canada, Ottawa.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Ontario : Procureur général de l'Ontario, Toronto.

Procureur des intervenants le procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique et Sa Majesté la Reine du chef de la Colombie-Britannique : Procureur général de la Colombie-Britannique, Victoria.

Procureur de l'intervenant le procureur général de l'Alberta : Procureur général de l'Alberta, Edmonton.

Procureurs de l'intervenante Ernst & Young Inc., en sa qualité de contrôleur : Thornton Grout Finnigan, Toronto.

Procureurs de l'intervenante Les Ami(e)s de la Terre Canada : Ecojustice, Université d'Ottawa, Ottawa; Fasken Martineau DuMoulin, Toronto.

2012 SCC 67 (CanLII)

National Bank of Canada v. Merit Energy Ltd., 2001 ABQB 583

Date: 20010703
Action No. 0001-04994
Bankruptcy No. 073154

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

IN THE COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH OF ALBERTA JUDICIAL DISTRICT OF CALGARY

BETWEEN:

NATIONAL BANK OF CANADA, BANK ONE, NA AND BANK ONE, CANADA

Plaintiffs

- and -

MERIT ENERGY LTD.

Defendant

- and -

IN THE MATTER OF THE BANKRUPTCY OF MERIT ENERGY LTD.

[Note: An Erratum has been filed on July 5, 2001; the correction has been made to the text and the Erratum is appended to this Judgment.]

[Note: An Erratum has been filed on July 9, 2001; the correction has been made to the text and the Erratum is appended to this Judgment.]

REASONS FOR JUDGMENT
of the
HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE SAL J. LoVECCHIO

APPEARANCES:

Frank Dearlove and Chris Simard, Bennett Jones, LLP for Arthur Andersen Inc.

William E. McNally, McNally and Cuming; David A. Klein, Klein Lyons for Larry Delf, Representative Flow-Through Shareholder

Jim G. Shea, Shea Nerland Calnan for the Flow-Through Shareholders who are not members of the Representative Class

Norman D. Anderson agent for Magellan Aerospace Limited and Canada Dominion Resources Limited Partnership III

Matthew R. Lindsay and Phil J. Schreiber, Fraser Milner Casgrain for the Underwriters except First Energy Capital Corporation

Tristram Mallet, Osler,Hoskin & Harcourt for First Energy Capital Corporation

Douglas G. Stokes, Rooney Prentice for certain Directors

D. Detomasi, Scott Hall
for Barry Stobo

Jeff Sharpe, Burnett Duckworth & Palmer for Duncan Chisholm and Laurence Waller

Graham McLennan, McLennan Ross
for PriceWaterhouseCoopers LLP

Steven H. Leitl, Macleod Dixon for National Bank of Canada, Bank One, NA and Bank One, Canada

INTRODUCTION

[1] On August 31, 2000, applications were brought by Dundee Securities Corporation, Peters & Co. Limited, Nesbitt Burns Inc., Newcrest Capital Inc., RBC Dominion Securities, Bunting Warburg Dillon Read Inc., First Energy Capital Corporation (being the underwriters in the flow-through common share offering of Merit Energy Ltd., described below), certain directors and officers of Merit Energy Ltd. and Larry Delf, a representative purchaser of flow-through common shares in Merit, to determine whether these applicants were entitled to a priority in the nature of an equitable lien over the proceeds of the sale of Merit's assets.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

[2] I dismissed the equitable lien applications. The Underwriters, except First Energy Capital Corporation, appealed that decision.

[3] Needless to say, the applicants wanted to be recognized as ordinary creditors of Merit in the event they did not have an equitable lien.

[4] Pending the hearing of the equitable lien appeal, the administration of the estate of Merit continued. As a result of my dismissal of the equitable lien claim, the Trustee anticipated that a fund of approximately $10 million would be available for distribution to unsecured creditors.

[5] Accordingly, the Trustee sought a determination as to the right of the Flow-Through Shareholders, the Underwriters and the Directors and Officers to be recognized as ordinary creditors of Merit and to be included in the distribution.

[6] I heard argument on that issue on April 30, 2001 but reserved my decision until the results of the appeal were known. On May 18, 2001, the appeal was heard and dismissed[1], so it is now appropriate to make the requested determination.

[7] The Trustee takes the position that the claims in issue are in substance claims by shareholders for the return of equity and, on the basis of the decision in Re: Blue Range Resource Corp.[2], must rank behind the claims of Merit's unsecured creditors.

[8] Alternatively, the Trustee argues that their claims are too contingent to constitute provable claims under the Bankruptcy and Insolvency Act. [3]

[9] The Flow-Through Shareholders, the Underwriters and the Directors and Officers[4] submitted that their claims were in substance creditor claims and that they were not too contingent, thus qualifying them to rank as unsecured creditors in Merit's insolvency. If that position is sustained, the quantification of those claims will be a separate issue.

---

[1] Reasons followed the dismissal from the bench 2001 ABCA 138.

[2] (2000), 15 C.B.R.(4th) 169 (Alta. Q.B.).

[3] R.S.C.1985, c.B-3

[4] PriceWaterhouseCoopers LLP, Merit's auditor at the material times, was not involved in previous applications but made similar submissions to the Underwriters, Directors and Officers. PriceWaterhouseCoopers' position will be addressed separately in these reasons.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

BACKGROUND

[10] Merit was in the business of the exploration, development and production of natural gas and crude oil in Alberta and Saskatchewan.

[11] On July 15, 1999, the Underwriters entered into an underwriting agreement with Merit whereby they agreed to participate in a public offering of 2,222,222 Flow-Through Shares of Merit. Paragraph 16 of the Underwriting Agreement states in part:

> The Corporation shall indemnify and save each of the Indemnified Persons harmless against and from all liabilities, claims, demands, losses, (other than losses of profit in connection with the distribution of common shares), costs, damages and expenses to which any of the Indemnified Persons may be subject or which any of the Indemnified Persons may suffer or incur, whether under the provisions of any statute or otherwise, in any way caused by, or arising directly or indirectly from or in consequence of:
>
> (a) any information or statement contained in the Public Record (other than any information or statement relating solely to one or more of the Underwriters and furnished to the Corporation by the Underwriters for inclusion in the Public Record) which is or is alleged to be untrue or any omission or alleged omission to provide any information or state any fact the omission of which makes or is alleged to make any such information or statement untrue or misleading in light of all the circumstances in which it was made;
>
> (b) any misrepresentation or alleged misrepresentation (except a misrepresentation or alleged misrepresentation which is based upon information relating solely to one or more of the Underwriters and furnished to the Corporation by the Underwriters for inclusion in the Public Record) in the Public Record.

[12] The Underwriting Agreement provides in Paragraph 2 (entitled "Corporation's Covenants as to Qualification") that:

> [Merit] agrees:
>
> (a) prior to the filing of the Preliminary Prospectus and thereafter and prior to the filing of the Prospectus, to allow the Underwriters to participate fully in the preparation of the Preliminary Prospectus (excluding the documents incorporated therein by reference) and such other documents as may be required under the Applicable Securities Laws in the Filing Jurisdictions to qualify the distribution of the Common Shares in the Filing Jurisdictions and allow the Underwriters to conduct all due diligence which the Underwriters may reasonably require (including with respect to the documents incorporated therein by reference) in order to (i) confirm the Public Record is accurate and current in all material respects; (ii) fulfill the Underwriters' obligations as agents and underwriters; and

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

(iii) enable the Underwriters to responsibly execute the certificate in the Preliminary Prospectus or the Prospectus required to be executed by the Underwriters;

(b) the Corporation shall, not later than on July 19, 1999, have prepared and filed the Preliminary Prospectus...with the Securities Commissions...

(c) the Corporation shall prepare and file the Prospectus...as soon as possible and in any event not later than 4:30 p.m. (Calgary time) on August 3, 1999...

...

(e) that, during the period commencing with the date hereof and ending on the conclusion of the distribution of the Common Shares, the Preliminary Prospectus and the Prospectus will fully comply with the requirements of Applicable Securities Laws of the Filing Jurisdictions and, together with all information incorporated therein by reference, will provide full, true and plain disclosure of all material facts relating to the Corporation and the Common Shares and will not contain any misrepresentation; provided that the Corporation does not covenant with respect to information or statements contained in such documents relating solely to one or more of the Underwriters and furnished to the Corporation by one or more of the Underwriters for inclusion in such documents or omissions from such documents relating solely to one or more of the Underwriters and the foregoing covenant shall not be considered to be contravened as a consequence of any material change occurring after the date hereof or the occurrence of any event or state of facts after the date hereof if, in each such case, the Corporation complies with subparagraphs 3(a), (b), (c) and (d).

[13] In accordance with its covenant, Merit filed a Preliminary Prospectus and a Prospectus to qualify the shares for issue and ultimately the offering closed on August 17, 1999, at which time 2, 222, 222 Flow-Through Shares of Merit were issued.

[14] The Prospectus indicated that:

The gross proceeds of this Offering will be used to incur CEE in connection with the Corporation's ongoing oil and natural gas exploration activities. The Underwriters' fee and the expenses of this Offering will be paid from Merit's general funds...

The Flow-through Common Shares will be issued as 'Flow-through Shares' under the Act. The Corporation will incur on or before December 31, 2000, and renounce to each purchaser of Flow-through Common Shares, effective on or before December 31, 1999, CEE in an amount equal to the aggregate purchase price equal to the aggregate purchase price paid by such purchaser.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

> Subscriptions for Flow-through Common Shares will be made pursuant to one or more subscription agreements ('Subscription Agreements') to made between the Corporation and one or more of the Underwriters or one or more sub-agents of the Underwriters , as agent for, on behalf of and in the name of the purchasers of Flow-through Common Shares...

[15] The Prospectus also indicated that:

> ... Pursuant to the Subscription Agreements, the Corporation will covenant and agree (i) to incur on or before December 31, 2000 and renounce to the purchaser, effective on or before December 31, 1999, CEE in an amount equal to the aggregate purchase price paid by such purchaser for the Flow-Through Common Shares and (ii) that if the Corporation does not renounce to such purchaser, effective on or before December 31, 1999, CEE equal to such amount, or if there is a reduction in such amount renounced pursuant to the provision of the Act and as the sole recourse of the purchaser for such failure or reduction, the Corporation shall indemnify the purchaser as to, and pay in settlement thereof to the purchaser, an amount equal to the amount of any tax payable or that may become payable under the Act...by the purchaser as a consequence of such failure or reduction...
>
> In respect of CEE renounced effective on December 31, 1999, and not incurred prior to the end of the period commencing on the date that the Subscription Agreement is entered into and ending on February 29, 2000, the Corporation will be required to pay an amount equivalent to interest to the Government of Canada. Any amount of CEE renounced on December 31, 1999 and not incurred by December 31, 2000 will result in a reassessment of deductible CEE to subscribers. However, interest in respect of additional tax payable under the Act by a purchaser of Flow-Through Common Shares will generally not be levied in respect of such reassessment until after April 30, 2001.

[16] The Underwriters each entered into Subscription and Renunciation Agreements with Merit for the purchase of the Flow-Through Shares, containing the covenants described in paragraph 15 above.

[17] Merit did not incur CEE as anticipated and in fact only approximately $4 million (of the anticipated $15 million of CEE) was renounced to the Flow-Through Shareholders prior to Merit being placed in receivership, leaving an $11 million shortfall. As a result, those Flow-Through Shareholders, who anticipated tax deductions based on $15 million of CEE, were potentially faced with a tax problem.

[18] The Directors and Officers entered into indemnity agreements with Merit, which state in part that:

> To the full extent allowed by law, [Merit]...agrees to indemnify and save harmless the Indemnified Party, his heirs, successors and legal representatives from and against any > and all damages, liabilities, costs, charges or expenses suffered or incurred by the Indemnified Party, his heirs, successors or legal representatives as a result of or by reason of the Indemnified Party being or having been a director and/or officer of [Merit] or by reason of any action taken by the Indemnified Party in his capacity as a director and/or officer of [Merit], including without limitation, any liability for unpaid employee wages, provided that such damages, liabilities, costs, charges or expenses were not suffered or incurred as a direct result of the Indemnified Party's own fraud, dishonesty or wilful default.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

[19] Merit, the Underwriters and the Directors and Officers have been named as defendants in several actions commenced throughout Canada by or on behalf of the Flow-Through Shareholders. These actions allege that Merit, the Underwriters, the Directors and Officers and PriceWaterhouseCoopers are liable to the Plaintiffs because of misrepresentations made in the Prospectus. The Plaintiffs seek, inter alia, damages against all defendants, recission of their purchase of the Flow-Through Shares and damages for lost tax benefits associated with the Flow-Through Shares. The Underwriters have third-partied Merit and the Directors and Officers. As noted, the Underwriters and the Directors and Officers previously sought recognition as equitable lien holders (which was denied) and now they seek recognition as ordinary creditors.

[20] PriceWaterhouseCoopers was at all material times the auditor of Merit. As PriceWaterhouseCoopers had not yet filed a proof of claim at the time the Trustee filed its motion, the Trustee's materials did not address its claim as part of its application. However, the Trustee did not object to PriceWaterhouseCoopers participating in this application.

[21] PriceWaterhouseCoopers is in a similar position as the Underwriters and the Directors and Officers as it too has an indemnity from Merit and has also been sued by the Flow-Through Shareholders for misrepresentation. Its indemnity states that:

> Merit Energy Ltd. hereby indemnifies PriceWaterhouseCoopers LLP ("PriceWaterhouseCoopers")...and holds them harmless from all claims, liabilities, losses, and costs arising in circumstances where there has been a knowing misrepresentation by a member of Merit Energy Ltd.'s management, regardless of whether such a person was acting in Merit Energy Ltd.'s interest. This indemnification will survive termination of this engagement letter. This release and indemnification will not operate where PriceWaterhouseCoopers ought to have uncovered such knowing misrepresentation but failed to, due the gross negligence or willful misconduct of PriceWaterhouseCoopers, its partners and/or employees.

ISSUES

1. Are the claims of the Flow-Through Shareholders subordinate to the claims of Merit's unsecured creditors?

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

2. Are the claims of the Underwriters, the Directors and Officers and PriceWaterhouseCoopers subordinate to the claims of Merit's unsecured creditors?

DECISION - ISSUE 1

The claims of the Flow-Through Shareholders are subordinate to the claims of Merit's unsecured creditors as they are in substance shareholder claims for the return of an equity investment.

ANALYSIS

[22] Central to this application are the reasons of my sister Romaine J. in Re: Blue Range Resource Corp.

[23] In that case, Big Bear Exploration Ltd. completed a hostile takeover for all of the shares of Blue Range Resource Corporation. After the takeover was completed, Big Bear alleged that the publicly disclosed information upon which it had relied in purchasing the Blue Range shares was misleading and that the shares were worthless. As sole shareholder, Big Bear authorized Blue Range to commence CCAA proceedings and then submitted a claim as an unsecured creditor in Blue Range's CCCA proceedings, based on the damages it alleged it had suffered as a result of Blue Range's misrepresentations.

[24] Romaine J. rejected Big Bear's attempt to prove as an unsecured creditor and held that Big Bear's claim was "in substance" a shareholder claim for a return of an equity investment and therefore ranked after the claims of unsecured creditors according to the general principles of corporate law, insolvency law and equity.

[25] Romaine J. stated at pp. 176-177:

> In this case, the true nature of Big Bear's claim is more difficult to characterize. There may well be scenarios where the fact that a party with a claim in tort or debt is a shareholder is coincidental or incidental, such as where a shareholder is also a regular trade creditor of a corporation, or slips and falls outside the corporate office and thus has a claim in negligence against the corporation. In the current situation, however, the very core of the claim is the acquisition of Blue Range shares by Big Bear and whether the consideration paid for such shares was based on misrepresentation. Big Bear had no cause of action until it acquired shares of Blue Range, which it did through share purchases for cash prior to becoming a majority shareholder, as it suffered no damage until it acquired such shares. This tort claim derives from Big Bear's status as shareholder, and not from a tort unrelated to that status. The claim for misrepresentation therefore is hybrid in nature and combines elements of both a claim in tort and a claim as shareholder. It must be determined what character it has in substance.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

> It is true that Big Bear does not claim recission. Therefore, this is not a claim for return of capital in the direct sense. What is being claimed, however, is an award of damages measured as the difference between the "true" value of Blue Range shares and their "misrepresented" value - in other words, money back from what Big Bear "paid" by way of consideration...A tort award to Big Bear could only represent a return of what Big Bear invested in equity of Blue Range. It is that kind of return that is limited by the basic common law principle that shareholders rank after creditors in respect of any return on their equity investment. ...
>
> I find that the alleged share exchange loss derives from and is inextricably intertwined with Big Bear's shareholder interest in Blue Range. The nature of the claim is in substance a claim by a shareholder for a return of what it invested qua shareholder, rather than an ordinary tort claim.

[26] Romaine J. went on at pp. 177-184 to describe five policy reasons which justified the conclusion that shareholders' claims such as Big Bear's should be ranked behind the claims of Blue Range's unsecured creditors. In summary, they are:

> (i) the claims of shareholders rank behind the claims of creditors in insolvency;
>
> (ii) creditors do business on the assumption that they will rank ahead of shareholders in the event of their debtor's insolvency;
>
> (iii) shareholders are not entitled to rescind their shares on the basis of misrepresentation after the company has become insolvent;
>
> (iv) United States jurisprudence supports the priority of creditors in "stockholder fraud" cases; and
>
> (v) to allow the shareholders to rank pari passu with the unsecured creditors could open the floodgates to aggrieved shareholders launching misrepresentation actions.

[27] Re Canada Deposit Insurance* v. *Canadian Commercial Bank [5] is also central to this application. That case involved an issue of priorities with respect to the insolvency of the Canadian Commercial Bank. In an effort to preserve the bank, a participation agreement was entered into among the governments of Canada and Alberta, the Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation and six commercial banks. The sum of $255 million was advanced and it was to be repaid by CCB out of certain portfolio assets and pre-tax income. The agreement promised an indemnity in the event of insolvency, and gave the participants a right to subscribe for shares in CCB at a named price.

---

[5] (1992), 97 D.L.R. (4th) 385 (S.C.C)

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

[28] The Supreme Court of Canada held that although the participation agreement contained both debt and equity features, it was, in substance, a debt transaction. Iacobucci J. stated at p. 406:

> As I see it, the fact that the transaction contains both debt and equity features does not, in itself, pose an insurmountable obstacle to characterizing the advance of $255 million. Instead of trying to pigeon-hole the entire agreement between the Participants and C.C.B. in one of two categories, I see nothing wrong in recognizing the arrangement for what it is, namely, one of a hybrid nature, combining elements of both debt and equity but which, in substance, reflects a creditor-debtor relationship. Financial and capital markets have been most creative in the variety of investments and securities that have been fashioned to meet the needs and interests of those who participate in those markets. It is not because an agreement has certain equity features that a court must either ignore those features as if they did not exist or characterize the transaction on the whole as an investment. There is an alternative. It is permissible, and often required, or desirable, for debt and equity to coexist in the given financial transaction without altering the substance of the agreement. Furthermore, it does not follow that each and every aspect of such an agreement must be given the exact same weight when addressing a characterization issue. Again, it is not because there are equity features that it is necessarily an investment in capital. This is particularly true when, as here, the equity features are nothing more than supplementary to and not definitive of the essence of the transaction. When a court is searching for the substance of a particular transaction, it should not too easily be distracted by aspects which are, in reality, only incidental or secondary in nature to the main thrust of the agreement. [emphasis added]

[29] As noted, the Flow-Through Shareholders have commenced several actions. Against Merit, they seek recission or damages due to an alleged misrepresentation in the Prospectus (based on their statutory rights to these remedies as disclosed in the Prospectus). They also claim damages relating to lost tax benefits associated with the Flow-Through Shares. While this is a contractual remedy based on the Subscription and Renunciation Agreements, it also has elements of misrepresentation flowing from certain descriptive statements made in the Prospectus.

[30] The Flow-Through Shareholders submitted that they are entitled to be treated as creditors based on the actions they have commenced, but the Trustee objects to this treatment and has sought the direction of the Court in this regard.

i. The Trustee's Position

[31] The Trustee (through counsel) focussed on the allegations made in the statements of claim in its analysis. It suggested that the essential allegation of the Flow-Through Shareholders in their actions is misrepresentation and that as a result of such misrepresentation they have suffered damages. The Trustee then described the remedy sought as, in essence, a claim for a return of equity. The Trustee suggested that the claim for the anticipated tax benefits was no more than a claim for a benefit that was ancillary to their shareholding interest. The Trustee also described the Flow-Through Shareholders' application to prove as unsecured creditors as an attempt to take a "second kick at the can", following the failure of their equity investment.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

[32] Using the reasoning of Romaine J. in Re: Blue Range Resource Corp, the Trustee argued that the claim of the Flow-Through Shareholders must be subordinated to Merit's unsecured creditors. The Trustee submitted that all five policy reasons listed in that case (and described above) are present in this case, emphasizing that the dividend will be reduced 20 to 27% (from 15 to 11-12 cents) if the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims are included in the unsecured creditors' pool and that the facts in this case favour subordination even more than the facts in Re: Blue Range Resource Corp., as some of the Flow-Through Shareholders are seeking to rescind their purchase of the Flow-Through Shares in their actions.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

ii. The Flow-Through Shareholders' Position

[33] Arguments were filed separately by Mr. McNally, as Counsel for Larry Delf (Mr. Delf being the designate of the Representative Flow-Through Shareholders group), and by Mr. Shea as Counsel for certain other Flow-Through Shareholders.

The Representative Flow-Through Shareholders Group's Position

[34] Mr. McNally did not take issue with the suggestion that as a general rule, shareholders rank after secured creditors. He also did not object to the reasoning of Romaine J. in Re: Blue Range Resource Corp., provided the case is limited to its context and not used to stand for the general proposition that in no circumstances may a shareholder ever have a claim provable in bankruptcy.

[35] Mr. McNally did object to the Trustee's characterization of the claim as a single claim for misrepresentation seeking damages equal to their purchase price for the shares. He suggested that the claims involved firstly, a right to damages or recission qua shareholder under securities legislation and secondly, a right to damages for breach of an indemnity provision qua debt holder. He also submitted that this latter claim may also be seen as having nothing to do with misrepresentation in the Prospectus or a return of capital, but arises independently as a result of Merit's failure to incur and then renounce CEE to the shareholders to enable them to obtain certain tax deductions.

[36] Mr. McNally suggested that this latter claim for tax losses was also a claim provable in bankruptcy. He referenced Laskin J.A.'s recognition in Re Central Capital Corporation [6] that shareholders may participate as creditors in the context of declared dividends because the liquidity provisions of corporate legislation would not have been triggered if the dividends had been declared prior to insolvency and would therefore be enforceable debts. Laskin J.A. stated at p.536:

[6] (1996), 27 O.R. (3d) 494 (C.A.)

> It seems to me that these appellants must either be shareholders or creditors. Except for declared dividends, they cannot be both... Moreover, as Justice Finlayson points out in his reasons, courts have always accepted the proposition that when a dividend is declared it is a debt on which each shareholder can sue the corporation.

[37] Mr. McNally also relied on Re G.M.D. Vending Co. [7] where the British Columbia Court of Appeal allowed declared but unpaid dividends to rank with other unsecured claims in a bankruptcy.

[38] He also emphasized that the CEE aspect of the relationship between the Flow-Through Shareholders, on the one hand, and Merit, the Underwriters and the Directors and Officers, on the other, possesses many of the indicia of debt mentioned by Weiler J.A. in Re Central Capital Corporation in that: (1) Merit is obliged to expend the funds raised by the Prospectus on CEE and the funds are advanced by Flow-Through Shareholders for this specific purpose alone, (2) there is an indemnity provision in the Prospectus itself to the Flow-Through Shareholders if this does not occur, evidencing an intention that the investors are to be fully repaid for the loss of the tax benefit,[8] and (3) interest becomes due for the amount of the failed tax write-off and is covered by the indemnity provision as tax payable.

[39] He suggested that the indemnity provisions in the Subscription and Renunciation Agreements are enforceable at law without consideration of corporate liquidity and are an acknowledgment of the unique commercial position of the Flow-Through Shareholders in the event that the CEE is not renounced. He concluded by submitting that the potential liquidity problem and contingent liability must constitute the rationale for the presence of the indemnity in the Subscription and Renunciation Agreements in the first place.

The Other Flow-Through Shareholders Group's Position

[40] Mr. Shea suggested that not only were the claims for tax losses relating to the CEE provable claims, the tort/statutory aspects of their claims were also provable claims, albeit they

---

[7] (1994), 94 B.C.L.R. (2d) 130 (B.C.C.A.)

[8] See Ontario Securities Commission* v. *Consortium Construction Inc. (1993), 1 C.C.L.S. 117 at 138-139.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

would be dealt with as "contingent" claims within the meaning of ss. 121 and 135 of the BIA[9]. He further submitted that the fact they are claims by shareholders is irrelevant.

[41] He relied on Gardner* v. Newton [10] as authority for the proposition that a contingent claim is a claim that may or may not ripen into a debt depending on the occurrence of some future event. Mr. Shea also suggested that so long as the claim is not too remote or speculative, a claim, even though it has not yet been reduced to judgment, may still be a contingent claim. Mr. Shea pointed out that the Ontario Court of Appeal in Re Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. [11] departed from the earlier cases relied upon by the Trustee, including Claude Resources (Trustee of) v. *Dutton [12]. The Court of Appeal stated they imposed too high of a threshold for the

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

---

[9] 121(1) All debts and liabilities, present or future, to which the bankrupt is subject on the day on which the bankrupt becomes bankrupt or to which the bankrupt may become subject before the bankrupt's discharge ...shall be deemed to be claims provable in proceedings under this Act.(2) The determination whether a contingent or unliquidated claim is a provable claim and the valuation of such a claim shall be made in accordance with section 135.

135(1.1) The trustee shall determine whether any contingent or unliquidated claim is a provable claim, and, if a provable claim, the trustee shall value it, and the claim is thereafter, subject to this section, deemed a proved claim to the amount of its valuation.

[10] (1916), 29 D.L.R.276 (Man.K.B.)

[11] (1997), 43 C.B.R. (3d) 8.

[12] (1993), 22 C.B.R. (3d) 56 (Sask.Q.B.), referred to favourably by Farley J. in Canadian Triton International Ltd. (Re) (1997), 49 C.B.R. (3d) 192 (Ont. Gen. Div.) and follow establishment of a contingent claim and held that it was not necessary to demonstrate probability of liability but merely to show they were not too remote or speculative.

[42] He asserted that the claims are not shareholder claims, but claims for statutory remedies and for breach of contract and must rank with Merit's other unsecured creditors for that reason. Mr. Shea also said the Court must look to the substance of the relationship between the claimant and the bankrupt and most importantly, the context in which the claim is made.

[43] Mr. Shea then argued that it would not be equitable to subordinate these claims while other claims based on tort, breach of contract or statutory remedy are allowed to rank as unsecured claims and concluded that the traditional principles for subordinating claims by shareholders do not apply to this case.

[44] He suggested that allowing claims for statutory remedies and/or breach of contract based on misrepresentation to rank as unsecured claims will not affect how creditors do business with companies. Further, he argued that allowing this result will not "open the floodgates" as the statutory remedies involved are narrow in scope and have strict and relatively short time frames.

iii. The Underwriters' Position

[45] Firstly, the Underwriters supported the Flow-Through Shareholders' submissions regarding the nature of their claims. They emphasized that Re: Blue Range Resource Corp should not stand for the proposition that shareholders must always be subordinated to unsecured creditors simply because they are shareholders. Rather, the nature and substance of their claims determines the treatment they receive in the estate.

[46] The Underwriters also suggested that Re: Blue Range Resource Corp turned on its unique facts of a purchaser of Blue Range shares having knowledge of misrepresentations yet exercising shareholder rights, such as authorizing the company to take CCAA proceedings and then making an unsecured claim in those proceedings for the loss associated with its share purchase. The shareholder in that case did not claim recission and did not deny or attempt to ed in Re Wiebe (1995), 30 C.B.R. (3d) 109 (Ont. Gen. Div.)

---

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

avoid its shareholder status. Moreover, there was no contractual right to be treated by the company as anything but a shareholder.

[47] The Underwriters distinguished the claims of the Flow-Through Shareholders from those of Big Bear in Re: Blue Range Resource Corp as follows: (1) the Flow-Through Shareholders are not pursuing tort claims based on their status as shareholders, but rather are asserting a statutory right of recission, thereby refuting their status as shareholders, (2) the Flow-Through Shareholders also allege a direct contractual claim for indemnity against Merit pursuant to Subscription and Renunciation Agreements in which Merit agreed to incur qualifying expenditures (CEE), to renounce the resulting tax benefits to them and to indemnify them if it failed to incur the CEE, and (3) if their claims are ultimately successful, the Flow-Through Shareholders will be former shareholders and current creditors of Merit.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

Resolution- ISSUE 1

[48] I agree with Romaine J. that the correct approach is to first examine the substance of the claim made against the insolvent. There are the two claims mentioned by counsel for the Flow-Through Shareholders. The first is an alternate remedy for damages or recission based on the alleged misrepresentations contained in the Prospectus. I was advised that some have advanced only one of these alternative claims. The second is cast as a claim in damages under the indemnity in the Subscription and Renunciation Agreements for the failure to renounce CEE.

[49] The Flow-Through Shareholders' claims for recission or damages based on misrepresentation derive from their status as Merit shareholders. Regardless of how they are framed[13], the form the actions take cannot overcome the substance of what is being claimed. It is plain from the Prospectus and the Subscription and Renunciation Agreements that the Flow-Through Shareholders invested in equity. It is equally plain from their actions that what they seek to recoup, in substance, is their investments. As in Re: Blue Range Resource Corp, the "very core" of these claims arises from the circumstances surrounding the acquisition of Merit shares. The Flow-Through Shareholders had no cause of action until they acquired the Flow-Through Shares and their claims include a direct claim for return of capital in their request for recission and in the case of a damage claim, just as in Re: Blue Range Resource Corp, the measure of damages enables them to recover the purchase price of the shares.

[50] It is true these shareholders are using statutory provisions to make their claims in damages or recission rather than the tort basis used in Re: Blue Range Resource Corp, but in substance they remain shareholder claims for the return of an equity investment. The right to a return of this equity investment must be limited by the basic common law principle that shareholders rank after creditors in respect of any return of their equity investment.

[51] Now what about the second aspect of the claims?

---

[13] Counsel described the claims variously as "statutory", "statutory/tort and "contractual"

[52] The second claim of the Flow-Through Shareholders has some of the features of a debt and the Subscription and Renunciation Agreements provide for a specific remedy in the event Merit fails to comply with its undertaking to make and renounce the CEE expenditures .

[53] While the discussion in Re Central Capital Corporation regarding the claim for declared dividends is appealing, it does not precisely apply in these circumstances. The tax advantages associated with flow-through shares is reflected in a premium paid for the purchase of the shares[14]. In essence, what happens in a flow- through share offering (as sanctioned by the Income Tax Act[15]) is the shareholder buys deductions from the company. As the company has given up deductions, it wants to be paid for those deductions that it is renouncing. From the perspective of the purchaser of the shares, the premium for the shares would not have been paid without some assurance that the deductions will be available. I note the purchaser is also required to reduce their adjusted cost base of the shares (for tax purposes) by the amount of the deductions utilized by the purchaser.

[54] While the Flow-Through Shareholders paid a premium for the shares (albeit to get the deductions), in my view the debt features associated with the CEE indemnity from Merit do not "transform" that part of the relationship from a shareholder relationship into a debt relationship. That part of the relationship remains "incidental" to being a shareholder.

[55] In summary, the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims, regardless of the basis chosen to support them, are in substance claims for the return of their equity investment and accordingly cannot rank with Merit's unsecured creditors.

DECISION - ISSUE 2

The claims of the Underwriters, the Directors and Officers and PriceWaterhouseCoopers are not subordinate to the claims of Merit's unsecured creditors as they are in substance creditors' claims that are not too contingent to constitute provable claims.

i. The Trustee's Position

[56] The Trustee argued that while on their face, the Underwriters' and the Directors and Officers' claims are not shareholder claims, "in substance", they are shareholders' claims and are no more than an indirect passing-on to Merit of the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims. As a result, the Trustee submitted, equity dictates that since the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims must rank behind those of the unsecured creditors, the claims of the Underwriters and the [14] V.M. Jog et al, "Flow Through Shares: Premium-Sharing and Trust-Effectiveness", (1996), 44 Can. Tax J. at p. 1017.

[15] R.S.C. 1985, (5th Supp.),c. 1.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

Directors and Officers must fail as well. The Trustee suggested this subordination follows from the policy considerations set out by Romaine J. in Re: Blue Range Resource Corp. Alternatively, the Trustee asserted that the claims of the Underwriters and the Directors and Officers are so contingent they must be valued at nil.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

ii. The Underwriters' Position

[57] The Underwriters argued that regardless of how the Court characterized the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims, the Trustee cannot succeed against the Underwriters because: (1) the indemnity claims are based on contractual, legal and equitable duties owed to the Underwriters by Merit, to which the Flow-Through Shareholders are strangers and to which Re: Blue Range Resource Corp has no application; (2) equitable subordination has never been applied by Canadian courts and the Trustee cannot satisfy the test even if the court chooses to apply it, and (3) the Underwriters' claims are precisely the type of contingent claims contemplated by the BIA.

iii. The Directors' and Officers' Position

[58] The Directors and Officers conceded that, while some of the potential liability they face is as a result of the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims against them, or via indemnity claims brought by the Underwriters and Auditors against them, their claim is simply a claim in contract that is not an effort to obtain a return of equity. They argued that the enforceability of the indemnity is not contingent on the source of the potential liability.

[59] In any case, the Directors and Officers face claims other than from Merit's shareholders, which include: (1) a Saskatchewan action alleging the Directors and Officers assented to or acquiesed in Merit not paying its accounts and ought to be held liable for them, and (2) an Alberta action relating to ownership and lease payments on oilfield equipment. The Directors and Officers asserted that the existence of these claims demonstrate that they are not simply attempting to pass on shareholder claims, but rather they are making a contractual claim for all the potential liability they face, as the indemnity intends.

[60] The Directors and Officers also suggested that, as with the Underwriters, some of the contingency in their claim under the indemnity has been realized to the extent of legal fees incurred in defending the various actions. In any case, they agreed with the Flow-Through Shareholders and Underwriters that a contingent claim need not be "probable" in order to be "provable" but need only something more than to "remote and speculative in nature".

[61] Further, directors and officers require indemnities and commercial necessity dictates that these indemnities have real value.

Resolution - ISSUE 2

Nature of the Underwriters and the Directors' and Officers' claims against Merit [62] The fundamental premise of the Trustee's argument is that the Underwriters' indemnity simply "flows through" or "passes on" the Flow-Through Shareholders' claim to Merit. This ignores the nature of the causes of action being advanced by the Underwriters and the existence of a contractual indemnity freely given by Merit for good and valuable consideration. The Trustee did not suggest that the indemnity was invalid or unenforceable, rather, it argued that this valid and enforceable right should be treated as a "shareholders' claim" and subordinated. With respect, I cannot agree with the Trustee's position.

[63] The Trustee's argument attempts to shift the Court's focus from the Underwriters' claim against Merit to the claim being asserted against the Underwriters, even though it is the former that the Trustee wants the Court to subordinate. The Flow-Through Shareholders' cause of action against the Underwriter's is predicated on the Underwriters' alleged failure to discharge a statutory duty and their liability is not contingent in any way on a successful claim by the Underwriters against Merit under the indemnity.

[64] The Underwriters' indemnity claims against Merit are not made as a shareholder or for any return of investment made by the Underwriters. Rather, they are based on contractual, legal and equitable duties owed directly by Merit to the Underwriters. Similarly, the other causes of action advanced by the Underwriters against Merit in the Third Party Notice do not arise from any equity position in the company, but are based on agency, fiduciary and contractual relationships between the Underwriters and Merit, to which the Flow-Through Shareholders are strangers and are unavailable for them to assert.

[65] For example, the Underwriters are entitled to an indemnity for defence costs even if the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims fail completely. The ultimate success or failure of the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims makes no difference to the existence and enforceability of this right against Merit.

[66] As the Underwriters' claims are not claims for a return of equity, Re: Blue Range Resource Corp does not apply. That decision only addressed equity claims of shareholders and I am not prepared to extend its application to the claims of the Underwriters in the application before me, simply because the claims triggering an indemnity by the Underwriters against Merit were shareholders' claims.

[67] As Firstenergy Capital Corp. emphasized, even if I were to apply the policy considerations for subordinating claims identified by Romaine J. in Re: Blue Range Resource Corp to the Underwriters' claims, these policy considerations support a conclusion that the Underwriters' claims are of the type I believe that Romaine J. would protect, not subordinate:

> 1. Shareholders rank behind creditors in insolvency - the issue here is whether the Underwriters are properly characterized as equity stakeholders or creditors. This is done by considering the substance of their claim. Regardless of how the Flow-Through

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

Shareholders' claims are characterized, the substance of the Underwriters' claims against Merit are contractual. They arise out of a contract for indemnity between Merit and the Underwriters. This is clearly distinct from a claim for return of shareholders' equity. The Trustee asked the court to consider the fact of a possible future payment from the Underwriters to the Flow-Through Shareholders in characterizing the claim of the Underwriters against Merit. Given the nature of the obligations under an indemnity, this is inappropriate. Describing the Underwriters' claims as "no more than and indirect passing-on of the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims" is based on a flawed analysis of the obligations under an indemnity and ignores the statutory duty of the Underwriters to the Flow-Through Shareholders. There are two distinct obligations.

The first obligation relates to the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims against the Underwriters and any obligations that may be imposed on the Underwriters as a result. This obligation is completely unrelated to, and unaffected by the Underwriters' indemnity. The second obligation is between Merit, as indemnifier, and the Underwriters. This second obligation is the obligation that must be characterized in this application. The Flow-Through Shareholders are strangers to this claim.

2. Creditors do business with companies on the assumption they will rank ahead of shareholders on insolvency - the focus of this analysis is the degree of risk-taking respectively assumed by shareholders and creditors. Unlike shareholders who assume the risks of insolvency, the Underwriters bargained, as any other creditor, for their place at the creditor table in an insolvency. An indemnity is a well-known commercial concept business people routinely use to eliminate or reduce risk and should be recognized as a necessary and desirable obligation.

To subordinate the Underwriters' claim would amount to a reversal of the expectations of the parties to the indemnities. The evidence before me suggests that the Underwriters would not have participated in Merit's offering without the indemnity. I need not decide whether that is true.

Subordinating the Underwriters would fundamentally change the underlying business relationship between underwriters and issuers, and would be unexpected in the industry. Such a result might make it impossible for an underwriter to recover under an indemnity from a bankrupt issuer in respect of an equity offering.

3. Shareholders are not entitled to rescind shares after insolvency - this consideration has no bearing on the Underwriters as they are not shareholders seeking to rescind shares. Their claims against the bankrupt are for damages under a contract for indemnity. Further, I was not asked to determine this particular question in this application.

4. The principles of equitable subordination - In Re Canada Deposit Insurance* v. *Canadian Commercial Bank, the Supreme Court of Canada expressly left open the question of whether equitable subordination formed part of Canadian insolvency law, but expressed its opinion as to the applicable test as developed in the United States:

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

> ...(1) the claimant must have engaged in some type of inequitable conduct; (2) the misconduct must have resulted in injury to the creditors of the bankrupt or conferred an unfair advantage on the claimant; and (3) equitable subordination of the claim must not be inconsistent with the provisions of the bankruptcy statute...(p. 420)

An application of these criteria would lead to the conclusion that equitable subordination would not apply in this case, even if it was part of Canadian law.

Although the Trustee suggested that the Underwriters may have "participated" in the misrepresentation, there is no evidence before me of inequitable conduct on their part. It is perhaps significant that the Flow-Through Shareholders have not alleged any such misconduct as against the Underwriters, but rather they have only advanced the statutory causes of action available to them under securities legislation.

As there is no evidence of inequitable conduct on the part of the Underwriters, there can be no corresponding injury to Merit's other creditors, or enhancement of the Underwriters' position.

Finally, the application of equitable subordination of the Underwriters' claims in this case would be inconsistent with the established priority scheme contained in the BIA. The United States Supreme Court addressed this third requirement of consistency in United States* v. *Noland [16]:

> [t]his last requirement has been read as a 'reminder to the bankruptcy court that although it is a court of equity, it is not free to adjust the legally valid claim of an innocent party who asserts the claim in good faith merely because the court perceives the result as inequitable'

This statement encapsulates what the Trustee is asking to the Court to do: subordinate the claims of the Underwriters, who have asserted their claims under their indemnities as they are entitled to do, merely because the result may be perceived as inequitable. The words of the US Supreme Court are consistent with the view that equitable subordination is an extraordinary remedy that ought to be employed only where there is some misconduct on the part of the claimant. The statutory scheme of distribution in the BIA must be paramount, and if it is to be interfered with, it should only be in clear cases where demonstrable inequitable conduct is present.

---

[16] (1996), 517 U.S. 535 at 539.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

> 5. Floodgates - Romaine J. considered that allowing Big Bear's claim for misrepresentation to rank with unsecured creditors would encourage aggrieved shareholders to claim misrepresentation or fraud. This consideration has no application to the Underwriters, who are not shareholders. Allowing the Underwriters' claims, which are based on a contractual right of indemnity, will not open the door to increased claims of misrepresentation or fraud by shareholders. The nature of the claims against the Underwriters and the Underwriters' claim against Merit are entirely different.

[68] In summary, the Underwriters' claims against Merit are creditors' claims which rank with Merit's other unsecured creditors.

[69] With this result I appreciate the potential for the Flow-Through Shareholders to be seen as obtaining some recovery from the estate before all the unsecured creditors are paid in full. It might even be suggested it may ultimately allow the Flow-Through Shareholders to achieve indirectly what they could not achieve directly, based on the substance of their claims. This may be the final economic result.

[70] However, success by the Flow-Through Shareholders against the Underwriters is not contingent upon success by the Underwriters against Merit nor does it automatically follow that success by the Flow-Through Shareholders against the Underwriters must inevitably lead to success by the Underwriters against Merit. A successful claim by the Underwriters against Merit will be determined on the basis of the provisions of the indemnity and the result of the claim against the Underwriters will be one of the factors in that analysis.

[71] As the possible economic result described in paragraph 69 does not flow from a continuous chain of interdependent events, the possibility that the Flow-Through Shareholders may indirectly recover some of their equity investment from others prior to Merit's unsecured creditors being paid in full would not be a sufficient reason to decide this application differently.

[72] As with the Underwriters, I find that the Directors and Officers have creditors' claims entitled to rank with Merit's other unsecured creditors.

Contingent claims

[73] While the Trustee's primary argument was the claims of the Underwriters and the Directors and Officers are merely indirect shareholder claims, alternatively, it argued that these claims are too contingent and cannot constitute a provable claim on that basis.[17]

[74] The Trustee relied on the case of Claude Resources (Trustee of)* v. *Dutton in support of its position. In that case, an indemnity agreement was executed between the bankrupt and its sole

[17] Supra footnote 9 for BIA definitions in ss. 121 and 135

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

shareholder, officer and director and entitled the individual to be indemnified for any liabilities arising out of actions taken in his capacity as an officer and director of the bankrupt. This individual was sued in relation to a debenture offering and sought to prove using his indemnity. Noble J. described the claim as having a "double contingency", in that as a first step the action on the debenture offering must be successful, and if so, then the claim on the application of the indemnity agreement must also succeed. Noble J. held that more is needed beyond evidence that the creditor has been sued and that liability may flow; some element of probability is needed.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

[75] The Trustee submitted that there is no evidence as to the potential success of the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims against the Underwriters and/or the Directors and Officers, nor was it possible prior to judgment in those actions, to determine whether any liability of the Underwriters and/or the Directors and Officers to the Flow-Through Shareholders would qualify for indemnification.

[76] The fact that a claim is contingent does not mean it is not "provable"[18]. Provable claims include contingent claims as long as they are not too speculative: Negus* v. *Oakley's General Contracting [19]. Section 121 defines provable claims to include "all debts and liabilities, present or future,...to which the bankrupt may become subject...".

[77] Section 121 does not specify the degree of certainty required to make a claim provable, other than to include as provable all debts or liabilities to which the bankrupt may become subject. As stated, the Ontario Court of Appeal addressed this in Re Confederation Treasury Services Ltd. and held that the test of probable liability set out in Claude Resources (Trustee of)* v. *Dutton and Re Wiebe (also relied on by the Trustee) imposed too high of a threshold to establish a valid contingent claim. Rather, the Ontario Court of Appeal expressed that contingent claims must simply be not too "remote or speculative in nature". I agree with the Ontario Court of Appeal's view of the test.

[78] On a plain reading of the Underwriting Agreement, the indemnity appears to be engaged by the Flow-Through Shareholders' actions. The actions are under case management and are proceeding through discoveries at this time. Further, there are several authorities that suggest an indemnity becomes enforceable as soon as a claim of the type indemnified is alleged.[20] Finally, at least one part of the Underwriters' claim is not contingent - they have incurred costs and disbursements in defence of the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims and according to the terms of the indemnity are currently entitled to reimbursement for those costs, regardless of the outcome of the litigation.

---

[18] ibid.

[19] (1996), 40 C.B.R. (3d) 270 (N.S.S.C.)

[20] See for example, Re Froment; Alta. Lumber Co.* v. *Department of Agriculture ,[1925] 2 W.W.R. 415 (Alta. S.C.)

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

iv. PriceWaterhouseCoopers

[79] PriceWaterhouseCoopers made similar submissions to the Underwriters and the Directors and Officers and emphasized the strong policy reason behind supporting auditors' indemnities as unsecured and not subordinated claims. In addition, PriceWaterhouseCoopers has an independent claim for negligent misrepresentation against the Directors and Officers, arising out of the provision of information to PriceWaterhouseCoopers by Merit management which PriceWaterhouseCoopers alleges was known, or ought to have been known, to be incorrect. PriceWaterhouseCoopers suggested this further distinguishes PriceWaterhouseCoopers' situation from the situation before the Court in Re: Blue Range Resource Corp.

[80] I find that PriceWaterhouseCoopers' indemnity claim is a creditor's claim entitled to rank with Merit's other unsecured creditors. My reasoning with respect to the Underwriters' claims, as based on their indemnities, applies equally to PriceWaterhouse Coopers' claim based on its indemnity.

[81] I am aware that the indemnities of the Flow-Through Shareholders are not being accorded creditor status, while those of the Underwriters, the Directors and Officers and PriceWaterhouseCoopers are. However, as noted, the indemnity feature of the Flow-Through Shareholders' claims is related to certain deductions and those deductions were part of the purchase price for the shares. This in my view is more analogous to Re Canada Deposit Insurance* v. *Canadian Commercial Bank than to Re Central Capital Corporation and that to me is sufficient to justify the distinction.

CONCLUSION

[82] The claims of the Flow-Through Shareholders are in substance claims for the return of equity investment and rank behind the claims of Merit's unsecured creditors, which shall include the claims of the Underwriters, the Directors and Officers and PriceWaterhouse Coopers.

[83] If the parties cannot agree on costs, they may see me within 30 days.

HEARD on the 30th day of April 2001.
DATED at Calgary, Alberta this 3rd day of July 2001.

_____

J.C.Q.B.A.

An errata has been issued for the above Judgement as follows:

ERRATA OF THE REASONS FOR JUDGEMENT
OF THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE SAL J. LoVECCHIO

The Appearances have been revised to include Mr. David A. Klein. Mr. Klein of Klein Lyons attended with Mr. William E. McNally of McNally and Cuming, for Larry Delf, Representative Flow-Through Shareholder.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

An errata has been issued for the above Judgement as follows:

ERRATA OF THE REASONS FOR JUDGEMENT
OF THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE SAL J. LoVECCHIO

Please replace page 2 of your copy of the Judgement.

The initials Q.C. should not follow the name of Douglas G. Stokes, of Rooney Prentice.

2001 ABQB 583 (CanLII)

CA010723
Vancouver Registry

1990 CanLII 1147 (BC CA)

ORAL REASONS FOR JUDGMENT:

Before:

The Honourable Mr. Justice Hinkson — May 8, 1990
The Honourable Mr. Justice Anderson
The Honourable Mr. Justice Gibbs — Vancouver, B.C.

BETWEEN:

V.F. ERICKSON CONSULTANTS LTD.

PETITIONER
(APPELLANT)

AND:

VENTURES WEST MINERALS LTD., VENTURES WEST CAPITAL LTD.,
J. HAIG deB FARRIS,
CLYDE L. SMITH,
GERALD HUNT,
MICHAEL J. BROWN,
VICTOR J.E. JONES and
WILLIAM J. BODEN

RESPONDENTS
(RESPONDENTS)

R.C. Gardner, Esq., Q.C. and
H. Wolfson, Esq. — appearing for the Appellant

Mrs. G.M. Quijano — appearing for the Respondent

HINKSON, J.A.: In September, 1983 the petitioner launched a petition pursuant to the provisions of s.224 of the British Columbia Company Act, R.S.B.C. 1979, c.59, seeking an order that the respondents purchase the shares of the petitioner in Ventures West Minerals Ltd. at the fair value of those shares upon the basis of oppression and unfair prejudice suffered by the petitioner. Section 224 provides that a member of a company may apply to the Court for relief under that section. One of the types of relief provided is that the Court may direct or prohibit any act or cancel or vary any transaction or resolution.

The petitioner had been the president and an executive and director of Ventures West. He had an employment contract with the company that expired at the end of December, 1982. It was not renewed at that time but he continued as a director.

In September, 1983 a meeting of the shareholders was called for September 16th at which it was proposed to pass a resolution with respect to certain rights to shares to be offered by the company. The petitioner opposed that resolution on the basis that it would dilute his holdings as a minority shareholder, thus the petition was launched the day before that meeting was to be held seeking the relief specified in it.

The meeting was held on September 16, 1983 but the proposed resolution was withdrawn. The petition was not proceeded with promptly and it was not until 1989 that the respondents made a motion under Rule 18 to have the petition dismissed. Upon the hearing of that motion many additional affidavits were referred to relating to events that had occurred subsequent to September, 1983. Those matters were canvassed before the chambers judge, ultimately in the exercise of his discretion under s.224 of the Company Act he dismissed the petition. It is from that decision that the present appeal is taken.

At the outset of the appeal we inquired of counsel for the appellant as to why the appeal should proceed as the resolution which was the subject matter of the petition had not been passed. He referred to the subsequent events that had occurred in the company but we indicated that in our view those matters were the subject of other proceedings which have not been taken.

1990 CanLII 1147 (BC CA)

The appellant referred to the decision of Fulton, J. in Diligenti v. R.W.M.D. Operations Kelowna Ltd. et al (1976), 1 B.C.L.R. 36, and urged that the failure to renew the employment contract of the petitioner might form the basis for a finding of oppression or prejudice.

The failure to renew the contract might be the basis for supporting an argument of prejudice or oppression but standing by itself it is not evidence of oppression or prejudice. It might form the matter of separate proceedings for wrongful dismissal or breach of contract but it is not the subject matter of the present petition.

In view of the fact that the resolution was withdrawn on September 16, 1983 the foundation for the relief sought in the petition disappeared and therefore, there is no basis for granting the relief sought in that petition.

I referred to the provisions of s.224 of the Company Act because it is clear that if the company simply withdrew the resolution on September 16, 1983 with the intention of frustrating the petitioner and then sought to pass the same or a similar resolution subsequently, the petitioner could have sought relief by way of s.224 to prevent the reintroduction of that type of resolution in the future. That was not the relief, however, that was being sought in the petition but rather a requirement that the company purchase the minority shareholdings of the petitioner.

In my opinion, there is no basis upon which the present petition can proceed to a successful completion for the petitioner. For those reasons I would dismiss the appeal.

1990 CanLII 1147 (BC CA)

ANDERSON, J.A.: I agree.

GIBBS, J.A.: I agree.

HINKSON, J.A.: The appeal is dismissed.

E.E.H.
J.A.

1990 CanLII 1147 (BC CA)

Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta

Citation: Devon Canada Corporation v. Canadian Pacific Railway Co., 2009 ABQB 143

Date: 20090306
Docket: 0801 04741, 0801 04892
Registry: Calgary

2009 ABQB 143 (CanLII)

In the Matter of Devon Canada Corporation

Between:

Devon Canada Corporation

Applicant

- and -

Canadian Pacific Railway Co. and Randolph Allan Hill

Respondents

Docket: 0801 04892

And Between:

Nova Gas Transmission Ltd.

Applicant

- and -

Canadian Pacific Railway Co. and Randolph Allan Hill

Respondents

Reasons for Judgment
of the Honourable Madam Justice M.C. Erb

---

[1] The Applicants Devon Canada Corporation and Nova Gas Transmission Ltd. seek declaratory relief in companion applications to deal with the validity of a partial assignment of a Crossing Agreement between the two Respondents. The Applicants' pipelines cross under railway tracks owned by the Respondent Canadian Pacific Railway Co., which partially assigned rights to the Respondent Mr. Hill.

[2] The Applicants seek an Order declaring that:

i. the partial assignment is void or invalid to the extent that it conveys any interest in the Crossing Agreement to the Respondent Mr. Hill;
ii. the Crossing Agreement is a license and does not convey an interest in land;
iii. the fee for permission contained in the Crossing Agreement is not a "rate of compensation" as defined in the Surface Rights Act, R.S.A. 2000, c.S-24;
iv. Costs.

[3] The Respondents ask that the Applications be dismissed with costs and further argue that provisions of the Limitations Act, R.S.A. 2000, c.L-12 operate to pre-empt any such entitlement to relief in any event. The Respondents further argue that any issue regarding "rate of compensation" is within the jurisdiction of the Alberta Surface Rights Board ("SRB") which through its enacting legislation deals with such matters.

[4] This Court agrees that SRB has the jurisdiction to deal with the issue of rate compensation, a matter clearly within its mandate. The only issues properly before this Court are:

i. whether the Partial Assignment of Unregistered Encumbrances is valid;
ii. the nature of the interest granted by the Crossing Agreement; and
iii. the application, if any of the Limitations Act in this case.

Factual Narrative

[5] In March 2004, CPR lands between miles 60.16 and 61.51 in Lochearn, Alberta became designated as surplus to the railway's operating needs and were listed for sale. The lands described by a CPR representative as "non-occupied station grounds consisting of four strips running parallel to the CPR track, two strips per side", are located in the Alberta Central Subdivision in Clearwater County about one mile west of the town of Rocky Mountain House. CPR retained immediately adjacent land on both sides of its track for railway purposes The main line is part of the Alberta central subdivision.

[6] Long before CPR decided to divest itself of some of its surplus real property, it had entered into crossing agreements with a number of companies permitting pipelines to cross under its tracks. The crossing agreements are standard form and there are more than 3,000 such agreements in existence in Alberta; 7,000 in Western Canada and another 2,500 similar agreements in place in Quebec and Ontario.

2009 ABQB 143 (CanLII)

[7] Included in the list of pipeline companies are two of relevance in these proceedings: Texas Pacific Oil Canada Ltd, a predecessor of the Applicant Devon, and Alberta Gas Trunk Line Company Limited, a predecessor of TransCanada PipeLines Limited of which Nova is a wholly-owned subsidiary. Nova's predecessor entered into the Crossing Agreement with CPR in 1969 and Devon's entered into a similar agreement in 1979.

[8] In December 2004, Mr. Hill purchased two lots from CPR comprising 65.78 acres (26.62 hectares) for which he paid just under $55,000. The lots are bisected by the railroad and there are several pipelines running under the track.

[9] There is no quarrel among the parties about the events leading up to the closing. In August, 2004 Clearwater County contacted CPR, Nova and Devon and advised that Mr. Hill was seeking approval for a proposed development of a subdivision on the lots which Mr. Hill intended to purchase from the railroad. There is no record of whether Devon replied, but Nova by letter dated August 23, 2004, confirmed that it had no objection to the proposed subdivision.

[10] The County approved Mr. Hill's proposal in late August 2004 and as a result the sale documents were completed on December 1, 2004 making Mr. Hill the registered owner of the lots. In addition, Mr. Hill became an assignee to the Crossing Agreements by way of an "Unregistered Permitted Encumbrances and Indemnity Agreement" with CPR. This document purports to partially assign the Crossing Agreements entered into in 1969 and 1979 with the predecessors of Nova and Devon respectively.

[11] The Crossing Agreement has never been registered on title although CPR filed caveats respecting drainage and sight lines respecting the railway tracks.

[12] In July 2005, Mr. Hill had his (then) counsel, Roy Elander, contact the Applicants to advise that all rentals payable under the Crossing Agreements to CPR were to be sent to him. The following April, Mr. Hill advised the Applicants by letter that he planned to extract gravel from his lots and ready the land for a subdivision including the construction of roads along both sides of the track. The Applicants were also advised that Mr. Hill planned to seek compensation from them payable pursuant to s. 27 of the Surface Rights Act.

[13] On April 6, 2006, the Applicants were invited to a meeting to discuss Mr. Hill's plans for the lots. The meeting took place on April 18. Mr. Hill deposed in his filed affidavit that neither Nova nor Devon "responded favorably" to his plan for extraction of gravel and development of a residential development. He further deposed that he has been unable to exploit or develop the lots because of outstanding issues with the Applicants.

[14] Mr. Hill then brought an application before the SRB for a review of rate compensation under the Surface Rights Act. The SRB found that Mr. Hill's application was premature pending hearing of the Court of Queen's Bench applications. Mr. Hill is hoping to have the nominal fee converted to a substantial annual payment.

2009 ABQB 143 (CanLII)

2009 ABQB 143 (CanLII)

The Submission of the Parties

[15] In addition to their concerns about the rate compensation review, the Applicants argue that they face potentially substantial new burdens arising from Mr. Hill's use of the lots he purchased from CPR. For example, if Mr. Hill pursues a county residential development, the Applicants say that the impact on them would include a class location upgrade of the pipelines under the CSA Standard Z662, which they speculate could result in a reduction in the maximum allowable operating pressure of the pipelines leading to a reduction in capacity or a requirement to upgrade the pipe at a substantial cost. Such a dramatic change would require CPR to give notice to them about an intended assignment and in the absence of such notice, among other reasons, raise questions about the validity of the partial assignment. They further argue that the Crossing Agreement is not an interest in land because it does not fit any legal description of such and is at best a licence.

[16] In addition, the Applicants dispute Mr. Hill's position that he has been prevented from using the property and assert that nothing has prevented him from mining the gravel he claims is present; rather he has "chosen" not to proceed with his extraction plans. Further, the Applicants argue that there is no adverse effect with respect to the "area granted" since there is no defined area to which the Agreement applies.

[17] Upon conclusion of these proceedings, Mr. Hill intends to renew his SRB application for compensation which arises from a clause in the Crossing Agreement providing for a nominal annual fee. There is evidence which suggests that this amount, collected annually, was an administration fee or alternatively that it was simply nominal consideration to complete contractual terms and it was ultimately used to cover administrative costs. Mr. Hill's application before the SRB was for a review of the annual fee as a "rate of compensation" which could then facilitate an increase from the $10 to about $120,000 based on loss of use or adverse effect.

[18] The Respondent CPR argues that the only issue properly before this Court is whether the Partial Assignment of the Crossing Agreements is valid. It further submits that all other issues are matters for the SRB.

Validity of the Partial Assignment

[19] There is only one clause which addresses the issue of assignment in the original Crossing Agreements and it is the same in both the 1969 and 1979 documents. The "Applicant" referred to in the agreements are the predecessors of Nova and Devon. The 1969 agreement grants permission for the construction and maintenance of certain works under railway lands at "8th Ferrier South Lateral Crossing at Mileage 60.58 Alberta Central Subdivision" . The 1979 Agreement permits the construction and maintenance of a "water pipe crossing at Mileage 60.3489 Alberta Central Subdivision". Clause 12 of the Crossing Agreements provides:

> The Applicant shall not assign, transfer or dispose of this agreement or the rights and privileges conferred thereby, without the consent in writing, first obtained, of the Railway Company.

[20] The Applicants argue that the partial assignment cannot be valid because although CPR as a contracting party can assign its rights under the contract, it cannot assigns its own liabilities or obligations to a third party (i.e. Mr. Hill) without the consent of the other contracting parties, the Applicants. Further, conditions for foregoing such consent have not been met. They further argue that the Crossing Agreement was intended to be only with a party which had the "special characteristics" of a railway company.

[21] With respect to obligations and liabilities, the only clause dealing with obligations appears to be the "applicants" named in the Crossing Agreement, predecessors of the Applicants in these proceedings. The Crossing Agreements as I read them impose the following rights, privileges, obligations and liabilities on the parties paraphrased as follows:

(a) The Railway Company

Clause 2	Grants permission to construct, maintain and repair works under its lands in accordance with the CTC rules and regulations;
Clause 3	CPR retains the work of supporting the railway tracks and structures and protecting train movements with attendant costs;
Clause 5	Requires supervision of the construction, renewal and repair of the works to by a railway company employee and whose wages and expenses are to be paid by the Applicant.
Clause 11	Requires CPR to give notice to the Applicant if it requires the works to be moved or altered to accommodated railway company requirements or as ordered by the CTC.
Clause 13	Gives three months notice of its intent to terminate the Agreement.

(b) The Applicant

2009 ABQB 143 (CanLII)

Clause 2	Requires construction, maintenance and repairs of Applicant to be in compliance with CTC rules and regulations
Clause 4	Requires installation and maintenance of signs prominently marking the works and their distance underground.
Clause 5	Requires at least 48 hours notice in writing of intent to do construction, renewal and repair work and restoring the property of the rail road upon completion and to maintain the works in good order and condition to the satisfaction of the railway company. Applicant must pay the railway company's supervisor.
Clause 6	Requires indemnification of the railway from loss, costs, damage, injury, expense by reason of any injury or damage to persons or property caused by the works or any thing related to it unless the cause can be traced elsewhere.
Clause 7	Grants the right to enter on the railway lands for the purpose of construction, maintenance, inspection, removal and repair of the works and the assumption of any and all risks of its employees related to it and indemnification of the railway against any claims and demands related to such entry.
Clause 8	Requires Applicant to take responsibility for neglect of repair or maintenance to the works and to pay the railway company for any work it undertakes because of the Applicants failure to do so.
Clause 9	Requires Applicant to indemnify the railway company from "all taxes or assessment of any description whatsoever levied by any authority" in respect of the works.
Clause 10	Applicant to pay the required compensation for the permission at in advance on the 1st day of April each year.

2009 ABQB 143 (CanLII)

Clause 11	Requires Applicant to safeguard the works at its own expense should the railway company require that the works be moved or altered to meet railway needs or as may be ordered by the CTC and to pay the railway for any costs of doing so should it fail within the required time frame.
Clause 12	Applicant to refrain from assigning, transferring or disposing of the Agreement or the rights and privileges conferred without first having the consent in writing of the railway.
Clause 13	Applicant to give three months notice of its intent to terminate the Agreement.
Clause 15	Applicant to remove its works upon termination as the railway company requires.

[22] The argument about passing obligations and liabilities appears to arise from a decision of the British Columbia Court of Appeal, Frederickson v. I.C.B.C. (1986) 3 B.C.L.R. (2d) 145 (C.A.) per (then) McLachlin, J.A., in which six categories of contracts were found to be unassignable including two which the Applicants say apply in this case:

> (b) contracts which by their assignment throw uncontemplated burdens on the debtor;
> (c) personal contracts;

[23] The Applicants say that because the assignment fits into these categories, consent to the assignment is required. The conditions for foregoing the requirement to obtain the consent of the other party to the contract who is not participating in the proposed assignment are set out in the English decision in Tolhurst v. Assoc. Portland Cement Mfr. (1900) Ltd., [1902] 2 KB 660 (CA); aff'd [1903] AC 414 (HL) in which the act of replacing one party to a contract with another is allowable where "it can make no difference to the person on whom the obligations lies to which of two persons he is to discharge it...".

[24] The Applicants cite paragraph 33 of Rodaro v. Royal Bank of Canada (2002), 59 O.R. (3d) 74 (C.A.) in further support of its position that consent is effectively a condition precedent to the partial assignment granted here:

> Aside from limitations imposed by statute, public policy or the terms of a specific contract, a party to an agreement may assign its rights, but not its obligations under that agreement, to a third party without the consent of the other party to the contract. A party will not, however, be allowed to assign its rights under a contract if that assignment increases the burden on the other party to the agreement, or if the agreement is based on confidences, skills or special personal characteristics such as to implictly limit the agreement to the original parties.

2009 ABQB 143 (CanLII)

2009 ABQB 143 (CanLII)

[25] The portions of the Crossing Agreements executed by predecessors of Nova in 1969 and Devon in 1979, which passed to Mr. Hill are set out in the Partial Assignment of Unregistered Permitted Encumbrances and Indemnity Agreement and I reproduce them here:

> Clause 1.1 The Vendor (CPR) hereby assigns, transfers and sets over unto the Purchaser (Mr. Hill) as and from the Effective Date, with respect to the Lands to be conveyed to him:
>
> (a) that portion of the right, title and interest of the Vendor in, to, and under the Unregistered Permitted Encumbrances and the reversion thereof in respect of the Lands;
>
> (b) that portion of any rents or other payments due or accruing due at, from and including the Effective Date in respect of the Lands under the Unregistered Permitted Encumbrances or any extension or renewals thereof; and
>
> (c) that portion of the benefit of all covenants and agreements and guarantees and indentures in respect of the Lands under the Unregistered Permitted Encumbrances.
>
> Clause 1.2 The Purchaser does hereby agree to observe, perform and assume all obligations for the Vendor in respect of the Lands under the Unregistered Permitted Encumbrances to be performed from and after the Effective date and agrees to indemnify and save harmless the Vendor from any and all actions, proceedings, claims, losses, expenses, costs and all liabilities of every nature and kind with respect to any breach or non-observance thereof by the Purchaser.

ANALYSIS

[26] The Applicants argue that the partial assignment is not valid because of the divestiture of obligations relating to railroads and federal agencies such as the CTC which in this case can only bind a railway. They argue that the railway company cannot assign its obligations only its rights. They say the Crossing Agreements cannot be assigned because doing so would create additional financial burdens they did not otherwise have with the railway. They further argue that they were entitled to notice that the Land was being sold to Mr. Hill.

[27] I see nothing in the Partial Assignment which indicates that the railway has passed along obligations to the Respondent Mr. Hill which only another railway can fulfill, that is which has "special characteristics" in the manner the Applicants submit. Having retained land on both sides of the tracks for railway purposes indicates that CPR retained what it needs to meet its obligations and no such obligations were passed to the purchaser of the surplus lots sold. The remaining land surely just becomes ordinary land which has pipelines beneath it with all of the attendant implications.

[28] There is nothing in the Crossing Agreement which prohibits CPR from any such assignment. Clause 12 prohibits the Applicants from assigning, transferring or disposing of the agreements without consent in writing of the railway company but does not restrict CPR in that way. This is a one-sided obligation. There is no evidence before this Court that the assignment issue was raised by the predecessors of the Applicants at the time or that it has been raised any time since, excepting these proceedings. Had they wanted to limit assignment, this could have been negotiated. However, someone turned their minds to and raised the issue; otherwise the railway would not have had it in the agreement for its purposes.

[29] Further, there is nothing before this Court that suggests convincingly that the railway divested itself of railway obligations under the CTC or any other federal authority. There is nothing in the language of the agreement between CP Rail and Mr. Hill which suggests he has acquired any such obligation.

[30] There is evidence that CPR retained a "swath of land" on either side of the tracks. Surely this was for railway purposes involving the tending to of tracks and movement of trains. Surely the Crossing Agreements continue with respect to pipelines still running under railway tracks, that has not changed. The balance with respect to non railway required lands upon sale are outside the CTC's interest. The fact that CPR's retention of the "swath of land" and its purpose could have been made clearer in the Partial Assignment does not affect the issues here. The purpose of the retention of land is obvious in any event and clearly separates railway interests from the rest of the land; that is, the lots which Mr. Hill acquired.

[31] I remain unconvinced that an imposition of "greater burdens" means the partial assignment is invalid. If there are new burdens on the Applicants, these are no different than any other land under which pipelines pass, held by private citizens of Alberta. The sale of the surplus railway land to Mr. Hill may well mean that the Applicant's long run of minimal financial obligations regarding those lands is over. It may well be a case of the train having simply left the station. I see nothing in the Crossing Agreements which suggests that the benefits of them were to continue in perpetuity. The termination clause suggests otherwise.

[32] There were opportunities for the Applicants to have input into the application for subdivision which was the precursor to the conveyance of the Land from CPR to Mr. Hill. Clearwater County provided notice about Mr. Hill's subdivision application and it preceded the finalization of the sale. The Applicants could have raised its objections at a time when Mr. Hill could have made a decision to proceed with the purchase if approved or otherwise. Instead Devon appears to have taken no position and Nova confirmed in writing that it had no objection.

2009 ABQB 143 (CanLII)

[33] The Applicants had ample opportunity to explore any implications for themselves. It was clear from the County's correspondence that the Applicants' pipelines would be under land owned by a private citizen rather than the railway. Surely the Applicants understood that subdivision development entails the building of roads, movement of earth and laying of utility lines among many other surface and subsurface tasks. Whether Clearwater County would have approved the proposal had the Applicants objected is a question of no importance in these proceedings.

[34] The fact that CPR retained land on both sides of its track confirms to this Court its continuing obligation to meet railway line requirements to the CTC and any other relevant authority. There was no assignment of those requirements to Mr. Hill. The question of what land the Applicants can access to deal with their pipelines remains the same as it did under the original Crossing Agreements: it is land held by CPR which runs under its railway tracks and any access to other land is no different than pipeline which runs under the land of any other private land owner.

Nature of the Crossing Agreement

[35] I find that the Crossing Agreement is a license, given the fact that it does not purport to grant exclusive possession of the Land to the Applicants thereby according a true interest in land: Johnson v. British Columbia Canadian Insurance Co., [1932] S.C.R. 680. Further, the fact that the Agreement can be terminated by either party upon three months notice is contrary to the requirements for an easement, which do not apply where rights granted are temporary: Canadian Pacific Ltd. v. Paul, [1988] 2 S.C.R. 654 at paras. 19 to 22.

Application of Limitations Act

[36] Section 3(1) of the Limitations Act sets limitations periods for remedial orders. It does not do so where a party seeks a declaration as to rights. The Respondents argue that the Applicants effectively seek relief which is really remedial in nature dressed as declaratory relief. This would require an exploration as to motives which this Court is neither inclined to consider nor in the position to do. Here the Applicants seek declaratory relief and the provisions of the Limitations Act limiting when the claim can be made to do not apply: Daniels v. Mitchell (2005), ABCA 271.

[37] However, the doctrine of laches is specifically available to the Respondents as a remedy as s. 10 of the Limitations Act provides:

> Nothing in this Act precludes a court from granting a defendant immunity from liability under the equitable doctrines of acquiescence or laches, notwithstanding that the defendant would not be entitled to immunity pursuant to this Act.

2009 ABQB 143 (CanLII)

[38] The Alberta Court of Appeal summarized the key aspects of the doctrine of laches in Ambrozic v. Burcevski, 2008 ABCA 194, 433 A.R. 25 at paras. 42- 45:

> The doctrine of laches is an equitable doctrine which precludes a remedy for a cause of action not otherwise time barred.
>
> Laches is an equitable remedy that will not normally be granted when the defendant is guilty of wrongdoing.
>
> Laches may also apply when the plaintiff has acquiesced to infringement of her rights, or when delay makes prosecution unreasonable.

[39] Notwithstanding that this claim would not be barred per s.3(1) of the Limitations Act, the equitable doctrine of laches would apply because of the clear acquiescence of the Applicants who were specifically advised by the County that CPR was selling land which they knew or ought to have known affected them because of their subsurface pipelines. Rather than make enquiries or raise objection, the Applicants did nothing, lulling the Respondents into the natural assumption that no issues were being raised. In fact the Applicants did nothing until the matter arose before the SRB and it became clear that there could be substantial financial implications for them.

Order to be Entered

[40] This Court declares that:

i The Partial Assignment of Unregistered Encumbrances between the Respondents is valid;

ii. The nature of the Crossing Agreement is a licence;

iii. The Limitation Act does not operate to Bar the Applications.

iv. The Application with respect to the nature of the fee contained in the Crossing Agreement is a matter for the Alberta Surface Rights Board and is not at present properly before this Court.

[41] If the parties cannot agree, Costs may be spoken to within 60 days of the date this Judgment is issued.

Heard on the 12th day of December, 2008.
Dated at the City of Calgary, Alberta this 6th day of March, 2009.

2009 ABQB 143 (CanLII)

2009 ABQB 143 (CanLII)

M.C. Erb
J.C.Q.B.A.

Appearances:

Munaf Mohamed
for the Applicant Nova Gas Transmission Ltd.

Michael D. Mysak for the Applicant Devon Canada Corporation

Karl R. Seidenz for the Respondent Canadian Pacific Railway Company

Edward W. Halt, Q.C.
for the Respondent Randolph Allan Hill

CITATION: Urbas v. Home Savings, 2015 ONSC 6399
COURT FILE NO.: 11-30252SR
DATE: 2015/10/23

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

SUPERIOR COURT OF JUSTICE - ONTARIO

RE: Estate of Ruth Urbas, Deceased by her estate trustee Carol Frances Conrad Urbas and Carl F. Urbas, Plaintiffs

AND:

Home Savings and Loan Corporation also known as Home Trust Company, Defendant

BEFORE: Justice A. J. Goodman

COUNSEL: M. Roefe for the Plaintiffs, responding parties

A. Jackson for the Defendant, moving party

HEARD: August 27, 2015

E N D O R S E M E N T

Introduction

[1] This action concerns a claim for payment under two Certificates of Deposit (the "Certificates") the Defendant, Home Trust Company ("Home Trust"), issued in 1988 to each Plaintiff, Carl and Ruth Urbas.

[2] The Plaintiffs bring the claim under the simplified rules. The Plaintiffs allege Home Trust is indebted to Ruth Urbas's Estate in the amount of $60,000.00, plus interest and costs. The Plaintiffs say the debt results from a Certificate the Defendant issued on June 28, 1988, to Ruth Urbas, the registered holder, in the principal amount of $60,000.00, plus 9.55% interest per annum.

[3] The Plaintiffs' also claim that Home Trust is indebted to the Plaintiff, Carl Urbas, Ruth Urbas's son, the sum of $56,720.00, plus interest and costs. This claim is pursuant to a Certificate Home Trust issued on September 29, 1988, to Carl Urbas, the registered holder, for the principal amount of $56,720.00, plus 9.55% annual interest.

[4] Both Certificates matured on September 29, 1988. Home Trust refused to pay either Certificate when the Plaintiffs presented the Certificates on or about June 21, 2011.

[5] The Plaintiffs commenced the within action on September 23, 2011, seeking payment and interest, approximately 23 years after the Certificates matured. The Statement of Claim does not detail how the Plaintiffs came to be aware, or have knowledge, of the Certificates, but it does identify September 29, 1988, as the Certificates' maturity date.

[6] The Defendant served a Statement of Defence on November 21, 2011.

[7] The Plaintiffs delivered their Affidavit of Documents on or about April 23, 2013. The Defendant delivered its Affidavit of Documents on July 10, 2013. Examinations for discovery of Carl Urbas and Cathy Sutherland (on behalf of Home Trust), were held on October 8, 2013. Ms. Sutherland retired from Home Trust on May 31, 2010, at which time she was the Senior Vice President – Finance. She began employment with Home Trust on April 30, 1990, as a Controller. Prior to that she was an auditor of Home Trust employed by Touche Ross.

[8] The examinations for discovery were held after the death of Ruth Urbas on April 20, 2012, and accordingly, she was never examined.

[9] The Defendant moved for summary judgment on two bases. First, the Defendant pleads that this action is out of time as against them and is statute barred pursuant to the provisions of the Limitations Act, 2002, S.O. 2002, c. 24. Second, the Defendant advances a delay argument under the equitable principles of laches.

Background

[10] I accept the following facts arising from the evidence adduced in this application.

[11] The Defendant's covenant to pay the Plaintiffs as stated in the Certificate of Deposit, a pre-printed form authored by the Defendant, is as follows:

> [Home Trust] hereby promises to pay to the Registered Holder hereof the principal sum in lawful money of Canada on the maturity date on presentation and surrender of the certificate at the branch of issue.

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

> Interest shall be calculated on the Principal sum at the rate per annum herein stated from the date of purchase until the date of maturity and the amount thereof shall be paid or credited to the Registered Holder on the dates indicated or be accumulated and paid or carded at the date of maturity as stated above.
>
> This certificate is not redeemable prior to the maturity date except on the death of a registered holder. The Corporation will be liable only for the amount of principal and interest as set out herein and no interest shall accrue after the maturity date.

[12] The Certificate also reads, "THIS CERTIFICATE IS TO BE SURRENDERED ON REPAYMENT" (emphasis in original).

[13] During his examination for discovery, Carl Urbas testified that he first became aware of the Certificates in May 2010 when he discovered a box of paper while cleaning out his mother's house. Mr. Urbas testified he asked his mother about the Certificates and she advised that she did not know what the documents were and did not recall seeing them before.

[14] Additionally, on May 21, 2014, the Plaintiffs produced a copy of Ruth Urbas's 1988 tax year return. Included within the 1988 tax return was a copy of a T5 Statement of Investment Income Home Trust issued for investment income Ruth Urbas earned in 1988 for the Certificates issued to her.

[15] Ruth Urbas's 1988 tax return was prepared by Ms. Priscilla Monteith, and, as appears from Ms. Monteith's letter attached to Ruth Urbas's tax return, the tax return was completed by April 5, 1989.

[16] The T5 included in Ruth Urbas's 1988 tax return reports investment income of $1,459.97. This amount is consistent with the interest she would have been paid for the Certificate from the issue date, June 28, 1988, to the maturity date, September 29, 1988, on a principal amount of $60,000.00 with an annual interest rate of 9.55%.

[17] Additionally, the T5 references the number "1521 17359". This number matches the client and certificate numbers appearing on the face of the Certificate issued to Ruth Urbas.

[18] As appears from Ruth Urbas's 1989 tax return, no T5 from Home Trust was reported by her for the 1989 tax year.

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

[19] On January 14, 2015, Gowlings received from Mr. Roefe a screenshot of the electronic record of the T5 issued to Mr. Urbas for the 1988 tax year. In producing the screenshot of the T5, Mr. Roefe advised that the tax records of Carl Urbas and Ruth Urbas from 1988 and onward was irrelevant. Further, Mr. Roefe advised the effort and costs of production of other tax records in the possession of their former accountant, Michael Smith, were disproportionate to their evidentiary value. Mr. Roefe also advised that the 1988 T5 was the only document that Mr. Urbas had authorized Mr. Smith to release to Home Trust.

[20] The screenshot of the electronic record of Carl Urbas's T5 indicates an amount of $1,380.18 (attached as Exhibit "S" to Brian Mosko's Affidavit). This amount is consistent with the interest Carl Urbas would be paid for the Certificate from the issue date, June 28, 1988, to the maturity date, September 29, 1988, on a principal amount of $56,720.00 with an annual interest rate of 9.55%.

Positions of the Parties

[21] The moving party Defendant submits the action against them is based on acts or omissions that occurred before January 1, 2004. Therefore, the transition provisions pursuant to the Limitations Act, 2002 apply.

[22] In response to the motion, the Plaintiffs submit the Defendant acknowledges the Plaintiffs are in possession of the original Certificates, and the Plaintiffs presented the certificates of deposit for surrender and payment. Further, presentation and surrender of the original Certificates are necessary for the Defendant to pay, which directly impacts on the limitation period.

[23] The Plaintiffs submit that they have not been paid the principal or any interest pursuant to the Certificates. They submit the Defendant has no direct evidence that the Defendant paid the Plaintiffs the principal or interest before the Plaintiffs surrendered the Certificates on June 21, 2011.

[24] The Plaintiffs further submit the Defendant never contacted the Plaintiffs, either by phone or mail, regarding the outstanding Certificates, although such contact is the Defendant's usual course of conduct. Additionally, the Defendant has no records or other evidence that it tried to contact the Plaintiffs about the Certificates.

[25] The Plaintiffs submit the Certificates were purchased by Frank Urbas, Carl Urbas's father and Ruth Urbas's husband, without their knowledge, and before Frank Urbas's death on November 25, 1987, pursuant to instructions given before his death. They submit they continued to have no knowledge of the

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

Certificates until May 2010, when the Plaintiffs discovered the certificates in a drawer in the family home.

[26] The Plaintiffs submit they provided tax records, referred to by Brian Mosko in his affidavit, on a without prejudice basis and deny they are relevant to the matters at issue. The Defendant has not produced an Order determining the relevance or propriety of the Defendant's discovery question upon which these documents were provided to Defendant.

[27] The Plaintiffs deny the T5s provided sufficient notice or knowledge of these particular Certificates. They assert they are unsophisticated in financial matters and it was Frank Urbas who purchased the Certificates and dealt with their investments.

[28] The Defendant submits the Plaintiffs delayed commencing the action for approximately 23 years. And, documents produced through discovery show the Plaintiffs were aware of the Certificates in 1988 or 1989, despite Carl Urbas's assertion he did not know about the Certificates until May 2010.

[29] Moreover, the evidence that still exists confirms that the Certificates matured in 1988, were not renewed, and were paid out to the Plaintiffs at maturity.

[30] The Defendant argues the Plaintiffs' delay in commencing the action has and continues to prejudice the Defendant. Relevant records relating to the Certificates have been destroyed. For example, the process to redeem a Certificate of Deposit in 1988, if the original Certificate of Deposit was lost or mislaid, was to sign a bond of indemnity. Any record of a bond of indemnity would have been destroyed in 2008. Also, if a Certificate of Deposit remained unclaimed, the process in 1988 was to contact the client with phone calls or letters. If a call was unsuccessful, a letter would be sent. Records were maintained of the process taken with particular Certificates of Deposit. In addition, Ruth Urbas could not be examined for discovery.

[31] Based on these factors, the Defendant submits the action is statute barred because the Plaintiffs commenced it outside the limitation period. Similarly, the action should be dismissed based on the application of the doctrine of laches.

Legal principles

[32] On January 1, 2004, the Limitations Act, 1990, R.S.O. 1990, c. L.15, was repealed and replaced by the Limitations Act, 2002. The Limitations Act, 2002 represents a revised, comprehensive approach to the limitation of actions.

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

[33] According to the transitional rules, if the claim was discovered before January 1, 2004, the former six-year limitation period applies. Further, if the former limitation period expired before January 1, 2004, then the claim is statute barred. If the claim was not discovered prior to January 1, 2004, the two-year limitation period under the Limitations Act, 2002 applies.

[34] In determining whether the Plaintiffs knew or ought to have known of the facts giving rise to the cause of action, the knowledge of their solicitor is imputed to them.

[35] If the Limitations Act, 2002 applies, courts do not have discretion to extend the basic two-year limitation period, as the Court of Appeal recently confirmed.

[36] Section 5 of the Limitations Act, 2002 sets out when a claim is "discovered" within the meaning of the statute:

> 5. (1) A claim is discovered on the earlier of,
>
> (a) the day on which the person with the claim first knew,
>
> (i) that the injury, loss or damage had occurred,
>
> (ii) that the injury, loss or damage was caused by or contributed to by an act or omission,
>
> (iii) that the act or omission was that of the person against whom the claim is made, and
>
> (iv) that, having regard to the nature of the injury, loss or damage, a proceeding would be an appropriate means to seek to remedy it; and
>
> (b) the day on which a reasonable person with the abilities and in the circumstances of the person with the claim first ought to have known of the matters referred to in clause (a).
>
> (2) A person with a claim shall be presumed to have known of the matters referred to in clause 1(a) on the day the act or omission on which the claim is based took place, unless the contrary is proved.

[37] Statutes of limitations have long been said to be statutes of repose. There comes a time when a potential defendant should be secure in his reasonable expectation that he will not be held to account for ancient obligations: M.(K.) v. M.(H.), [1992] 3 S.C.R. 6, at para. 22 [38] Once a limitation period has elapsed, the potential defendant should no longer be concerned about the preservation of evidence relevant to a claim: M.(K.) v. M.(H.), at para. 23. Plaintiffs are expected to act diligently and not sleep on their rights. Statutes of limitation are an incentive for plaintiffs to bring suit in a timely fashion: M.(K.) v. M.(H.), at para. 24.

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

Analysis

[39] This motion for summary judgment is brought under Rule 20 of the Rules of Civil Procedure, R.R.O. 1990, Reg. 1994.

[40] The Plaintiffs argue there are genuine issues requiring a trial, including: the state of the Plaintiffs' knowledge of the Certificates such to give rise to a laches defence as raised by the Defendant, whether the Defendant's conduct contributed to the conduct attributed to the Plaintiffs to give rise to the defence of laches, whether the Defendant paid the Plaintiffs the principal or interest on the Certificates, whether the Certificates are demand notes upon which s. 22 of the Bills of Exchange Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. B-4, and s. 5(3) of the Limitation Act, 2002 apply.

[41] The Defendant submits there is no genuine issue requiring a trial because the evidence clearly establishes the limitation period to commence this action expired in 1995, at the latest. The Plaintiffs had knowledge of the Certificates as early as 1989, and they delayed unreasonably in the bringing this action for over 23 years, to the prejudice of Home Trust. Both the expiry of the limitation period and the doctrine of laches bar this action.

[42] In Hryniak v Maudlin, 2014 SCC 7, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 87, the Supreme Court of Canada overturned the "full appreciation" test promoted by the Ontario Court of Appeal in summary judgment matters. The Supreme Court held there is no genuine issue requiring a trial when the judge is able to reach a fair and just determination on the merits. A trial is not required if a summary judgment motion achieves a fair and just adjudication, allows the judge to make the necessary findings of fact and apply the law to those facts, and is a proportionate, more expeditious and less expensive means to achieve a just result than going to trial.

[43] Judges must interpret summary judgment rules broadly, favouring proportionality and fair access to the affordable, timely and just adjudication of claims. On a motion for summary judgment, each side must put its best foot forward with respect to the existence or non-existence of material issues to be tried. A party is not entitled to sit back and rely on the possibility that more favourable facts may develop at trial. The motions court is entitled to assume the evidence contained in the record is all the evidence the parties would rely on if the matter proceeded to trial.

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

[44] A defendant may move for summary judgment on the basis that the statutory limitation period applicable to a claim has expired. To resist an order for summary judgment on a limitation period issue, the plaintiff must satisfy the court that there are material facts to be tried as to when the cause of action arose and must also demonstrate that there is a real chance of success at a trial of the issue. The plaintiff must present the court with coherent evidence showing a genuine issue for trial.

[45] I am satisfied that these issue can be dealt with on the record presented here in this motion.

[46] Two preliminary matters affecting the applicable limitation period must be addressed. First, I must determine whether the Certificates of Deposit are demand obligations. Second, I must determine whether the Certificates of Deposit are promissory notes.

Are the Certificates of Deposit demand obligations?

[47] The short answer is affirmative. The Certificates are demand obligations. In 2148251 Ontario Inc. v. Catan Canada Inc., 2013 ONSC 4049 (CanLII), at paras. 15-19, Sloan J. found the debt obligation at issue was a demand obligation despite appearing "to be a mixed obligation". Here, the Certificates have contingent obligation components – the specified maturity date – and demand obligation components – the "presentation and surrender" proviso. The Certificates do not specify when presentation must occur. They only say it must occur after the maturity date. As a result, the demand date is uncertain and what appears as a mixed obligation on the Certificates' face is properly construed as a demand obligation.

[48] A debt obligation is either a demand obligation, a contingent obligation, or possibly, a delayed-demand obligation: Catan Canada Inc., at para. 15.

[49] Sections 22 and 23 of the Bills of Exchange Act provide guidance to determining whether a debt obligation is a demand or contingent obligation: Skuy v. Greennough Harbour Corporation, 2012 ONSC 6998 (CanLII), at para. 31; Catan Canada, at para. 16. Section 22(1) states a "bill is payable on demand (a) that is expressed to be payable on demand or on presentation; or (b) in which no time for payment is expressed." Section 23 states a bill is "payable at a determinable future time, within the meaning of this Act, that is expressed to be payable (a) at sight or at a fixed period after date or sight; or (b) on or at a fixed period after the occurrence of a specified event that is certain to happen, though the time of happening is uncertain."

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

[50] In Skuy, at para. 31, Perell J. summarized some cases interpreting these sections: "[A] debt obligation that does not specify a date for repayment is a demand obligation. Where a debt obligation is payable on a fixed date, it is not a demand obligation, even if the obligation stipulates that the lender must give notice or make a demand for payment before enforcing the debt obligation." On the latter point, Perell J. noted, at para. 31, "This is an example of the confusing nature of the law because a non-demand obligation can have a demand component to it."

[51] Where no time is fixed for repayment of a loan, and no other terms are mentioned, the loan is repayable on demand: Wilkosz v. Amato, [1999] O.J. No. 1958, at para. 50.

[52] Here the Certificates specify September 29, 1988, as the maturity date. Based on that fact alone, they would not constitute demand obligations under s. 22(1)(a) because that section requires that the debt obligation express no payment time. However, despite specifying the maturity date, the Certificates may still constitute demand obligations because the Certificates require "presentation and surrender" to receive payment.

[53] In Catan Canada, Sloan J. had to interpret a promissory note with similar terms and concluded it was a demand obligation. The promissory note was "due 'on demand after the maturity date'". Sloan J. concluded, at para. 17, "[w]hile the maturity date presents a determinable future time, the addition of "on demand" clarifies that s. 23 does not apply. This is not a fixed period after a date, because the date of the demand is uncertain." The same applies here. Although the maturity date is a determinable future time, the "presentation" proviso is an express statement that the Certificates are demand obligations. The Certificates do not limit when after the maturity date the holder can demand payment. As a result, there is no fixed period after the specified date.

[54] Additionally, although the Certificates could be considered 'non-demand obligations with demand components', the case here is distinguishable from Berry v. IPC Securities Corp., [2009] O.J. No. 1598, the case to which Perell J. referred to in Skuy when stating non-demand obligations can have demand components.

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

[55] In Berry, the debt obligation was ruled a contingent obligation. However, in that case, the debt obligation's demand component only arose upon default in paying the principle or interest. Otherwise the debt obligation, which specified a payment date, was a non-demand obligation. Belobaba J. determined the default demand component did not render the non-demand obligation a demand obligation. At para. 17, Belobaba J. stated "[w]here a promissory note provides that it is to be payable upon demand upon a default occurring, this does not make it a demand note."

[56] In Berry, the demand component was a secondary component because the demand only arose on default. The case here is different. The demand components are inherent to the Certificates. The demands do not arise based on Home Trust's failure to pay back the deposit; rather the Certificate holder must make the demand to receive payment. As a result, the Certificates, while they mix contingent and demand components, constitute demand obligations.

Are the Certificates of Deposit promissory notes under the Bills of Exchange Act?

[57] Again, the response is affirmative. The Certificates are promissory notes under the Bills of Exchange Act. Section 176 defines a promissory note. Section 176 requires an agreement to have the following elements to qualify as a promissory note:

- An unconditional promise in writing made by one person to another;
- The maker's signature; and,
- The maker engages to pay, on demand or at a fixed determinable future time, a sum certain in money to, or to the order of, a specified person or bearer.

[58] The Certificates are in writing, they are promises Home Trust made to Ruth and Carl Urbas, and they are signed by Home Trust's representatives. The agreement stipulates Home Trust "hereby promises to pay" the holders "the principal sum … on the maturity date on presentation and surrender of this certificate." Further, the sum (principal and interest) is clearly set out in the agreement. From this it is evident the agreement is an unconditional promise to pay a certain sum of money, on demand or at a fixed time in the future, to a specified person.

[59] Further, s. 186(1) establishes the provisions of the Act relating to bills apply to promissory notes with necessary modifications and some exceptions.

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

[60] In 1988, when the Certificates were issued, Home Trust was legally known as Home Savings & Loan Corporation and was a loan corporation incorporated under the Loan and Trust Corporations Act, 1987, S.O. 1987, c.33.

[61] The Act provides that a registered provincial loan corporation may, in a debtor and creditor relationship for the purposes of investment, receive money, repayable upon the expiry of a fixed term, and the corporation may issue debentures or other evidences of indebtedness in respect thereof, appropriate to the debtor and creditor relationship created thereby: Loan and Trust Corporations Act, 1987, s. 155(1).

[62] I will now address the Defendant's argument that the Plaintiffs' claim should be barred. For the following reasons, I conclude the Plaintiffs' claim is barred because it was brought after the applicable limitation period expired and because the doctrine of laches and delay applies in this case.

The Plaintiffs brought the claim after the limitation period expired

[63] In this motion, the focus is on the Plaintiffs' discoverability of the cause of action. For this motion, several cases have been provided by the parties, on the issue of discoverability, albeit many of which are distinguishable on their particular facts. For example, in St. Jean v. Cheung, 2008 ONCA 815 (CanLII), the Court of Appeal held that the limitation period started to run from the time that the Plaintiff's litigation guardian and counsel received the medical records which, had they been reviewed promptly, would have disclosed immediately the identities of the doctors and the postnatal care provided by them.

[64] The Limitations Act, 2002, contains provisions dealing with claims discovered prior to that Act coming into force. Section 24(3) provides:

> If the former limitation period expired before January 1, 2004, no proceeding shall be commenced in respect of the claim.

[65] Consequently, the former limitation periods established by the provisions of the Limitations Act, 1990 will only apply in the circumstances of this case if the limitation period expired before January 1, 2004.

[66] Section 45(1) of the Limitations Act, 1990 provides the following:

> The following actions shall be commenced within and not after the times respectively hereinafter mentioned …

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

> (g) an action for trespass to goods or land, simple contract or debt grounded upon any lending or contract without specialty, debt for arrears of rent, detinue, replevin or upon the case other than for slander, > within six years after the cause of action arose ….
>

[67] Any action on the Certificates is one of simple contract or debt and, therefore, section 45(1)(g) of the prior Act applies and the applicable limitation period for the commencement of this action is within six years after the cause of action arose.

[68] However, the question remains when did the cause of action arise?

[69] A loan payable on demand is payable immediately and the limitation period begins to run from the date of instrument: Bank of Montreal v. Stephen, [1990] N.B.J. No. 612 (C.A.). Notably, the Certificates do not contain any language providing for automatic renewal if the funds owing under them are not claimed after the stipulated maturity date.

[70] I find favour with the Defendant's position, which is supported by what little documentary evidence remains, that the Certificates matured in September 1988 and they did not remain with Home Trust after maturity. Nevertheless, the Defendant submits that the limitation period for any action on the Certificates would have started to run from their maturity on September 29, 1988.

[71] The relationship between Home Trust and the Plaintiffs with respect to the Certificates is that of debtor and creditor. Pursuant to the terms of the Certificates, Home Trust promised to pay the Plaintiffs the principal amount and accrued interest for the term of the deposit on the maturity date of September 29, 1988, with no further interest to accrue past the maturity date.

[72] The Plaintiffs' right to repayment of the amounts evidenced by the Certificates began on the maturity date, which was September 29, 1988.

[73] I accept that if the Certificate had been renewed beyond its maturity date, the T5 would have indicated an amount of interest greater than $1,459.97. Moreover, if the Certificate of Deposit had been renewed, or otherwise continued to exist with Home Trust into 1989, Home Trust would have issued Ruth Urbas a T5 in respect of investment income earned in 1989.

[74] I am satisfied that for Ruth Urbas, the latest possible date for the commencement of the limitation period would be April 5, 1989. This is the date of the letter from her accountant, Priscilla Monteith, enclosing the 1988 tax return and T5 in relation to her Certificate.

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

[75] While the Plaintiffs have the original documents in their possession, I accept the evidence provided in Brian Mosko's affidavit that payment of the principle pursuant to the obligation can be made by way of bond.

[76] Mr. Mosko's affidavit stated, at para. 43, where a Certificate of Deposit was lost or mislaid, the process to redeem the amount owing was for the client to sign a bond of indemnity.

[77] Further, I do not accept that the Defendant merely sat with these funds unaccounted for over 20 years without due regard for statutory compliance. This appears to defy the statutory obligations imposed on the Defendant.

[78] Based on the above analysis and findings, the limitation period started running in 1988 or, at the latest, 1989. Since the claim arose before January 1, 2004, the former limitation period of 6 years applies. This means the limitation period expired well before January 1, 2004, and therefore, the Plaintiffs' claim is statute barred.

Laches and Delay also bars the Plaintiffs' claim

[79] Laches is established when two conditions are fulfilled: (1) there is unreasonable delay in the commencement or prosecution of proceedings; and (2) in all of the circumstances the consequences of delay renders the grant of relief unreasonable or unjust: Rhyolite Resources Inc. v. CanQuest Resource Corp., [1999] B.C.J. No. 114 (C.A.), at para. 33.

[80] There are two distinct branches to the laches doctrine. The doctrine will apply where the delay of the plaintiff (a) constitutes acquiescence, or (b) results in circumstances that make the prosecution of the action unreasonable: M.(K.) v. M.(H.), at para. 98.

[81] Mere delay is insufficient to trigger laches under either of its two branches. Rather, the doctrine of laches considers whether the delay of the plaintiff constitutes acquiescence or results in circumstances that make the prosecution of the action unreasonable. Ultimately, laches must be resolved as a matter of justice as between the parties, as is the case with any equitable doctrine. The court in exercising its equitable jurisdiction must always consider the conscionability of the behaviour of both parties.

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

[82] “Acquiescence” has various meanings. One meaning is that a plaintiff stands by and watches the deprivation of her rights and does nothing. Another is that after the deprivation of her rights and in the full knowledge of their existence, a plaintiff delays, leading to an inference that her rights have been waived: M.(K.) v. M.(H.), at para. 100

[83] A plaintiff’s knowledge of her rights is critical to the notion of acquiescence; however, this knowledge is to be measured by an objective standard so that the question is whether it is reasonable for the plaintiff to be ignorant of her legal rights given her knowledge of the underlying facts relevant to a possible legal claim.

[84] Here, the Plaintiffs knew or ought to have known of their alleged rights for payment under the Certificates as early as 1988 or 1989 when T5s were issued to them and the T5 income was reported on their tax returns for 1988. The Plaintiffs’ communication with their accountant also supports finding they had sufficient knowledge about the existence and nature of the Certificates.

[85] The Defendant submits that, despite having full knowledge of the Certificates, the Plaintiffs stood by and delayed making a claim for payment (assuming no payment was made which the evidence does not support) from 1988 to 2011 – a period of over 23 years. Home Trust submits that in so doing, the Plaintiffs waived any rights they might have had.

[86] Further, I agree with the Defendant that there is prejudice in this case due to the extended passage of time. I do not accept the Plaintiffs’ argument that the Defendant has an onus to preserve documents or to advance the case.

[87] I accept the evidence provided by the Defendants in Mr. Mosko’s affidavit at paras. 42-45. Many of the documents relevant to the action have been destroyed. Any record the Plaintiffs signed a bond of indemnity would have been destroyed in 2008. Records of calls and letters seeking to contact clients regarding unclaimed debts have also been destroyed. Further, no record of the Plaintiffs’ names could be found after searching the Defendant’s records.

[88] Clearly, the Defendant was entitled to destroy records after the passage of a reasonable period of time, in this case, 20 years.

[89] Additionally, the Defendant is further prejudiced by the unfortunate fact that Ruth Urbas passed away and therefore the Defendant could not examine her.

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

[90] Based on all of the above, I find the action is barred by the doctrine of laches.

Conclusion

[91] On this motion for summary judgment I find that the Plaintiffs failed to commence their action against the Defendant within the time frame set out in the Limitations Act, 2002 and as such are out of time.

[92] For the aforementioned reasons, this motion can be determined by summary judgment under Rule 20.01. There is no genuine issue requiring a trial with respect to whether the action against the Defendant is statue-barred pursuant to the Limitations Act, 2002. I am also satisfied that the Plaintiffs have failed in their claim for equitable relief.

[93] The Defendant's motion for summary judgment is granted.

[94] If the parties cannot agree on the issue of costs, I will consider brief written submissions. These cost memoranda shall not exceed three pages in length (not including any bill of costs or offers to settle). The Defendant shall file its costs submissions within 10 days of the date of this endorsement. The Plaintiffs may file their costs submissions within 10 days of the receipt of the Defendant's materials. The Defendant may file a reply within five days thereafter.

Justice A. J. Goodman

Date: October 23, 2015

2015 ONSC 6399 (CanLII)

Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta

Citation: Weatherford Canada Partnership v Addie, 2016 ABQB 188

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

Date: 20160407
Docket: 0603 04628
Registry: Edmonton

Between:

Weatherford Canada Partnership

Plaintiff/respondent

- and -

Dave Addie, David Anderson, Glen Kinnee, Ted Harland, Dan Endersby, Midfield Supply ULC, Midfield Supply International Ltd., Dale Denney, Douglas Golledge, John Letwinetz, Rick Endersby, Jakob Ambrosius, Artemis Kautschuk und Kunstoff-Technik GmbH, Wilhelm Kaechele GmbH, West Met Tools & Machinery Ltd., and Europump Systems Inc.

Defendants/applicants

Memorandum of Decision of the Honourable Madam Justice J.B. Veit

---

Summary

[1] In this special chambers application, Artemis and Kaechele ask the court for leave to amend their statements of defence to plead that Weatherford's claim against them is barred by the Limitations Act, and, if the applications for amendment are granted, for summary judgment against Weatherford.

[2] The parties agree, in large part, on the applicable law. Insofar as amendments to pleadings are concerned, the parties agree that, although applications for amendment need only cross a low bar, amendments should not be allowed, amongst other reasons, if they cause the party opposite prejudice which cannot be compensated by costs or if the proposed amendments are hopeless. Weatherford argues that they would suffer prejudice if the amendments were allowed because Weatherford is now unable to serve its 2007 statement of claim which did name the applicants as defendants; Weatherford also claims that the applications are too late given that a trial date in early 2017 has already been set.

[3] Insofar as applications for summary judgment are concerned, the parties agree that there has been a shift in the legal culture which now supports the granting of summary judgment in situations where uncontroverted evidence establishes that there is no genuine issue for trial. The applicants' application for summary judgment on a limitations basis is grounded in records produced by Weatherford in 2015, pursuant to court order, which disclosed internal Weatherford communications from November 2005. The applicants contend that the 2005 records establish, in light of all of the circumstances previously known, that Weatherford knew, by November 30, 2005, or in any event not later than March 31, 2006, of the issues which it raised in its Amended Amended Amended Statement of Claim filed April 7, 2008. The applicants assert that Weatherford understood the limitations issues because Weatherford acknowledged that Q.B. action 0703 13544 filed by Weatherford on October 23, 2007 – which named the applicants as defendants but which was never served on the applicants - had been filed to "preserve [its] position". Finally, the applicants argue that, because Weatherford deliberately chose not to serve its 2007 claim, it effectively chose not to initiate proceedings against them for tactical business reasons. The defendants therefore argue that they are entitled to rely on what they characterize as Weatherford's laches and acquiescence, together with s. 10 of the Limitations Act, to obtain limitations immunity from Weatherford's claims.

[4] Weatherford opposes the applications for summary judgment on the basis that there are issues of fact and law which genuinely require a trial. In particular, Weatherford highlights that:

- the Artemis defence does not explicitly refer to laches and acquiescence and therefore those issues should not be considered on Artemis' application;
- the amendment relating to laches and acquiescence is largely hopeless because it provides a defence only to equitable claims and Weatherford's claims are largely legal rather than equitable;
- in any event, the Kaechele application is hopeless because it does not provide evidence that Kaechele altered its conduct in any way in reliance on anything said or done by Weatherford;
- the facts surrounding the issue of when Weatherford had sufficient knowledge of the involvement of the applications are complex. Weatherford maintains that it was not until June 2006, when Weatherford saw one of its stators in the yard of a competitor in Lloydminster that it obtained the requisite knowledge to sue the applicants;
- if the court should find that Weatherford did not amend its claim to add the applicants to the main action within two years of the date on which it had sufficient knowledge of its cause of action, s. 6 of the Limitations Act allows it to add the applicants to its action even after the expiry of two years.
- in any event, at no time did Weatherford ever conduct itself in a manner or represent to the applicants that it intended to abandon its legal rights and remedies against them;

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

- Weatherford's "contingency plan" or "replication project" was undertaken in direct response to the perceived threat that the applicants may be involved in supplying the startup competitor;
- also, Weatherford maintains that the applicants themselves did not have the "clean hands" required by equity: at the same time as Weatherford was taking steps to strengthen its relationship with each of them, the applicants were, separately, negotiating with the startup to be involved with the competing business in some way;
- the destruction by Dunn of the notes of his meetings with the defendants Addie and Anderson is not spoliation because Dunn took those notes personally and not during the course of his employment with Weatherford.

[5] The applications for amendments of the statements of defence are allowed. Weatherford has not established that it would suffer prejudice of the type required if the amendments are allowed: these amendments are not the reason why Weatherford is unable to serve its 2007 statement of claim. Weatherford chose to discontinue its 2007 action without any encouragement from the applicants. Although the amendments are late, in the circumstances, Weatherford had a full opportunity to respond to the issues raised in those amendments.

[6] The proposed amendments are not hopeless: in this context, the equitable doctrines of laches and acquiescence are potentially applicable to legal claims as well as to equitable ones.

[7] The applications for summary judgment are allowed. Spoliation, as an evidentiary concept, is not applicable here against Weatherford: the evidence does not establish that, when the senior Weatherford employee Dunn destroyed records of his meetings with the defendants Addie and Anderson, he did so "to affect the litigation".

[8] A review of the uncontested evidence establishes that Weatherford had all the information it required to sue the applicants by November 30, 2005 or March 31, 2006 at the latest. In all the circumstances, the November 25, 2005 email provided Weatherford with more than a mere suspicion of the alleged wrongful activities of the applicants. Therefore, Weatherford has failed to meet the s. 3 limitations deadline.

[9] Although Weatherford's 2008 added claim to its original pleading does relate to the conduct described in the original pleading, because of the equitable doctrines of acquiescence and laches outlined in s. 10 of the Limitations Act, the applicants are granted immunity from liability that would otherwise apply as a result of the application of the curative provisions of s. 6(4) of the Limitations Act. While the original pleading was in effect, Weatherford, a sophisticated litigant, knew of the limitations issue, but deliberately chose not to serve its 2007 statement of claim naming the applicants as defendants for the tactical reason of maintaining a supply of stators from the applicants until it could replicate the German stators. In those circumstances, it would be unequitable to allow Weatherford to benefit from the curative provisions of s. 6(4) of the Limitations Act.

Cases and authority cited

[10] By Artemis Kautschuk und Kunstoff-Technik GmbH: Weatherford Canada Partnership v Addie, 2009, ABQB 39; Weatherford Canada Partnership v Addie, 2012 ABQB 215; Alberta Rules of Court, Alta Reg 124/2010; Provalcid Inc. v Graff, 2015 ABQB 574; Hryniak v Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7; Templanza v Wolfman, 2016 ABCA 1; Elkow v Sana, 2015 ABQB 803; Sticks and Stones Communications Inc. v Hole's Greenhouses & Gardens Ltd.,

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

2015 ABQB 774; Limitations Act, RSA 2000, c L-12; Central Trust Co. v Rafuse, [1986] 2 SCR 147; Quadrangle Holdings Limited v Coady, 2012 ABQB 22; De Shazo v Nations Energy Company, 2005 ABCA 241; Mohr v 477470 Alberta Ltd., 2003 ABQB 294; Goldencare Holdings Inc. v Manu Chugh Architect Ltd., 2006 ABQB 696; Rosenich v. Welke, 2003 CarswellAlta 1888; Leokadia Contracting Ltd. v Sabre Plumbing Services Inc., 2012 ABQB 585; Jacqueleyne Poff v Great Northern Data Supplies (AB) Ltd., 2015 ABQB 173; Hunter Financial Group Ltd. v Maritime Life Assurance Co., 2007 ABQB 263; Brough v Yipp, 2014 ABQB 777; Desoto Resources Ltd. v EnCana Corp., 2010 ABCA 110; S. (C.H.) v Alberta (Director of Child Welfare), 2006 ABQB 528; Barker v Budget Rent-A-Car of Edmonton Ltd., 2012 ABCA 76; Castledowns Law Office Management Ltd. v FastTrack Technologies Inc., 2012 ABCA 219; 681210 Alberta Ltd. v Hunter, 2012 ABCA 83 (Alta. C.A.); North American Road Ltd. v Hitachi Construction Machinery Co, 200B5 ABQB 847; McDougall v Black & Decker Canada Inc., 2008 ABCA 353; Schnick v Rosen 2009 ABQB 189; Great-West Life Assurance Company v King 2013 ABQB 529; Devon Canada Corporation v Canadian Pacific Railway Co 2009 ABQB 143; Barker v Budget Rent-A-Car of Edmonton Ltd. 2011 ABQB 127

[11] By Wilhelm Kaechele GmbH: Balm v 3512061 Canada Ltd. 2003 ABCA 98; Canada Deposit Insurance Corporation v Canadian Commercial Bank 2000 ABQB 440; Boyd v Cook 2013 ABCA 399; Canadian National Resources Limited v Jensen Resources Ltd. 2013 ABCA 27; M.(H.) v M.(K.) [1992] 3 SCR 6; Manitoba Metis Foundation Inc. v Canada (Attorney General) 2013 SCC 14; Zurich Insurance Co. v TD General Insurance Co. 2014 ONSC 3191; Lac Minerals Ltd. v International Corona Resources Ltd. [1980] 2 S.C.R. 574; Perry, Farley, & Onyschuck v Outerbridge Management Ltd. [2001] O.J. No. 1698; Hryniak v Maudlin 2014 SCC 7.

[12] By Weatherford Canada Partnership: Weatherford Canada Partnership v Artemis Katschuk und Kunstoff-Technik GmbH et al, 2009 ABCA 195; Weatherford Canada Partnership v Addie, 2011 ABQB 562; Weatherford Canada Partnership v Dave Addie et al, 2009 ABQB 538; Balm v 3512061 Canada Ltd., 2003 ABCA 98; Godhart v Westlake Developments Inc., 2015 ABQB 543; First Investors Corp. v Quinpak Development Ltd., 1985 CarswellAlta 72; Hryniak v Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7; Stoney First Nation v Imperial Oil Resources Limited, 2014 ABQB 408; Windsor v Canadian Pacific Railway Ltd., 2014 ABCA 108; WP v Alberta, 2014 ABCA 404; 776826 Alberta Ltd. v Ostrowercha, 2015 ABCA 49; Beier v Proper Cat Construction Ltd., 2013 ABQB 351; AT Films Inc. v AT Plastics Inc., 2014 ABQB 422; Condominium Plan 0125764 v Amber Equities Inc., 2015 ABQB 235; Meek (Trustee of) v San Jan Resources, 2005 ABCA 448; Atlanta Industrial Sales Ltd. v Emerald Management & Realty Ltd., 2006 ABQB 255; De Shazo v Nations Energy Co., 2005 ABCA 241; Sun Gro Horticultural Canada Ltd. v Abe's Door Service, 2005 ABQB 731, aff'd by 2006 ABCA 243; Poff v Great Northern Data Supplies (AB) Ltd., 2015 ABQB 173; Canadian National Resources Limited v Arcelormittal Tubular Products Roman SA, 2012 ABQB 679; Elbow River Marketing Limited Partnership v Canada Clean Fuels Inc., 2012 ABQB 277; McLaughlin v Broddy, 2006 ABQB 914; 681210 Alberta Ltd. v Hunter, 2012 ABCA 83; Intact Insurance Co. of Canada v Lombard General Insurance Co. of Canada, 2015 ONCA 764; Allen M. Linden, Lewis N. Klar, Q.C.R Bruce Feldthusen, Canadian Tort Law Cases, Notes & Materials; 13th ed. (Canada: LexisNexis Canada Inc., 2009); Saskatchewan River Bungalows Ltd. v Maritime Life Assurance Co., [1994] 2 SCR 490; Strand v Strand, 2014 ABQB 754; Zippy Print Enterprises Ltd. v Pawliuk, [1994] BCJ No. 2778; Ambrozic v Burcevski, 2008 ABCA 194; Seyedi v Nexen Inc. 2016 ABCA 24; Re: San Francisco Gifts Ltd. (Companies'

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

Creditors Arrangement Act) 2004 ABQB 229; Seyedi v Nexen 2016 ABCA 24; Alberta Law Reform Institute, Report No. 55, December 1989, Limitations;

[13] By the court: Chow-Hidasi v Hidasi 2013 BCCA 73; H.E. v M.M. 2015 ONCA 813; Steward v North Metropolitan Tramways Co. (1886) 16 Q.B.D. 556 (C.A.); Bhasin v Hrynew 2014 SCC 71; Ferreira v Macedo 2016 ONSC 951; Bark-Fong v Cooper (1913) 49 S.C.R. 14; Webster v Gelinas [1941] 4 D.L.R. 495; Silver Eagle Management Inc. v Onoway (Town) 2011 ABQB 139; Paniccia Estate v Toal 2012 ABCA 397; No Limits Sportswear v 0912139 B.C. Ltd. 2015 BCSC 1698, at paras. 23 ff.; Urbas Estate v Home Savings and Loan Corp. 2015 ONSC 6399; Rivergate Properties Inc. v West St. Paul (Rural Municipality) 2006 MBCA 76.

1. Background

a) Factual

[14] The general background to this application has been set out in previous decisions: 2009 ABQB 39; 2009 ABCA 195; 2009 ABQB 538; 2011 ABQB 562; 2012 ABQB 215.

[15] It is sufficient for the purposes of these applications to say that Weatherford is a manufacturer of progressing cavity pumps, hereafter PC pumps. Alberta is the world's biggest market for those pumps. Two of the key components of those pumps are stators and rotors; a PC pump stator is a steel tube with an elastomer lining into which a rotor is inserted. The elastomers used by stator manufacturers are generally proprietary to that manufacturer, and highly confidential. Stators and rotors are then combined with other components and assembled by various manufacturers, including Weatherford, and sold to end customers in the Alberta heavy oil industry including Husky Oil, CNRL, Encana, etc.

[16] Artemis and Kaechele are German stator manufacturers. Although other companies manufacture stators, including Weatherford itself both at its Edmonton Strathcona plant and at its plant in Brazil, the two German manufacturers have a certain "cachet" in the industry. Their stators have been particularly prized in the heavy oil industry. The two German stator manufacturers are competitors with one another in the stator industry. During the period in question, Weatherford had contracts with each of the applicants for the supply of stators. The contracts did not contain exclusive production clauses; that is, Weatherford had not contracted with either of the German manufacturers to produce stators only for Weatherford. The contracts did not contain clauses prohibiting reverse engineering; that is, Weatherford had not contracted with either of the German manufacturers to prevent them from reverse engineering or replicating the stators which they produced for Weatherford for other potential customers. Even after they were served with process in these proceedings, the German manufacturers did not refuse to supply Weatherford with any product ordered by Weatherford.

[17] There are many models of PC pumps available on the market; typically, the pump models are differentiated by the total daily volume which can pass through the pump. Artemis produces 9 models of stators which have been used by Weatherford; Kaechele produces 2 such models. The ability of a particular PC pump to pump larger or smaller volumes of fluid will depend on the size of the pump and the size of the cavities created by the juxtaposition of the stator and the rotor. The cavities, which are sometimes referred to as "interior geometries" of a PC pump, are therefore important to the utility of a pump. Stators are manufactured based on specifications set for internal geometries, that is the cavity created between the stator and the rotor, and specific elastomer formulations.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

[18] Because limitations is a key component of these applications, it is necessary to have a clear outline of the chronology of the relevant events.

[19] Starting in early 2005, two key Weatherford employees, the defendants Addie and Anderson, began to consider leaving Weatherford to start up a new company that would produce interchangeable components for PC pumps and would compete with Weatherford. They approached another senior Weatherford employee, Lonnie Dunn, to ask him to join them. Dunn met with them off and on during 2005. Beginning in February 2005, Mr. Dunn made informal notes of his meetings.

[20] Starting at the latest on February 3, 2005, Weatherford considered changing the business relationship it had had with Artemis for "the last couple of decades": Weatherford would approach Artemis with a sole source agreement proposal. The proposed agreement would include the following terms: confidentiality with respect to exchanged technical information; Weatherford would become Artemis' world-wide PC pumps distributor; and, Weatherford would commit to order a certain dollar amount of product per year. Weatherford was informed by Anderson on March 2, 2005, that Artemis was not interested in making any such agreement. Renewed interest in pursuing the possibility of coming to such an agreement with Artemis was expressed by Weatherford in November, 2005. See Tab Q of the Gillis affidavit.

[21] On October 14, 2005, Addie resigned from Weatherford.

[22] On October 25, 2005, Anderson resigned from Weatherford.

[23] At about the time when Addie and Anderson left Weatherford, Mr. Dunn decided not to join them.

[24] After Dunn decided to remain with Weatherford, he destroyed the notes he had made of his meetings with Addie and Anderson.

[25] In early November, 2005, Dunn confirmed with the Weatherford management that he had had discussions with Addie and Anderson regarding the setting up of a competing business.

[26] On November 25, 2005, Lonnie Dunn, a key employee of Weatherford being the engineer who was responsible for the technical side of Weatherford's PC pump operation and a man who routinely dealt with each of the German applicants, wrote a detailed email to Bill Lane, the Vice-President of Weatherford, (see tab K, Gillis affidavit filed January 25, 2016) which included the following comments:

> As you know I have been aware of the situation developing for some time but conflicted on whether or not to take advantage of my knowledge and begin working against it. About a month ago after evaluating both sides I decided I would not participate and in light of what I saw going from the other side decided it was appropriate to begin doing some of the background work in confidence that would be required going forward. Some of the details on the consolidated product line, new stator and rotor production numbers and costs and pump configurations that I provided you and we discussed when you were here a few weeks ago were the result of that work. . . As a result of my situation I have given this much thought both in terms of what I would do if I was on either side. I wanted to share some of this with you as it may provide additional perspective for you to consider. Note that these are purely my opinions and for the most part were formulated upon my interpretation of the overall situation as opposed to my insider knowledge. Now that this is out in the open I feel like I can openly express my thoughts as the same thing would have happened had I not known in advance it would have just taken me longer to get to this point. Given that timing will be critical here and I am away next week I did not want to let any more time slip away. . . . The whole premise of the start-up's plan revolves around their existing relationships with customers and their ability to obtain and supply the rotor and stator product that still comprises the majority of the Canadian business. . . .The second part revolves around their access to the exact same pump product that the customers are using already and their knowledge that most of them are not comfortable with the high percentage of the business that we have. One thing I know that has concerned them is that over time the Strathcona product is cannibalizing the historical German product and beginning to differentiate itself in terms of performance . . . They will offer the exact same product and try to convince the customers that ours is different and unproven especially if we bring it in from Brazil. . . [t]hey will get stators from Artemis and Kaechele and rotors from . . . [f]rom the assembly end of things they only [need] . . . to deal with welding, phasing and testing which is relatively routine and it is not unrealistic that a small assembly operation can be set up in three months. That timing would be good as one would assume they have already ordered product from Artemis and Kaechele so it will arrive in about three months (early March). . . Obviously we need a strategy to complete [sic] with them as if we are offering the same product at the same price and they have the relationships we will lose a large portion of the business within six to nine months as they ramp-up capacity. . . If we are to compete on price over the long term we can't continue to offer the German . . . product as since these companies are tied in with the start-up they will get preferential pricing even if we are ordering higher quantities. . . . One thing working in our favour is being vertically integrated we should be more efficient and have better flexibility. Although all these companies are all working together they are comprised of manufacturers (Artemis, Kaechele . . .) an assembly operation (the start-up pump company) and a distributor . . . who all need to get their piece of the pie. . . . However, Artemis and Kaechele are legitimate businesses that need to make money and based on my conversations with . . . and . . . they have been squeezed quite tight over the last few years by Dave. . . . The success of our pricing opportunity in the heavy oil market lies in utilizing our internal manufacturing to reduce cost and maintain margins. . . . Note that I am not suggesting an abrupt change in supply chain but rather phasing one or perhaps both German suppliers over time (one possibility although remove [sic] would be that the Germans would cut us off and I suspect . . . will do that regardless). . . . . With this situation now in the open John will be able to factor those scenarios into the AFEs he has been working on for new rotor and stator manufacturing equipment. . . . On the technical side there would also be an extensive reengineering effort required to develop interchangeable conventional stators but it is not insurmountable as we have become very good at this by moving several German models here already . . . This situation becomes very complicated because the timing is critical and most of the options we have will take considerable time. To make matters worse the competition is already moving . . . Since we have to anticipate competition from early March there is no possibility of us being able to replace any significant German production by then as the earliest we could have stators coming back from Brazil is about four to five months and a new extruder and associated capacity here in Canada about six to eight months. As such we need to continue our relationship with the Germans for at least three to four months after which > even if we stop ordering the product on . . . and in inventory would carry us through. If we require this working relationship with the Germans it likely impacts how aggressive we want to get in terms of going after them for using our technology/designs which in turn could potentially slow down the start-up. . . .

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

>
> [Emphasis added]

[27] On December 19, 2005, Lonnie Dunn sent an email to Bill Lane, Bob McNair, Jeff Lembcke, Roland Moneta, and John Baker, all of whom are part of the management team of Weatherford. The email is entitled "Approval for Engineering Costs Associated with Strathcona Replication of German PCP Product Line", can be found at tab T of Mr. Gillis' affidavit, and includes the following:

> In follow up to the discussion in our last conference call we have now moved into active development on the project to replicate the German PCP product line at Strathcona. . . . Whereas normally these developments would be individually documented and justified through the Project and Project databases and Stage Gate Development Process, for confidentiality we have agreed to replace this formal process with a single e-mail approval based on the following . . . .
>
> [Emphasis added]

Every addressee approved Dunn's proposal. Bill Lane's email reads: "Excellent detail and plan. Approved. Full speed ahead." It goes without saying that the German manufacturers were not informed by Weatherford of its replication project.

[28] On January 11-13, 2006, Bill Lane travelled to Germany to meet with each of the applicants separately. Lane did not discuss Weatherford's replication project with the Germans.

[29] While the Weatherford team was in Kaechele's boardroom, the principal of Kaechele accidentally brought up onto a motorized whiteboard an outline of information relating to Europump. He was greatly embarrassed by this; being unable to remove the offending panel, eventually pulled the plug out of the wall in order to remove the information. In a written thank you note for the hospitality which they had received in Germany, Lane referred to this incident only obliquely by referring to the fact that he realized that Weatherford had competitors.

[30] On January 11, 2006, Lane visited the Artemis headquarters and assured himself that Artemis would continue to supply Weatherford with stators. However, Artemis continued to refuse to enter into a new, more circumscribed arrangement with Weatherford.

[31] In early 2006, that is at some time in the first quarter of 2006, Weatherford received, from one of its customers, a Europump spec sheet relating to rotors; see Dunn's questioning, October 21, 2014, at page 2123/4.

[32] On January 30, 2006, Dunn sent one of his regular, typically monthly, updating emails to Weatherford's management about the replication of the German products. That update contained the following information and recommendations:

> While it was important to kick this off aggressively it appears now that we are unlikely to suffer an immediate supply disruption and as such I would like to propose we back off on my very aggressive initial schedule. . . . . This will also allow me to focus on the Brazil development aspect as well as beginning to look at the strategy through which we can differentiate our internal products (Strathcona and Brazil) from the German products.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

[33] On February 26-28, 2006, Dunn prepared a chronological history of his dealings with Addie and Anderson.

[34] On April 11, 2006, Weatherford filed its statement of claim in this action against a number of defendants, not including the applicants. The statement of claim did, however, recite the defendants Addie and Anderson's relationships to the applicants:

> 12. Addie was a director and shareholder . . . . in BMW Monarch . . . BMW Monarch was a distributor of PC Pumps manufactured by Weatherford or its predecessors . . .
>
> 13. Addie, . . . subsequently formed a company called BMW Pump Inc. . .
>
> 14. Shortly after BMW Pump was formed, Anderson left his position with Weatherford to join BMW Pump as its Chief Engineer. . . . While with BMW Pump, Anderson made arrangements to obtain parts used for the assembly of BMW Pump products directly from supplier who supplied parts to Weatherford's PC Pump operating unit, including ARTEMIS Kautschuk und Kunstoff-Technik GmbH ("Artemis") and Wilhelm Kaechele GmbH ("Kaechele") both of which were (and continue to be) based in Germany and supplied (and continue to supply) Weatherford with stators manufactured to Weatherford's confidential and proprietary specifications . . . . Stators and rotors are key components used in the manufacturing of PC Pumps.
>
> 15. BMW Monarch and BMW Pump became competitors of Weatherford.
>
> 16. On October 9, 1997 Weatherford . . . acquired both BMW Pump and BMW Monarch by purchasing all of the shares of those companies . . . Weatherford paid Addie $1,714,286.00 for his interest in BMW Monarch and $4,883,721.00 for his interest in BMW Pump. Anderson was paid $4,883,721.00 for his interest in BMW Pump.
>
> . . .
>
> 28. Addie and Anderson had extensive and recurring contact with key suppliers of Weatherford around the world including Artemis, Kaechele and . . ., in the course of which Addie and Anderson gained and used an intimate knowledge of those suppliers' special needs, preferences, idiosyncrasies and plans.
>
> 29. Addie and Anderson had direct contact and dealings with Weatherford's key suppliers in relation to both field and shop testing of PC Pump prototypes. Both Addie and Anderson encouraged and facilitated the sharing of Weatherford confidential and proprietary information with Artemis, Kaechele and . . .
>
> . . .
>
> 58. While still employed with Weatherford . . . . Addie and Anderson . . . devised and carried out a plan to attempt to cripple Weatherford's PC Pump business while at the same time furthering the interests of [Addie and Anderson and others] by engaging, directly or indirectly, in the following wrongful acts:
>
> > a) incorporating ABC Co. Ltd. Through which the Defendants . . . are or will be manufacturing, assembling and supplying PC Pumps and PC Pump components for supply to . . . in competition with Weatherford, using Weatherford confidential and proprietary information in the possession of Addie, Anderson . . . and in the possession of Weatherford suppliers, Artemis, Kaechele, . . .

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

> b) inducing or attempting to induce . . . suppliers or other persons with whom Weatherford has relationships relating to the research, design, development, manufacturing, supply, sales and service of PC Pumps and PC Pump components to alter, leave or terminate their relationships with Weatherford;
>
> . . .
>
> f) inducing or attempting to induce suppliers of Weatherford to provide PC Pumps and PC Pump components to the Defendants, . . . which PC Pumps and PC Pump components are manufactured using Weatherford confidential and proprietary information;
>
> . . .
>
> 59. In carrying out their wrongful acts, [the defendants Addie and Anderson or others] directly or indirectly:
>
> . . .
>
> b) arranged with Weatherford's suppliers, Artemis, Kaechele, . . . to cease doing business with Weatherford or, alternatively, to supply ABC Co. Ltd., . . . or others with rotors and stators manufactured to Weatherford's confidential and proprietary specifications in order to allow ABC Co. Ltd., . . and others to supply and offer to supply PC Pumps and PC Pump components to Weatherford customers;

[35] "ABC Co. Ltd." mentioned in the pleading has now been identified as Europump.

[36] In early June, 2006. Weatherford states that it saw some of its stators in a Europump yard in Lloydminster.

[37] On October 23, 2007, Weatherford filed a new action against the same defendants as in its 2006 statement of claim, in virtually the same terms as the 2006 statement of claim, but also naming Artemis and Kaechele as defendants. That statement of claim was never served on the applicants.

[38] On January 18, 2008, Weatherford filed an application to amend its 2006 statement of claim, i.e. the claim in this proceeding, inter alia by adding Artemis and Kaechele as defendants.

[39] On March 31, 2008, the case management judge permitted Weatherford to amend its statement of claim, inter alia by adding Artemis and Kaechele as defendants.

[40] On April 7, 2008, Weatherford filed its Amended Amended Amended Statement of Claim in this action, which named these applicants as defendants.

[41] On May 14, 2008 Weatherford was granted leave by the case management judge to serve the applicants outside Canada.

[42] On June 3, 2008, Weatherford notified Artemis and Kaechele of the amended statement of claim naming them as defendants and of the issuance of an order allowing Weatherford to serve Artemis and Kaechele in Germany. In August 2008, Artemis and Kaechele were served with the amended statement of claim naming them as defendants and the order permitting Weatherford to serve Artemis and Kaechele in Germany.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

[43] On September 25 and October 27, 2008, Artemis and Kaechele filed applications to set aside the order for service outside Canada.

[44] On January 23, 2009, on the application of Artemis and Kaechele, the order for service outside of Canada was set aside.

[45] On April 22, 2009, Weatherford discontinued its 2007 action.

[46] On May 29, 2009, the Court of Appeal overturned the Q.B. order which had set aside the order for service ex juris.

[47] On January 28, 2011, Artemis and Kaechele file applications for summary judgment; those applications were dismissed by the case management judge: 2011 ABQB 562.

[48] The trial of this action has now been set to begin on January 16, 2017; it is expected that the trial will last approximately 4 months.

b) Legislative

[49] The applicable provisions of the Limitations Act are:

> s.3 Limitation periods
>
> 3(1) Subject to subsections (1.1) and (1.2) and section 11, if a claimant does not seek a remedial order within
>
> > (a) 2 years after the date on which the claimant first knew, or in the circumstances ought to have known,
> >
> > > (i) that the injury for which the claimant seeks a remedial order had occurred,
> > >
> > > (ii) that the injury was attributable to conduct of the defendant, and
> > >
> > > (iii) that the injury, assuming liability on the part of the defendant, warrants bringing a proceeding,
> > >
> > > or
> >
> > (b) 10 years after the claim arose,
>
> whichever period expires first, the defendant, on pleading this Act as a defence, is entitled to immunity from liability in respect of the claim.
>
> (1.1) If a claimant who is liable as a tort-feasor in respect of injury does not seek a remedial order to recover contribution under section 3(1)(c) of the Tort-feasors Act against a defendant, whether as a joint tort-feasor or otherwise, within
>
> > (a) 2 years after
> >
> > > (i) the later of
> > >
> > > > (A) the date on which the claimant was served with a pleading by which a claim for the injury is brought against the claimant, and
> > > >
> > > > (B) the date on which the claimant first knew, or in the circumstances ought to have known, that the defendant was liable in respect of the injury or would have been liable in respect of the injury if the defendant had been sued within the limitation period provided by subsection (1) by the person who suffered the injury, if the claimant has been served with a pleading described in paragraph (A), or

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

(ii) the date on which the claimant first had or in the circumstances ought to have had the knowledge described in subclause (i)(B), if the claimant has not been served with a pleading described in subclause (i)(A),

or

(b) 10 years after the claim for contribution arose,

whichever period expires first, the defendant, on pleading this Act as a defence, is entitled to immunity from liability in respect of the claim for contribution.

(1.2) For greater certainty, no claim for contribution against a defendant in respect of damage referred to in section 3(1)(c) of the Tort-feasors Act is barred by the expiry of a limitation period within which the person who suffered that damage could seek a remedial order.

(2) The limitation period provided by subsection (1)(a) or (1.1)(a) begins

(a) against a successor owner of a claim when either a predecessor owner or the successor owner of the claim first acquired or ought to have acquired the knowledge prescribed in subsection (1)(a) or (1.1)(a),

(b) against a principal when either

(i) the principal first acquired or ought to have acquired the knowledge prescribed in subsection (1)(a) or (1.1)(a), or

(ii) an agent with a duty to communicate the knowledge prescribed in subsection (1)(a) or (1.1)(a) to the principal, first actually acquired that knowledge,

and

(c) against a personal representative of a deceased person as a successor owner of a claim, at the earliest of the following times:

(i) when the deceased owner first acquired or ought to have acquired the knowledge prescribed in subsection (1)(a) or (1.1)(a), if the deceased owner acquired the knowledge more than 2 years before the deceased owner's death;

(ii) when the representative was appointed, if the representative had the knowledge prescribed in subsection (1)(a) or (1.1)(a) at that time;

(iii) when the representative first acquired or ought to have acquired the knowledge prescribed in subsection (1)(a) or (1.1)(a), if the representative acquired the knowledge after being appointed.

(3) For the purposes of subsections (1)(b) and (1.1)(b),

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

(a) a claim or any number of claims based on any number of breaches of duty, resulting from a continuing course of conduct or a series of related acts or omissions, arises when the conduct terminates or the last act or omission occurs;

(b) a claim based on a breach of a duty arises when the conduct, act or omission occurs;

(c) a claim based on a demand obligation arises when a default in performance occurs after a demand for performance is made;

(d) a claim in respect of a proceeding under the Fatal Accidents Act arises when the conduct that causes the death, on which the claim is based, occurs;

(e) a claim for contribution arises when the claimant for contribution is made a defendant in respect of, or incurs a liability through the settlement of, a claim seeking to impose a liability on which the claim for contribution can be based, whichever first occurs;

(f) a claim for a remedial order for the recovery of possession of real property arises when the claimant is dispossessed of the real property.

. . .

s. 6 Claims added to a proceeding

6(1) Notwithstanding the expiration of the relevant limitation period, when a claim is added to a proceeding previously commenced, either through a new pleading or an amendment to pleadings, the defendant is not entitled to immunity from liability in respect of the added claim if the requirements of subsection (2), (3) or (4) are satisfied.

(2) When the added claim

(a) is made by a defendant in the proceeding against a claimant in the proceeding, or

(b) does not add or substitute a claimant or a defendant, or change the capacity in which a claimant sues or a defendant is sued, the added claim must be related to the conduct, transaction or events described in the original pleading in the proceeding.

(3) When the added claim adds or substitutes a claimant, or changes the capacity in which a claimant sues,

(a) the added claim must be related to the conduct, transaction or events described in the original pleading in the proceeding,

(b) the defendant must have received, within the limitation period applicable to the added claim plus the time provided by law for the service of process, sufficient knowledge of the added claim that the defendant will not be prejudiced in maintaining a defence to it on the merits, and

(c) the court must be satisfied that the added claim is necessary or desirable to ensure the effective enforcement of the claims originally asserted or intended to be asserted in the proceeding.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

(4) When the added claim adds or substitutes a defendant, or changes the capacity in which a defendant is sued,

(a) the added claim must be related to the conduct, transaction or events described in the original pleading in the proceeding, and

(b) the defendant must have received, within the limitation period applicable to the added claim plus the time provided by law for the service of process, sufficient knowledge of the added claim that the defendant will not be prejudiced in maintaining a defence to it on the merits.

(5) Under this section,

(a) the claimant has the burden of proving

(i) that the added claim is related to the conduct, transaction or events described in the original pleading in the proceeding, and

(ii) that the requirement of subsection (3)(c), if in issue, has been satisfied,

and

(b) the defendant has the burden of proving that the requirement of subsection (3)(b) or (4)(b), if in issue, was not satisfied….

. . .

s. 10 Acquiescence or laches

Nothing in this Act precludes a court from granting a defendant immunity from liability under the equitable doctrines of acquiescence or laches, notwithstanding that the defendant would not be entitled to immunity pursuant to this Act.

2. Procedural issues

[50] At the outset of the hearing, the parties raised several procedural issues. At the conclusion of the hearing of submissions on those issues, I reserved a decision until the conclusion of the hearing when I would address those issues in my substantive decision.

[51] Overall on the procedural issues, I have concluded that no evidence which has been led by any party on this application should be excluded from consideration for technical reasons. Rather, the court will consider all of the material submitted, having in mind, of course, that, generally, evidence which is developed contemporaneously and which is independent is more weighty than evidence which is produced after time for consideration and by the party tendering the evidence. At this stage, I will make general comments about each of the main procedural issues; as I discuss each of the substantive issues, I may come back to comment on the procedural issues which affect the substantive results.

i) Filing of Bill Lane's February,2016, affidavit

[52] Although it acknowledges that Rule 6.6 does not set deadlines for the filing of affidavits, Artemis objects to the filing of Lane's affidavit because it was filed after Weatherford had filed its written brief on this application; it states that Lane could use his affidavit as a way to reply to matters raised in the brief. Therefore, there is no technical objection to the filing of the Lane affidavit. Moreover, the court takes note of Weatherford's claim that there have been some procedural uncertainties, such as whether the applicants were applying only to amend their statements of defence or whether the applications for summary judgment would be joined to the first hearing. In those circumstances, it is not surprising that the Lane affidavit was filed after Artemis had filed its brief.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

ii) Use of Lonnie Dunn's questioning

[53] Relying on Rule 5.31(2), Artemis objects to Weatherford's use of portions of Dunn's questioning which have not been included in Artemis' position. Naturally, Weatherford cannot use Dunn's questioning in a self-serving way as, for example, an oath-helping device. On the other hand, Weatherford is entitled to ensure that any excerpt from Dunn's evidence on which the applicants rely constitutes a fair representation of Dunn's evidence. I consider that Weatherford's reliance on additional portions of Dunn's questioning is merely Weatherford's attempt to ensure fair representation of the evidence.

iii) Weatherford's use of Dunn's 2008 cross-examination

[54] Relying on Rule 6.7, Artemis objects to Weatherford's inclusion in its materials of transcripts of the cross-examination of its key employee, Dunn, conducted in 2008. These are completely different applications. Nonetheless, I view these excerpts of Dunn's evidence in the same way as indicated above, i.e. an attempt by Weatherford to ensure that a fair representation of Dunn's evidence is before the court.

iv) Use of Gillis' affidavit

[55] Weatherford objects to the Gillis affidavit on the grounds that Gillis purports to provide direct, and even on occasion opinion, evidence about some of the issues in the proceedings. Naturally, the applicants cannot use Gillis' affidavit to spin existing evidence or to create evidence; the only purpose of his affidavit is to put before the court evidence which is contained in the various records disclosed by Weatherford and in the questioning of various Weatherford representatives. I agree with Weatherford that the court cannot rely on Gillis' affidavit to summarize Weatherford's evidence, but must refer to Weatherford's actual evidence.

3. Amending the Statements of Defence

[56] The parties agree that a low threshold applies to requests to amend pleadings: they agree that the "classic rule" is that requests for amendment to pleadings should be granted unless the proposed amendment causes prejudice, is clearly hopeless, seeks to add a cause of action after the expiry of a limitation, or, is associated with bad faith: see, for example, Provalcid Inc. Artemis and Kaechele maintain that none of these exceptions are engaged.

[57] Weatherford agrees that the last two of the four exceptions do not apply, but maintains that the proposed amendments should not be allowed for two reasons. First, the amendments would cause them prejudice because they would prevent them from curing the identified limitations problem and because the request is made too late relative to the anticipated commencement of trial in January 2017. Second, insofar as the proposed amendments rely explicitly or implicitly on laches and acquiescence, the proposed amendments should not be allowed because they are hopeless: the equitable concepts of laches and acquiescence apply only to equitable claims and Weatherford's claims are, in the main, legal claims.

[58] For the reasons set out below, I have concluded that: Weatherford will not suffer prejudice of the kind required in this context, and, the proposed amendments are not hopeless.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

a) Weatherford will not suffer prejudice

[59] Weatherford claims two types of prejudice. First, it claims that since Artemis and Kaechele did not, when they challenged the order for service on them outside Canada, also challenge the order of the court which allowed Weatherford to amend its pleadings so as to add them as defendants, they prevented Weatherford from serving its 2007 statement of claim which did name them as defendants clearly within the limitations period. Second, it claims that the late applications invoking laches and acquiescence do not allow Weatherford sufficient time to respond given that a trial date has been set for January, 2017 and that a great deal of time and money has already been spent on pre-trial process.

i) The granting of an amendment at this time is not the reason why Weatherford is unable to serve its 2007 statement of claim [60] Weatherford states that its 2007 statement of claim was filed within 2 years of November, 2005 and, therefore, the 2007 claim was filed within the limitation period. I agree.

[61] Weatherford states that, when the applicants applied to set aside the case management judge's decision allowing Weatherford to serve its amended statement of claim on the applicants, the applicants did not appeal the case management judge's decision to allow the amendments which included the applicants. Weatherford suggests that if it had known, in 2008, that the applicants were intending to raise a limitations defence, it could have, would have, served the 2007 statement of claim.

[62] With respect, I cannot agree with Weatherford that the current application to add a limitations defence causes them prejudice of the type that should preclude the amendments to the statements of defence. At the outset of the analysis on this issue, I question whether the kind of prejudice claimed by Weatherford – the loss of the ability to right the substantive wrong – is the kind of prejudice which is anticipated in the Rules and in the law. The standard of non-compensable prejudice as being one of the bars to an amendment of pleadings was solidified in the Steward decision. What must be recalled about that decision is, however, that Lord Esher himself said that his formulation of the standard of conduct – "if the amendment will put [the party opposite] into such a position that they must be injured, it ought not to be made" – which formulation has subsequently been adopted by many courts, had been better, more clearly, put by Bowen L.J. when he said that an amendment to the pleadings is to be allowed "whenever you can put the parties in the same position for the purposes of justice that they were in at the time the slip was made". It is therefore the latter articulation of the principle that I will follow. It will be recalled that the Steward decision arose out of a situation where a plaintiff was injured as a result of poor road repair; the defendant filed a statement of defence. Six months after the pleadings had closed, the defendant asked for leave to amend its statement of defence to plead a contract which it had with the local vestry which shifted the responsibility for maintenance from itself to the vestry. By the time the defendant applied to amend its statement of defence, the plaintiff's right to sue the vestry was taken away by the statute of limitations. In denying the defendant leave to amend its statement of defence based on prejudice to the plaintiff, the English Court of Appeal emphasized that it was essentially impossible for the plaintiff to have discovered the contract between the defendant and the vestry. In those circumstances, granting the defendant leave to amend its pleadings would have unfairly denied the plaintiff a substantive right. In the circumstances here, there is nothing which the applicants have done which in any way precluded Weatherford from serving its 2007 statement of claim.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

[63] In any event, however, assuming that the prejudice of being unable to remediate the substantive wrong is the kind of prejudice which might prevent the amendment of pleadings, I have concluded that Weatherford has suffered no such prejudice. On an overview, it is not because the applicants are bringing this application at this stage of the proceedings that Weatherford has lost its right to serve its 2007 statement of claim: nothing the applicants have done prevented Weatherford from serving its statement of claim and, in any event, Weatherford chose to take away from itself its ability to serve its 2007 claim when it discontinued that claim in 2009. Moreover, under a Steward type of analysis, the inability of the applicants to bring this application before Weatherford disclosed its November 2005 emails was not due to a blunder or slip or carelessness on the part of the applicants, but a failure on Weatherford's part to make full disclosure.

[64] On a more detailed analysis, although the applicants knew, when they applied to set aside the order allowing service ex juris that they had been named as defendants – indeed, there could not have been an application for service ex juris unless Artemis and Kaechele had been named as defendants in the amended statement of claim – they were procedurally unable to apply to set aside the order which had allowed them to be added to the statement of claim. Indeed, the reality was that the applicants were not affected by any aspect of Weatherford's statement of claim unless the decision allowing service on them to be effected outside Canada was maintained. As a matter of law, had the applicants attempted to appeal the case management judge's decision on the amendment separately from the issue of the amendment to the pleadings by which they were added as defendants, they would surely have been taken to have attorned to Alberta's jurisdiction and would therefore have been necessarily involved in complicated lawsuit. Although in its recent decision in H.E. the Ontario Court of Appeal, albeit in the context of the best interests of children, appears to state that explicit attornment to a jurisdiction is not determinative on the issue of jurisdiction, in the circumstances here – including the fact that this is normal commercial litigation rather than family litigation – attornment by the applicants to Alberta would surely have resulted in the automatic denial of their request to set aside the order allowing service on them in Germany.

[65] What is determinative of Weatherford's claim of prejudice is that Weatherford only discontinued its 2007 claim – the one that had named Artemis and Kaechele as defendants within the limitation period – in April 2009. By April 2009, neither Artemis nor Kaechele had done anything to make Weatherford believe that they would not rely on a limitations defence. On the contrary, by April 2009, both Artemis and Kaechele had made it clear that they wanted to be removed from this lawsuit and that they would take every possible opportunity to achieve that result. In April 2009, when Weatherford discontinued its 2007 action, Artemis and Kaechele had the benefit of a QB decision which struck down the ex juris leave in this action; in other words, on April 21, 2009, Artemis and Kaechele were not properly part of this lawsuit. There was therefore no reason whatever for Weatherford to discontinue its 2007 action against them; on the contrary, there was every reason for Weatherford to maintain its 2007 lawsuit. On April 23, 2009, Weatherford had no viable action of any kind against Artemis and Kaechele: Weatherford had discontinued its 2007 action and the QB decision held that Artemis and Kaechele could not be served in Germany. By the time the Court of Appeal overturned the QB decision in May, 2009, and allowed Artemis and Kaechele to be included in this lawsuit, Weatherford had already put itself in the position where it could no longer serve its 2007 statement of claim. When Artemis and Kaechele were formally brought into this lawsuit after being served in September, 2009, they were facing a situation in which Weatherford had, on April 7, 2008, filed the order granting it leave to amend its statement of claim to add them as defendants. The time for appealing the April 2008 order had long since expired. Moreover, the applicants were entitled to assume that the case management judge who granted the order in question had, in the same way that this court must consider the exceptions to the granting of amendments to pleadings, come to the conclusion in April 2008 that giving Weatherford leave to add Artemis and Kaechele as defendants did not allow them to be added outside a limitation period. It is not realistic to think that Artemis and Kaechele would immediately in September 2009 try to challenge the April 2008 decision; nor would it be fair to criticize them for failing to have done so. In any event, even if they had done so, it was already too late to allow Weatherford to serve its 2007 statement of claim on them.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

ii) Weatherford has enough time to defend the laches and acquiescence issues

[66] The second kind of prejudice Weatherford alleges as a result of this application, particularly in relation to Kaechele's explicit reliance on laches and acquiescence and also on any implicit reliance by Artemis on laches and acquiescence, is that the application is brought too late in the proceedings, given that a trial date for January, 2017 has already been set and there has already been massive pre-trial work undertaken.

[67] Artemis and Kaechele could not have asked to amend their pleadings to plead a limitations defence earlier than the current applications.

[68] It was not until Artemis and Kaechele came into possession of the November 25, 2005 email from Dunn to Lane that the applicants had evidence emanating from Weatherford itself about the state of its knowledge of the involvement of Artemis and Kaechele in Addie and Anderson's scheme. As soon as this evidence became available to the applicants, they brought the within application.

[69] Not only does this chronology establish that Artemis and Kaechele acted at the first opportunity, the chronology also establishes that the defences filed by Artemis and Kaechele were not "blunders" or "slips" in relation to the limitations issue; they clearly could not responsibly have alleged a limitations defence until the November 2005 Weatherford documents came into their possession.

[70] As to the ability of Weatherford to defend the applications without embarking on extensive, expensive additional process, I agree that there has already been extensive disclosure by, and questioning of, all parties; every aspect of the relationship amongst the parties has been subjected to careful scrutiny. Moreover, Weatherford has been allowed to file the Lane affidavit which has given Weatherford the opportunity, unhindered, to put forward any evidence available to it on the limitations issue. Therefore, Weatherford has not suffered and will not suffer any prejudice as a result of allowing the proposed amendments.

[71] In summary on this issue, Weatherford will not suffer any of the required type of prejudice if the applications for amendment of the statements of defence are allowed.

b) The proposed amendments are not hopeless

[72] Relying on the Ontario Court of Appeal's decision in Intact Insurance, Weatherford asserts that the equitable principles of laches and acquiescence apply only to equitable claims and, since Weatherford's claims are, in the main, legal rather than equitable, there is no point in allowing an equitable defence to be advanced to its claims. With respect, Intact Insurance, and indeed all similar decisions which deal with the recent application of equitable defences to Ontario limitations legislation can be of no assistance in Alberta, where – as opposed to Ontario - there has been preservation of the use of equitable defences in Alberta's Limitations Act. The importance of that statutory distinction is emphasized by the Ontario Court of Appeal in para. 35 of its decision. The situation in Ontario is particularly stark because Ontario is a jurisdiction in which the legislation which previously maintained equitable defences then amended its legislation to remove that reference. In Ontario, there is therefore an argument that there has been a clear policy message from the legislator to the effect that limitations legislation should be addressed without reference to equitable principles; no such argument is available in Alberta.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

[73] Moreover, as many cases cited in the Intact decision itself make clear, contemporary Canadian courts are courts of both law and equity. The Supreme Court of Canada illustrated this intersection recently in Bhasin when, in dealing with the interpretation of contracts, it held:

> The principle of good faith must be applied in a manner that is consistent with the fundamental commitments of the common law of contract which generally places great weight on the freedom of contracting parties to pursue their individual self-interest. In commerce, a party may sometimes cause loss to another -- even intentionally -- in the legitimate pursuit of economic self-interest. Doing so is not necessarily contrary to good faith and in some cases has actually been encouraged by the courts on the basis of economic efficiency. The development of the principle of good faith must be clear not to veer into a form of ad hoc judicial moralism or "palm tree" justice. In particular, the organizing principle of good faith should not be used as a pretext for scrutinizing the motives of contracting parties.

[74] More prosaically, Intact Insurance itself refers to the Supreme Court of Canada decision in M.(K.) which provided an instructive outline of the fusion of courts of law and equity: see paras. 58 ff. The Supreme Court saw no principled objection to the mingling of equitable and legal principles; on the contrary, it asserted:

> It is desirable, indeed inevitable, for the two great branches of our judicial law systems to borrow from one another to achieve just and reasonable results and consistency over time.

[75] Given this type of comment in the Supreme Court's decision, it is difficult to understand how M.(K.) has come to be thought of - even in Ontario - as authority for the proposition that equitable principles cannot apply to defeat legal claims: see Ferreira at para. 31. The Supreme Court of Canada has never made any such general assertion.

[76] Although the doctrine of laches was, historically, important to deal with late-brought equitable claims since those claims were not subject to limitations statutes and the doctrine of laches was necessary to mimic the principles reflected in the law's approach to limitations in the sphere of equity, the doctrine of laches was never restricted to situations in which there was an otherwise applicable limitations statute. Ferreira itself deals with a situation where there was an application for partition and sale. In Bark-Fong, a decision which is now over 100 years old, the Supreme Court noted the potentially broad spectrum of application of the doctrine of laches:

> The question remains whether the appellants have lost their right by reason of laches. The general principle is stated in Fry on Specific Performance, at page 539:-

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

> The Court of Chancery was at one time inclined to neglect all consideration of time in the specific performance of contracts for sale, not only as an original ingredient in them, but as affecting them by way of laches. But it is now clearly established that the delay of either party in not performing its terms on his part, or in not prosecuting his right to the interference of the court by the institution of an action, or, lastly, in not diligently prosecuting his action, when instituted, may constitute such laches as will disentitle him to the aid of the court, and so amount, for the purpose of specific performance, to an abandonment on his part of the contract.

[77] It is also important to note that in the particular circumstances of Intact Insurance, the appeal court found that laches was not available on the facts. Therefore, its comments relating to the general application of laches principles to limitations as a matter of law are merely obiter.

[78] Finally, even under the decisions on which Weatherford relies, where there is a strong equitable cast to a legal claim, the concept of laches has been applied. Here, Weatherford has not relied on any contractual basis for its claims against Artemis and Kaechele; rather, it has based its claims on grounds which are redolent of equity, i.e. that the German producers acted wrongly, unfairly, in providing stators to the competitive start-up. All of Weatherford's legal claims are, at a minimum, intertwined with its equitable claim.

[79] In summary on this point, in Alberta it is not hopeless to invoke laches or other equitable principles when dealing with limitations issues. It remains to be determined, of course, whether the application of equitable principles in the circumstances of this case entitles the applicants to the relief which they seek.

c) Conclusion

[80] For the reasons set out above, the court concludes that the applications to amend the statements of defence are allowed.

4. Summary Judgment

[81] The parties agree on the general legal framework for contemporary summary judgment applications: the parties are required to put their best foot forward, and the court is entitled to, and should, grant the application if it concludes that it can fairly do so on the basis of the material put forward, that is, without requiring a trial.

a) Artemis can rely on laches and acquiescence

[82] The parties disagree, however, on whether Artemis can invoke the provisions relating to laches and acquiescence in the Limitations Act without having explicitly referred to laches and acquiescence in its pleadings. Weatherford's objection is invalid. The historical requirement of pleadings is merely to state the facts, not to state the law. This principle was concisely articulated in Webster as follows:

> 7 In my view this section means, in so far as the facts in issue in an action, are concerned, that after the facts have been established, the law as enunciated by any statute relating to the subject matter of the action, shall be made applicable to such facts by the tribunal which tries the case, without mention of the statute in the pleadings. This statement is subject to any rule of law which requires a statute to be specifically pleaded.

[83] In Silver Eagle Management, Ross J. outlined the gloss which has been added to the basic principle by Alberta's Rules of Court:

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

71 At trial, counsel for the Town submitted that he was surprised by his friend's arguments on behalf of the Developer that the Condition had not been waived, that the Purchase Agreement and Option to Repurchase were invalid, and that the agreements had been varied.

72 Section 13.6(3) of the Alberta Rules of Court, Alta. Reg. 124/2010, lists a number of arguments that must be pled in the pleadings if a party wishes to rely on them at trial:

> 13.6(3) A pleading must also include a statement of any matter on which a party intends to rely that may take another party by surprise, including, without limitation, any of the following matters:
>
> (a) breach of trust;
>
> (b) duress;
>
> (c) estoppel;
>
> (d) fraud;
>
> (e) illegality or invalidity of a contract, including the grounds;
>
> (f) malice or ill will;
>
> (g) misrepresentation;
>
> (h) payment;
>
> (i) performance;
>
> (j) release;
>
> (k) undue influence;
>
> (l) voluntary assumption of risk;
>
> (m) waiver;
>
> (n) lack of capacity or authority;
>
> (o) wilful default;
>
> (p) tender of payment;
>
> (q) a limitation period;
>
> (r) a provision of an enactment.
>
> [Emphasis added]

73 Section 109 of the old Alberta Rules of Court, Alta. Reg. 390/1968, which were in place at the time that the pleadings were filed, states as follows:

> When specific pleading required
>
> 109 A party shall in any pleading subsequent to a statement of claim plead specifically any matter, for example, performance, release, payment, any statute of limitation, statute of frauds, fraud or any fact showing illegality
>
> (a) which he alleges makes any claim or defence of the opposite party not maintainable, or

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

> (b) which, if not specifically pleaded, might take the opposite party by surprise, or
>
> (c) which raises issues of fact not arising out of the preceding pleading.

[84] In Silver Eagle Management, the town of Onoway stated that it was taken by surprise by the plaintiff's argument with respect to the status of the contract. Ross J. observed that neither party had pleaded that a material condition had not been waived or that there had been a variation of the contract. Nonetheless, she dealt with the legal arguments despite the absence of explicit pleading:

> The question of variation in this case was basically a matter of interpreting three written contracts between the parties, contracts which were clearly placed before the Court, and the interpretation of which should not have taken either party by surprise.

[85] The use of pleadings to prevent surprise is also emphasized by our Court of Appeal in Paniccia Estate; that court goes on to add that the Rules would, in certain circumstances, entitle a court to consider a matter not explicitly pled: see para. 36 ff.

[86] Here, Weatherford cannot claim that it has been taken by surprise by Artermis' position on laches and acquiescence. First, Artemis' amended statement of defence includes the following:

> 28. Further, and specifically, Artemis states that the Amended Amended Amended Statement of Claim is statute barred by operation of s. 10 of the Limitations Act, RSA, 2000 c. L-12 respecting Laches and the Plaintiff's acquiescence.

Section 10 of the Act explicitly outlines laches and acquiescence as matters which may have to be taken into account in applying the statute.

[87] Moreover, and more importantly given the stage at which the applications for amendment of the statements of defence are made, it is clear that, from at least 2007 on, Weatherford was very aware of the limitations issues: as Weatherford itself has acknowledged, a potential limitations problem is the reason for the filing of the 2007 statement of claim. In those circumstances, Weatherford cannot maintain that it is taken by surprise by Artemis' reliance on s. 10 of the Limitations Act and its reference to laches and acquiescence.

[88] In the result, in its summary judgment analysis, the court will consider laches and acquiescence in relation to the claims of both Artemis and Kaechele.

> b) The undisputed facts here establish that Weatherford knew, or should have known of its alleged cause of action against Artemis and Kaechele by November 30, 2005 or, at the latest, by March 30, 2006

[89] The parties essentially agree on the framework which must be used to weigh an application for summary judgment. As the case law reviewed in Sticks and Stones Communications Inc. emphasizes, the sufficiency of the evidence invoked in any application for summary judgment is the key. If material evidence is, or can be, disputed, a trial will usually be required and the application for summary judgment will be refused.

[90] In the context of a limitations defence, therefore, the applicant for summary judgment must satisfy the court that there are "undisputed facts that necessarily lead to the conclusion that it is plain and obvious that the plaintiff's claim is statute barred": DeShazo, at para. 19.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

[91] In this context, the first contested issue which arises is whether, as Artemis contends, the destruction of the Dunn notes results in a rebuttable adverse inference against Weatherford. After he decided to remain with Weatherford, a key employee of Weatherford, Lonnie Dunn, destroyed records he had made - i.e. notes of meetings he had had with the defendants Addie and Anderson - at a time when he knew that litigation was contemplated.

[92] I agree that the concept of spoliation as an evidentiary rule is even more well established now in Canada than it was a decade ago, and that, when it applies, it sensibly ensures that litigants will not get a litigation advantage by spoiling or destroying records that might have a negative effect on them.

[93] I also agree that, even though Dunn was clearly not taking notes of his meetings with Addie and Anderson as part of his employment with Weatherford, the evidence establishes that he destroyed his notes only after he had decided to remain in Weatherford's employ.

[94] In those circumstances, it is necessary to consider the potential application of the doctrine of spoliation on the facts of this case.

[95] I agree that Dunn's own email of November 25, 2005 indicates that, at the least by that date, Dunn was aware that litigation was being contemplated.

[96] I also agree that the evidence establishes that Dunn intentionally destroyed his records of the Addie/Anderson meetings.

[97] However, I am not satisfied that the evidence establishes that Dunn intentionally destroyed the evidence of the meetings "to affect the litigation", as our Court of Appeal put it in McDougall. Rather, I accept the evidence that Dunn was keeping the records to perform a SWOT (Strengths, Weaknesses, Opportunities, Threat) analysis for himself, i.e. as to whether it was to his advantage or disadvantage to defect to the start-up company. When he decided to remain with Weatherford, he had no further need for the records; his destruction of the records was therefore entirely personal.

[98] Even if, in Alberta, it were possible to fashion a civil remedy for unintentional destruction of evidence, see Chow-Hidasi at para. 30, for the reasons given above, there is no evidentiary basis in this case for the development of any such remedy.

[99] Finally, the evidence suggests that Weatherford never received the benefit of Dunn's actual notes of his meetings with Addie and Anderson. All Weatherford received from Dunn was general information about his meetings with Addie and Anderson, his various emails, including the email of November 25, 2005 which summarized Dunn's "personal opinions" of the situation Weatherford was facing as of that date, and other emails which are now available from Weatherford's production, along with the chronology which Dunn prepared after the destruction of his notes. From that perspective, as well as from the perspective that Dunn only became a corporate officer of Weatherford in 2007, it would be unfair to draw an adverse inference against Weatherford as a result of Dunn's destruction of personal records.

[100] In response to the application, Weatherford relies on affidavit evidence from Lane. However, I do not attach any weight to the Lane affidavit: rather than comments in 2016 about events which occurred in the past, I rely on Weatherford’s contemporary documents.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

[101] By deciding not to draw any adverse inference against Weatherford as a result of the destruction of the Dunn notes, the only evidence which is left on the applications for summary judgment establishes uncontested facts because it is all evidence from Weatherford.

[102] There is no dispute between the parties about what the undisputed facts must establish. As the DeShazo decision from our Court of Appeal clarifies, perfect knowledge of a claim is not the correct test for determining when the limitations clock starts to run:

> 31 The principle of discoverability does not require perfect knowledge. As this court noted in Hill v. Alberta (South Alberta Land Registration District) (1993), 100 D.L.R. (4th) 331 at 336 (Alta. C.A.) (leave to appeal to S.C.C. denied):
>
> > Even if the discoverability rule of limitations applies to this case (which I need not decide), it does not call for perfect certainty. It does not require discovery at all: it says something else will do instead. It suffices that "the material facts on which [the cause of action] is based ... ought to have been discovered by the plaintiff by the exercise of reasonable diligence...": Central Trust v. Rafuse... . If the plaintiff is told a fact by someone who is likely to know, surely that makes the fact known or discoverable, even if someone else disputes the fact. Very few people who sue have perfect certainty.
>
> 32 The same point is made in Owners: Condominium Plan 9421549 v. Main Street Developments Ltd., supra, where Clackson J. summarily dismissed the plaintiff's claim on the basis of undisputed facts. He said at paras. 55-56:
>
> > I am satisfied that these facts establish, beyond a reasonable doubt, that the Plaintiff knew that the buildings suffered from moisture problems and knew of the potential sequella if the problems were not rectified. This knowledge existed well before May 25, 1999. While I accept that it is possible the Plaintiff did not have perfect knowledge of the injury, that level of knowledge is not required: Peixeiro v. Haberman, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 549; Hill v. Alberta (South Alberta Land Registration District), (1993) 135 A.R. 266 (C.A.), leave to appeal to S.C.C. refused [1994] 1 S.C.R. viii; Ward v. Taubner, 2004 ABQB 565, 9 E.T.R. (3d) 275 (QB).
> >
> > What was obvious was that there was a problem and that there was damage or at least the real potential for damage if the problem was not addressed. In my view, that is enough.
>
> [Emphasis added]
>
> 33 De Shazo says he was lacking proof that O'Mara owned or controlled NovoMundo. He says that in July 2002 he received, for the first time, "credible factual information from the defendants that O'Mara owned NovoMundo" in the form of the statement from Wilson that NovoMundo was, as far as Wilson and others knew, owned by O'Mara. This, De Shazo says, was the missing piece of the puzzle that he needed to put his claim together. However, that statement did not add significantly to the picture De Shazo already had in February 2000.
>
> 34 In our view, the information in De Shazo's hands in February 2000 was sufficient for him to bring a claim against the appellants for an oppression remedy and in fraud, and to resist a summary judgment application to dismiss such a claim. Further, in June 2001

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

> De Shazo went so far as to obtain a legal opinion about the availability of an oppression remedy from Alberta counsel, and then changed that legal opinion and sent the doctored version to O'Mara in March 2002 to bolster his threat of litigation. As counsel for the appellants noted in argument, if this is not an appropriate case for summary judgment it is difficult to imagine what is.

[103] In this case, therefore, the real issue to be decided is: Have the applicants established, on the basis of uncontested facts, that any cause of action which Weatherford may have had against them has been defeated by application of the 2 year limit in the Limitations Act? In this context, the applicants argue that, most likely by November 30, 2005 or, at the latest, by March 31, 2006, the statutory limitation period began to toll against Weatherford and that Weatherford did not file its lawsuit against them within the required limitations period.

[104] Even if the answer to the above question is Yes, the court must then go on to consider whether the March 31, 2008 deadline has been extended by application of the provisions of s. 6(4) of the Limitations Act.

[105] Weatherford has two essential responses to the applicants' applications for summary judgment: first, until it saw stators which it identified as having been manufactured by the applicants in Europump's yard in early June, 2006, it had merely a suspicion about the activities of Artemis and Kaechele based on Dunn's hearsay evidence.

[106] Second, Weatherford argues that, even if the limitations clock would normally have started to run against it by March 31, 2006, s. 6(4)(a) allows them to add the applicants as defendants after the expiration of the relevant limitation period because the addition of the applicants as defendants is related to the conduct, transaction or events described in Weatherford's original statement of claim.

[107] For the reasons set out below, I have concluded that the applicants have met the required burden and are entitled to summary judgment dismissing Weatherford's claims against them: the limitations clock started to run against Weatherford at the latest by March 31, 2006 and, by March 31, 2008, Weatherford had not filed its claim against them. While Weatherford's April 2008 added claim against the applicants does relate to Weatherford's original pleading, because of the application of the equitable principles of acquiescence and laches, the applicants should not be deprived of limitations immunity from Weatherford's claim.

a) Indirect attack on earlier decision refusing summary judgment

[108] Obviously, the current applications for summary judgment are completely different in character – limitations defence – from the 2011 applications for summary judgment – exclusive use.

b) Best foot forward

[109] Weatherford has had the opportunity of putting forward unchallenged evidence from Lane about the limitations issue. Therefore, the court is entitled to assume that there is no additional evidence which Weatherford could advance to improve its position on the limitations issue.

[110] As indicated above, the court does not make any rebuttable adverse inference against Weatherford as a result of Dunn's destruction of the notes of his meetings with Addie and Anderson.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

[111] There is no conflict in the evidence since the applications are based on Weatherford's own evidence.

c) The two year limitations period started to run on November 30, 2005

[112] The key evidence on these applications is the November 25, 2005 email from Dunn to Lane.

[113] In determining the effect of Weatherford's receipt of the November 25, 2005 email, the court must consider the nature of the person who is sending the email, Lonnie Dunn.

[114] Mr. Dunn is not some insignificant or unreliable individual. He is a senior employee at Weatherford, with technical management of the PC pump sector, and having direct relationships not only with the defendants Addie and Anderson, but also with each of Artemis and Kaechele. He is therefore a person whose technical assessment is presumptively reliable. Also, because of his actual involvement with Addie, Anderson, Artemis and Kaechele, his opinion of the likelihood that they should be taken at their word is presumptively reliable.

[115] By the time this email was sent to Lane, Dunn had, earlier in the month of November, already "confessed" to Lane that, for many months earlier in 2005, he had met with Addie and Anderson to discuss the possibility that he would join them in starting up a company to compete with Weatherford. Even in a criminal context, where the burden of proof is much higher than in civil proceedings, a court is entitled to hear evidence from an individual - not a person in authority - to the effect that the accused made a confession to him. Evidence of that confession can be received as evidence for the truth of its content despite the fact that the evidence itself is hearsay evidence because evidence against interest has, historically, been found to be presumptively reliable. Naturally, a court – and certainly Weatherford – would be entitled to consider all of the circumstances with a view to determining whether Dunn's report of a confession by Addie and Anderson was an unreliable or false confession, or a reliable one. For example, in the circumstances here, there were no potential language problems; all the participants in the discussion not only all spoke and understood English but they all spoke and understood the technical language surrounding the production of stators. There was no suggestibility on the part of Addie and Anderson since they were the persons who brought the "opportunity" to Dunn's attention. Indeed, there is nothing in the circumstances of the confession of Addie and Anderson to Dunn and Dunn's report of that confession to Lane which puts the elements of the confession in doubt: Anderson had good relations with the German manufacturers, so it was not unlikely that he had convinced them to supply the startup with stators. Even in criminal proceedings, while it may be useful, confirmatory evidence of a confession is not necessary before the confession is admissible. In the civil sphere, having a reliable person tell it that Artemis and Kaechele were going to assist a competitive startup constituted adequate information on which Weatherford should have acted – by taking legal proceedings in much the same way as it acted by taking commercial proceedings - even in the absence of absolute proof.

[116] In determining the effect of Weatherford's receipt of the November 25, 2005 email, the court must also consider the overall context in which the email was sent.

[117] Part of that context is that there are very few stator manufacturers for the PC pump industry. Weatherford itself acknowledges that the German applicants have been very well accepted in the Canadian market. It was therefore not unlikely that arrangements would be made by a startup with the German manufacturers.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

[118] Part of that context also included the fact that Weatherford realized that its relationship with the German manufacturers was not as clear and circumscribed as Weatherford would like: Weatherford had unsuccessfully attempted to negotiate new agreements that would change the relationship which Weatherford had had with the German suppliers over a considerable period of time. In the absence of any such new agreements, Weatherford would have realized its supply vulnerabilities.

[119] Part of that context also includes the fact that Addie and Anderson had been, in the past, involved in a situation where there was some challenge to sole source production from the German manufacturers; the idea that a competitive startup would use German-produced stators was clearly not a remote, weird, odd or unlikely event.

[120] It must also be noted that the November 25, 2005 email was not an "off the cuff" statement by Dunn; it was not one of those "thoughtless press send" situations which may occur even in a commercial situation. Not only was this email preceded by a meeting between Dunn and Weatherford's Vice-President Lane during which the general issues were discussed, the email itself notes that Dunn knowingly decides to send a lengthy email despite knowing Lane's preference for short emails. Dunn also notes the need for prompt action as a way of explaining why he is taking the time to send a lengthy email.

[121] In determining the effect of Weatherford's receipt of the November 25, 2005 email, the court must finally consider the email itself.

[122] The email mentioned that "this is . . out in the open". This presumably relates to the fact that, by November 25, 2005, both Addie and Anderson had actually left Weatherford's employ; this may be confirmatory of Dunn's disclosure of Addie and Anderson's plans. The reference to the matter now being in the open relates to the fact that Dunn acknowledges that he is in a position to make recommendations as to what course Weatherford should take in light of the departure of Addie and Anderson because he knew "in advance" that they were intending to leave.

[123] The email also emphasizes that the startup is based on "the exact same pump", "exact same product", i.e. a pump which has stators manufactured by the exact same companies which are manufacturing Weatherford's stators in November, 2005, i.e. Artemis and Kaechele. Indeed, the email explicitly states that the startup will "get stators from Artemis and Kaechele".

[124] The email also addresses the issue of timing. This engineer, with this background in the industry and this background with the individuals involved says that it can be assumed "that they have already ordered product from Artemis and Kaechele".

[125] While the email uses the phrase "purely my opinions", that phrase does not refer to the underlying factual matrix. Rather, it relates to the fact that Dunn is a technical expert and he realizes that management decisions, relating for example to the initiation of an expensive replication project, are not within his domain.

[126] Assuming that Weatherford might have a few days to await some additional information from Dunn or that it might need a few days to run Dunn's information by other knowledgeable people in the organization in order to satisfy its due diligence obligation, the court arrives at

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

November 30, 2005 as the date by which Weatherford knew, or should have known, everything it needed to know to sue the applicants.

[127] Indeed, Weatherford learned nothing after November 25, 2005 which affected its decision to sue the applicants.

d) At the latest, the two year limitations period started to run on March 31, 2006

[128] For the reasons set out above, the court concludes that the limitations clock began to run against Weatherford on November 30, 2005.

[129] However, if the court were wrong it its assessment that November 30, 2005 is the critical date, it is clear that, by March 31, 2006, the clock had begun to run.

[130] The Weatherford evidence from the period after November 30, 2005 which is important in this context is the evidence of the Lane response to the Dunn email of December 19, 2005: "Full speed ahead". In other words, by December 19, 2005 at the latest, Weatherford was committed to the expenditure of time, professional resources, and money on the replication of the German stators with a view to cutting out the German applicants. Lane's affirmation to the contrary in February 2016 simply cannot be true in light of Weatherford's own documents.

[131] Relying on Seyedi, Weatherford argues that it was not in a position to sue the applicants until it had proof that they had misappropriated proprietary Weatherford information and that it did not have that proof until June 2006. That argument is untenable for at least four reasons:

- first, as the December 19, 2005 communications made clear, Weatherford took the Dunn information of November 25, 2005 and December 19, 2005 seriously enough to spend material resources on dealing with the Artemis/Kaechele problem. Lane's subsequent affidavit on this topic cannot be taken seriously;

- second, when it saw pumps in a yard in June, 2006, Weatherford could not – simply from a view of the pumps - have known who manufactured the stators. Since there is a least one American manufacturer of stators, Robinson Meyers, who had previously been involved with these companies, Weatherford would have had to acquire one of those pumps, and dismantle it to try to determine who had manufactured the stator. Yet, Weatherford immediately presumed that it was the defendants who manufactured the startup's stators and that presumption was based on the November 2005 email from Dunn;

- third, on Weatherford's own assessment of the situation, starting in November 2005, the applicants had, at the least, agreed to misappropriate Weatherford's proprietary information and that agreement had encouraged the startup competition. The misuse of the information therefore was established by the promise to Addie and Anderson that they would manufacture the exact same pump for the startup;

- fourth, No Limits Sportswear reminds me that, even if actual detriment were required to establish the third factor in the Supreme Court of Canada's outline of the tort of misuse of confidential information, the replication program on which Weatherford embarked constituted a financial detriment to Weatherford.

[132] In addition to the December 19, 2005 evidence, in early January 2006 or at the latest by the end of the first quarter of 2006 – i.e. March 31, 2006, Weatherford received evidence from a customer – therefore an independent source - consisting of the specifications for rotors. Although the applicants manufacture stators and not rotors, the stators and the rotors must fit exactly with one another. Therefore, by seeing the rotor specifications, Weatherford could deduce what stator specifications were used with those rotor specifications; Weatherford could satisfy itself of the interior geometry of the PC pumps addressed in the rotor specs. Therefore, at the latest by March 31, 2006, Weatherford knew that the startup's plan to have the Germans manufacture stators for them was real and not merely some kind of airy-fairy possibility.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

[133] In summary, although it is clear on the evidence that, by November 20, 2005, Weatherford knew everything it needed to know to sue the applicants, in addition by March 31, 2006, Weatherford had received confirmatory evidence that the startup's plan to compete by offering the same product to the marketplace was being put into operation. Therefore, by March 31, 2006, at the latest, the limitations clock started to tick against Weatherford. That clock ran out on March 31, 2008.

[134] Weatherford did not file its amendment to this statement of claim until April, 2008. Therefore, it missed the limitations deadline and its claims against the applicants are invalid.

e) For equitable reasons, the applicants should not be denied limitations immunity from Weatherford's use of the curative provisions of the limitations legislation

[135] Weatherford argues that even if it missed the two year deadline, it should have the benefit of the curative provision found in s. 6(4) of the Limitations Act.

[136] This is an awkward argument for Weatherford to advance because one of the requirements of s. 6 of the Act is that any added claim must "relate to the conduct, transaction or events described in the original pleading". The mentions of Artemis and Kaechele in the original pleading are highlighted in the Background section. In light of the original pleading, it is difficult to explain why the causes of action "added" against Artemis and Kaechele in 2008 were not clear when the original pleadings was filed. Indeed, it is difficult to identify how the "new" substantive claim against the applicants differs from the conduct outlined in the original pleading.

[137] In any event, however, assuming that s. 6(4) of the Limitations Act is available to Weatherford to extend its limitations period against them, Artemis and Kaechele argue that they should not be denied immunity from liability to Weatherford because of laches and acquiescence.

[138] In attempting to establish a purposive interpretation of s. 10 of the Limitations Act, the court looks to ALRI's Report on Limitations, which report presumably established the basis for the reform of limitations law in Alberta, and to which report even Weatherford refers. In that Report, one notes the following comment on the topic "Claims Added to a Proceeding":

> When a proceeding has been started by a timely claim, the parties will often wish to add further claims which are subject to a limitations defence. If the added claims are related to the conduct, transaction or events described in the original pleading in the proceeding, it will often be desirable, for reasons of justice and efficiency, to have them tried in a single proceeding with the original claims. The new Alberta Act will deprive a defendant of a limitations defence he would normally have to an added claim in the situation we have described, but only if requirements designed to give the defendant alternative limitations protection have been satisfied.

[139] It is therefore clear that section 6(4) in the new statute was not intended to deprive defendants of limitations protection. Indeed, the reform of limitations legislation would be a sham if a litigant could, by mere mention of a transaction, deliberately avoid or extend a limitations period.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

[140] Next we must look at the definition of acquiescence and laches.

[141] Although the factual situations in the cases are of no assistance in resolving the issues here, I agree with Weatherford's outline of the basic legal principles of acquiescence and laches as outlined by our Court of Appeal in Hunter, which then refers to the SCC decision in M.(K.). Those decisions emphasize that laches requires more than mere delay; in addition to delay there must be acquiescence to the point of waiver, or prejudice, or other potential injustice.

[142] I have earlier outlined why, in Alberta, acquiescence and laches apply to legal as well as to equitable claims.

[143] As to the notion of acquiescence, some additional perspective is provided by Urbas Estate:

> Laches and Delay also bars the Plaintiffs' claim
>
> 79 Laches is established when two conditions are fulfilled: (1) there is unreasonable delay in the commencement or prosecution of proceedings; and (2) in all of the circumstances the consequences of delay renders the grant of relief unreasonable or unjust: Rhyolite Resources Inc. v. CanQuest Resource Corp., [1999] B.C.J. No. 114 (C.A.), at para. 33.
>
> 80 There are two distinct branches to the laches doctrine. The doctrine will apply where the delay of the plaintiff (a) constitutes acquiescence, or (b) results in circumstances that make the prosecution of the action unreasonable: M.(K.) v. M.(H.), at para. 98.
>
> 81 Mere delay is insufficient to trigger laches under either of its two branches. Rather, the doctrine of laches considers whether the delay of the plaintiff constitutes acquiescence or results in circumstances that make the prosecution of the action unreasonable. Ultimately, laches must be resolved as a matter of justice as between the parties, as is the case with any equitable doctrine. The court in exercising its equitable jurisdiction must always consider the conscionability of the behaviour of both parties.
>
> 82 "Acquiescence" has various meanings. One meaning is that a plaintiff stands by and watches the deprivation of her rights and does nothing. Another is that after the deprivation of her rights and in the full knowledge of their existence, a plaintiff delays, leading to an inference that her rights have been waived: M.(K.) v. M.(H.), at para. 100
>
> 83 A plaintiff's knowledge of her rights is critical to the notion of acquiescence; however, this knowledge is to be measured by an objective standard so that the question is whether it is reasonable for the plaintiff to be ignorant of her legal rights given her knowledge of the underlying facts relevant to a possible legal claim.

[144] In Hunter, our Court of Appeal also approved the Manitoba Court of Appeal's decision in Rivergate Properties Inc. which decision includes, starting at para. 38, an explanation of why, in an appropriate situation, on the basis of the wording of the statute itself, the equitable doctrines of laches and acquiescence can provide immunity even where a statutory limitation period still has time to run.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

[145] In the result, this court must determine whether a potential injustice is caused to the applicants if Weatherford were allowed to use the curative provisions of s. 6(4) of the Limitations Act to extend a limitations deadline and deprive the applicants of a limitations defence.

[146] In deciding whether an equitable argument is available to the applicants, the court must consider the equitable position of the applicants as well as that of Weatherford. Weatherford argues that the applicants do not have clean hands because they abused private information, etc.; the problem with that argument is, of course, that these are mere allegations on Weatherford's part, and the actual subject of the lawsuit. Weatherford cannot, in this context, presume that it will be successful in its lawsuit.

[147] Weatherford also argues that the applicants knew very well what they had done and it would therefore not be unjust to delay instituting legal proceedings against them for that reason. This is an argument which is essentially similar to the first argument advanced by Weatherford, and the answer to this argument is also the same: Weatherford cannot in this context assume that it will be successful in its lawsuit against the applicants.

[148] Nor in the context of limitations can it be suggested that defendants have any obligation to move the case along or otherwise to assist a plaintiff in acting within a limitations deadline.

[149] On the contrary, as soon as Weatherford was made to disclose the November 25, 2005 email, the applicants immediately applied for summary judgment on the basis of limitations. The applicants have clean hands on this application.

[150] On the other hand, the evidence is clear that Weatherford understood the limitations problem which it faced: it acknowledges that it issued the 2007 statement of claim to protect its limitations position. Limitations statutes establish deadlines; a horseshoes response to a statutory deadline is inadequate.

[151] Weatherford is a sophisticated litigant. As the November 25, 2005 email makes clear, as of that date Weatherford understood that it had a decision to make about whether and when it would sue the applicants. If it did sue the applicants, Weatherford believed that it had to take the risk that the applicants would not continue to supply Weatherford with stators; that would have effected a commercial detriment to Weatherford because Weatherford could not, in November, 2005, yet replicate the German stators. If it did not sue the applicants in November, 2005, it could hope to maintain supply from the German applicants until Weatherford had replicated the German stators and was in a position to, itself, provide the "exact same pump" to the marketplace as the pump to which the Germans had been contributing. That was, of course, the kind of choice which Weatherford was entitled to make. Even if Weatherford's deliberate choice not to sue the applicants and to continue placing orders for stators with them does not meet the level of waiver which the doctrine of acquiescence requires, it is at the least conduct which the court can take into account in determining the equities of the situation.

[152] What is decisive here is that Weatherford chose not to comply with a known limitations period and to sit on their rights; although Weatherford describes this as a "prudent risk", Weatherford's behaviour is a classic example of laches.

[153] Although the time which elapsed between the end of the s. 3 limitation period and Weatherford's filing of a lawsuit against these applicants is not long, in all the circumstances, I have concluded that to allow Weatherford to obtain the benefit of extending the statutory s. 3 limitation period would be inequitable.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

f) Conclusion

[154] For the reasons outlined, I have concluded that there is no genuine issue for trial: the limitations issue can be fairly decided on the basis of uncontroverted evidence.

6. Costs

[155] If the parties are not agreed on costs, I may be spoken to within 30 days of the release of this decision.

2016 ABQB 188 (CanLII)

Heard on the 4th and 8th days of March, 2016.
Dated at the City of Edmonton, Alberta this 6th day of April, 2016.

J.B. Veit
J.C.Q.B.A.

Appearances:

Kenneth Fitz, McLennan Ross
For Applicant, Artemis Kautschuk and Kunstoff-Technik GmbH

Sylvia Jacob, Jacob Associates
For Applicant, Wilhelm Kaechele GmbH

Fausto Franceschi, Ward Hanson, Alison Walsh,
Dentons Canada LLP
For Respondent, Weatherford Canada Partnership

Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta

Citation: Delta Hotels No 2 Holdings Ltd v Calm Shore Ventures (1992) Inc, 2019 ABQB 434

2019 ABQB 434 (CanLII)

Date: 20190611
Docket: 1103 12977
Registry: Edmonton

Between:

Delta Hotels No 2 Holdings Ltd

Plaintiff

- and -

Calm Shore Ventures (1992) Inc, Calm Shores Ventures Inc, Jacques Whitford Limited, Stantec Inc, Hein Reichard Tomlin Inc, Schirmer Engineering Corporation, AON Fire Protection Engineering Corporation, Halsall Associates Limited, Impact Fire Safety Sales & Service Ltd, UTC Fire & Security Canada, Tyco International of Canada Ltd, Carrying on Business Under the Registered Trade Name of Simplex Grinnel, Ansul Incorporated, and ABC Co Ltd

Defendants

Reasons for Judgment
of the
Honourable Mr. Justice K.G. Nielsen

I. Introduction

[1] Delta Hotels No 2 Holdings Ltd, now known as DHL No 2 Holdings Ltd (DHL Holdings) applies to: amend the current Amended Statement of Claim to reflect its current name; to add three companies, DHL No 2 Limited Partnership (DHL Limited Partnership), bcIMC Realty Corporation (bcIMC), and DHL Hotels Limited (DHL Hotels) as Plaintiffs; to remove all of the Defendants against whom DHL Holdings has discontinued; and to make the necessary consequent amendments to the Amended Statement of Claim.

[2] The remaining Defendants consent to the Application to

(a) change the Plaintiff's name to reflect its current name;
(b) remove all Defendants against whom Discontinuances of Action have been filed; and
(c) the changes to the Amended Statement of Claim consequent upon such amendments.

[3] The remaining Defendants oppose the Application to add bcIMC, DHL Limited Partnership, and DHL Hotels as Plaintiffs.

[4] For the reasons that follow, I allow the Application to add bcIMC, DHL Limited Partnership, and DHL Hotels as Plaintiffs, as well as the amendments consequent to the addition of these Plaintiffs. Specifically, I allow the amendments proposed in paras 48 and 49 of the Amended Statement of Claim.

II. Background

[5] DHL Holdings is, and was at all material times, the title holder of the lands and building municipally located at 4404 Gateway Blvd, Edmonton, Alberta (the Hotel).

[6] bcIMC is, and was at all material times, the beneficial owner of the Hotel pursuant to a Declaration of Trust with DHL Holdings dated December 6, 2007 (the Declaration of Trust). The Declaration of Trust provides that DHL Holdings holds its interest in the Hotel as trustee in trust for bcIMC as beneficial owner.

[7] DHL Limited Partnership was at all material times the lessee of the Hotel pursuant to an Amended and Restated Operating Lease dated July 1, 2009 (the Lease). Pursuant to the Lease, DHL Limited Partnership agreed to use the Hotel and make rental payments to DHL Holdings and bcIMC as joint landlords of the Hotel. DHL Holdings alleges that the rental payments were calculated in part based upon the revenues generated by the operations of the Hotel.

[8] DHL Hotels , at all material times, provided hotel management services to DHL Limited Partnership under a Hotel Management Agreement dated July 1, 2009 (the Management Agreement). DHL Holdings alleges that the management fees under the Management Agreement were calculated, in part, based on the revenues generated by the Hotel's operations.

[9] DHL Holdings, DHL Limited Partnership, bcIMC, and DHL Hotels, at all material times, were controlled, directly or indirectly, by the British Columbia Investment Management Corporation.

[10] On or about August 26, 2009, a fire originated in the kitchen area of the Botanica Restaurant, located in the Hotel (the Fire). DHL Holdings alleges that the Fire caused damages and loss to the Hotel and its business.

[11] On August 15, 2011, DHL Holdings issued a Statement of Claim in this action. That Statement of Claim was amended on February 27, 2013. Of all of the Defendants named in the Action, only three remain.

2019 ABQB 434 (CanLII)

[12] In the Amended Statement of Claim, DHL Holdings alleges that Tyco International Canada Ltd., carrying on business under the registered trade name of Simplex Grinnel (Tyco) or its predecessors, contracted to supply and install a fire suppression system in the kitchen of the Botanica Restaurant.

[13] DHL Holdings also alleges that UTC Fire & Security Canada (UTCFS Canada), or its predecessors, contracted to test, maintain and inspect the fire suppression systems, fire extinguishers, and other life safety equipment within the Hotel, and to certify that such equipment was of the proper type, was suitable for the purpose intended, was properly installed, was adequately charged, and was capable of operating as intended.

[14] Finally, DHL Holdings alleges that the Defendant, Calm Shore Ventures (1992) Inc. (Calm Shore) contracted to clean the range hood within the Botanica Restaurant and the exhaust ducting leading from the range hood to the exterior of the Hotel.

[15] DHL Holdings alleges that the losses and damages it suffered as a result of the Fire were due to the breaches of contract or negligence of one or more of Tyco, UTCFS Canada and Calm Shore.

[16] As stated, DHL Holdings seeks to file an Amended Amended Statement of Claim adding each of bcIMC, DHL Limited Partnership, and DHL Hotels as Plaintiffs and seeking to recover the damages which each alleges to have suffered as a result of the Fire (the Proposed Amended Claim).

III. Pleadings

A. Amended Statement of Claim

[17] The Amended Statement of Claim alleges that each of Tyco, UTCFS Canada and Calm Shore contracted with the Plaintiff, namely, DHL Holdings. The damages and loss claimed are set out at para 48:

> As a result of the negligence and breaches of contract of the Defendants, or any one or more of them, the Plaintiff has suffered significant loss and damage to the Hotel and its contents, loss of revenues from the operation of the Botanica Restaurant and the Hotel during the period of repair and reconstruction and continuing thereafter, and loss of business reputation of the Hotel. Full particulars of the damages and loss have not as yet been ascertained but will be proven at the trial of this action.

[18] The relief sought is set out at para 49:

> The Plaintiff claims the following relief as against the Defendants, jointly and severally:
>
> a. Loss and damage to the Hotel and its contents in the approximate amount of $8 million [sic];
>
> b. Loss of revenues during the period of repair and reconstruction in the approximate amount of $5 million [sic];

2019 ABQB 434 (CanLII)

c. General Damages for ongoing loss of revenues and loss of business reputation in the amount of $2 million [sic];

d. Interest on the foregoing in accordance with the Judgment Interest Act, RSA 2000, c J-1; and

e. Costs of this action.

B. Proposed Amended Claim

[19] The Proposed Amended Claim alleges that Tyco, UTCFS Canada and Calm Shore each had a contract with the Plaintiffs, namely DHL Holdings and the three parties proposed to be added as Plaintiffs.

[20] The damages and losses claimed are set out at para 48:

> As a result of the negligence and breaches of contract of the Defendants, or any one or more of them, the Plaintiffs collectively have suffered significant losses and damage to the Hotel and its contents, loss of revenues from the operation of the Botanica Restaurant and the Hotel during the period of repair and reconstruction and continuing thereafter, loss of rental payments and hotel management fees and loss of business reputation to the Hotel. Full particulars and allocation of the damages and loss have not as yet been ascertained but will be proven at the trial of this action.

[21] The relief sought is set out at para 49 of the Proposed Amended Claim. The losses and damages claimed are the same as set out in the Amended Statement of Claim, but are now sought on behalf of DHL Holdings and the three parties proposed to be added as Plaintiffs.

IV. Issues

1. Should DHL Holdings be granted leave to further amend the Amended Statement of Claim by adding the three proposed Plaintiffs and making the consequential amendments although the relevant limitation period has expired?

2. Is the Application barred by the doctrines of laches and acquiescence?

V. Positions of the Parties

[22] DHL Holdings submits that the amendments set out in the Proposed Amended Claim do not change the claimed losses and damages, but merely seek to allocate them among the current and proposed Plaintiffs, namely as they pertain to the damage to real property, business interruption losses, and the loss of rental payments and hotel management fees suffered by the current Plaintiff and proposed Plaintiffs. DHL Holdings and the proposed Plaintiffs are "sister companies" and all part of the same corporate group controlled directly or indirectly by the British Columbia Investment Management Corporation and, therefore, should be permitted to allocate the losses within that group. The proposed amendments are permitted under the Alberta Rules of Court, AR 124/2010 and the Limitations Act, RSA 2000, c L-12. Further, the doctrines of laches and acquiescence do not apply here.

2019 ABQB 434 (CanLII)

[23] Tyco argues that the proposed amendments are barred by the Limitations Act. Further, Tyco argues that the Application is doomed by the doctrines of both laches and acquiescence.

[24] UTCFS Canada does not oppose the addition or substitution of bcIMC or DHL Limited Partnership to the extent these parties are seeking property damages to the Hotel and its contents or the business interruption claim in relation to the operations of the Hotel. However, UTCFS Canada does oppose the addition of parties, causes of action, and heads of damage in relation to the alleged loss of rental payments and the alleged loss of management fees.

[25] Calm Shore supports both Tyco and UTCFS Canada.

VI. Law

A. Rules of Court

[26] The following Rules of Court are germane to this Application:

> 3.62(1) A party may amend the party's pleading, including an amendment to add, remove, substitute or correct the name of a party, as follows:
>
> ...
>
> (b) after pleadings close,
>
> (i) for the addition, removal, substitution or correction of the name of a party, with the Court's prior permission in accordance with rule 3.74 [Adding, removing or substituting parties after close of pleadings] ...
>
> ...
>
> 3.74(1) After close of pleadings, no person may be added, removed or substituted as a party to an action started by statement of claim except in accordance with this rule.
>
> (2) On application, the Court may order that a person be added, removed or substituted as a party to an action if
>
> (a) in the case of a person to be added or substituted as plaintiff, plaintiff-by-counterclaim or third party plaintiff, the application is made by a person or party and the consent of the person proposed to be added or substituted as a party is filed with the application;
>
> (b) in the case of an application to add or substitute any other party, or to remove or to correct the name of a party, the application is made by a party and the Court is satisfied the order should be made.
>
> (3) The Court may not make an order under this rule if prejudice would result for a party that could not be remedied by a costs award, an adjournment or the imposition of terms.

2019 ABQB 434 (CanLII)

B. Limitations Act

[27] The following sections of the Limitations Act are germane to this Application:

> 6(1) Notwithstanding the expiration of the relevant limitation period, when a claim is added to a proceeding previously commenced, either through a new pleading or an amendment to pleadings, the defendant is not entitled to immunity from liability in respect of the added claim if the requirements of subsection (2), (3) or (4) are satisfied.
>
> ...
>
> (3) When the added claim adds or substitutes a claimant, or changes the capacity in which a claimant sues,
>
> (a) the added claim must be related to the conduct, transaction or events described in the original pleading in the proceeding,
>
> (b) the defendant must have received, within the limitation period applicable to the added claim plus the time provided by law for the service of process, sufficient knowledge of the added claim that the defendant will not be prejudiced in maintaining a defence to it on the merits, and
>
> (c) the court must be satisfied that the added claim is necessary or desirable to ensure the effective enforcement of the claims originally asserted or intended to be asserted in the proceeding.
>
> ...
>
> (5) Under this section,
>
> (a) the claimant has the burden of proving
>
> (i) that the added claim is related to the conduct, transaction or events described in the original pleading in the proceeding, and
>
> (ii) that the requirement of subsection (3)(c), if in issue, has been satisfied,
>
> and
>
> (b) the defendant has the burden of proving that the requirement of subsection (3)(b) or (4)(b), if in issue, was not satisfied.
>
> ...
>
> 10 Nothing in this Act precludes a court from granting a defendant immunity from liability under the equitable doctrines of acquiescence or laches, notwithstanding that the defendant would not be entitled to immunity pursuant to this Act.

2019 ABQB 434 (CanLII)

C. Case Law

[28] Generally, amendments should be allowed, no matter how late or careless, unless there is prejudice that cannot be repaired: Balm v 3512061 Canada Ltd, 2003 ABCA 98, at para 43.

[29] This Court has broad discretion to allow amendments to pleadings and this discretion is to be exercised generously: Andritz Ltd v Quality Fabricating & Supply Ltd, 2010 ABQB 101, at para 43. However, amendments will not be granted if the court finds:

> (a) the amendment will cause prejudice that cannot be ameliorated by costs or other measures;
>
> (b) the amendment is "hopeless", i.e. it does not disclose a cause of action and is not relevant to a cause of action;
>
> (c) the amendment would have been inappropriate as an original pleading, i.e. no amendment will be allowed if it could have been struck as being vexatious, an abuse of process, etc.;
>
> (d) the amendment is not in proper form or is unsatisfactorily particularized; or
>
> (e) the amendment is made after a limitation has passed and
>
> > (i) does not relate to the same conduct, transaction or events described in the original pleading in the proceedings;
> >
> > (ii) the defendant did not receive, within the limitation period applicable to the added claim plus the time provided by law for the service of process (a total of three years) sufficient knowledge of the added claim that the defendant will not be prejudiced in maintaining a defence to it on the merits; and
> >
> > (iii) the added claim is not necessary or desirable to ensure the effective enforcement of the claims originally asserted or intended to be asserted in the proceeding.

[30] See Andritz at para 46; Foda v Capital Health Region, 2007 ABCA 207, at para 10; S(CH) v Alberta (Director of Child Welfare), 2006 ABQB 528, at para 11; aff'd 2006 ABCA 355; Attila Dogan Construction & Installation Co v AMEC Americas Ltd, 2013 ABQB 525, at para 13, aff'd 2014 ABCA 74.

[31] Some proposed amendments will require the requesting party to tender some evidence in support. In Bard v Canadian Natural Resources, 2016 ABQB 267, Nixon J noted at para 12:

> If an amendment is ancillary, no evidence is necessary. Otherwise, the amount of evidence to support an amendment is generally low. This requirement for "modest" evidence includes amendments that allege new substantive facts; yet, even as the evidentiary threshold to amend is low, the evidence "must have some foundation in fact": Attila, supra at paras 14-16. Amendments that particularize a pre-existing claim are granted more liberally than those which effectively add new causes of action. The onus is on the applicants to adduce a modest amount of evidence to support their proposed amendments.

2019 ABQB 434 (CanLII)

[32] Similarly, in Canadian Natural Resources Ltd v Arcelormittal Tubular Products Roman SA, 2012 ABQB 679, aff'd 2013 ABCA 87, Hughes J (as she then was), relying on Balm at paras 9 and 23, noted that trivial amendments, "such as those that do not seek to impose any liability on new defendants" or amendments that are "purely ancillary," do not require evidence: at para 47. The Court went on to note at para 48:

> Amendments pleading a new cause of action or claim arising from facts already plead in existing pleadings filed in time, also require little if any evidence. In Balm, Côté JA observed at para 11:
>
> > Paragraph 37 in the amended statement of claim is new, and is clearly a new cause of action. However, though the legal conclusion pleaded is new, the acts alleged in it are not new. It is trite law that a statement of claim need not name causes of action or draw legal conclusions. It need only plead facts. So the plaintiff could merely have sent the original defendants' counsel a letter warning that he would argue at trial that proof of such and such facts already alleged in the statement of claim would constitute the cause of action of mutuality of obligations under law merchant. See 30 Hals. Laws 7 (3rd Ed. 1959).

VII. Analysis

A. Amendment to Pleadings

[33] At the outset, I note that the consents of the three proposed Plaintiffs as required by Rule 3.74(2)(a) have been filed.

[34] The addition of bcIMC, DHL Limited Partnership, and DHL Hotels as Plaintiffs and the added claims for damages for loss of rental payments and hotel management fees are outside of the relevant limitation period. Section 6 of the Limitations Act applies.

[35] So long as none of the exceptions to the general rule - that amendments should be allowed, no matter how careless or late - apply, this Court should allow the amendments.

i) Prejudice

[36] A party cannot be added to a claim if prejudice would result to a party that could not be remedied by a costs award, an adjournment, or the imposition of terms.

[37] The Plaintiff submits there is no prejudice to the Defendants if the Court allows the amendments. The Plaintiff has already provided all of the records the current and proposed Plaintiffs will rely on to prove liability and quantum. Although scheduling additional Questioning of the proposed Plaintiffs may be time consuming, it does not result in serious prejudice to the Defendants that cannot be remedied.

[38] This case is very similar to the situation in Andritz, which involved a plaintiff - Andritz Ltd. - that applied to add Andritz Inc. as a plaintiff to an action after the expiration of the limitation period. After filing its Statement of Claim, Andritz Ltd. determined that some of the damages set out in the claim were actually incurred by Andritz Inc. The background facts did not change as a result of the amendment. The damages incurred by Andritz Inc. were included in the damages already pled. In Andritz, as in this case, there were allegations of breaches of contract and duty of care.

2019 ABQB 434 (CanLII)

[39] Macklin J found there was no prejudice to the defendants that could not be ameliorated by an award of costs, amendments, or adjournments. He noted there was the possibility of inconvenience but no "serious prejudice or injustice": at para 49.

[40] Prejudice is also a factor under s 6 of the Limitations Act, and I will discuss it further when I discuss s 6.

ii) Hopeless

[41] I agree with the Plaintiff that the proposed amendments are not hopeless. The amendments merely extend previous allegations, of the existence of contractual relationships and a duty of care, to the proposed Plaintiffs.

iii) Inappropriate, Vexatious, Abuse of Process

[42] The proposed amendments are not inappropriate, vexatious, or an abuse of process.

iv) Improper Format, Insufficient Particulars

[43] The proposed amendments are sufficiently particularized. A pleading need only include facts; it is unnecessary for a pleading to contain evidence by which facts are to be proven: Andritz, at para 56.

v) Limitations Act, s 6

[44] Although the proposed amendments are outside of the limitation period they satisfy the criteria in s 6(3) of the Limitations Act.

[45] The scope of s 6 includes "applications to add or substitute a claimant or change the capacity in which a claimant sues without in any way altering the body of the pleading...": Stout Estate v Golinowski Estate, 2002 ABCA 49, at para 91.

[46] Courts use a functional approach in applying s 6. Late amendments will be allowed unless the party opposing the amendments can establish it will suffer actual prejudice: Stout Estate, at paras 97-100. In applying the functional approach, a court must determine whether the requirements in s 6(3) are met.

a) Conduct, Transaction, Event

[47] In this case, the proposed amendments arise from the same conduct, transaction, and events found in the Amended Statement of Claim. The Plaintiff says the only difference between the Amended Statement of Claim and the Proposed Amended Claim is allocation of damages: namely the loss of rental payments and hotel management fees as functions of loss of hotel revenues.

[48] The proposed amendments arise out of the Fire. The Proposed Amended Claim does not introduce any new facts or events.

b) Sufficient Knowledge to Avoid Prejudice

[49] The Defendants take the position they did not receive sufficient knowledge of the added claims and they will therefore be prejudiced in maintaining a defence. Tyco alleges the amendments would cause prejudice because the defendants would be faced with diminished ability to garner evidence necessary to address the amended claims and that key evidence is missing.

2019 ABQB 434 (CanLII)

[50] UTCFS Canada says the amendments would cause serious prejudice that is not compensable in costs, pointing to general loss of evidence, the fact that the litigation has been ongoing for more than seven years, the necessity for production of new records, Questioning, and expert reports, and the fact that necessary information is now difficult to locate or has been destroyed.

[51] The Plaintiff says the Defendants have failed to satisfy their burden of establishing they would suffer prejudice if the amendments are allowed. I agree. The Plaintiff is not alleging a new cause of action, nor is it adding new damages. Allowing the addition of the three proposed Plaintiffs, and allocating the damages between them, will not prejudice the Defendants.

c) Necessary to Ensure Enforcement

[52] Finally, adding the proposed Plaintiffs to the claim, and the further specification of the losses and damages suffered in the Fire, is necessary and desirable to ensure the effective enforcement of the claims originally asserted. As the parties who suffered the losses and damages, having the proposed Plaintiffs in the action will ensure effective enforcement.

[53] In Andritz, Macklin J held that the proposed plaintiff, Andritz Inc., was not a "true stranger" to the litigation, but rather a "sister company" to Andritz Ltd. Macklin J noted at para 81:

> ...The claim now being suggested as properly that of Andritz Inc. is fully set out in the Statement of Claim issued on behalf of Andritz Ltd. The allegations relating to the existence of a contract and a duty of care are precisely the same. The same breaches are alleged. The identical damages are claimed. The two Andritz companies are related. This is not a situation where a different claimant who has a claim against the same defendant wishes to be added as a claimant with consequent amendments alleging different causes of action and other heads of damages.

[54] The statement above applies equally to this situation. The Amended Statement of Claim and Proposed Amended Claim involve the same allegations of breaches, the same damages, and the Plaintiff companies are all related. Although the Defendants argue that the proposed amendments add new heads of damages – namely loss of rental payments and hotel management fees – it is more accurate to say these are further particulars of losses and damages already claimed by the Plaintiff. Given the Proposed Amended Claim does not increase the amount of damages claimed, it is hard to see how these are "new" heads of damages.

vi) Evidence

[55] I find the proposed amendments are ancillary amendments that do not seek to impose new liability on new defendants. Rather, the amendments seek to allocate losses among parties related to each other – "sister companies." No evidence is needed to support these proposed amendments.

B. Laches and Acquiescence

[56] Tyco, relying on s 10 of the Limitations Act, further asks this Court to deny the proposed amendments because they offend the equitable doctrines of laches and acquiescence.

2019 ABQB 434 (CanLII)

[57] Tyco alleges the Plaintiffs deliberately waited to sue and it would be inequitable to deprive the Defendants of their right to immunity. Tyco relies on Weatherford Canada Partnership v Kautschuk, 2017 ABCA 110 (Weatherford CA) which is an appeal of Weatherford Canada Partnership v Kautschuk, 2016 ABQB 188 (Weatherford QB), where the Court of Appeal held that the appellant's behaviour, in deliberately waiting to sue and sitting on its rights, created prejudice or potential injustice to the respondents.

[58] Acquiescence and laches are established when there is unreasonable delay in commencement of proceedings or prosecution, and, considering all of the circumstances, the consequences of delay render the grant of relief unreasonable or unjust: Urbas Estate, 2015 ONSC 6399, at para 79, cited by Veit J in Weatherford QB at para 143.

[59] This case is distinguishable from the situation in Weatherford. First, Weatherford involved an attempt to add new defendants to a claim, not plaintiffs. Further, in Weatherford, the plaintiff knowingly and strategically held off on suing the defendants in a timely manner, taking, what Weatherford referred to as, a "prudent risk": Weatherford QB at para 152. In Weatherford the plaintiff delayed suing the proposed defendants for business reasons. In this situation, there is no evidence of such knowledge and strategy on the part of the Plaintiff and proposed Plaintiffs.

[60] I do not find acquiescence and laches in the circumstances of this case.

VIII. Conclusion

[61] The Plaintiff's Application is allowed and the Plaintiff may file the Proposed Amended Claim.

IX. Costs

[62] The parties may speak to me within 60 days of these Reasons for Judgment if they are otherwise unable to agree on costs.

Heard on the 12th day of April, 2019.
Dated at the City of Edmonton, Alberta this 11th day of June, 2019.

K.G. Nielsen
A.J.C.Q.B.A.

Appearances:

Havelock Madill, QC and Eleni Loutas
Brownlee LLP
for the Plaintiff

2019 ABQB 434 (CanLII)

Andrew Stead and Gordana Ivanovic
McMillan LLP
for Tyco International of Canada Ltd carrying on business under the registered trade name of Simplex Grinnel

Greg Jaycock
Parlee McLaws LLP
for UTC Fire and Security Canada

Andrew Paterson
DDC Lawyers LLP
for Calm Shore Ventures (1992) Inc

2019 ABQB 434 (CanLII)

In the Court of Appeal of Alberta

Citation: Stankovic v 1536679 Alberta Ltd, 2019 ABCA 187

Date: 20190516
Docket: 1701-0329-AC
Registry: Calgary

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

Between:

William Stankovic

Respondent
(Plaintiff/Defendant by Counterclaim)

- and -

1536679 Alberta Ltd

Appellant
(Defendant/Plaintiff
by Counterclaim)

The Court:

The Honourable Mr. Justice Brian O'Ferrall
The Honourable Madam Justice Frederica Schutz
The Honourable Madam Justice Jo'Anne Strekaf

Memorandum of Judgment

Appeal from the Decision by
The Honourable Mr. Justice J.T. Eamon
Dated the 18th day of October, 2017
(Docket: 1601 10040)

Memorandum of Judgment

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

I. Introduction

[1] This appeal questions whether the chambers judge on appeal should have used the summary procedure under Rule 7.3 to grant summary judgment in a foreclosure action. He made a finding that the mortgage was in default and directed that the plaintiff could proceed with enforcement proceedings before a master.

[2] This Court must consider "[i]f the record allowed the judge to make the necessary findings of fact and apply the law"; if so, "then the summary procedure should be used unless there is a substantive reason to conclude that summary disposition would not 'achieve a just result'": Weir-Jones Technical Services Incorporated v Purolator Courier Ltd, 2019 ABCA 49 at para 25 [Weir-Jones].

[3] Appellant 1536679 Alberta Ltd ("153") contends that the summary procedure should not have been used because there were unresolved material conflicts in the evidence that did not allow the chambers judge to make the necessary findings of fact and apply the law.

[4] We agree.

[5] For the reasons following, the order of the chambers judge is set aside. As this matter is remitted to the trial court, we say below only what is necessary to dispose of the appeal.

II. Previous Proceedings

A. Master in chambers

[6] Before the master in chambers, Stankovic sought both summary judgment in his foreclosure action and summary dismissal of 153's defence and counterclaim in the action.

[7] Stankovic swore an affidavit in which he annexed the parties' written agreements pre-dating the mortgage and the mortgage, deposed to 153's default thereunder and provided a calculation of the outstanding debt. The debt claimed far exceeds Stankovic's appraiser's opinion of value.

[8] The crux of 153's defence and counterclaim was that Stankovic:

> . . . was not a simple lender and mortgage holder in respect of the 77 Street Property, but an active Joint Venture party, and that the parties had collaterally agreed that there was no indebtedness owing under the James River or the 77 Street Property Mortgage to be paid independently of the 77 Street Property payment, and > the parties had agreed that the James River Mortgage was of no validity and enforceability.

153 tendered substantial affidavit evidence through its principal, Trnski, in this respect.

[9] In response to 153's evidence, Stankovic swore at para 22 of his Affidavit that:

> I have reviewed the Statement of Defence and the Counterclaim filed by the Defendant in this Action. I believe there is no defence to my claim and that the Statement of Defence is without merit. I believe that there is no merit to the whole or any part of the Counterclaim. I believe that there are no genuine issues to be tried.

He otherwise did not tender any countervailing evidence.

[10] The master dismissed Stankovic's application because 153 had put forth a substantial affidavit that recited facts which had not been challenged; Stankovic made nothing more than a very general statement in his affidavit with respect to the merits of the matter. The master found that:

> … I'm not able to grant summary judgment based upon these materials and these facts … Mr [Trnski] has put forth a substantial affidavit that recites specific facts which your client may not agree with, but your client hasn't challenged those facts. He's made nothing more than a very general statement in his affidavit with respect to the merit of the matter generally.
>
> There is at least some corroborative evidence with respect to the non-arm's-length dealing between these parties and the fact that certain aspects of them might have been interconnected. And the materials, at the very least, put forward a set of facts that at the very least and on a preliminary examination would arguably result in a defence to any claim for deficiency and perhaps even more in terms of what they reveal.

B. Court of Queen's Bench

[11] Stankovic appealed, but changed course in doing so, indicating that he was "only challenging that [any joint venture agreement] cannot challenge the mortgage"; and "[t]he only thing that matters . . . for the purposes of today's application, is whether or not the [joint venture agreement] altered the term of the mortgage".

[12] As for 153's defence and counterclaim, Stankovic now took the position that if 153 and Trnski "say there's some oral joint venture agreement and there's obligations between the parties, which, of course, we deny, but if they say that, then that could be pursued at some future date".

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

[13] On appeal, the evidentiary record was unchanged.

[14] The chambers judge stated that in his view, Stankovic's "denial of a collateral agreement that mortgage, principal and interest is not due is unassailable" because:

a) a self-serving statement in Trnski's affidavit alone was not sufficient to create a triable issue in the absence of detailed facts and supporting evidence. The statement in paragraph 22 of Trnski's affidavit was a bare assertion without any details of when the supposed express agreement was made or using what language, and without any explanation why the mortgage terms and the terms of the other agreements were drafted;

b) 153's evidence to the effect that there was an agreement that the mortgage would not be payable until subdivision and sale of the lots was clearly an agreement that modified the terms and conditions of the option agreement and the mortgage, and was excluded under the parol evidence rule;

c) while he "would not apply the parol evidence rule to permit the parties to facilitate a fraud", 153 didn't plead fraud and cannot "have it both ways" and "stop enforcement by raising hints of fraud, yet continue the fraudulent transaction and receive the financing and remain in possession of a multi-million dollar property at no cost";

d) there is no air of reality to the claim that Stankovic is estopped from insisting on its legal rights because "there is simply no evidence to suggest any representation on the part of the plaintiff that it would not enforce the mortgage";

e) if there was an obligation to fund the tax payments or other development expenses during the mortgage term, that could only be an obligation that is collateral to the vendor takeback mortgage; it cannot be one that is express or implied in the mortgage itself; and

f) no adverse inference would be drawn from Stankovic's failure to adduce evidence from the parties' joint lawyer.

[15] In the end however, the chambers judge also recognized that there were triable issues as to whether there was a joint venture agreement, a collateral agreement for Stankovic to provide funds to 153 and whether such arrangements had been breached, and made it clear that his decision was not to affect such claims. He stated:

> I want there to be a further direction in the formal order that this decision does not prejudice or affect the defendant's claim for damages under its counterclaim. If it turns out, at the end of day, that there was a joint venture agreement and there was a collateral agreement to provide funds, and, as I say, if the other legal requirements > are met, then it is not my intention to preclude the defendant from pursuing those claims. And certainly, at this point, based on the evidence I've seen, there is a triable issue because none of those allegations in this case have been rebutted by the plaintiff who also simply makes a bare assertion with respect to the existence of the joint venture agreement.

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

[16] The chambers judge granted a form of order that permitted Stankovic to proceed with the foreclosure action with the proviso that a master in chambers who had "expertise" would decide what to do in Stankovic's action; Stankovic's right to proceed was to be without prejudice to 153's right to pursue its counterclaim.

[17] 153 appealed.

III. Standards of Review

[18] As per Weir–Jones at para 10, the test for summary dismissal and the interpretation of the Alberta Rules of Court, Alta Reg 124/2010, are questions of law reviewed for correctness. Findings of fact underlying a summary dismissal are entitled to deference, as are the "chamber judge's assessment of the facts, the application of the law to those facts, and the ultimate determination on whether summary resolution is appropriate are all entitled to deference: Hryniak v Mauldin, 2014 SCC 7 at paras 81-4, [2014] 1 SCR 87; Amack v AW Holdings Corp, 2015 ABCA 147 at para. 27, 24 Alta LR (6th) 44, 602 AR 62." See also Housen v Nickolaisen, 2002 SCC 33, [2002] 2 SCR 235; HL v Canada (Attorney General), 2005 SCC 25, [2005] 1 SCR 401; Attila Dogan Construction and Installation Co v AMEC Americas Ltd, 2015 ABCA 406 at para 9, 609 AR 313

[19] While neither the master nor the chambers judge had the benefit of this Court's recent decision in Weir-Jones, both parties made submissions at the oral hearing on how that decision impacts this appeal.

IV. Grounds of Appeal

[20] On appeal, 153 submits that the chambers judge erred in law by granting partial summary judgment and permitting enforcement on the mortgage despite his finding that triable issues existed with respect to whether there was a joint venture agreement and a collateral agreement to provide funds that was breached by Stankovic.

V. Analysis

[21] To succeed in obtaining summary disposition, Stankovic was required to demonstrate that under the mortgage, his in rem and in personam rights against 153 were unimpeded.

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

[22] Stankovic as plaintiff was required to establish "no defence". "The resisting party need not prove the opposite in order to send the matter to trial. The party resisting summary judgment need only demonstrate that the record, the facts, or the law preclude a fair disposition or, in other words, that the moving party has failed to establish there is no genuine issue requiring a trial"; there is no symmetry of burdens: Weir-Jones at para 32.

[23] We are satisfied that the chambers judge erred:

a) in finding Trnski's evidence, encapsulated in particular at paragraph 22 of his affidavit, amounted to no more than a self-serving bare assertion, and was not admissible under the parol evidence rule; and

b) in finding that the mortgage was in default, while acknowledging that there were triable issues as to whether there was an overarching joint venture and a collateral agreement to provide funds to 153 that were breached by Stankovic.

[24] The chambers judge decided Stankovic's "denial of a collateral agreement that mortgage, principal and interest is not due is unassailable" as follows:

> . . . [A] self-serving statement in an affidavit alone is not sufficient to create a triable issue in the absence of detailed facts and supporting evidence. The statement in paragraph 22 of Mr. Trnski's affidavit is a so-called bare assertion without any details of when the supposed express agreement was made or using what language, and without any explanation why the mortgage terms and the terms of the other agreements were drafted. . . . The bare assertion is not sufficient to overcome the structure of the written option agreement and the vendor takeback mortgage, both of which are signed were signed by [153].

The chambers judge also found that Trnski's "evidence about the agreement contrary to the terms of the written mortgage is not admissible" on the basis that the parol evidence rule precludes the use of evidence to add to, subtract or vary the terms of a contract.

[25] The chambers judge failed to recognize however, that the parol evidence rule is subject to a myriad of exceptions. Moreover, Sattva Capital Corp v Creston Moly Corp, 2014 SCC 53 at paras 60-61, [2014] 2 SCR 633 [Sattva] is clear:

> The parol evidence rule does not apply to preclude evidence of the surrounding circumstances. Such evidence is consistent with the objectives of finality and certainty because it is used as an interpretive aid for determining the meaning of the written words chosen by the parties, not to change or overrule the meaning of those words. The surrounding circumstances are facts known or facts that reasonably ought to have been known to both parties at or before the date of contracting; therefore, the concern of unreliability does not arise.

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

[26] Sattva was applied in IFP Technologies (Canada) Inc. v EnCana Midstream and Marketing, 2017 ABCA 157 at para 59, 53 Alta LR (6th) 96, in the context of an error of law:

> One error of law reviewed for correctness is where the trial judge fails to consider the "surrounding circumstances" or "factual matrix" of a contract. A trial judge must consider the factual matrix in interpreting a contract regardless of whether the contract is ambiguous. Therefore, it is an error for a trial judge to discount the factual matrix on the basis that the contract itself is not ambiguous. . . (citations omitted).

[27] Failing to consider the surrounding circumstances that were known or reasonably ought to have been known by the parties at the time of creation of the 2013 option agreement and mortgage, is an error of law reviewed for correctness.

[28] In our view, the chambers judge was wrong to disregard the content of Trnski's evidence that fell outside the four corners of the written documents. Trnski did not dispute that 153 signed the 2013 option agreement and the mortgage. In other words, there is no issue of authentication. 153 urged the chambers judge to consider, however, that there was a triable issue about whether the mortgage was presently enforceable by Stankovic's foreclosure action.

[29] We agree with 153's contention that the chambers judge rejected 153's evidence out of hand, in the absence of essential fact findings in the face of material, conflicting evidence. While he accepted that there were triable issues which should proceed to trial on the counterclaim with respect to the existence of an overarching joint venture agreement and a collateral agreement to provide funds to 153 and a breach by Stankovic of same, he wrongly decided that there was no triable issue as to whether the mortgage was in default and enforceable without determining those issues. 153 needed only to demonstrate that the record, the facts, or the law preclude a fair summary disposition or, in other words, that Stankovic failed to establish there is no genuine issue requiring a trial.

[30] A brief summary of the record is sufficient to underline our concerns, bearing in mind Trnski's evidence is uncontroverted but for Stankovic's bare denial.

a. The parties' relationship

[31] Trnski swore that he and Stankovic were longstanding friends and business partners who had come to various "handshake" agreements relating to the development of the 77 Street lands, a 4-acre parcel where Stankovic's principal residence was situated. Trnski stated that the deal was he and Stankovic together, would subdivide the lands into multiple executive lots that would be sold at a significant profit.

b. The components of the parties' "Joint Venture Agreement"

[32] The so-called "Joint Venture Agreement" had two parts, said Trnski. The first part included the parties' agreement that when subdivided into lots, the total value of the lands would be $5.5 million. This compared to a present value of $2.5 million for the undeveloped land, as is. Under their deal, Stankovic would receive the first $5 million from the sale of lots (being a $2.5 million income gain to Stankovic), with some adjustments; Stankovic and 153 would then share the profit above the first $5 million equally. The second part of the parties' agreement was to create a scenario whereby Stankovic could shield himself from paying taxes on the anticipated income gain; namely, he would claim as a sale of his principal residence the increased value of the land after subdivision.

[33] Trnski deposed that to achieve this desired outcome, he and Stankovic agreed that the 77 Street property would be transferred to Trsnki's company 153 at a price that would reflect the first $5 million to Stankovic, plus 50% of the increased value above that amount. Trnski produced an opinion letter dated May 13, 2010, from a law firm that explained such an arrangement, whereby "NewCo" would be specifically created for the project and would purchase the house and surplus land from Stankovic who would take back a first mortgage "due on sale of the property".

[34] Trnski deposed that the transaction was to be completed by a transfer of Stankovic's property to 153 only after the parties received a firm offer on the subdivided land. The transaction was characterized as an agreement for sale with a term of three years, being the expected subdivision and sale timeline. In an attempt to document the 77 Street transaction as being a bona fide sale by Stankovic at (the inflated) fair market value, Trnski said that Stankovic proposed registering a mortgage on the James River property (now involved in proceedings in another action, number 1501-04858). This would create the appearance that Stankovic was advancing funds to 153 to enable 153 to "pay" the $500,000 deposit on the 77 Street transaction, all in aid of lending an air of reality to Stankovic's representation that he sold his principal residence at the increased value.

[35] The parties first written document dated May 31, 2010, states a purchase price is $5.5 million, and Schedule "A" provides that 153 "shall have permission to apply to subdivide the lands at its costs"; monies purportedly due under this agreement were to be paid by June 15, 2013.

[36] In 2010, at about the same time, a $550,000 mortgage in Stankovic's favour was registered against 849450 Alberta Ltd's (Trnski's company) James River property. Trnski deposed this face amount represented the amount of the 77 Street Property deposit of $500,000, plus $50,000 that Stankovic paid for common joint venture expenses pursuant to their Joint Venture Agreement. Trnski deposed that the James River mortgage was interrelated to the parties' 77 Street Property development project, as he extensively explained in paragraphs 17-19 of his affidavit.

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

c. The expiration of the anticipated timeframe for subdivision of the lands

[37] Trnski deposed that while he and Stankovic thought that the 3 year time period from 2010 to 2013 would be sufficient to complete the 77 Street land subdivision and the sales of subdivided lots, this timeline was not realized due to problems obtaining municipal approval for the proposed subdivision. Under the May 31, 2010 written agreement, the June 15, 2013 deadline for payment came and went; no monies were paid to Stankovic.

[38] Stankovic admitted that he "did not immediately commence legal proceedings, but allowed Trnski to continue to develop the 77 Street Property even though the 2010 Agreement had expired."

d. The 2013 replacement option agreement and mortgage

[39] Stankovic deposed that he and 153 entered into a new agreement, intended to replace and be substituted for the 2010 agreement. The replacement agreement dated May 31, 2013 is entitled "This Agreement for Sale (Option Agreement)", and indicates that 153 had paid Stankovic $500,000 "the receipt and sufficiency of which is hereby acknowledged". However, it is our understanding that no such payment was made by 153 to Stankovic.

[40] In the replacement agreement, Stankovic gives 153 an option to purchase the 77 Street land, but now at the increased price of $7.5 million; the option to be exercised at any time "up to June 15, 2015, but not after such date". By letter dated October 26, 2014, 153 advised of its intention to exercise this option.

[41] $7.5 million was to be paid to Stankovic by a $500,000 non-refundable deposit, and "$7,000,000 by way of Vendor Take Back financing Interest rate: 4% annually, compounding

> Term: 2 years
>
> Type of security: first mortgage
>
> Prepayment provision: open
>
> Partial discharge on each sale of lot." [Emphasis added]

[42] Clause 3(b)(i) and (ii) provided that "[a]ll expenses and adjustable items with respect to the Property including without limitation all taxes, local improvement charges and assessments, rents, utilities and any recoveries . . . shall be adjusted and paid between the parties as of the Closing Date", defined as "on or before June 15, 2015". However, clause 23 supersedes clause 3(b)(ii), and provided:

> Notwithstanding anything else herein contained, even if inconsistent herewith, the closing date shall be 20 days after [153] has received the final subdivision approval for the within lands, which [153] warrants it shall apply for forthwith. [153] upon such approval shall immediately exercise the within option. (Emphasis added).

It is also clear on the record that 153 had not obtained "final subdivision approval".

[43] Additionally, the parties acknowledged in writing that Stankovic's mortgage would be paid by "[p]artial discharge on each sale of lot", as per Clause 3(a)(ii). Arguably the parties had in contemplation the anticipated subdivision and sale of individual lots. Clause 36 of the Mortgage also provided for this option as follows: "Unless the Lender has otherwise agreed to the repayment of the loan from the closing of sales of individual units or lots comprising the Lands. . .". Further, the uncontroverted evidence is that Stankovic did not accelerate payment of the full balance due under the mortgage when a "lot" was sold to his son-in-law.

[44] While the chambers judge relies heavily on the "entire agreement" Clause 17 of the May 31, 2013 option agreement, that clause is superseded by Clause 23 set out above. Moreover, entire agreement clauses are not an impediment to the duty of honesty in contractual performance. As per Bhasin v Hrynew, 2014 SCC 71 at paras 72 and 75, [2014] 3 SCR 494, the Supreme Court of Canada discussed "entire agreement" clauses and the duty of good faith as follows:

> . . . [A] party almost always has some amount of discretion in how to perform a contract. It would [be] difficult to say that a duty of good faith should be implied in this case on the basis of the intentions of the parties given the clear terms of an entire agreement clause in the Agreement. The key question before the Court, therefore, is whether we ought to create a new common law duty under the broad umbrella of the organizing principle of good faith performance of contracts.
>
> . . .
>
> [T]he entire agreement clause in [the Agreement] is not an impediment to the duty arising in this case. Because the duty of honesty in contractual performance is a general doctrine of contract law that applies to all contracts, like unconscionability, the parties are not free to exclude it.

See also Hole v Hole, 2016 ABCA 34, 612 AR 164.

[45] Trnski's evidence was that this was not a straightforward, arm's length, creditor-debtor relationship but rather a good faith understanding between friends, and if disbelieved, compelled a credibility assessment. A dispute "depending on issues of credibility, can leave genuine issues requiring a trial": Weir-Jones at para 35.

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

[46] A fair reading of Guarantee Co of North America v Gordon Capital, [1999] 3 SCR 423 at para 31, 178 DLR (4th) 1, mandates that merely conclusory or argumentative statements that have no supporting evidence besides the claims themselves, ought to be given no weight. On this authority therefore, Stankovic's conclusory statement that the appellant had "no defence" ought to be accorded little weight. On the other hand, Trnski's evidence far exceeds the threshold of "detailed facts and supporting evidence".

[47] As noted in Axxess Mortgage Fund v 117620 Alberta Ltd, 2018 ABQB 626 at paras 183-189, the legal viability of a prior oral agreement that shapes the apparently contrary features of a written instrument, has been recognized by this Court in Palachek v Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, 1991 ABCA 8 at paras 8-10, 79 Alta LR (2d) 159; see also Strother v Darc, 2016 BCCA 297 at paras 24-26, wherein the court discussed the concept of "umbrella" agreements.

[48] In Bank of Montreal v Wilder (1983), 149 DLR (3rd) 193 at para 146 (BCCA), aff'd [1986] 2 SCR 551, the British Columbia Court of Appeal found that "[u]nder the shade of the umbrella" agreement, documents were to be read and interpreted and applied as a unified whole. And further, "the umbrella agreement, as a collateral agreement, comes within the collateral agreement exception to the parol evidence rule, so long as it is a true collateral agreement, established by the evidence and not merely a unilateral oral representation in derogation from the express terms of the document . . .".

[49] Whether there was a true collateral umbrella agreement between Stankovic and 153 under which the written documents were to be read and interpreted as a unified whole, is a triable issue; indeed, the chambers judge acknowledged as much.

[50] Furthermore, 153 raised a defence in the nature of estoppel, which the chambers judge acknowledged but rejected as follows:

> There is no air of reality to the submissions that the plaintiff was estopped from enforcing the mortgage because there is simply no evidence to suggest any representation on the part of the plaintiff that it would not enforce the mortgage. Also, the defendant does not plead or provide evidence of reliance. It does not say it was induced to agree or make or exercise the option agreement by any particular commitment or representation or that it relied on any specific representation in signing an agreement containing terms contrary to what Mr Trnski now says the facts are. . . .

[51] In Ryan v Moore, 2005 SCC 38 at para 51, [2005] 2 SCR 53, the Supreme Court commented that "the doctrine of estoppel is one of the most flexible and useful in the armoury of law", and cited with approval the following passage from Amalgamated Investment & Property Co v Texas Consumer International Bank Ltd, [1981] 3 All ER 577 (Eng CA) at 584:

> . . . When the parties to a transaction proceed on the basis of an underlying assumption - either of fact or law, and whether due to misrepresentation or mistake makes no difference - on which they have conducted the dealings between them - neither of them will be allowed to go back on that assumption when it would be unfair or unjust to do so. If one of them does seek to go back on it, the courts will give the other such remedy as the equity of the case demands.

[52] The effect or outcome of promissory estoppel, if found, is that a party seeking to enforce its rights is prevented from enjoying the full benefit of a particular right.

[53] The facts underpinning an estoppel defence are crucial: what were the actions or words of the parties? Here, despite the volume of evidence relating to the assumptions underlying the parties' overall agreement, the chambers judge did not consider that 153 did not need to prove estoppel, rather it needed only to persuade the court that Stankovic could not meet his burden of proving no triable issue: Weir-Jones at para 35.

[54] We are persuaded that 153's defence and counterclaim and Trnski's evidence are factually and legally linked, and bear directly on the essential enforceability of the 77 Street Property mortgage. The chambers judge erred by granting partial summary judgment that the mortgage was in default, while at the same time finding that there were triable issues as to whether there was an overarching joint venture, a collateral agreement for Stankovic to provide funds to 153 and a breach of those arrangements. The defences advanced by 153 on the mortgage action and its claims in the counterclaim are sufficiently interconnected that it would be unjust to permit Stankovic to realize on the mortgage immediately, recover back the land and obtain a deficiency judgment against 153 while 153 would be limited to a damages claim against Stankovic to be determined at a future date. Moreover, the chambers judge's finding that there was a "default" on the mortgage involves inherent factual findings that could have res judicata implications on the issues to be determined on the counterclaim notwithstanding the chambers judge's direction to the contrary. In our view, Stankovic has not demonstrated that partial summary judgment would achieve a just result.

[55] In sum, we are satisfied there are triable issues as to the enforceability of the Stankovic mortgage, and the order under appeal does not comport with "overall considerations of fairness and the ability 'to achieve a just result'": Weir-Jones at para 40.

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

VI. Conclusion

[56] Accordingly, the appeal is allowed and the chambers judge's order is set side.

Appeal heard on February 14, 2019

Memorandum filed at Calgary, Alberta
this 16th day of May, 2019

O'Ferrall J.A.

Authorized to sign for: Schutz J.A.

Strekaf J.A.

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

Appearances:

S.C. Chimuk
J. Dhaliwal
for the Respondent

J.J. Irwin
for the Appellant

2019 ABCA 187 (CanLII)

Cabot Insurance Company Limited and Rex Gilbert Moore, deceased, by his Administratrix, Muriel Smith Appellants

v.

Peter Ryan Respondent

Indexed as: Ryan v. Moore

Neutral citation: 2005 SCC 38.

File No.: 29849.

2004: December 7; 2005: June 16.

Present: McLachlin C.J. and Major, Bastarache, LeBel, Deschamps, Abella and Charron JJ.

ON APPEAL FROM THE COURT OF APPEAL OF NEWFOUNDLAND AND LABRADOR

Limitation of actions — Survival of action against deceased — Limitation periods — Estoppel by convention — Estoppel by representation — Discoverability rule — Confirmation of cause of action — Limitation period under Survival of Actions Act expiring one year after death of party to action or six months after date when letters of administration granted — Statement of claim for damages in relation to motor vehicle accident issued against defendant within two-year limitation period prescribed by Limitations Act — Defendant's death unknown to plaintiff until after shorter limitation period in Survival of Actions Act had expired — Whether doctrine of estoppel by convention or by representation applicable to prevent defendant from raising limitation defence — Whether confirmation of cause of action or discoverability rule applicable to extend limitation period of Survival of Actions Act — Survival of Actions Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, c. S-32, s. 5 — Limitations Act, S.N.L. 1995, c. L-16.1, ss. 5, 16.

Estoppel — Estoppel by convention — Requirements — Whether requirements of doctrine of estoppel by convention met.

Estoppel — Estoppel by representation — Limitation of actions — Whether defendant's silence regard-

Cabot Insurance Company Limited et feu Rex Gilbert Moore, représenté par son administratrice Muriel Smith Appelants

c.

Peter Ryan Intimé

Répertorié : Ryan c. Moore

Référence neutre : 2005 CSC 38.

N° du greffe : 29849.

2004 : 7 décembre; 2005 : 16 juin.

Présents : La juge en chef McLachlin et les juges Major, Bastarache, LeBel, Deschamps, Abella et Charron.

EN APPEL DE LA COUR D'APPEL DE TERRE-NEUVE-ET-LABRADOR

Prescription — Survie d'une action intentée contre une personne décédée — Délais de prescription — Préclusion par convention — Préclusion par assertion de fait — Règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage — Confirmation de la cause d'action — Délai de prescription prévu par la Survival of Actions Act expirant un an après le décès d'une partie à une action ou six mois après la date de délivrance de lettres d'administration — Déclaration relative à un préjudice résultant d'un accident d'automobile déposée contre le défendeur avant l'expiration du délai de prescription de deux ans fixé par la Limitations Act — Demandeur apprenant le décès du défendeur seulement après l'expiration du délai de prescription plus court établi par la Survival of Actions Act — La règle de la préclusion par convention ou par assertion de fait empêche-t-elle le défendeur d'invoquer la prescription comme moyen de défense? — La confirmation de la cause d'action ou la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage a-t-elle pour effet de prolonger le délai de prescription prévu par la Survival of Actions Act? — Survival of Actions Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, ch. S-32, art. 5 — Limitations Act, S.N.L. 1995, ch. L-16.1, art. 5, 16.

Préclusion — Préclusion par convention — Conditions — Les conditions de la règle de la préclusion sont-elles remplies?

Préclusion — Préclusion par assertion de fait — Prescription — Le silence du défendeur concernant le ing shorter limitation period constitutes representation grounding estoppel.

On November 27, 1997, three vehicles operated by the respondent R, the appellant M, and a third party were involved in an accident. R decided to pursue a personal injury claim against M. He was unaware that, on December 26, 1998, M had died of causes unrelated to the accident. On February 16, 1999, Letters of Administration were granted to M's administratrix. On October 28, 1999, R issued his statement of claim naming M as the defendant; it was within the two-year limitation period prescribed by the Limitations Act, but outside the limitation period under the Survival of Actions Act, namely one year after the death of a party to an action or six months after letters of administration are granted. The appellant insurer sought an order striking out the statement of claim for being out of time. R also filed an application to amend the name of the defendant in the statement of claim. The Supreme Court of Newfoundland and Labrador denied the insurer's application to have the action dismissed and granted R's application. The Court of Appeal allowed, in part, both the appeal and cross-appeal, concluding that the Survival of Actions Act applied to the action, but that the appellants were nevertheless estopped from relying upon the shorter limitation period.

Held: The appeal should be allowed on the issue of estoppel and the statement of claim struck out. The decision of the Court of Appeal should otherwise be affirmed. There are no reasons based on any legal doctrine to preclude M's estate or the insurer from relying on the Survival of Actions Act limitation period.

The discoverability rule does not apply to the Survival of Actions Act. This rule cannot be relied on where, as here, the limitation period is explicitly linked by the governing legislation to a fixed event unrelated to the injured party's knowledge or the basis of the cause of action. By using a specific event as the starting point of the "limitation clock" under the Survival of Actions Act, the legislature displaced the discoverability rule in all situations to which the Survival of Actions Act applies. [24-25] [27]

Section 16 of the Limitations Act does not apply to the Survival of Actions Act either. Any confirmation of the cause of action would have no effect on the Survival of Actions Act limitation period because the Survival of Actions Act does not create a cause of action but simply confers a right to pursue a claim notwithstanding the fact délai de prescription plus court constitue-t-il une assertion justifiant la préclusion?

Un accident impliquant trois véhicules conduits par l'intimé R, l'appelant M et une tierce personne est survenu le 27 novembre 1997. R a décidé d'intenter une action pour préjudice corporel contre M. Il ignorait que, le 26 décembre 1998, M était décédé de causes non liées à l'accident. Le 16 février 1999, des lettres d'administration ont été délivrées à l'administratrice de M. Le 28 octobre 1999, R a déposé sa déclaration désignant M comme défendeur; ce dépôt a été fait avant l'expiration du délai de prescription de deux ans fixé par la Limitations Act, mais après celle du délai de prescription prévu par la Survival of Actions Act, qui est d'un an suivant la date du décès d'une partie à une action ou de six mois suivant la délivrance de lettres d'administration. L'assureur appelant a sollicité une ordonnance de radiation de la déclaration pour cause de tardiveté. R a également présenté une demande de modification du nom de la partie défenderesse inscrit dans la déclaration. La Cour suprême de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador a rejeté la demande de l'assureur visant à obtenir le rejet de l'action et a accueilli la demande de R. La Cour d'appel a accueilli en partie l'appel principal et l'appel incident, concluant que la Survival of Actions Act s'appliquait à l'action, mais que les appelants étaient néanmoins préclus d'invoquer le délai de prescription plus court.

Arrêt : Le pourvoi est accueilli en ce qui concerne la question de la préclusion et la déclaration est radiée. La décision de la Cour d'appel est par ailleurs confirmée. Il n'y avait aucune raison fondée sur quelque règle juridique d'empêcher la succession de M ou l'assureur d'invoquer le délai de prescription fixé par la Survival of Actions Act.

La règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage ne s'applique pas à la Survival of Actions Act. Cette règle ne peut pas être invoquée dans les cas où, comme en l'espèce, la loi applicable lie expressément le délai de prescription à un événement déterminé qui n'a rien à voir avec le moment où la partie lésée en prend connaissance ou avec le fondement de la cause d'action. En désignant un fait particulier comme élément déclencheur du « compte à rebours de la prescription », le législateur a écarté la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage dans tous les cas où la Survival of Actions Act s'applique. [24-25] [27]

L'article 16 de la Limitations Act ne s'applique pas non plus à la Survival of Actions Act. Une confirmation de la cause d'action n'aurait aucun effet sur le délai de prescription fixé par la Survival of Actions Act parce que cette loi ne crée pas une cause d'action, mais ne fait que conférer un droit d'intenter une action malgré le décès that one of the parties has died. In any event, there was no confirmation of the cause of action in this case, as there was no admission of liability through the letters sent between the parties' representatives or through the payments made by the insurer to R's counsel for property damage or for medical reports. The letters and payments were intended only to promote the investigation and early resolution of certain aspects of the claim. [37] [42] [45-48]

The requirements to establish estoppel by convention — a communicated shared assumption between the parties, reliance on the shared assumption and detriment — are not met. None of the letters exchanged by R's counsel and the adjuster with respect to R's personal injury claim prove the existence of a common assumption that M was alive or that the limitation defence would not be relied on. The letters lack clarity and certainty. Even if one could conclude that there was a mutual assumption between the parties, it cannot realistically be asserted that R communicated to the appellants that he shared the mistaken assumption. Moreover, R not only did not rely on the alleged assumption, but his conduct does not show an intention to affect the legal relations between the parties. The record does not disclose that R changed his position in any way on the basis of this alleged mutual assumption. Rather, the evidence suggests that he never put his mind to the shorter Survival of Actions Act limitation period. Given that there was no shared assumption or reliance, the detriment requirement does not need to be addressed. It should be noted, however, that a detriment is not established by a reduced limitation period. [63-66] [70-72] [75]

Finally, R cannot rely on estoppel by representation. Estoppel by representation cannot arise from silence unless a party is under a duty to speak. In the present case, there was no duty on the appellants to advise R of a limitation period, to assist him in the prosecution of the claim, or to advise him of the consequences of the death of one of the parties. [76-77]

Cases Cited

Referred to: Central Trust Co. v. Rafuse, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 147; Page v. Austin (1884), 10 S.C.R. 132; Kamloops (City of) v. Nielsen, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 2; M. (K.) v. M. (H.), [1992] 3 S.C.R. 6; Peixeiro v. Haberman, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 549; Fehr v. Jacob (1993), 14 C.C.L.T. (2d) 200; Snow v. Kashyap (1995), 125 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 182; Payne v. Brady (1996), 140 D.L.R. (4th) 88,

de l'une des parties. De toute façon, la cause d'action n'a pas été confirmée en l'espèce étant donné que ni les lettres (échangées entre les représentants des parties) ni les paiements effectués (par l'assureur à l'avocat de R pour le préjudice matériel ou des rapports médicaux) ne traduisent une reconnaissance de responsabilité. Les lettres et les paiements étaient seulement destinés à faire avancer l'enquête et à favoriser le règlement rapide de certains aspects de la demande d'indemnité. [37] [42] [45-48]

Les conditions pour qu'il y ait préclusion par convention — présupposition commune communiquée entre les parties, avoir agi sur la foi de cette présupposition commune (acte de confiance) et préjudice — ne sont pas remplies. Aucune des lettres que l'avocat de R et l'expert en sinistres ont échangées relativement à l'action pour préjudice corporel de R n'établit l'existence d'une présupposition commune que M était vivant ou que la prescription ne serait pas invoquée comme moyen de défense. Ces lettres manquent de clarté et de certitude. Même si on pouvait conclure à l'existence d'une présupposition commune des parties, on ne saurait réalistement affirmer que R a informé les appelants qu'il partageait leur présupposition erronée. De plus, non seulement R ne s'est-il pas fié à la présupposition dont on allègue l'existence, mais encore sa conduite ne démontre aucune intention de modifier les rapports juridiques entre les parties. Le dossier ne montre pas que R a modifié de quelque façon que ce soit sa situation en raison de la présupposition commune dont on allègue l'existence. La preuve indique plutôt qu'il n'a jamais songé au délai de prescription plus court prévu par la Survival of Actions Act. Étant donné l'absence de présupposition commune ou d'acte de confiance, il n'est pas nécessaire d'examiner le critère du préjudice. Toutefois, il y a lieu de souligner qu'un délai de prescription plus court n'est pas une preuve de préjudice. [63-66] [70-72] [75]

Enfin, R ne peut pas invoquer la préclusion par assertion de fait. La préclusion par assertion de fait ne peut pas découler d'un silence, à moins qu'une partie ne soit tenue de parler. En l'espèce, les appelants n'étaient pas tenus d'informer R de l'existence d'un délai de prescription, de l'aider à intenter son action ou de l'aviser des conséquences du décès de l'une des parties. [76-77]

Jurisprudence

Arrêts mentionnés : Central Trust Co. c. Rafuse, [1986] 2 R.C.S. 147; Page c. Austin (1884), 10 R.C.S. 132; Kamloops (Ville de) c. Nielsen, [1984] 2 R.C.S. 2; M. (K.) c. M. (H.), [1992] 3 R.C.S. 6; Peixeiro c. Haberman, [1997] 3 R.C.S. 549; Fehr c. Jacob (1993), 14 C.C.L.T. (2d) 200; Snow c. Kashyap (1995), 125 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 182; Payne c. Brady (1996), 140 D.L.R. (4th) 88, leave to appeal refused, [1997] 2 S.C.R. xiii; Burt v. LeLacheur (2000), 189 D.L.R. (4th) 193; Waschkowski v. Hopkinson Estate (2000), 47 O.R. (3d) 370; Canadian Red Cross Society (Re), [2003] O.J. No. 5669 (QL); Edwards v. Law Society of Upper Canada (No. 1) (2000), 48 O.R. (3d) 321; MacKenzie Estate v. MacKenzie (1992), 84 Man. R. (2d) 149; Justice v. Cairnie Estate (1993), 105 D.L.R. (4th) 501; Good v. Parry, [1963] 2 All E.R. 59; Surrendra Overseas Ltd. v. Government of Sri Lanka, [1977] 2 All E.R. 481; Podovinikoff v. Montgomery (1984), 14 D.L.R. (4th) 716; Wheaton v. Palmer (2001), 205 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 304; MacKay v. Lemley (1997), 44 B.C.L.R. (3d) 382; Harper v. Cameron (1892), 2 B.C.R. 365; Amalgamated Investment & Property Co. (In Liquidation) v. Texas Commerce Intenational Bank Ltd., [1982] 1 Q.B. 84; National Westminster Finance NZ Ltd. v. National Bank of NZ Ltd., [1996] 1 N.Z.L.R. 548; The "Indian Grace", [1998] 1 Lloyd's L.R. 1; The "August Leonhardt", [1985] 2 Lloyd's L.R. 28; The "Vistafjord", [1988] 2 Lloyd's L.R. 343; Canacemal Investment Inc. v. PCI Realty Corp., [1999] B.C.J. No. 2029 (QL); Capro Investments Ltd. v. Tartan Development Corp., [1998] O.J. No. 1763 (QL); Troop v. Gibson, [1986] 1 E.G.L.R. 1; Hillingdon London Borough v. ARC Ltd., [2000] E.W.J. No. 3278 (QL); Baird Textile Holdings Ltd. v. Marks & Spencer plc, [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 737, [2001] EWCA Civ 274; John v. George, [1995] E.W.J. No. 4375 (QL); Seechurn v. ACE Insurance S.A.-N.V., [2002] 2 Lloyd's L.R. 390, [2002] EWCA Civ 67; Litwin Construction (1973) Ltd. v. Pan (1988), 52 D.L.R. (4th) 459; Vancouver City Savings Credit Union v. Norenger Development (Canada) Inc., [2002] B.C.J. No. 1417 (QL), 2002 BCSC 934; 32262 B.C. Ltd. v. Companions Restaurant Inc. (1995), 17 B.L.R. (2d) 227; Grundt v. Great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mines Ltd. (1937), 59 C.L.R. 641; Queen v. Cognos Inc., [1993] 1 S.C.R. 87.

Statutes and Regulations Cited

Fatal Accidents Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, c. F-6.
Limitations Act, S.N.L. 1995, c. L-16.1, ss. 5, 16.
Survival of Actions Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, c. S-32, ss. 2, 5, 8(1).

Authors Cited

Bower, George Spencer. The Law Relating to Estoppel by Representation, 4th ed. by P. Feltham, D. Hochberg and T. Leech. London: LexisNexis UK, 2004.
Chitty on Contracts, vol. 1, 29th ed. London: Sweet & Maxwell, 2004.
Dawson, T. Brettel. "Estoppel and obligation: the modern role of estoppel by convention" (1989), 9 L.S. 16.

autorisation de pourvoi refusée, [1997] 2 R.C.S. xiii; Burt c. LeLacheur (2000), 189 D.L.R. (4th) 193; Waschkowski c. Hopkinson Estate (2000), 47 O.R. (3d) 370; Canadian Red Cross Society (Re), [2003] O.J. No. 5669 (QL); Edwards c. Law Society of Upper Canada (No. 1) (2000), 48 O.R. (3d) 321; MacKenzie Estate c. MacKenzie (1992), 84 Man. R. (2d) 149; Justice c. Cairnie Estate (1993), 105 D.L.R. (4th) 501; Good c. Parry, [1963] 2 All E.R. 59; Surrendra Overseas Ltd. c. Government of Sri Lanka, [1977] 2 All E.R. 481; Podovinikoff c. Montgomery (1984), 14 D.L.R. (4th) 716; Wheaton c. Palmer (2001), 205 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 304; MacKay c. Lemley (1997), 44 B.C.L.R. (3d) 382; Harper c. Cameron (1892), 2 B.C.R. 365; Amalgamated Investment & Property Co. (In Liquidation) c. Texas Commerce International Bank Ltd., [1982] 1 Q.B. 84; National Westminster Finance NZ Ltd. c. National Bank of NZ Ltd., [1996] 1 N.Z.L.R. 548; The « Indian Grace », [1998] 1 Lloyd's L.R. 1; The « August Leonhardt », [1985] 2 Lloyd's L.R. 28; The « Vistafjord », [1988] 2 Lloyd's L.R. 343; Canacemal Investment Inc. c. PCI Realty Corp., [1999] B.C.J. No. 2029 (QL); Capro Investments Ltd. c. Tartan Development Corp., [1998] O.J. No. 1763 (QL); Troop c. Gibson, [1986] 1 E.G.L.R. 1; Hillingdon London Borough c. ARC Ltd., [2000] E.W.J. No. 3278 (QL); Baird Textile Holdings Ltd. c. Marks & Spencer plc, [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 737, [2001] EWCA Civ 274; John c. George, [1995] E.W.J. No. 4375 (QL); Seechurn c. ACE Insurance S.A.-N.V., [2002] 2 Lloyd's L.R. 390, [2002] EWCA Civ 67; Litwin Construction (1973) Ltd. c. Pan (1988), 52 D.L.R. (4th) 459; Vancouver City Savings Credit Union c. Norenger Development (Canada) Inc., [2002] B.C.J. No. 1417 (QL), 2002 BCSC 934; 32262 B.C. Ltd. c. Companions Restaurant Inc. (1995), 17 B.L.R. (2d) 227; Grundt c. Great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mines Ltd. (1937), 59 C.L.R. 641; Queen c. Cognos Inc., [1993] 1 R.C.S. 87.

Lois et règlements cités

Fatal Accidents Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, ch. F-6.
Limitations Act, S.N.L. 1995, ch. L-16.1, art. 5, 16.
Survival of Actions Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, ch. S-32, art. 2, 5, 8(1).

Doctrine citée

Bower, George Spencer. The Law Relating to Estoppel by Representation, 4th ed. by P. Feltham, D. Hochberg and T. Leech. London : LexisNexis UK, 2004.
Chitty on Contracts, vol. 1, 29th ed. London : Sweet & Maxwell, 2004.
Dawson, T. Brettel. « Estoppel and obligation : the modern role of estoppel by convention » (1989), 9 L.S. 16.

Fridman, G. H. L. The Law of Contract in Canada, 4th ed. Scarborough, Ont.: Carswell, 1999.
Mew, Graeme. The Law of Limitations, 2nd ed. Markham, Ont.: LexisNexis Butterworths, 2004.
Wilken, Sean. Wilken and Villiers: The Law of Waiver, Variation and Estoppel, 2nd ed. Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2002.

APPEAL from a judgment of the Newfoundland and Labrador Court of Appeal (Wells C.J.N. and Cameron, Roberts and Welsh JJ.A., and Russell J. (ex officio)) (2003), 224 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 181, 669 A.P.R. 181, 50 E.T.R. (2d) 8, [2003] N.J. No. 113 (QL), 2003 NLCA 19, reversing, in part, a decision of Orsborn J. (2001), 205 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 211, 615 A.P.R. 211, 18 C.P.C. (5th) 95, 41 E.T.R. (2d) 287, 19 M.V.R. (4th) 120, [2001] N.J. No. 284 (QL). Appeal allowed.

Sandra R. Chaytor and Jorge P. Segovia, for the appellants.

Ian F. Kelly, Q.C., and Gregory A. French, for the respondent.

The judgment of the Court was delivered by

BASTARACHE J. — We are asked to decide whether or not a shortened limitation period under s. 5 of the Survival of Actions Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, c. S-32 (see Appendix), applicable upon the death of one of the parties to an action, can be enforced against a party who had no knowledge of the death until after the limitation period had expired. The respondent, Peter Ryan ("Ryan"), argues that the answer should be no; he invoked in front of our Court and in the courts below a number of legal principles which I shall address: discoverability, confirmation, estoppel by convention and estoppel by representation. The issue of estoppel was raised for the first time by the Court of Appeal itself.

The discoverability rule dictates that a cause of action arises for purposes of a limitation period when the material facts on which it is based have been discovered or ought to have been discovered by

Fridman, G. H. L. The Law of Contract in Canada, 4th ed. Scarborough, Ont. : Carswell, 1999.
Mew, Graeme. The Law of Limitations, 2nd ed. Markham, Ont. : LexisNexis Butterworths, 2004.
Wilken, Sean. Wilken and Villiers : The Law of Waiver, Variation and Estoppel, 2nd ed. Oxford : Oxford University Press, 2002.

POURVOI contre un arrêt de la Cour d'appel de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador (le juge en chef Wells et les juges Cameron, Roberts et Welsh et le juge Russell (ex officio)) (2003), 224 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 181, 669 A.P.R. 181, 50 E.T.R. (2d) 8, [2003] N.J. No. 113 (QL), 2003 NLCA 19, qui a infirmé, en partie, une décision du juge Orsborn (2001), 205 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 211, 615 A.P.R. 211, 18 C.P.C. (5th) 95, 41 E.T.R. (2d) 287, 19 M.V.R. (4th) 120, [2001] N.J. No. 284 (QL). Pourvoi accueilli.

Sandra R. Chaytor et Jorge P. Segovia, pour les appelants.

Ian F. Kelly, c.r., et Gregory A. French, pour l'intimé.

Version française du jugement de la Cour rendu par

1 LE JUGE BASTARACHE — La Cour est appelée à décider si le délai de prescription plus court que l'art. 5 de la Survival of Actions Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, ch. S-32 (voir l'annexe), prévoit en cas de décès de l'une des parties à une action peut s'appliquer à une partie qui n'a pris connaissance du décès qu'après l'expiration du délai de prescription. L'intimé Peter Ryan prétend qu'il faut répondre par la négative; il a invoqué, devant notre Cour et devant les tribunaux d'instance inférieure, un certain nombre de règles juridiques que je vais examiner : la possibilité de découvrir le dommage, la confirmation, la préclusion par convention et la préclusion par assertion de fait. C'est la Cour d'appel elle-même qui a soulevé pour la première fois la question de la préclusion.

2 Selon la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage, une cause d'action prend naissance, pour les besoins de la prescription, au moment où les faits substantiels sur lesquels repose cette cause d'action the plaintiff by the exercise of reasonable diligence (Central Trust Co. v. Rafuse, [1986] 2 S.C.R. 147, at p. 224).

3 Section 16(1) of the Limitations Act, S.N.L. 1995, c. L-16.1 (see Appendix), prescribes that confirmation of a cause of action occurs when a person acknowledges the cause of action of another person or makes a payment in respect of that cause of action. Thus, at that moment, the limitation clock is restarted, and the time before the date of the confirmation will not be counted.

4 Estoppel by convention operates where the parties have agreed that certain facts are deemed to be true and to form the basis of the transaction into which they are about to enter (G. H. L. Fridman, The Law of Contract in Canada (4th ed. 1999), at p. 140, note 302). If they have acted upon the agreed assumption, then, as regards that transaction, each is estopped against the other from questioning the truth of the statement of facts so assumed if it would be unjust to allow one to go back on it (G. S. Bower, The Law Relating to Estoppel by Representation (4th ed. 2004), at pp. 7-8).

5 Estoppel by representation requires a positive representation made by the party whom it is sought to bind, with the intention that it shall be acted on by the party with whom he or she is dealing, the latter having so acted upon it as to make it inequitable that the party making the representation should be permitted to dispute its truth, or do anything inconsistent with it (Page v. Austin (1884), 10 S.C.R. 132, at p. 164).

6 None of these doctrines can find application in the present case. I will address each of these doctrines and in most cases adopt the reasons of the Court of Appeal with mere comment. One legal concept requires more attention from this Court, given that it is being asked to develop a legal test with regard to its application: estoppel by convention.

ont été découverts par le demandeur ou auraient dû l'être s'il avait fait preuve de diligence raisonnable (Central Trust Co. c. Rafuse, [1986] 2 R.C.S. 147, p. 224).

Le paragraphe 16(1) de la Limitations Act, S.N.L. 1995, ch. L-16.1 (voir l'annexe), prévoit qu'une cause d'action est confirmée si une personne reconnaît la cause d'action appartenant à autrui ou si elle effectue un paiement à l'égard de cette cause d'action. Ainsi, le compte à rebours recommence dès lors, et le temps écoulé avant la date de confirmation ne compte pas.

Il peut y avoir préclusion par convention lorsque les parties ont convenu de présupposer que certains faits sont véridiques et constituent le fondement de l'opération qu'elles s'apprêtent à conclure (G. H. L. Fridman, The Law of Contract in Canada (4e éd. 1999), p. 140, note 302). Si les parties ont agi sur la foi de cette présupposition conventionnelle, alors, en ce qui concerne l'opération, chaque partie est précluse, par rapport à l'autre, de mettre en doute la véracité ainsi présupposée de l'exposé des faits, dans le cas où il serait injuste de permettre à l'une d'elles de revenir sur cette présupposition (G. S. Bower, The Law Relating to Estoppel by Representation (4e éd. 2004), p. 7-8).

Pour que la préclusion par assertion de fait s'applique, une assertion positive doit avoir été faite par la partie que l'on souhaite voir liée par celle-ci afin que la partie avec qui elle traitait agisse sur la foi de cette assertion, et cette dernière doit avoir agi sur la foi de l'assertion de sorte qu'il serait inéquitable de permettre à l'auteur de l'assertion d'en mettre en doute la véracité ou d'agir de quelque manière incompatible avec elle (Page c. Austin (1884), 10 R.C.S. 132, p. 164).

Aucune de ces règles n'est applicable en l'espèce. Je vais examiner chacune de celles-ci et, dans la plupart des cas, approuver les motifs de la Cour d'appel en ajoutant un simple commentaire. Une notion juridique mérite que notre Cour s'y attarde davantage étant donné qu'elle est appelée à établir un critère juridique d'application : la préclusion par convention.

I. Background

A. Facts

On November 27, 1997, three vehicles were involved in an accident. They were operated by the respondent, Ryan, the appellant, Rex Gilbert Moore, and a third party (not involved in this matter), David Crummey. Ryan decided to pursue a personal injury claim against Moore. He was unaware that, on December 26, 1998, Moore had died of causes unrelated to the accident. On February 16, 1999, Letters of Administration were granted to Moore's administratrix, Muriel Smith. On October 28, 1999, Ryan issued his statement of claim; it was within the two-year limitation period prescribed by the Limitations Act, but outside the applicable six-month limitation period from the granting of the letters of administration under the Survival of Actions Act. Ryan argues that the appellant is estopped from relying upon the shorter limitation period. Alternatively, he argues that the discoverability principle or the confirmation rule apply to extend this shorter limitation period.

As this case is centred on issues related to limitation periods, it is important to recollect the important events leading up to this litigation:

November 27, 1997	The accident
November 28, 1997	Cabot Insurance Co. ("Cabot Insurance") appoints adjuster Brian Lacey to look after the claim against its insured Moore. Ryan retains counsel who contacts the adjuster advising of his retainer and that Ryan, while his injuries are being assessed, will pursue his property damage claim directly with the adjuster.

I. Contexte

A. Les faits

Un accident impliquant trois véhicules est survenu le 27 novembre 1997. Ces véhicules étaient conduits par l'intimé M. Ryan, l'appelant Rex Gilbert Moore, ainsi qu'une tierce personne (non partie à l'instance), David Crummey. M. Ryan a décidé d'intenter une action pour préjudice corporel contre M. Moore. Il ignorait que, le 26 décembre 1998, M. Moore était décédé de causes non liées à l'accident. Le 16 février 1999, des lettres d'administration ont été délivrées à Muriel Smith, l'administratrice de M. Moore. M. Ryan a déposé sa déclaration le 28 octobre 1999, soit avant l'expiration du délai de prescription de deux ans fixé par la Limitations Act, mais après celle du délai de prescription de six mois qui, aux termes de la Survival of Actions Act, commence à courir à partir de la délivrance de lettres d'homologation ou d'administration. M. Ryan prétend que l'appelant est préclus d'invoquer le délai de prescription plus court. Subsidiairement, il fait valoir que ce délai plus court peut être prolongé en vertu de la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage ou de la règle de la confirmation.

Étant donné que la présente affaire porte sur des questions liées aux délais de prescription, il importe de rappeler les principaux faits à l'origine du litige :

27 novembre 1997	L'accident
28 novembre 1997	Cabot Insurance Co. (« Cabot Insurance ») nomme l'expert en sinistres Brian Lacey qui s'occupera de la demande d'indemnité dont fait l'objet son assuré M. Moore. M. Ryan retient les services d'un avocat, qui communique avec l'expert en sinistres pour l'informer de son mandat et l'aviser qu'en attendant que ses blessures soient évaluées M. Ryan lui présentera directement sa demande d'indemnité pour préjudice matériel.

NBC BOA 001552

December 1997 – December 1998	Cabot Insurance pays Ryan's property damage claim directly to him. Correspondence is exchanged between Ryan's counsel and the adjuster concerning Ryan's medical condition, the adjuster seeking documentation and updates on Ryan's condition, and the counsel providing the information requested. The counsel forwards Ryan's hospital chart to the adjuster, for which Cabot Insurance reimburses counsel the $40 fee.	décembre 1997 – décembre 1998	Cabot Insurance verse directement à M. Ryan une indemnité pour préjudice matériel. L'avocat de M. Ryan et l'expert en sinistres échangent une correspondance concernant l'état de santé de M. Ryan, l'expert en sinistres sollicitant des documents et des mises à jour sur l'état de santé de M. Ryan, et l'avocat fournissant les renseignements demandés. L'avocat fait parvenir à l'expert en sinistres le dossier hospitalier de M. Ryan, pour lequel Cabot Insurance rembourse à l'avocat des frais de 40 $.
December 26, 1998	Moore dies at age 75 from causes unrelated to the accident.	26 décembre 1998	M. Moore décède à l'âge de 75 ans de causes non liées à l'accident.
January 25, 1999	The adjuster writes to Ryan's counsel seeking medical information and reiterating that the insurer would pay a reasonable fee for a medical report. He refers to Moore as "Our Insured".	25 janvier 1999	L'expert en sinistres écrit à l'avocat de M. Ryan pour obtenir des renseignements médicaux et réitérer que l'assureur est disposé à payer des frais raisonnables pour un rapport médical. Il désigne M. Moore comme étant [TRADUCTION] « Notre assuré ».
February 16, 1999	Letters of Administration of the Estate of Rex Moore are granted to Muriel Smith.	16 février 1999	Des lettres d'administration de la succession de Rex Moore sont délivrées à Muriel Smith.
April 5, 1999	Ryan's counsel forwards to the adjuster an invoice for a medical report of Ryan's examination by an orthopaedic surgeon.	5 avril 1999	L'avocat de M. Ryan fait parvenir à l'expert en sinistres une facture pour un rapport d'examen médical de M. Ryan par un chirurgien orthopédique.
July 29, 1999	The adjuster forwards to Ryan's counsel a cheque for payment of the medical report. The cheque is payable to	29 juillet 1999	L'expert en sinistres envoie à l'avocat de M. Ryan un chèque pour payer le rapport médical. Le chèque est à l'ordre du

	Dr. Landells. He refers to Moore as "Our Insured".		D[r] Landells. Il désigne M. Moore comme étant [TRADUCTION] « Notre assuré ».
August 16, 1999	Six months have passed since the grant of letters of administration of Moore's estate.	16 août 1999	Six mois se sont écoulés depuis la délivrance des lettres d'administration de la succession de M. Moore.
October 28, 1999	The statement of claim is issued naming Rex Moore as defendant.	28 octobre 1999	Dépôt de la déclaration désignant Rex Moore comme défendeur.
February 10, 2000	Ryan's counsel writes to the adjuster seeking payment for the cost of obtaining the chart from Ryan's family physician. He refers to Moore as "Your Insured".	10 février 2000	L'avocat de M. Ryan écrit à l'expert en sinistres pour lui demander de payer les frais exigés pour le dossier tenu par le médecin de famille de M. Ryan. Il désigne M. Moore comme étant [TRADUCTION] « Notre assuré ».
March 2, 2000	Ryan's counsel writes to the adjuster requesting payment for the chart of another physician. He refers to Moore as "Your Insured".	2 mars 2000	L'avocat de M. Ryan écrit à l'expert en sinistres pour lui demander de payer les frais exigés pour le dossier tenu par un autre médecin. Il désigne M. Moore comme étant [TRADUCTION] « Notre assuré ».
May 18, 2000	The adjuster learns of Moore's death.	18 mai 2000	L'expert en sinistres apprend le décès de M. Moore.
September 22, 2000	Ryan's counsel learns of Moore's death after attempting to serve the statement of claim.	22 septembre 2000	L'avocat de M. Ryan apprend le décès de M. Moore après avoir tenté de signifier la déclaration.
October 24, 2000	Ryan's counsel suggests to Cabot Insurance's claims examiner, Valerie Moore, in a meeting (to discuss claims unrelated to this case) that there might be a problem with the limitation period.	24 octobre 2000	Lors d'une réunion (tenue pour discuter de demandes non liées à la présente affaire), l'avocat de M. Ryan laisse entendre à Valerie Moore, une rédactrice sinistres de Cabot Insurance, que le délai de prescription pourrait poser un problème.

NBC BOA 001554

November 9, 2000 Cabot Insurance refuses to settle Ryan's claim because the action is outside the limitation period.

9 Cabot Insurance applied to intervene in the proceedings and sought an order striking out the statement of claim for being out of time. It further claimed that the statement of claim naming a dead person as defendant was a nullity and was not capable of being amended. Ryan also filed an application to amend the statement of claim to describe the defendant as "Rex Moore, Deceased, by his administratrix, Muriel Smith".

B. Supreme Court of Newfoundland and Labrador (2001), 205 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 211

10 At the Supreme Court of Newfoundland and Labrador, Orsborn J. denied Cabot Insurance's application to have the action dismissed. First, he held that the discoverability rule did not apply to postpone the running of the Survival of Actions Act limitation period, since the fact of death was not an element of the cause of action and was not required to complete the cause of action (paras. 50-51). Second, Orsborn J. held that the confirmation provisions of s. 16 of the Limitations Act are not expressly confined to the limitation periods fixed by the Limitations Act. He saw no reason in principle why a cause of action continued under the Survival of Actions Act could not be confirmed and the limitation period fixed by that Act thus continued. He concluded that Cabot Insurance's payment for the medical report on July 29, 1999 constituted a confirmation of Ryan's cause of action. Since the action was commenced within six months of this payment, the proceeding was still within the short Survival of Actions Act limitation period and was not statute barred (paras. 52-63). Third, Orsborn J. concluded that in any event, on the facts of this case, the cause of action against Moore was not a cause of action to which the Survival of Actions Act applies. The Survival of Actions Act permits a cause of action to survive "for the benefit of or against" an estate

9 novembre 2000 Cabot Insurance refuse de régler la demande de M. Ryan parce que l'action a été intentée après l'expiration du délai de prescription.

Cabot Insurance a présenté une demande d'intervention dans l'instance et a sollicité une ordonnance de radiation de la déclaration pour cause de tardiveté. Elle a, en outre, fait valoir que la déclaration désignant une personne décédée comme défenderesse était nulle et ne pouvait pas être modifiée. M. Ryan a également présenté une demande de modification de la déclaration en vue de désigner le défendeur comme étant [TRADUCTION] « Feu Rex Moore, représenté par son administratrice Muriel Smith ».

B. Cour suprême de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador (2001), 205 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 211

Le juge Orsborn de la Cour suprême de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador a rejeté la demande de Cabot Insurance visant à obtenir le rejet de l'action. Premièrement, il a conclu que la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage ne s'appliquait pas pour reporter le point de départ du délai de prescription prévu par la Survival of Actions Act, étant donné que le décès en tant que tel ne constituait pas un élément de la cause d'action et n'était pas nécessaire pour compléter la cause d'action (par. 50-51). Deuxièmement, le juge Orsborn a estimé que l'application des dispositions de l'art. 16 de la Limitations Act, relatives à la confirmation, n'était pas expressément limitée aux délais de prescription fixés par la Limitations Act. Il ne voyait pas pourquoi, en principe, une cause d'action ayant subsisté en vertu de la Survival of Actions Act ne pouvait pas être confirmée de manière à maintenir le délai de prescription fixé par cette loi. Il a conclu que le paiement du 29 juillet 1999, que Cabot Insurance avait effectué pour le rapport médical, confirmait la cause d'action de M. Ryan. Étant donné que les procédures avaient été engagées dans les six mois suivant ce paiement, l'action respectait encore le court délai de prescription fixé par la Survival of Actions Act et n'était pas prescrite (par. 52-63). Troisièmement, le juge Orsborn a décidé que, de toute façon, compte tenu des faits de la présente affaire, la cause d'action contre M. Moore n'était pas visée par la Survival of Actions Act. Cette loi permet qu'une cause d'action survive [TRADUCTION] « au profit » d'une succession ou « contre » celle-ci (al. 2b)). Elle traite de l'acquisition ou de la dissipation potentielles d'éléments d'actif de la succession. En l'espèce, cependant, la demande de M. Ryan ne présente aucun risque pour les biens de la succession. C'est plutôt l'assureur qui est exposé à un risque. M. Moore n'avait de défendeur que le nom, la véritable partie à l'action étant l'assureur. La cause d'action de M. Ryan ne s'était donc pas éteinte au décès de M. Moore (par. 66-76). Quatrièmement, le juge Orsborn a conclu que, si la cause d'action de M. Ryan n'avait pas été confirmée et que la Survival of Actions Act était effectivement applicable (ce qui n'était pas le cas, selon lui), alors l'action aurait été nulle pour cause de tardiveté. Toutefois, comme ce n'était pas le cas, l'action du demandeur n'était pas prescrite.

(s. 2(b)). The Survival of Actions Act deals with the potential acquisition or dissipation of estate assets. However, in this case, Ryan's claim poses no risk to the assets of the estate. Instead, the risk lies on the insurer. Moore was a defendant in name only, and the real party to the action was the insurer. Thus, Ryan's cause of action was not extinguished on Moore's death (paras. 66-76). Fourth, Orsborn J. held that if Ryan's cause of action had not been confirmed and if the Survival of Actions Act was indeed applicable (which he held it was not), then the action would have been a nullity for being commenced outside the limitation period. However, as this was not the case, the plaintiff was not statute barred.

C. Court of Appeal of Newfoundland and Labrador (2003), 224 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 181, 2003 NLCA 19

C. Cour d'appel de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador (2003), 224 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 181, 2003 NLCA 19

(1) Wells C.J. (for the majority)

(1) Le juge en chef Wells (au nom des juges majoritaires)

The majority of the Court of Appeal allowed, in part, both the appeal and cross-appeal. The applications judge's order to permit the intervention of Cabot Insurance and the amendment of the statement of claim was affirmed. Wells C.J. held that the applications judge made no error in considering the existence of insurance in determining whether or not the action posed a financial risk to the estate. He nevertheless held that the applications judge erred in holding that the cause of action against Moore is a cause of action to which the Survival of Actions Act did not apply. The court explained that unless the Survival of Actions Act applies, the action will be a nullity. The right to institute a tort action after death, or continue an action after death, derives from the statute. Without such a statute, this right does not otherwise exist.

11 La Cour d'appel, à la majorité, a accueilli en partie l'appel principal et l'appel incident. Elle a confirmé l'ordonnance du juge des requêtes autorisant l'intervention de Cabot Insurance et la modification de la déclaration. Le juge en chef Wells a conclu que le juge des requêtes n'avait commis aucune erreur en tenant compte de l'existence d'une assurance pour décider si l'action présentait un risque financier pour la succession. Il a néanmoins décidé que le juge des requêtes avait commis une erreur en concluant que la cause d'action contre M. Moore n'était pas visée par la Survival of Actions Act. La cour a expliqué que, à moins que la Survival of Actions Act ne s'applique, l'action était nulle. Le droit d'intenter une action délictuelle après le décès, ou de poursuivre une action après le décès, découle de la Loi. En l'absence d'une telle loi, ce droit n'existe pas.

12 The majority agreed with the applications judge that the discoverability rule does not apply to postpone the running of the limitation period under the Survival of Actions Act. Concluding that the limitation period in the statute runs from an event that occurs without regard to the injured party's knowledge, the majority deemed that allowing the application of the discoverability rule would disrupt the exception to the common law rule, the courts thereby intruding into the legislature's jurisdiction.

Les juges majoritaires ont partagé l'opinion du juge des requêtes selon laquelle la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage ne s'applique pas pour reporter le point de départ du délai de prescription prévu par la Survival of Actions Act. Concluant que le délai de prescription prévu par la Loi court à compter de la date d'un événement qui survient, peu importe que la partie lésée en ait connaissance ou non, les juges majoritaires ont considéré que l'application de la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage aurait pour effet d'écarter l'exception à cette règle de common law, les tribunaux se trouvant alors à empiéter sur la compétence du législateur.

13 The majority disagreed with Orsborn J.'s holding that the confirmation provisions of the Limitations Act also apply to the limitation period under the Survival of Actions Act. Wells C.J. held that s. 16 of the Limitations Act provides confirmation of a cause of action and not of the right to commence it. The majority pointed out that the nature of the cause of action, or whether it is confirmed, is not relevant to the date of death or of grant of probate which triggers the limitation period created by the Survival of Actions Act. Confirmation did not arise in relation to the limitation period stemming from the Limitations Act because the statement of claim was issued within two years of the collision, i.e. within the prescribed delay.

Les juges majoritaires ont exprimé leur désaccord avec la conclusion du juge Orsborn selon laquelle les dispositions de la Limitations Act relatives à la confirmation s'appliquent également au délai de prescription fixé par la Survival of Actions Act. Le juge en chef Wells a statué que l'art. 16 de la Limitations Act prévoit la confirmation d'une cause d'action et non du droit d'intenter une action. Les juges majoritaires ont souligné que la nature de la cause d'action ou la question de savoir si la cause d'action est confirmée n'est pas pertinente en ce qui concerne la date de décès ou la délivrance de lettres d'homologation qui marque le point de départ du délai de prescription établi par la Survival of Actions Act. La question de la confirmation ne se posait pas en ce qui concernait le délai de prescription résultant de la Limitations Act étant donné que la déclaration avait été déposée dans les deux ans suivant la collision, c'est-à-dire dans le délai prévu.

14 Turning to the last issue, the majority held that Moore's estate and Cabot Insurance were barred by the principle of estoppel from relying on the fact of Moore's death and the granting of letters of administration. The particular form of estoppel invoked was estoppel by convention. Wells C.J., having reviewed Canadian and foreign authorities and decisions, concluded that estoppel by convention was established (para. 79). The majority held that detrimental reliance was not required. Consequently, Cabot Insurance and Moore were estopped from pleading that Moore died or that letters of Quant au dernier point, les juges majoritaires ont conclu que la règle de la préclusion empêchait la succession de M. Moore et Cabot Insurance d'invoquer le décès en tant que tel de M. Moore et la délivrance de lettres d'administration. La forme de préclusion invoquée était la préclusion par convention. Après avoir passé en revue la doctrine et la jurisprudence canadiennes et étrangères, le juge en chef Wells a décidé que la préclusion par convention était établie (par. 79). Les juges majoritaires considéraient qu'aucun acte de confiance préjudiciable n'était nécessaire. Cabot Insurance et M. Moore administration were granted prior to May 2000 in order to invoke the shorter Survival of Actions Act limitation period. As a result, nullity could not be established and the statement of claim was amended to name the administratrix of Moore as defendant in the action.

étaient donc préclus d'invoquer le délai de prescription plus court fixé par la Survival of Actions Act en faisant valoir que M. Moore était décédé ou que des lettres d'administration avaient été délivrées avant le mois de mai 2000. Par conséquent, la nullité ne pouvait pas être établie et la déclaration a été modifiée de manière à désigner l'administratrice de M. Moore comme partie défenderesse dans l'action.

(2) Cameron J.A. (dissenting)

(2) La juge Cameron (dissidente)

In dissenting reasons, concurred in by Welsh J.A., Cameron J.A. disagreed with the estoppel analysis and held that it did not apply to the case at bar. After analysing case law and doctrine, she concluded that mutual misunderstanding (both parties assuming that Moore was alive) did not amount to a common assumption. The dissenting judges did not find that the letters sent by Cabot Insurance to Ryan's counsel referring to "Our Insured: Rex Moore" formed the basis on which the parties governed their conduct. The failure to commence the action within the Survival of Actions Act's limitation period was not due to any arrangement between the parties, and consequently, there was no reliance on any convention. Therefore, this principle did not apply. Ryan's action was therefore time barred. The dissenting judges would have allowed the appeal.

15 Dans ses motifs dissidents, auxquels le juge Welsh a souscrit, la juge Cameron s'est dite en désaccord avec l'analyse de la préclusion et a décidé que cette règle ne s'appliquait pas en l'espèce. Après avoir analysé la jurisprudence et la doctrine, elle a conclu qu'une méprise de part et d'autre (les deux parties ayant cru que M. Moore était vivant) ne constituait pas une présupposition commune. Les juges dissidents n'ont pas considéré que les lettres portant la mention [TRADUCTION] « Notre assuré : Rex Moore » que Cabot Insurance avait envoyées à l'avocat de M. Ryan avaient déterminé la conduite des parties. L'omission d'intenter l'action avant l'expiration du délai de prescription fixé par la *Survival of Actions Act n'*était pas le fruit d'un arrangement entre les parties, si bien que l'on ne s'était fondé sur aucune convention. Par conséquent, cette règle ne s'appliquait pas. L'action de M. Ryan était donc prescrite. Les juges dissidents auraient accueilli l'appel.

II. Analysis

II. Analyse

A. Discoverability

A. La possibilité de découvrir le dommage

(1) Statutory Limitation Periods

(1) Les délais de prescription légaux

16 The situation here is governed by two limitation periods: s. 5 of the Limitations Act (see Appendix) and s. 5 of the Survival of Actions Act. The limitation period in s. 5 of the Limitations Act applies initially. Section 5 of the Survival of Actions Act superimposes itself on s. 5 at a later point in time, but does not eliminate it. This follows from the fact that the Survival of Actions Act does not create a new cause of action, as will be explained later.

16 Deux délais de prescription s'appliquent en l'espèce : celui prévu par l'art. 5 de la Limitations Act (voir l'annexe) et celui prévu par l'art. 5 de la Survival of Actions Act. Le délai de prescription établi par l'art. 5 de la Limitations Act s'applique au départ. Il se superpose, par la suite, au délai fixé par l'art. 5 de la Limitations Act, sans toutefois l'éliminer. Cela découle du fait que la Survival of Actions Act ne crée pas une nouvelle cause d'action, comme je l'expliquerai plus loin.

17 Pursuant to s. 5 of the Limitations Act, a person can bring an action for damages in respect of injury based on contract or tort within two years of the date on which the right to do so arose. Ryan, by issuing a statement of claim on October 28, 1999, naming Rex Moore as the defendant, therefore, met the prescribed limitation period in the Limitations Act. Nevertheless, unknown to the parties, Rex Moore had died on December 26, 1998, altering the fact scenario.

18 As stated by the Court of Appeal, it is well known that at common law a personal action in tort is extinguished on the death of the victim or the wrongdoer: actio personalis moritur cum persona (see G. Mew, The Law of Limitations (2nd ed. 2004), at p. 253). Being unable to sue the estate of a deceased tortfeasor was particularly severe as it left injured survivors of motor vehicle accidents without any means of recovery. This led legislatures to enact statutes to diminish the hardship of the common law rule. The Fatal Accidents Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, c. F-6, and the Survival of Actions Act were such statutes. Under the Fatal Accidents Act, the estate of a person who died as a result of the accident, or the survivors of that person, are accorded the right to maintain an action for death by wrongful act. Also, pursuant to s. 2 of the Survival of Actions Act (see Appendix), an action vested in or existing against a person who has died can be maintained by or against the deceased person's estate. However, s. 5 of the Survival of Actions Act prohibits an action brought six months after letters of probate or administration of the estate of the deceased have been granted, and after the expiration of one year from the date of death. Hence, the provision is meant to keep the action "alive" for a specific period of time. The Survival of Actions Act imposes an additional limitation period. As eloquently affirmed by Orsborn J., the Survival of Actions Act does not create a cause of action. It grafts its provision onto an existing cause of action, one which is complete in all of its elements before the operation of the Survival of Actions Act (para. 45).

Aux termes de l'art. 5 de la Limitations Act, une action en dommages-intérêts pour préjudice, fondée sur une inexécution de contrat ou sur un délit, peut être intentée dans les deux ans suivant la date à laquelle a pris naissance le droit de l'intenter. En déposant, le 28 octobre 1999, une déclaration désignant Rex Moore comme défendeur, M. Ryan a donc respecté le délai de prescription fixé par la Limitations Act. Cependant, Rex Moore était décédé le 26 décembre 1998, à l'insu des parties, ce qui modifiait le scénario.

Comme l'a affirmé la Cour d'appel, il est bien connu qu'en common law une action délictuelle personnelle s'éteint au décès de la victime ou de l'auteur de la faute : actio personalis moritur cum persona (voir G. Mew, The Law of Limitations (2e éd. 2004), p. 253). L'incapacité de poursuivre la succession de l'auteur d'un délit civil décédé était particulièrement lourde de conséquences du fait qu'elle privait de toute possibilité d'indemnisation les survivants blessés d'un accident d'automobile. Cela a amené des législatures à adopter des lois destinées à adoucir la règle de common law. La Fatal Accidents Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, ch. F-6, et la Survival of Actions Act comptent parmi ces lois. Aux termes de la Fatal Accidents Act, la succession d'une personne décédée à la suite d'un accident ou les personnes qui lui survivent ont le droit d'intenter une action pour décès causé par une faute. De plus, aux termes de l'art. 2 de la Survival of Actions Act (voir l'annexe), une action appartenant à une personne décédée ou existant contre elle peut être intentée par ou contre sa succession. Toutefois, l'art. 5 de la Survival of Actions Act prévoit qu'aucune action ne peut être intentée après les six mois qui suivent la délivrance de lettres d'homologation ou d'administration de la succession de la personne décédée et après l'expiration d'un délai d'un an suivant la date du décès. Cette disposition vise donc à assurer la « survie » de l'action pendant une période déterminée. La Survival of Actions Act fixe un autre délai de prescription. Comme le juge Orsborn l'a si bien dit, la Survival of Actions Act ne crée pas une cause d'action. Elle greffe sa disposition sur une cause d'action existante dont tous les éléments sont présents avant que la Survival of Actions Act soit appliquée (par. 45).

NBC BOA 001559

In the case at bar, the Survival of Actions Act has the effect of shortening the time period within which the action could be taken because "an action founded in tort may only be taken by or against the estate of a deceased person if it is commenced within that period of time that is common to both limitations periods": per Wells C.J., at para. 37.

Ryan argues that the Survival of Actions Act contemplates that a cause of action can arise under the Survival of Actions Act. I fail to see how the expression "[c]auses of action under this Act" or "an action . . . under this Act" found in ss. 8(1) and 5 respectively can be seen to indicate the creation of a new cause of action. The Survival of Actions Act expressly contemplates the survival of causes of action existing against a person who has died (s. 2). I take that to mean that the cause of action existed prior to the application of the Survival of Actions Act. The survival of a cause of action for a time and its creation are two different things.

(2) Discoverability: The Judge-Made Rule

The debate concerning the use of the discoverability principle in tort actions has been settled by this Court in Kamloops (City of) v. Nielsen, [1984] 2 S.C.R. 2, Central Trust and M. (K.) v. M. (H.), [1992] 3 S.C.R. 6.

The discoverability principle provides that "a cause of action arises for purposes of a limitation period when the material facts on which it is based have been discovered or ought to have been discovered by the plaintiff by the exercise of reasonable diligence": Central Trust, at p. 224. In some provinces, the discoverability rule has been codified by statute; in others, it has been deemed redundant because of other remedial provisions.

While discoverability has been qualified in the past as a "general rule" (Central Trust, at p. 224; Peixeiro v. Haberman, [1997] 3 S.C.R. 549, at 19 En l'espèce, la Survival of Actions Act a pour effet de raccourcir le délai dans lequel l'action pourrait être intentée parce qu'[TRADUCTION] « une action délictuelle ne peut être intentée par ou contre la succession d'une personne décédée que pendant la période de chevauchement des deux délais de prescription » : le juge en chef Wells, par. 37.

20 Selon M. Ryan, la Survival of Actions Act prévoit qu'une cause d'action peut prendre naissance en vertu de ses dispositions. Je ne vois pas comment les expressions [TRADUCTION] « causes d'action en vertu de la présente loi » ou « action [. . .] intentée en vertu de la présente loi », contenues respectivement au par. 8(1) et à l'art. 5, peuvent être considérées comme indiquant la création d'une nouvelle cause d'action. La Survival of Actions Act prévoit expressément la survie des causes d'action existant contre une personne décédée (art. 2). À mon avis, cela signifie que la cause d'action existait avant que la Survival of Actions Act soit appliquée. La création d'une cause d'action et sa survie pendant un certain temps sont deux choses différentes.

(2) La possibilité de découvrir le dommage : la règle prétorienne

21 Dans les arrêts Kamloops (Ville de) c. Nielsen, [1984] 2 R.C.S. 2, Central Trust et M. (K.) c. M. (H.), [1992] 3 R.C.S. 6, notre Cour a tranché le débat concernant l'application de la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage dans les actions délictuelles.

22 Selon la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage, « une cause d'action prend naissance, aux fins de la prescription, lorsque les faits importants sur lesquels repose cette cause d'action ont été découverts par le demandeur ou auraient dû l'être s'il avait fait preuve de diligence raisonnable » : Central Trust, p. 224. Dans certaines provinces, la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage a été codifiée; dans d'autres provinces, elle a été jugée redondante à cause de l'existence d'autres dispositions réparatrices.

23 Bien qu'elle ait été qualifiée, par le passé, de « règle générale » (Central Trust, p. 224; Peixeiro c. Haberman, [1997] 3 R.C.S. 549, par. 36), la règle para. 36), it must not be applied systematically without a thorough balancing of competing interests (Peixeiro, at para. 34). The rule is an interpretative tool for construing limitation statutes. I agree with the Manitoba Court of Appeal when it writes:

> In my opinion, the judge-made discoverability rule is nothing more than a rule of construction. Whenever a statute requires an action to be commenced within a specified time from the happening of a specific event, the statutory language must be construed. When time runs from "the accrual of the cause of action" or from some other event which can be construed as occurring only when the injured party has knowledge of the injury sustained, the judge-made discoverability rule applies. But, when time runs from an event which clearly occurs without regard to the injured party's knowledge, the judge-made discoverability rule may not extend the period the legislature has prescribed. [Emphasis added.]

(Fehr v. Jacob (1993), 14 C.C.L.T. (2d) 200, at p. 206)

See also Peixeiro, at para. 37; Snow v. Kashyap (1995), 125 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 182 (Nfld. C.A.).

24 Thus, the Court of Appeal of Newfoundland and Labrador is correct in stating that the rule is "generally" applicable where the commencement of the limitation period is related by the legislation to the arising or accrual of the cause of action. The law does not permit resort to the judge-made discoverability rule when the limitation period is explicitly linked by the governing legislation to a fixed event unrelated to the injured party's knowledge or the basis of the cause of action (see Mew, at p. 55).

(3) Discoverability Principle Does Not Apply to the Survival of Actions Act

25 Ryan submits that the discoverability rule applies to the limitation period contained in s. 5 of the Survival of Actions Act. He argues that the de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage ne doit pas être appliquée systématiquement sans une évaluation complète des intérêts opposés (Peixeiro, par. 34). Cette règle est un outil d'interprétation des lois qui établissent des délais de prescription. Je partage l'opinion de la Cour d'appel du Manitoba lorsqu'elle écrit :

> [TRADUCTION] À mon avis, la règle prétorienne de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage n'est rien de plus qu'une règle d'interprétation. Dans tous les cas où une loi indique que l'action en justice doit être intentée dans un certain délai après un événement donné, il faut interpréter les termes de cette loi. Lorsque ce délai court à partir du « moment où naît la cause d'action » ou de tout autre événement qui peut être interprété comme ne survenant qu'au moment où la victime prend connaissance du dommage, c'est la règle prétorienne de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage qui s'applique. Toutefois, si le délai court à compter de la date d'un événement qui survient clairement, et sans égard à la connaissance qu'en a la victime, cette règle ne peut prolonger le délai fixé par le législateur. [Je souligne.]

(Fehr c. Jacob (1993), 14 C.C.L.T. (2d) 200, p. 206)

Voir également les arrêts Peixeiro, par. 37, et Snow c. Kashyap (1995), 125 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 182 (C.A.T.-N.).

Par conséquent, la Cour d'appel de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador a raison de dire que la règle s'applique [TRADUCTION] « généralement » lorsque la loi lie le point de départ du délai de prescription à la naissance de la cause d'action. Il n'est pas permis, en droit, de recourir à la règle prétorienne de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage dans les cas où la loi applicable lie expressément le délai de prescription à un événement déterminé qui n'a rien à voir avec le moment où la partie lésée en prend connaissance ou avec le fondement de la cause d'action (voir Mew, p. 55).

(3) La règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage ne s'applique pas à la Survival of Actions Act

M. Ryan fait valoir que la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage s'applique au délai de prescription prévu à l'art. 5 de la Survival of Actions limitation period should not begin to run until he knew, or ought reasonably to have known, the material facts which determine (i) his cause of action under the Survival of Actions Act and (ii) the limitation period. In sum, Ryan claims that the death of Moore is integral to the cause of action and that the limitation period should not start to run until he knew that he had a cause of action against the estate of Rex Moore. The appellants submit that the discoverability rule does not apply to the Survival of Actions Act as it would transcend the logic of statutory interpretation and the scheme enacted by the legislature. In addition, they say that the rule does not apply where time runs from a fixed event.

Act. Il prétend que ce délai de prescription ne devrait commencer à courir qu'à partir du moment où il a pris connaissance, ou aurait raisonnablement dû prendre connaissance, des faits substantiels déterminants en ce qui concerne (i) sa cause d'action en vertu de la Survival of Actions Act et (ii) le délai de prescription. Somme toute, M. Ryan affirme que le décès de M. Moore fait partie intégrante de la cause d'action et que le délai de prescription ne devait commencer à courir qu'à partir du moment où il a découvert qu'il avait une cause d'action contre la succession de Rex Moore. Les appelants soutiennent que la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage ne s'applique pas à la Survival of Actions Act étant donné qu'elle transcenderait la logique de l'interprétation des lois et du régime établi par le législateur. Ils ajoutent que la règle ne s'applique pas lorsque le délai a pour point de départ un fait déterminé.

Like the Court of Appeal, I am of the view that the appellants' position is correct. For ease of reference, I reproduce s. 5 of the Survival of Actions Act:

26 À l'instar de la Cour d'appel, je suis d'avis que la position des appelants est correcte. Pour en faciliter la consultation, je reproduis l'art. 5 de la Survival of Actions Act :

5. An action shall not be brought under this Act unless proceedings are started within 6 months after letters of probate or administration of the estate of the deceased have been granted and proceedings shall not be started in an action under this Act after the expiration of 1 year after the date of death of the deceased.

[TRADUCTION]

5. Aucune action ne peut être intentée en vertu de la présente loi à moins que les procédures ne soient engagées dans les six mois suivant la délivrance de lettres d'homologation ou d'administration de la succession de la personne décédée, et, pour les besoins d'une action fondée sur la présente loi, les procédures ne doivent pas être engagées après l'expiration d'un an suivant la date du décès de la personne en question.

Pursuant to the Survival of Actions Act, the limitation period is triggered by the death of the defendant or the granting by a court of the letters of administration or probate. The section is clear and explicit: time begins to run from one of these two specific events. The Act does not establish a relationship between these events and the injured party's knowledge. I agree with the appellants that knowledge is not a factor: the death or granting of the letters occurs regardless of the state of mind of the plaintiff. We face here a situation in respect of which, as recognized by this Court in Peixeiro, the judge-made discoverability rule does not apply to extend the period the legislature has prescribed. Thus, I agree with the Court of Appeal that by using a specific event as the starting point of the "limitation clock", the legislature was displacing the discoverability rule in all the situations to which the Survival of Actions Act applies.

27 Aux termes de la Survival of Actions Act, le délai de prescription court à compter du décès du défendeur ou de la délivrance, par un tribunal, de lettres d'administration ou d'homologation. L'article est clair et explicite : le délai commence à courir au moment où survient l'un de ces deux faits particuliers. La Loi n'établit aucun lien entre ces faits et le moment où la partie lésée en prend connaissance. Je conviens avec les appelants que la connaissance n'est pas un facteur à considérer : le décès ou la délivrance des lettres survient indépendamment de l'état d'esprit du demandeur. En l'espèce, nous nous trouvons devant une situation où, comme notre Cour l'a reconnu dans l'arrêt Peixeiro, la règle prétorienne de

28 A number of the appellate courts have dealt with the question of discoverability in the context of actions by or against estates of deceased persons. The appellants rely extensively on Payne v. Brady (1996), 140 D.L.R. (4th) 88 (Nfld. C.A.), leave to appeal refused, [1997] 2 S.C.R. xiii. While the facts of that case are very similar to the present, it is not clear whether the Court of Appeal of Newfoundland decided that the rule of discoverability did not apply because death is always a possibility or because the appellant Payne had ample time after she became aware of the death of Brady to commence her action. What is clear is the point advanced by O'Neill J.A.: the death of a prospective defendant and the possibility of a shortened period to commence an action is a reality that claimants and their counsel have to guard against: Payne, at p. 94.

29 The Nova Scotia Court of Appeal decision in Burt v. LeLacheur (2000), 189 D.L.R. (4th) 193, is invoked by the respondent. However, the reasoning of that case cannot be applied in the case at bar. In Burt, the Court of Appeal held that the discoverability rule applied to s. 10 of the Fatal Injuries Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, c. 163. The Nova Scotia Court of Appeal stated its position in the following manner (at p. 208):

> If the discoverability rule applies to a limitation period running from "when the damages were sustained" (Peixeiro) and from "the final determination of the action against the insured" (Grenier), I think it is not unreasonable to apply it to the period one year after the death so as to start time running only when the claimant knows or ought to know that the death might be a wrongful one. This, having in mind the statutory scheme of the Fatal la possibilité de découvrir le dommage ne s'applique pas pour prolonger le délai fixé par le législateur. Je suis donc d'accord avec la Cour d'appel pour dire qu'en désignant un fait particulier comme élément déclencheur du « compte à rebours de la prescription », le législateur se trouvait à écarter la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage dans tous les cas où la Survival of Actions Act s'applique.

Un certain nombre de cours d'appel ont examiné la question de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage dans le contexte d'actions intentées par ou contre les successions de personnes décédées. Les appelants invoquent abondamment l'arrêt Payne c. Brady (1996), 140 D.L.R. (4th) 88 (C.A.T.-N.), autorisation de pourvoi refusée, [1997] 2 R.C.S. xiii. Bien que les faits de cet arrêt ressemblent énormément à ceux de la présente affaire, on ne sait pas clairement si la Cour d'appel de Terre-Neuve y a décidé que la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage ne s'appliquait pas parce que le décès est toujours une possibilité ou parce que l'appelante Payne avait eu amplement le temps d'intenter son action après avoir appris le décès de M. Brady. Ce qui est clair, c'est la remarque du juge O'Neill : le décès d'un éventuel défendeur et la possibilité d'un délai de prescription plus court sont des réalités contre lesquelles les demandeurs et leurs avocats doivent se prémunir (Payne, p. 94).

L'intimé invoque l'arrêt de la Cour d'appel de la Nouvelle-Écosse Burt c. LeLacheur (2000), 189 D.L.R. (4th) 193. Toutefois, le raisonnement adopté dans cette affaire ne peut pas s'appliquer en l'espèce. Dans l'arrêt Burt, la Cour d'appel a conclu que la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage s'appliquait à l'art. 10 de la Fatal Injuries Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, ch. 163. La Cour d'appel de la Nouvelle-Écosse a exposé son point de vue en ces termes (p. 208) :

> [TRADUCTION] Si la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage s'applique à un délai de prescription qui court à compter de la date « où les dommages ont été subis » (Peixeiro) et du « règlement final de l'action intentée contre l'assuré » (Grenier), je ne pense pas qu'il soit déraisonnable de l'appliquer à ce délai un an après le décès de sorte qu'il ne commence à courir qu'au moment où le demandeur prend connaissance ou aurait

Injuries Act, is no greater a stretch of the language than was made by the courts in Peixeiro, Grenier and other cases, all for the purpose of preventing a potential injustice.

We must avoid the accusation of usurping the role of the Legislature, but in my opinion to apply the discoverability rule here is consistent with what has already been done before. On the true consideration of s. 10 of the Fatal Injuries Act, time does not run simply from a fixed event, but from constituent elements of the cause of action created by the statute. [Emphasis added.]

In Burt, the death of a person for which an action can be brought under the Fatal Injuries Act does not merely refer to the time of death as provided in the Survival of Actions Act, but to a "wrongful" death. It is not an event totally unrelated to the accrual of the cause of action. Hence, the death of the person there is in fact a "constituent elemen[t] of the cause of action", contrary to the present case.

In my view, the case that best assists this Court in the present matter is the one giving rise to the Ontario Court of Appeal's decision in Waschkowski v. Hopkinson Estate (2000), 47 O.R. (3d) 370. The court had to determine the possible application of the discoverability rule to s. 38(3) of the Trustee Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. T.23, the statutory provision in Ontario permitting an action in tort by or against the estate of a deceased person and limiting the period during which such actions may be commenced. Abella J.A., as she then was, concluded, at para. 16, that the discoverability rule did not apply to the section since the state of actual or attributed knowledge of an injured person in a tort claim is not germane when a death has occurred. She explained at paras. 8-9:

In s. 38(3) of the Trustee Act, the limitation period runs from a death. Unlike cases where the wording of the limitation period permits the time to run, for example, dû prendre connaissance du fait qu'il se pourrait que le décès ait été causé par la faute d'autrui. Compte tenu de l'économie de la Fatal Injuries Act, ce n'est pas aller plus loin que les tribunaux l'ont fait dans les arrêts Peixeiro, Grenier et autres, toujours dans le but d'écarter un risque d'injustice.

Bien qu'il nous faille éviter d'être accusés d'usurper le rôle du législateur, j'estime qu'appliquer la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage en l'espèce est compatible avec ce qui a déjà été fait. Un examen attentif de l'art. 10 de la Fatal Injuries Act révèle que le délai commence à courir non pas simplement à compter du moment où survient un fait déterminé, mais dès que sont établis les éléments constitutifs de la cause d'action créée par la loi. [Je souligne.]

30 Dans l'arrêt Burt, la mention du décès d'une personne qui peut faire l'objet d'une action fondée sur la Fatal Injuries Act renvoie non pas simplement au moment du décès, comme c'est le cas dans la Survival of Actions Act, mais à un décès « causé par la faute d'autrui ». Il ne s'agit pas d'un fait dépourvu de tout lien avec la naissance de la cause d'action. Par conséquent, le décès de la personne dans cette affaire est, en fait, un « élémen[t] constituti[f] de la cause d'action », contrairement à ce qui se passe en l'espèce.

31 À mon avis, l'affaire la plus utile à notre Cour en l'espèce est celle qui est à l'origine de l'arrêt de la Cour d'appel de l'Ontario Waschkowski c. Hopkinson Estate (2000), 47 O.R. (3d) 370. La cour devait décider si la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage pouvait être appliquée au par. 38(3) de la Loi sur les fiduciaires, L.R.O. 1990, ch. T.23, la disposition législative ontarienne qui prévoit qu'une action délictuelle peut être intentée par ou contre la succession d'une personne décédée et qui limite le délai dans lequel ces actions peuvent être intentées. La juge Abella (maintenant juge de notre Cour) a conclu, au par. 16, que la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage ne s'appliquait pas à cette disposition puisque, dans une action délictuelle, l'état des connaissances d'une personne lésée ou celui qu'on lui attribue n'a aucune pertinence en cas de décès. Elle a expliqué ceci, aux par. 8-9 :

[TRADUCTION] Aux termes du par. 38(3) de la Loi sur les fiduciaires, le délai de prescription court à compter d'un décès. Contrairement aux affaires dans lesquelles from "when the damage was sustained" (Peixeiro) or when the cause of action arose (Kamloops), there is no temporal elasticity possible when the pivotal event is the date of a death. Regardless of when the injuries occurred or matured into an actionable wrong, s. 38(3) of the Trustee Act prevents their transformation into a legal claim unless that claim is brought within two years of the death of the wrongdoer or the person wronged.

The underlying policy considerations of this clear time limit are not difficult to understand. The draconian legal impact of the common law was that death terminated any possible redress for negligent conduct. On the other hand, there was a benefit to disposing of estate matters with finality. The legislative compromise in s. 38 of the Trustee Act was to open a two-year window, making access to a remedy available for a limited time without creating indefinite fiscal vulnerability for an estate. [Emphasis added.]

See also Canadian Red Cross Society (Re), [2003] O.J. No. 5669 (QL) (C.A.), and Edwards v. Law Society of Upper Canada (No. 1) (2000), 48 O.R. (3d) 321 (C.A.).

32 Ryan's cause of action arose prior to Moore's death and Ryan was well aware of his cause of action both before Moore's death and before the expiration of the Survival of Actions Act limitation period. In fact, the day following the accident, Ryan retained a solicitor to pursue a claim for damages against Moore for injuries alleged to have resulted from the accident. At that point, Ryan could have sued Moore as all the elements of his cause of action were known. He did not need to have knowledge of the death in question to prove his claim or issue and serve the statement of claim. Moore's subsequent death had no impact whatsoever on the accrual of Ryan's cause of action. Consequently, I agree with the conclusion of the applications judge, at para. 50:

The fact of death is of no relevance to the cause of action in question. It is not an element of the cause of action and is not required to complete the cause of action. Whatever the nature of the cause of action, it is existing le délai de prescription peut, en raison de sa formulation, avoir pour point de départ, par exemple, la date « où les dommages ont été subis » (Peixeiro) ou le moment où la cause d'action a pris naissance (Kamloops), aucune élasticité temporelle n'est possible lorsque la date de décès est l'élément décisif. Peu importe le moment où le préjudice a été causé ou est devenu une faute ouvrant droit à une action, le par. 38(3) de la Loi sur les fiduciaires empêche qu'il donne lieu à une action en justice, à moins que cette action ne soit intentée dans les deux ans suivant le décès de l'auteur de la faute ou de la personne lésée.

Les considérations de politique générale qui sous-tendent ce délai précis ne sont pas difficiles à comprendre. L'effet juridique draconien de la common law était que le décès écartait toute possibilité de réparation pour une conduite négligente. Par contre, il était avantageux de régler les questions de succession de manière définitive. Le compromis législatif à l'art. 38 de la Loi sur les fiduciaires consistait à ouvrir une brèche de deux ans afin de donner accès à une réparation pendant un temps limité, sans placer indéfiniment une succession dans une situation de vulnérabilité financière. [Je souligne.]

Voir aussi Canadian Red Cross Society (Re), [2003] O.J. No. 5669 (QL) (C.A.), et Edwards c. Law Society of Upper Canada (No. 1) (2000), 48 O.R. (3d) 321 (C.A.).

La cause d'action de M. Ryan a pris naissance avant le décès de M. Moore, et M. Ryan était bien au fait de sa cause d'action tant avant le décès de M. Moore qu'avant l'expiration du délai de prescription fixé par la Survival of Actions Act. En réalité, M. Ryan a, le lendemain de l'accident, retenu les services d'un avocat en vue d'intenter une action en dommages-intérêts contre M. Moore pour des blessures qui auraient été causées par l'accident. M. Ryan aurait alors pu poursuivre M. Moore étant donné que tous les éléments de sa cause d'action étaient connus. Il n'avait pas besoin d'être au courant du décès en question pour établir le bien-fondé de sa demande ou pour déposer et signifier sa déclaration. Le décès subséquent de M. Moore n'avait absolument aucune incidence sur la naissance de la cause d'action de M. Ryan. En conséquence, je suis d'accord avec la conclusion du juge des requêtes, au par. 50 :

[TRADUCTION] Le décès en tant que tel n'a aucune pertinence en ce qui concerne la cause d'action en question. Il ne constitue pas un élément de la cause d'action et n'est pas nécessaire pour compléter la cause d'action.

and complete before the Survival of Actions Act operates, in the case of a death, to maintain it and provide a limited time window within which it must be pursued. The fact of the death is irrelevant to the cause of action and serves only to provide a time from which the time within which to bring the action is to be calculated.

Quelle que soit la nature de la cause d'action, elle existe et est complète avant que la Survival of Actions Act s'applique, en cas de décès, pour la maintenir et fixer un délai limité dans lequel l'action devra être intentée. Le décès en tant que tel n'est pas pertinent en ce qui concerne la cause d'action et sert seulement de point de départ pour calculer le délai dans lequel l'action devra être intentée.

A further reason for the non-application of the discoverability rule is the evident impact such a rule would have on the distribution of assets to the beneficiaries. Without a time limit, an executor or an administrator would not feel free to distribute the assets of an estate until all reasonable possibilities of claim had been addressed. This would be cumbersome and unrealistic. "An estate should not be held to ransom interminably by the advancement of claims which are not proceeded with in a timely manner": MacKenzie Estate v. MacKenzie (1992), 84 Man. R. (2d) 149 (Q.B.), at para. 18, cited in Justice v. Cairnie Estate (1993), 105 D.L.R. (4th) 501 (Man. C.A.), at p. 510.

33 Une autre raison de ne pas appliquer la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage est l'incidence évidente que cette règle aurait sur la distribution de l'actif aux bénéficiaires. En l'absence d'un délai, un exécuteur ou un administrateur hésiterait à distribuer l'actif d'une succession avant d'avoir examiné toutes les possibilités raisonnables de réclamation, ce qui serait peu pratique et irréaliste. [TRADUCTION] « Une succession ne devrait pas être gardée indéfiniment en otage par des réclamations non traitées promptement » : MacKenzie Estate c. MacKenzie (1992), 84 Man. R. (2d) 149 (B.R.), par. 18, cité dans l'arrêt Justice c. Cairnie Estate (1993), 105 D.L.R. (4th) 501 (C.A. Man.), p. 510.

The Survival of Actions Act is itself a legislative exception to a common law rule. Thus, it would displace the intention of the legislature to "stretch" the limitation period. Borrowing the words of Marshall J.A. in Snow, at para. 43, to apply the rule of construction of reasonable discoverability to such a provision would be tantamount to mounting a fiction transcending the limits of logical statutory interpretation. Hence, it would constitute an impermissible incursion into the legislative process.

34 La Survival of Actions Act constitue en soi une exception législative à la règle de common law. « Prolonger » le délai de prescription aurait pour effet d'écarter l'intention du législateur. Comme l'a dit le juge Marshall dans l'arrêt Snow, au par. 43, appliquer à une telle disposition la règle d'interprétation de la possibilité raisonnable de découvrir le dommage reviendrait à créer une fiction qui transcenderait les limites de l'interprétation logique des lois. Du même coup, il s'agirait d'une incursion inacceptable dans le processus législatif.

(4) Special Circumstances

(4) Circonstances spéciales

Ryan submits, as an alternative, that if the discoverability rule does not apply, the limitation period should be extended because of the "special circumstances" principle. He claims that, pursuant to this principle, fairness and justice require that an innocent plaintiff should not be deprived of compensation through no fault of his own. This argument was not invoked in front of the applications judge or the Court of Appeal, and is not supported by any evidence; under these circumstances, it is, in my view, without merit.

35 Subsidiairement, M. Ryan fait valoir que, si la règle de la possibilité de découvrir le dommage ne s'applique pas, le délai de prescription doit être prolongé en raison du principe des « circonstances spéciales ». Il soutient que selon ce principe, l'équité et la justice commandent qu'un demandeur innocent ne soit pas privé d'indemnisation s'il n'a lui-même commis aucune faute. Cet argument n'a été avancé ni devant le juge des requêtes ni devant la Cour d'appel, et ne repose sur aucun élément de preuve; dans ces circonstances, je le considère non fondé.

B. Confirmation

36 Ryan claims that the confirmation of the cause of action pursued under s. 16 of the Limitations Act applies to extend the limitation period contained in s. 5 of the Survival of Actions Act. He argues that the correspondence exchanged between Cabot Insurance's adjuster and his previous counsel, the payment made by Cabot Insurance for his property damage claim, as well as a payment of $500 to his previous counsel for a medical report, prove acknowledgment (as contemplated by the Limitations Act) and therefore confirmation.

37 The appellants submit that s. 16 of the Limitations Act does not apply to the Survival of Actions Act. They claim that any confirmation of the cause of action would have no effect on the Survival of Actions Act limitation period because the Survival of Actions Act does not create a cause of action but simply confers a right to pursue a claim notwithstanding the fact that one of the parties has died. Finally, they argue that there was no confirmation of the cause of action in this case as there was no admission of liability through the letters nor the payments made.

38 I agree with the appellants' position as accepted by the Court of Appeal.

39 The relevant portions of s. 16 of the Limitations Act provide:

16. (1) A confirmation of a cause of action occurs where a person

(a) acknowledges that cause of action, right or title of another person; or

(b) makes a payment in respect of that cause of action, right or title of another.

(2) Where a person against whom an action lies confirms that cause of action, the time before the date of that confirmation shall not count when determining the limitation period for a person having the benefit of the confirmation against the person bound by that confirmation.

B. Confirmation

M. Ryan prétend que la confirmation de la cause d'action prévue à l'art. 16 de la Limitations Act s'applique pour prolonger le délai de prescription fixé à l'art. 5 de la Survival of Actions Act. Il fait valoir que l'échange de correspondance entre l'expert en sinistres de Cabot Insurance et son ancien avocat, le paiement effectué par Cabot Insurance relativement à sa demande d'indemnité pour préjudice matériel et le versement de 500 $ à son ancien avocat pour un rapport médical prouvent qu'il y a eu reconnaissance (comme le prévoit la Limitations Act) et donc confirmation.

Les appelants soutiennent que l'art. 16 de la Limitations Act ne s'applique pas à la Survival of Actions Act. Selon eux, une confirmation de la cause d'action n'aurait aucun effet sur le délai de prescription fixé par la Survival of Actions Act parce que cette loi ne crée pas une cause d'action, mais ne fait que conférer un droit d'intenter une action malgré le décès de l'une des parties. Enfin, ils affirment que la cause d'action n'a pas été confirmée en l'espèce étant donné que ni les lettres ni les paiements effectués ne traduisent une reconnaissance de responsabilité.

Je partage le point de vue des appelants, qui a été retenu par la Cour d'appel.

Voici les parties pertinentes de l'art. 16 de la Limitations Act :

[TRADUCTION]

16. (1) Une cause d'action est confirmée si, selon le cas, une personne :

a) reconnaît cette cause d'action, ce droit ou ce titre appartenant à autrui;

b) effectue un paiement à l'égard de cette cause d'action, de ce droit ou de ce titre appartenant à autrui.

(2) En cas de confirmation, la période antérieure à la date de la confirmation est exclue du calcul de la prescription de l'action de la personne qui bénéficie de cette confirmation par rapport à celle qui est liée par celle-ci.

(3) Subsection (2) applies only to a right of action where the confirmation is given before the expiration of the limitation period for that right of action.

. . .

(5) In order to be effective a confirmation must be in writing and signed by

(a) the person against whom that cause of action lies; or

(b) his or her agent

and given to the person or agent of the person having the benefit of that cause of action.

When a person acknowledges the cause of action of another person or makes a payment in respect of that cause of action, a confirmation of that cause of action occurs. Consequently, the time accrued before the date of that confirmation shall not be considered when determining the limitation period (s. 16(2)). Confirmation must, of course, be made prior to the expiration of the limitation period (s. 16(3)).

Section 16 can only apply to a limitation period which limits the time during which an action may be taken. Since the limitation period which arises under the Survival of Actions Act supersedes the first limitation period of the Limitations Act, and does not create or revive an action, but merely permits it to continue, s. 16 cannot apply to it as found by the Court of Appeal (para. 67).

Even if this were not the case, the facts here do not support a finding of confirmation on the part of the appellants. I will address this issue briefly as a matter of principle.

In order to establish confirmation, one of two events must be proven: (1) that the party acknowledged the cause of action; or (2) that there was a payment made in respect of the cause of action (see Mew, at p. 115).

The term "acknowledges" as used in s. 16(1)(a) of the Limitations Act has been described by Lord Denning in Good v. Parry, [1963] 2 All E.R. 59 (C.A.), at p. 61, as requiring an "admission". While

(3) Le paragraphe (2) ne vise un droit d'action que si la confirmation a lieu avant l'expiration du délai de prescription applicable à ce droit d'action.

. . .

(5) La confirmation est valide si elle est consignée dans un écrit, signée par l'une des personnes suivantes et remise à la personne qui bénéficie de cette cause d'action ou à son mandataire :

a) soit la personne visée par la cause d'action,

b) soit son mandataire.

40 Il y a confirmation lorsqu'une personne reconnaît la cause d'action d'autrui ou effectue un paiement à l'égard de cette cause d'action. Par conséquent, la période antérieure à la date de cette confirmation est exclue du calcul du délai de prescription (par. 16(2)). La confirmation doit évidemment avoir lieu avant l'expiration du délai de prescription (par. 16(3)).

41 L'article 16 ne peut s'appliquer qu'au délai dans lequel une action peut être intentée. Comme l'a conclu la Cour d'appel, l'art. 16 ne peut pas s'appliquer au délai de prescription fixé par la Survival of Actions Act étant donné qu'il supplante le premier délai de prescription fixé par la Limitations Act et ne crée pas et ne relance pas une action, mais lui permet simplement de suivre son cours (par. 67).

42 Même si ce n'était pas le cas, les faits de la présente affaire ne permettent pas de conclure à une confirmation de la part des appelants. Je vais, par principe, examiner brièvement cette question.

43 Pour prouver qu'il y a eu confirmation, il est nécessaire d'établir l'existence de l'un des deux faits suivants : (1) la partie a reconnu la cause d'action, ou (2) un paiement a été effectué à l'égard de la cause d'action (voir Mew, p. 115).

44 Le terme « acknowledges » (« reconnaît ») utilisé à l'al. 16(1)a) de la Limitations Act a été décrit par lord Denning, dans l'arrêt Good c. Parry, [1963] 2 All E.R. 59 (C.A.), p. 61, comme nécessitant une care must be shown when applying English case law, as the English Limitation Act, 1939, 2 & 3 Geo. 6, c. 21, does not provide for the acknowledgment of the "cause of action" but the acknowledgment of the "claim", it is still persuasive authority for the present interpretation.

45 Thus, a party can only be held to have acknowledged the claim if that party has in effect admitted his or her liability to pay that which the claimant seeks to recover (see Surrendra Overseas Ltd. v. Government of Sri Lanka, [1977] 2 All E.R. 481 (Q.B.)). As the British Columbia Court of Appeal concluded in Podovinikoff v. Montgomery (1984), 14 D.L.R. (4th) 716, at p. 721, a person can acknowledge as a bare fact that someone has asserted (by making a claim) a cause of action against him, without acknowledging any liability. Simple acknowledgment of the "existence" of a cause of action is insufficient to meet the requirements of s. 16(1)(a). Acknowledgment must involve acknowledgment of some liability.

46 Consequently, the letters from the adjuster to Ryan's counsel (i.e. letters of November 18, 1998 and January 25, 1999) do not restart the clock as they do not constitute an admission of liability on the part of Cabot Insurance. These were obviously only requests for information and part of the normal investigation process. As submitted by the appellants, if mere investigation of claims were to constitute confirmation, then potential defendants, in order to protect limitation defence, would have no choice but to refuse to investigate until a statement of claim is issued. This would destroy the possibility of early settlements and lead to increased litigation and costs.

47 The same conclusion applies to the second way that confirmation can occur, through payment. Of importance is the fact that both payments mentioned by Ryan, payments for Ryan's medical chart

« admission » (« admission »). Bien que la jurisprudence anglaise doive être appliquée avec prudence, étant donné qu'en Angleterre la Limitation Act, 1939, 2 & 3 Geo. 6, ch. 21, prévoit non pas la reconnaissance de la « cause d'action » mais la reconnaissance de la « demande d'indemnité », cette jurisprudence reste convaincante pour les besoins de l'interprétation en l'espèce.

Ainsi, il est possible de conclure qu'une partie a reconnu la demande d'indemnité seulement si elle a effectivement admis qu'elle était tenue de payer ce que le demandeur tente de recouvrer (voir Surrendra Overseas Ltd. c. Government of Sri Lanka, [1977] 2 All E.R. 481 (B.R.)). Comme l'a conclu la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique, dans l'arrêt Podovinikoff c. Montgomery (1984), 14 D.L.R. (4th) 716, p. 721, une personne peut simplement reconnaître que quelqu'un a fait valoir (en présentant une demande d'indemnité) une cause d'action contre elle sans reconnaître quelque responsabilité que ce soit. La simple reconnaissance de l'« existence » d'une cause d'action est insuffisante pour satisfaire aux exigences de l'al. 16(1)a). La reconnaissance doit comporter une admission de responsabilité quelconque.

Par conséquent, les lettres (du 18 novembre 1998 et du 25 janvier 1999) que l'expert en sinistres a envoyées à l'avocat de M. Ryan ne font pas recommencer le compte à rebours étant donné qu'elles ne constituent pas une reconnaissance de responsabilité de la part de Cabot Insurance. Il est évident que ces lettres n'étaient que des demandes de renseignements et faisaient partie du processus normal d'enquête. Comme l'ont prétendu les appelants, si le simple fait d'enquêter sur une demande devait constituer une confirmation, alors pour conserver le droit d'invoquer la prescription comme moyen de défense, les défendeurs éventuels n'auraient d'autre choix que de refuser d'enquêter jusqu'à ce qu'une déclaration soit déposée. Cela écarterait la possibilité d'un règlement rapide et entraînerait une augmentation de l'incidence et du coût des procès.

La même conclusion s'applique à la deuxième façon de confirmer, c'est-à-dire au moyen d'un paiement. Il importe de souligner que les deux paiements mentionnés par M. Ryan, à savoir ceux effectués pour and Dr. Landells' medical report, were not evidence of liability by Cabot Insurance; nor did they indemnify Ryan, at least in part, for damages caused by the accident. Thus, they cannot be payments in respect of the "cause of action". Ryan relies on the Newfoundland Court of Appeal decision in Wheaton v. Palmer (2001), 205 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 304, for the proposition that a payment made to a physician, but sent to the plaintiff's solicitor will constitute confirmation. With respect, I am of the view that the Court of Appeal erred in this determination. I prefer the contrary position of the British Columbia Court of Appeal in MacKay v. Lemley (1997), 44 B.C.L.R. (3d) 382, at para. 21. Payment for a medical report with a cheque payable to a physician, but sent to the plaintiff's solicitor, does not constitute confirmation of the plaintiff's cause of action:

> The mere fact that the payment, although made payable to the doctor, was directed through the lawyer's office for forwarding does not, in my view, bring the payment into the express wording of the section. The payment here, as in Germyn, was intended to pay to the doctor. The doctor was not a person through whom the appellant could claim. This was not a reimbursement to anyone for having paid for the medical report but a direct payment to the doctor by [the Insurance Corporation of British Columbia].

The purpose for which these types of payments and correspondence are made is critical. In this case, they were not intended as admissions of liability, but only to promote investigation and early resolution of certain aspects of the claim.

C. Estoppel

Moore's estate and Cabot Insurance submit that the majority of the Court of Appeal erred when it concluded that they were estopped from relying on the fact of Moore's death and the granting of letters of administration, thus preventing them from arguing that Ryan's action was outside the Survival of Actions Act limitation period. They claim that neither estoppel by convention nor estoppel by le dossier médical de M. Ryan et le rapport médical du D[r] Landells, ne constituaient pas une preuve de responsabilité de la part de Cabot Insurance, et n'indemnisaient pas non plus M. Ryan, en partie du moins, pour le préjudice causé par l'accident. Ainsi, ils ne sauraient être des paiements à l'égard de la « cause d'action ». M. Ryan se fonde sur la décision rendue par la Cour d'appel de Terre-Neuve dans l'affaire Wheaton c. Palmer (2001), 205 Nfld. & P.E.I.R. 304, pour affirmer qu'un paiement fait à un médecin, mais envoyé à l'avocat du demandeur, constitue une confirmation. En toute déférence, j'estime que cette décision de la Cour d'appel est erronée. Je préfère le point de vue contraire que la Cour d'appel de la Colombie-Britannique a exprimé dans l'arrêt MacKay c. Lemley (1997), 44 B.C.L.R. (3d) 382, par. 21. Le paiement pour un rapport médical, effectué par chèque à l'ordre d'un médecin mais envoyé à l'avocat du demandeur, ne constitue pas une confirmation de la cause d'action du demandeur :

> [TRADUCTION] J'estime que le simple fait d'avoir transmis par le bureau de l'avocat le paiement destiné au médecin n'en fait pas un paiement au sens du libellé exprès de la disposition. Le paiement effectué en l'espèce était, comme dans l'affaire Germyn, destiné au médecin. Le médecin n'était pas une personne dont l'appelant pouvait se servir comme intermédiaire pour présenter une demande d'indemnité. Il s'agissait non pas d'un remboursement destiné à une personne ayant payé le rapport médical, mais d'un paiement direct fait au médecin par [l'Insurance Corporation of British Columbia].

48 Le but de ces types de paiement et de correspondance est crucial. En l'espèce, ils étaient censés non pas constituer une reconnaissance de responsabilité, mais seulement faire avancer l'enquête et favoriser le règlement rapide de certains aspects de la demande d'indemnité.

C. La préclusion

49 La succession de M. Moore et Cabot Insurance soutiennent que les juges majoritaires de la Cour d'appel ont eu tort de conclure qu'ils étaient préclus d'invoquer le décès en tant que tel de M. Moore et la délivrance des lettres d'administration, ce qui les empêchait de faire valoir que l'action de M. Ryan avait été intentée après l'expiration du délai de prescription fixé par la Survival of Actions Act. Elles representation applies to the facts of the present case. Ryan argues that the appellants are precluded or estopped from relying on the limitation period in the Survival of Actions Act because of the application of either of these two types of estoppel.

50 While the principle of estoppel is often referred to in connection with cases of waiver, election, abandonment, acquiescence and laches, in the context of commercial and contractual relationships, the case law in Canada on this subject is not as abundant as that in the United Kingdom. It is therefore useful for this Court to address the issue in some detail, especially where it has long been accepted that estoppels are to be received with caution and applied with care (see Harper v. Cameron (1892), 2 B.C.R. 365 (Div. Ct.), at p. 383).

51 The state of the law of estoppel was articulated by Lord Denning in Amalgamated Investment & Property Co. (In Liquidation) v. Texas Commerce International Bank Ltd., [1982] 1 Q.B. 84 (C.A.), at p. 122, as follows:

> The doctrine of estoppel is one of the most flexible and useful in the armoury of the law. But it has become overloaded with cases. That is why I have not gone through them all in this judgment. It has evolved during the last 150 years in a sequence of separate developments: proprietary estoppel, estoppel by representation of fact, estoppel by acquiescence, and promissory estoppel. At the same time it has been sought to be limited by a series of maxims: estoppel is only a rule of evidence, estoppel cannot give rise to a cause of action, estoppel cannot do away with the need for consideration, and so forth. All these can now be seen to merge into one general principle shorn of limitations. When the parties to a transaction proceed on the basis of an underlying assumption — either of fact or of law — whether due to misrepresentation or mistake makes no difference — on which they have conducted the dealings between them — neither of them will be allowed to go back on that assumption when it would be unfair or unjust to allow him to do so. If one of them does seek to go back on it, the courts will give the other such remedy as the equity of the case demands.

prétendent que ni la préclusion par convention ni la préclusion par assertion de fait ne s'applique aux faits de la présente affaire. Selon M. Ryan, les appelants sont préclus d'invoquer le délai de prescription fixé par la Survival of Actions Act en raison de l'application de l'un ou l'autre de ces deux types de préclusion.

Bien que la règle de la préclusion soit souvent mentionnée à l'égard d'affaires de renonciation, d'exercice d'un choix, d'abandon, d'acquiescement et de manque de diligence dans le contexte de rapports commerciaux et contractuels, la jurisprudence canadienne sur ce sujet n'est pas aussi abondante que celle du Royaume-Uni. Il est donc utile que notre Cour procède à un examen assez approfondi de la question, d'autant plus qu'il est reconnu depuis longtemps que les préclusions doivent être admises avec prudence et appliquées avec soin (voir Harper c. Cameron (1892), 2 B.C.R. 365 (Div. Ct.), p. 383).

Dans l'arrêt Amalgamated Investment & Property Co. (In Liquidation) c. Texas Commerce International Bank Ltd., [1982] 1 Q.B. 84 (C.A.), p. 122, lord Denning a décrit ainsi l'état du droit en matière de préclusion :

> [TRADUCTION] La règle de la préclusion est l'une des plus souples et des plus utiles de l'arsenal du droit. Cependant, elle a été appliquée dans une multitude d'affaires. C'est pourquoi je ne les ai pas toutes examinées dans le présent jugement. Cette règle a connu, au cours des 150 dernières années, une évolution en plusieurs étapes : la préclusion propriétale, la préclusion par assertion de fait, la préclusion par acquiescement et la préclusion promissoire. On a par ailleurs cherché à en limiter la portée au moyen d'une série de maximes : la préclusion n'est qu'une règle de preuve, la préclusion ne peut pas donner naissance à une cause d'action, la préclusion n'élimine pas la nécessité de s'interroger, et ainsi de suite. On peut maintenant considérer que toutes ces maximes forment une seule règle générale dénuée de restriction. Lorsque les parties à une opération se fondent sur une présupposition sous-jacente — de fait ou de droit — peu importe qu'elle découle d'une affirmation inexacte ou d'une erreur — qui a guidé leurs rapports —, aucune d'elles ne peut revenir sur cette présupposition lorsqu'il serait inéquitable ou injuste de lui permettre de le faire. Si l'une des parties souhaite revenir sur la présupposition, les tribunaux accorderont à l'autre partie la réparation qui s'impose en equity.

NBC BOA 001571

The jurisprudence discloses six types of estoppel: estoppel by representation of fact, proprietary estoppel, promissory estoppel, estoppel by convention, estoppel by deed and estoppel by negligence (see Bower, at pp. 3-9). I will examine here the ones at the centre of this dispute, estoppel by convention and estoppel by representation.

(1) Estoppel by Convention

(a) Definition and Principles

The origin of the doctrine of estoppel by convention can be traced to estoppel by deed for which sealing and delivery were essential, and for which the foundation of duty lay not in the agreement itself, or any reliance thereon, but in the formal solemnity of the deed, reflecting the concern of ancient jurisprudence with form as opposed to substance. The modern rule has evolved enormously (see Bower, at pp. 179-80; T. B. Dawson, "Estoppel and obligation: the modern role of estoppel by convention" (1989), 9 L.S. 16).

Bower defines the modern concept of estoppel by convention as follows (at p. 180):

> An estoppel by convention, it is submitted, is an estoppel by representation of fact, a promissory estoppel or a proprietary estoppel, in which the relevant proposition is established, not by representation or promise by one party to another, but by mutual, express or implicit, assent. This form of estoppel is founded, not on a representation made by a representor and believed by a representee, but on an agreed statement of facts or law, the truth of which has been assumed, by convention of the parties, as a basis of their relationship. When the parties have so acted in their relationship upon the agreed assumption that the given state of facts or law is to be accepted between them as true, that it would be unfair on one for the other to resile from the agreed assumption, then he will be entitled to relief against the other according to whether the estoppel is as to a matter of fact, or promissory, and/or proprietary.

52 Six types de préclusion se dégagent de la jurisprudence : la préclusion par assertion de fait, la préclusion propriétale, la préclusion promissoire, la préclusion par convention, la préclusion du fait d'un acte formaliste et la préclusion fondée sur la négligence (voir Bower, p. 3-9). J'examinerai ici celles qui sont au cœur du présent litige, soit la préclusion par convention et la préclusion par assertion de fait.

(1) Préclusion par convention

a) Définition et principes

53 Les origines de la règle de la préclusion par convention remontent à la préclusion du fait d'un acte formaliste, pour laquelle le cachetage et la remise étaient essentiels et où le fondement de l'obligation résidait non pas dans la convention elle-même, ou dans le fait de s'y fier, mais dans le caractère solennel et officiel de l'acte, ce qui traduisait l'intérêt de la jurisprudence ancienne pour la forme plutôt que pour le fond. La règle moderne a changé énormément (voir Bower, p. 179-180; T. B. Dawson, « Estoppel and obligation : the modern role of estoppel by convention » (1989), 9 L.S. 16).

54 Bower définit ainsi la notion moderne de préclusion par convention (p. 180) :

> [TRADUCTION] La préclusion par convention, soutient-on, est une préclusion par assertion de fait, une préclusion promissoire ou une préclusion propriétale où la proposition pertinente est établie non par voie d'assertion ou de promesse faite par une partie à une autre, mais par voie d'assentiment réciproque, exprès ou implicite. Cette forme de préclusion repose non pas sur une assertion faite par une personne et crue par celle à qui elle est destinée, mais sur un exposé conjoint des faits ou du droit dont la véracité est supposée constituer, par convention entre les parties, un fondement de leurs rapports. Lorsque, dans leurs rapports, les parties ont agi en fonction de la présupposition conventionnelle qu'elles devraient tenir pour véridique l'état de fait ou de droit en question, de sorte qu'il serait inéquitable pour l'une d'elles que l'autre revienne sur cette présupposition conventionnelle, alors cette partie aura un recours contre l'autre selon qu'il s'agit d'une préclusion relative à une question de fait, ou encore d'une préclusion promissoire ou propriétale, ou les deux à la fois.

55 S. Wilken, Wilken and Villiers: The Law of Waiver, Variation and Estoppel (2nd ed. 2002), at p. 223, affirms that estoppel by convention will occur where:

> (i) the parties have established, by their construction of their agreement or a common apprehension as to its legal effect, a convention basis; (ii) on that basis the parties have regulated their subsequent dealings; (iii) one party would suffer detriment if the other were to be permitted to resile from that convention.

See also Chitty on Contracts (29th ed. 2004), vol. 1, at p. 283.

56 The Court of Appeal of Newfoundland and Labrador, after a review of the case law in the United Kingdom and in Canada, formulated the following four elements which need to be proven (at para. 79):

> (i) The evidence establishes an assumption in common between the parties as to a state of facts;
>
> (ii) The parties have adopted the common assumption as the conventional basis for a transaction into which they have entered;
>
> (iii) The dispute in respect of which the estoppel by convention is asserted arises out of that transaction; and,
>
> (iv) A detriment would flow to the party asserting the estoppel if the other party is permitted to resile from the assumed stated facts.

These requirements were accepted by the respondent.

57 The appellants submit that there are six requirements for the estoppel by convention. They cite as support the New Zealand Court of Appeal decision in National Westminster Finance NZ Ltd. v. National Bank of NZ Ltd., [1996] 1 N.Z.L.R. 548, at p. 550. In fact, they simply advocate a more detailed description of the requirements also found in other foreign cases.

58 The jurisprudence in the United Kingdom is indeed abundant in contrast to that in Canada (see,

Dans Wilken and Villiers : The Law of Waiver, Variation and Estoppel (2e éd. 2002), p. 223, S. Wilken affirme qu'il y a préclusion par convention lorsque :

> [TRADUCTION] (i) les parties ont, par leur interprétation de leur convention ou par leur compréhension commune de ses effets juridiques, établi un fondement conventionnel; (ii) les parties ont réglé leurs rapports subséquents sur ce fondement; (iii) une des parties subirait un préjudice s'il était permis à l'autre partie de revenir sur cette convention.

Voir également Chitty on Contracts (29e éd. 2004), vol. 1, p. 283.

Après avoir examiné la jurisprudence du Royaume-Uni et du Canada, la Cour d'appel de Terre-Neuve-et-Labrador a énoncé les quatre éléments suivants qui doivent être prouvés (par. 79) :

> [TRADUCTION]
>
> (i) la preuve établit l'existence d'une présupposition commune aux parties quant à un état de fait;
>
> (ii) les parties ont adopté la présupposition commune comme fondement conventionnel de l'opération qu'elles ont conclue;
>
> (iii) le litige à l'égard duquel la préclusion par convention est invoquée découle de cette opération;
>
> (iv) la partie qui invoque la préclusion subirait un préjudice s'il était permis à l'autre partie de revenir sur l'état de fait présupposé.

L'intimé a reconnu ces conditions.

Les appelants affirment que six conditions doivent être remplies pour qu'il y ait préclusion par convention. À l'appui de cette affirmation, ils citent l'arrêt de la Cour d'appel de la Nouvelle-Zélande National Westminster Finance NZ Ltd. c. National Bank of NZ Ltd., [1996] 1 N.Z.L.R. 548, p. 550. En fait, ils préconisent simplement une description plus détaillée des conditions qui sont également énoncées dans d'autres décisions étrangères.

La jurisprudence du Royaume-Uni est effectivement abondante comparativement à celle qui existe e.g., The "Indian Grace", [1998] 1 Lloyd's L.R. 1 (H.L.), at p. 10; The "August Leonhardt", [1985] 2 Lloyd's L.R. 28 (C.A.), at pp. 34-35; The "Vistafjord", [1988] 2 Lloyd's L.R. 343 (C.A.), at pp. 349-53).

This Court is not bound by any of the above analytical frameworks. After having reviewed the jurisprudence in the United Kingdom and Canada as well as academic comments on the subject, I am of the view that the following criteria form the basis of the doctrine of estoppel by convention:

(1) The parties' dealings must have been based on a shared assumption of fact or law: estoppel requires manifest representation by statement or conduct creating a mutual assumption. Nevertheless, estoppel can arise out of silence (impliedly).

(2) A party must have conducted itself, i.e. acted, in reliance on such shared assumption, its actions resulting in a change of its legal position.

(3) It must also be unjust or unfair to allow one of the parties to resile or depart from the common assumption. The party seeking to establish estoppel therefore has to prove that detriment will be suffered if the other party is allowed to resile from the assumption since there has been a change from the presumed position.

See Wilken, at pp. 227-28; Canacemal Investment Inc. v. PCI Realty Corp., [1999] B.C.J. No. 2029 (QL) (S.C.), at para. 35; Capro Investments Ltd. v. Tartan Development Corp., [1998] O.J. No. 1763 (QL) (Gen. Div.), at para. 31.

(b) Application of the Law

The majority of the Court of Appeal held that estoppel by convention applied in the circumstances of this case. It concluded that there was an assumption between the parties as to a state of facts, namely: that Moore was alive; that the parties adopted this assumption as the basis upon which au Canada (voir, par exemple, The « Indian Grace », [1998] 1 Lloyd's L.R. 1 (H.L.), p. 10; The « August Leonhardt », [1985] 2 Lloyd's L.R. 28 (C.A.), p. 34-35; The « Vistafjord », [1988] 2 Lloyd's L.R. 343 (C.A.), p. 349-353).

59 Notre Cour n'est liée par aucun des cadres analytiques susmentionnés. Après avoir examiné la jurisprudence du Royaume-Uni et du Canada ainsi que les commentaires de certains auteurs sur le sujet, j'estime que les critères suivants constituent le fondement de la règle de la préclusion par convention :

(1) Les rapports des parties doivent avoir reposé sur une présupposition de fait ou de droit commune : la préclusion exige qu'une assertion manifeste émanant d'une déclaration ou d'une conduite ait créé une présupposition commune. La préclusion peut néanmoins résulter (implicitement) d'un silence.

(2) Une partie doit avoir agi sur la foi de cette présupposition commune, et ses actes doivent avoir entraîné une modification de sa situation juridique.

(3) Il doit également être injuste ou inéquitable de permettre à l'une des parties de revenir sur la présupposition commune ou de s'en écarter. La partie qui cherche à établir la préclusion doit donc démontrer que, s'il est permis à l'autre partie de revenir sur la présupposition, elle subira un préjudice en raison du changement de la situation présupposée.

Voir Wilken, p. 227-228; Canacemal Investment Inc. c. PCI Realty Corp., [1999] B.C.J. No. 2029 (QL) (C.S.), par. 35; Capro Investments Ltd. c. Tartan Development Corp., [1998] O.J. No. 1763 (QL) (Div. gén.), par. 31.

b) Application du droit

60 La Cour d'appel, à la majorité, a décidé que la préclusion par convention s'appliquait en l'espèce. Elle a conclu que les parties avaient présupposé l'existence d'un état de fait, à savoir que M. Moore était vivant, que les parties avaient convenu d'agir sur la foi de cette présupposition dans leurs their transactions relating to Ryan's claim were to be conducted; that the dispute in respect of which the estoppel was asserted arose out of the transactions between the parties in dealing with Ryan's claim; and that detriment would flow to Ryan if Moore's estate or the insurer were permitted to resile from the common assumption. As will be evidenced from the analysis below, I cannot agree with this conclusion.

(i) Assumption Shared and Communicated

61 The crucial requirement for estoppel by convention, which distinguishes it from the other types of estoppel, is that at the material time both parties must be of "a like mind" (Troop v. Gibson, [1986] 1 E.G.L.R. 1 (C.A.), at p. 5; Hillingdon London Borough v. ARC Ltd., [2000] E.W.J. No. 3278 (QL) (C.A.), at para. 49). The court must determine what state of affairs the parties have accepted, and decide whether there is sufficient certainty and clarity in the terms of the convention to give rise to any enforceable equity: Troop, at p. 6; see also Baird Textile Holdings Ltd. v. Marks & Spencer plc, [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 737, [2001] EWCA Civ 274, at para. 84.

62 While it may not be necessary that the assumption by the party raising estoppel be created or encouraged by the estopped party, it must be shared in the sense that each is aware of the assumption of the other (John v. George, [1995] E.W.J. No. 4375 (QL) (C.A.), at para. 37). Mutual assent is what distinguishes the estoppel by convention from other types of estoppel (Bower, at p. 184). The courts have described communications complying with this requirement as "crossing the line". In The "August Leonhardt", at pp. 34-35, Kerr L.J. held that

> [a]ll estoppels must involve some statement or conduct by the party alleged to be estopped on which the alleged representee was entitled to rely and did rely. In this sense all estoppels may be regarded as requiring some manifest representation which crosses the line between representor and representee, either by opérations relatives à la demande de M. Ryan, que le litige à l'égard duquel la préclusion était invoquée découlait des opérations que les parties avaient conclues en traitant la demande de M. Ryan, et que M. Ryan subirait un préjudice s'il était permis à la succession de M. Moore ou à l'assureur de revenir sur la présupposition commune. Comme le montrera l'analyse ci-dessous, je ne puis souscrire à cette conclusion.

(i) Présupposition commune et communiquée

La condition essentielle de la préclusion par convention, qui la distingue des autres types de préclusion, est que les deux parties soient, au moment pertinent, [TRADUCTION] « sur la même longueur d'onde » (Troop c. Gibson, [1986] 1 E.G.L.R. 1 (C.A.), p. 5; Hillingdon London Borough c. ARC Ltd., [2000] E.W.J. No. 3278 (QL) (C.A.), par. 49). La cour doit déterminer quel état de fait a été accepté par les parties, et décider si les conditions de la convention sont assez claires et dénuées d'ambiguïté pour donner naissance à un droit exécutoire en equity : Troop, p. 6; voir également Baird Textile Holdings Ltd. c. Marks & Spencer plc, [2002] 1 All E.R. (Comm) 737, [2001] EWCA Civ 274, par. 84.

Même s'il se peut qu'il ne soit pas nécessaire que la présupposition de la partie qui invoque la préclusion ait été créée ou encouragée par la partie précluse, elle doit être commune en ce sens que chacune des parties est au courant de la présupposition de l'autre (John c. George, [1995] E.W.J. No. 4375 (QL) (C.A.), par. 37). C'est l'assentiment réciproque qui distingue la préclusion par convention des autres types de préclusion (Bower, p. 184). Les tribunaux ont affirmé que les communications qui satisfont à cette exigence sont celles [TRADUCTION] « qui passent » de leur auteur à leur destinataire. Dans l'arrêt The « August Leonhardt », p. 34-35, le lord juge Kerr a conclu que > [TRADUCTION] [t]oute préclusion doit comporter une déclaration ou une conduite de la partie qui serait précluse, à laquelle le prétendu destinataire de l'assertion était en droit de se fier et s'est effectivement fié. En ce sens, toute préclusion peut être considérée comme nécessitant une assertion manifeste émanant soit d'une statement or conduct. It may be an express statement or it may be implied from conduct, e.g. a failure by the alleged representor to react to something said or done by the alleged representee so as to imply a manifestation of assent which leads to an estoppel by silence or acquiescence. Similarly, in cases of so-called estoppels by convention, there must be some mutually manifest conduct by the parties which is based on a common but mistaken assumption. . . .

There cannot be any estoppel unless the alleged representor has said or done something, or failed to do something, with the result that — across the line between the parties — his action or inaction has produced some belief or expectation in the mind of the alleged representee, so that, depending on the circumstances, it would thereafter no longer be right to allow the alleged representor to resile by challenging the belief or expectation which he has engendered. To that extent at least, therefore, the alleged representor must be open to criticism. [Emphasis added.]

See also The "Vistafjord", at p. 350. Thus, it is not enough that each of the two parties acts on an assumption not communicated to the other (The "Indian Grace", at p. 10). Further, the estopped party must have, at the very least, communicated to the other that he or she is indeed sharing the other party's (ex hypothesi) mistaken assumption (John, at para. 81; Bower, at p. 184).

In the present case, the record discloses 14 letters exchanged by Ryan's counsel and the adjuster with respect to the respondent's personal injury claim (A.R., vol. II, at pp. 150-70). However, none of these prove the existence of a common assumption. The letters lack clarity and certainty. The mere fact that communications occurred between the parties does not establish that they both assumed that Moore was alive. It is unlikely the question of whether Moore was alive or dead crossed the minds of either the appellants or the respondent. The fact that Ryan's counsel had originally diarized the claim as having a two-year limitation period under the Limitations Act shows that he had not turned his mind to the possibility of a shorter limitation period under the Survival of déclaration soit d'une conduite, qui passe de son auteur à son destinataire. Cette assertion peut prendre la forme d'une déclaration expresse ou découler implicitement d'une conduite, comme l'omission du prétendu auteur de l'assertion de réagir à quelque chose qui a été dit ou fait par son prétendu destinataire, qui semble manifester un assentiment donnant lieu à une préclusion par silence ou acquiescement. De même, dans les soi-disant cas de préclusion par convention, les parties doivent adopter une conduite manifeste de part et d'autre qui est fondée sur une présupposition commune, mais erronée. . .

Il ne saurait y avoir de préclusion à moins que le prétendu auteur de l'assertion n'ait dit ou fait quelque chose, ou omis de faire quelque chose, de sorte que — de manière générale entre les parties — son action ou son inaction a fait naître une certaine croyance ou attente dans l'esprit du prétendu destinataire de l'assertion, qui fait que, selon les circonstances, il ne serait plus acceptable de permettre au prétendu auteur de l'assertion de revenir sur celle-ci en contestant la croyance ou l'attente qu'elle a engendrée. Par conséquent, le prétendu auteur de l'assertion doit, tout au moins dans cette mesure, prêter le flanc à la critique. [Je souligne.]

Voir également The « Vistafjord », p. 350. Il ne suffit donc pas que chacune des deux parties agisse sur la foi d'une présupposition non communiquée à l'autre (The « Indian Grace », p. 10). En outre, la partie précluse doit, à tout le moins, avoir informé l'autre partie qu'elle partageait effectivement sa présupposition erronée (ex hypothesi) (John, par. 81; Bower, p. 184).

63

En l'espèce, le dossier révèle que l'avocat de M. Ryan et l'expert en sinistres ont échangé 14 lettres relativement à l'action pour préjudice corporel de l'intimé (d.a., vol. II, p. 150-170). Cependant, aucune de ces lettres n'établit l'existence d'une présupposition commune. Les lettres manquent de clarté et de certitude. Le seul fait que des communications aient eu lieu entre les parties n'établit pas qu'elles ont toutes les deux présupposé que M. Moore était vivant. Il est peu probable que la question de savoir si M. Moore était vivant ou mort ait traversé l'esprit des appelants ou de l'intimé. Le fait que l'avocat de M. Ryan ait, au départ, inscrit dans son calendrier que l'action était assujettie à un délai de prescription de deux ans en vertu de la Limitations Act démontre qu'il n'avait pas songé à la possibilité qu'un délai de prescription plus court s'applique en vertu de la Survival of Actions Act. En réalité notre Cour se trouve en présence d'une ignorance de part et d'autre et non d'une présupposition commune.

Actions Act. Effectively, this Court is in the presence of mutual ignorance, not mutual assumption.

64 Ryan submits, and it was agreed by the Court of Appeal, that the subject line in the letters exchanged between his counsel and the adjuster which read "Your Insured: Rex Moore" or "Our Insured: Rex Moore" is self-explanatory and indicates an assumption by both parties, that Moore was alive. I strongly disagree. This is an unrealistic interpretation of the subject line in the letters. Such an expression can mean one thing only: the named insured under the automobile insurance policy was Rex Moore. The words are a mere identification of the file the undersigned is dealing with. The Court of Appeal erred by giving weight to the subject line of these letters, which, properly interpreted, provide no evidence of a mutual assumption that Moore was alive.

M. Ryan prétend, ce dont la Cour d'appel a convenu, que l'objet des lettres échangées par son avocat et l'expert en sinistres, qui se lit [TRADUCTION] « Votre assuré : Rex Moore » ou « Notre assuré : Rex Moore », est éloquent et indique que les deux parties présupposaient que M. Moore était vivant. Je ne suis pas du tout d'accord. Il s'agit là d'une interprétation irréaliste de l'objet de ces lettres. Une telle mention ne peut signifier qu'une chose : la personne assurée en vertu de la police d'assurance automobile était Rex Moore. Ces mots ne servent qu'à identifier le dossier dont traite le signataire de la lettre. La Cour d'appel a commis une erreur en accordant de l'importance à la mention de l'objet de ces lettres qui, interprétée correctement, n'établit pas l'existence d'une présupposition commune que M. Moore était vivant.

65 Nor did the fact that the parties were conferring without regard to the limitation period establish a shared assumption that the limitation defence would not be relied on. The letters contain limited and simple requests for details of the claim, and do not establish a convention between the parties (see Hillingdon London Borough, at paras. 57 and 60; Seechurn v. ACE Insurance S.A.-N.V., [2002] 2 Lloyd's L.R. 390, [2002] EWCA Civ 67, at p. 396). In fact, the matter did not proceed beyond the preliminary stage of investigating the merits of the personal injury claim. There were no negotiations or settlement discussions, no admission of liability, and no agreement to forego a possible limitation defence.

Le fait que les parties se soient entretenues sans tenir compte du délai de prescription n'établissait pas non plus l'existence d'une présupposition commune que la prescription ne serait pas invoquée comme moyen de défense. Ces lettres renferment de simples demandes de détails concernant l'action et n'établissent pas l'existence d'une convention entre les parties (voir Hillingdon London Borough, par. 57 et 60; Seechurn c. ACE Insurance S.A.-N.V., [2002] 2 Lloyd's L.R. 390, [2002] EWCA Civ 67, p. 396). En fait, l'affaire n'a pas dépassé le stade préliminaire de l'enquête relative au bien-fondé de l'action pour préjudice corporel. Il n'y a eu aucune négociation ou discussion de conciliation, aucune reconnaissance de responsabilité ou entente de renonciation à la possibilité d'invoquer la prescription comme moyen de défense.

66 Even if one could conclude that there was a mutual assumption between the parties, I am of the view that it cannot realistically be asserted that the respondent communicated to the appellants that he indeed shared the mistaken assumption. In this regard, I agree with the dissenting members of the Court of Appeal when they affirm (at para. 108):

Même si on pouvait conclure à l'existence d'une présupposition commune des parties, j'estime qu'on ne saurait réalistement affirmer que l'intimé a informé les appelants qu'il partageait effectivement leur présupposition erronée. À cet égard, je suis du même avis que les juges dissidents de la Cour d'appel lorsqu'ils affirment (par. 108) :

It is true that both parties assumed Mr. Moore was alive. That, as noted above, is not sufficient to establish estoppel by convention. Prior to Mr. Moore's death, any reference to him implying he was alive was a reflection of the truth at that time. That cannot be said to be a communication which becomes the basis of a convention that they will proceed on the assumption that Mr. Moore is alive, even beyond his death. There is no direct or circumstantial evidence which would lead to such a conclusion. The question becomes: could any agreement have arisen after Mr. Moore's death? The two letters written by the adjuster after Mr. Moore's death were in error when they said "Our insured – Rex Moore" but there is no communication to the other party and acceptance that they are to govern their future conduct on that basis.

[TRADUCTION] Il est vrai que les deux parties ont présupposé que M. Moore était vivant. Comme nous l'avons déjà souligné, cela n'est pas suffisant pour établir la préclusion par convention. Avant le décès de M. Moore, toute mention de son nom laissant entendre qu'il était vivant reflétait alors la réalité. On ne saurait dire que cela constitue une communication sur la foi de laquelle les parties ont convenu d'agir en présupposant que M. Moore serait vivant, même après son décès. Aucune preuve directe ou indirecte ne permet d'arriver à une telle conclusion. Il faut alors se demander si une convention aurait pu survenir après le décès de M. Moore. Les deux lettres écrites par l'expert en sinistres après le décès de M. Moore étaient erronées lorsqu'elles mentionnaient « Notre assuré – Rex Moore », mais aucune partie n'a informé l'autre partie ou accepté que cela déterminerait leur conduite future.

(ii) Detrimental Reliance

(ii) L'acte de confiance préjudiciable

The appellants submit that detrimental reliance is a requirement that must be proven in order to find convention estoppel. I agree. The Court of Appeal erred in finding this condition fulfilled by simple proof that a detriment would flow to the party asserting the estoppel if the other party were permitted to resile from the assumed stated facts, without a finding of reliance.

67 Selon les appelants, l'acte de confiance préjudiciable est une condition dont l'existence doit être prouvée pour que l'on puisse conclure à la préclusion par convention. Je suis d'accord. La Cour d'appel a eu tort de conclure que, pour que cette condition soit remplie, il suffisait de prouver que la partie invoquant la préclusion subirait un préjudice s'il était permis à l'autre partie de revenir sur l'état de fait présupposé, sans qu'il soit nécessaire de conclure à l'existence d'un acte de confiance.

The jurisprudence and academic comments support the requirement of detrimental reliance as lying at the heart of true estoppel (see Bower, at pp. 6 and 184; John, at para. 86; Hillingdon London Borough; The "August Leonhardt", at p. 35; Litwin Construction (1973) Ltd. v. Pan (1988), 52 D.L.R. (4th) 459 (B.C.C.A.), at pp. 469-70; Canacemal, at paras. 33-35; Vancouver City Savings Credit Union v. Norenger Development (Canada) Inc., [2002] B.C.J. No. 1417 (QL), 2002 BCSC 934, at para. 74; 32262 B.C. Ltd. v. Companions Restaurant Inc. (1995), 17 B.L.R. (2d) 227 (B.C.S.C.), at pp. 235-36).

68 La jurisprudence et la doctrine confirment que la condition de l'acte de confiance préjudiciable est au cœur de la véritable préclusion (voir Bower, p. 6 et 184; John, par. 86; Hillingdon London Borough; The « August Leonhardt », p. 35; Litwin Construction (1973) Ltd. c. Pan (1988), 52 D.L.R. (4th) 459 (C.A.C.-B.), p. 469-470; Canacemal, par. 33-35; Vancouver City Savings Credit Union c. Norenger Development (Canada) Inc., [2002] B.C.J. No. 1417 (QL), 2002 BCSC 934, par. 74; 32262 B.C. Ltd. c. Companions Restaurant Inc. (1995), 17 B.L.R. (2d) 227 (C.S.C.-B.), p. 235-236).

Detrimental reliance encompasses two distinct, but interrelated, concepts: reliance and detriment. The former requires a finding that the party seeking to establish the estoppel changed his or her course of conduct by acting or abstaining from acting in reliance upon the assumption, thereby altering his or her legal position. If the first step is met, the second requires a finding that, should the other party be allowed to abandon the assumption, detriment will be suffered by the estoppel raiser because of the change from his or her assumed position (see Wilken, at p. 228; Grundt v. Great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mines Ltd. (1937), 59 C.L.R. 641 (Austl. H.C.), at p. 674).

69 L'acte de confiance préjudiciable englobe deux notions distinctes, mais connexes : l'acte de confiance et le préjudice. La première notion exige de conclure que la partie qui cherche à établir la préclusion a modifié sa conduite en agissant ou en s'abstenant d'agir sur la foi de la présupposition, ce

70 Returning to the case at bar, even if one were to assume the existence of a communicated common assumption between the parties, there is no evidence that the respondent relied on this assumption. The evidence suggests that the respondent never put his mind to the shorter Survival of Actions Act limitation period. First, Ryan's counsel diarized the matter as a two-year limitation period. Second, the issue of estoppel by convention was raised for the first time by the Court of Appeal itself and was never discussed before the applications judge. Moreover, in the affidavit of Ryan's counsel, nowhere does he state that he believed that the adjuster intended him to act or refrain from acting in reliance on any agreement (A.R., vol. II, at pp. 137-46). From the date of the accident, November 27, 1997, to the expiry of the Survival of Actions Act limitation period, August 16, 1999, there was never any discussion by the respondent of the limitation period. On October 24, 2000, when Ryan's counsel indicated for the first time to Cabot Insurance's claim examiner that there might be a problem with the limitation period, he did not refer to a mutual understanding that Moore was to be treated as being alive for the purposes of Ryan's claim, nor did he raise the existence of an agreement.

71 It was not open to Ryan's counsel to refrain from bringing an action against Rex Gilbert Moore based solely on the limited communications between counsel. The letters relied upon were limited to the collection of medical information and documentation about Ryan's alleged injuries — nothing more. I have already spoken about the subject line; one qui a eu pour effet de modifier sa situation juridique. Lorsque la première étape est franchie, la deuxième exige de conclure que, s'il est permis à l'autre partie de revenir sur la présupposition, la partie invoquant la préclusion subira un préjudice en raison du changement de sa situation présupposée (voir Wilken, p. 228; Grundt c. Great Boulder Proprietary Gold Mines Ltd. (1937), 59 C.L.R. 641 (H.C. Austr.), p. 674).

Pour revenir aux faits de la présente affaire, même si on présumait l'existence d'une présupposition commune communiquée entre les parties, rien ne prouve que l'intimé s'est fié à cette présupposition. La preuve indique que l'intimé n'a jamais songé au délai de prescription plus court prévu par la Survival of Actions Act. Premièrement, l'avocat de M. Ryan a inscrit dans son calendrier que l'affaire était assujettie à un délai de prescription de deux ans. Deuxièmement, la question de la préclusion par convention a été soulevée pour la première fois par la Cour d'appel elle-même et n'a jamais été débattue devant le juge des requêtes. En outre, dans son affidavit, l'avocat de M. Ryan ne mentionne nulle part qu'il croyait que l'expert en sinistres souhaitait qu'il agisse ou s'abstienne d'agir sur la foi d'une convention quelconque (d.a., vol. II, p. 137-146). Entre la date de l'accident, soit le 27 novembre 1997, et la date d'expiration du délai de prescription prévu par la Survival of Actions Act, soit le 16 août 1999, l'intimé n'a jamais discuté du délai de prescription. Lorsque, le 24 octobre 2000, l'avocat de M. Ryan a indiqué pour la première fois à la rédactrice sinistres de Cabot Insurance que le délai de prescription pourrait poser un problème, il n'a pas mentionné que les parties s'étaient entendues pour traiter M. Moore comme s'il était vivant pour les besoins de la demande de M. Ryan et n'a pas soulevé non plus l'existence d'une convention.

Il n'était pas loisible à l'avocat de M. Ryan de s'abstenir de poursuivre Rex Gilbert Moore en raison seulement des communications limitées qui ont eu lieu entre les avocats. Les lettres invoquées ne concernaient que le rassemblement de renseignements et de documents médicaux concernant les blessures qu'aurait subi M. Ryan, rien de plus. J'ai cannot disregard the fact that all negotiations/communications were also done on a "without prejudice" basis.

Consequently, I agree with the dissenting members of the Court of Appeal that the respondent not only did not rely on this alleged assumption, but his conduct does not show an intention to affect the legal relations between the parties. The record does not disclose that the respondent changed in any way his position on the basis of this alleged mutual assumption.

(iii) Detriment

Once the party seeking to establish estoppel shows that he acted on a shared assumption, he must prove detriment. For the plea to succeed, it must be unjust or unfair to allow a party to resile from the common assumption (Wilken, at p. 228). It is often said that the fact that there will have been a change from the presumed legal position will facilitate the establishment of detriment: "This is because there is an element of injustice inherent within the concept of the shared assumption — one party has acted unjustly in allowing the belief or expectation to 'cross the line' and arise in the other's mind": Wilken, at p. 228.

This final requirement of estoppel has been described as proving that it would be "unjust", "unconscionable" or "unfair" to permit a party to resile from the mutual assumption (see, e.g., Bower, at p. 181; John; The "Indian Grace"; The "Vistafjord"). However, it may be preferable to refrain from using "unconscionable", in order to avoid confusion with this last concept which has developed a special meaning in relation to inequality of bargaining power in the law of contracts (where we speak of unconscionable transactions, for instance) (see Litwin Construction, at p. 468).

In the case at bar, given that there was no shared assumption or reliance, the detriment criterion does not need to be addressed. I would note, however, déjà parlé de la mention de l'objet; on ne peut faire abstraction du fait que toutes les négociations et communications ont également été effectuées sous réserve de tous droits.

72 Par conséquent, je suis d'accord avec les juges dissidents de la Cour d'appel pour dire que non seulement l'intimé ne s'est pas fié à la présupposition dont on allègue l'existence, mais encore sa conduite ne démontre aucune intention de modifier les rapports juridiques entre les parties. Le dossier ne montre pas que l'intimé a modifié de quelque façon que ce soit sa situation en raison de la présupposition commune dont on allègue l'existence.

(iii) Préjudice

73 Dès que la partie qui cherche à établir la préclusion démontre qu'elle a agi sur la foi d'une présupposition commune, elle doit prouver l'existence d'un préjudice. Pour que ce moyen soit retenu, il doit être injuste ou inéquitable de permettre à une partie de revenir sur la présupposition commune (Wilken, p. 228). On dit souvent que le fait qu'il y ait eu modification de la situation juridique présupposée facilite l'établissement de l'existence d'un préjudice : [TRADUCTION] « Cela est dû au fait que la notion de présupposition commune comporte forcément un élément d'injustice — une partie a agi de manière injuste en permettant que la croyance ou l'attente "passe" dans l'esprit de l'autre » : Wilken, p. 228.

74 On a dit que cette dernière condition de la préclusion prouve qu'il serait « injuste », « inique » ou « inéquitable » de permettre à une partie de revenir sur la présupposition commune (voir, par exemple, Bower, p. 181; John; The « Indian Grace »; The « Vistafjord »). Cependant, il peut être préférable de s'abstenir d'utiliser le mot « inique » afin d'éviter toute confusion avec cette dernière notion, qui a pris un sens particulier en ce qui concerne l'inégalité du pouvoir de négociation en droit des contrats (où l'on parle d'opérations iniques, par exemple) (voir Litwin Construction, p. 468).

75 En l'espèce, étant donné l'absence de présupposition commune ou d'acte de confiance, il n'est pas nécessaire d'examiner le critère du préjudice.

that a detriment is not established by a reduced limitation period, as suggested by the respondent. Limitation periods and prescriptions, in the diverse areas of the law, have the similar effect and impact. The Survival of Actions Act has provided a benefit not available at common law; this benefit cannot legitimately be characterized as unfair and unjust.

(2) Estoppel by Representation

76 Where there is no shared assumption, as in the present case, there can be no estoppel by convention, no matter how unjust the other party's conduct may appear to be. However, in some circumstances, the party seeking to establish estoppel may be able to rely on estoppel by representation, an alternative here advocated by the respondent. The added difficulty in such a case is that an estoppel by representation cannot arise from silence unless a party is under a duty to speak. Silence or inaction will be considered a representation if a legal duty is owed by the representor to the representee to make a disclosure, or take steps, the omission of which is relied upon as creating an estoppel: see Wilken, at p. 227; Bower, at pp. 46-47.

77 Ryan submits that in the present case silence constituted a representation grounding estoppel because there was a duty to disclose relevant information as it would be unfair for the appellants to benefit from non-disclosure. I disagree. In the present case, there was no duty on the appellants, who were at the time only potential defendants, to advise Ryan of a limitation period, to assist him in the prosecution of the claim, or to advise him of the consequences of the death of one of the parties. There is no fiduciary or contractual relationship here (contrast with Queen v. Cognos Inc., [1993] 1 S.C.R. 87). The appellants had no duty to exercise reasonable care, nor to divulge any information.

Je tiens toutefois à souligner qu'un délai de prescription plus court n'est pas une preuve de préjudice, comme l'a laissé entendre l'intimé. Le délai de prescription et la prescription ont, dans les divers domaines du droit, un effet et une incidence similaires. La Survival of Actions Act procure un avantage que n'offre pas la common law; on ne saurait légitimement qualifier cet avantage d'inéquitable et injuste.

(2) Préclusion par assertion de fait

En l'absence de présupposition commune, comme c'est le cas en l'espèce, il ne peut y avoir de préclusion par convention, aussi injuste que puisse paraître la conduite de l'autre partie. Toutefois, dans certaines circonstances, la partie qui cherche à établir la préclusion peut être en mesure d'invoquer la préclusion par assertion de fait, une solution que l'intimé préconise en l'espèce. La difficulté additionnelle qui se pose dans un tel cas tient au fait que la préclusion par assertion de fait ne peut pas découler d'un silence, à moins qu'une partie ne soit tenue de parler. Le silence ou l'inaction seront considérés comme une assertion si l'auteur de l'assertion avait envers le destinataire de celle-ci une obligation légale de divulguer ou de prendre des mesures, et que l'omission de le faire est invoquée comme donnant lieu à la préclusion : voir Wilken, p. 227; Bower, p. 46-47.

M. Ryan prétend que, dans la présente affaire, le silence constituait une assertion justifiant la préclusion parce qu'il y avait une obligation de divulguer les renseignements pertinents due au fait qu'il serait inéquitable que les appelants profitent de l'absence de divulgation. Je ne suis pas d'accord. En l'espèce, les appelants, qui n'étaient à l'époque que des défendeurs éventuels, n'étaient pas tenus d'informer M. Ryan de l'existence d'un délai de prescription, de l'aider à intenter son action ou de l'aviser des conséquences du décès de l'une des parties. Il n'existe aucun rapport fiduciaire ou contractuel en l'espèce (contrairement à l'affaire Queen c. Cognos Inc., [1993] 1 R.C.S. 87). Les appelants n'étaient tenus ni de faire preuve de diligence raisonnable ni de divulguer quelque renseignement que ce soit.

Hence, there was no representation, no duty to speak, no intention to affect legal relations and no reliance in this case.

III. Conclusion

The legislature created an exception to the common law rule by enacting the Survival of Actions Act. It extended the rights of the parties to permit them to continue an action against a deceased. The relevant provision modifies the common law. It is not this Court's role to interfere with the scheme established by the legislature.

There are no reasons based on estoppel, or any other legal doctrine, to preclude Moore's estate or Cabot Insurance from relying on the Survival of Actions Act limitation period. Accordingly, I would allow the appeal on the issue of estoppel, affirm the decision of the Court of Appeal on the other issues, and strike the statement of claim, with costs throughout, at all levels of court.

APPENDIX

Limitations Act, S.N.L. 1995, c. L-16.1

5. [Limitation period 2 years] Following the expiration of 2 years after the date on which the right to do so arose, a person shall not bring an action

(a) for damages in respect of injury to a person or property, including economic loss arising from the injury whether based on contract, tort or statutory duty;

. . .

16. [Confirmation] (1) A confirmation of a cause of action occurs where a person

(a) acknowledges that cause of action, right or title of another person; or

(b) makes a payment in respect of that cause of action, right or title of another.

78 Il n'y avait donc, en l'espèce, aucune assertion, aucune obligation de parler, aucune intention de modifier les rapports juridiques ni aucun acte de confiance.

III. Conclusion

79 Le législateur a créé une exception à la règle de common law en édictant la Survival of Actions Act. Il a élargi la portée des droits des parties afin de leur permettre de poursuivre une action contre une personne décédée. La disposition pertinente modifie la common law. Il n'appartient pas à notre Cour de modifier le régime établi par le législateur.

80 Il n'y a aucune raison fondée sur la préclusion ou quelque autre règle juridique d'empêcher la succession de M. Moore ou Cabot Insurance d'invoquer le délai de prescription fixé par la Survival of Actions Act. Par conséquent, je suis d'avis d'accueillir le pourvoi en ce qui concerne la question de la préclusion, de confirmer la décision de la Cour d'appel relativement aux autres questions et de radier la déclaration, avec dépens dans toutes les cours.

ANNEXE

Limitations Act, S.N.L. 1995, ch. L-16.1

[TRADUCTION]

5. [Délai de prescription de 2 ans] Les actions suivantes se prescrivent par deux ans suivant la date à laquelle a pris naissance le droit de les intenter :

a) l'action en dommages-intérêts pour préjudice corporel ou matériel, y compris la perte économique découlant du préjudice, que ce soit pour un délit, une inexécution de contrat ou un manquement à une obligation légale;

. . .

16. [Confirmation] (1) Une cause d'action est confirmée si, selon le cas, une personne :

a) reconnaît cette cause d'action, ce droit ou ce titre appartenant à autrui;

b) effectue un paiement à l'égard de cette cause d'action, de ce droit ou de ce titre appartenant à autrui.

(2) Where a person against whom an action lies confirms that cause of action, the time before the date of that confirmation shall not count when determining the limitation period for a person having the benefit of the confirmation against the person bound by that confirmation.

(3) Subsection (2) applies only to a right of action where the confirmation is given before the expiration of the limitation period for that right of action.

. . .

(5) In order to be effective a confirmation must be in writing and signed by

(a) the person against whom that cause of action lies; or

(b) his or her agent

and given to the person or agent of the person having the benefit of that cause of action.

Survival of Actions Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, c. S-32

2. [Causes of action to survive] Actions and causes of action

(a) vested in a person who has died; or

(b) existing against a person who has died, shall survive for the benefit of or against his or her estate.

5. [Limitation of action] An action shall not be brought under this Act unless proceedings are started within 6 months after letters of probate or administration of the estate of the deceased have been granted and proceedings shall not be started in an action under this Act after the expiration of 1 year after the date of death of the deceased.

Appeal allowed with costs.

Solicitors for the appellants: Cox Hanson O'Reilly Matheson, St. John's.

Solicitors for the respondent: Curtis, Dawe, St. John's.

(2) En cas de confirmation, la période antérieure à la date de la confirmation est exclue du calcul de la prescription de l'action de la personne qui bénéficie de cette confirmation par rapport à celle qui est liée par celle-ci.

(3) Le paragraphe (2) ne vise un droit d'action que si la confirmation a lieu avant l'expiration du délai de prescription applicable à ce droit d'action.

. . .

(5) La confirmation est valide si elle est consignée dans un écrit, signée par l'une des personnes suivantes et remise à la personne qui bénéficie de cette cause d'action ou à son mandataire :

a) soit la personne visée par la cause d'action,

b) soit son mandataire.

Survival of Actions Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, ch. S-32

[TRADUCTION]

2. [Survie des causes d'action] Les actions et causes d'action :

a) appartenant à une personne décédée survivent au profit de sa succession;

b) existant contre une personne décédée survivent contre sa succession.

5. [Prescription des actions] Aucune action ne peut être intentée en vertu de la présente loi à moins que les procédures ne soient engagées dans les six mois suivant la délivrance de lettres d'homologation ou d'administration de la succession de la personne décédée, et, pour les besoins d'une action fondée sur la présente loi, les procédures ne doivent pas être engagées après l'expiration d'un an suivant la date du décès de la personne en question.

Pourvoi accueilli avec dépens.

Procureurs des appelants : Cox Hanson O'Reilly Matheson, St. John's.

Procureurs de l'intimé : Curtis, Dawe, St. John's.

In the Court of Appeal of Alberta

Citation: Agrium v Orbis Engineering Field Services, 2022 ABCA 266

Date: 20220808
Docket: 2101-0020AC
Registry: Calgary

Between:

Agrium, Inc.

Appellant

- and -

Orbis Engineering Field Services Ltd., Elliott Turbomachinery Canada Inc. and Elliott Company

Respondents

- and -

Colt Engineering Corporation, Worleyparsons Canada Services Ltd., ACM Automation Inc., Invensys Systems Canada, Inc., Schneider Electric Systems Canada Inc., Rockwell Automation, Inc. and Allen-Bradley

Not Parties to the Appeal

Corrected judgment: A corrigendum was issued on August 11, 2022; the corrections have been made to the text and the corrigendum is appended to this judgment.

The Court:

The Honourable Justice Thomas W. Wakeling
The Honourable Justice Michelle Crighton
The Honourable Justice Bernette Ho

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

Memorandum of Judgment of the Honourable Justice Crighton and the Honourable Justice Ho

Dissenting Memorandum of Judgment of the Honourable Justice Wakeling

Appeal from the Order by
The Honourable Justice N. Dilts
Pronounced the 22nd day of December, 2020
Filed the 6th day of May, 2021
(2020 ABQB 807; Docket: 1601-03869)

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

Memorandum of Judgment

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

The Majority:

I. Background

[1] The appellant Agrium, Inc. (Agrium) contracted with the respondent Orbis Engineering Field Services Ltd. (Orbis) and the respondents Elliott Turbomachinery Canada Inc. and Elliott Company (collectively Elliott) to provide specified work and services that are not germane to this appeal.

[2] What is significant to this appeal is the provision in the contract (the Agrium Contract) relating to the resolution of disputes:

> 28. PROPER LAW and DISPUTE RESOLUTION:
>
> (a) Unless otherwise stated on the face of [the Agrium Contract], [the Agrium Contract] shall for all purposes be construed and interpreted according to the laws of the Province of Alberta and the federal laws of Canada applicable therein, excluding reference to conflict of laws principles. Neither the Uniform Commercial Code, nor the United Nations Convention for the International Sale of Goods shall apply to [the Agrium Contract]. Any dispute relating to [the Agrium Contract] shall be resolved by arbitration in Calgary, Alberta, Canada, pursuant to the UNCITRAL Model Law and Rules. The courts having exclusive supervisory jurisdiction with respect to the matters relating to [the Agrium Contract] shall be the courts of the Province of Alberta.

[3] A dispute arose and rather than proceed to arbitration, Agrium commenced a civil action against Orbis and Elliott only days before the limitation period expired. Thereafter, Agrium served Orbis and Elliott mere days before the time for service would have lapsed. At no time between the loss and service of the statement of claim were Orbis or Elliott aware of the loss.

[4] By the time the civil claim was served on Orbis and Elliott, the time limit for commencing an arbitration proceeding had long expired.

[5] Orbis and Elliott defended the statement of claim alleging among other general defences that the contractual arbitration provision barred the action.

[6] Two years later, Orbis and Elliott applied to the master in chambers to strike the action against them.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[7] The master dismissed the Orbis and Elliott applications. The master recognized that undue delay could not ground a stay under the Arbitration Act, RSA 2000, c A-43, after the time for arbitration had elapsed, but instead relied on his supervisory jurisdiction to stay the action on grounds of waiver and attornment on the part of Orbis and Elliott.

[8] Orbis and Elliott appealed to a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench and Agrium applied to strike both appeals on the grounds that s 7(6) of the Arbitration Act barred appeals from the master's decision.

[9] The justice in chambers heard the Orbis and Elliott appeals together with Agrium's application to strike the appeals. She first dismissed Agrium's application to strike the appeals from the master: 2020 ABQB 807 at paras 21-31. Having made that determination, she then allowed Orbis and Elliott's appeals from the master, resulting in Agrium's civil action against them being struck: at paras 44-57.

[10] Largely for the reasons given by the chambers judge, we dismiss Agrium's appeal.

II. Issue on Appeal and Standard of Review

[11] As follows, two issues arise in this appeal:

1. whether the masters' decision refusing to stay the action is a decision under s 7 of the Arbitration Act; and

2. whether s 7(6) of the Arbitration Act bars an appeal from the master in chambers to a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench.

[12] The parties agree the chambers judge did not decide the first question. In the hearing before the panel, Orbis took no position on whether this Court should remit the question or decide it. Agrium and Elliott both agreed that if the panel accepts Agrium's argument that s 7(6) bars an appeal from the master to a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, this Court should nevertheless remit the first question to the court below for determination. Accordingly, if the panel decides that s 7(6) of the Arbitration Act bars an appeal from the master to a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, then the matter must be remitted to the Court of Queen's Bench to determine whether the master's decision is a decision under s 7(1) of the Arbitration Act.

[13] If the panel decides that s 7(6) does not bar an appeal from the master to a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench, Agrium does not appeal the chambers judge's findings on the merits and the appeal must be dismissed.

[14] It is important to recognize that the parties do not dispute there is a valid mandatory arbitration provision in the Agrium Contract that binds the parties. There is no issue relative to the arbitrability of the dispute and the parties do not dispute that the time for commencing arbitration proceedings has expired.

[15] There is no disagreement regarding the standard of review. The issue on appeal is a question of law that engages principles of statutory interpretation to which the standard of correctness applies: TELUS Communications Inc. v Wellman, 2019 SCC 19 at para 30, [2019] 2 SCR 144.

III. Analysis

[16] The chambers judge identified the applicable principles of statutory interpretation and considered the ordinary meaning of the words used in s 7(6) of the Arbitration Act within the legislative framework governing appeals from a master. That framework includes the Court of Queen's Bench Act, RSA 2000, c C-31, the Interpretation Act, RSA 2000, c I-8, and the Alberta Rules of Court, Alta Reg 124/2010.

[17] Section 7 of the Arbitration Act reads as follows:

> (1) If a party to an arbitration agreement commences a proceeding in a court in respect of a matter in dispute to be submitted to arbitration under the agreement, the court shall, on the application of another party to the arbitration agreement, stay the proceeding.
>
> (2) The court may refuse to stay the proceeding in only the following cases:
>
> > (a) a party entered into the arbitration agreement while under a legal incapacity;
> >
> > (b) the arbitration agreement is invalid;
> >
> > (c) the subject-matter of the dispute is not capable of being the subject of arbitration under Alberta law;
> >
> > (d) the application to stay the proceeding was brought with undue delay;
> >
> > (e) the matter in dispute is a proper one for default or summary judgment.
>
> (3) An arbitration of the matter in dispute may be commenced or continued while the application is before the court.
>
> (4) If the court refuses to stay the proceeding,
>
> > (a) no arbitration of the matter in dispute shall be commenced, and

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

> (b) an arbitration that has been commenced shall not be continued, and anything done in connection with the arbitration before the court's refusal is without effect.
>
> (5) The court may stay the proceeding with respect to the matters in dispute dealt with in the arbitration agreement and allow the proceeding to continue with respect to other matters if it finds that
>
> (a) the agreement deals with only some of the matters in dispute in respect of which the proceeding was commenced, and
>
> (b) it is reasonable to separate the matters in dispute dealt with in the agreement from the other matters.
>
> (6) There is no appeal from the court's decision under this section.

[18] Section 1(1)(c) of the Arbitration Act defines "court" as follows:

> "court" means,
>
> (i) in sections 6 and 7, the Court of Queen's Bench and the Provincial Court, and
>
> (ii) in all other sections, the Court of Queen's Bench.

[19] Section 28(1)(k) of the Interpretation Act defines the "Court of Queen's Bench" as the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta.

[20] Section 2 of the Interpretation Act states that the Interpretation Act applies "to every enactment whether enacted before or after the commencement of this Act."

[21] Section 12 of the Court of Queen's Bench Act states that "[a]n appeal lies to a judge in chambers from a decision of a master in chambers."

[22] Rule 6.14 of the Rules of Court states the following:

> Appeal from master's judgment or order
>
> (1) If a master makes a judgment or order, the applicant or respondent to the application may appeal the judgment or order to a judge.

[23] The chambers judge concluded the Court of Queen's Bench Act and the Arbitration Act were not in conflict, but rather could be interpreted in a manner that made one harmonious with the other without straining the language used in either. We agree with her analysis.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[24] While there are many recognized principles of statutory interpretation, the context will define the principle or principles that are the most relevant.

[25] We agree with Agrium that the words of the statute are "to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament." Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd. (Re), [1998] 1 SCR 27 at para 21, 1998 CanLII 837 (SCC).

[26] We also agree that courts should resist interpreting a statute in a way that overwhelms the statute's plain language: Re: Sound v Motion Picture Theatre Associations of Canada, 2012 SCC 38 at para 33, [2012] 2 SCR 376.

[27] As this case involves numerous pieces of legislation, it is also important to keep in mind the principles for harmonizing different statutes. In R v Ulybel Enterprises Ltd, 2001 SCC 56 at para 30, [2001] 2 SCR 867, the Supreme Court of Canada adopted Professor Sullivan's statement of those principles:

> …The presumptions of coherence and consistency apply not only to Acts dealing with the same subject but also, albeit with lesser force, to the entire body of statute law produced by a legislature. …Therefore, other things being equal, interpretations that minimize the possibility of conflict or incoherence among different enactments are preferred.

[28] It is also an important principle of statutory interpretation that conflict avoidance strategies such as the "specific overrides the general" or "reading legislation down in certain circumstances and liberally in others", should be avoided where no genuine conflict exists: see the discussion in Ruth Sullivan, Sullivan on the Construction of Statutes, 6th ed, (Markham, Ont: LexisNexis Canada Inc, 2014) at chapter 11. Here, Agrium's attempt to ignore the statutory right of appeal that exists between the two levels of decision making within the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta manufactures a conflict that does not necessarily exist.

[29] In the context of statutory interpretation, conflict is a narrow concept meaning the two acts under review cannot stand together and cannot both operate without interfering with the other. The Court in Toronto Railway Co. v Paget, (1909) 42 SCR 488 at 499, 1909 CanLII 10 (SCC) said this:

> It is not enough to exclude the application of the general Act that it deals somewhat differently with the same subject matter. It is not "inconsistent" unless the two provisions cannot stand together.

[30] It is also a recognized principle of statutory interpretation that legislation is presumed to have been enacted in compliance with the Constitution: Sullivan, at § 16.3. For over a hundred years, Alberta courts have characterized any deference to the decisions of provincially-appointed masters as fettering the discretionary jurisdiction of federally-appointed s 96 judges. As a result, the decision of a master in Alberta has always been subject to review by a s 96 judge, who has always heard the appeal on a de novo basis. See for example, the discussions in Polson Iron Works v Munns, (1915) 9 WWR 231, 1915 CanLII 340 (AB QB), Menduk v Gore Mutual Insurance Company, (1969) 67 WWR 573, 1969 CanLII 1069 (AB QB), Wright v Disposal Services Ltd., 8 AR 394, 1977 CanLII 619 (AB QB) at para 13, Willman v Coreman, 1979 ABCA 332 at para 20, 11 Alta LR (2d) 110 and Van Camp v Chrome Horse Motorcycle Inc., 2012 ABQB 175 at paras 15-31, 535 AR 271. At paragraph 29 in Van Camp the court states:

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

> … A rule of law based on the constitutional foundations of the respective jurisdictions of a Judge and a Master is not subject to change through an amendment to the Rules of Court.

To that we add that neither is that same rule of law subject to change through an implied amendment to a provincial statute.

[31] For these reasons, and those of the chambers judge, we decline to follow the reasoning in the Ontario decision of Wang v Mattamy Corporation, 2020 ONSC 7012, [2020] OJ No 5004. The courts in Ontario have not seen s 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 as prohibiting the province from appointing an officer of the court (a master) who may exercise some judicial functions. Thus, Ontario is more willing to give greater deference to a master's decisions, which includes permitting them to be the final word on certain types of decisions.

[32] Even if s 12 of the Court of Queen's Bench Act, which confers a right of appeal from a master to a justice of the same court, conflicts with the statutory prohibition in s 7(6) of the Arbitration Act as Agrium argues, we do not agree that the Arbitration Act is the more specific provision that would override the right of appeal in the Court of Queen's Bench Act. Rather, the provision that specifically addresses the right of appeal is that in the Court of Queen's Bench Act.

[33] We agree with the chambers judge that the two acts can be interpreted harmoniously without derogating from the rights conferred by one or the purpose intended by the other. An appeal is not available under s 7(6) of the Arbitration Act beyond the Court of Queen's Bench where the court's decision means the decision of a master that was either not appealed or the time for doing so has expired, or the decision of a justice of the Court of Queen's Bench having decided the issue. This interpretation respects the constitutional limitations on the master's decision, the statutory right of appeal in the Court of Queen's Bench Act, and the statutory intention that arbitration matters not become bogged down in multiple levels of appeal reflected in the Arbitration Act.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[34] For all of the above reasons, the appeal is dismissed and we find it unnecessary to consider the first issue.

Appeal heard on June 15, 2022

Memorandum filed at Calgary, Alberta
this 8th day of August, 2022

Crighton J.A.

Ho J.A.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

Wakeling, J.A. (dissenting):

I. Introduction

[35] This is an important statutory interpretation and constitutional case.

[36] Agrium, Inc. appeals orders[1] of Justice Dilts dismissing applications by Agrium to strike appeals by Orbis Engineering Field Services Ltd., Elliott Turbomachinery Canada Inc. and Elliott Company, on the ground that the appeals are prohibited by section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act.[2] The appeal judge allowed the appeals and struck Agrium's actions against the respondents.

[37] I would allow the appeal.

II. Questions Presented

[38] Each of Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies applied to the presiding master in chambers for an order striking or staying the actions Agrium commenced against them.[3] They invoked[4] section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act.[5] Master Prowse, after finding that Agrium, Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies were bound by a mandatory arbitration agreement, dismissed their applications.[6] He held that he had "the discretion to allow Agrium's action to continue in the face of the mandatory arbitration provisions in the contracts between the parties".[7]

[39] Master Prowse did not apply section 7(2) of the Arbitration Act[8] – the provision that directs an adjudicator to grant a stay unless one of five criteria applies – because the time for arbitration had elapsed.[9]

---

[1] Appeal Records 71 & 73.

[2] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43.

[3] Appeal Records 40 & 43.

[4] The recital of the order pronounced on January 20, 2020 and filed January 31, 2020 contained this passage: "Upon the application of the Defendant Orbis Engineering Field Services Ltd. … to stay or strike the Action against it under section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act …; And upon the application of the Defendants Elliott Turbomachinery Canada Inc. and Elliott Company … to stay or strike the Action against each of them under section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act … ." Appeal Record 57 (emphasis added).

[5] Id.

[6] Agrium, Inc. v. Colt Engineering Corp., 2020 ABQB 53, ¶¶ 12 & 13.

[7] Id. (heading).

[8] R.S.A. 2000, c. 43.

[9] Id. ¶ 27.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[40] Section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act states that "[t]here is no appeal from the court's decision under this section". Section 1(1)(c) of the Arbitration Act defines "court" as follows: "in sections 6 and 7, the Court of Queen's Bench and the Provincial Court".

[41] Is a decision of a master in chambers a decision of the Court of Queen's Bench?

[42] If so, was the order of Master Prowse pronounced on January 20, 2020 and filed January 31, 2020[10] a decision under section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act? What are the benchmarks of a "decision under this section"?

[43] If the order of Master Prowse was a "decision under this section", does section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act apply and a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal against Master Prowse's order?

[44] What is the effect of section 12 of the Court of Queen's Bench Act?[11] Section 12 states that "[a]n appeal lies to a judge in chambers from a decision of a master in chambers".

[45] Does section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act trump section 12 of the Court of Queen's Bench Act and preclude an appeal of Master Prowse's order under section 7(1) to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench?

[46] The respondents argue that section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867[12] – "The Governor General shall appoint the Judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts in each Province, except those of the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick" – deprives the Legislative Assembly of Alberta of the authority to make an order of a master in chambers under section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act final and not subject to appellate review by the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta – a superior court.

[47] Section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 preserves the integrity of superior courts and allows them to act as the guardians of the rule of law.

[48] Does section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 assist the respondents?

[49] If the Court of Queen's Bench had jurisdiction to hear an appeal against Master Prowse's order, did Justice Dilts make any reversible errors?

---

[10] Appeal Record 57.

[11] R.S.A. 2000, c. C-31.

[12] 30 & 31 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.).

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

III. Brief Answers

[50] The decision of a master in chambers is a decision of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta. Master Prowse's decision is a decision of the Court of Queen's Bench.

[51] There are four benchmarks of a "decision under this section". First, there must be an application under section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act.[13] Second, the moving and nonmoving parties must have agreed to submit their differences to arbitration. Third, the nonmoving party has commenced a court action against the moving party. Fourth, a judge or a master in chambers of the Court of Queen's Bench or a judge of The Provincial Court of Alberta must issue a decision – stay the action or dismiss the stay application.

[52] Master Prowse's order was a decision under section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act. The order's recital acknowledges that the applicants invoked section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act.[14] This is not debatable. And Master Prowse concluded that the parties were bound by an agreement to submit their disputes to arbitration. This is not debatable. He posed this question:[15] "Do I have the discretion to allow Agrium's action to continue in the face of the mandatory arbitration provisions in the contracts between the parties?" There was no doubt that Agrium had commenced actions against the moving parties and that Master Prowse dismissed their stay applications.

[53] Section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act is in play. Section 7(6) deprives a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench of his or her jurisdiction to hear an appeal from an order of a master in chambers under section 7(1). This is crystal clear. "No appeal" means "no appeal".

[54] Section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 does not assist the respondents. This is so even if section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867[16] precludes Alberta from adopting a legislative regime that makes a master in chambers' section 7(1) decision final.

[55] There are two reasons.

[56] First, section 40(1) of the Supreme Court Act[17] allows the party that is dissatisfied with the section 7(1) decision to apply for permission to appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada. This means that a master in chambers' section 7(1) decision is not final and unreviewable. The Supreme Court of Canada is a superior court. Alberta does not have the constitutional authority to regulate

---

[13] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43.

[14] Appeal Record 57.

[15] Agrium, Inc. v. Colt Engineering Corp., 2020 ABQB 53, ¶¶ 5, 12 & 13 (heading).

[16] 30 & 31 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.).

[17] R.S.C. 1985, c. S-26.

the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada – deny the Supreme Court the jurisdiction to hear leave to appeal applications arising from section 7(1) orders.

[57] Second, a good argument may be made that a party adversely affected by a section 7(1) order may apply to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta – a superior court – for judicial review. Section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act does not preclude judicial review of a section 7(1) order.

[58] It follows that Justice Dilts had no jurisdiction to hear the appeals of Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies and that her decision is of no effect.

[59] I would allow the appeal – Justice Dilts' order is set aside with the result that Master Prowse's order is in effect.

IV. Statement of Facts

A. Agrium Commenced a Claim Against Orbis Engineering and Others

[60] In 2013 Agrium engaged Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies to provide services in relation to upgrading its production plant in Carseland, Alberta.[18] The purchase orders that Agrium provided to Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies included an arbitration clause among its terms and conditions.[19]

[61] On March 22, 2014 there was a system failure at the production plant.[20]

[62] On March 18, 2016 Agrium commenced, in the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta, a claim against Orbis Engineering, the Elliott companies and seven other corporations that had been

[18] Statement of Claim filed March 18, 2016, ¶¶ 28-30, 58, 67 & 72. Appeal Record 7, 11, 14 & 15.

[19] Affidavit of Gabriel Salcedo (In Response to the Summary Dismissal Application of the Defendant, Orbis Engineering Field Services Ltd) filed November 1, 2019, ¶¶ 6, 8 & 10 & Exhibit C, Agrium Services Purchase Order dated June 17, 2013, Canadian Standard Purchasing Terms and Conditions ("28. PROPER LAW AND DISPUTE RESOLUTION (a) ... Any dispute relating to this Order shall be resolved by arbitration in Calgary, Alberta, Canada, pursuant to the UNCITRAL Model Law and Rules. The courts having exclusive supervisory jurisdiction with respect to the matters relating to this Order shall be the courts of the Province of Alberta. (b) Buyer [Agrium] shall include provisions within its other agreements which relate to this Order a dispute resolution provision substantially similar to that which is contained herein. Vendor [Orbis Engineering] shall participate, upon the request of Buyer, in any arbitration arising in connection with the Goods, the Services or this Order, as if the Vendor were a direct party to the issue in dispute"). Appellant's Extracts of Key Evidence 8 & 23 & Affidavit of Gabriel Salcedo (In Response to the Summary Dismissal Application of the Defendants, Elliott Turbomachinery Canada Inc. and Elliott Company) filed November 1, 2019, ¶ 6. Appellant's Extracts of Key Evidence 29.

[20] Statement of Claim filed March 18, 2016, ¶ 33. Appeal Record 7.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

involved in its facility upgrades seeking damages of just over $100 million for the resulting losses.[21]

[63] Around this time, the limitation period for invoking the arbitration process expired.[22]

[64] On March 14, 2017 Agrium served the statement of claim on Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies ex juris.[23]

[65] On May 25, 2018 Agrium requested a statement of defence within 60 days.[24]

[66] Orbis Engineering filed its defence on June 27, 2018, denying responsibility for the losses, alternatively claiming contribution and indemnity from the other defendants.[25]

[67] On June 28, 2018 Orbis Engineering amended its defence to primarily plead the mandatory arbitration provision in its agreement with Agrium. It claimed that the court did not have jurisdiction in respect of the claim and sought a stay pursuant to the Arbitration Act.[26]

[68] The Elliott companies filed their defence on July 9, 2018, denying liability and alternatively relying on the limitation of liability in the governing contract.[27] They later claimed contribution and indemnity from the codefendants.[28]

[69] On June 24, 2019 the Elliott companies applied for permission to amend their defence.[29] The amended defence filed January 20, 2020 primarily pleaded a mandatory arbitration clause in

---

[21] Id. ¶ 108. Appeal Record 22-23.

[22] Agrium Inc. v. Colt Engineering Corp., 2020 ABQB 807, ¶ 6 ("The parties agree that service of the Statement of Claim occurred after the expiry of the limitation period for commencing arbitration"). See Arbitration Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43, s. 51(1) ("The law with respect to limitation periods applies to an arbitration as if the arbitration were an action and a matter in dispute in the arbitration were a cause of action") & Limitations Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. L-12, s. 3(1) ("Subject to subsections (1.1) and (1.2) and sections 3.1 and 11, if a claimant does not seek a remedial order within (a) 2 years after the date on which the claimant first knew, or in the circumstances ought to have known, (i) that the injury for which the claimant seeks a remedial order had occurred, (ii) that the injury was attributable to conduct of the defendant, and (iii) that the injury, assuming liability on the part of the defendant, warrants bringing a proceeding, or (b) 10 years after the claim arose, whichever period expires first, the defendant, on pleading this Act as a defence, is entitled to immunity from liability in respect of the claim").

[23] Agrium Inc. v. Colt Engineering Corp., 2020 ABQB 807, ¶ 6.

[24] Id. ¶ 7.

[25] Statement of Defence filed June 27, 2018, ¶¶ 2-3 & 10. Appeal Record 26 & 27.

[26] Amended Statement of Defence filed June 28, 2018, ¶¶ 2 & 9. Appeal Record 28 & 30.

[27] Statement of Defence filed June 9, 2018, ¶¶ 9, 10, 14-16. Appeal Record 33 & 34.

[28] Agrium Inc. v. Colt Engineering Corp., 2020 ABQB 807, ¶ 9.

[29] Id.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

the terms and conditions that Elliott Turbomachinery provided to Agrium with its quotations – requiring arbitration in New York – and alternatively a mandatory arbitration clause in the terms and conditions that Agrium included in its purchase orders to Elliott Turbomachinery – requiring arbitration in Calgary under the UNCITRAL Model Law and Rules – submitting that the court accordingly lacks jurisdiction to hear Agrium's claim and asking that the action be stayed or struck.[30]

B. Master Prowse Permitted Agrium's Claim To Continue

[70] In 2019 each of Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies applied to have Agrium's action against them stayed or struck on the basis that the governing contracts mandated resolution by arbitration, the time for commencing arbitration had expired, and the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta had no jurisdiction to hear the action.[31] The Elliott companies added that the claims against it must also be stayed[32] if the arbitration is to take place in New York.

[71] Agrium asserted that Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies did not move promptly in their applications and that by participating in the litigation waived their right to arbitrate and attorned to the court's jurisdiction.[33]

[72] Master Prowse held that "undue delay under section 7(2) of the Arbitration Act cannot be used to stay an action under the Arbitration Act after the time for arbitration has elapsed".[34]

---

[30] Amended Statement of Defence filed January 20, 2020, ¶¶ 7, 8, 14 & 21. Appeal Record 36-39.

[31] Application of Orbis Engineering filed March 4, 2019, ¶¶ 5-7 and Application of Elliott Turbomachinery Canada, Inc. and Elliott Company filed June 21, 2019, ¶¶ 9-11. Appeal Record 41 & 45.

[32] Application of Elliott Turbomachinery Canada, Inc. and Elliott Company filed June 21, 2019, ¶ 12. Appeal Record 45.

[33] Agrium, Inc. v. Colt Engineering Corp., 2020 ABQB 53 (Master), ¶ 8.

[34] Id. ¶ 27. A court may stay a proceeding in The Provincial Court of Alberta or the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta under section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act even if the limitation period for the commencement of an arbitration has expired. The text of section 7 supports this conclusion. Section 7(1) unambiguously directs a court to stay a proceeding commenced by the nonmoving party in contravention of a binding arbitration agreement unless one of the five conditions set out in section 7(2) apply. The expiration of the limitation period governing the commencement of arbitration proceedings is not one of the five. If the Legislative Assembly of Alberta thought the expiration of the limitation period for the commencement of an arbitration proceeding a good reason to deny a stay it could have said so. And if the Legislative Assembly subsequently concludes that section 7(2) needs to be revised it can do so. A. Scalia & B. Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts 93, 94 & 96 (2012) ("The principle that a matter not covered is so obvious that it seems absurd to recite it. … The absent provision cannot be supplied by the courts. … Judicial amendment flatly contradicts democratic self-governance"). In addition, Justice Fruman's judgment in Agrium Inc. v. Babcock & Wilcox Canada Ltd., 2005 ABCA 82, ¶ 12; 11 C.P.C. 6th 108, 112 is consistent with this position: "In this case the parties used mandatory [arbitration] language and none of the s. 7(2) exceptions apply. Because the underlying arbitration is statute-barred, the statement of claim should be dismissed". This Court expressly approved Agrium Inc. v. Babcock & Wilcox Canada Ltd. in HOOPP Realty Inc. v. A.G. Clark Holdings Ltd., 2014

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[73] Master Prowse concluded that he had the discretion to consider whether Agrium's claim should continue notwithstanding the existence of mandatory arbitration provisions in the contracts between the parties.[35]

[74] The master determined that fairness was the controlling measure: "[W]hether in the circumstances it would be unfair to a plaintiff to allow a defendant to go back on its choice to participate in litigation".[36]

[75] Master Prowse noted[37] Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies' participation in the court process to date – including serving their defences and filing notices of claim against the codefendants – and the stage of those proceedings – no examinations yet took place and Agrium was in the process of preparing its document production – and concluded that[38] > given the 2 year or more delay in applying to stay or strike, and the participation in the proceedings (in particular, use of the proceedings to advance claims against other defendants) it would be unfair to Agrium to allow Orbis and Elliott to go back on their choice to participate in this litigation. Accordingly I dismiss the applications of Orbis and Elliott to stay or strike these proceedings against them.

C. Justice Dilts Struck Agrium's Claim

ABCA 20, ¶ 7; 31 C.L.R. 4th 173, 177, leave to appeal ref'd, [2014] S.C.C.A. No. 87 "The chambers judge correctly interpreted this Court's decision in Babcock & Wilcox, which holds that if the parties have agreed that they must arbitrate a dispute, but one party has issued a statement of claim and has not commenced arbitration within the limitation period for arbitration, then the court must strike out the claim". This answers the question Master Schlosser posed in Fath v. Quadrant Construction Ltd., 2019 ABQB 151, ¶¶ 17 & 32; 89 C.L.R. 4th 107, 114 & 121: "If a plaintiff has sued in time but has not sought arbitration, the question is whether the Court can allow the lawsuit to go ahead and, in particular, whether the Court can permit this based on the grounds in s. 7(2) of the Arbitration Act. Some cases suggest that the Court can consider whether the relief was sought in a timely way (ie. s. 7(2)(d)), or whether the lawsuit is suitable for summary disposition (ie. s. 7(2)(e)), even after the limitation has expired; though post-limitation, if the lawsuit cannot proceed, the remedy is to strike. Other cases say that you cannot. .... With respect, this divided dicta leaves me in considerable doubt about the applicability of the s. 7(2) factors in a post-limitation stay or strike application" (emphasis in original). See also B. Casey, Arbitration Law of Canada: Practice and Procedure 152 (3d ed. 2017) ("Limitation periods may apply in arbitration in the same manner as a court action. It is therefore important that counsel carefully consider whether or not an arbitration agreement applies to the dispute. If the wrong choice is made, for example an action is brought rather an arbitration, and the court later determines that the matter should be arbitrated, the limitation period may well have expired, leaving the claimant without a remedy") & K. McEwen & L. Herbst, Commercial Arbitration in Canada 3-31 (looseleaf rel. 17, 11/2020) ("If an action commenced by a plaintiff is stayed due to the applicability of an arbitration agreement and an applicable statutory limitation expires before an arbitration is commenced, the claim may be statute barred").

[35] Id. ¶¶ 12-13.

[36] Id. ¶ 30.

[37] Id. ¶¶ 41-45.

[38] Id. ¶ 51.

[76] Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies appealed Master Prowse's decision.[39]

[77] Agrium applied to strike the appeals.[40] It invoked section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act.[41]

[78] Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies argued that section 7(6) has no application to this case because the master's decision was not "under" section 7 of the Arbitration Act. They emphasized that Master Prowse relied on authority outside of the Arbitration Act to deny a stay and that the Arbitration Act cannot remove the authority of a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench to review a master's decision.[42]

[79] Justice Dilts accepted these arguments:[43]

> I am satisfied Elliott and Orbis are entitled to appeal the decision of the Master to a Justice of the Court of Queen's Bench. They are entitled to do so as a right if the Master's decision was not made under the Arbitration Act, and I am satisfied that they are entitled to do so notwithstanding s. 7(6) of the Arbitration Act. I say this looking at both the legislative framework governing appeals from a Master and the jurisprudence in Alberta relating to the interpretation of s. 7(6) of the Arbitration Act.
>
> ….
>
> If the Master's decision was made outside of s. 7 of the Arbitration Act, and instead was made based on some residual discretion inherent in the court, that decision can be appealed. Elliott and Orbis are entitled to access all the court processes, including appellate review: ... . If the Master's decision was made under s. 7 of the Arbitration Act, Elliott and Orbis are entitled to appeal that decision relying on s. 12 of the Court of Queen's Bench Act and the Rules of Court. Section 7(6) does not preclude an appeal of the Master's decision to a Justice in Chambers. Given this conclusion, I need not address whether the Master's decision was made under s. 7 of the Arbitration Act.

[80] In essence, Justice Dilts took the view that the bar in section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act[44] to appeals from decisions on applications to stay court proceedings in favor of arbitration should

---

[39] Notices of Appeal filed February 7, 2020. Appellant's Extracts of Key Evidence 45 & 47.

[40] Application to Strike Appeals filed February 14, 2020. Appeal Record 47.

[41] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43.

[42] Agrium Inc. v. Colt Engineering Corp., 2020 ABQB 807, ¶ 20.

[43] Id. ¶¶ 21 & 30.

[44] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43 ("There is no appeal from the court's decision under this section").

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

not, "[a]bsent express language, ... be read in a manner that would be inconsistent with ... [the] legislated right"[45] of appeal from a master's decision available under section 12 of the Court of Queen's Bench Act[46] and rule 6.14 of the Alberta Rules of Court.[47] While she accepted that a decision under section 7 made by a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench could not be appealed to the Court of Appeal, she held a decision of a master under section 7 could be appealed to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench.[48]

[81] Justice Dilts proceeded to consider the appeal on the merits. She concluded that the court has jurisdiction, as part of the supervisory function that it retains with respect to matters governed by arbitration agreements, to consider whether parties waived reliance on the arbitration clause or attorned to the court's jurisdiction regardless of whether the time to arbitrate has expired.[49]

[82] The chambers judge took the view that the analysis of waiver and attornment is not a fairness assessment as Master Prowse determined, nor is it undertaken as an analysis of undue delay that is a basis for refusing to grant a stay under section 7(2)(d) of the Arbitration Act.[50] Rather, she approached the inquiry in the context of waiver, and examined whether the defendants' conduct "indicate[d] the voluntary intention to forego reliance on the mandatory arbitration provision or an engagement ... in the merits of the [a]ction".[51]

[83] Justice Dilts determined that, on the facts of this case, the conduct of neither Orbis Engineering nor the Elliott companies was sufficient to make out a waiver of their right to arbitrate. Orbis Engineering pleaded the arbitration provision from the outset, putting Agrium on notice of its intention to rely on it, its actions in filing a defence and bringing contribution or indemnity claims against the other defendants were "largely defensive" and "are of little value in determining whether the defendant has signalled an agreement to litigate" given that rules of court required such steps be taken within a prescribed time, and applied to strike or stay the action within one year after filing its defence.[52] While the Elliott companies delayed relying on the arbitration

---

[45] Agrium Inc. v. Colt Engineering Corp., 2020 ABQB 807, ¶ 23.

[46] R.S.A. 2000, c. C-31 ("An appeal lies to a judge in chambers from a decision of a master in chambers").

[47] Alta. Reg. 124/2010 ("If a master makes a judgment or order, the applicant or respondent to the application may appeal the judgment or order to a judge").

[48] Agrium Inc. v. Colt Engineering Corp., 2020 ABQB 807, ¶ 25.

[49] Id. ¶¶ 44, 45, 47 & 48.

[50] Id. ¶ 53.

[51] Id. ¶¶ 54-55.

[52] Id. ¶ 55.

provision for over a year after filing their initial defence, this, she held, is not sufficient to constitute waiver of their right to arbitrate.[53]

[84] The orders pronounced on December 22, 2020 and filed May 6, 2021 dismissed Agrium's applications to strike the appeals against Master Prowse's orders, allowed the appeals and struck Agrium's claims against Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies.[54]

D. Agrium Appeals Justice Dilts' Order

[85] Agrium appealed Justice Dilts' order.[55]

V. Applicable Legislation and Arbitration Provisions

A. Arbitration Act

[86] The important sections of the Arbitration Act[56] are reproduced below:

> 1(1) In this Act,
>
> …
>
> (c) "court" means,
>
> (i) in sections 6 and 7, the Court of Queen's Bench and the Provincial Court, and
>
> (ii) in all other sections, the Court of Queen's Bench.
>
> …
>
> 3 The parties to an arbitration agreement may agree, expressly or by implication, to vary or exclude any provision of this Act except sections 5(2), 19, 39, 44(2), 45, 47 and 49.
>
> …

[53] Id. ¶ 56.

[54] Appeal Records 71 & 73.

[55] Civil Notice of Appeal filed January 20, 2021. Appeal Record 75.

[56] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43 (emphasis added).

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

6 No court may intervene in matters governed by this Act, except for the following purposes as provided by this Act:

(a) to assist the arbitration process;

(b) to ensure that an arbitration is carried on in accordance with the arbitration agreement;

(c) to prevent manifestly unfair or unequal treatment of a party to an arbitration agreement;

(d) to enforce awards.

7(1) If a party to an arbitration agreement commences a proceeding in a court in respect of a matter in dispute to be submitted to arbitration under the agreement, the court shall, on the application of another party to the arbitration agreement, stay the proceeding.

(2) The court may refuse to stay the proceeding in only the following cases:

(a) a party entered into the arbitration agreement while under a legal incapacity;

(b) the arbitration agreement is invalid;

(c) the subject-matter of the dispute is not capable of being the subject of arbitration under Alberta law;

(d) the application to stay the proceeding was brought with undue delay;

(e) the matter in dispute is a proper one for default or summary judgment.

(3) An arbitration of the matter in dispute may be commenced or continued while the application is before the court.

(4) If the court refuses to stay the proceeding,

(a) no arbitration of the matter in dispute shall be commenced, and

(b) an arbitration that has been commenced shall not be continued, and anything done in connection with the arbitration before the court's refusal is without effect.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

(5) The court may stay the proceeding with respect to the matters in dispute dealt with in the arbitration agreement and allow the proceeding to continue with respect to other matters if it finds that

(a) the agreement deals with only some of the matters in dispute in respect of which the proceeding was commenced, and

(b) it is reasonable to separate the matters in dispute dealt with in the agreement from the other matters.

(6) There is no appeal from the court's decision under this section.

B. Judicature Act

[87] Section 3(b)(iv)(A) of the Judicature Act[57] is in this form:

3 The Court of Appeal

…

(b) has jurisdiction and power, subject to the Rules of Court, to hear and determine

…

(iv) all appeals or applications in the nature of appeals respecting a judgment, order or decision of

(A) a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench … .

C. Court of Queen's Bench Act

[88] The key provisions of the Court of Queen's Bench Act,[58] as they read before June 15, 2022, follow:

---

[57] R.S.A. 2000, c. J-2.

[58] R.S.A. 2000, c. C-31. Effective June 15, 2022, masters in chambers are called "applications judges". Court of Queen's Bench Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. C-31, s. 27(1)(b) ("The Lieutenant Governor in Council may amend ... [section 8(1)] so that ... officers appointed under section 8(1) are called something other than masters in chambers") & O.C. 250/2022 ("The Lieutenant Governor in Council amends section 8(1) of the Court of Queen's Bench Act by striking out "masters in chambers" and substituting "applications judges"). Consequential amendments to the remainder of the Act will come into effect on September 1, 2022. Court of Queen's Bench (Various Regulations) Amendment Regulation, Alta. Reg. 137/2022, s. 3.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

8(1) The Lieutenant Governor in Council may appoint officers of the Court called masters in chambers.

…

12 An appeal lies to a judge in chambers from a decision of a master in chambers.

D. Alberta Rules of Court

[89] Rules 6.14(1) and 14.4(1) of the Alberta Rules of Court[59] are set out below:

6.14(1) If a master makes a judgment or order, the applicant or respondent to the application may appeal the judgment or order to a judge.

…

14.4(1) Except as otherwise provided, an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from the whole or any part of a decision of a Court of Queen's Bench judge sitting in court or chambers, or the verdict or finding of a jury.

E. Supreme Court Act

[90] Sections 2(1), in part, and 40(1) of the Supreme Court Act[60] read as follows:

2(1) In this Act,

"appeal" includes any proceeding to set aside or vary any judgment of the court appealed from;

…

"court appealed from" means the court from which the appeal is brought directly to the Supreme Court, whether that court is one of original jurisdiction or a court of appeal;

"final judgment" means any judgment, rule, order or decision that determines in whole or in part any substantive right of any of the parties in controversy in any judicial proceeding … .

[59] Alta. Reg. 124/2010.

[60] R.S.C. 1985, c. S-26.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

…

40(1) … [A]n appeal lies to the Supreme Court from any final or other judgment of the Federal Court of Appeal or of the highest court of final resort in a province, or a judge thereof, in which judgment can be had in the particular case sought to be appealed to the Supreme Court, whether or not leave to appeal to the Supreme Court has been refused by any other court, where, with respect to the particular case sought to be appealed, the Supreme Court is of the opinion that any question involved therein is, by reason of its public importance or the importance of any issue of law or any issue of mixed law and fact involved in that question, one that ought to be decided by the Supreme Court or is, for any other reason, of such a nature or significance as to warrant decision by it, and leave to appeal from that judgment is accordingly granted by the Supreme Court.

F. Constitution Act, 1867

[91] Portions of part VII of the Constitution Act, 1867[61] are set out below:

VII. Judicature

96 The Governor General shall appoint the Judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts in each Province, except those of the Courts of Probate in Nova Scotia and New Brunswick.

97 Until the Laws relative to Property and Civil Rights in Ontario, Nova Scotia, and New Brunswick, and the Procedure of the Courts in those Provinces, are made uniform, the Judges of the Courts of those Provinces appointed by the Governor General shall be selected from the respective Bars of those Provinces.

…

99 (1) Subject to subsection (2) of this section, the judges of the superior courts shall hold office during good behaviour, but shall be removable by the Governor General on address of the Senate and House of Commons.

…

100 The Salaries, Allowances, and Pensions of the Judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts … shall be fixed and provided by the Parliament of Canada.

[61] 30 & 31 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.).

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

G. Arbitration Clauses

[92] The arbitration clause in the governing contracts[62] between Agrium and each of Orbis Engineering and the Elliott companies[63] states as follows:[64]

> 28. PROPER LAW AND DISPUTE RESOLUTION
>
> (a) Unless otherwise stated on the face of this Order, this Order shall for all purposes be construed and interpreted according to the laws of the Province of Alberta and the federal laws of Canada applicable herein, excluding reference to conflicts of laws principles. Neither the Uniform Commercial Code, nor the United Nations Convention for the International Sale of Goods shall apply to this Order. Any dispute relating to this Order shall be resolved by arbitration in Calgary, Alberta, Canada, pursuant to the UNCITRAL Model Law and Rules. The courts having exclusive supervisory jurisdiction with respect to the matters relating to this Order shall be the courts of the Province of Alberta.
>
> (b) Buyer [Agrium] shall include provisions within its other agreements which relate to this Order a dispute resolution provision substantially similar to that which is contained herein. Vendor [Orbis Engineering] shall participate, upon the request of Buyer, in any arbitration arising in connection with the Goods, the Services or this Order, as if the Vendor were a direct party to the issue in dispute.

VI. Analysis

A. The Governing Statutory Interpretation Principles

[93] The proper approach to interpreting statutory provisions is not contentious.[65]

---

[62] The applicability or effect of the mandatory arbitration provision that Elliott Turbomachinery presented to Agrium with its quotations is not before the Court.

[63] Agrium Inc. v. Colt Engineering Corp., 2020 ABQB 807, ¶ 3; Affidavit of Gabriel Salcedo (In Response to the Summary Dismissal Application of the Defendant, Orbis Engineering Field Services Ltd.) filed November 1, 2019, ¶¶ 6 & 8 & Affidavit of Gabriel Salcedo (In Response to the Summary Dismissal Application of the Defendants, Elliott Turbomachinery Canada Inc. and Elliott Company) filed November 1, 2019, ¶ 6. Appellant's Extracts of Key Evidence 8 & 29.

[64] Affidavit of Gabriel Salcedo (In Response to the Summary Dismissal Application of the Defendant, Orbis Engineering Field Services Ltd.) filed November 1, 2019, Exhibit C, Services Purchase Order dated June 17, 2013, Canadian Standard Purchasing Terms and Conditions. Appellant's Extracts of Key Evidence 23.

[65] Alexis v. Alberta, 2020 ABCA 188, ¶ 42; 8 Alta. L.R. 7th 314, 333, leave to appeal ref'd, [2020] S.C.C.A. No. 227 per Wakeling & Greckol, JJ.A. ("The basic approach to a statutory interpretation problem is easy to state") & Re:Sound v. Motion Picture Theatre Assocs. of Canada, 2012 SCC 38, ¶ 25; [2012] 2 S.C.R. 376, 386 per LeBel, J. ("The main

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

1. Basic Rules

[94] "[A] tribunal must read the entire statute"[66] – other parts of a statute may affect the meaning of words in the contested provision – and statutes on the same subject matter.[67] An adjudicator must understand the comprehensive statutory regime.

[95] In reading statutory text a tribunal must be mindful that statutes "obviate some mischief, ... supply an inadequacy, ... [or] formulate a plan of government".[68] The goal is to identify a statutory purpose that animates the text.[69] issue in this appeal involves the application of well-known principles of statutory interpretation"). See Re Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd., [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27, 41 per Iacobucci, J. ("Elmer Driedger in Construction of Statutes (2d ed. 1983) best encapsulates the approach upon which I prefer to rely. … 'Today there is only one principle or approach, namely, the words of an Act are to be read in their entire context and in their grammatical and ordinary sense harmoniously with the scheme of the Act, the object of the Act, and the intention of Parliament'").

---

[66] Alexis v. Alberta, 2020 ABCA 188, ¶ 43; 8 Alta. L.R. 7th 314, 334, leave to appeal ref'd, [2020] S.C.C.A. No. 227 per Wakeling and Greckol, JJ.A. See also Re Rizzo & Rizzo Shoes Ltd., [1998] 1 S.C.R. 27, 41 per Iacobucci, J. ("the words of an Act are to be read in their entire context"); Estate of Hicklin v. Hicklin, 2019 ABCA 136, ¶ 49; [2019] 6 W.W.R. 238, 255 ("an adjudicator interpreting a … statute must read the whole … statute"); K & S Lake City Freighters Pty. Ltd. v. Gordon & Gotch Ltd., 1985 HCA 48; 157 C.L.R. 309, 315 per Mason, J. ("to read the section in isolation from the enactment of which it forms a part is to offend against the cardinal rule of statutory interpretation that requires the words of a statute to be read in their context"); Panama Ref. Co. v. Ryan, 293 U.S. 388, 439 (1935) per Cardozo, J. ("the meaning of a statute is to be looked for not in any single section, but in all the parts together, and in their relation to the end in view"); R. Sullivan, The Construction of Statutes 395 (7th ed. 2022) ("In looking at the Act as a whole, the courts focus on any provision or series of provisions that in their opinion is capable of shedding light on the interpretive problem at hand") & A. Scalia & B. Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts 167 (2012) ("Context is a primary determinant of meaning. A legal instrument typically contains many interrelated parts that make up the whole. The entirety of the document thus provides the context for each of its parts").

[67] Alexis v. Alberta, 2020 ABCA 188, n. 32; 8 Alta. L.R. 7th 314, n. 32, leave to appeal ref'd, [2020] S.C.C.A. No. 227 per Wakeling & Greckol, JJ.A. ("legislatures undoubtedly intend to create a network of obligations and responsibilities that are consistent and to use text in a consistent manner, even though the same subject matter is dealt with in more than one enactment"); Acciona Infrastructure Canada Inc. v. Posco Daewoo Corp., 2019 ABCA 241, ¶ 76; 91 Alta. L.R. 6th 59, 80-81 per Wakeling, J.A. ("It is necessary to examine the entire International Commercial Arbitration Act and its sister enactment, the Arbitration Act, in order to determine whether the enactments' use of the singular and plural forms are consistent. When does the plural include the singular or the singular include the plural?"); R. Sullivan, The Construction of Statutes 408 (7th ed. 2022) ("The provisions of related legislation are read in the context of others and the presumptions of coherence and consistent expression apply as if the provisions of these statutes were part of a single Act"); D. Pearce, Statutory Interpretation in Australia 119 (9th ed. 2019) ("reference may be made to similar statutes within the same jurisdiction in ascertaining the meaning of an Act before the court") & A. Scalia & B. Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts 252 (2012) ("laws dealing with the same subject … should if possible be interpreted harmoniously").

[68] Frankfurter, "Some Reflections on the Reading of Statutes", 47 Colum. L. Rev. 527, 538-39 (1947).

[69] Alexis v. Alberta, 2020 ABCA 188, ¶ 44; 8 Alta. L.R. 7th 314, 335 leave to appeal ref'd, [2020] S.C.C.A. No. 227 per Wakeling & Greckol, JJ.A. ("a tribunal must attempt to identify why the legislature passed the statute").

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[96] The completion of these necessary tasks puts the tribunal in the best position to undertake the next part of the protocol – "identify the potential permissible meanings [of the statute's words] taking into account their ordinary meanings".[70] In Alexis v. Alberta,[71] this Court stated that "[a] permissible meaning is one that a reasonable reader who uses the language correctly would give the text at the time of its production".

[97] It goes without saying that a tribunal may never give statutory text a meaning it "cannot possibly bear".[72]

[98] If the statutory text – a word, a phrase, or a sentence – bears only one plausible meaning, the interpretative inquiry is at an end.[73]

[99] Suppose city councillors receive numerous complaints that some residents are mowing their lawns after dark and disturbing the peace and quiet of neighborhoods to such a degree that

---

[70] Humphreys v. Trebilcock, 2017 ABCA 116, ¶ 109; [2017] 7 W.W.R. 343, 375, leave to appeal ref'd, [2017] S.C.C.A. No. 228. See The Queen v. D.A.I., 2012 SCC 5, ¶ 26; [2012] 1 S.C.R. 149, 166 per McLachlin, C.J. ("The first and cardinal principle of statutory interpretation is that one must look to the plain words of the provision"); The Queen v. Secretary of State for the Environment, Transport and the Regions, ex p. Spath, Holme Ltd., [2001] 2 A.C. 349, 397 per Lord Nicholls ("language is to be taken to bear its ordinary meaning in the general context of the statute") & Caminetti v. United States, 242 U.S. 470, 485-86 (1917) per Day, J. ("Statutory words are uniformly presumed, unless the contrary appears, to be used in their ordinary and usual sense, and with the meaning commonly attributed to them").

[71] 2020 ABCA 188, ¶ 47; 8 Alta. L.R. 7th 314, 335-36, leave to appeal ref'd, [2020] S.C.C.A. No. 227 per Wakeling & Greckol, JJ.A.

[72] Zuk v. Alberta Dental Ass'n, 2018 ABCA 270, ¶ 159; 426 D.L.R. 4th 496, 539, leave to appeal ref'd, [2018] S.C.C.A. No. 439. See A. Scalia & B. Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts 31 (2012) ("A fundamental rule of textual interpretation is that neither a word nor a sentence may be given a meaning that it cannot bear"); Alexis v. Alberta, 2020 ABCA 188, ¶ 73; 8 Alta. L.R. 7th 314, 343, leave to appeal ref'd, [2020] S.C.C.A. No. 227 per Wakeling & Greckol, JJ.A. ("Words cannot be given a meaning they cannot possibly bear"); Canada v. Canada North Group Inc., 2019 ABCA 314, ¶ 112; 437 D.L.R. 4th 122, 172, aff'd, 2021 SCC 30 per Wakeling, J.A. ("Fidelity to statutory text is a fundamental feature of statutory interpretation. Courts that ignore the text act as unauthorized legislators. They disregard the primacy of parliament and the paramountcy of the rule of law in our legal system") & SZTAL v. Minister of Immigration and Border Protection, [2017] HCA 34, ¶ 94; 347 A.L.R. 405, 429 per Edelman, J. ("where a statute employs a term in its ordinary sense there can be no warrant for the extension of the meaning beyond its ordinary sense"). E.g., Lafarge Canada Inc. v. City of Edmonton, 2013 ABCA 376, ¶ 31; 25 C.L.R. 4th 208, 216 ("To treat this Statement of Claim as a form of notification of arbitration under s. 23 does not amount to giving a liberal reading to s. 23 of the Act but bursts its conceptual boundaries").

[73] Thomson v. Canada, [1992] 1 S.C.R. 385, 399 per Cory, J. ("when the words used in the statute are clear and unambiguous, no other step is needed to identify the intention of Parliament") & Alexis v. Alberta, 2020 ABCA 188, ¶ 49; 8 Alta. L.R. 7th 314, 337, leave to appeal ref'd, [2020] S.C.C.A. No. 227 per Wakeling & Greckol, JJ.A. ("If the statutory text supports only one plausible or permissible meaning, the inquiry is complete. In this scenario there is no need to take into account the enactment's purpose"). See Canada v. Canada North Group Inc., 2019 ABCA 314, ¶ 124; 437 D.L.R. 4th 122, 176, aff'd, 2021 SCC 30 per Wakeling, J.A. ("A court has no authority to ignore or revise clear and unambiguous text that bears only one meaning just because the court considers the substantive norm embodied in the text to be unwise or dangerous").

children cannot sleep. Council passes a bylaw to ameliorate the problem: "A person in areas designated residential zones must not operate a lawn mower between 9:00 p.m. and 8:00 a.m. the next day". The bylaw does not define a lawn mower. A bylaw enforcement officer charges a person operating a reel push lawn mower with a contravention of this bylaw. The adjudicator convicts the accused, satisfied that a reel push lawn mower is a lawn mower – Webster's Third New International Dictionary of the English Language uses a picture of a reel push lawn mower to illustrate its definition: "lawn mower …: hand-operated or power-operated machine for cutting grass on lawns". This is the correct disposition. The bylaw prohibits in unambiguous terms the use of a lawn mower during prescribed hours. The text could have focused on gasoline-powered lawn mowers or lawn mowers that generate an amount of noise beyond a prescribed level but it did not.

[100] If statutory text may have more than one plausible meaning, the tribunal must "select the option that best advances the purpose that accounts for the text".[74] Section 10 of the Interpretation Act[75] confirms the merit of this part of the protocol: "An enactment shall be construed as being remedial, and shall be given the fair, large and liberal construction and interpretation that best ensures the attainment of its objects".

[101] To repeat, a tribunal must not rely on the purpose of an enactment to give text a meaning it cannot plausibly bear.[76]

[102] Suppose a workers' compensation act compensates a worker who suffers an injury arising out of and in the course of employment. Injury is defined to exclude a death attributable solely to the decision of a worker to take his or her own life. The board administering the act could not ignore the text's treatment of suicide and award compensation to the dependents of a worker who commits suicide because the board is convinced this is the right decision – the worker left a wife

---

[74] Humphreys v. Trebilcock, 2017 ABCA 116, ¶ 109; [2017] 7 W.W.R. 343, 375-76, leave to appeal ref'd, [2017] S.C.C.A. No. 228. See McBratney v. McBratney, 59 S.C.R. 550, 561 (1919) per Duff, J. ("where you have rival constructions of which the language of the statute is capable you must resort to the object ... of the statute ... [and adopt] the construction which best gives effect to the governing intention"); Celgene Corp. v. Canada, 2011 SCC 1, ¶ 21; [2011] 1 S.C.R. 3, 13 per Abella, J. ("The words, if clear, will dominate; if not, they yield to an interpretation that best meets the overriding purpose of the statute") & Hamilton v. Rathbone, 175 U.S. 414, 419 (1899) per Brown, J. ("where a statute is ... susceptible upon its face of two constructions, the court may look into ... the purpose intended to be accomplished by it, to determine its proper construction").

[75] R.S.A. 2000, c. I-8.

[76] Re:Sound v. Motion Picture Theatre Assocs. of Canada, 2012 SCC 38, ¶ 33; [2012] 2 S.C.R. 376, 389 per LeBel, J. ("Although statutes may be interpreted purposively, the interpretation must nevertheless be consistent with the words chosen by Parliament"); Shell Canada Ltd. v. Canada, [1999] 3 S.C.R. 622, 642 per McLachlin, J. ("the general object and spirit of the provision at issue can never supplant a court's duty to apply an unambiguous provision of the Act ... . Where the provision at issue is clear and unambiguous, its terms must simply be applied"); Covert v. Nova Scotia, [1980] 2 S.C.R. 774, 807 per Dickson, J. ("Although a court is entitled ... to look to the purpose of the Act ... it must still respect the actual words which express the legislative intention") & Alexis v. Alberta, 2020 ABCA 188, ¶ 74; 8 Alta. L.R. 7th 314, 343 leave to appeal ref'd, [2020] S.C.C.A. No. 227 per Wakeling & Greckol, JJ.A. ("A statute's purpose can never justify a court assigning to text a meaning it cannot bear").

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

and five children without a breadwinner. As Justice Stratas aptly explained, "[adjudicators] ... are bound by the legislation. They must take it as it is. They may not insert into it the meaning that they want".[77] Purpose never trumps text.[78]

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

2. Presumptions

[103] On occasion, consideration of a statutory interpretation presumption assists in resolving a contest as to the meaning of a statutory provision.

[104] This is the case here.

[105] Professor Sullivan states that "[i]t is presumed that the legislature intends to comply with any and all limits on its jurisdiction".[79] Justice Scalia and Professor Garner noted that "[t]he presumption of validity disfavors interpretations that would nullify the provision or the entire instrument – for example, an interpretation that would cause ... a statute to be unconstitutional".[80]

[106] The Queen v. McKay[81] illustrates this presumption. A Township of Etobicoke bylaw prohibited a residential property owner from displaying a sign not expressly authorized by the bylaw – a for-sale or no-trespassing sign, for example, were expressly authorized.

[107] During a federal election, the McKays, Etobicoke residential property owners, displayed a small election sign endorsing a federal New Democratic Party candidate. They were charged with and convicted of breaching Etobicoke's no-sign bylaw.

---

[77] Williams v. Canada, 2017 FCA 252, ¶ 50; 417 D.L.R. 4th 173, 189 per Stratas, J.A. See Alberta v. McGeady, 2014 ABQB 104, ¶ 23; [2014] 7 W.W.R. 559, 571, aff'd, 2015 ABCA 54, leave to app. ref'd, [2015] S.C.C.A. No. 91 per Wakeling, J. ("No ... decision maker can ignore substantive statutory provisions because it believes [the statutory provisions produce] ... unfair results and adopt another norm which it is satisfied produces a more satisfactory result").

[78] Weir-Jones Technical Services Inc. v. Purolator Courier Ltd., 2019 ABCA 49, ¶ 190; 442 D.L.R. 4th 9, 125 per Wakeling, J.A. See A. Scalia & B. Garner, Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts 57 (2012) ("purpose … cannot be used to contradict text or to supplement it. Purpose sheds light only on deciding which of various textually permissible meanings should be adopted") (emphasis in original).

[79] R. Sullivan, The Construction of Statutes 516 (7th ed. 2022).

[80] Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts 66 (2012).

[81] [1965] S.C.R. 798. See also The Queen v. Sharpe, 2001 SCC 2, ¶ 33; [2001] 1 S.C.R. 45, 75 per McLachlin, C.J. ("If a legislative provision can be read both in a way that is constitutional and in a way that is not, the former reading should be adopted"); Slaight Communications Inc. v. Davidson, [1989] 1 S.C.R. 1038, 1078 per Lamer, J. ("this Court ... should ... not interpret legislation that is open to more than one interpretation so as to make it inconsistent with the Charter and hence of no force or effect. Legislation conferring an imprecise discretion must therefore be interpreted as not allowing the Charter rights to be infringed") & Panama Ref. Co. v. Ryan, 293 U.S. 388, 439 (1935) per Cardozo, J. ("when a statute is reasonably susceptible of two interpretations, by one of which it is unconstitutional and by the other valid, the court prefers the meaning that preserves to the meaning that destroys").

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[108] The Supreme Court of Canada, satisfied that Etobicoke had no authority to regulate the use of federal election signs,[82] invoked the presumption in favor of validity – "if words in a statute are fairly susceptible of two constructions of which one will result in the statute being intra vires and the other will have the contrary result the former is to be adopted"[83] – and acquitted the McKays. There were two options – a federal election sign is either a sign captured by the bylaw because the text of the bylaw utilizes general terms or it is not, because the municipality has no authority to regulate federal election signs and it is presumed the municipality would not enact an ultra vires bylaw.

[109] Had the Etobicoke Bylaw expressly prohibited a residential property owner from displaying a sign during a federal election identifying the property owner as a supporter of a candidate, the property owner, if charged with a contravention of the bylaw, would have been forced to challenge the constitutionality of the bylaw.[84] The presumption in favor of validity would not have assisted the property owner – there was no plausible construction that was constitutional.

B. Section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act Prohibits Appeals Against an Order of a Master in Chambers Under Section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act to a Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta

1. The Purpose of the Arbitration Act

[110] A review of the Arbitration Act[85] as a whole makes it very clear that the Act recognizes the value of arbitration as a desirable dispute resolution option and directs courts to do what is required to make the arbitration process efficacious and do nothing that will impair the efficaciousness of the arbitration process.[86] Doing so furthers the two principles underlying arbitration legislation:

---

[82] The Queen v. McKay, [1965] S.C.R. 798, 804 per Cartwright, J.

[83] Id.

[84] The Queen v. Conway, 2010 SCC 22, ¶ 97; [2010] 1 S.C.R. 765, 810 ("barring a constitutional challenge to the legislation, no judicial fiat can overrule Parliament's clear expression of intent").

[85] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43.

[86] ENMAX Energy Corp. v. TransAlta Generation Partnership, 2022 ABCA 206, ¶ 29 ("The overarching purpose of arbitration legislation is to promote adherence to agreements, efficiency, and fairness and to lend credibility to an important dispute resolution process: ... . Arbitrations are intended to provide a faster and less expensive process to resolve disputes") & B. Casey, Arbitration Law of Canada: Practice and Procedure 319-20 (3d ed. 2017) ("All of the Domestic and International Acts start with the basic proposition that no court is to intervene in matters governed by the respective Act, except as the Act provides. ... The clear mandatory language displaces the concept that the courts have an overriding or inherent supervisory jurisdiction over arbitration tribunals. .... The courts have four general roles in the arbitration process: 1. Requiring parties to honour their obligations under arbitration agreements; 2. Supervising the conduct of the arbitration and the arbitrators to the extent permitted by law, if the place of arbitration is within the jurisdiction of the court; 3. Where requested, providing assistance in the conduct of the arbitration, usually, but not necessarily, when the place of arbitration is within the jurisdiction of the court; and 4. Enforcing arbitral awards regardless of where they were made").

parties should be permitted to determine for themselves the dispute resolution mechanism they wish to use and ought to be held to that agreement, and when they choose arbitration courts should be minimally involved[87] in that process.[88]

[111] Accordingly, the Arbitration Act does not bestow a prominent role on the courts. This Court's judgment in Lamb v. AlanRidge Homes Ltd.[89] confirms this: "[S]ection 7(6) reflects an important policy consideration, namely that the process of determining whether the parties should proceed with arbitration, or legal proceedings, should not become bogged down by resort to the appeal process".

[112] Section 6 of the Arbitration Act confirms the limited role of the courts:

> 6 No court may intervene in matters governed by this Act, except for the following purposes as provided by this Act:
>
> (a) to assist the arbitration process;

---

[87] B. Casey, Arbitration Law of Canada: Practice and Procedure 319 (3d ed. 2017) ("While many in the arbitration field speak of court 'intervention', the courts in Canada, for the most part, have come to recognize that commercial arbitration has evolved to become an important dispute resolution mechanism and today it is more appropriate to speak in terms of court 'involvement' where necessary to facilitate the arbitral process. Courts and arbitral tribunals have both come to recognize the need for and the contribution of the other. Together ... [they] provide a sophisticated regime for the resolution of commercial disputes in Canada").

[88] TELUS Communications Inc. v. Wellman, 2019 SCC 19, ¶¶ 52 & 55; [2019] 2 S.C.R. 144, 178 & 179 per Moldaver, J. ("The policy that parties to a valid arbitration agreement should abide by their agreement gives effect to the concept of party autonomy — which, in the arbitration context, stands for the principle that parties should generally be allowed to craft their own dispute resolution mechanism through consensual agreement ... . The policy ... goes hand in hand with the principle of limited court intervention in arbitration matters. This latter principle finds expression throughout modern Canadian arbitration legislation ... and has been described as a 'fundamental principle underlying modern arbitration law' ... . This principle is embedded most visibly in ss. 6 and 7 of the Arbitration Act") & Alberta Law Reform Institute, Arbitration Act*:* Stay and Appeal Issues Final Report (2013) v ("ALRI reaffirms the two fundamental principles underlying the Alberta Act: the principle of party control and the principle of restricted court intervention"), ¶¶ 10, 12 & 14 ("The law of arbitration rests on the principle of party control. The parties' freedom to contract governs the arbitration process and must be respected. As a general rule, party control means that the parties can make whatever agreement they want concerning what is to be arbitrated, how issues will be identified, how the arbitrator will be chosen and what the rules of the arbitration will be. The parties agree to participate in the arbitration. .... Party control is a fundamental principle underlying the Alberta Act. .... In the Alberta Act and Uniform Act, the principle of party control is balanced against the principle of equal and fair treatment. Party control should be overridden only when needed to ensure equal treatment and fairness between the parties") & 19 ("Another fundamental principle underlying modern arbitration law is that court involvement or intervention in the arbitration process should be strictly limited. In many ways, this principle is a counterpart to the principle of party control. If parties choose to resolve their disputes privately outside the public court system, they should be left to that choice and not be subject to court intervention, except as needed to determine validity of the arbitration agreement or to ensure standards of basic procedural fairness for the arbitral process").

[89] 2009 ABCA 343, ¶ 14; 312 D.L.R. 4th 719, 723, leave to app. ref'd, [2009] S.C.C.A. No. 520.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

> (b) to ensure that an arbitration is carried on in accordance with the arbitration agreement;
>
> (c) to prevent manifestly unfair or unequal treatment of a party to an arbitration agreement;
>
> (d) to enforce awards.

[113] As Justice Moldaver recently observed,[90] "[section] 6 [of Ontario's Arbitration Act] signals that courts are generally to take a 'hands off' approach to matters governed by the Arbitration Act". This applies equally to Alberta's legislation.[91]

[114] Section 7 also makes it clear that parties that have agreed to submit their disputes to arbitration can expect a court, in the absence of exceptional circumstances catalogued in section 7(2), to order them to honor their commitments.[92] This a court does by staying an action.[93]

[115] Section 7(6) plays an important role in ensuring that courts do no more than is necessary to ensure the integrity of an arbitration agreement. While a party may invoke section 7(1) claiming that it and the nonmoving party have agreed to arbitrate their disputes, the Act allows only the original court to determine the merits of a stay application.[94] By denying appeals of section 7

---

[90] TELUS Communications Inc. v. Wellman, 2019 SCC 19, ¶ 56; [2019] 2 S.C.R. 144, 180 per Moldaver, J. Section 6 of Ontario's Arbitration Act, S.O. 1991, c. 17, mirrors Alberta's legislation: "No court shall intervene in matters governed by this Act, except for the following purposes, in accordance with this Act: 1. To assist the conducting of arbitrations. 2. To ensure that arbitrations are conducted in accordance with arbitration agreements. 3. To prevent unequal or unfair treatment of parties to arbitration agreements. 4. To enforce awards".

[91] Alberta Law Reform Institute, Arbitration Act*:* Stay and Appeal Issues Final Report ¶ 21 (2013) ("One of the Alberta Act's main features is the statutory enshrinement of the fundamental principle of restricted court intervention. Section 6 prohibits court intervention except for specified purposes as provided by the Act. This principle is further reflected in restricted court authority to refuse a stay of court proceedings under section 7 and to hear appeals under section 44").

[92] Id. ¶ 26 ("If a party to an arbitration agreement commences a court proceeding regarding a dispute covered by that agreement, the Alberta Act is designed to force that party to honour the agreement to arbitrate, except in very limited and specified circumstances [as set out in section 7]").

[93] TELUS Communications Inc. v. Wellman, 2019 SCC 19, ¶ 51; [2019] 2 S.C.R. 144, 177-78 per Moldaver, J. ("Issuing a stay of court proceedings is one of the ways in which courts may give effect to the policy that the parties to a valid arbitration agreement should abide by their agreement. ... [A] stay of court proceedings is simply 'an indirect method of enforcing an arbitration agreement'").

[94] The Alberta Law Reform Institute confirmed the desirability of its approach. Alberta Law Reform Institute, Arbitration Act*:* Stay and Appeal Issues Final Report ¶¶ 85-88 (2013) ("Section 7(6) of the Alberta Act provides that a Court of Queen's Bench decision under section 7 cannot be appealed to the Court of Appeal. Case law modifies this absolute prohibition, however, by providing that an appeal is not barred where a stay is refused because the arbitration agreement is held to be invalid or otherwise inapplicable. If the appellate court reaches the contrary decision and holds that the arbitration agreement is indeed valid and applicable, the case will then be remitted to the lower court to decide decisions made by a master in chambers or a judge of The Provincial Court of Alberta to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench or a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta to the Court of Appeal, the Act directs parties to abide by the finding of the original decision maker asked to determine if the nonmoving party must be held to its promise to arbitrate disputes.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

2. Permissible Meanings of Section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act

a. The Meaning of Section 7(6) Is Indisputable

[116] Section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act[95] – "[t]here is no appeal from a court's decision under this section" – indisputably states that a party to an agreement that contains a mandatory arbitration the stay application. That stay decision cannot then be appealed. A respondent proposed that section 7(6) be amended to allow an appeal, with leave, of any stay decision. The respondent submitted that this would allow the Court of Appeal 'to clarify legal differences arising amongst Queen's Bench judges, without the need for legislative reform.' No modern Canadian arbitration statute provides for an appeal of a stay decision. ... The policy in this area uniformly curtails appeals in the interest of finality and preventing delay in the arbitral process. The Supreme Court of Canada would more than likely respect this policy as well. ALRI does not support broadening section 7(6) to provide a general ability to appeal stay decisions"). Cf. Uniform Law Conference of Canada, Uniform Arbitration Act (2016), s. 7(7) ("A party may appeal a decision of a court under this section [Stay of court proceedings]") & 6 ("Commentary: ... Subsections 7(5) and (6) of the previous Uniform Arbitration Act ... suggests that where a court finds that it is not 'reasonable' to separate matters required to be arbitrated from those not required to be arbitrated, the court could refuse a stay, and that the court's finding on that issue is final and binding. The new text deletes subsections 7(5) and (6). This is consistent with the approach recommended by the Alberta Law Reform Institute").

---

[95] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43. See also The Arbitration Act, 1992, S.S. 1992, c. A-24.1, s. 8(6) ("There is no appeal from the court's decision pursuant to this section"); The Arbitration Act, C.C.S.M., c. A120, s. 7(6) ("There is no appeal from the court's decision under this section"); Arbitration Act, 1991, S.O. 1991, c. 17, s. 7(6) ("There is no appeal from the court's decision"); Arbitration Act, R.S.N.B. 2014, c. 100, s. 7(6) ("There is no appeal from the court's decision"); Arbitration Ordinance, 2011 H.K.L. No. 38, s. 20(8) ("A decision of the court to refer the parties to arbitration under – (a) article 8 of the UNCITRAL Model Law, given effect to by subsection (1); or (b) subsection (2), is not subject to appeal. (9) The leave of the court making a decision to refuse to refer the parties to arbitration under – (a) article 8 of the UNCITRAL Model Law ... is required for any appeal from that decision") & Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. § 3 ("Stay of proceedings where issue therein referable to arbitration. If any suit or proceeding be brought in any of the courts of the United States upon any issue referable to arbitration under an agreement in writing for such arbitration, the court in which such suit is pending, upon being satisfied that the issue involved in such suit or proceeding is referable to arbitration under such an agreement, shall on application of one of the parties stay the trial of the action until such arbitration has been had in accordance with the terms of the agreement, providing the applicant for the stay is not in default in proceeding with such arbitration") & § 16 ("Appeals ... (b) Except as otherwise provided in section 1292(b) of title 28, an appeal may not be taken from an interlocutory order – (1) granting a stay of any action under section 3 of this title"). With the exception of British Columbia and Quebec, those provinces that do not bar appeals of stay decisions appear to have retained the stay application language found in the Arbitration Act, 1889, c. 49, s. 4 (U.K.) ("If any party to a submission, or any person claiming through or under him, commences any legal proceedings in any court against any other party to the submission, or any person claiming through or under him, in respect of any matter agreed to be referred, any party to such legal proceedings may at any time after appearance, and before delivering any pleadings or taking any other steps in the proceedings, apply to that court to stay the proceedings, and that court or a judge thereof if satisfied that there is no sufficient reason why the matter should not be referred in accordance with the submission, and that the applicant was, at the time when the proceedings were commenced, and still remains, ready and willing to do all things necessary to the proper conduct of the arbitration, may make an order provision and is either the moving or nonmoving party to an application for a stay of a court action under section 7(1) may not appeal an order adverse to its interests made by a judge of The Provincial Court of Alberta, a master in chambers or a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta to a court established by an enactment of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta – a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta[96] or the Court of Appeal of Alberta.[97]

b. Key Section 7(6) Queries

[117] Three questions must be asked when considering the effect of section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act.

i. A Decision of a Master Is a Decision of the Court of Queen's Bench

[118] Is the decision of a master in chambers of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta a "decision" of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta?

[119] It is.

[120] The Court of Queen's Bench Act[98] stipulates that masters in chambers are "officers of the court". The fact that masters in chambers are not judges[99] of the Court of Queen's Bench does not mean that their decisions are not decisions of the Court of Queen's Bench.

---

staying the proceedings") (emphasis added). See Arbitration Act, R.S.N.S. 1989, c. 19, s. 7; Arbitration Act, R.S.P.E.I. 1988, c. A-16, s. 7; Arbitration Act, R.S.N.L. 1990, c. A-14, s. 4; Arbitration Act, R.S.Y. 2002, c. 8, s. 9; Arbitration Act, R.S.N.W.T. 1988, c. A-5, s. 10(2) & Arbitration Act, R.S.N.W.T. 1988, c. A-5, s. 10(2). Prince Edward Island enacted the Arbitration Act, S.P.E.I. 1996, c. 4, repealing the current act, but this new act has not been proclaimed. Prince Edward Island, Table of Public Acts (updated May 2022) 7. It introduced Bill 50, setting out a new arbitration act, that was first read on February 22, 2022. Section 6(7) of that act provides that "[a] party may appeal a decision of the court under this section".

[96] Court of Queen's Bench Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. C-31, s. 2(1).

[97] Court of Appeal Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. C-30.

[98] R.S.A. 2000, c. C-31, s. 8(1).

[99] The Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta "consists of ... 74 other judges, who shall be called justices of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta". Court of Queen's Bench Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. C-31, s. 3(1)(c). A specific judge of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta is properly referred to as "Justice Smith". See S. Bigelow, Legal Etiquette and Court-Room Decorum 9 (1955) ("[A high court judge] should never be addressed or referred to as 'Judge Jones', an unpardonable error, although intimately, he may be called 'Judge'"). "Judge" or "judges" are the proper terms if the reference is not to a specific judge or judges of the Court of Queen's Bench. E.g., Court of Queen's Bench Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. C-31, ss. 3-7, 7.1, 9, 12, 13, 24, 24.1 & 26 & Alberta Rules of Court, Alta. Reg. 124/2010, rr. 1.6, 4.13-.18, 4.21, 9.4 & 14.4.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

ii. A Section 7 Decision Has Four Components

[121] What is a "decision under this section"?

[122] This is not a challenging query.

[123] Section 7 of the Arbitration Act[100] answers this question.

[124] A "decision under this section" has four components.

[125] First, there must be an application under section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act.[101]

[126] Second, the moving and nonmoving parties must have agreed to submit a difference the subject of the court proceeding to arbitration.[102]

---

[100] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43.

[101] Hnatiuk v. Assured Developments Ltd., 2012 ABCA 97, ¶ 40; 15 C.L.R. 4th 28, 38 ("The duty in s 7(1) of the Arbitration Act to stay the suit in favor of arbitration, applies only if that is sought 'on the application of another party to the arbitration agreement'. Here no party moved for a stay, even at trial"). The fact that the applicant invoked section 7 is not, by itself, determinative. But it is an essential criterion. Cf. Toronto Standard Condominium Corp. No. 1628 v. Toronto Standard Condominium Corp. No. 1636, 2020 ONCA 612, ¶ 91; 454 D.L.R. 4th 126, 154 per Jamal, J.A. (" I would ... reject ... [the] proposition, that s. 7(6) bars an appeal from any motion brought under s. 7. Section 7(6) refers to a 'decision', not to 'a motion brought', under s. 7. To state the obvious, a motion may be brought on one statutory basis, but the court's decision may be made on a different basis. Citing s. 7 in a notice of motion does not bar an appeal to this court. What matters is the statutory basis of the motion judge's 'decision' – whether the court's decision was made under s. 7") (emphasis in original).

[102] A.G. Clark Holdings Ltd. v. HOOPP Realty Inc., 2013 ABCA 101, ¶¶ 3 & 13; 361 D.L.R. 4th 101, 105 & 107 ("If the Agreement provides for the mandatory arbitration of disputes, then pursuant to s 7(1) of the Arbitration Act, HOOPP's court proceeding must be stayed to allow the arbitration to proceed (subject to the court's discretion to refuse to stay the proceeding in certain circumstances set out elsewhere in s 7). …. [I]f the motion judge holds there is no applicable arbitration agreement upon which the proceedings could be stayed, then s 7(6) cannot be successfully invoked to bar an appeal"); Lafarge Canada Inc. v. City of Edmonton, 2013 ABCA 376, ¶ 23; 25 C.L.R. 4th 208, 214 ("Whether an agreement contains a mandatory and relevant arbitration clause is a matter of contractual interpretation and has implications, inter alia, for whether the appeal bar in s. 7(6) of the Arbitration Act applies to the situation"); Federal Arbitration Act, 9 U.S.C. § 16(b)(1) ("Except as otherwise provided in section 1292(b) of title 28, an appeal may not be taken from an interlocutory order … granting a stay of any action under section 3 of this title"); Eggiman v. Martin, 2019 ONCA 974, ¶ 8, leave to appeal ref'd, [2020] S.C.C.A. No. 44 ("There is no appeal to this court from the order of the motion judge. Section 7(6) is very clear on this point. If it is determined that the arbitration provision applies to the issue that is raised in the proceeding, and thus s. 7 is invoked, then s. 7(6) precludes any appeal from the decision rendered respecting the motion to stay, whether that order grants or refuses the stay"); Abbey Resources Corp. v. Andjelic Land Inc., 2020 SKCA 125, ¶ 22 per Richards, C.J. ("The trial judge concluded that the arbitration clauses in the leases between Abbey and Andjelic did not apply in the circumstances at hand. As a result, he did not make a 'decision pursuant to this section' as per s. 8(6) of the Arbitration Act. Abbey is therefore not barred from pursuing this appeal") (emphasis added); Brown v. Murphy, 59 O.R. 3d 404, 408 (C.A. 2002) per Charron, J.A. ("a decision by the motions court that a matter was not subject to arbitration under the terms of the arbitration agreement fell outside the scope of s. 7 and a right of appeal lay to this court from that decision") (emphasis added) & Huras v.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[127] If a court in a section 7 application determines that the parties have agreed to submit all the differences the subject of the court proceeding to arbitration and stays the court proceeding, the order staying the court proceeding is not appealable.[103]

[128] Suppose P, a prominent professional athlete, and L, a lawyer, enter into an agency agreement whereby P agrees to retain L to negotiate P's employment contract with X and endorsement agreements for a fee dependent upon a number of complex variables. Both P and L agree to submit any differences relating to fees L earns under the agreement to arbitrator W for final resolution. L successfully negotiates P's employment contract with X and endorsement contracts with an automobile manufacturer, a watchmaker, a clothier, a distiller, a hotelier, and others. P and L cannot agree on the fee P must pay L for the automobile manufacturer and watchmaker endorsement contracts and L sues P. P invokes section 7 of the Arbitration Act and applies to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench for a stay of L's proceeding. The court orders a stay – L's claim is a difference covered by their agency agreement and must be submitted to arbitration. Section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act applies. The Court of Appeal has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal by L.

[129] The opposite would be the case – the order is subject to appeal – if the Court of Queen's Bench determined that none of the differences the subject of a court proceeding were a difference under an arbitration agreement and dismissed a stay application.[104]

[130] Suppose L told a newspaper reporter that P abused his wife and used cocaine. The reporter's newspaper published these allegations. They were widely circulated. As a result, the automobile manufacturer and the watchmaker cancelled their endorsement contracts with P. P sues

---

Primerica Financial Services Ltd., 137 O.A.C. 79, ¶ 10 (2000) ("Where there is no arbitration clause, the Arbitration Act, 1991 has no application, or putting it another way, the dispute lies beyond the scope of s. 7. It follows that if the court has decided that the Act is not applicable, then the prohibition against an appeal in s. 7(6) is equally not applicable"). Contra, Tatlow v. Carolina Homes Inc., 2010 ABQB 412, ¶ 7 (the Court of Queen's Bench held that it had no jurisdiction to hear an appeal against a Provincial Court decision holding that the arbitration term did not apply to the dispute the subject of the proceeding).

[103] B. Casey, Arbitration Law of Canada: Practice and Procedure 366-67 (3d ed. 2017) ("Under the Domestic [arbitration] Acts, the court's decision on a motion to stay a proceeding in the face of arbitration is said to not be subject to appeal. However, if the Domestic Act does not apply, there is no prohibition on appealing. For example, if the court at first instance finds that there is no arbitration agreement, ... [or] the matter is not arbitrable, then the Domestic Act is not applicable and there is no prohibition on appealing. ... It is now well established that prohibition respecting appeal does not preclude an appeal from an order refusing to grant a stay on the ground that the matter is not subject to arbitration").

[104] K. McEwen & L. Herbst, Commercial Arbitration in Canada 3-183 (looseleaf rel. 17, 11/2020) ("a decision by the motions court that a matter (or, where applicable, all the claims) is not subject to arbitration under the terms of the arbitration agreement falls outside the scope of the stay provision and a right of appeal lies to the court of appeal from that decision").

L for defamation. L applies for a stay of P's defamation action. P and L never agreed to submit the issue of defamation to arbitrator W. A stay would be inappropriate.

[131] If a court determines that the parties have agreed to submit some of their differences the subject of a court proceeding to arbitration but not all and stays, under section 7(5), the differences the parties have agreed to submit to arbitration and allows the other differences to be litigated or stays all of the differences in the court proceeding, such an order is not appealable.

[132] Suppose under the agency agreement L's entire fee on endorsement contracts is paid from the first of the periodic endorsement payments made to P. P claims that L owes him a portion of the fee P has already paid L. P sues L for defamation and claims that L owes P for a portion of the sums P has already paid L for the endorsement agreements with the automobile manufacturer and the watchmaker. L, relying on section 7 of the Arbitration Act, applies to the Court of Queen's Bench for a stay of P's court proceeding. The court, citing section 7(5), grants the stay of P's proceeding satisfied that it would be unreasonable to separate the differences and to have arbitrator W resolve the contest as to the fees owed and the court resolve the defamation action. The two are too closely connected to separate them. The Court of Appeal would have no jurisdiction, on account of section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act, to hear an appeal by L.

[133] Had the court come to the opposite conclusion and, on account of section 7(5) of the Arbitration Act, stayed the difference relating to the fees owed and allowed the defamation action to proceed, the Court of Appeal would also be without jurisdiction to hear an appeal against a partial stay.

[134] Or there may be a controversy as to the applicability of concepts that deprive the terms of the parties' agreement of their force – such as waiver[105] – or a debate as to the applicability of the criteria under section 7(2) of the Arbitration Act. If the court adjudges that the difference the [105] A. Swan, J. Adamski & A. Na., Canadian Contract Law 132 (4th ed. 2018) ("The party who waives strict compliance with the contract may not – or at least not without giving notice – insist on punctual and exact performance"); J. McCamus, The Law of Contracts 305 (3d ed. 2020) ("The doctrine of waiver is commonly illustrated by reference to the decision of the House of Lords in Hughes v. Metropolitan Rwy Co. In this case a landlord had given a notice to the tenant pursuant to the terms of the lease, requiring that certain repairs be made by the tenants within six months. The tenant replied that he was willing to do the repairs but he would like to enter into negotiations for the sale of the leasehold interest to the landlord and further indicated that he would not undertake the repairs during negotiations to that end. The negotiations broke off a few months later and when six months from the initial notice to repair had expired, the landlord purported to treat the lease as forfeited and brought an action to eject the tenant from the premises. The House of Lords dismissed the claim on the basis that the 'course of negotiation ... of the parties' had led the tenant to believe that the time limit for repairs would not be strictly enforced by the landlord and accordingly, that the landlord would not be permitted to enforce it. The landlord had waived his right to insist on strict performance of the agreement and could not now insist on doing so") & E. Farnsworth, Contracts 523 (4th ed. 2004) ("A common ground for excuse of a condition is that, after the contract was made, the obligor promised to perform despite the nonoccurrence of the condition or despite a delay in its occurrence. Such a promise is known as waiver").

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

subject of the court proceeding is the subject of an agreement to arbitrate, the dissatisfied party cannot appeal.

[135] It makes no sense to insulate an original court's order from an appeal in order to expedite the arbitration process in the absence of a judicial determination that the parties agreed to submit the difference the subject of a court proceeding to arbitration.[106]

[136] Third, the nonmoving party has commenced an action in the court against the moving party.[107] A party to an arbitration agreement cannot claim that another party has dishonored the arbitration agreement until the other party has actually commenced an action.

[137] Fourth, the adjudicator – a judge or a master in chambers of the Court of Queen's Bench[108] or a judge of The Provincial Court of Alberta – must issue a decision – stay the action commenced

---

[106] Courts in Alberta have heard appeals from decisions involving stay applications under section 7 if there was no applicable arbitration agreement. E.g., A.G. Clark Holdings Ltd. v. HOOPP Realty Inc., 2013 ABCA 101; 361 D.L.R. 4th 101, rev'ing 2012 ABQB 567 (allowed appeal from decision of chambers judge who dismissed application to strike or stay under section 7 the action because the contract clause did not make arbitration mandatory but rather made it available and required it only for disputes not resolved by other means including mediation, finding that the chambers judge misinterpreted the agreement that did make arbitration mandatory and remitting the matter back for determination on remaining issues, also concluding that section 7(6) did not bar the appeal because it does not apply to a decision that there is no applicable arbitration agreement upon which the proceedings could be stayed, such as that arbitration is not mandatory, but it would bar that court's determination on the remaining issues); Millennial Construction Ltd. v. 1021120 Alberta Ltd., 2005 ABQB 533 (dismissed appeal from unreported decision of master who declined to grant a stay under section 7, on the basis that arbitration was only an option and not mandatory under the contract so that section 7 does not apply and alternatively dismissed the stay application for undue delay, without discussing section 7(6)) & Young v. Dollar Financial Group Inc., 2013 ABCA 264; 364 D.L.R. 4th 341, aff'ing 2012 ABQB 601; 356 D.L.R. 4th 346, leave to appeal ref'd, [2013] S.C.C.A. No. 399 & [2013] S.C.C.A. No. 400 (dismissed appeal from decision of chambers judge who dismissed motion to stay proceedings under section 7(1) because the arbitration clauses in the consumer contracts at issue did not govern).

[107] Agrium Inc. v. Babcock & Wilcox Canada Ltd., 2005 ABCA 82, ¶ 12; 11 C.P.C. 6th 108, 112 per Fruman, J.A. ("In this case the parties used mandatory language and none of the s. 7(2) exceptions apply. Because the underlying arbitration is statute-barred, the statement of claim should be dismissed") & HOOPP Realty Inc. v. A.G. Clark Holdings Ltd., 2014 ABCA 20, ¶ 7; 31 C.L.R. 4th 173, 177, leave to appeal ref'd, [2014] S.C.C.A. No. 87 per Paperny, J.A. ("The chambers judge correctly interpreted this Court's decision in Babcock & Wilcox, which holds that if the parties have agreed that they must arbitrate a dispute, but one party has issued a statement of claim and has not commenced arbitration within the limitation period for arbitration, then the court must strike out the claim [under rule 3.68 of the Alberta Rules of Court]").

[108] See Wang v. Mattamy Corp., 2020 ONSC 7012, ¶ 17 per Penny, J. ("Master Muir's decision 'falls squarely' within the provisions of s. 7. Accordingly, it is not appropriate for the court to engage in an analysis of the Master's decision because any review of it is precluded by s. 7(6)"), review ref'd, 2021 ONSC 2635 (Div. Ct.) ¶¶ 6-7 per Favreau, J. ("In his endorsement, the motion judge identified the correct test for deciding whether to extend the time for an appeal, which includes consideration of the merits of the appeal. He ... correctly found that section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act, 1991 is a complete bar to the appeal. Section 7(6) of the Act provides that there is no appeal from a decision of the court staying an action on the basis of an arbitration clause. ... I agree with the motion judge that, based on section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act, 1991, the proposed appeal is devoid of any merit").

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

by the nonmoving party or dismiss the stay application allowing the nonmoving party to prosecute the action.[109] A ban against an appeal cannot be effective until there is a decision that might otherwise have been appealed.[110]

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

---

[109] Lafarge Canada Inc. v. City of Edmonton, 2013 ABCA 376, ¶ 38; 25 C.L.R. 4th 208, 217 ("Therefore, there has been no decision whether the City by its conduct waived its right to insist on the arbitration clause and attorned to the trial jurisdiction of the Court of Queen's Bench or whether a motion for a stay has been unduly delayed such that the Court of Queen's Bench should exercise its jurisdiction under the Arbitration Act to refuse to stay the action"); Lamb v. AlanRidge Homes Ltd., 2009 ABCA 343, ¶ 11; 312 D.L.R. 4th 719, 723, aff'ing 2009 ABQB 170; 309 D.L.R. 4th 214, leave to appeal ref'd, [2009] S.C.C.A. No. 520 ("We have concluded that the decision of the chambers judge was made under section 7 [dismissed a stay application and allowed arbitration to proceed in part], so that subsection (6) applies, and no appeal lies to this Court") & Brown v. Murphy, 59 O.R. 3d 404, 407-08 (C.A. 2002) per Charron, J.A. ("the bar under s. 7(6) [of Ontario's Arbitration Act, 1991] applied to any decision by the motions court under s. 7 to grant or refuse a stay of 'a proceeding in respect of a matter to be submitted to arbitration under the agreement' within the meaning of s. 7(1)") (emphasis omitted). See B. Casey, Arbitration Law of Canada: Practice and Procedure 366-67 (3d ed. 2017) ("Under the Domestic Acts, the courts' decision to refuse a stay of proceedings or, alternatively, its decision to stay court proceedings and permit the arbitration to continue is said to be not subject to appeal. However, if the Domestic Act does not apply, there is no prohibition on appealing. For example, if the court at first instance finds that there is no arbitration agreement, the matter is not arbitrable, then the Domestic Act is not applicable and there is no prohibition on appealing. ... If the stay is under the court's inherent power to control its own proceedings and not under the Domestic Act then normal appeal rights also flow. ... It is now well-established that prohibition respecting appeal does not preclude an appeal from an order refusing to grant a stay on the ground that the matter is not subject to arbitration").

[110] Courts in Alberta have considered appeals from decisions involving stay applications under section 7 where the decisions related to arbitration but were not made under section 7, sometimes considering the applicability of the section 7(6) bar on appeals. E.g., Lafarge Canada Inc. v. City of Edmonton, 2013 ABCA 376; 25 C.L.R. 4th 208, rev'ing 2012 ABQB 634 (allowed appeal from decision of chambers judge who dismissed application to strike under r. 3.68 or stay under section 7 a claim and declare that arbitration is past limitation period on the basis that there was no limitations defence and the statement of claim constituted notice of arbitration, finding that the claim could not be notice of arbitration and remitting matter back to the Court of Queen's Bench to decide stay application, noting that section 7(6) did not prevent the appeal because the chambers judge did not finally decide whether the claim should be stayed) & International Resource Management (Canada) Ltd. v. Kappa Energy (Yemen) Inc., 2000 ABCA 236; 266 A.R. 175 (denied application for summary dismissal of appeal from decision of chambers judge who dismissed appeal from decision of master who granted a stay of proceedings under section 7 on condition that applicant pay into a trust account the invoices in dispute in the action before it can proceed with the arbitration, condition that the respondents had cross-applied for, on the basis that section 7(6) does not bar the appeal because both the master and chambers judge imposed conditions on the arbitration, not on the stay, so it is not a decision under section 7; the Court later allowed the appeal, set aside the chambers judge's order imposing the condition and granted a unconditional stay: 2001 ABCA 146; 281 A.R. 373). Contra, Yaworski v. Gowling Lafleur Henderson LLP, 2013 ABCA 21, aff'ing 2012 ABQB 424, leave to appeal ref'd, 459 N.R. 395 (note) (dismissed appeal from decision of chambers judge who granted a stay of proceedings against personal plaintiff pending arbitration between plaintiff's professional corporation and the defendant under section 7 and under section 18 of Judicature Act insofar as court had no jurisdiction with respect to personal plaintiff under section 7 because he was not a party to the arbitration agreement, agreeing that two sections combined provided the jurisdiction to grant the stay and noting that the arbitration would give the plaintiff, through his personal corporation, effectively everything he sought in the claim, without discussing section 7(6)); Hnatiuk v. Assured Developments Ltd., 2012 ABCA 97; 15 C.L.R. 4th 28, rev'ing 2010 ABQB 258; 92 C.L.R. 3d 216 (allowed appeal from decision of trial judge who dismissed action commenced after an arbitral award was made on the ground

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

iii. The Prohibition Against Appeals Applies to Decisions of Both Masters in Chambers and a Judge of the Court of Queen's Bench

[138] Does the prohibition against appeals apply to decisions of both masters in chambers and judges of the Court of Queen's Bench?

[139] It does.

[140] The operative words in section 7(6) are "[t]here is no appeal". This is straightforward.

[141] A party adversely affected by a decision of a judge of The Provincial Court of Alberta or a master in chambers is bound by it unless a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta has authority to hear an appeal on account of section 46(1) of the Provincial Court Act[111] – "Any party may appeal a decision of the Provincial Court to the Court of Queen's Bench" – or section 12 of the Court of Queen's Bench Act[112] – "An appeal lies to a judge in chambers from a decision of a master in chambers" – and allows the appeal.

[142] Because section 7(6) prohibits appeals of a section 7 order, a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal against a section 7 order of a judge of the Provincial Court or a master in chambers.

[143] If a moving party applied for a stay to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, a party adversely affected by the subsequent section 7 decision is bound unless the Court of Appeal has authority to hear an appeal on account of section 3(b)(iv)(A) of the Judicature Act[113] – "The Court of Appeal ... (b) has jurisdiction and power, subject to the Rules of Court, to hear and determine ... (iv) all appeals ... respecting a judgment, order or decision of (A) a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench" – and allows the appeal.

---

of res judicata because parties should have raised the issues in the claim during the arbitration, on the basis that no one applied for a stay under section 7 and the defendant waived his right to arbitration and attorned to the court's jurisdiction by participating in the litigation for years, and even if an application under section 7 were made the delay for it would be gross, without mentioning section 7(6)) & New Era Nutrition Inc. v. Balance Bar Co., 2004 ABCA 280; 245 D.L.R. 4th 107, rev'ing in part 2003 ABQB 509 (allowed appeal from part of decision of chambers judge who dismissed application for declaration to stay arbitration (not litigation) in favour of concurrent court proceedings in which the applicant relied on, among others, multiplicity of proceedings and abuse of process, staying the arbitration under the court's "residual jurisdiction to prevent unfairness set out in section 6(c)" on the basis that litigation was necessary as it involved parties not subject to the arbitration agreement and the legislature's amendments to section 7 recognizes that multiple proceedings on the same matter are undesirable, without discussing section 7(6) and where no party sought a stay of the court proceedings under section 7).

[111] R.S.A. 2000, c. P-31.

[112] R.S.A. 2000, c. C-31.

[113] R.S.A. 2000, c. J-2.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[144] Because section 7(6) prohibits appeals of a section 7 order, the Court of Appeal has no jurisdiction to hear an appeal against a section 7 order of a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench of Alberta.

[145] There is only one plausible or permissible meaning that section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act bears. A party that is bound by a mandatory arbitration agreement and adversely affected by a stay application decision under section 7 of the Arbitration Act may not appeal a decision of a judge of The Provincial Court of Alberta or a decision of master in chambers to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench or a decision of a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench to the Court of Appeal.

[146] This means that a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench had no jurisdiction to hear an appeal against the decision of Master Prowse.

[147] In order for the Arbitration Act[114] to allow appeals from a master in chambers to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench, section 7(6) would have to look like this: "There is no appeal from a decision of a judge of The Provincial Court of Alberta to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench or of a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench to the Court of Appeal under this section". This version – by making no mention of a decision of a master in chambers – does not, in any way, deprive section 12 of the Court of Queen's Bench Act – "An appeal lies to a judge in chambers from a decision of a master in chambers" – of its full force.

3. General Provisions in the Judicature Act, the Alberta Rules of Court, and the Court of Queen's Bench Act that Allow Appeals of Queen's Bench Decisions Do Not Assist the Respondents

[148] As already noted, section 3(b)(iv)(A) of the Judicature Act[115] expressly states that the Court of Appeal has the general jurisdiction to hear and determine appeals from judgments, orders or decisions of a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench. To similar effect is rule 14.4(1) of the Alberta Rules of Court:[116] "Except as otherwise provided, an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal from the whole or any part of a decision of a Court of Queen's Bench judge sitting in court or chambers ... ."

[149] Section 12 of the Court of Queen's Bench Act states that "[a]n appeal lies to a judge in chambers from a decision of a master in chambers". So does rule 6.14(1) of the Alberta Rules of Court: "If a master makes a judgment or order, the applicant or respondent ... may appeal the judgment or order to a judge".

---

[114] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43.

[115] R.S.A. 2000, c. J-2.

[116] Alta. Reg. 124/2010.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[150] But these provisions are general grants of authority. Specific statutory provisions may limit a general grant of authority. Professor Sullivan explains this concept:[117] "When two provisions are in conflict and one of them deals specifically with the matter in question while the other has a more general application, the conflict may be resolved applying the specific provision to the exclusion of the more general one". So do Justice Scalia and Professor Garner:[118] "If there is a conflict between a general provision and a specific provision, the specific provision prevails. … Under this canon, the specific provision is treated as an exception to the general rule". Justice Scalia and Professor Garner also explain why:[119] "Jeremy Bentham supplied the rationale: '[T]he particular provision is established upon a nearer and more exact view of the subject than the general, of which it may be regarded as a correction'. Or think of it this way: the specific provision comes closer to addressing the very problem posed by the case at hand and is thus more deserving of credence". I agree. "It makes no sense to apply a general rule as opposed to a specific rule to a fact pattern expressly dealt with by the specific rule".[120]

[151] Suppose parents tell their teenage daughter at the start of her grade-twelve year that her curfew is midnight. But they also tell her and her date to her grade-twelve graduation celebration that she must be home by 2 a.m. the night of the prom. A reasonable observer would understand that the ordinary curfew is still in force for all evenings except the evening of the grade-twelve prom. There is a specific curfew for prom night that supersedes the general curfew.

[152] Section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act[121] is a specific rule for appeals of section 7(1) stay application orders. It applies in this case – not the general provisions incorporated in the Judicature Act,[122] the Court of Queen's Bench Act[123] and the Alberta Rules of Court.[124] As a result, the [117] The Construction of Statutes 354 (7th ed. 2022). See also Morton v. Mancari, 417 U.S. 535, 550-51 (1974) per Blackmun, J. ("Where there is no clear intention otherwise, a specific statute will not be controlled or nullified by a general one, regardless of the priority of enactment") & The Queen ex rel. Vezina v. Canadian Broadcasting Corp., 84 C.C.C. 3d 574 (Ont. C.A. 1993), leave to appeal ref'd, [1993] S.C.C.A. No. 524 (Canada Elections Act provisions regulating broadcasters' obligations during a federal election to provide paid and free time to registered political parties, and not the Broadcasting Act's general requirement that broadcasters treat accredited political parties equitably, govern the obligation of broadcasters during federal general elections).

---

[118] Reading Law: The Interpretation of Legal Texts 183 (2012).

[119] Id.

[120] Acciona Infrastructure Canada Inc. v. Posco Daewoo Corp., 2019 ABCA 241, ¶ 176; 91 Alta. L.R. 6th 59, 105 per Wakeling, J.A.

[121] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43.

[122] R.S.A. 2000, c. J-2, s. 3(b)(iv)(A).

[123] R.S.A. 2000, c. C-31, s. 12.

[124] Alta. Reg. 124/2010.

Judicature Act, the Court of Queen's Bench Act and the Alberta Rules of Court do not assist the respondents.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

C. Decisions of a Master in Chambers Under Section 7 of the Arbitration Act Are Subject to Appellate or Judicial Review

[153] Mr. Drewry, Q.C., counsel for Orbis Engineering, and Mr. Popowich, counsel for the Elliott companies, argue that section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act[125] contravenes section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867[126] if it is interpreted to insulate decisions of a master in chambers under section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act from appeals to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench. They ask us to interpret section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act so that it will comply with section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 – allow a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench to hear an appeal from a decision of a master in chambers.

[154] The argument,[127] as I understand it, goes as follows. First, masters in chambers are appointed by the provincial legislature. Second, a legislature cannot assign to a master the authority that a superior court justice appointed under section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 would have. Third, because masters do not have authority "in their own right", a master cannot fetter the discretion of a Court of Queen's Bench judge, and as "final determination of a dispute between the parties must be done by a judge", a master's decision must always be subject to appeal. Fourth, on this basis, section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act cannot bar appeals from a master's decision even if they are entirely under section 7 of that act because doing so would grant the master authority that is the "exclusive purview" of a superior court judge.

[155] It is necessary to explore some of these points.

---

[125] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43.

[126] 30 & 31 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.).

[127] Factum of the Respondent Orbis Engineering Field Services Ltd. ¶¶ 83-84, 88 & 89-92. See also Factum of the Respondents Elliott Turbomachinery Canada, Inc. and Elliott Company ¶¶ 63-76.

[156] It is not contentious that section 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867[128] places limits on the authority that a provincial legislature may delegate or assign[129] to masters over and beyond the authority vested in this office prior to July 1, 1867.[130]

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

---

[128] 30 & 31 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.).

[129] P. Hogg, Constitutional Law of Canada § 7:15 (5th ed. looseleaf rel. 2021-1) ("The courts have held that the provincial Legislatures may not confer on a body other than a superior, district or county court judicial functions analogous to those performed by a superior, district or county court. This little separation of powers doctrine has been developed to preclude evasion of the stipulations of ss. 96 to 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867. If ss. 96 to 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867 were read literally, they could easily be evaded by a province which wanted to assume control of its judicial appointments. The province could increase the jurisdiction of its inferior courts so that they assumed much of the jurisdiction of the higher courts; or the province could vest higher-court jurisdiction in a newly-established tribunal, and call that tribunal an inferior court or an administrative tribunal. It is therefore not surprising that the courts have added a gloss to s. 96 and the associated constitutional provisions. What they have said is this: if a province invests a tribunal with a jurisdiction of a kind that ought properly to belong to a superior, district or county court, then that tribunal, whatever its official name, is for constitutional purposes a superior, district or county court and must satisfy the requirements of s. 96 and the associated provisions of the Constitution Act, 1867. This means that such a tribunal will be invalidly constituted, unless its members (1) are appointed by the federal government in conformity with s. 96, (2) are drawn from the bar of the province in conformity with ss. 97 and 98, and (3) receive salaries that are fixed and provided by the federal Parliament in conformity with s. 100"); L. Abrams & K. McGuinness, Canadian Civil Procedure Law 155 (2d ed. 2010) ("as provincial appointees, masters cannot be vested with the essential jurisdiction of a section 96 judge under the Constitution Act, 1867") & G. Watson & D. McKay, Holmsted and Watson: Ontario Civil Procedure § 7:26 (looseleaf rel. no. 3, July 2022) ("Masters were provincially appointed court officers. By s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867, the federal government is given the exclusive power to appoint 'the Judges of the Superior, District, and County Courts.' Since masters were not so appointed, there are constitutional limits to the power that can be given to them"). See also MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Simpson, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 725, 737 per Lamer, C.J. (s. 96 of the Constitution Act, 1867 ... limits both Parliament and the provincial legislatures") & Ontario v. Victoria Medical Building Ltd., [1960] S.C.R. 32, 43 (1959) per Judson, J. ("everything the Master does must be authorized by the Rules of Practice, The Judicature Act or some other statute. This does not mean, however, that the Legislature can assign any and all work to him. Section 96 operates as a limiting factor. If this were not so, there would be nothing to prevent the withdrawal of any judicial function from a s. 96 appointee and its assignment to the Master").

[130] G. Watson & D. McKay, Holmsted and Watson: Ontario Civil Procedure § 7:26 (looseleaf rel. no. 3, July 2022) ("Stated generally, subject to the jurisdiction acquired and exercised by masters prior to Confederation, a master could not exercise judicial power which historically could be exercised only by superior and district court judges: ... . This constitutional limitation was well established; less clear was the actual extent of the limitation. Moreover, the issue of what jurisdiction could be given to the master was merely a small part of the larger 's. 96 problem,' i.e., what decision-making powers might the provinces assign to non-s. 96 courts or to provincial tribunals that are not courts at all. ... [T]he accepted general approach was to enquire whether the impugned function was one performed by the master at the time of Confederation. If so, it might be assigned to a master. If not, then the question was whether the jurisdiction was of the type usually exercised by a superior court judge or only 'proper' to be exercised by such a judge: ... . It is at this point that the case law becomes somewhat vague and confusing. It seems that the master might be given jurisdiction over steps designed to ready the case for trial, where one is necessary, and to police and enforce the rules of practice. However, the master could not be given jurisdiction to determine in a final manner the rights of the parties, at least where there was a genuine dispute as to those rights"); P. Hogg, Constitutional Law of Canada § 7:15 (5th ed. looseleaf rel. 2021-1) ("the difficulty lies in the definition of those functions that ought properly to belong to a superior, district or county court. The courts have attempted to fashion a judicially enforceable rule which would separate 's. 96 functions' from other adjudicatory functions. The attempt has not been successful, and it is difficult to predict with

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[157] There are two constitutional rules that arise from the "Judicature" part of the Constitution Act, 1867.[131]

[158] First, the purpose of the "Judicature" part of the Constitution Act, 1867 is to preserve the role of superior courts – the judges of which are appointed by the federal government[132] to courts established by a province – as the guardians of the rule of law.[133] Superior courts ensure that there confidence how the courts will characterize particular adjudicatory functions") & L. Abrams & K. McGuinness, Canadian Civil Procedure Law §2.120-121 (2d ed. 2010) ("In several of the provinces of Canada, a varying extent of jurisdiction is exercised by judicial officers of the court designated as 'masters' ... . In England, the office of master may be traced back several centuries, at least to the Court of Chancery. The masters were officers of that court, who would hear certain points in relation to Chancery cases assigned to them by the Chancellor. The chief of these offices – that of the Master of the Rolls – subsequently was re-classified into one of the most important of the judicial postings in England: effectively, the Master of the Rolls is the Chief Justice of the Court of Appeal. The offices of the other masters were abolished in 1852. In their place chief clerks were appointed, who exercised a jurisdiction in Chambers. In 1897, the name of the office was changed back to master. In the Courts of Common Law, the office of master was created in 1837. By the statute creating the office, masters were made officers of the court and were to be appointed to conduct the civil business thereof. In 1867, it was provided that the judges might empower the masters to transact all the business transacted by a judge in chambers not affecting the liberty of the subject"). See also Polson Iron Works v. Munns, 24 D.L.R. 18, 21-22 (Alta. Sup. Ct. Chambers 1915) per Harvey, C.J. ("in England the office of Master is several centuries old in the Court of Chancery. The Master were officers of the Court, but the chief of them, the Master of the Rolls subsequently developed into one of the most important of the judges and the offices of the others were subsequently abolished in 1852 and in their stead were appointed Chief Clerks who exercised a jurisdiction in Chambers. In 1897 the name was again changed to 'Master.' In the common Law Courts the office of Master was created in 1837. By the statute creating the office they were called officers of the Court, and were to be appointed to conduct the civil business thereof and in 1867 it was provided that the Judges might empower them to transact all the business transacted by a Judge in Chambers not affecting the liberty of the subject. In ... [Halsbury] vol. 9, 66 under the head of 'Officers', sec. 5, we find sub.-sec. 3, 'Masters of the Supreme Court.' In para. 142 it is stated that their duties are '(1) The control and superintendence of the central office of the Supreme Court (2) judicial work in Chambers, and (3) issuing directions in points of practice.' From the foregoing it is apparent that at the time of passing of the B.N.A. Act judicial work of the character now assigned to the Master in Chambers was being performed in both the English and Canadian Courts by persons designated by the name 'Master' or some other name, who, by the statutes providing for these offices, were termed 'officers' and not 'Judges' of the Court"); Ontario v. Victoria Medical Building Ltd., [1960] S.C.R. 32, 43 (1959) per Judson, J. ("I am content to adopt the judgment of Harvey C.J.A. in Polson Iron Works v. Munns for its account of the historical origins of the office [of master] and the broad outlines of the jurisdiction") & S.B.I. Management Ltd. v. 109014 Holdings Ltd., 1981 ABCA 235, ¶ 2; 128 D.L.R. 3d 89, 90, leave to appeal granted, [1981] S.C.C.A. No. 372 per Lieberman, J.A. ("The office of Master in Chambers evolved in England over a period of approximately two centuries until, in 1837 the Superior Court (Officers) Act, 1837 (U.K.), c. 30, authorized the appointment of officials to be known as 'Masters of the Court'. That office developed into the present office of 'Queen's Bench master'. The office of Master in Chambers was first established in Alberta in 1913 by the Statute Law Amendment Act, 1913 (Alta.), c. 9, which Act amended the Judicature Ordinance, C.O.N.W.T. 1898, c. 21. The Judicature Ordinance had been inherited from the Northwest Territories by Alberta when it became a province in 1905. The power of the Province to create the office of Master in Chambers emanates from s. 92, para. 14 of the British North America Act, 1867").

---

[131] 30 & 31 Vict., c. 3 (U.K.).

[132] The federal government also compensates superior court judges. Judges Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. J-1.

[133] W. Lederman, Continuing Canadian Constitutional Dilemmas 184-85 (1981) ("even though a statute has been enacted by a provincial legislature that is within provincial powers, nevertheless it may raise issues of interpretation is a concordance between the tasks a legislature assigns to a lower court or a statutory delegate and the decisions made by a lower court or a statutory delegate. A lower court or statutory delegate has no jurisdiction to make a decision not within its assigned responsibilities.

[159] Second, a province cannot assign to an inferior court or an administrative tribunal it has created powers that a superior court must have to serve as the guardian of the rule of law.[134] Superior courts have essential or core powers that a province may not abridge.[135] and application that must be entrusted as an original matter to the provincial superior court, as constituted under section 96 of the B.N.A. Act. In other words, there is a guaranteed core of issues arising under valid provincial statutes that the province must assign to its provincial superior court as a matter of original jurisdiction. Title to land is one example, and unlimited jurisdiction to interpret contracts in general is another. ... [Section 96] compels a province to set up the superior courts on the English model ... and it compels the provinces to give them something to do. Our whole history points to this as a safeguard for the rule of law in our country") (emphasis in original). See MacMillan Bloedel Ltd. v. Simpson, [1995] 4 S.C.R. 725, 754 per Lamer, C.J. ("The core jurisdiction of the provincial superior courts comprises those powers which are essential to the administration of justice and the maintenance of the rule of law") & O. Martineau and Sons Ltd. v. City of Montreal, [1932] A.C. 113, 121 (P.C. 1931) (Que.) per Lord Blanesburgh ("[Section 96 is] ... the means adopted by the framers of the ... [British North America Act, 1867] to secure the impartiality and the independence of the Provincial judiciary").

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

---

[134] P. Hogg, Constitutional Law of Canada § 7.15 (5th ed. looseleaf rel. 2021-1) ("the provincial Legislatures may not confer on a body other than a superior, district or county court judicial functions analogous to those performed by a superior, district or county court. ... It is ... not surprising that the courts have added a gloss to s. 96 and the associated constitutional provisions. What they have said is this: if a province invests a tribunal with a jurisdiction of a kind that ought properly to belong to a superior, district or country court, then that tribunal whatever its official name, is for constitutional purposes a superior, district or country court and must satisfy the requirements of s. 96 and the associated provisions of the Constitution Act 1867. This means that such a tribunal will be invalidly constituted, unless its members (1) are appointed by the federal government in conformity with s. 96, (2) are drawn from the bar of the province in conformity with ss. 97 and 98, and (3) receive salaries that are fixed and provided by the federal Parliament in conformity with s. 100").

[135] Re Residential Tenancies Act, [1981] 1 S.C.R. 714, 748 per Dickson, J. (the Court upheld an opinion of the Ontario Court of Appeal opining that a provision in The Residential Tenancies Act bestowing on the Residential Tenancy Commission to order the eviction of tenants was unconstitutional on the ground that this was within the protected jurisdiction of Ontario's Superior Court: "The Residential Tenancy Commission is charged with the function of interpreting contracts and enforcing contractual rights through the exercise of the impugned powers. The Commission is to be empowered to do what a superior court has always done. It is clearly a Superior Court quoad those powers. The statutory provisions conferring those powers are therefore invalid"); Reference re Section 6 of the Family Relations Act, S.B.C. 1978, c. 20 as amended, [1982] 1 S.C.R. 62, 112-13 per Estey, J. (the Court upheld in part an opinion of the British Columbia Court of appeal that the Family Relations Act constitutionally authorized the Provincial Court to issue guardianship and custody family law orders: "[the] purpose and role [of section 96] ... is in no way jeopardized by the increasing recognition of the implementation of valid provincial programs through provincial administrative and judicial agencies. This will continue to be the case so long as that which is assigned to the provincial body does not have the effect in substance of conferring on that body a judicial function which 'broadly conform[s] to the type of jurisdiction exercised by the superior, district or county courts'"); Québec v. Farrah, [1978] 2 S.C.R. 638 (the Court upheld a decision of the Quebec Court of Appeal declaring unconstitutional a provision in Quebec's Transport Act that granted the Quebec Transport Tribunal exclusive and final appellate jurisdiction on any question of law from any decision of the Quebec Transport Commission, usurping the supervision role of Quebec's Superior Court); Crevier v. Québec, [1981] 2 S.C.R. 220, 238-39 (the Court allowed an appeal against a decision of [160] Orbis Engineering[136] does not take issue with the ability of a master to render a decision under section 7 of the Arbitration Act.[137] Rather, its contention appears to be that the master's decision cannot be final as only section 96 judges can make final determinations of parties' rights – which rests on the implicit premise that a decision under section 7 is a final determination of the rights of the parties.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[161] There is a difficulty with this. It conflates the "finality" of a decision that provides a resolution which brings the parties' dispute to an end – e.g., summary judgment or a trial decision – with that decision being "final" in the sense of not being subject to appeal – e.g., where the decision is protected by a privative clause or made by a court of last resort.

[162] For its position that a master's decisions must always be subject to review by a superior court judge, Orbis Engineering relies on numerous authorities that discuss the validity of specific grants of authority to a master.[138] the Quebec Court of Appeal reversing an order of the Superior Court quashing a decision of the Professions Tribunal that Quebec's Professional Code authorized it to decide questions of law arising from decisions of discipline committees and insulating it from judicial or appellate review) & McEvoy v. New Brunswick, [1983] 1 S.C.R. 704, 718-19 (the Court reversed the judgment of New Brunswick's Court of Appeal opining that Parliament could bestow exclusive jurisdiction on an inferior court to adjudicate indictable offences: "It has long been the rule that s. 96, although in terms an appointing power, must be addressed in functional terms lest its application be eroded. What then, is the relation between the proposed new statutory Court and s. 96? This is the key constitutional issue in the present case and, as we view the matter, the result is to defeat the new statutory Court because it will effectively be a s. 96 Court").

---

[136] The Elliott companies seem to generally mirror the position of Orbis Engineering. Factum of the Respondents Elliott Turbomachinery Canada, Inc., and Elliott Company ¶¶ 48-49, 62, 64 & 67-68 ("A decision of a Master is only an interim decision pending a determination by a judge, unless a party accepts it by electing to not appeal. The legislature would not have intended to make such decisions 'unappealable' without expressing that, as Justice Dilts correctly stated. There is long-standing expectation and judicial culture in Alberta that no decision of a Master is final ... . Justice Dilts was correct in that the purpose of section 7 is to limit appeals to the Court of Appeal – and it is not to foreclose appeal to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench. Statutes are not in conflict, the sound policy that all decisions of first instance need be reviewable is maintained, and the constitutional entitlement to have a case heard by a judge is maintained. ... Section 96 of The Constitution Act, 1867 operates as a limiting factor on Masters' powers: the power of a federally appointed Justice prevails over that of a provincial appointee such as a Master in chambers. .... Elliott submits that barring an appeal from a Master to a Queen's Bench Justice would fetter the jurisdiction of the Justice, offending section 96 ... . The effect of section 96 is that parties are entitled to a hearing before a federally appointed Justice"). They add that Agrium has no right to appeal Justice Dilts' decision to this court. Id. ¶¶ 32 & 110.

[137] Factum of the Respondent Orbis Engineering Field Services Ltd. ¶ 103 ("if this Court determines that s. 7(6) of the Arbitration Act may bar an appeal from a master, Orbis submits the bar to appeal would only apply to decisions of a master which clearly fell within the parameters of s. 7").

[138] E.g. Wright v. Disposal Services Ltd., 80 D.L.R. 3d 671, 674 (Alta. Sup. Ct. Trial Div. 1977) per Laycraft, J. ("It was urged upon me during argument that as the master had exercised his discretion, I should follow the practice of appellate courts and not interfere with that discretion even if I disagreed with the result, unless it was plainly based on wrong principle. In my opinion, however, the rule followed by the Appellate Division in an appeal from a trial judge involving an exercise of discretion does not apply to an appeal from the decision of a master in chambers. While that decision is entitled to the greatest respect, the discretionary jurisdiction possessed by a superior court trial judge cannot be fettered in any way by the previous decision of the master. The superior court judge possesses that jurisdiction by virtue of his federal appointment under the powers given the federal Crown by the British North ... [America] Act. His status resulting from that appointment cannot be diminished by the decision of the master appointed by the provincial Crown"); Menduk v. Gore Mutual Ins. Co., 67 W.W.R. 573, 574 & 577 (Alta. Sup. Ct. 1969) per Sinclair, J. ("Counsel for the appellant says, in effect, that the appeal should be heard as though the application were being made de novo. On the other hand, counsel for the respondent urges that the appeal be treated as though it were from a discretionary order of a judge. .... [I]t is clear that an appeal to a judge of the supreme court from a discretionary decision of a master is to be treated as a review and a rehearing. The judge is in no way fettered by the previous exercise of the master's discretion, and is entitled to exercise his own discretion as though the matter came before him for the first time"); Ontario v. Victoria Medical Building Ltd., [1960] S.C.R. 32, 38 (1959) per Kerwin, C.J. ("Notwithstanding the fact that mechanics' liens were unknown at the time of Confederation, my view is that Pomeroy [in Equity Jurisprudence ss. 1268-9] correctly stated the nature of the action given by The Mechanics' Lien Act [as 'ordinary equitable actions resulting in a decree for sale and distribution of the proceeds identical in all their features with suits for the foreclosure of mortgages by judicial action'] and that ... the jurisdiction conferred upon the Master by subs. (1) of s. 31 of The Mechanics' Lien Act broadly conforms to the type of jurisdiction exercised by the Superior, District or County Courts at Confederation"), 41-42 per Judson, J. ("This is not a case where the Province has appointed a new judicial officer to preside over a newly created court or tribunal but one where the Province has increased the jurisdiction of a judicial officer already appointed by the Province. There is no question here of the use of a device to create a new s. 96 court with a new s. 96 judge under another name. What is happening is that work is being redistributed within the s. 96 court itself and new work assigned to a provincially appointed judicial officer. In a sense it is not even an exclusive assignment when a judge of the court, on motion by one of the parties, has the power of removal under s. 31(2). Nevertheless, it is my opinion that the judgment under appeal is well founded and that this legislation is in conflict with the appointing power under s. 96 of the British North America Act, and I reach this conclusion for two reasons — the nature of the jurisdiction which is conferred upon the Master and the fact that he is given the power of final adjudication in these matters, subject to the usual right of appeal to the Court of Appeal as from a single judge"); Polson Iron Works v. Munns, 24 D.L.R. 18, 22 (Alta. Sup. Ct. Chambers 1915) per Harvey, C.J. ("It is perfectly clear, of course, that the legislature could not provide for the office [of master] either specifically or generally and leave the executive or the Judges to give him a jurisdiction which would make him practically a Judge, but, in my opinion, that has not been done here. The Judge's chief duty is to determine the rights of parties in the first instance by trial, and subsequently on appeal. The practice and procedure is for the purpose of accomplishing these results, advantageously and expeditiously. The work in Chambers is practically all leading up to trial and appeal. It is to this subsidiary work that the Master's jurisdiction is confined. The order under consideration is perhaps the nearest approach to determining the rights of parties by trial that the rules authorize the Master to make. But in reality, he is not trying the rights of the parties. He is determining that there is no real issue to be tried. It is only when such a situation is found to exist that the Master is authorized to give a judgment in favor of the plaintiff. When he gives a judgment in favor of the defendant apparently all he does is to give effect to and enforce some rule of practice e.g. for failure to prosecute the action as required by the rules. The Master has no jurisdiction in trials or in appeals and all of his acts are subject to review by a judge. His office is essentially that of an officer preparing litigation for its legitimate purpose, viz. a trial of the rights of the parties which is exclusively reserved for the judges to whom it essentially belongs. His duties, therefore, while largely judicial in their character, do not constitute him a judge since from them are reserved the essential duties of a judge"); Colonial Investment & Loan Co. v. Grady, 24 D.L.R. 176, 176, 178 & 179 (Alta. Sup. Ct. App. Div. 1915) per Stuart, J. ("the Legislative Assembly of Alberta provided a special method of procedure for the enforcement of rights under mortgages, encumbrances and agreements of sale. Section 3 of that Act reads as follows: – 'All proceedings to secure or enforce any right, remedy or obligation under a mortgage, encumbrance or agreement of sale, or in respect of the lands, moneys, covenants, conditions, stipulations or agreements described or contained therein, shall be brought before a Master in Chambers in the Supreme Court of Alberta under the provisions of this Act and as nearly as may be in accordance with the practice and procedure of the said Court.' .... [T]he Master was 'to have jurisdiction to hear all evidence, adjourn all hearings, grant all orders, pronounce all judgments, and to do all other

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[163] It is not clear how these cases support Orbis Engineering's position. Given its concession that a master may render a decision under section 7, the only issue arising from the argument as framed is whether the absence of a right to appeal to a Court of Queen's Bench judge renders Alberta's assignment of jurisdiction to the master ultra vires the Alberta legislature.

[164] It would seem that the argument comes down to whether a provincial legislature can assign to a master decision-making authority that can properly rest in that office but that is insulated from appeal to a section 96 judge.

[165] The argument assumes that a decision of a master in chambers is not subject to appeal or judicial review.

[166] As I will explain, this is not the case.

[167] A determination that section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act[139] prohibits appeals from orders of a master in chambers under section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench does not mean that a decision of a master in chambers is immune from appellate or judicial review.

[168] First, an order of a master in chambers under section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act is, for the purpose of section 40(1) of the Supreme Court Act,[140] a "final or other judgment of the Federal Court of Appeal or of the highest court of final resort in a province ... in which judgment can be acts or things that may be necessary in finally disposing of such proceedings,' and this subject only to certain conditions of procedure and certain enactments by way of substantive law which in no way limited his final and complete jurisdiction. It is obvious that it was left entirely in the discretion of the Master to decide whether or not he should exercise powers which were undoubtedly as full and complete as those held by a Judge of the Supreme Court. He could, indeed, if he thought best, direct an action to be brought or an issue to be tried, but it was still open to him to hear oral evidence as at a trial and to give as full and as final a judgment as a Judge of the Court could give, no matter what issue of fact, e.g., fraud or other ground of defence, might have been raised. He was to do all this 'in the Supreme Court.' It seems to me that it is impossible to avoid the conclusion that by such legislation the Master was constituted in effect a Judge of the Supreme Court with a jurisdiction limited indeed to its extent but not in its content, that is, limited to a certain very important branch of litigation, but practically unlimited within that sphere, and subject only with respect to his final judgment to an appeal to the Appellate Division in the same way as a final judgment of any ordinary Judge of the Supreme Court. For this reason I think the legislation was ultra vires of a Provincial Legislature, inasmuch as it was inconsistent with the appointing power expressly given to the Dominion in the B.N.A. Act") (emphasis in original) & S.B.I. Management Ltd. v. 109014 Holdings Ltd., 1981 ABCA 235, ¶¶ 41, 42 & 60; 128 D.L.R. 3d. 89, 100 & 105 per Lieberman, J.A., leave to appeal granted, [1981] S.C.C.A. No. 372 ("That a Master, in the proper case, can grant summary judgment is beyond dispute. ... In the present case, the Master held that there was no triable issue. He was on the facts entitled and, I might say, compelled to so find. The question becomes whether granting an order for possession in these circumstances can be regarded as analogous to granting summary judgment. In my view, it can. .... Applying the threefold test to the situation faced by the Master in this case, I have no hesitation in coming to the conclusion that he did have jurisdiction to grant the order for possession").

---

[139] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43.

[140] R.S.C. 1985, c. S-26.

had in the particular case" and, with leave of the Supreme Court of Canada, may be appealed to the Supreme Court of Canada.[141] The Supreme Court of Canada is a superior court.[142] It follows that an order of a master in chambers under section 7(1) of the Arbitration Act is not immune from appellate review. This, in my opinion, is a complete answer to Orbis Engineering's constitutional argument.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

---

[141] Uber Technologies Inc. v. Heller, 2020 SCC 16, n. 5 per Abella & Rowe, JJ. ("if the motion judge had issued a stay under the ... [Arbitration Act], no appeal to the Court of Appeal would have been available (... [Arbitration Act] s. 7(6)). A direct appeal to this Court with leave would still have been permissible"); Argentina v. Mellino, [1987] 1 S.C.R. 536, 545 per La Forest, J. ("This appeal is brought under s. 41 [now section 40(1)] of the Supreme Court Act ... which in broad terms empowers this Court to grant leave to appeal from any final or other judgment of the highest court of final resort in a province, or a judge thereof, in which judgment can be had in a particular case. The Act again underscores the breadth of the provision in s. 2(1) by defining 'the court appealed from' as 'the court from which the appeal is brought directly to the Supreme Court, whether such court is one of original jurisdiction or a court of appeal', and 'final judgment' as 'any judgment, rule, order or decision that determines in whole or in part any substantive right of any of the parties in controversy in any judicial proceeding'. On a plain reading of these provisions ... it [is] obvious that s. 41 applied to the present case. The decision of Waite J., from which this appeal is taken, finally dismissed the application for extradition") & Le Syndicat des employés de bureau de l'Hydro-Québec v. Québec, [1973] S.C.R. 790, 791 ("The Court, being of the opinion that the judgment of the Honourable Jean Saint-Germain of the Superior Court, granting ... the petition presented by the Attorney General of the Province of Quebec under s. 99 of the Labour Code of Quebec, is, in law, a judgment from which an appeal lies to the Court of Appeal of the Province of Quebec, it follows that no appeal lies from that judgment to this Court under s. 41 [now section 40(1)] of the Supreme Court Act").

[142] Lederman, "The Independence of the Judiciary" 34 Can. B. Rev. 769, 1175 (1956) ("Section 101 of the B.N.A. Act contemplates the establishment of federal superior courts. This arises from the use of the word 'court' in the section, and indeed the 'General Court of Appeal for Canada' would necessarily and preeminently be a superior court on the English model. To consider that section 101 could mean anything else would be so incongruous as to be absurd"). See Addy v. Canada, 22 D.L.R. 4th 52, 60 (Fed. Ct. Tr. Div. 1985) per Grant, J. ("the Supreme Court of Canada and the Federal Court of Canada are superior courts within the meaning of s. 99(2) of the Constitution Act, 1867, and that the judges of both ... courts are ... superior court judges"). A court is presumably either superior or inferior. There is no third option. But the terms may take on different meanings depending on context. See P. Hogg, Constitutional Law of Canada § 7:14 (5th ed. looseleaf rel. 2021-1) ("Do the provisions of ss. 96 to 100 of the Constitution Act, 1867, dealing with appointment, payment and tenure of higher court judges, apply to the Supreme Court of Canada, the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court, the Tax Court of Canada and the higher territorial courts? There is no doubt that those courts are 'superior courts'). See also Interpretation Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. I-21, s. 35(1) ("In every enactment … 'superior court' means (a) in the Province of Newfoundland and Labrador, the Supreme Court, (a.1) in the Province of Ontario, the Court of Appeal for Ontario and the Superior Court of Justice, (b) in the Province of Quebec, the Court of Appeal and the Superior Court in and for the Province, (c) in the Province of New Brunswick, Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta, the Court of Appeal for the Province and the Court of Queen's Bench for the Province, (d) in the Provinces of Nova Scotia, British Columbia and Prince Edward Island, the Court of Appeal and the Supreme Court of the Province, and (e) the Supreme Court of Yukon, the Supreme Court of the Northwest Territories and the Nunavut Court of Justice, and includes the Supreme Court of Canada, the Federal Court of Appeal, the Federal Court and the Tax Court of Canada") (emphasis added).

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[169] Second, given that a master in chambers is not a section 96 superior court judge, it is arguable that a party may apply to a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench for judicial review[143] of a master in chambers' decision under section 7 of the Arbitration Act.[144] While it is true that the availability of an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada under section 40(1) of the Supreme Court Act would cause a reviewing court to consider whether this is a sufficient reason to decline to hear a judicial review application,[145] it is not obvious to me what the outcome of that issue would be.

[170] If the judicial review court concluded that section 40(1) of the Supreme Court Act[146] provided an adequate alternative remedy, it may decline to grant any relief. If the court came to the opposite conclusion, it may decide to grant a judicial review remedy.

[171] Section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act[147] does not deprive section 40(1) of the Supreme Court Act of its force.

[172] First, Alberta does not have the constitutional authority to regulate the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court.[148] Only Parliament has the authority to do so.[149] As a result, the presumption of [143] D. Jones, Q.C. & A. de Villars, Q.C., Principles of Administrative Law 7 (7th ed. 2020) ("Superior courts have the inherent power to review the legality of administrative actions performed by statutory delegates; in other words, they have the inherent power to judicially review the actions or decisions of statutory delegates. This inherent power of judicial review is the natural consequence of the courts' role to interpret the meaning of statutes, including determining the ambit of statutes which grant powers to statutory delegates. Courts decide whether administrative actions are ultra vires. Superior courts have historically used the prerogative remedies of certiorari, mandamus, prohibition, quo warranto and habeas corpus to exercise supervisory jurisdiction over inferior courts and statutory delegates") (emphasis added).

---

[144] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43.

[145] Harelkin v. University of Regina, [1979] 2 S.C.R. 561, 592 per Beetz, J. ("I have reached the conclusion that appellant's right of appeal to the senate committee provided him with an adequate alternative remedy [to judicial review]. In addition, this remedy was in my opinion a more convenient remedy for appellant as well as for the university in terms of costs and expeditiousness") & Chad Investments Ltd. v. Longson, Tammets & Denton Real Estate Ltd., 20 D.L.R. 3d 627, 631 (Alta. Sup. Ct. App. Div. 1971) per McDermid, J.A. ("It is a wrongful exercise of judicial discretion, unless there are special circumstances, to grant an order of certiorari where the party aggrieved has been given an effective right of appeal which the party has not taken advantage of and which has expired"). See D. Jones, Q.C. & A. de Villars, Q.C., Principles of Administrative Law 602 (7th ed. 2020) ("the existence of a statutory right of appeal may result in a court exercising its discretion to refuse to grant judicial review of a statutory delegate's decision, and, as a result, deny the remedies available on judicial review").

[146] R.S.C. 1985, c. S-26.

[147] R.S.A. 2000, c. A-43.

[148] L. Watt, G. Ragan, G. Régimbald, J. Beedell & M. Estabrooks, Supreme Court of Canada Practice (2022) 1.1 ("Where a provincial statute has removed the right of appeal to a provincial court of appeal, a direct appeal will lie to the [Supreme] Court with leave. In other words, a province cannot constitutionally deprive litigants of an appeal to the Court by legislating that there shall be no further appeal from a judgment of a provincial appellate court").

[149] Crown Grain Co. v. Day, [1908] A.C. 504, 507 (P.C.) (Can.) per Lord Robertson ("It is to be observed that the subject in conflict [the jurisdiction of the Supreme Court of Canada] belongs primarily to the subject-matter committed validity means that section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act only limits the jurisdiction of judges of the Court of Queen's Bench and the Court of Appeal – courts established by provincial legislation[150] – to hear appeals against orders of masters in chambers and judges of the Court of Queen's Bench respectively.

[173] Second, if Alberta does have the constitutional authority to preclude appeals from a master in chambers or a judge of the Court of Queen's Bench to the Supreme Court of Canada, which I am satisfied it does not, the doctrine of dominion paramountcy[151] resolves the conflict between section 7(6) of the Arbitration Act and section 40(1) of the Supreme Court Act in favor of the Supreme Court Act. As Professor Lederman opines, if the dominion paramountcy doctrine is engaged, "provincial legislation is suspended or inoperative".[152] to the Dominion Parliament, namely, the establishment of the Court of Appeal for Canada. But, further, let it be assumed that the subject-matter is open to both legislative bodies [Manitoba and Parliament]; if the powers thus overlap, the enactment of the Dominion Parliament must prevail") & Re Sutherland, 134 D.L.R. 3d 177, 181 (Man. C.A. chambers 1982) per Huband, J.A. ("The Payment of Wages Act purports to make the decision of the County Court Judge 'final'. But the Supreme Court Act recognizes the possibility of an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada from any 'final or other judgment of the highest court of final resort in a province'. For the purposes of the Payment of Wages Act, there can be no doubt but that the provincial legislature has endeavoured to constitute the County Court as the Court of final resort in a Province. But in doing so, the provincial legislature has not attempted to foreclose an appeal to the Supreme Court of Canada"). See P. Hogg, Constitutional Law of Canada § 8:5 (5th ed. looseleaf rel. 2021-1) ("If a province would prefer that litigation in a field within provincial jurisdiction be finally disposed of at the level of the provincial court of appeal, it cannot constitutionally give effect to that preference").

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

[150] Court of Queen's Bench Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. C-31 & Court of Appeal Act, R.S.A. 2000, c. C-30.

[151] Lederman, "Classification of Laws and the British North America Act" in Legal Essays in Honour of Arthur Moxon 202 (J. Corry, F. Cronkite & E. Whitmore eds. 1953) reprinted in W. Lederman, Continuing Canadian Constitutional Dilemmas 244-45 (1981) ("it is a principle of our constitution that in the event of a collision between a federal law and a provincial law each valid under the double-aspect theory, the federal features of the former law are considered in the last analysis more important than the provincial features of the latter") & Canadian Western Bank v. Alberta, 2007 SCC 22, ¶ 32; [2007] 2 S.C.R. 3, 30 per Binnie & LeBel, JJ. ("the doctrine of federal paramountcy ... recognizes that where laws of the federal and provincial levels come into conflict, there must be a rule to resolve the impasse. Under our system, the federal law prevails").

[152] Lederman, "Some Forms and Limitations of Co-Operative Federalism", 45 Can. B. Rev. 409, 417 (1967) ("In the event of conflict, the judicial doctrine of dominion paramountcy is to the effect that federal legislation prevails and provincial legislation is suspended or inoperative").

VII. Conclusion

[174] I would allow the appeal – the order under appeal is of no effect with the result that the order of Master Prowse remains in force.

[175] I acknowledge the very high quality of counsel's written and oral arguments.

Appeal heard on June 15, 2022

Memorandum filed at Calgary, Alberta
this 8th day of August, 2022

Wakeling J.A.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

Appearances:

D.J. McDonald, Q.C./M. Deyholos
for the Appellant

R.B. Drewry, Q.C./A.F. Jeffs for the Respondent, Orbis Engineering Field Services Ltd.

C.J. Popowich/K.L. Reiffenstein for the Respondents, Elliott Turbomachinery Canada Inc. and Elliott Company

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

Corrigendum of the Memorandum of Judgment of the Honourable Justice Crighton and the Honourable Justice Ho

Dissenting Memorandum of Judgment of the Honourable Justice Wakeling

---

Page 51 - Counsel has been changed from L.K. Feehan to A.F. Jeffs for the Respondent, Orbis Engineering Field Services Ltd.

2022 ABCA 266 (CanLII)

CED Guarantee, Indemnity and Standby Letters of Credit § 134

Canadian Encyclopedic Digest

Guarantee, Indemnity and Standby Letters of Credit

Prepared by Kevin McGuinness, LL.B., LL.M., S.J.D., Steele Raymond Professor of Business Law, Bournemouth University, England; Member of the Law Society of Upper Canada and the Law Society of England and Wales: October 1996, Updated by the legal editorial staff of Thomson Reuters Canada: January 2025

XIII. Indemnities

D. Miscellaneous

---

§ 134. Indemnification Against Own Negligence

Topic Summary

The law presumes that any indemnity given to a person is not intended to extend to loss or cost arising by reason of that person's own negligence or the negligence of his or her employees or agents. [1] However, as noted above, there is no absolute prohibition against the provision of an indemnity to a person against his or her own negligence—indeed, public liability insurance would scarcely exist if there was such a prohibition—and therefore the question whether a particular contractual or other indemnity affords such protection is one of construction. [2] Nevertheless, in construing contractual indemnities other than insurance contracts, there is a strong bias in the courts against interpreting the indemnity as affording protection against the indemnified person's own negligence. [3] By and large, the courts' attitude in construing indemnity provisions is stricter than that which they adopt in construing the scope of exclusion clauses. [4]

Absent an express provision dealing with negligence, [5] a right to indemnity will be inferred only where it arises by necessary implication, that is, where no interpretation of the indemnity agreement is possible other than that it must extend to negligence in order for the provision to be given meaning. Specifically, if the words used in the agreement are wide enough to encompass negligence, the court will consider whether there is some non-negligent base of liability that is neither remote nor fanciful which the parties might have had in mind when drafting the contract. If such an alternative liability exists, then the court will construe the indemnity not to apply to the indemnified person's own negligence. [6]

© 2025 Thomson Reuters Canada Limited.

Footnotes

1 Walters v. Whessoe Ltd. (1968), 6 Build. L.R. 23 (C.A.); E.E. Caledonia Ltd. v. Orbit Valve Co. Europe, [1993] 4 All E.R. 165 (Eng. Q.B.).

2 Smith v. South Wales Switchgear Ltd. (1977), [1978] 1 All E.R. 18 (U.K. H.L.).

3 E.E. Caledonia Ltd. v. Orbit Valve Co. Europe, [1993] 4 All E.R. 165 (Eng. Q.B.).

4 Livingstone v. Roskilly, [1992] 3 N.Z.L.R. 230; Smith v. South Wales Switchgear Ltd. (1977), [1978] 1 All E.R. 18 (U.K. H.L.).

5 Hancock Shipping Co. v. Deacon & Trysail (Private) Ltd., [1991] 2 Lloyds Rep. 550 (Q.B.).

WESTLAW EDGE CANADA Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.

6 Alderslade v. Hendon Laundry Ltd., [1945] 1 All E.R. 244 (Eng. C.A.); Canada Steamship Lines Ltd. v. R., [1952] A.C. 192 (Canada P.C.); E.E. Caledonia Ltd. v. Orbit Valve Co. Europe, [1993] 4 All E.R. 165 (Eng. Q.B.); Kocherkewych v. Greyhound Canada Transportation Corp. (2006), 2006 CarswellBC 808 (B.C. S.C.) (indemnity clause not containing express language exempting corporation from negligence of its own employees; words not wide enough in their ordinary meaning to cover such consequence; such liability being remarkable obligation and requiring very clear words; corporation's interpretation contradicted by other clause in agreement; clause directed to other non-fanciful heads of damage).

End of Document

Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.

HMF-28 Requisite elements of the tort of fraudulent misrepresentation.

Halsbury's Laws of Canada - Misrepresentation and Fraud (2023 Reissue), 2023 Reissue

Margaret Isabel Hall, Shirley Margolis (Main Title Contributors)

(Updates prepared by LexisNexis Canada Inc.)

HMF*-28

Halsbury's Laws of Canada - Misrepresentation and Fraud (2023 Reissue) (Jovellano, Margolis) > IV. Fraudulent Misrepresentation Founded in Tort > 1. The Tort of Fraudulent Misrepresentation > (2) Requisite Elements of the Tort

IV. Fraudulent Misrepresentation Founded in Tort

1. The Tort of Fraudulent Misrepresentation

(2) Requisite Elements of the Tort

Requisite elements of the tort of fraudulent misrepresentation.

Cumulative Supplement - Current to December 15, 2023

Note 2

Chaba v. Khan, [2020] O.J. No. 4465, 2020 ONCA 643 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal refused (sub nom. Swat Emeraldmine and Marketing Inc. v. Chaba) [2020] S.C.C.A. No. 442 (S.C.C.). See also Rana v. Ramzan, [2023] O.J. No. 4668, 2023 ONSC 5792 (Ont. S.C.J.); Kramer v. Collins, [2023] O.J. No. 4723, 2023 ONSC 6011 (Ont. S.C.J.).

HMF-28 Requisite elements of the tort of fraudulent misrepresentation.

The requisite elements to establish the tort of fraudulent misrepresentation may be summarized as follows:

1. A false representation of fact made by the defendant to the plaintiff;
2. Some level of knowledge of the falsehood of the representation on the part of the defendant (including recklessness);
3. That the false representation caused the plaintiff to act (the plaintiff's actions were caused by their reliance on the defendant's representation); and
4. That the plaintiff's actions resulted in a loss to the plaintiff.[1]

Requirement of intention uncertain. Historically, a fifth element has been applied: a requirement of intention, on the part of the defendant, that the false representation be acted upon by the plaintiff, in addition to the plaintiff relying and thereby acting on the false statement.[2] Various courts have characterized this element as the defendant's intention to "induce" the plaintiff to act on the misrepresentation, an element separate and apart from the plaintiff's actually being induced to act by their belief in, and subsequent reliance on, the veracity of the false statement. However, there is some uncertainty as to whether a defendant's intention that the false representation be acted on remains a necessary element of a fraudulent misrepresentation claim.[3] Should it constitute a necessary element for such a claim, an intention may be proven directly with evidence, or inferred from the lack of evidence of a credible explanation for the actor's concealment or false representation.[4]

Misrepresentation must have been made to the plaintiff. A plaintiff must not merely show that they relied on the representations of the defendant that the latter knew were false or made recklessly without care for their truth or falsity.[5] The plaintiff must also demonstrate that the defendant made the false statement of fact directly to the plaintiff or, in the alternative, made the misrepresentation with the intent that the plaintiff would rely and act upon it.[6]

Reliance is a subjective test. The element of reliance is essential to proving a claim of fraudulent misrepresentation.[7] In determining whether a plaintiff has proven the element of reliance when making a claim for the tort of deceit, courts apply a subjective test[8] and ask whether the defendant's misrepresentation was material to the plaintiff and thereby induced them to act.[9]

Implied existence of a legal duty. While the requisite elements for fraudulent misrepresentation do not require there to be a legal duty owed by the defendant to the plaintiff, an implied duty will be found.[10] The implied duty relates to a representor's responsibility to avoid making a statement of fact to a representee that they know to be false, or recklessly without care for its truth or falsity, with the intention that the representee would rely and act upon it.[11] Where the representor knowingly makes a false statement of fact that the representee relies upon to their detriment, the representor breaches the implied legal duty, and the representee has a case for fraudulent misrepresentation.[12]

Footnote(s)

1 Bruno Appliance and Furniture, Inc. v. Hryniak, [2014] S.C.J. No. 8 at paras. 18-21, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 126 (S.C.C.). See also Bank of Montreal v. 1870769 Ontario Inc., [2022] O.J. No. 4237, 2022 ONSC 5100 (Ont. S.C.J.).

2 Midland Resources Holding Limited v. Shtaif, [2017] O.J. No. 1978 at para. 162, 2017 ONCA 320 (Ont. C.A.), citing Amertek Inc. v. Canadian Commercial Corp., [2005] O.J. No. 2789 at para. 63, 76 O.R. (3d) 241 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal refused [2005] S.C.C.A. No. 439 (S.C.C.); Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce v. Deloitte & Touche, [2003] O.J. No. 2069 at para. 21, 172 O.A.C. 59 (Ont. S.C.J.), citing Parna v. G. & S. Properties Ltd., [1970] S.C.J. No. 81, 15 D.L.R. (3d) 336 at 344 (S.C.C.); Chaba v. Khan, [2020] O.J. No. 4465 at para. 15, 2020 ONCA 643 (Ont. C.A.), referring with approval to Mariani v. Lemstra, [2004] O.J. No. 4283 at para. 12, 246 D.L.R. (4th) 489 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal refused [2004] S.C.C.A. No. 355 (S.C.C.). See also Silver v. Imax Corp., [2009] O.J. No. 5585 at para. 76, 86 C.P.C. (6th) 273 (Ont. S.C.J.), leave to appeal refused [2011] O.J. No. 656, 2011 ONSC 1035 (Ont. Div. Ct.), citing Carom v. Bre-X Minerals Ltd., [1998] O.J. No. 1428 at paras. 24-25, 20 C.P.C. (4th) 163 (Ont. Gen. Div.), where the Court held that this element of the action is met where a plaintiff demonstrates that the defendant intended that a class of persons including the plaintiff, and not merely the plaintiff, would rely upon the misrepresentation.

3 Trump v. Singh, [2016] O.J. No. 5285 at para. 141, 2016 ONCA 747 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal refused [2016] S.C.C.A. No. 548 (S.C.C.). In that case, the Court held that "… it is not clear from the case law that an intention that the false representation be acted on is a necessary element of a fraudulent misrepresentation claim", citing Bruno Appliance and Furniture, Inc. v. Hryniak, [2014] S.C.J. No. 8 at para. 21, 2014 SCC 8, [2014] 1 S.C.R. 126 (S.C.C.), and Bhasin v. Hrynew, [2014] S.C.J. No. 71 at para. 88, 2014 SCC 71, [2014] 3 S.C.R. 494 (S.C.C.). See also Nguyen v. Adas, [2022] O.J. No. 1930 at para. 55, 2022 ONSC 2541 (Ont. S.C.J.).

4 Precision Drilling Canada Limited Partnership v. Yangarra Resources Ltd., [2017] A.J. No. 1194 at para. 32, 2017 ABCA 378 (Alta. C.A.). See also Caroti v. Vuletic, [2022] O.J. No. 3955 at para. 547, 2022 ONSC 4695 (Ont. S.C.J.).

5 997219 Ontario Inc. (c.o.b. Lightning Capital) v. Mantella, [2002] O.J. No. 372 at para. 24 (Ont. S.C.J.) citing Lewis N. Klar, Tort Law, 2d ed. (Toronto: Carswell, 1996), at 495.

6 997219 Ontario Inc. (c.o.b. Lightning Capital) v. Mantella, [2002] O.J. No. 372 at para. 24 (Ont. S.C.J.) citing Lewis N. Klar, Tort Law, 2d ed. (Toronto: Carswell, 1996), at 495.

7 Kelemen v. El-Homeira, [1999] A.J. No. 1279 at para. 7, 73 Alta. L.R. (3d) 399 (Alta. C.A.), leave to appeal refused [2000] S.C.C.A. No. 140 (S.C.C.) citing Clerk & Lindsell on Torts, 17th ed. (London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1995) at 732.

8 Kelemen v. El-Homeira, [1999] A.J. No. 1279 at para. 10, 73 Alta. L.R. (3d) 399 (Alta. C.A.), leave to appeal refused [2000] S.C.C.A. No. 140 (S.C.C.).

9 Kelemen v. El-Homeira, [1999] A.J. No. 1279 at para. 7, 73 Alta. L.R. (3d) 399 (Alta. C.A.), leave to appeal refused [2000] S.C.C.A. No. 140 (S.C.C.) citing Clerk & Lindsell on Torts, 17th ed. (London: Sweet & Maxwell, 1995) at 732.

10 Re Bozzo, [2005] O.J. No. 2037 at para. 25, 10 C.B.R. (5th) 1 (Ont. S.C.J.).

11 Re Bozzo, [2005] O.J. No. 2037 at para. 25, 10 C.B.R. (5th) 1 (Ont. S.C.J.).

12 Re Bozzo, [2005] O.J. No. 2037 at para. 25, 10 C.B.R. (5th) 1 (Ont. S.C.J.).

End of Document

HGI-113 Meaning and scope of contractual indemnities.

Halsbury's Laws of Canada - Guarantee and Indemnity (2022 Reissue)

Alison Manzer, Charles Newman, Marc Mercier, Jennifer Wasylyk, Corina Capmare (Main Title Contributors)

HGI-113

Halsbury's Laws of Canada - Guarantee and Indemnity (2022 Reissue) (Manzer, Newman, Mercier, Wasylyk, Capmare) > III. Assessing the Liability of the Surety > 3. Non-Guarantee Indemnities > (1) Contractual Indemnities Distinguished from Similar Obligations

III. Assessing the Liability of the Surety

3. Non-Guarantee Indemnities

(1) Contractual Indemnities Distinguished from Similar Obligations

HGI-113 Meaning and scope of contractual indemnities.

A contract of indemnity is one in which the promisor undertakes to indemnify the promisee against a liability or loss, independent of whether there is default by some other person.[1] As obligations which require one party to make good the loss of another, contracts of indemnity may be said in broad terms to include such agreements as guarantees[2] and insurance contracts,[3] but contracts of indemnity are not limited to agreements of these types. Indeed, the term “indemnity” is most often used to describe original (primary) obligations to indemnify, rather than collateral agreements in the nature of a guarantee. Accordingly, an indemnity agreement may be a stand-alone as an obligation, and unlike a guarantee is not necessarily dependent for its survival either upon the existence or continuation of some other primary obligation.[4]

Indemnities distinguished from insurance contracts. It is customary to distinguish insurance contracts from indemnities generally[5] (such non-insurance indemnities being termed “simple indemnities”). At common law, the right of an insured party arose as soon as the event specified in the insurance contract occurred. Thus where a person was covered by a policy of liability insurance, that person might claim under their policy in respect of any liability which that person incurred as soon as the liability arose, and it was immaterial that the insured had not first discharged that liability.[6] In contrast, at common law, a right to obtain indemnification in respect of a potential liability did not become enforceable at law until such time as the liability has been discharged[7] (as the right to claim at law was founded in debt), although the contrary was in general the case in equity.[8] With the fusion of the courts of law and equity in the mid-19th century, this particular distinction between insurance and indemnities has in large measure ceased to be of significance. However, there remain distinctions between insurance contracts and indemnity agreements, which continue to have practical ramifications. For instance, unlike insurance contracts, a simple contract of indemnity is not one in which the protected party must act with the utmost good faith. Moreover, a simple contract of indemnity may secure the party entitled to the indemnity against a loss that is known to have already been suffered.[9]

Footnote(s)

1 Canadian General Insurance Co v. Dube Ready-Mix Ltd., [1984] N.B.J. No. 50, 52 N.B.R. (2d) 66 (N.B.C.A.), and see generally: Pontifex v. Foord (1884), 12 Q.B.D. 152 (Q.B.); Tritton v. Bankart (1887), 56 L.J. Ch. 629 (Ch.); Speller v. Bristol Steam Nav. Co. (1884), 13 Q.B.D. 96 (C.A.); Credit Foncier Trust Co. v. Zatala Holdings Inc., [1986] B.C.J. No. 516, 48 B.C.L.R. (2d) 25 (B.C.C.A.).

2 In Harburg India Rubber Comb. Co. v. Martin, [1902] 1 K.B. 778 at 784 (C.A.), Vaughan William L.J. describes guarantees as the class of indemnity that is required by the Statute of Frauds to be in writing.

3 Castellain v. Preston (1883), 11 Q.B.D. 380 at 386 (C.A.).

4 British Columbia v. Clearwater (Canada) Hatcheries Ltd., [1994] B.C.J. No. 1787, 95 B.C.L.R. (2d) 396 (B.C.S.C.).

5 Goulston Discount Co. v. Clark, [1967] 2 Q.B. 493 (C.A.).

6 Re Law Guarantee Trust and Accident Society Ltd., Liverpool Mortgage Ins. Co. Case, [1914] 2 Ch. 617 (C.A.); Re Eddystone Marine Insurance Co., [1892] 2 Ch. 423 (Ch. D.).

7 See, for instance, Goddard v. Vanderheyden (1771), 3 Wils. 262, 2 Black. W. 795, 96 E.R. 467 (K.B.); Reynolds v. Doyle (1840), 1 Man. & G. 753, 133 E.R. 536 (C.P.).

8 Law Guarantee Trust and Accident Society Ltd. v. Munich Reinsurance Co. (1915), 31 T.L.R. 572 (Ch. D.).

9 In the Marriage of Langford (1992), 110 F.L.R. 396 at 400 (Aust. Fam. Ct.), per Nygh J.

End of Document

HBC-306 Specific exclusions.

Halsbury's Laws of Canada - Business Corporations (2022 Reissue)

Ruth I. Wahl, Maurice Coombs (Main Title Contributors)

(Updates prepared by LexisNexis Canada Inc.)

HBC-306

Halsbury's Laws of Canada - Business Corporations (2022 Reissue) (Wahl, Coombs) > XIV. Shareholder Remedies > 2. The Oppression Remedy > (8) Procedural Considerations > (d) Bars to Action

XIV. Shareholder Remedies

2. The Oppression Remedy

(8) Procedural Considerations

(d) Bars to Action

Specific exclusions.

Cumulative Supplement - Current to June 1, 2024

Note 1

(MB) Limitation of Actions Act, C.C.S.M. c. L150 should read Limitations Act, C.C.S.M. c. L150.

HBC-306 Specific exclusions.

There are a number of cases that deal with bars to oppression relief.[1] For instance, it has been held that the oppression and derivative action remedies will not be permitted to be used by minority shareholders to extort benefits from the majority shareholders or other controlling group in the corporation.[2] Relief is available to a claimant under s. 241 of the Canada Business Corporations Act and its equivalents if, and only if, the applicant can establish that the applicant has suffered detriment in their capacity as a complainant.[3] In the ordinary case, where the corporation abandons the course of action on which the complainant's application is based, no order will be made, for in such a case the abandonment constitutes the remedy.[4] More generally, the oppression remedy is not intended to require (nor to empower) the courts to review every decision made within a corporation. It does not offer a general right of appeal from the internal decision-making process of the corporation.[5] The court may refuse a remedy where there has been prolonged delay in bringing an application in regard to oppressive conduct.[6] However, this principle should not be too far extended. Ordinarily, in the case of equitable relief, delay will bar action only where the potential claimant was aware of the facts giving rise to the cause of action and failed to proceed. Since potential claimants will often possess only limited knowledge about what is transpiring in relation to the corporation, its business or affairs, as a practical matter it may be difficult for them to determine whether they have a realistic chance of a claim, even though they may be dissatisfied in some general way with the manner in which the business or affairs of the corporation are being conducted. Moreover, the voluntary withdrawal of a shareholder from active participation in a corporation does not prevent that shareholder from seeking relief under the oppression remedy, nor does the fact that the shareholders allowed the directors to run the business for a prolonged period of time without demanding that annual meetings be held or financial statements provided. The obligation is upon the directors of a corporation to call annual meetings of shareholders, to carry out their other corporate governance duties and to account for their administration of the corporation, not upon the shareholders to superintend the directors.[7]

Footnote(s)

1 As to the application of the (MB) Limitation of Actions Act, R.S.M. 1987, c. L150 (now (MB) Limitation of Actions Act, C.C.S.M. c. L150), to oppression proceedings, see Jaska v. Jaska, [1996] M.J. No. 579, 30 B.L.R. (2d) 104 (Man. C.A.). As for whether a complainant may reject a reasonable compromise and insist upon taking the dispute to court, see Re A Company (No. 00836 of 1995), [1996] 2 B.C.L.C. 192 (Ch. D.).

2 Mason v. Intercity Properties Ltd., [1987] O.J. No. 448, 59 O.R. (2d) 631 (Ont. C.A.), leave to appeal refused [1987] S.C.C.A. No. 402, 62 O.R. (2d) ix (S.C.C.).

3 (CAN) Canada Business Corporations Act, R.S.C. 1985, c. C-44, s. 241. See Diligenti v. RWMD Operations Kelowna Ltd., [1976] B.C.J. No. 38, 1 B.C.L.R. 36 (B.C.S.C.).

4 V.F. Erickson Consultants Ltd. v. Ventures West Minerals Ltd., [1990] B.C.J. No. 1111 (B.C.C.A.).

5 Zephyr Holdings Pty Ltd. v. Jack Chia (Australia) Ltd. (1989), 7 A.C.L.C. 239, per Brooking J. (S.C. Vic.); see also Thomas v. H.W. Thomas Ltd., [1984] 1 N.Z.L.R. 686, 2 A.C.L.C. 610 (C.A.).

6 Jaska v. Jaska, [1996] M.J. No. 579, 141 D.L.R. (4th) 385 (Man. C.A.). In Zhao v. Li, [2020] O.J. No. 671, 2020 ONCA 121 (Ont. C.A.), the Court addressed aspects of how limitation periods apply to oppression remedy claims under the (ON) Business Corporations Act, R.S.O. 1990, c. B.16. Following the sale of a business, claims arose for: failure to share the proceeds of sale and profits for the preceding year; and dissolution of the business without the complainant's knowledge. These were singular discrete oppressive acts rather than ongoing oppression. The failure to share proceeds and profits claims were statute-barred, since they were discoverable before the expiry of the limitation period, while the claim based on the dissolution of the corporation was not statute-barred, since the dissolution occurred later.

7 See, generally, Bernhardt v. Main Outboard Centre Ltd., [1994] M.J. No. 521, 17 B.L.R. (2d) 219 (Man. Q.B.).

End of Document

HGI-114 Circumstances under which the right to indemnity may exist.

Halsbury's Laws of Canada - Guarantee and Indemnity (2022 Reissue)

Alison Manzer, Charles Newman, Marc Mercier, Jennifer Wasylyk, Corina Capmare (Main Title Contributors)

HGI-114

Halsbury's Laws of Canada - Guarantee and Indemnity (2022 Reissue) (Manzer, Newman, Mercier, Wasylyk, Capmare) > III. Assessing the Liability of the Surety > 3. Non-Guarantee Indemnities > (1) Contractual Indemnities Distinguished from Similar Obligations > (a) Distinguished from Right to Damages

III. Assessing the Liability of the Surety

3. Non-Guarantee Indemnities

(1) Contractual Indemnities Distinguished from Similar Obligations

(a) Distinguished from Right to Damages

HGI-114 Circumstances under which the right to indemnity may exist.

Although there is a similarity in their respective practical consequence, a right to be indemnified is not the same as a right to recover damages.[1] A right to recover damages is a legal right in favour of a plaintiff to be compensated by a defendant for injuries recognized at law, which were suffered by the plaintiff as a result of the wrongful conduct of the defendant. A right of indemnity may exist where the plaintiff has suffered no injury[2] at the hands of the person who is obliged to indemnify, and even where the wrong giving rise to the claim for indemnity was committed by some third party,[3] or where no wrong has been committed by any person but the indemnifier is nonetheless obliged to make good a loss which has been suffered by the claimant.

As compared to right to recover damages for breach of contract. A right to recover the damages occasioned by a breach of contract is the converse of a contractual right to an indemnity. Where a contractual right of indemnity exists, the right to an indemnity constitutes a term of the contract and forms part of the contract between the parties.[4] A right to damages for breach of contract, on the other hand, arises as a consequence of the breach of the original bargain which the parties made. A right to recover damages for breach of contract is not part of a contract; it is an incident that the law attaches to a breach of the contract, rather than a provision of the contract itself.[5]

As compared to right of damages for tortious injury. A similar distinction exists in the case of a right of damages for tortious injury. Every person has a right at common law to recover the amount of the damages occasioned to them as a result of the tortious conduct of another person.[6] That right is not founded upon any principle of implied contract, but is a legal right in favour of a plaintiff to be compensated for the injuries suffered at the hands of a wrongdoer. Nevertheless, when it comes to ascertaining the measure of damages that the plaintiff has suffered, it may be that indemnity will properly express the measure of damages.[7]

Footnote(s)

1 McFee v. Young (1905), 1 W.L.R. 383 at 385 (N.W.T.S.C.), per Wetmore J.; Birmingham & District Land Co. v. London & North Western Rlwy. (1886), 34 Ch. D. 261 at 274 (C.A.), per Bowen L.J. and at 276, per Fry L.J.

2 While a claim for damages may be made only in respect of injuries that are recognized at law, a claim based upon a right of indemnity is not so limited. Thus the parties to a contract may provide for a right of indemnity to compensate the protected party against forms of loss that do not generally represent types of injury which the law will recognize (legal costs on a solicitor-and-client basis, being just one common example). However, in order to claim the benefit of an indemnity it is necessary to prove that the event to which the indemnity relates has occurred, otherwise a plea of non damnificatus may be raised in defence of a claim under the indemnity: Leeming v. Smith, [1877] O.J. No. 232, 25 Gr. 256 (Ont. Ct. Ch.); Sutherland v. Webster, [1894] O.J. No. 17, 21 O.A.R. 228 (Ont. C.A.).

3 Compare the definition found in s. 124 of the Indian Contract Code Act, 1872, c. 9: “A contract by which one party promises to save the other from loss caused to him by the conduct of the promisor himself, or by the conduct of any other person, is called a contract of indemnity.”

4 McLean v. Dinning, [1922] S.J. No. 50, 63 D.L.R. 507 (Sask. C.A.).

5 Birmingham & District Land Co. v. London & North Western Ry. (1886), 34 Ch. D. 261 at 274-75 (C.A.), per Bowen L.J., and at 276, per Fry L.J.

6 As to the difference between a right of indemnity and a right to relief over in third party proceedings, see Australian Newsprint Mills Ltd. v. Canadian Union Line Ltd., [1953] B.C.J. No. 118, [1953] 2 D.L.R. 828 (B.C.C.A.), affd [1954] S.C.J. No. 21, [1954] S.C.R. 307 (S.C.C.).

7 Birmingham & District Land Co. v. London & North Western Ry. (1886), 34 Ch. D. 261 (C.A.). See also McLean v. Tinsley, [1849] O.J. No. 179, 7 U.C.R. 40 (U.C. Ct. Q.B.).

End of Document

CED Contracts § 189

Canadian Encyclopedic Digest

Contracts

Prepared by Warren H.O. Mueller, B.A., LL.B., LL.M., Q.C., and D. Morgan, B.A., LL.B, LL.M.: September 2008, Updated by the legal editorial staff of Thomson Reuters Canada: January 2025

XII. Express Terms; Performance of Contract

B. Performance

---

§ 189. Duty of Good Faith in Performing Contracts

Topic Summary

The legal characterization of the relationship between contracting parties largely determines their obligations to each other. [1] The graduated obligations arising between commercial contracting parties have been ordered in a three-tiered theoretical framework which is often cited in recent Canadian judgments: [2] "the unconscionability standard", "the good faith standard" and the "fiduciary standard". [3] Although all three standards are concerned with the extent to which one contracting party is obliged to acknowledge and to respect the interests of the other, each standard, in setting its own limits, proceeds from a different premise. Thus, "unconscionability" accepts that one party is entitled as of course to act self-interestedly in his or her actions toward the other; however, it protects those who are vulnerable in the contracting process from loss or improvidence to that party in the bargain. [4] "Good faith", while permitting a party to act self-interestedly, also positively requires that such party, in his or her decisions and actions, have regard to the legitimate interests of the other party. [5] The "fiduciary" standard enjoins one party to act in the interests of the other—that is, to act selflessly and with undivided loyalty. [6] The demarcation where one standard of behaviour ends and another begins is not always clear. [7] The duty of good faith is not a fiduciary duty, and it does not extend to create new, unbargained rights. [8]

The courts recognize that there is an organizing principle of good faith that underlies and manifests itself in various more specific doctrines governing contractual performance. That organizing principle is simply that parties generally must perform their contractual duties honestly and reasonably and not capriciously or arbitrarily. [9]

Not every contract imposes actionable good faith obligations on contracting parties. While good faith is an organizing principle of Canadian contract law, it manifests itself in specific circumstances. In particular, its application is generally confined to existing categories of contracts and obligations. [10]

Canadian courts have traditionally proceeded quite cautiously in recognizing duties of good faith in the performance and enforcement of contracts. [11] References in judicial decisions to good faith obligations have usually been made where the result of the case has been determined by the application of other, more established, legal principles, such as that regarding implied terms. [12] Thus, unlike the situation in Quebec [13] and the United States, [14] where a duty of good faith in the performance of commercial contracts was broadly recognized, Canadian courts took more time in developing a comprehensive and principled approach to good faith obligations in commercial contracts. In particular, they have not recognized a stand-alone duty of good faith that is independent from the terms expressed in a contract or from the objectives that emerge from its provisions, [15] although the law in this regard is currently unsettled. [16] Lastly, the Supreme Court of Canada recently held that it is time to take two incremental steps in order to make the common law less unsettled and piecemeal, more coherent and more just with regard to contracts. The first step is to acknowledge that good faith contractual performance is a general organizing principle of the common law of contract which underpins and informs the various rules in which the common law, in various situations and types of relationships, recognizes obligations of good faith contractual performance. The second is to recognize that there is a common law duty which applies to all contracts to act honestly in the performance of contractual obligations. [17] As for the concept of bad faith, it is flexible, and its content will vary from one area of law to another. [18]

WESTLAW EDGE CANADA Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.

Canadian courts have recently expanded the range of "special" relationships giving rise to a duty of good faith beyond those traditionally giving rise to fiduciary obligations, such as trusts, [19] partnerships, [20] joint ventures, [21] and agency, [22] and the relationship of utmost good faith created by an insurance contract, [23] as well as such situations as tendering contracts, [24] mortgagees in possession, [25] grantors exercising rights of first refusal, [26] and termination of long-standing contractual arrangements. [27] For example, the courts have regarded employment contracts as having unique characteristics setting them apart from ordinary commercial contracts, giving rise to an obligation to act in good faith in the termination of an employee. [28] And franchise arrangements have been characterized as contracts of adhesion, giving rise to good faith obligations. [29] However, parties to ordinary commercial contracts, which are usually not characterized by vulnerability and trust, are generally not subject to a general and overriding good faith obligation. [30] Where a duty of good faith exists, not every breach of contract will be a breach of the duty of good faith. [31] Canada's law of conflicts as administered by the courts is based on precedents rooted in English jurisprudence. [32] Lastly, the Supreme Court of Canada recently held that it is time to take two incremental steps in order to make the common law less unsettled and piecemeal, more coherent and more just with regard to contracts. The first step is to acknowledge that good faith contractual performance is a general organizing principle of the common law of contract which underpins and informs the various rules in which the common law, in various situations and types of relationships, recognizes obligations of good faith contractual performance. The second is to recognize that there is a common law duty which applies to all contracts to act honestly in the performance of contractual obligations. [33]

Canadian courts have generally accepted that once a contract has been entered into, [34] the parties must perform their respective obligations in good faith, even if there is no express contractual provision to this effect in the contract itself. This duty of good faith performance either arises by operation of law, within the parameters of what the court considers to be fair dealing between the parties [35] or, alternatively, is an implied term of the contract, [36] particularly where required to give the agreement business efficacy. [37] Cases in which a duty of good faith has been implied have been viewed as falling into three broad categories: [38] (i) those imposing a duty to co-operate in achieving the objectives of the agreement; [39] (ii) those imposing limits on the exercise of discretionary powers provided for in the contract; [40] and (iii) those precluding parties from evading contractual duties, such as by engaging in conduct not strictly prohibited by the letter of their agreement, but that effectively defeats the other party's contractual rights. [41] A duty of good faith may also arise from one party's representations or undertakings to the other party. [42] Whether or not a party under a duty of good faith has breached that duty will depend on all the circumstances of the case, including whether the party subject to a duty of good faith conducted itself fairly throughout the process. [43] Lastly, whether or not there is good faith is dependent on the facts, circumstances and contractual terms. [44]

The Supreme Court of Canada has expanded the duty of honest performance. Parties to a contract can breach the duty of honest performance by knowingly misleading the other party, even if the misleading action is silence. To "knowingly mislead" can include half-truths, misleading actions, or failing to correct a misrepresentation that the representing party believed was true at the time of the representation, but later learned was false. Whether a party has knowingly mislead the other party is largely fact-specific, and deference must be shown to the trial judge who weighs the evidence. Outright lies are not requisite to a finding of a contractual breach. [45]

The remedy for breach of the duty of honest performance is expectation damages, putting the party in the position it would have been had the duty not been breached. [46]

WESTLAW EDGE CANADA Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.

© 2025 Thomson Reuters Canada Limited.

Footnotes

1 Machias v. Mr. Submarine Ltd. (2002), 2002 CarswellOnt 1176 (Ont. S.C.J.) (citing Finn, "The Fiduciary Principle", in Youdan, ed., Equity, Fiduciaries and Trusts (Carswell, 1989)); Leopold v. Leopold (2000), 2000 CarswellOnt 4707 (Ont. S.C.J.).

2 Hodgkinson v. Simms (1994), 1994 CarswellBC 438 (S.C.C.); Lac Minerals Ltd. v. International Corona Resources Ltd. (1989), 1989 CarswellOnt 126 (S.C.C.); Babcock v. Canada (Attorney General) (2005), 2005 CarswellBC 937 (B.C. S.C.); Trophy Foods Inc. v. Scott (1995), 1995 CarswellNS 218 (N.S. C.A.); Shelanu Inc. v. Print Three Franchising Corp. (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 2038 (Ont. C.A.); 978011 Ontario Ltd. v. Cornell Engineering Co. (2001), 2001 CarswellOnt 1290 (Ont. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (2001), 2001 CarswellOnt 3809 (S.C.C.); Peel Condominium Corp. No. 505 v. Cam-Valley Homes Ltd. (2001), 2001 CarswellOnt 579 (Ont. C.A.); Rogers & Rogers Inc. v. Pinehurst Woodworking Co. (2005), 2005 CarswellOnt 7190 (Ont. S.C.J.); Engels v. Richard Killen & Associates Ltd. (2002), 2002 CarswellOnt 2435 (Ont. S.C.J.); affirmed (2004), 2004 CarswellOnt 62 (Ont. C.A.); Machias v. Mr. Submarine Ltd. (2002), 2002 CarswellOnt 1176 (Ont. S.C.J.); Leopold v. Leopold (2000), 2000 CarswellOnt 4707 (Ont. S.C.J.); Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce v. Graat (1992), 1992 CarswellOnt 136 (Ont. Gen. Div.); affirmed (1997), 1997 CarswellOnt 340 (Ont. C.A.); Gregoric v. Gregoric (1991), 1991 CarswellOnt 3151 (Ont. Gen. Div.); Bank of Montreal v. McIntosh (1995), 1995 CarswellSask 281 (Sask. Q.B.).

3 Owners, Strata Plan LMS 3905 v. Crystal Square Parking Corp. (2020), 2020 SCC 29 (S.C.C.) (notion of unconscionability discussed); Finn, "The Fiduciary Principle", in T.G. Youdan, ed., Equity, Fiduciaries and Trusts (Carswell, 1989).

4 Uber Technologies Inc. v. Heller (2020), 2020 SCC 16 (S.C.C.) (allows courts to set aside unfair agreements that stray far from ideals of free, equal and fair contracting); see also Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce v. Ohlson (1997), 1997 CarswellAlta 1050 (Alta. C.A.) (unconscionability, like undue influence and duress, aiming to temper ideal of freedom to contract with need to prevent abuse and protect the weak; doctrine permitting application of judicial discretion to excuse obligant from performing contract); Deforest v. Deforest (1982), 1982 CarswellSask 175 (Sask. C.A.) ("constructive fraud" in equity including two related but distinct notions: agreement subject to rescission if obtained by "undue influence" or constituting "unconscionable bargain"); Zhao v. Chandi 2022 BCSC 1574 (B.C. S.C.) (facts showing there was no inequality in bargaining power between parties court also adding that agreement was not improvident).

5 Wastech Services Ltd. v. Greater Vancouver Sewerage and Drainage District (2021), 2021 SCC 7 (S.C.C.) (party must exercise its discretion reasonably, that is, in manner connected to underlying purposes of discretion granted by contract; no breach of duty to exercise contractual discretion in good faith in exercising contractual discretion to allocate waste volumes without also compensating for financial consequences of allocation); Massey v. Massey (2022), 2022 ONSC 5150 (Ont. S.C.J.) (while "appropriate regard" for other party's interests will vary depending on context of contractual relationship, it does not require acting to serve those interests in all cases; court adding that it merely requires that party not seek to undermine those interests in bad faith); Finn, "The Fiduciary Principle", in T.G. Youdan, ed., Equity, Fiduciaries and Trusts (Carswell, 1989).

6 1698496 Ontario Ltd. v. Zoberi (2015), 2015 CarswellOnt 16178 (Ont. S.C.J.) (fiduciary obligation requiring very "high obligation" of loyalty); Finn, "The Fiduciary Principle", in T.G. Youdan, ed., Equity, Fiduciaries and Trusts (Carswell, 1989); see also Hodgkinson v. Simms (1994), 1994 CarswellBC 438 (S.C.C.) (concept of "vulnerability" being golden thread uniting such related causes of action as breach of fiduciary duty, undue influence, unconscionability, and negligent misrepresentation).

7 Machias v. Mr. Submarine Ltd. (2002), 2002 CarswellOnt 1176 (Ont. S.C.J.).

8 Rio Algom Ltd. v. Canada (Attorney General) (2012), 2012 CarswellOnt 1200 (Ont. S.C.J.).

9 Sheik v. Lebovic Enterprises Limited (2021), 2021 ONSC 8512 (Ont. S.C.J.); Martens v. The Manitoba Public Insurance Corporation (2021), 2021 MBCA 102 (Man. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (2022), 2022 CarswellMan 292 (S.C.C.) (duty of good faith with regard to insurance discussed); 100 Bloor Street West Corp. v. Barry's BootCamp et al. (2022), 2022 ONSC 5054 (Ont. S.C.J.); affirmed, 2023 ONCA 247 (Ont. C.A.) (duty to exercise discretion in good faith will be breached where exercise of discretion is unreasonable in that it is unconnected to purposes for which discretion was granted); 2264052 Ontario Inc. (Louch & Louch) v. Brockville Centre

WESTLAW EDGE CANADA Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.

Development Corp. (2022), 2022 ONCA 610 (Ont. C.A.) (court explaining that underlying principle does not impose duty of loyalty or of disclosure, or require party to forego advantages flowing from contract; instead, it is merely requirement not to lie or mislead other party about one's contractual performance).

10 Atlantic Lottery Corp. Inc. v. Babstock (2020), 2020 SCC 19 (S.C.C.) (alleged contract not fitting within any of established good faith categories, nor did plaintiffs advance any argument for expanding those recognized categories); C.M. Callow Inc. v. Zollinger (2020), 2020 SCC 45 (S.C.C.) (organizing principle of good faith not treated as free-standing rule, but instead, manifests itself through existing good faith doctrines).

11 Mesa Operating Ltd. Partnership v. Amoco Canada Resources Ltd. (1994), 1994 CarswellAlta 89 (Alta. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (1994), 1994 CarswellAlta 1092 (S.C.C.) (general obligation expressed in terms of good faith not obvious part of contract law in England and Canada); Transamerica Life Canada Inc. v. ING Canada Inc. (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 4834 (Ont. C.A.) (Canadian courts not recognizing independent stand-alone duty of good faith, creating new, unbargained-for rights and obligations or permitting alteration of contract's express terms; rather, courts implying duty of good faith with view to securing performance and enforcement of contract made by parties); Ascent Financial Services Ltd. v. Blythman (2006), 2006 CarswellSask 83 (Sask. Q.B.); affirmed (2007), 2007 CarswellSask 390 (Sask. C.A.) (court declining to decide whether independent duty of good faith existing, as finding defendants breaching good faith requirement in performance of agreement transferring business); Newswest Corp. v. Glendar Holdings Ltd. (2001), 2001 CarswellSask 457 (Sask. Q.B.) (trial courts more willing to apply concept of good faith than appellate courts, which largely uphold trial decisions without specific reference to good faith obligation; too soon to conclude Canadian courts having recognized as general principle that contracts to be performed in good faith); but see Bhasin v. Hrynew (2014), 2014 CarswellAlta 2046 (S.C.C.) (Supreme Court of Canada creating new common law duty under broad umbrella of good faith performance of contracts and holding that there is general duty of honesty in contractual performance).

12 Transamerica Life Canada Inc. v. ING Canada Inc. (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 4834 (Ont. C.A.) (motions judge erring by striking plea of purchaser of shares regarding seller's duty to disclose facts coming to its attention during due diligence potentially prejudicing purchaser's position); Newswest Corp. v. Glendar Holdings Ltd. (2001), 2001 CarswellSask 457 (Sask. Q.B.) (trial courts more willing to apply concept of good faith than appellate courts, which largely uphold trial decisions without specific reference to good faith obligation; too soon to conclude Canadian courts have recognized as general principle that contracts must be performed in good faith); see also Belobaba, "Good Faith in Canadian Contract Law", Special Lectures of the Law Society of Upper Canada (Richard De Boo Publishers, 1985), p. 73; Bridge, "Does Anglo-Canadian Law Need a Doctrine of Good Faith?" (1984), 9 Can. Bus. L.J. 385, 413; McCamus, "The Duty of Good Faith Contractual Performance at Common Law" (paper presented to the N.J.I.: Civil Law Seminar, Contract Law: From Form to Remedies, Osgoode Hall Law School, May 17, 2000 (unpublished)); Tetley, "Good Faith in Contract, Particularly in the Contracts of Arbitration and Chartering" (2004), 35 JMLC 561.

13 Banque canadienne nationale c. Soucisse (1981), 1981 CarswellQue 110 (S.C.C.); Hôtel de l'Aéroport de Mirabel inc. c. Aéroports de Montréal (2002), 2002 CarswellQue 1372 (C.S. Que.); affirmed (2003), 2003 CarswellQue 1768 (C.A. Que.) (duty to negotiate in good faith recognized in Quebec law); Churchill Falls (Labrador) Corp. v. Hydro-Québec (2018), 2018 SCC 46 (S.C.C.) (good faith conferring broad, flexible power to create law and served as basis for court to intervene and to impose on contracting parties obligations that are based on notion of contractual fairness); C.M. Callow Inc. v. Zollinger (2020), 2020 SCC 45 (S.C.C.) (duty to act honestly in performance of contract precluded active deception; court reasoning that by exercising termination clause dishonestly, group breached duty of honesty on matter directly linked to performance of contract, even if ten-day notice period was satisfied and irrespective of motive for termination).

14 United States Uniform Commercial Code, art. 1, s. 1-304; Kang v. Sun Life Assurance Co. of Canada (2013), 2013 CarswellOnt 1909 (Ont. C.A.); Corbin, Perillo, Murray, Corbin on Contracts, Vol. 3 (Matthew Bender), s. 541, p. 95; Restatement of the Law (2d) of Contracts (American Law Institute Publishers, 1981), s. 205.

15 Aldo Group Inc. v. Moneris Solutions Corp. (2015), 2015 CarswellOnt 4734 (Ont. S.C.J.) (Canadian courts not recognizing stand-alone duty of good faith that is independent from terms of contract or objectives that emerge from those provisions); Martel Building Ltd. v. R. (2000), 2000 CarswellNat 2678 (S.C.C.) (tenant not owing duty of care to landlord in renewal negotiations such that negligence claim could be made for economic loss arising out of conduct of negotiations); Princeton Light & Power Co. v. MacDonald (2005), 2005 CarswellBC 1254 (B.C. C.A.) (while Canadian courts not recognizing independent duty, standard electricity supply contract including duties of good faith and fair dealing; bad faith conduct evident); 1193430 Ontario Inc. v. Boa-Franc (1983) Ltée (2005), 2005 CarswellOnt 5661 (Ont. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (2006), 2006 CarswellOnt 2317 (S.C.C.) (both parties believing contract obliging them to act in good faith; questionable whether general duty of good faith could require party to disclose change in ownership to other party, since creating new, unbargained-for obligation independent from contract's terms and parties' objectives); Transamerica Life Canada Inc. v. ING Canada Inc. (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 4834 (Ont. C.A.) (Canadian courts not recognizing independent stand-alone duty of good faith, creating new, unbargained-for rights and obligations or permitting alteration of contract's express terms; rather, courts implying duty of good faith with view to securing performance and enforcement of contract made by parties); Rogers & Rogers Inc. v. Pinehurst Woodworking Co. (2005), 2005 CarswellOnt 7190 (Ont. S.C.J.); Amaren Corp. v. Cara Operations Ltd. (1999), 1999 CarswellOnt 350 (Ont. Gen. Div.) (while no independent duty of good faith and fair dealing in Ontario, duty existing to fulfill obligations of contract in good faith); Ascent Financial Services Ltd. v. Blythman (2006), 2006 CarswellSask 83 (Sask. Q.B.); affirmed (2007), 2007 CarswellSask 390 (Sask. C.A.) (court declining to decide whether independent duty of good faith existing, as party breaching good faith requirement in performing agreement transferring business); but see Bhasin v. Hrynew (2014), 2014 CarswellAlta 2046 (S.C.C.) (Supreme Court of Canada creating new common law duty under broad umbrella of good faith performance of contracts and holding that there is general duty of honesty in contractual performance); Gateway Realty Ltd. v. Arton Holdings Ltd. (1991), 1991 CarswellNS 320 (N.S. T.D.); affirmed on other grounds (1992), 1992 CarswellNS 518 (N.S. C.A.) (law requiring contracting parties to exercise rights honestly, fairly and in good faith; duty breached when party acting in "bad faith", defined as conduct contrary to community standards of honesty, reasonableness or fairness); LeMesurier v. Andrus (1986), 1986 CarswellOnt 670 (Ont. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (1986), 74 N.R. 239 (note) (S.C.C.) (vendors and purchasers owing duty to each other to perform contract honestly and in good faith; "approach may be merely an example of the development of an independent doctrine of good faith in contract law at least in the performance of contracts"); TSP-Intl Ltd. v. Mills (2006), 2006 CarswellOnt 4037 (Ont. C.A.) (contractor, exercising discretionary contractual power, making unilateral contractual decisions defeating contractual objectives; trial judge finding conduct not according with objective community standards of reasonableness and fairness; however, appellate court finding that duty of good faith, not pleaded by parties, should not be ruled on); Ascent Financial Services Ltd. v. Blythman (2006), 2006 CarswellSask 83 (Sask. Q.B.); affirmed (2007), 2007 CarswellSask 390 (Sask. C.A.) (plaintiffs purchasing goodwill of defendants' business and parties forming new business; after parties falling out, plaintiffs purchasing defendants' shares, and defendants later breaching non-competition and non-solicitation agreements; defendants, owing obligation to use best efforts to transfer their clients to new business, breaching duty of good faith in performance of contract; defendants owing plaintiffs fiduciary duty independent of contract based on power to affect plaintiffs' interests); see also McCamus, The Law of Contracts (Irwin Law, 2005), p. 806; McCamus, "The Duty of Good Faith Contractual Performance at Common Law", Civil Law Seminar, Contract Law: From Form to Remedies (Osgoode Hall Law School, Toronto: May 17, 2000); Belobaba, "Good Faith in Canadian Contract Law", Special Lectures of the Law Society of Upper Canada (Richard De Boo Publishers, 1985), p. 73; Swan, "Whither Contracts: A Retrospective and Prospective Overview", Special Lectures of the Law Society of Upper Canada 1984-Law in Transition: Contracts (Richard De Boo Publishers, 1984), p. 125.

WESTLAW EDGE CANADA Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.

16 Martel Building Ltd. v. R. (2000), 2000 CarswellNat 2679 (S.C.C.) (although tenant not owing duty of care to landlord in renewal negotiations such that negligence claim could be made for economic loss arising out of conduct of negotiations, whether contractual negotiations to be governed by duty of good faith described as "question for another time"); Princeton Light & Power Co. v. MacDonald (2005), 2005 CarswellBC 1254 (B.C. C.A.); Stelco Inc., Re (2006), 2006 CarswellOnt 335 (Ont. C.A.) (specific wording in memorandum of understanding calling on parties to negotiate and pursue opportunities in good faith; existence of stand-alone duty of good faith, independent from terms expressed in contract, not settled; not plain and obvious that statement of claim should be struck); Transamerica Life Canada Inc. v. ING Canada Inc. (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 4834 (Ont. C.A.) (motions judge erring by striking plea of purchaser of shares regarding seller's duty to disclose facts coming to its attention during due diligence potentially prejudicing purchaser's position); 530888 Ontario Ltd. v. Sobeys Inc. (2001), 2001 CarswellOnt 240 (Ont. S.C.J. [Commercial List]) (conflicting authority and academic debate about independent good faith duty in contract law; erroneous to conclude such claim could not possibly succeed); McColl-Frontenac Inc. v. Petro-Canada Inc. (1998), 1998 CarswellOnt 6224 (Ont. Gen. Div.) (court holding, without deciding, that assuming independent common law obligation of good faith was developing in Canadian contract law, no such duty in light of bargain made by parties).

17 Bhasin v. Hrynew (2014), 2014 CarswellAlta 2046 (S.C.C.); Canaccord Genuity Corp. v. Pilot (2015), 2015 CarswellOnt 16345 (Ont. C.A.) ("two incremental steps" doctrine applied); Addison Chevrolet Buick GMC Ltd. v. General Motors of Canada Ltd. (2016), 2016 ONCA 324 (Ont. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (2017), 2017 CarswellOnt 1201 (S.C.C.) (duty of good faith in performance of contractual obligations discussed; Court of Appeal reversing decision to strike claim that duty of good faith owed by franchisor to franchisee, despite lack of direct contractual relationship, based on vulnerability of franchisee, level of control and special obligations; not plain and obvious that claim could not succeed; novel claim requiring decision based on full record); Mayotte v. Ontario (2016), 2016 CarswellOnt 2647 (Ont. S.C.J.) (court rejecting claim from private issuers of vehicle licences under contract with province that remuneration unreasonable and in bad faith as a matter of substance; no precedent for commercial reasonableness being tethered to outcome as opposed to process or performance; no indication that discretion of province used in bad faith during process of determining remuneration); Northrock Resources v. ExxonMobil Canada Energy (2017), 2017 CarswellSask 393 (Sask. C.A.) (duty of good faith must not be used to circumvent plain language of contract; defendant in context of right of first refusal did not lie or mislead); Wastech Services Ltd. v. Greater Vancouver Sewerage and Drainage District (2021), 2021 SCC 7 (S.C.C.) (discussion of breach of good faith; court found that arbitrator erred in concluding that breach of duty of good faith occurred whenever party failed to give "appropriate regard" to other's interests in absence of finding that contract had been "eviscerated" or "nullified" and in finding "dishonesty" and thus breach of duty of good faith without any element of dishonesty, improper motive, of bad faith as understood in existing law); Mohamed v. Information Systems Architects Inc. (2018), 2018 ONCA 428 (Ont. C.A.) (defendant employer breached agreement by failing to terminate in good faith, and triggered right to damages that was not contemplated by agreement).

WESTLAW EDGE CANADA Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.

18 Cramer v. Focus Group Holding Inc. (2013), 2013 CarswellAlta 215 (Alta. Prov. Ct.); Gateway Realty Ltd. v. Arton Holdings Ltd. (1991), 1991 CarswellNS 320 (N.S. T.D.); affirmed on other grounds (1992), 1992 CarswellNS 518 (N.S. C.A.) (law requiring contracting parties to exercise rights honestly, fairly and in good faith; duty breached when party acting in "bad faith"); Health Care Developers Inc. v. Newfoundland (1996), 1996 CarswellNfld 352 (Nfld. C.A.).

19 See §§ 51, 52, 74; Trusts.

20 Prothroe v. Adams (1997), 1997 CarswellAlta 681 (Alta. Q.B.) (defendants, as partners appointed to negotiate proposed terms of potential merger, standing in fiduciary relationship to other partners); Brew v. Rozano Holdings Ltd. (2006), 2006 CarswellBC 1813 (B.C. C.A.) (partners owing each other equitable duty of good faith); Merklinger v. Jantree No. 3 Ltd. Partnership (2004), 2004 CarswellOnt 6659 (Ont. S.C.J.) (general partner breaching fiduciary duty toward limited partner); Moffat v. Wetstein (1996), 1996 CarswellOnt 2148 (Ont. Gen. Div.); leave to appeal refused (1997), 1997 CarswellOnt 633 (Ont. Gen. Div.) (individual partner owing fiduciary duty to partnership generally as well as fellow partners); see also 337965 B.C. Ltd. v. Tackama Forest Products Ltd. (1992), 1992 CarswellBC 119 (B.C. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (1993), 161 N.R. 159 (note) (S.C.C.) (defendant's duty as managing partner not that of trustee, but more like duty owed by governing director to corporation); Zawadzki v. Matthews Group Ltd. (1999), 1999 CarswellOnt 1681 (Ont. S.C.J. [Commercial List]); affirmed (2001), 2001 CarswellOnt 5023 (Ont. C.A.) (since assignee of partnership interest not becoming "partner" in partnership venture, absent agreement to that effect, assignee not inheriting obligations of utmost good faith and honesty flowing from being partner).

21 Awad v. Dover Investments Ltd. (2004), 2004 CarswellOnt 3805 (Ont. S.C.J.); additional reasons at (2005), 2005 CarswellOnt 369 (Ont. S.C.J.) (parties negotiating joint venture, involving special duty of utmost good faith); Wonsch Construction Co. v. National Bank of Canada (1990), 1990 CarswellOnt 135 (Ont. C.A.) (joint venturer unable to make secret profit by dealing directly with another joint venturer's bankers to secure direct benefits in liquidation of joint venture's assets and payments of its debts); see also WHA 820 Holdings Ltd. v. Daymax Management Inc. (2003), 2003 CarswellBC 3103 (B.C. S.C.) (agreement requiring each party to bear proportionate responsibility for any liabilities incurred by defendants respecting development project, giving rise to good faith obligation on part of defendants, including duty to plaintiffs to disclose activities affecting project).

22 See §§ 43 to 46, 47; Agency; see also Trophy Foods Inc. v. Scott (1995), 1995 CarswellNS 218 (N.S. C.A.) (while principal and agency relationship giving rise to fiduciary duties, extent of such duties vary; equitable duties imposed should reflect nature of relationship and, particularly, terms of contract between commercial parties).

23 Shea v. Manitoba Public Insurance Corp. (1991), 1991 CarswellBC 60 (B.C. S.C.) (insurer's exclusive discretionary power to settle claims placing insured at insurer's mercy; insured's vulnerability imposing on insurer duties of good faith and fair dealing, requiring at least as much consideration to insured's interests as to own interests, and disclosure of all material information touching on insured's position in litigation and settlement negotiations); Ernst & Young Inc. v. Chartis Insurance Co. of Canada (2014), 2014 CarswellOnt 891 (Ont. C.A.) (duty to act in good faith separate from duty to compensate for loss covered by policy and thus giving rise to separate and independent cause of action); see also Plaza Fiberglass Manufacturing Ltd. v. Cardinal Insurance Co. (1994), 1994 CarswellOnt 661 (Ont. C.A.) (excess insurer's duty to act in good faith not giving rise to general fiduciary duty); Manifest Shipping Co. v. Uni-Polaris Shipping Co. (2001), [2001] 2 W.L.R. 170 (U.K. H.L.); see also § 6 (regarding good faith during negotiations), §§ 117, 259; Insurance.

24 Martel Building Ltd. v. R. (2000), 2000 CarswellNat 2678 (S.C.C.) (full extent of obligation of fair and equal treatment to be determined from tender documents); M.J.B. Enterprises Ltd. v. Defence Construction (1951) Ltd. (1999), 1999 CarswellAlta 301

WESTLAW EDGE CANADA Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.

(S.C.C.) (implied obligation that only compliant bid would be accepted); Double N Earthmovers Ltd. v. Edmonton (City) (2005), 2005 CarswellAlta 276 (Alta. C.A.); affirmed (2007), 2007 CarswellAlta 36 (S.C.C.) (duty of fairness to bidder not including obligation to investigate allegations concerning capacity of another bidder to comply with own bid prior to acceptance); J. Oviatt Contracting Ltd. v. Kitimat General Hospital Society (2002), 2002 CarswellBC 1506 (B.C. C.A.) (hospital able to rely on privilege clause, as no bad faith found); Chinook Aggregates Ltd. v. Abbotsford (Municipal District) (1989), 1989 CarswellBC 203 (B.C. C.A.) (implied term of fairness inherent aspect of tendering process; unannounced local preference policy breaching duty to treat all bidders fairly); Rockwood v. Eastern Newfoundland & Labrador Regional Health & Community Services Board (2004), 2004 CarswellNfld 178 (N.L. T.D.) (privilege clause clearly reserving right not to proceed with tender; board, required to act fairly and in good faith, not obliged to any bidder to pay more than it felt it could afford, investigate other financing sources, or rework objectives to award contract to particular bidder); Health Care Developers Inc. v. Newfoundland (1996), 1996 CarswellNfld 352 (Nfld. C.A.) (doctrine of good faith part of law of tendering for government contracts; bad faith to award something other than contract B, to fail to reject non-compliant tenders, or to award contract B on basis of undisclosed preference); Provincial Fence Products Ltd. v. Conception Bay South (Town) (2013), 2013 CarswellNfld 233 (N.L. T.D.) (town acting in good faith in call for tenders; evidence supported town's reasons for cancelling tender as being budgetary in nature); but see McNamara Construction Co. v. Newfoundland Transshipment Ltd. (2002), 2002 CarswellNfld 124 (Nfld. T.D.) (good faith not implied in construction contract on basis of either intention of parties or implication by law; unlike public tendering cases, circumstances not engaging broad issues of public policy and interest); see also § 6 (regarding good faith in negotiations), § 10; Building Contracts.

25 Canadian Bank of Commerce v. Munro (1925), 1925 CarswellAlta 130 (S.C.C.); Business Development Bank of Canada v. Parkview Holdings Ltd. (2000), 2000 CarswellNfld 125 (Nfld. T.D.) (common theme running through "deficiency" applications being requirement that mortgagee always to act in good faith); Federal Business Development Bank v. Ralph (1988), 1988 CarswellNfld 82 (Nfld. C.A.) (mortgagee breaching duty to act in good faith to take reasonable precautions to obtain best available price); Frost Ltd. v. Ralph (1982), 1982 CarswellNfld 66 (Nfld. C.A.) (mortgagee not acting in good faith when price realized significantly short of true value of property sold, when acting wilfully and recklessly in conduct of sale, or when failing to take reasonable precautions or act in prudent manner to obtain proper price).

26 GATX Corp. v. Hawker Siddeley Canada Inc. (1996), 1996 CarswellOnt 1434 (Ont. Gen. Div. [Commercial List]) (grantor of right of first refusal must act reasonably and in good faith; duty not discharged where essential purpose of sale to third party being to frustrate right of first refusal); Landymore v. Hardy (1991), 1991 CarswellNS 102 (N.S. T.D.) (grantor of right of first refusal required to offer property at lowest fair market price that prepared to accept; relations to be characterized by good faith and reasonableness); but see 1376273 Ontario Inc. v. Knob Hill Farms Ltd. (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 2239 (Ont. S.C.J.); affirmed (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 4936 (Ont. C.A.) (in case of exercise of simple option to purchase, no duty of good faith on vendor to remind purchaser of expiry date of option or to tell purchaser that request for extension will be denied); Morningstar Homes Ltd. v. 545918 B.C. Ltd. (2005), 2005 CarswellBC 96 (B.C. S.C.) (option to purchase; term requiring reasonable efforts to register subdivision plan not required as matter of business efficacy).

27 Valley Equipment Ltd. v. John Deere Ltd. (2000), 2000 CarswellNB 13 (N.B. Q.B.) (dealer awarded damages against manufacturer for breach of duty of good faith; "reasonableness" read into cancellation clause in dealer agreement; termination of long-term relationship based on resignation of dishonest and disloyal general manager not reasonable); see also Klewchuk v. Switzer (2003), 2003 CarswellAlta 867 (Alta. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (2004), 2004 CarswellAlta 426 (S.C.C.) (parties having long-standing business arrangements to provide charities with locations and services for operating casinos; defendant meeting duty of good faith by negotiating with plaintiff after concluding that agreement frustrated by change in gaming laws; agreement to negotiate not carrying obligation to lease casino facility at any price); Sultani v. Blenz The Canadian Coffee Co. (2005), 2005 CarswellBC 877 (B.C. S.C.); affirmed (2005), 2005 CarswellBC 2862 (B.C. C.A.) (franchise agreement containing entire agreement clause but no provision for renewal; while relationship between parties imposing duty of good faith upon franchisor short of fiduciary duty, duty of fair dealing not compelling party to renew expiring relationship when not commercially reasonable to do so); 530888 Ontario Ltd. v. Sobeys Inc. (2001), 2001 CarswellOnt 600 (Ont. S.C.J. [Commercial List]) (no inherent right to force franchisor to enter into new sublease with franchisee where sublease agreement expiring and containing no option to renew); see also § 6 (regarding duty of good faith in negotiating in context of long-term relationship).

28 Wallace v. United Grain Growers Ltd. (1997), 1997 CarswellMan 455 (S.C.C.) (unlike ordinary commercial contract, power inequality informing all aspects of employment relationship and requiring courts to hold employers to duty of good faith and fair dealing in manner of dismissal; breach of obligation compensable by adding to length of notice period; however, dismissed employee having no right to sue in contract or tort for bad faith conduct in manner of dismissal); see also McKinley v. BC Tel (2001), 2001 CarswellBC

WESTLAW EDGE CANADA Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.

1335 (S.C.C.) ("… obligations [of good faith and fair dealing] subsist throughout the employment relationship until, and including its termination" (in obiter)); Babcock v. Canada (Attorney General) (2005), 2005 CarswellBC 937 (B.C. S.C.) (implied obligation of good faith not extending beyond dismissal; applying only to manner of dismissal); Gismondi v. Toronto (City) (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 1498 (Ont. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (2004), 2004 CarswellOnt 718 (S.C.C.) ("Wallace damages" not limited to employer's acts at very moment of dismissal; in appropriate circumstances may include employer's conduct both pre- and post-termination, but only as component of manner of dismissal); Barnard v. Testori Americas Corp. (2001), 2001 CarswellPEI 29 (P.E.I. C.A.) (employment contracts not carrying implied term of good faith and fair dealing); Bower v. J.M. Schneider Inc. (1986), 1986 CarswellBC 397 (B.C. C.A.) (trial judge erroneously implying term to ensure employee's mortgage subsidy payment continuing to end of reasonable notice of termination; court unable to rewrite business contracts to impose own notion of fairness or to imply term contradicting contractual express term).

29 Joo v. Shin (2005), 2005 CarswellBC 1460 (B.C. S.C.) (franchisor terminating relationship by bad faith conduct, substantially nullifying benefits for which franchisee contracted); Ismail v. Treats Inc. (2004), 2004 CarswellNS 24 (N.S. S.C.) (applicable duty of care in franchise relationship one of good faith, including requirement to prepare accurate pro forma statements and generally to disclose accurate financial information); Shelanu Inc. v. Print Three Franchising Corp. (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 2038 (Ont. C.A.) (franchisors owing duty of good faith to franchisees even apart from Arthur Wishart Act (Franchise Disclosure), 2000); Triple 3 Holdings Inc. v. Jan (2004), 2004 CarswellOnt 2649 (Ont. S.C.J.) (franchisor, abusing power and acting dishonestly, liable for $350,000 in punitive damages); Pizza Pizza Ltd. v. 805837 Ontario Inc. (1997), 1997 CarswellOnt 5494 (Ont. Gen. Div.) (no evidence of lack of good faith on part of franchisor in calculating payments to be made under agreements, and no evidence that calculations inaccurate); Perfect Portions Holding Co. v. New Futures Ltd. (1995), 1995 CarswellOnt 3126 (Ont. Gen. Div.); Courtesy Chrysler (1987) Ltd. v. Chrysler Canada Inc. (2012), 2012 CarswellAlta 1843 (Alta. Q.B.); see also McKinlay Motors Ltd. v. Honda Canada Inc. (1989), 1989 CarswellNfld 9 (Nfld. T.D.) (franchisor allocating limited resources or products among various distributors required to act in good faith and not rely on pretexts for action outside scope of circumstances contemplated by contract); Erinwood Ford Sales Ltd. v. Ford Motor Co. of Canada Ltd. (2005), 2005 CarswellOnt 1954 (Ont. S.C.J.) (duty imposed on car manufacturer to act fairly to dealership, as relationship akin to franchise; decision to terminate dealership agreement exercised unfairly and in bad faith); but see Sultani v. Blenz The Canadian Coffee Co. (2005), 2005 CarswellBC 877 (B.C. S.C.); affirmed (2005), 2005 CarswellBC 2862 (B.C. C.A.) (franchise agreement containing entire agreement clause but no provision for renewal; while relationship between parties imposing duty of good faith upon franchisor short of fiduciary duty, duty of fair dealing not compelling party to renew expiring relationship when not considered commercially reasonable to do so); 530888 Ontario Ltd. v. Sobeys Inc. (2001), 2001 CarswellOnt 600 (Ont. S.C.J. [Commercial List]) (no inherent right existing to force franchisor to enter into new sublease with franchisee where sublease agreement expiring and no option to renew); see also § 6 (regarding good faith during negotiations).

30 Lac Minerals Ltd. v. International Corona Resources Ltd. (1989), 1989 CarswellOnt 126 (S.C.C.) (fiduciary relationships not to be presumed in commercial contracts, as equity's drastic remedies reserved for special circumstances; instead, parties should protect themselves by contract); Weiss v. Schad (2002), 2002 CarswellOnt 1498 (Ont. C.A.) (share purchase agreements not falling into special class of contracts of utmost good faith imposing obligation to disclose); 962789 Ontario Ltd. v. Newmarket Plaza Ltd. (2006), 2006 CarswellOnt 5086 (Ont. S.C.J.) (landlord and tenant relationship not analogous to franchise relationship; landlord having no control over day-to-day operation of tenant's business, and lease being typical commercial bargain between parties of equal bargaining power; landlord not owing tenant duty of good faith regarding type of business it leased vacant premises to); Rogers & Rogers Inc. v. Pinehurst Woodworking Co. (2005), 2005 CarswellOnt 7190 (Ont. S.C.J.) (supplier and installer of store fixtures claiming manufacturer breached good faith in misappropriating business opportunity; as relationship between parties not fiduciary, no duty of good faith on manufacturer in fiduciary capacity and no operative good faith standard breached; provided manufacturer not breaching restrictive covenant, entitled to act in own self-interest without regard to supplier's interests); see also Terra Energy Ltd. v. Kilborn Engineering Alberta Ltd. (1999), 1999 CarswellAlta 141 (Alta. C.A.); reconsideration / rehearing refused (1999), 1999 CarswellAlta 348 (Alta. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (2000), 253 N.R. 193 (note) (S.C.C.) (duties of loyalty and avoidance of conflict of interest inherent in fiduciary relationship unlikely to be implied in absence of such relationship; while code of professional ethics cannot create fiduciary relationship, may be considered in determining scope of fiduciary relationship); 978011 Ontario Ltd. v. Cornell Engineering Co. (2001), 2001 CarswellOnt 1290 (Ont. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (2001), 2001 CarswellOnt 3809 (S.C.C.) (no duty of good faith in negotiations where no special relationship between parties; mentor relationship not displacing normal contractual principle of self-reliance, since defendant in ascendant position; plaintiff not having good faith obligation to disclose clear and visible termination provision to defendant who signed agreement without reading it; defendant's trust in plaintiff insufficient to create good faith obligation); Courtesy Chev Olds Ltd. v. Hadfield (2006), 2006 CarswellOnt 1937 (Ont. S.C.J.) (defendant owing implied contractual duty of good faith to car lessee to notify of proposed repairs and allow inspection prior to repairs; also breaching duty by not showing labour rates and hours spent in billing to customer); but see Peel Condominium Corp. No. 505 v. Cam-Valley Homes Ltd. (2001), 2001 CarswellOnt 579 (Ont. C.A.) (developer marketing condominium project designed around recreation area to be conveyed to condominium corporations, but then deciding to develop it; duty of good faith to condominium owners owing due to manner in which developer marketed property, unequal bargaining power, and owners' lack of access to information concerning future development of recreation area lands); Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce v. Brown (1999), 1999 CarswellOnt 4107 (Ont. S.C.J.) (bank, making loan to debtors under conflict of interest, having duty to act in good faith, regardless of lack of prior or fiduciary relationships between bank and debtors); Computer Workshops Ltd. v. Banner Capital Market Brokers Ltd. (1988), 1988 CarswellOnt 107 (Ont. H.C.); affirmed (1990), 1990 CarswellOnt 1445 (Ont. C.A.) (implied term in contract for supply of computer hardware that vendor not to sell similar system to competitor; customer's trust and confidence in supplier creating fiduciary duties); Ascent Financial Services Ltd. v. Blythman (2006), 2006 CarswellSask 83 (Sask. Q.B.); affirmed (2007), 2007 CarswellSask 390 (Sask. C.A.) (plaintiffs purchasing goodwill of defendants' business and parties forming new business; after parties falling out, plaintiffs purchasing defendants' shares, and defendants later breaching non-competition and non-solicitation agreements; defendants, owing obligation to use best efforts to transfer their clients to new business, breaching duty of good faith in performance of contract; defendants owing plaintiffs fiduciary duty independent of contract based on power to affect plaintiffs' interests).

WESTLAW EDGE CANADA Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.

31 Shelanu Inc. v. Print Three Franchising Corp. (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 2038 (Ont. C.A.).

32 Wallace v. Canadian Pacific Railway (2013), 2013 CarswellSask 432 (S.C.C.).

33 Bhasin v. Hrynew (2014), 2014 CarswellAlta 2046 (S.C.C.).

34 Bhasin v. Hrynew (2014), 2014 CarswellAlta 2046 (S.C.C.); see § 6 (existence of a duty of good faith in the negotiation of contracts).

35 O'Neill v. General Motors of Canada Ltd. (2013), 2013 CarswellOnt 9803 (Ont. S.C.J.) (duty of good faith inherent in employment relationship; court thus concluding that duty of good faith favouring plaintiff's claim that benefits could not be reduced after employee had retired); Ward v. Manufacturers Life Insurance Co. (2007), 2007 CarswellOnt 8048 (Ont. C.A.); Gateway Realty Ltd. v. Arton Holdings Ltd. (1991), 1991 CarswellNS 320 (N.S. T.D.); affirmed on other grounds (1992), 1992 CarswellNS 518 (N.S. C.A.) (good faith standard breached when party acting in bad faith manner in performing contract, contrary to community standards of honesty, reasonableness or fairness; insistence on good faith requirement in discretionary conduct in contractual formation, performance and enforcement fulfilling courts' obligations to justly resolve disputes between contracting parties); LeMesurier v. Andrus (1986), 1986 CarswellOnt 670 (Ont. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (1986), 74 N.R. 239 (note) (S.C.C.) (purchaser refusing to close purchase and sale agreement because fence and curb of driveway placed over lot line by less than one foot; reliance on rescission clause not justified; vendors and purchasers owing duty to each other to perform contract honestly and in good faith; “approach may be merely an example of the development of an independent doctrine of good faith in contract law at least in the performance of contracts”); Elite Specialty Nursing Services Inc. v. Ontario (2002), 2002 CarswellOnt 2575 (Ont. S.C.J.) (exercise of discretion in allocation of nursing care cases among several facilities; explicit recognition of doctrine of good faith making law more certain, understandable and fair, and avoiding judicial interpretive contortions to obtain desired result); but see Wallace v. United Grain Growers Ltd. (1997), 1997 CarswellMan 455 (S.C.C.) (dismissed employee having no right to sue in contract or tort for bad faith conduct in manner of dismissal; however, unlike ordinary commercial contract, power inequality informing all aspects of employment relationship, requiring courts to hold employers to duty of good faith and fair dealing in manner of dismissal; breach of obligation compensable by adding to length of notice period); Slate Ventures Inc. v. Hurley (1996), 1996 CarswellNfld 64 (Nfld. T.D.); affirmed (1997), 1997 CarswellNfld 203 (Nfld. C.A.) (vendor of shares in slate quarry owing duty not to nullify reasonably expected benefits by personally exploiting another quarry project; contract creating reasonable expectations of parties by implication and not based on any good faith doctrine); Transamerica Life Canada Inc. v. ING Canada Inc. (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 4834 (Ont. C.A.) (implied duty of good faith not having gone so far as to create new, unbargained-for rights and obligations, nor used to alter contract's express terms); see also Waters, “Corporate Behaviour and Equity's Standards of Conduct” (2004), C.L.R. (3d) 248 (arguing that good faith doctrine of equity going beyond literal and implied terms of contract, and emphasizing spirit of agreement and fairness prevailing between parties); Stack, “The Two Standards Of Good Faith In Canadian Contract Law” (1999), 62 Sask. L. Rev. 201 (one standard of good faith relying on concepts like commercial standards, fair play, fairness, and reasonableness; second standard relying on expectations and intentions of contracting parties as manifested in their contract; court applying first standard looking to a tort-like norm outside parties' agreement to decide if bad faith has occurred, while court employing latter arriving at appropriate standard of conduct by interpreting parties' agreement).

WESTLAW EDGE CANADA Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.

36 Slate Ventures Inc. v. Hurley (1996), 1996 CarswellNfld 64 (Nfld. T.D.); affirmed (1997), 1997 CarswellNfld 203 (Nfld. C.A.) (vendor of shares in slate quarry owing duty not to nullify reasonably expected benefits by personally exploiting another quarry project; contract creating reasonable expectations of parties by implication and not based on any good faith doctrine); Cherubini Metal Works Ltd. v. New Brunswick Power Corp. (2007), 2007 CarswellNB 183 (N.B. Q.B.); affirmed (2008), 2008 CarswellNB 628 (N.B. C.A.) (implied contractual duty of good faith and fairness in tendering process not applicable when owner does not award tender to lowest bidder, as long as all criteria to be applied are considered); see also Manifest Shipping Co. v. Uni-Polaris Shipping Co. (2001), [2001] 2 W.L.R. 170 (U.K. H.L.) (good faith duty in performing contract being contractual obligation arising from contract and subject to remedies provided by contract); Waddams, The Law of Contracts, 7th ed. (Thomson Reuters Canada Limited, 2017), § 514 (test of good faith is objective, empowering the court to grant relief from agreements, or clauses that are highly unreasonable or unfair).

37 Dynamic Transport Ltd. v. O.K. Detailing Ltd. (1978), 1978 CarswellAlta 62 (S.C.C.) (implied obligation on vendor in purchase and sale situation to act in good faith and take all reasonable steps to complete sale, including steps to subdivide if condition for carrying out sale; only way to give agreement business efficacy); see also § 162.

38 CivicLife.com Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General) (2005), 2005 CarswellOnt 4228 (Ont. S.C.J.); reversed in part on other grounds (2006), 2006 CarswellOnt 3769 (Ont. C.A.) (implied term of contract to build internet portal that government would act in good faith so as not to nullify software developers' reasonable expectations); see also McCamus, The Law of Contracts (Irwin Law, 2005); McCamus, "Abuse of Discretion, Failure to Cooperate and Evasion of Duty: Unpacking the Common Law Duty of Good Faith in Contractual Performance" (2005), 29 Advocates' Q. 72.

39 CivicLife.com Inc. v. Canada (Attorney General) (2005), 2005 CarswellOnt 4228 (Ont. S.C.J.); reversed in part on other grounds (2006), 2006 CarswellOnt 3769 (Ont. C.A.) (implied term of contract to build internet portal that government would act in good faith so as not to nullify software developers' reasonable expectations; parties' intention that government would facilitate co-operation); see also McCamus, The Law of Contracts (Irwin Law, 2005); McCamus, "Abuse of Discretion, Failure to Cooperate and Evasion of Duty: Unpacking the Common Law Duty of Good Faith in Contractual Performance" (2005) 29 Advocates' Q. 72; Waddams, The Law of Contracts, 7th ed. (Thomson Reuters Canada Limited, 2017), § 505; see also cases cited in § 191.

40 Mesa Operating Ltd. Partnership v. Amoco Canada Resources Ltd. (1994), 1994 CarswellAlta 89 (Alta. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (1994), 179 N.R. 80 (note) (S.C.C.) (party unable to exercise contractual power in way substantially nullifying contractual objectives or causing significant harm to other party contrary to parties' original purposes; defendant failing to consider both main methods of pooling under royalty agreement, contrary to industry practice and parties' expectations); Shelanu Inc. v. Print Three Franchising Corp. (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 2038 (Ont. C.A.) (discretion under contract must be exercised reasonably, fairly and with regard to how other party's interests affected); EdperBrascan Corp. v. 177373 Canada Ltd. (2000), 2000 CarswellOnt 4084 (Ont. S.C.J.); affirmed on other grounds (2002), 2002 CarswellOnt 698 (Ont. C.A.) (contracting parties obliged to act in good faith in some circumstances, such as duty to use best efforts, and in exercise of discretion (in obiter)); Greenberg v. Meffert (1985), 1985 CarswellOnt 727 (Ont. C.A.); leave to appeal refused (1985), 64 N.R. 156 (note) (S.C.C.) (contract providing that payment of commission to real estate agent after termination of agreement being at agency's sole discretion; agency required to act reasonably, fairly, and with regard to how other party's interests affected); Elmdale Investments Ltd. v. Myers (2001), 2001 CarswellOnt 4499 (Ont. S.C.J.) (purchaser obliged to act in good faith in dealing with conditions set out in agreement of purchase and sale; not entitled to exercise discretion capriciously); see also P. & G. Cleaners Ltd. v. Johnson (1995), 1995 CarswellMan 187 (Man. Q.B.) (vendor of shares having absolute right to withhold consent to purchaser acquiring shares in related company, unless business efficacy necessitating limitation of reasonableness; however, minimal duty to act in good faith existing); Muhammad v. Mental Health Program Services of Metropolitan Toronto (2006), 2006 CarswellOnt 5013 (Ont. S.C.J.); affirmed (2008), 2008 CarswellOnt 2370 (Ont. C.A.) (contract stipulating that transfer of contract could be unreasonably withheld; implied duty of good faith would contradict terms of contract); Degelder Construction Co. v. Dancorp Developments Ltd. (2000), 2000 CarswellBC 1484 (B.C. S.C. [In Chambers]); affirmed on other grounds (2002), 2002 CarswellBC 2218 (B.C. C.A.) (mortgagee held to subjective duty of acting in good faith; no implied term placing objective duty upon mortgagee to reasonably exercise powers under mortgage); McCamus, The Law of Contracts (Irwin Law, 2005); McCamus, "Abuse of Discretion, Failure to Cooperate and Evasion of Duty: Unpacking the Common Law Duty of Good Faith in Contractual Performance", (2005) 29 Advocates' Q. 72; see also § 192.

41 Canada Deposit Insurance Corp. v. Canadian Commercial Bank (1998), 1998 CarswellAlta 1088 (Alta. Q.B.) (debt restructuring agreement creating reasonable expectation that company would sell designated assets and give proceeds to bank when unable to pay dividends or redemptions; company breaching duty of good faith by refusing to sell designated assets); Princeton Light

WESTLAW EDGE CANADA Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.

& Power Co. v. MacDonald (2005), 2005 CarswellBC 1254 (B.C. C.A.) (duties of good faith and fair dealing implied elements of standard electrical utility supply contract; utility acting in bad faith in unreasonably back-billing customer, justifying punitive damages); Transamerica Life Canada Inc. v. ING Canada Inc. (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 4834 (Ont. C.A.) (duty of good faith may be implied to secure performance and enforcement of contract made by parties, or to ensure that parties not acting in manner eviscerating or defeating agreement's objectives); Optimal Space Inc. v. Margana Holdings Inc. (2005), 2005 CarswellOnt 1687 (Ont. S.C.J.) (commercial leases subject to implied duty of good faith in performance; party's attempts to destroy integrity of contract amounting to bad faith, and presence of bad faith excluding existence of good faith); see also Kubota Canada Ltd. v. Merchant Private Ltd. (1997), 1997 CarswellOnt 1685 (Ont. Gen. Div.) (good faith equally applicable to all contracts, including leasing and financing agreements; allowing lessor to retain payment resulting from lessee's mistake in failing to give notice under technical provisions of lease inconsistent with good faith and fair dealing); McCamus, The Law of Contracts (Irwin Law, 2005); McCamus, "Abuse of Discretion, Failure to Cooperate and Evasion of Duty: Unpacking the Common Law Duty of Good Faith in Contractual Performance" (2005), 29 Advocates' Q. 72; but see M.A. Hanna Co. v. Sydney Steel Corp. (1995), 1995 CarswellNS 45 (N.S. S.C.); Potter, Q.C., annotation); see also §§ 191 to 192.

42 Markakis v. Yuck (2003), 2003 CarswellAlta 208 (Alta. Q.B.) (defendant's representations when soliciting investment in business ventures from plaintiffs carrying undertaking that defendant would act reasonably and in good faith, arising both as matter of contractual interpretation and by operation of law); see also No. 151 Cathedral Ventures Ltd. v. Gartrell (2003), 2003 CarswellBC 2974 (B.C. S.C.) (since land owners extracting undertaking from developer to advise them of any disadvantage resulting from contract's implementation, reasonable for developer to expect owners not to take advantage of it; owners, contrary to such known expectation, deliberately delaying advising developer until expiry of deadline for condition removal, that developer's draft new offer considered repudiation of contract; breach of implied term of good faith); but see Galaxy Sports Inc. v. Umbro Holdings Ltd. (2005), 2005 CarswellBC 481 (B.C. S.C.) (relationship between parties nothing other than licensor/licensee in commercial enterprise; merely negotiating toward acquisition agreement not creating fiduciary relationship; representations not made with intention of promoting sale of licences).

43 Shelanu Inc. v. Print Three Franchising Corp. (2003), 2003 CarswellOnt 2038 (Ont. C.A.).

44 Strategy Summit Ltd. v. Remington Development Corp. (2011), 2011 CarswellAlta 1616 (Alta. Q.B.).

45 C.M. Callow Inc. v. Zollinger (2020), 2020 SCC 45 (S.C.C.) (counterparty's actions and statements led party to mistakenly believe that winter contract would be renewed; breach of duty of honest performance).

46 C.M. Callow Inc. v. Zollinger (2020), 2020 SCC 45 (S.C.C.) (court rejected reliance damages that measured damages according to loss party suffered from relying on other party's dishonesty).

End of Document

Copyright © Thomson Reuters Canada Limited or its licensors (excluding individual court documents). All rights reserved.